AT RICHMOND.

FRANK L. STANTON.

They'll meet no more at Richmond—
the men who fought with Lee,
Who met the marching legions of Sherman to the sea;

Who blazed the way with "Stonewall,"
and carved their glorious names
On the battlefields of Richmond of "Richmond on the James."

They'll meet no more at Richmond:
their brows are bowed and
white:

And faint the campfires flicker from the
valleys of the night;

And "Farewell" echoes down the lines
where flashed their crimson
blades,

And the shadows deepen, deepen
'round the boys of the brigades.

They'll meet no more at Richmond,
where every battle-cloth

In red memorial roses send messages to God;

Where brave and bright they faced the fight where Lee and Jackson led,

And left the dim vales glorious with the ashes of their dead.

They'll meet no more at Richmond
The long night's shadows fall;

O'er the dividing ramparts the phantom captains call;

And "Farewell" echoes down the lines where flashed their warring
blades—

A long farewell to Richmond from the boys of the brigades!

TELLER FOR BRYAN.

Pledges Him His Support in the Race
—The Silver Cause Must Win.

Lincoln, Neb., July 18.—That Wm.
J. Bryan will receive the support of Henry M. Teller, of Colorado, there can be no longer any doubt. Mr.
Bryan to-day received a letter from Senator Teller, in which he assured him that he would support him in his race for President. The letter received reads as follows:

"Denver, Col., July 18, 1896.

"Hon. Wm. J. Bryan, Lincoln Neb:

"Dear Sir:—I congratulate you on your nomination at Chicago. I think the country is to be congratulated also.
I need not assure you that your nomination was more than satisfactory to me. I think we shall be able to consolidate all the friends of free silver in your support, and if we do this, I believe you will be elected, although I do not overlook the tremendous power that will be put against us in this campaign. All the power of money and organized wealth and monopolies of all kinds will be against us. Justice is on our side, and this is the cause of the people. It is a contest for industrial independence and for freedom from the domination of foreign powers and capitalists, and it does not seem possible in such a contest before the American people that justice should fail, and wrong prevail. I do not believe we shall fail. I think I can promise you the cordial support of the Western silver men, who have heretofore acted with the Republican party, and if you get that, I think all of the Western coast and inter-mountain States will be with you, and I will not offer any suggestion to you, save to advise you that as you were nominated without pledges of favor or privilege to any one, that you maintain that position and make no pledges or promises,
so that you may go into the great office of President of the United States without the embarrassment that follows pledges and promises, even if they are such as may properly be carried out.
It will afford me pleasure to place myself at the disposal of the National committee to make speeches in your behalf,
when they may think I may do good.
Very respectfully,
H. M. TELLER"

Died.

We are sorry to learn of the death of Mr. Theopolus Bland, which occurred yesterday at his home, near Grifton. He was taken with a congestive chill and soon passed away.

Silver Forces Should Unite.

Colfax, Iowa, July 15.—Gen. James B. Weaver, Populist candidate for President in 1892, said to a group of his friends at his home:

"I believe the Populist and free silver conventions will nominate Bryan and Sewall. It is the moral duty of the silver forces to make common cause and unite in supporting the Chicago nominee. It is the great opportunity of the century to strike a telling blow
for the liberty of mankind. The St.
Louis conventions will rise to the grandeur of the occasion and do their duty.
I believe that long before polling day
the election of Mr. Bryan will be practically conceded."

The Body Found.

The body of H. J. Hoyle, who was drowned from, or near, the O. D. S. S.
Co's wharf on February 12, 1896, was found Monday evening about 6 o'clock, near the locks, about two and a half miles down the river, by Marshal Kin-saul and a negro by the name of Banks. The body had lodged under some brush and was discovered by the colored man who came up to this city and got Mr. Kinsaul to go down and get it. It could not be ascertained whether the body was decomposed or not, as it was covered very badly with mud. It was thought, by many, that it was in a good state of preservation.
It was remarkable that such should be the case after six months lying in the water. The body was turned over to the undertaker and properly buried.

Weaver's and Field's Position.

In 1892, the Populist nominated
Gen. Weaver, of Iowa, and Gen. James G. Field, of Virginia, for President and Vice-President. It has already been announced that Gen. Weaver will heartily support Bryan and Sewall.
Judge Gentry writes to a friend in Atlanta:

"General James G. Field, a prominent lawyer and farmer of this section, and who was on the ticket for Vice-President of the Populist party in the last National election, said in the presence of the postmaster and others of this place yesterday that he expected to attend the St. Louis convention on the 22nd instant, and would exert his influence to get the standard bearers of the Chicago convention indorsed by the Populist National convention and was opposed to his party making any nomination."

With both the nominees of 1892 for the Democratic ticket, why shouldn't all other advocates of silver fall in line?

EUROPEAN LETTER.

(From our Special Correspondent.)

ROME, Italy, July 15, 1896.—A visit to the Catacombs is one of the inevitable duties of the traveler here, no matter how little time he may find for anything else. It is indeed of un-failing interest to all sorts and conditions of tourists, from the student of his tory or the archeologist to the man who is "doing" Europe in five weeks, and who decides to give forty-eight hours to the Eternal City. The latter, it is true, is disinclined to waste time on the Catacombs, being under the impression that we have mines and tunnels in America which are as interesting and more practical; but he comes because some one has told him that they must be seen; nor does he feel that his time has been wasted when he returns.

First there is the drive along the Via Appia, where careful eyes may find some of the original stones, placed long before the era of Christianity. Even the unimaginative must think of the feet that have passed over them—from triumphal processions of Caesar and Titus to the weary tramp of fettered slaves; not to mention the distinct vision that arises of the little group of disciples who went to meet Paul as far as Appii Forum and the Three Taverns, and came back with him to Rome. Then when you have reached the garden that surrounds the entrance to the Catacombs of St. Calixtus (there are several rivals, but this is the most popular) you climb down into the dark passages, you decipher the inscriptions made by the early Christians who found a hiding place here; you gaze at the spot where the body of gentle St. Cecilia was found, with its severed neck; you listen with rising hair to the story of the tourist who was separated from the rest of his party, and who wandered helplessly in these miles of labyrinth for days; and who was never found again, or according to some vernious, was finally discovered in an imbecile condition. This is always related, and makes you clutch your waxen taper more tightly and follow closely the footsteps of the guide until you emerge blinded into the outer light. It is a relief to come back to safe commonplaces; to buy chocolate from the Trappist monks and talk to the two or three who are allowed to break their vow of silence; and who apparently enjoy the immunity conversing volubly in several languages and on any topic. One of these (he has a face that might have been a model for Carlo Dolci) is known as "The Beautiful Brother" among the gushing American girls, and they esteem it a great favor to have him for their guide in the subterranean passages.

On the way back the driver always stops at a little church and explains that this is something that you must not miss seeing. You collect your scant Italian vocabulary and inquire what is the attraction—the building is small and looks almost as much like a wayside inn as a place of worship. This is the church of "Domine Quo Vadis" and here, according to ecclesiastical tradition, on one occasion when Peter's courage failed him and he was fleeing from Rome, Christ met him on the way. "Where goest thou, Master?" asked Peter, whence the name of the church. "To Rome, to be crucified again, in thy stead," was the answer. The apostle returned at once to suffer martyrdom, and the scene of the vision is commemorated by the impress of Christ's feet on the stone—much the same story that is told in other countries of Mohammed and of the angel Gabriel. In this case, however incredulity is excusable. The stone is uncovered (after you have paid for the privilege of selling it) with much formality and reverence; there are the outlines of the two feet; but the observant can distinguish the marks of toe-nails, leaving one to infer that the bungling artist designed the same on the bottom of the feet.

Another chapel, further out, on the supposed site of Paul's execution, is called the church of the Three Fountains. A bare-footed friar explains that as the head of the apostle fell from the axe, it rebounded three times. At every spot where it touched the earth a spring of water arose. If any skeptic doubts this piece of history, the ingenious monk says, with an expressive gesture "But do you not see the springs?"

A Card Party.

He was nervous and ill at ease all through supper, and at last his wife began to notice it, says the New York World.

"Henry," she said, "I think there is something you wish to say to me."

"You have guessed it exactly, my dear," he replied, "It's a favor I'm after, and I've been waiting until I caught you in your most amiable mood."

"Well, what is it?"

"There are two or three friends I'd like to invite here Saturday evening."

"What for?"

"Why, to—er—well—that is, to have a social evening."

"Now, Henry, tell me the truth."

"Well, my dear, we expected to have a little game of poker."

"What! Play cards in my house! Haven't I always told you that was the one thing you could never do?"

"I know it, my dear, but I thought that since you joined the new women you might have grown more liberal in your views."

"I am more liberal, as you well know, but I never can change on this one point."

"That's a ridiculous statement for a sensible woman to make. You can't tell how you may feel a week or even a day from now."

"I admit that your argument is right Henry, but I have a horror of cards. Besides, there is another reason—your finance won't permit of your gambling."

"Now you're talking sense. That's just why I got up this little game. I have three fellows I can beat out of their boots and they are all ready to play for big money."

"Are you sure you can beat them, Henry?"

"As sure as I stand here."

"Then, perhaps, you'd better invite them; but be sure not to have them stay too late."

AN INDIAN POMPEII.

Once the Versailles of India, but Now a Desolation.

Nothing sadder or more beautiful exists in India than the deserted city of Fathpur Sikri. There it stands, some 23 miles from Agra, much as it stood 300 years ago when Akbar decreed the stately pleasure house. It was built to commemorate the blessing of the holy Salim Chishti, the hermit, who dwelt among the wild beasts in his cave at Sikri, and who had foretold that Akbar's son, born on that spot, should live to succeed him on the splendid throne. The saint did not foresee that the infant would grow up into that unmitigated debauchee Jehangir, whose orgies amazed Sir Thomas Roe, and whose potent liquor caused that virtuous ambassador to sneeze incontinently, to the delight of the whole court. But the heroic toper did not defile his father's palace city, which must have been deserted soon after its founder's death, for when William Finch visited in 1610 he found it "ruinate, lying like a waste district and very dangerous to pass through at night." Ruinate it has remained ever since, desolate and abandoned. No later ruler of India has ever dared to live in Akbar's Versailles, just as no ruler of India has ever climbed to the heights of Akbar's genius. In the empty palaces, the wonderful mosque, the sacred tomb, the bath, the lake—at every turn we recognize some memory of the greatest of Indian emperors. We may even enter his bedroom—the khwabgah, or "abode of dreams"—and see the very screens of beautiful stone tracery, the very Persian couplets, the identical decoration in gold and ultramarine upon which Akbar feasted his eyes during the long sultry afternoons of the Indian plains. We may walk into the houses of Faizi and Abu-l-Fazl, the laureate and the premier of his empire, who sang his glory and chronicled his reign. We may see that strange building, the Diwan-i-Khas, with its central pillar throne and odd galleries, which some have sought to identify with the famous hall where metaphysical debates took place every Friday night under the emperor's personal presidency, and philosopher and theologian, orthodox and skeptic, did furious battle for their creeds or doubts till they ended, long after the "small hours" by bandying "pervert" and "atheist," to the disgust of an unwilling witness—the austere Badaoni.

The associations of Fathpur Sikri, "City of Victory," are not its only claims to our interest and respect. Its beauty in desolation excited the poetic imagination of Heber and stirred the critical enthusiasm of Fergusson, who says of the "Turkish sultan's house," which still overlooks the Pachisi court where Akbar is fabled to have played his games of living chess, that it is "impossible to conceive anything so picturesque in outline" or any building so richly and wonderfully carved without the least exaggeration or bad taste. Equally exquisite is the celebrated shrine of St. Salim Chishti, built in 1580, with its pure white marble cenotaph, its red sandstone dome and its veranda inclosed by delicately pierced fall screens of fair marble, like fine lace set in samite. And for grandeur what can compare to the stately "high gate," Buland Darwaza, of the mosque which crowns the rocky plateau, and which the historian of architecture cites as "noble beyond any portal in India, perhaps in the whole world?"—Sir

An Amateur Postmaster.

A member of the government was visiting the other day at a hall in the neighborhood of Doncaster. Having a pretty wide correspondence and there not being any postal delivery in the village, the lady at the hall took a bundle of letters to the church on the Sunday evening and gave them to the churchwarden, thinking he would be able to get them sent to the Doncaster post-office.

He, not catching what she had said about them, came to the conclusion that they were something for him to distribute in the church. The lady took her seat at the organ. Then the churchwarden commenced to take them from pew to pew as far as they would go.

One young person, looking at hers, said to him that it was a stamped letter and did not belong to her. He said: "Hold thee, nee, put it in thee pocket and read it when thee come home. There's something in it that will do thee good."—Pearson's Weekly.

WOMEN DISLIKE STINGY MEN.

Especially When the Latter Invite Them to a Restaurant.

If there is one object of dislike to a woman, it is a stingy man. Now, by this we do not mean that the fair sex are anxious for a man to spend more than he can afford, but they do feel that it is due to them when they are invited out to have the privilege of selecting what they want from a menu without being prompted by their host to select what he prefers.

The man doesn't have to say, "You must take this, or you mustn't take that." A woman is quick to recognize the saving keynote when he says: "What will you have? I think I will have a sandwich," and though she may loathe sandwiches she feels it her duty to say, "Well, then, I will have one too." Some mean men know that they can easily bulldoze a woman this way, and it would serve them just right if their guest were to say, "Well, for my part, I prefer terrapin, some fresh mushrooms, a canape Lorenzo and some Nesselrode pudding."

Oh, no, we never do say that. We are guided by the inflection in the man's voice and take whatever he wants us to, whether we like it or not. Now, we don't object one bit to a man being economical. It is a praiseworthy trait, but for goodness sake don't have him practice it when he takes a woman out to luncheon, dinner or supper. If he really can't afford anything she might ask for, he has no right to invite her. Let him do the elegant less frequently and do it right when he is about it.

The woman of the world will perhaps order a more extravagant meal than he would desire, but she won't break him if he entertains her but once in decent style, instead of three or four times in poverty stricken fashion that makes his guest want to pass her purse across the table to him to help him out of his difficulty. There is no pleasure in eating under such circumstances, and a woman would feel much more pleased with a man if no such suggestion were made and she thus escaped an exhibition of his meanness. Let it be said right here that the really poor man is not the one to get into such a predicament. He knows he can't, and he stays out of trouble by not inviting you to a swell restaurant and then looking pained if you order something beyond what he had expected. It is the man who wants to make a show of being a "thoroughbred" who too often proves conclusively by some episode of this sort that he is not.

"My boy will know how to order when he grows up," said a young mother the other day, "if I have to write out the menu for him every time he takes a young lady out. There won't be any 'what will you have' about it, but he will select a dainty little meal that will relieve her from the embarrassment of selection, but won't be made up of the cheapest things in sight, and will, therefore, give her a chance, if she does not care for his choice, to make a change in one or more dishes without feeling that she is an up to date Jack Sheppard who has lured an unhappy victim into a restaurant just to rob him."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

A Fearful Situation.

"Chawles," said Willie Wibbles, "I shall never again make fun of melodramas."

"Why not?"

"Those stwuggles between devotion and duty sometimes happen in weal life. You know how the girl wants to marry a young man who disagwees with her father on politics and goes to war on the othar side?"

"Yes—everybody knows her."

"Don't make sport of her—deah boy—don't do it. Suppose this country were to have a war with England. Which would I do, wave the American flag and whistle 'Yankee Doodle' or woll up my pantaloons and sing 'Wule Britannia'?"—Washington Star.

If ever household affections and loves are graceful things, they are graceful in the poor. The ties that bind the wealthy and the proud to home may be forged on earth, but those which link the poor man to his humble hearth are of the true metal, and bear the stamp of heaven.—Dickens.

HOPE FIRE CO.

GREENVILLE, N. C., July 21.

EDITOR REFLECTOR:—Hope Fire
Co. tried to have a drill last night with their engine. It was taken down to the river bridge and when the suction hose was placed in the river it was found that there were several holes in it and the engine could not draw
but a half of a stream of water.
Now the question is will the Town Council continue to let the engine be almost worthless to the town or will they procure a new suction so that the engine can do her full duty at a fire.
