The Pistol Went Off

Mr. John Hovis, of Lincoln county, drove to town yesterday morning and stopped his wagon very near the square. As he went to get out of his wagon, he struck the hammer of a pistol he had in his pocket on the wagon, the pistol went off, startling every one who was passing.

A false idea of economy often prevails among business men and officials. A dull season is frequently made all the duller because of the lack of effort to make it lively. The only safe way to prevent spasmodic fluctuations in business is a constant unwavering attempt to get down to hard work and greater effort.

This Year's Elections

The elections for 1898 will be more general and of far greater importance than were those of 1897.

In addition to the choice of a new House of Representatives of the United States Congress and of Legislatures in several of the States which will elect United States Senators, Governors and State officers will be elected in Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Georgia, Idaho, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Wisconsin and Wyoming.

These elections cover every part of the country and will be national in their character. Being the first general elections since the coming into power of the new administration they will be taken as an expression of the sentiment of the people toward the party in power.

How Chinese Paper Their Houses.

The Chinese at Amoy do not paper their walls much, but they often paper ceilings, partitions, etc., so that a large quantity of wall paper is consumed in that district. This paper, besides being used for artificial flowers, is used for clothing the human effigies that are burned at funerals, and this practice being general throughout China, the amount of it consumed is considerable.

Literary Revival in Germany.

The movement in contemporary German literature, says J. Firman Coar in The Atlantic, is in many ways similar to the "Storm and Stress" period of the seventh and eighth decades of the last century. Out of that movement evolved the great classic period of German literature, with Goethe and Schiller as its leaders.

TO CURE NERVOUS DYSPEPSIA

To Gain Flesh, to Sleep Well, to Know What Appetite and Good Digestion Mean, Make a Test of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Interesting Experience of an Indianapolis Gentleman.

No trouble is more common or more misunderstood than nervous dyspepsia. People having it think that their nerves are to blame and are surprised that they are not cured by nerve medicine and spring remedies.

Nervous dyspeptics often do not have any pain whatever in the stomach, nor perhaps any of the usual symptoms of stomach weakness. Nervous dyspepsia shows itself not in the stomach so much as in nearly every other organ.

Mr. A. W. Sharper of No. 61 Prospect St. Indianapolis, Ind., writes as follows: A motive of pure gratitude prompts me to write these few lines regarding the new and valuable medicine, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

HONEY AS FOOD.

There Are Said to Be Health and Long Life In Its Use.

A pound of honey will go as far as a pound of butter, and if both articles be of the best quality the honey will cost the less of the two. Often a prime article of extracted honey, equal to comb honey in every respect except appearance, can be obtained for half the price of butter, or less. Butter is in its best only when it is "fresh," while honey, properly kept, remains indefinitely good—no need to hurry it out of the way for fear it may become rancid.

Sugar is much used in hot drinks, as in coffee and tea. The substitution of a mild flavored honey in such use may be a very profitable thing for the health. Indeed it would be better for the health if the only hot drinks were what is called in Germany honey tea—a cup of hot water with one or two tablespoonfuls of extracted honey. The attainment of great age has in some cases been attributed largely to the lifelong use of honey tea.

Many people think "honey is honey," all just alike, but this is a great mistake. Honey may be of good heavy body, what beekeepers call "well ripened" and weighing sometimes 12 pounds to the gallon, or it may be quite thin. It may also be granulated or candied, more solid than lard. It may be almost as colorless as water, and it may be as black as the darkest molasses. The flavor of honey varies according to the flower from which it is obtained. It would be impossible to describe in words the flavors of the different honeys. The different flavors in honey are as distinct as the odors in flowers. Among the lighter colored honeys are white clover, linden (or basswood), sage, sweet clover, alfalfa, willow herb, etc., and among the darker are found heartsease, magnolia (or poplar), horse-mint, buckwheat, etc.

Tastes differ as to honey as in all other things. White clover is so generally preferred to buckwheat, with its very dark color and strongly marked flavor, that buckwheat honey always runs lower in price than white clover, yet there are some who prefer buckwheat to any other honey. Somewhat fortunately, one generally prefers the honey to which he is most accustomed. A Californian thinks nothing equals white sage, while a Pennsylvanian thinks white clover far ahead.

In these days of prevailing adulteration, when so often "things are not what they seem," it is a comfort to know that when one buys comb honey he may know without question he is getting the genuine article. The silly stories seen from time to time in the papers about artificial combs being filled with glucose and deftly sealed over with a hot iron have not the slightest foundation in fact. For years there has been a standing offer by one whose financial responsibility is unquestioned of $1,000 for a single pound of comb honey made without the intervention of bees. The offer remains untaken and will probably remain so, for the highest art of man can never compass such delicate workmanship as the skill of the bee accomplishes.

With extracted honey the case is different. When you see in the grocery a tumbler of liquid honey with a small piece of comb honey in the center, you may be pretty sure the liquid honey is not honey at all, but pure glucose. If not familiar enough with honey to detect it by taste, your only safe course is to buy of the producer direct or of some one who knows as to its source and upon whose honesty you can rely.

Aside from its use in an unchanged state as a direct accompaniment of bread or biscuit, honey is used by bakers in manufacturing their choicest wafers. An advantage of using honey for anything in the line of cake is in its keeping qualities. Even if the cake should become dry, close it up in a bread can for a time, and its freshness will return.—Bee Culture.

A Medieval Bill of Fare.

An old chronicle preserves a bill of fare for a council dinner in the year 1592. For the first course there were capons, steamed beef and old hens, black game prepared with vinegar; second course, steamed carp served with spiced sauce, sauerkraut with mutton and pastry; third course, roast veal, birds, fried fish, cheese, fruit, nuts, chestnuts and wafers. The wine and game were furnished by the court. The host received 15 farthings from each person.—"Stuttgart," by Elise J. Allen, in Harper's Magazine.

GEMS MADE LOVELIER.

How Jewelers Cleverly Paint and Join Broken Jewels.

It seems truly like painting the lily and gilding refined gold to attempt to embellish and increase the delicacy and beauty of the precious stones—diamonds, rubies, emeralds and sapphires—which have taken nature centuries of labor to perfect in their pristine charm. So fastidious, however, has man become that he is no longer satisfied with the delicate shades and hues in the gems of nature's own making, and he must improve upon them and adapt them to prevailing tastes and fashions.

A process frequently used to improve the appearance of precious stones that are faulty, dull or of an ordinary hue is that of burning. Blemishes are removed by this process, or the color and brilliance of the stone are enhanced. Very often the color of the gem is entirely changed.

Even the delicate turquoise must occasionally resign itself to artificial embellishment. Many sensitive turquoises become bleached and faded from exposure to the sunlight. Ammonia and fatty substances are applied to restore the original blue color, but such treatment does not accomplish lasting results. By another process the faded turquoise is impregnated with prussian blue. The pigment does not penetrate very deeply, however, and may easily be scraped off with a knife. Such artificial coloring is easily discernible by lamplight, which transforms the delicate shade into an unsightly gray.

Artificial methods are adopted also to render gems colorless. The yellow tinge of Cape diamonds obscures their luster and cheapens their value. It is therefore found profitable to deprive them of the objectionable tint, and the method is very simple. The yellow diamond is placed in a violet colored chemical liquid and after being dried is found covered with a very thin scale of the violet substance.

Highly ingenious and deceptive is the art of joining precious stones. Upper and under layers are frequently fastened with mastic in this fashion, and so cleverly as to deceive even the experienced eye. Joined stones are quite common, for the significant reason that a large solitaire diamond or other gem is far more costly than two smaller ones.

The art of "doubling" is carried to the extent of making false doublets, which are naturally manufactured at slight cost when inferior stones or imitation ones are used. Some doublets are composed of an upper portion of colorless glass or mountain crystal and an under portion of colored glass. The latter imparts its hue to the former. The effect is also obtained by placing a layer of coloring matter between two colorless portions, or using a bit of leaf metal or tinted gelatin. There are also hollow doublets, pieces of crystal or glass in which are sealed drops of colored liquid.

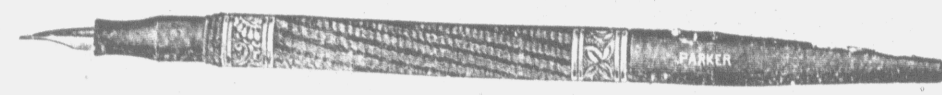

Many sharp practices are in vogue among jewelers in the marketing of stones. Where the setting is not an open one and the gem rests in a solid bit of metal, opportunity is given for many shrewd devices to enhance the appearance of the jewel, conceal its flaws and increase its brilliance. A pigment composed of burned ivory and mastic is commonly applied to the surface of the metal setting where it is found necessary to conceal the presence of dark and unsightly spots in precious stones. The black pigment is placed beneath those portions of the stone that are free from the dark flaws.

Even more frequently thin bits of gold, silver, copper or zinc foil, retaining their original color, are laid beneath the gems, rendering them more brilliant and improving their color.—New York Commercial.

Give Him a Chance.

A now famous physician relates that early in his career in the city where he was located there resided an elderly physician who was always ready to give him wholesome advice. One morning the young practitioner was called to visit a man who was very sick. On his way he happened to meet his old friend, the doctor, and, as usual, he had something of importance to say. He drew it out so long, however, that the younger man grew impatient and finally said: "Doctor, you will have to excuse me. I am on my way to visit a gentleman who is said to be dangerously ill." "Oh," was the unexpected reply, "give the man a chance," and the old fellow resumed the subject he was discussing.—Chicago News.

He Paid His Fare

Governor D. L. Russell was among the arrivals in the city Tuesday morning at 9:30 o'clock by the Atlantic Coast Line. He came from Raleigh by way of Goldsboro. When the conductor was passing through the train punching tickets, he came across the governor and stopped to look at his pass.

Governor Russell, however, asked the conductor what the fare was.

"Why," you've got a pass, haven't you, governor?" said the ticket puncher.

"Well, yes," Governor Russell replied, but I'm tired of the d—n pass business?"

Governor Russell's remark caused a laugh all round, and when the conductor told him what the fare was, he jocularly asked if there was any excess charge. As everybody knows Gov. Russell is a large man and he was having some fun about his own size. He paid his fare.—Wilmington Messenger.

The John Flanagan Buggy Company's New Factory Ready to Begin Work

"A hard working man can't be downed."

This is the remark made to the editor of THE REFLECTOR by Mr. R. Greene, manager of the John Flanagan Buggy Co., on the morning of December 17th. The night before, the entire plant of this company had been destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of $5,000 above all insurance. Such a loss would stagger most men of only ordinary capital, but it takes a man of pluck and energy to determine in the face of such a disaster that he will not be downed.

It was the morning after the fire that THE REFLECTOR report reached Mr. Greene to learn something of his plans for the future. He made use of the above quotation and told us immediate steps would be taken to rebuild the plant, that it would be larger and better than ever, and only a slight interruption in filling orders would arise from the disaster.

Bob Greene is always a busy, hard-working man, but from that day to this he has surpassed even his former self. Starting, moving all the time, he has not allowed a moment to be lost on his hands. As soon as lumber could be secured the site was cleared of debris and busy hands set to work on a new building. Almost like magic this house took on shape, and today, less than a month from the fire, is ready for use.

Like Mr. Greene stated, the new factory is much larger and better than the old one, in fact it is an ideal establishment for his business, and he says the building had to be gone over again he does not see one change he would wish to make in it. There is 7,500 feet of floor space and the rooms are admirably arranged for convenience and comfort. While the building has been going up new machinery, tools and material have been procured so there will be no delay in starting up the factory.

The establishment is a credit to Greenville, and we congratulate Mr. Greene upon the success that has crowned his undertaking.
