LOCAL NOTES AND TOBACCO JOTTINGS.

BY O. L. JOYNER.

A few years ago, in fact four years only, and in some instances much less time than that, several of the leading merchants of this place did all in their power to prevent a tobacco market being established in Greenville. A great many of the unfortunate farmers who traded under the mortgage system were denied the right to plant tobacco by the merchant running them, and these who were not forced thro' these straits, were advised by merchant friends, not only in Greenville, but all over the county, not to fool with so risky a crop, and in this way numbers of our people were kept ignorant of the natural adaptability of our soil to the growth and fine development of a product that in the last few years has raised the veil of distressing and oppressing indebtedness from the head of our farmers. We have no doubt but that our merchants were honest in their views, but when a few came together and tried to establish a market for the product at home, then is when it was that all the influence of an established business prestige from some of our merchants was thrown against the few that tried to start the market. Farmers were advised to ship their tobacco to Oxford, Henderson and Durham and all the other markets of the State, and told that the few buyers that were on the

Greenville market were taking the farmers tobacco and shipping it to these places and making money on it. So firmly was one of our prominent merchants impressed with this idea that he gave notice to a good many of his customers that he was going to place a man from up the country on the Greenville market to buy for him, and that he would ship tobacco from here to the other markets and make money on it. He placed his man on the market, but after an experience of only three weeks (but long enough for him, the merchant of course, to be out of pocket to the tune of a hundred or so dollars) his buyer made himself conspicuous by his absence from the breaks. The merchant withdrew from the tobacco business a wiser and a more experienced man. But instead of telling why it was that he lost on his purchase, he gave as a reason that his man only bought the high tobacco. Strong as was this influence against the market, success came slow but sure. There are numbers of our people who at that time spoke up for the home market and have always done so, but there was a stubborn influence among some of our citizens against the market. We have heard a good many of the buyers speak of the treatment they received at the hands of the citizens when they first came to Greenville, and so far as the writer is concerned, we have had some very hard things said about us in connection with the tobacco market, so bitter was the feeling against it. But as every man is the architect of his own fortune, we knew that if success crowned our efforts the feeling would soon be outlived, but if failure overtook us we would be kicked into oblivion as a vagiary youth. Moved by such incentives a few men brought the Greenville tobacco market into existence, and while the object of this article is not to especially pass again through the dark days of the market, but in taking a partial review of the past we are the better enabled to show the advantages the tobacco market has been to the town and show those whose opposition was so bitter that although they fought us a hard battle and caused us to drop many a hard earned dollar, yet our victory and the defeat of their purposes was a blessing to them in disguise.

A Live Letter.

The Wilmington Dispatch says: The following letter has just come into our possession. We give it verbatim et literatim:

LAW OFFICE D. L. RUSSELL,
Wilmington, N. C. Aug. 14, '95.
"Dear Sir: You are one of the friends in various parts of the State to whom I have concluded to write with regard to the Republican nomination for Governor. I think my nomination would be very acceptable to the Populist party. It would insure successful fusion in 1896.

"I have many reasons for wanting to be Governor, not the least of which is the fact that Democratic politicians would rather have any other man in the State. They know that with Russell for Governor, Democratic influences will not prevail in the executive office. Neither abuse nor flattery nor the power of their newspaper press, nor the blandishment of what they call 'society' would avail them.

"I would like to hear from you and have your views about things in general. Yours truly"

Ripening Tomatoes in Winter.

Among the many plans that have been proposed for saving the tomatoes which remain unripe at the coming of frost, we have found the following the most satisfactory:

When sharp frost is imminent gather all the green tomatoes. Wrap each separately in paper—old newspaper will do. Now pack them in boxes and store in a cool place, just warm enough to be secure from frost but not warm, the object being to keep not to ripen them. Bring out a few at a time as they are wanted, and place in a warm place to ripen a few days in advance. In this way we have for several years had sliced tomatoes on our table up to the middle of January.—W. F. Massey, Horticulturist, N. C. Experiment Station.

Two Pathetic Deaths—A Contrast.

A poor little boy, aged but 6, died in West Indianapolis actually of a broken heart, because his mother and father could not agree and had separated. What a great grief that was to break the dear little boy's heart. It is pathetic beyond expression. His name was Clarence McCune. Then there was that loving little boy in our own State who recently shot himself accidentally, inflicting a mortal wound. Just before dying he called all the family around him and gave them a parting kiss saying he was about to die. And now in contrast to such tenderness and love we read of a young horse thief in Michigan. Eddie Thayer stole the animal "because it was the best he could find;" and is now in custody. He is but 7 years old. It is far better to die like the other two little boys did, than begin life as a criminal and perishing perhaps as a felon to die at last and go to the devil. How very important it is that the best examples should be set before children. How careful we should all be in our words, in our daily life! How easily the young are influenced by bad example, and while plastic and easy of access are molded in life and character. God help the little ones who are surrounded by vicious and depraved people!

God protect the innocents from the cruel contagion of vice, immorality, degradation! It is a sad thing to see the young sneaking into dens of corruption and into places where sin and ruin abide always. As the twig is bent so the tree inclines. The seeds of dissipation and vice early sown can only produce a harvest of debauchery, grossest sins and deplorable final results.—Wilmington Messenger.

The Country Paper.

The country paper bears a relation to the people and the interests of its neighborhood that no outside paper can supply.

If a local newspaper is not what it ought to be, the chances are that the fault is not with the editor or proprietor, but with the people of the locality, who have it in their power to make it what it ought to be, by according it proper and generous support. The ambition to get out a good, live paper is as strong in the country newspaper man as it is in the city newspaper-man, and that ambition will, in the majority of cases, compel him to furnish the very best paper the business will justify.

Another important point people should consider in connection with the duty of sustaining their local newspapers is that strangers judge largely of the thrift, prosperity, intelligence, and cultivation of a community by the appearance its paper presents. Many a home seeker has in great measure been influenced to settle in a certain neighborhood because the local paper reflected in its prosperity a prosperous and cultivated community.—Richmond Dispatch.

The American Quick Lunch.

The prevalence of indigestion in America has been variously accounted for, iced water and sweets being two of the favorite explanations. But, as a matter of fact, it is not so much what one eats as the way in which one eats it which works the mischief, and in America the way is a standing affront to the art of gastronomy, for in what other country than America, as a writer in The Critic asks, would the legend "Quick Lunch" prove an attraction to the hungry man?

A foreigner, especially if he were a British workman, would regard it in the light of an insult. A Frenchman will do anything in a hurry except eat, and in consequence his digestive apparatus does its duty. But the average American seems to think that the time spent at table is wasted. Indeed the writer in The Critic declares that it is the commonest thing to see men bolting their food at a lunch counter, not to get back to business, but in order to loaf about the streets till the midday interval is spent. Even those who enjoy more leisure show a similar disregard for the high art of dining, and an American lady has been heard to say that she thought the nicest way to live would be to go to the pantry when you were hungry and take a bite of something, but that to sit at table was a sheer waste of time. "Ten minutes for refreshments," in fact, was her idea of rational refectation. Here at least is one of the things which we manage better in the effete old mother country. Record breaking is all very well, but it is a bad ideal to aim at where speed in eating is concerned.—London Globe.

There seems to be no art of knowledge in fewer hands than that of discerning when to have done.—Swift.

This astonishing statement is made by the Manufacturers Record: "One thousand million dollars a year would be the annual value of the cotton of the South if it were all manufactured at home, and the time is fast coming when the world's cotton mills must come to the world's chief cotton field—the South. This means a wonderful increase in the wealth of the South; it means a rate of progress and a degree of prosperity never seen before.
