Short Notes.

—The biggest poultry ranch in the world is to be located near San Francisco. It is expected to yield 90,000 broilers and 2,000,000 eggs a year.

—Millions of men in India live, marry and rear apparently happy children upon an income which, even when the wife works, is rarely above 50 cents a week.

—Many men in California watch sheep for their health. Dozens of men claim to have been cured of consumption simply by putting in several months at watching sheep.

THE GERMAN.

Crowning Social Event of the Season.

The Eastern Warehouse has been an attractive place on many occasions with its broad floors bedecked with piles of golden weed over which the auctioneer and army of buyers made merry music, but such scenes as these are lost in oblivion in comparison with the aggregation of beauty and gallantry assembled within its spacious walls on Wednesday evening.

It was the occasion of the German under the auspices of the Columbian Club, and from 10 to 3 o'clock the picture of loveliness under the inspiration of most entrancing music, made a scene in which Cupid could revel with delight amid the conquest of hearts about him. It was the acme of the season's social events and one our young people will long cherish with most pleasant memories.

The attendance was very large, and amid so many participants the reporter may have overlooked the names of some if so failure to mention them was unintentional.

The German was led by W. B. James, the following couples being noticeable in the mystic figures,

Miss Jennie James with H. A. White.

Miss May Harvey, Kinston, with C. S. Forbes.

Miss Bettie Tyson with W. J. Corbett.

Miss Sallie Lipscomb with H. W. Whedbee.

HOME'S SEAMY SIDE.

Small Miseries Which No Art Can Prevent or Subdue.

A great deal is said and written nowadays about the art of homemaking, while very little thought is expended upon the fact that in the home certain small miseries arise and flourish which no art can better or subdue.

In most homes there are great capabilities for happiness, and so in direct proportion of unhappiness. Not every man or woman, however well-intentioned, true, and conscientious, can make the home what it ought to be. And one of the most fruitful causes of unhappiness, next to bad temper, is to be found in poor housekeeping.

Many a woman, in every respect admirable and intelligent beyond the average, cannot entirely grasp the mysteries of housekeeping. And that it is not a matter of intelligence is shown by the fact that some of the best and most skillful housewives have been those who turned their attention to little else than the ordering of their dinners and the scrupulous neatness of their homes.

And who shall say that these did not make a success of housekeeping? So many, many things enter into the housekeeping for the good or ill of the household. The wife or house-keeping sister may be orderly, the husband or brothers the reverse; or the wife totally regardless of system, while the husband counts a misplaced article or a late breakfast an unpardonable sin for which no future punctuality or neatness may condone; and these things occurring day after day, year in and year out, a consequent struggle ensues which renders life a martyrdom.

The more trivial the occasion, the more bitter the sense of defeat. "Oh," said a woman, whose house-keeping was to her as the grinding of the pilgrim's pebbles in his shoes, "I know I am a miserable failure as a housekeeper! I can do half a dozen things well, but I cannot keep a house."

Now, there is no more reason in the world why that woman should wear herself into nervous prostration trying to do a thing that in all her life she will never compass than there is that any man should become a lawyer when his tastes and aptitude are for medicine or mechanism.

"My wife and I are much fonder of each other since we sit down every day with a dozen people than when we dined alone," said a jolly husband, who went through life very respectably and happily, though he never had a home. It is sad, but nevertheless true, that the dispositions of some couples change entirely for the better as soon as they are freed from the shackles of house-keeping. Faultfinding ceases, anxious lines smooth away, and both husband and wife draw a long breath of relief.

I have known a most devoted husband and wife who, after the various domestic complications caused by the civil war, looked the matter of house-keeping squarely in the face. The wife, no longer young, felt that she could not, without great personal exertion and untold worry, take up housekeeping on a totally different basis from that with which she had been familiar, and her husband was wise and considerate enough to accept her view of the situation.

And to the end of their lives they boarded. So it goes. Work that to one woman is pleasant, to another one is irksome; but there is no use in fretting over circumstances—it is far better to accept the inevitable with good grace.—Harper's Bazar.

OVERBOARD WENT THE RAZORS.

"Scrappy Bill's" Story of a Quick-Witted Steamboat Captain.

"A friendly thunderstorm once saved a carving match between a lot of colored baseball fans," relates "Scrappy Bill" Joyce. "It happened in Galveston harbor in 1883, and at the time I was captain of the Houston team, the champions of the Texas league. On a hot Sunday afternoon we went to Galveston to play a game with the Galveston team. An excursion steamer, with a party of colored excursionists, all rooters for the Galvestons, left one of the coast towns early on Sunday morning. There was plenty to drink on board and the colored sports waded into it. While the fans were collecting a high tide a dispute arose over the merits of the Houstons and Galvestons, and though the Galveston crowd was in the majority the Houston push refused to be downed in the argument. When the dispute was at its height, and all indications pointed to a razor finish, the captain of the steamer corkscrewed his way into the crowd and yelled: 'Stop this noise. We're going to have a thunderstorm in a minute, and I want you to warn all those who have steel weapons concealed on their persons. If you don't part with those weapons you lay yourselves open to danger. The steel will attract the lightning. So look out!' Every colored sport on that boat rammed his hand into his pocket, pulled out a jackknife, a razor or a gun and tossed them into the sea. The storm was a tame affair and passed over in five minutes. But the quick wit of the captain in separating those sports from their steel saved many a fellow that afternoon."—N. Y. Herald.

His One Great Trouble.

An old bedridden fisherman at a fashionable watering place was frequently visited during his last illness by a kind-hearted clergyman, who wore one of those close-fitting clerical vests with buttons behind.

The clergyman saw the near approach of death one day in the old man's face, and asked if his mind was perfectly at ease.

"Oo ay, I'm a' rich," came the feeble reply.

"You are sure there is nothing troubling you? Do not be afraid to tell me."

The old man seemed to hesitate, and at length, with a faint return of animation, said: "Weel, there's just a thing that troubles me, but I dinna like to speak o't."

"Believe me, I am most anxious to comfort you," replied the clergyman. "Tell me what it is that troubles and perplexes you."

"Weel, sir, it's just like this," said the old man, eagerly. "I canna for the life o' me mak' oot hoo ye manage ta get inta that westcoat."—Tit-Bits.

A Question of Age.

A middle-aged woman entered a Woodward-avenue car, and finding every seat occupied, hung on a strap and prepared to stand. Presently another woman rose and offered her seat.

"No, thank you," said the woman who was standing. "I will not deprive you of your seat."

"But I insist," was the reply. "I am much better able to stand than you are."

"What makes you think so?" asked the other woman, suspiciously.

"Because I am the youngest."

The gauntlet was thrown. The older woman did not hesitate to pick it up. "There may be two opinions about that," retorted the angry passenger. "I'm sure any one can see with half an eye that you are no chicken."

The passengers were getting excited, and one man said under his breath:

"Now comes the tug of war."

Then the woman who had resigned her seat concluded to take it again, but first she sent in another deadly shaft: "No, I'm no chicken, and don't care to be, but I had rather be a chicken than an old hen."

And she flopped into her seat, which, however, was now occupied by a smart woman who knew when to seize a bone of contention.—Detroit Free Press.
