Base Ball.

Brooklyn, August 7—Washington was not in at any stage today. Both Payne and Mercer pitched good ball. Mercer's poor support, however, told against his chances of winning. Score. Brooklyn, 9; Washington, 1.

Cincinnati, August 7—The Colonels and Reds played a fine game today, resulting in the former being shut out. The feature was the pitching of Bill Rhines, who held the visitors down to three hits. Score. Cincinnati, 5; Louisville, 0.

Philadelphia, August 7—The Quakers were never serious factors in today's game. The errors of Dowd and Shugart were surprising. The fielding of Gleason and Davis was the redeeming feature of the contest. Score. Philadelphia, 1; New York, 11.

St. Louis, August 7—The Browns and Pittsburghers split even in two games today. In the first game the home team played all around the visitors, and in the second game it was just reversed. Score. Pittsburgh, 5; St. Louis, 7.

Second game—Pittsburgh, 12; St. Louis, 3.

Chicago, August 7—Eight gifts, two wild pitches, two batsmen hit, together with some very ragged plays by the infield tells how the Indians lost today's game, after having outbatted the Colts two to one. Score. Chicago, 9; Cleveland, 8.

Boston, August 7—The game between Boston and Baltimore today was a pitcher's battle. Boston won by bunching their hits in the fifth inning. Lynch, who was injured yesterday in a row with Doyle, tendered his resignation as a league umpire, but later withdrew it and will probably appear Monday. Score. Boston, 4; Baltimore, 2.

Rocky.

The following marriage note appeared in a Northern exchange: Married at Flintstone, by Rev. Windstone, Mr. Nehemiah Whitestone to Miss Wilhelmina Sandstone, both of Limestone. If there is anything in a name there is too much "grit" in the family, and there is bound to be trouble around their hearthstone. They will have a stony road to travel and before they pass many mile stones somebody is apt to need a tombstone.—Louisburg Times.

And the fellow who invented that stony yarn ought to have had a mill stone about his neck and be cast into the sea.

The sad fate of a Stokes county moonshiner who was shot at church will cause all moonshiners to swear off—from going to church.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 10, 1897.

Sensations of a Drowning Man.

I was swimming at some distance from the shore in the tropics, and when I turned in a homeward direction I found that the current was too strong for me, and that, do what I could, I was being swept in an easterly direction; and as the coast-line trended northward, this was equivalent to being taken out to sea. The sense of being once more in the clutch of an omnipotent and inexorable force of the sea overwhelmed me with dismay. I remembered with horror all the sensations that had attended my earlier experience of drowning, and to this apprehension was added the knowledge that there was some, though not a great, danger from sharks. I looked shorewards and seawards, and saw to my joy that a small coral islet or rock, a few feet square, lay in an easterly direction, and that by husbanding my strength it might be practicable to reach it. Alternately swimming and floating I was overcome by a terrible fatigue, and as my strength failed I became conscious of the fact that a great disaster was at hand. Almost abandoning hope, I was involuntarily interested in contrasting the sensations experienced under the shadow of the death that was impending with the feelings under similar circumstances fifteen years before. It suddenly occurred to me that if I shouted with all my remaining strength the sound might reach the shore, and that a canoe might be manned and put out for my rescue, and might reach me in time.

Although I was not aware of the fact, my cries had been heard. Half swimming, half drifting with the tide, I had managed to swallow sufficient salt water to produce partial insensibility; but by some good fortune, and almost unconsciously, it seems that I managed to reach the coral rock to which reference has been made. Although I felt no pain at the time, the sharp edges of the coral growth severely cut my hands and body, and I was bleesing freely when overtaken by a boat which, without my knowledge had put out to save me. I suddenly became conscious of the presence of my rescuers, and automatically grasped with a clutch the knife like edges of the coral fronds, which grievously lacerated my fingers. Whether it was the smell of blood or mere accident at the time when I was lifted from the water into the canoe, a shark was almost touching me; but the noise and splashing made by the men in the boat successfully frightened him away. I have no recollection of being lifted into the canoe, but was in a dead faint for some minutes. At no time during this latter experience was I conscious of the slightest tendency to survey my past life, or to deplore the sins and failings which I share in common with the rest of humanity.—Cassell's Magazine.

Picnic in a Colored Church.

There was a picnic in one of the colored churches of the town, says the Louisville Dispatch. The proceeds were to be applied on the shortage of the pastor's salary. It was arranged that every woman who attended the picnic should take a well filled basket, covered with heavy paper, a card inside bearing her name. The baskets were to go to the highest bidder, and the purchaser was to eat with the "good sister" that brought the basket.

Darkies, old and young, came crowding into the church. Uncle Mosby arose and as he waved his hand for silence, said:

"Dis hyar picnic is ter de ben'fit uv de church, de cokin' is guaranteed, highest bidder gits de grub, cash down, mine yo'."

An old negro at this point arose and said that he would cut a white cake with a ring inside, 15 cents sash down, and the ring guaranteed.

The first basket brought 20 cents, but Uncle Mosby gave them to understand that no more would go at that price.

The bidding came better. It was just here that a new feature was introduced. Jim Drake, a drunken steamboat rouser, came in, displaying four or five dollars, and began to bid. An old sister, by the name of Jane Lanem, yelled out, "He can't eat wid me."

Several others made this same statement, but Jim held his ground, and said, "My money is des as good as anybody's money." "Yo' money is satin's money!" yelled Aunt Jane.

Uncle Mosby waved his hand and said: "Dis hyar picnic am gwine ter be run on principuls uv respect, an' bein' yer ain't in no respectubul condishun, Jim, yo' can't buy no grub."

"I'se jes' erbout as 'specterbul ez yo' wuz when yo' stole dat sack er merl, vo' ol' lyin' hippercrit."

Uncle Mosby went for him and squashed a basket over his head. Chicken and "pop" flew in every direction, and four or five joined in the fracas. The women yelled, and some one turned out the lights. Jim, the rouser, escaped in the darkness and took a basket with him as he went, and when an old negro struck a match Uncle Mosby and Elder Jenkins were fighting over in a corner each thinking the other was Jim.

When peace was restored it was discovered that seven baskets were missing, and that the cake with the "gold ring" was also gone.

Rural Human Nature.

I like to visit New York. The manner in which business is there done reminds me of home—it is so different, says a writer in Hardware. Over in the next town I have an old friend who keeps a general store. He carries one garden rake in stock—of an antiquated pattern, and a mouldy, war time price. A customer who needed a rake objected to the price.

"Well," said the old man, crossly, "you can take it or leave it, just as you please."

"You don't seem very anxious to sell goods?" said the customer. "I don't know as I am 'tarnal anxious to sell that rake," was the answer. "If I do I'll only have to order another one."

We have a merchant in this town who is just the opposite. He will do anything to make a sale. He is very learned (in his mind) and great is his use of Latin. He was talking to the Widow Smeed about her boy. "How much Henry reminds me of his poor, dear father," said he: "Why, he's the 'squire's very face smile."

This merchant had half a dozen of the most prominent ladies of our county seat in his store, and was weighing them on the scales. A short, stout German woman came in, and the merchant said, "Now, Mrs. Schmitt, let's see what you weigh."

The scales hung at 210.

"My gracious, Mrs. Schmitt," said the merchant, "who would have thought you would weigh that much!"

"Vell," said the answer, "you see, I was fat where you don't see."

Burke county has imported about 7,000 bushels of corn this season from Louisville, Ky., and the Farmer's Friend, of Morganton, says the "fact ought to make us all thoroughly ashamed of ourselves. It is in part the result of men quitting the farm to strip tan bark, cut mill logs, run a team for chance hauling and other doubtful ventures that promise to yield a little ready money."

When bilious or costive, eat a Cascaret, candy cathartic, cure constipation.

"The biggest farm in the world is in the southwestern part my state," said Mr. P. G. Vinton, of Louisiana, at the Normandie. "It is owned and operated by a syndicate of northern capitalists and embraces 1,500,000 acres of land, which were originally a big pasture for cattle. The land is devoted to the cultivation of cotton, corn, sugar, and rice. East and west the estate runs 100 miles. The Southern Pacific railway runs through it for nearly forty miles. A good deal of attention is paid to raising cattle, of which the syndicate owns 16,000 head. The company operates several steamers on the navigable rivers that run through their mammoth farm, and they have also rice mills, a shipyard, ice plant and bank." New York Times.

We don't know how the law is down there, or how the head of Judge King, of New Orleans, is geared, but his heart is geared all right. In a divorce case before him he refused to permit the children to be brought into court as witness for or against either parent, and stated his position thus: "I care not what the law or the facts of the case may be; I will not permit one of these children to take the stand for or against either their father or mother. I will not permit them to be innocently placed in such a position that they will have to look back upon it with distress in later years." And that settled it. Bravo for that Judge. —Wilmington Star.

One of the Scraps that You Read About.

Two white women had a desperate fight near Willow Brook Cotton Mills Saturday. Such screeching and scratching and ganging and hair-pulling was never seen in these diggings before. Their husbands had to separate them. This could not be done until one choked the breath out of his wife and the other knocked his down and dragged her off.—Lincoln Journal.

The Western Union Telegraph Company has appealed from the order of the railroad commission making 15 cents the rate for a ten word day message. The company contends that the rate is not just and that it would force the company to operate at a loss; also that the commission has no power to make rates for telegrams.

The Richmond Dispatch is strictly right in saying that the "usual crime" is getting to be the absorbing question with us, overshadowing all others. Finance, tariff, bankrupt bills, internal revenue, international questions, all sink into indifference when compared with this. The demon must be controlled or crushed.

The girls used to wear clothes to match their complexions. Now they wear their complexions to match the clothes.

School Election.

The farce of the school election was gone through with today, that is where enough poll holders got together to hold an election. So far as we have been able to hear there was some voting going on in three townships—Beaver Dam, Chicod, and one precinct in Greenville. In Carolina, Falkland, Farmville, Pactolus and the other precincts in Greenville the polls were not opened. In those places where some voting was in progress it was done principally by the colored people. The outlook is that the promoters of the scheme will see it prove a dead failure in Pitt county.
