HORRORS OF CHINESE WAR.

Lieut. Lyman Cotten writes
Home of What He Sees in China.

U. S. S. ZAFIRO
TAKU, CHINA, Aug. 2nd 1900.

MY DEAR MOTHER:

I have just received your nice long letter written in Milwaukee and enjoyed it very much. I hope the papers will come soon, so I can read all about the Mother's Congress. I know you enjoyed your trip out West. I also had two letters from father recently.

I know the papers give you much later news than I can write of the developments out here, but nevertheless I think it will interest all at Cottondale to hear of my visit to the scene of the battle at Tien Tsin. After the fall of that city I took a few days off and went up to the scene of action, but no words can give an idea of what I saw. I left here on a tug one afternoon and went up to Tonku, on the Tei Ho river, where the U. S. S. Monocacy is anchored. A tug left there about midnight for Tien Tsin, about sixty miles distant by the river, but only about half of that by rail. I had to sleep on the deck of the tug, but even that did not disturb me, and at daylight I turned out to see what was to be seen. We were then about twenty miles from Tien Tsin, but everywhere could be seen the evidences of war. Towns burned, soldiers encamped on the march, and last, but not least, lots of dead

Chinamen floating down the river, while scores of dogs watched them from the banks, waiting for them to drift ashore. Here and there dogs would be snapping and snarling as they made their breakfast on a human carcass. It was horrible.

Soon we drew near the city, or what is left of it. Everywhere soldiers of all nations were going and coming, while on the river bank crowds of Chinese were at work under guard, unloading supplies for the troops. I found my way to the U. S. Marine headquarters, and got a friend of mine who was there at the fight to show me around. First we took in the foreign settlement that was bombarded by the Chinese for so long a time. Everywhere we saw ruins and soldiers. Large store houses wrecked by shells and burned, trees torn down and even the walls left standing were peppered with rifle balls. Then we crossed the river and went over to the railroad station where some of the hardest fighting took place. Here I mounted a high platform and surveyed a scene the like of which seldom comes to a man. We were on the edge of what is called the Chinese suburbs, really a city of several hundred thousand inhabitants. Before us was a blackened mass of ruins with not one roof left in it. Two of the railroad houses were still standing, but were mere wrecks, upon which you could scarcely lay your hand without covering a bullet hole. It was estimated that in the roof of one of these houses were no less than six thousand shot holes, large and small. Below us were the trenches occupied by the allied troops protecting the station. Scattered over the ground were unexploded shells, pieces of shrapnel, and rifle balls. It was indeed an impressive sight. In the afternoon we went out to the walled city. All the way out, about four miles, as we wound our way among the ruins, here and there could be seen a Chinaman viewing in silence what was probably a few days ago his home, and thankful to have escaped with his life, he probably realizes that the hands of the foreigner know how to wreak vengeance and that soon his own China will have to beg for mercy from those hands.

In the walled city was a repitition of ruins. After looking around, awhile, we went up on the wall and got a birds-eye view of the battle field and city. Their position looked almost impregnable. The walls are thirty feet high and twenty feet thick while the country around is almost as flat as a table. The wonder is that in taking this walled city we did not lose more men. But it does seem sad to practically wipe out of existence a city of over a million inhabitants, and which is almost as old as the hills.

The advance on Peking began yesterday. We hear many reports about Peking, but I think up to this time the ministers are living, although they are likely to be killed at any time. The powers are still working in apparent harmony.

I have a few very interesting souvenirs. A large Chinese flag from one of the arsenals in the walled city, an old pistol, a rifle and a sword belt. They are very interesting if I can get them home, and put them with the Spanish flag and the Filipino flag I sent you from Manila. I wish I could be with you all at Cottondale and hope I may be there in one more year, though it is not certain. With a great deal of love for all.

Your devoted son,
LYMAN COTTEN.

Sunbeams Lawn Party.

The lawn party to be given Friday night at the home of Rev. J. N. Booth by the children of the Sunbeam Society is not intended for children alone. It is only conducted by the little folks and they will be awfully disappointed if the grown people do not attend and give them a liberal patronage.

Got to Work.

R. Greene & O. Hooker have got the engine at their ginnery in good working order now and the plant is doing fine work. They are ready for people to bring on their cotton now.

Military Company.

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT BUILDING, PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION.

Copyright, 1900, by the Pan-American Exposition Co.

So vast is the number of valuable and interesting objects for exhibition in the possession of the government that none but a building of great proportions could possibly contain them. Instead of one building, however, at the Pan-American Exposition, which is to be held in Buffalo from May 1 to Nov. 1, 1901, the Federal group will consist of three massive structures connected by colonnades. The main building will be 130 feet wide and 600 feet long. The others will each be 150 feet square. The government work is under the direction of James Knox Taylor, supervising architect of the treasury department. The group will be treated architecturally in a modified Spanish renaissance, and the color scheme, in marked contrast to that used at Chicago, will be rich and brilliant.

THE TOBACCO CROP, PRICES AND NEED OF GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.

President J. Bryan Grimes, of the North Carolina Tobacco Growers' Association, addressed a letter recently to Mr. O. L. Joyner, warehouseman of prominence at Greenville, N. C., in which this request was made:

"In view of the reduced acreage in tobacco in Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina, it would appear that the type of tobacco, the production of which is confined largely to those States, should of necessity advance. What is your opinion of the outlook for prices this fall? I will be glad if you will give the organization of tobacco farmers careful, serious thought, and embody your views of the outlook and remedy in an article in the Southern Tobacco Journal."

Mr. Joyner's article follows:

HON. J. BRYAN GRIMES, Pres. N. C. Tobacco Growers' Association, Grimesland, N. C.

MY DEAR SIR:—Since I received your communication of August 8 I have given the subject to which you refer considerable thought. It were to judge from the report of the shortage in acreage and the crop condition, which in my opinion are not exaggerated, it would seem that the price of tobacco should advance very materially over last season.

It has been argued that there has been a surplus of tobacco made for the last five years, and this will, it is said, tend to keep the price down to some extent. How true this is I do not know, but I do know unless the price of tobacco advances, especially the better grades of it, very much over the prices of last year, the thousands of idle barns in the fields of eastern North Carolina next year will emphasize the fact that this section of the State will no longer contribute to keep the surplus up.

Farmers are generally slow to act, usually take a conservative view of the conditions surrounding them, and will continue longer at a losing game and keep up better cheer than any other class or profession of men in the world; but like a herd of buffaloes frenzied and crazed by heat, when they stampede for some stream from which to quench their thirst are headstrong and determined, so it is with the masses of farmers. They continue from year to year to plant tobacco, hoping that each year will bring better prices, and they have gradually seen prices go lower and lower until now they are on a verge of a headstrong stampede for the first relief that is offered; and here in eastern North Carolina, where our lands are generally in a high state of cultivation, that relief is offered in the cotton crop.

Cotton is selling at better prices now than it has brought in ten years. Our farmers primarily prefer to grow cotton, because they have inherited it to some extent and it is less laborious. The same cause which has advanced the price of cotton—the great law of supply and demand, and which is just as incontrovertible as the laws of gravitation—will in my opinion surely advance the price of tobacco when the supply only equals demand.

I do not say, however, that supply and demand absolutely control prices, for systematic organization and combination of tobacco buyers, even when the supply is less than the demand, can and will do a great deal toward controlling the price; but I do assert that the law of supply and demand is the chief factor in controlling prices, and by thorough organization of the tobacco farmers I shall attempt to show conclusively that the growers can be complete masters of the situation and from their own position dictate prices. The trouble is getting at an approximately accurate estimate of the supply. When this is known, in my opinion this chief controlling influence will begin to assert itself. There are other very powerful agencies which operate to oppress the price of tobacco, chief among which is the lack of organization, harmony and concerted action on the part of the farmers themselves in planting and marketing their tobacco.

Notwithstanding there is a universal consensus of opinion that the crop in the three principal bright tobacco growing States is reduced in acreage and condition something near forty per cent, yet if farmers begin marketing their tobacco so as to sell all of it in two or three months, it is sure to follow that there will be glutted markets, blocked sales, broken down buyers and warehousemen and consequently low prices. These forced sales, as I may call them, give the impression also that the crop has been underestimated, because those who are governed by the supply place their orders on the several markets, and thus judge the crop by their receipts as compared with a similar period last year. Hence when the crop is thrown upon the market in a short time, say two or three months, the receipts for this time may be as heavy as if it were a seventy million pound crop.

In reference to the organization of the tobacco farmers of the bright tobacco growing States, I should say by all means let the work be pushed continuously and vigorously, from the counties that produce the smallest quantity of tobacco to those which produce the millions. Let the work of the organization and education be carried on until every man, from the poorest plowman with his one acre patch to the mightiest landlord with his vast estates are enlisted and their names enrolled as collaborators and joint partners in the same cause.

There can be no possible objection by any one to an organized effort on the part of the great tobacco producers for the betterment of their condition. Organization will bring the farmers together; thus the work of education begins by an interchange of thoughts, ideas and views. Education is nothing but the broadening and expanding of the natural talent or sense, and if by coming together and exchanging ideas and opinions we liberate the mind to a more generous construction of our position and our duty one to the other, the effort will not have been in vain. By complete and thorough organization such can be affected.

If the farmers, or a few of them in each community, will take an active interest in it a better understanding of the situation can be had. One half the misery of the world—nearly all the disagreement between man and his fellow man—is the result of not properly understanding the position each occupies. The relation of the producer to the manufacturer is mighty closely allied, and yet how far apart are they in the conception of duty each to the other.

By organization he who sweats and toils to make it possible for the manufacturer to make wealth and comfort from his scanty support can and will get closer together in their relation to each other, and when we understand the motives which prompt each other's action, the responsibility can be located and from the vantage ground thus gained our rights can be enforced and our wrongs made right.

If the manufacturer converts your raw material into greater profits than you have realized, it is simply because he is better organized; has the advantage and uses it. If special laws are passed that protect his interests, it is the result of a combination of organized effort.

If your crop of tobacco, that has cost you seven cents a pound in actual outlay of cash on an economic basis, saying nothing about the risk of drouth and flood and the sleepless nights you have spent in curing it, sells for ten cents a pound it does not sell for more because you are not organized, and do not work in harmony. Your energies are wasted in an aimless effort to accomplish something without the knowledge how to start. Hence, I repeat, organize and educate. In these two words lie the salvation of the tobacco farmers. Let the work of organization begin at once and continue until this compact of farmers shall be in control practically of every acre of tobacco from the red hills of old Virginia and the rocky cliffs of Tennessee to the wave-washed shores of the entire south Atlantic coast.

I shall not attempt to point out the innumerable benefits to be derived from such an organization, but will say if nothing else is accomplished save the collection of data relative to the supply and demand and the regulation of the acreage to supply only the demand, together with a systematic arrangement of marketing the crop, it will result in incalculable benefit. Wisdom and conservatism should control organization. The accomplishment of the greatest good to the greatest number without impairing the interest of any one should be the highest object aimed at. Wild, revolutionary and impractical measures; such as seem to be the disposition of some, should not be allowed to gain serious consideration. The efforts of the organization should be directed in uplifting and bettering the condition of the grower without trying to drag down and ruin any one. Let the organization be governed by the highest standard of right regardless of consequences, and the effort will not be a failure.

Killed Her New Babe

Washington, N. C., Sept. 17.—Yesterday afternoon a colored baby was found buried in the woodshed by Mr. Herbert Bonner at his residence on Second street. The child had been buried about three inches deep, and was wrapped in an apron covered with a crab net and some boards.

Ritta Moore, colored, one of Mr. Bonner's servants, was seen to go into the woodshed Sunday afternoon. She remained nearly half an hour, and when she came out said she was sick. Bonner thinking something wrong, made an investigation with above result. The coroner was notified and an investigation held today. Physicians who examined the child said that it was born alive but died a short while after birth, death being due to suffocation. The baby was well developed. The coroner's jury rendered a verdict that the child came to its death at the hands of the mother, Ritta Moore.

FIRE AT STOKES.

Loss About Two Thousand Dollars.

J. L. Perkins & Co., of Stokes, lost their entire mill plant by fire Wednesday night about 2 o'clock.

The mill first caught about 12 o'clock when they discovered it and put the fire out as they thought at the time, and left it to retire again. But it seems that it was only stopped temporarily as the fire rekindled again at 2 o'clock and had gained such headway that it was impossible to save it when discovered. The loss is four bales of cotton, two hundred and fifty bushels of cotton seed, one planing mill, one grist mill, gin and saw mill, estimated at $2,000. No insurance.

Mr. Perkins tells us that he thinks the fire originated by heat from the boilers igniting the plank which were braced to the brick work around the boilers. It was a heavy loss to them and also to the community.

Gov. Jarvis' Letter

THE DAILY REFLECTOR tomorrow will contain a letter from Governor Jarvis announcing his candidacy for the United States Senate. The letter is now in the hands of the printer and will appear in tomorrow's issue of this paper. It will be worthy of a careful reading.
