SOMEWHAT REMARKABLE.

Things Set on Fire by the Rays of the Sun.

People passing on main street about 5 o'clock Sunday afternoon witnessed an unusual occurrence. About two weeks ago Mr. D. B. Overton left a silk umbrella lying across a pile of tin pans in the front window of S. E. Pender & Co's hardware store. Sunday the warm rays of the sun shining full through this window and reflected on the tin pans set the umbrella on fire and burned every vestige of cloth off of it. The burning umbrella filled the store room full of smoke. Hundreds of people stopped to look at it. In this case there was nothing else to come in contact with the burning umbrella and become ignited, but we wonder if buildings have not sometime been set on fire in this way and the cause never known.

Speaking of this occurrence later Maj. H. Harding said it recalled a little incident he met with a few days ago. While sitting in front of his place of business talking with a gentleman he took off his spectacles and was holding them in his hand. A few minutes later he felt a stinging sensation on his leg just above the knee, and looking down saw that a round hole about the size of a dime was burned through his pants. He had been holding his spectacles so that the sun shining through one of the glasses had focussed on his pants and burned the hole in them.

LOCAL NOTES AND TOBACCO JOTTINGS

BY O. L. JOYNER.

Mr. W. H. Jenkins, warehouseman of Henderson, was on our breaks to-day.

Friday's break was just simply tremendous and outdid any sale that has ever been made in the State of new tobacco during August, the reports sent out from Wilson to the contrary notwithstanding.

Information reaches us indirectly from Capt. Pace that our article a few days ago urging the organization of a board of trade has been read by some tobacco man, who anticipated coming to Greenville, and understood by him to refer to the organization of a tobacco board of trade here. If the reader had examined the article more closely he would have known that the article referred to a commercial board of trade, and not to a tobacco board of trade. We have here a regular organized tobacco board chartered under the State laws, and the tobacco market is governed by its laws. We have as good a tobacco board of trade as there is in the State, but we want a commercial board consisting of the representative business men of all professions.

Quite a spirited gathering of farmers met at Mr. A. G. Cox's store, at Winterville, on last Saturday evening. Sometime ago Mr. R. L. Dixon offered a watch and chain to the farmer who would bring the best one bundle sample of tobacco to Winterville and file it with him by Saturday evening, the 24th of August. The samples were there to the amount of 10. As they were brought in they were numbered and the farmer's name put on a separate piece of paper, so that the judges would not know whose tobacco they were examining. Messrs. N. H. Whitfield and O. L. Joyner were chosen to go from Greenville, and Mr. A. B. Clark was selected as the third man. The samples were all taken in a private room and there examined. Mr. W. H. Stocks had the best sample, mahogany wrappers, and was awarded the watch and chain. Then before it was known who had the next best grades Mr. A. G. Cox offered a dollar for the second best and fifty cents for the third. J. O. Beard, a colored man, curing for Mr. A. G. Cox, had the second best grade and drew the dollar, and W. H. Stocks had the third grade and got the fifty cents. There were several lots of very fine tobacco and one lot especially belonging to Mr. Stocks was the finest sample of bright wrappers we have seen in a long time, but he had several cutter leaves mixed with it which so detracted from the sample that it could not be counted for a premium, as there was only one bundle.

Three colored convicts tried to escape from the State farm near Weldon, on Saturday. Two of them were killed by the guards.

An exchange says, if a wrinkle were made on a man's nose every time he pokes it into other people's business, there are some men we know whose noses would look like nutmeg graters.

Winking--Blinking Buying FALL & WINTER GOODS, Wait for Me. FRANK WILSON, The King Clothier.

A New Enterprise.

The following which we take from the Salisbury Herald will be interesting to the people of this section, as it shows what a former citizen of Greenville is doing in that town. We would be glad if some of our people would follow Mr. Littmann's example and start manufacturing enterprises here. Industries of this kind are the ones that pay best. The Herald says:

Everything at the cord factory of Mr. I. Littmann, on church street, is now about completed and all the machinery will be in full operation in a few days. The Herald scribe went around there this morning and found the place as snug and complete as could be wished.

There are fifteen machines for making cash cord and twenty-six for making clothes lines, every one brand new and in first-class working order. Some of them had been tried and a considerable quantity of cord made, but the engine was resting to-day and all hands were busy putting other machinery in place.

This new factory is a model. Everything is of the most improved pattern, is fresh from the hands of the makers and is of the very best make. Besides the machines above mentioned are a braiding machine, spooler and finishing machine, all in the basement of the building. The two other floors will be used for storing the raw material and the finished product at present, but will probably be filled later with other machinery. Mr. Littmann has not yet sold any of his cord. He already has orders for every yard he can make. The first shipment will probably be made Saturday.

"You never saw my hands as dirty as yours," said a mother to her little girl. "No, but grand mother did," was the reply.

But He Was.

The boy stood on the burning deck,
It got hotter every minute;
He mopped his brow and simply said,
"I wish I wasn't in it."

THE CAMPAIGN FUND.

A Story from the Practical Politics of the Day.

One Prominent Public Man Makes a Confession That Might with All Simplicity Be Put Into the Mouth of Many Others.

"How did I get into politics?" asked a prominent public man, repeating the question which, according to the Youth's Companion, an old friend had put to him. "I can tell you in a few words. It was by adapting myself to existing conditions."

"I was young, ambitious and poor," continued the great man. "A nomination, which nobody seemed to want, since it involved what was apparently a hopeless fight for election, came in my way. 'Having obtained it, I went to Mr. Blank'—mentioning a political leader—and thanked him for his friendly services. He inquired if I had any money to use for campaign purposes. I told him I had none. After a moment's reflection he said that he would have to raise the money in his own way."

"He ran over rapidly a list of corporations which were dependent upon state legislation, and checked them off. It was too soon to strike this one again, for it had been heavily drawn upon during the previous year. Another could not be touched, for it had no favors to ask at the capital, and was temporarily out of politics. Another had been levied upon by both parties in the last presidential canvass, and could not be approached. There was, however, one corporation which would require protection from adverse legislation. Would ten thousand dollars be enough for election purposes? Very well, he would manage it."

"Within five days," continued the rising young statesman, "the boss sent me the money. I made a vigorous canvass and was elected. The money was used legitimately for hiring public halls, printing circulars and sending ballots to voters. 'Having got into politics, I made the most of my opportunity. I now have influential friends, and have no need to take financial aid from anybody. But that was the only method by which I could have forced an entry into public life.'"

This is a true story. While names, localities and political associations are suppressed, it has so many direct applications that a good many public men of both parties may be identified in thinking that somebody has told it at their expense. It is a parable of the politics of the day, and illustrates the demoralizing effects of campaign funds raised by what was virtually blackmail.

The candidate made his start in public life through the willingness of a corporation to pay tribute to a political leader for a guarantee of immunity from legislation at the state capital. The "boss" sold public law in advance, and mortgaged the convictions of the incoming legislators. By the profits of that transaction, and through the services of a corruption broker, the rising young politician was enabled to pay his election expenses and to get into office.

These are among the worst evils of American politics to-day. Public conscience ought to be aroused against them. An immoral beginning in political life by a young man is a degradation, the debasing effects of which years may never efface.

Money in Trifles.

Someone has said that more money has been made in ingenious trifles than out of some of the most important inventions of the age. A great and expensive machine or article can be purchased by only the wealthy few, but the five-cent and ten-cent novelties, the little trifles, the needles and pins and things, everybody wants, is able to buy, and must have. Even such an insignificant article as a toothpick suggests the investment of a vast army of laborers. Some exceedingly fine inventions are used in the manufacture of these little splinters, and the money invested runs well up into millions. Toothpicks are used for many purposes besides the one that gives them their name. They are invaluable to the florist, and have their place in a great many household performances. As little skewers for boiled and stuffed eggs, and as splints to tie up broken plants, they are useful, indeed, indispensable, nothing seeming to answer so well. The day of small things is far from being despised, and there are companies representing large capital that are constantly on the lookout for trifling inventions from which they may receive large sums either by purchase and manufacture or by putting them on the market and paying royalty. The latter item, however small, foots up a very considerable aggregate to the inventor, and there are hundreds of people in this country who are living handsomely on the regular income derived from some of these children of their brains.—N. Y. Ledger.

GAY WAISTCOATS.

Attempt Is Being Made to Revive Silk Embroidered Vests.

The Prince of Wales May Be Induced to Set in Motion the New Fashion—Show Death of Late Styles in Male Attire.

As the silk industry is greatly depressed, there has been some talk of a deputation to the prince of Wales on the subject, the idea being that, if only the prince could be induced to wear silk embroidered waistcoats, a demand might set in for these sumptuous garments, says the London Standard. A taste for gay male attire went out, with some customs much more to be regretted, just as the new regime inaugurated by the French revolution came in. And, unless the world gets more foolish than there is any likelihood of its becoming, the costume will not be easily restored. The splendid waistcoat, we admit, died a very slow death. It remained after the rest of the fine raiment of which it was a part had vanished. Time was—not so many years ago but that some middle-aged folk can recall these mild follies of their youth—when waistcoats were always ordered apart from the rest of a suit of clothes. Very moderate dandies had generally quite a little assortment of "vests," with equally showy scarfs, and possibly pins also to match. The gentlemen who clung to buckskin breeches and Hessian boots had, indeed, so many that they seldom wore the same article two days running, and were continually adding to their stock. When Maj. Dobbin and Joseph Sedley landed at Southampton from the Ramschunder, East Indian, the ex-collector halted long enough to order half a dozen new waistcoats, and to this day the typical John Bull, who stood for his portrait soon after the battle of Waterloo, is invariably represented in a fine flowered waistcoat. And after the waistcoats in brocade, and scarlet, and green, and purple, and blue velvet got worn out, and were not renewed in Europe, they continued popular in America. A trapper or a gold digger, when he returned to civilization with all the extravagant tastes of a sailor from a long cruise, ordered, among his first tributes to the life of towns, a few very gay waistcoats, and, if he desired to cut a figure in St. Louis, or San Francisco, or Council Bluffs, would direct them to be made of the same material "fore and aft." In the southern states especially, fine waistcoats were long popular. Indeed, so familiarly was the weakness of transatlantic visitors known that in the far-away days "before the war" London tailors always kept a "handsome line" of "cut velvet vests" for the "American market." But even the American dandy at length discarded such vanities, and we are sure that among the boxes of clothing sent nowadays to the New York exquisite by the London tailor whom he patronizes such a thing as a gold-striped or silk-flowered waistcoat is never included. Now and then eccentricities in the under garment appear in Oxford and Cambridge, and for a time striped waistcoats like those footmen are doomed to wear were moderately popular with some very young men. But among sober-minded people it would require some courage to go beyond the familiar buff or simple white.

Ill Words Fly Far.

A minister was anxious to show a lady in his congregation the evil of slandering others. So he asked her to do a very strange thing—to go to the market, buy a chicken just killed and still covered with feathers, and walk a certain distance, plucking the bird as she went.

The lady did as she was directed, and returned, anxious to know the meaning of the injunction.

"Retrace your steps," said the minister, "and gather up, one by one, all the feathers you have scattered."

"I cast the feathers carelessly away," said the woman, "and the wind carried them in all directions."

"Well, my daughter," the minister replied, "so is it with your words of slander; like the feathers which the wind has scattered, they have been wafted in many directions. Call them back now, if you can. Go sin no more." —Selected.
