THE STATE PRESS

News and Opinions.

Democracy stands for equal and just laws to all the people: for the greatest good to the greatest number. It is opposed to laws that give any man or set of men, the power to fatten at the expense of the people.—Charlotte News.

As to the matter of wages paid, of course the outside knows nothing, but when the miners ask that the coal mined by them be honestly weighed and properly recorded it will have to be admitted that they are asking for simple justice.—Durham Herald.

The coal barons have the right to employ only such men as they want in their mines and to refuse to recognize or employ union labor, and they also have the right to refuse to submit any and all matters to arbitration. These are their rights and have not been disputed. Speaking of their rights further, they have the right to close down their mines for any reason until the scarcity of coal forces the price to whatever figure they may desire, and there is now no law that can prevent them. That they can do this is certain; that they will not do it is not so sure. When it comes to their rights, they have us where the wool is short.—Durham Herald.

Beefsteak is forty-four cents a pound in Berlin. This is in consequence of the protection given the German farmer in the raising of cattle to supply the home market. While the cattle raisers are getting exorbitant prices the balance of the people are mulcted or go without meat. What staunch republicans the German cattle raisers would be were they citizens of the United States.—Wilmington Messenger.

An encouraging sign of the times is the statement of the Indiana labor commissioners of the growing favor for arbitration as a mode of settling labor disputes, and that "many of the larger and stronger labor organizations of the State have incorporated stringent rules imposing methods of settlement, which, in effect, amount to enforced arbitration." It can hardly be questioned that when labor recognizes the advantage to itself in having a tribunal for the settlement of such controversies provision to that effect will be made. The public certainly sees the desirability of some other means of disposing of them than strikes and lockouts.—Winston-Salem Journal.

John A. Hinson, president of the National Car Coupler Company, of Chicago, was enroute to Morehead City, where he visits relatives. From there he goes to Chatham county, the place of his birth. Mr. Hinson left North Carolina forty-four years ago and went West. He was then a penniless youth. Today he is rated a millionaire and is prominent as the inventor of a car coupler now in use on twenty of America's leading railroads. His father, Joseph G. Hinson, superintended the construction of what is now known as the Atlantic & North Carolina Railroad.—Charlotte Observer.

Watson's Speech.

Hon. Cyrus B. Watson spoke to a large and enthusiastic crowd in the court house this afternoon. We have a report of his excellent speech, but owing to the lateness of the hour it cannot appear until tomorrow.

A WONDERFUL CONVENTION.

Annual Meeting of the Disciples of Christ at Omaha Will be a Record Breaker.

For the first time in the history of the United States every railroad has made a one-fare rate to a religious convention. The convention is question is the annual international convention of the Disciples of Christ, which meets in Omaha, Neb., October 15-23, 1902. One fare for the round trip from every railroad station in the United States has been offered. Parties interested should consult the nearest railroad agent.

It is expected that upwards of 30,000 visitors will be in Omaha during the convention. Even lower than one fare may be secured from points within 200 or 300 miles if large parties are organized and excursion trains run.

The Disciples of Christ in the United States number 1,300,000. They have 6,500 pastors, 10,000 church organizations, 9,000 church buildings, hundreds of schools and colleges and numerous missionary stations in foreign fields. For full particulars of convention address C. S. Paine, chairman, Omaha, Neb.

Contentnea Association.

The Sunday session of the Contentnea Association of the Primitive Baptists at Red Banks was favored by all the circumstances that go to make such occasions all that the church and the visiting public could anticipate. Weather conditions were perfect, insuring a pleasant drive through the country, and allowing open air service, which made it possible for a much larger number to hear the sermons than the church could have accommodated. A raised platform under a large oak served as pulpit, and around this, completing almost a circle and extending far out into the grove, substantial board seats had been constructed. The first sermon of the morning was by Elder P. D. Gold, of Wilson, editor of Zion's Landmark. The morning service was concluded with a sermon by Elder Buck, Elders Roberson and Jones preached in the afternoon.

With a crowd estimated from two thousand to three thousand, it is doubtful if ever a similar occasion witnessed better order.

The writer did not see nor hear of a single drunk, or any incident to mar the pleasure of the association proceedings. With such a crowd, under no restraint apart from that attached to the nature of the occasion, the deportment of those having no interest in the religious program was noteworthy.

The feature of the noon recess was dinner upon the grounds. Well, it was "a square meal." Somebody said that the people around Red Banks had been cooking for a week. Many visitors carried lunch, and a fine courtesy.

The registration books are to be closed on the 25th of Oct. 1902. Don't forget the date. If you intend to wait until the last moment, and register by the skin of your teeth, it is important that you remember the date the books are to be closed. If anything should happen at the last minute, so that you can't be at the registrar's office, you can't register by proxy, and if you don't register you can't vote.

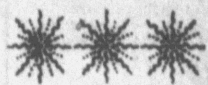

The Elm City Elevator lays claim to three churches and three bar-rooms for Elm City and states that 13 persons were present at each of the churches Sunday night. The Elevator forgot to count the congregation at the bar rooms.

His Clothes Seem Part of Him.

This is the remark that is so often made about the man wearing a suit bought here. It's the utter absence of the ready-made look that does the business. The new swagger cut garments in the latest fabrics are here.

Suitings this season are handsome but not loud in style. Our suits are equal to any high price, tailor-made garments. Every one bears the stamp of merit, and, remember, we guarantee every garment from stuff to to stitches. May we suit you this season? Our prices won't prevent our doing so.

Essay on Newspapers.

"Newspapers are sheets of paper on which stuff to read is printed. The men look it over to see if their names are in it. I don't know how newspapers came into the world, I don't think God does. The Bible says nothing about editors and I never heard of one being in heaven. The first editor I heard of was the fellow who wrote up the flood. He has been here ever since. Some editors belong to the church and some try to raise whiskers.

All of them raise hell in their neighborhood. Sometimes the paper dies, and then people feel glad, but someone starts it again. Editors never went to school because editors never get licked. Our paper is a mighty poor one, but we take it so ma can use it on our pantry shelves. Our editor doesn't amount to much, but paw he had a poor chance when he was a boy. He goes without underclothes in winter, wears no socks, and has a wife to support him. Paw has not paid his subscription in five years, and don't intend to."—Weekly Chief.

The pond on the side walk, on which the boys have been testing the speed of their new model yachts, is almost dry. It is thought to have sprung a leak. The report that Hagar Brown giggered the largest turtle of the season in this pond is a mistake. He admits that his prize winner was taken in the river low ground.

A Woman's Unreason

By MARTHA McCULLOCH-WILLIAMS

Copyright, 1901, by A. S. Richardson

Outside of strict business the Bun had a choice assortment of names. He was Mr. Ralph Montgomery or George Warren Paget, Esq., or ever so many other equally well sounding persons when occasion offered.

It was his forehead, round and bulging, that had gained him his nickname with the gang.

All told, the gang numbered perhaps fifty—men and women and a few pitiful waifs that could not be called children, though they were small and young. The most part engaged in light work—shoplifting, palming tickets, snatching purses from timid hands or jostling, to their loss, the wearers of flamboyant frocks and scarfpins.

Since the Bun had become a leader he felt himself estopped from the small things, though often his fingers itched as he let slip an especially tempting opportunity. The itching was perhaps the first root of his grievance against Lize. Until her day he had been quite content to work under orders, although he was rapacious enough to be full of sour envy over missing a chance at the big things.

For three years she had been the Bun's girl. Of course he was masterful with her—often to the point of brutality. But he gave her no rivals until Long Lou came into the gang and openly set snares for him. She was young, still in her teens, handsome and strapping, with a level head and a free, peppery tongue. The Bun did not go wholly over to her, but he did spend at least half his abundant leisure and very much more than half his rather scanty cash in her company and for her pleasure.

To speak truth, he was living mainly upon hope. A big thing—the biggest in gang history—was in hand, but as yet all outlay and no return. A hundred yards tunnel is not dug in a day, even when there are a bank vault and a half million at the farther end of it. The Bun was waiting upon the tunnelers. After they were through he would go at the chilled steel. A very prince of cracksmen, he knew he would have it open in three hours. Then he would take all the swag—money, bonds, plate, whatever was worth moving—home to his flat, three miles away, and lie quiet there, while others of the gang scuttled off to take the hue and cry upon a false scent.

Meantime there was spare and lenter living at the flat. Because it must be kept from the shadow of suspicion Lize did nothing in the way of business, but stayed at home, busying herself to make the place tidy and homelike. She never went out save upon housewifely errands. Nobody came to see her. The Bun went away regularly every morning toward 10 o'clock. Since he wore excellent clothes, paid his rent in advance and had a way of scowling at all he met, the other tenants set it down that he was either English and living upon his income or else that he belonged in Wall street. He was careful always to be home for dinner, though he went out again almost immediately afterward. Inevitably Lize had much time for brooding. She had also plenty of food for it.

The Bun came in always smelling of tobacco, which Long Lou had adopted as her special perfume. Further, he made but a pretense of eating the poor meals Lize set before him. Therefore she was certain he meant to dine later. She would not have grudged him the faintest fare while she ate bread and water, if she had thought he ate it alone or only in masculine company. But where it touches a man, women are little cattle, particularly women of Lize's order. Carefully, methodically, she laid her plans.

Long Lou was a wanton spendthrift, always eager to fling away money with both hands. Though she did not know the game that was on nor the Bun's part in it, she had a very shrewd suspicion of it all.

Lize indeed was the only woman trusted in that way. Torture would not have made her betray the trust, nor was there enough money in the world to have bribed her. In the face of all that she sat through many nights, with her hands clinched, staring at the light and occasionally smiling a hard, desperate smile and waiting for that other night when the Bun would bring home a fortune.

It came at last, rainy and cold, with a raw east wind, and smothered of fog coming up from the river. Lize, listening with every nerve tense, heard footfalls, deliberate, yet exultant. Before the door opened she knew what she would see—the Bun overrunning with joyous conceit. He had the swag neatly stowed in an immaculate and very English suitcase. As he swung it upon the bed he called huskily to her: "Give us a beer, old gal! I'm dry as charcoal, but haven't dared wet my throat since I came out of that beastly hole."

"There is no beer," Lize said, not stirring from her seat. The Bun almost gasped. "When I told you to have it—to have everything comfortable?" he snarled. "Are you out of your mind?"

ders and shook her as a terrier shakes a rat.

"You get me something to eat—to drink!" he growled. "No more fooling! I ain't in the mind to stand it. I have got to stay here until the usual time. By the Lord, I won't stay hungry!"

"How'll you help it?" Lize asked. "There is not so much as a crumb, a cheese paring, in the house!"

"So! You've tricked me! You think that's the way to keep me from another woman—and a better one," the Bun said in a hissing whisper. He was murderously angry. They were in the front room, looking out over the street. The bed, a cumbersome brass bedstead affair, posed as a secretary throughout the daytime. Lize had let it down, though she stood fully dressed in street clothes. The Bun did not notice it, but one window was half open, and a keen, wet morning smell drifted in. Again he caught the girl and shook her hard. She looked up at him undauntedly, saying, with a hard laugh: "Why don't you hit me? Are you afraid?"

"Not of you!" he cried, still very low. Then he seized her, flung her prone upon the bed and knelt with all his force upon her chest. He heard a faint, sickening sound of crashing ribs, but Lize did not even groan. He sprang up and down again. Again came that sound of shattering bone. In spite of his rage it almost sickened the Bun. He slid from the bed and stood looking at the girl, a great fear wavering in his eyes. She sprang past him, clutched the window casing, flung herself half through it and shouted, at first weak and hoarsely, but with the gathering strength of mortal anguish: "Help! Help! Help! Murder! Help!"

The cry paralyzed him. He knew it would be answered. In ten minutes, in five, it might be, people would be swarming all about. Yet he did not move to seize and silence the girl. He was in the grip of a great superstitious dread. As a lad he had heard much of hellfire, of retribution. Now it seemed to him all his evil deeds were coming back at him in concrete form.

The police were beating on the outer door. In three minutes— He dropped to the floor and crawled to Lize's feet. They were pretty feet and daintily shod in red high heeled slippers. He patted them softly as he mumbled out: "You've done for me, Lize, but I take that back. The—the other one ain't no more'n the dust under your feet."

Lize almost fell forward. She was dead white and shaking like a leaf, yet somehow she managed to get the Bun on his feet.

"Here, you! Quick!" she panted, pushing him weakly toward the bed and down upon it. Then, with her last remnant of vital force, she pushed a clicking catch out of place and let the heavy bed snap together, catching the Bun harmlessly but uncomfortably in its grasp. When there came thunderous knocks upon the door of the apartment, she crept to it painfully and let in the police. A glance at the bed made explanations unnecessary.

The very next week Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Montgomery went travelling south for the lady's health. Since they did not ask to have their lease vacated, but paid up for the full term, the landlord still regards them as having been pattern tenants. And the police who ran down futilely several promising clues to the biggest bank burglary of the season never dreamed that they had helped the burglar out of a particularly tight place.

"Dagoes." It is an elementary and not a particularly brilliant joke to refer to all foreigners of the Latin race as "dagoes." But how many of us who thus advertise our narrowness know where the word dago originally came from?

In early days the hewers of wood and drawers of water in California were Portuguese. They cultivated thrifty little gardens and carried on a fishing trade along the shores and up the creeks near San Francisco. The most common name among them was Diego, pronounced Deeyago, and the transition from Diego to Dago was natural. The epithet was transplanted to the Atlantic coast, and the American hoodlum there, as everywhere, found it a convenient term to express his crude intolerance.

One day at a railway station two Italian laborers were talking volubly in their native tongue, and two American laborers were regarding them suspiciously, yet with some pity, as one might view the efforts of a chimpanzee to make himself understood. Presently one of the Americans, who certainly thought that he belonged to a superior race, said to his companion: "That ain't no language them fellers are talkin'. It's nothin' but a jabber."

Ancient Osculation. "Kissing," said the antiquary, "was commoner in Philadelphia 200 years ago than it is now. See what a belle wrote in her diary in 1701." The good old man took out his pocketbook and these words, which he had copied carefully from some dusty volume of the past: "One hates to be always kissed, especially as it is attended by so many inconveniences. It discomposes the economy of one's neckerchief, disorders one's high roll and ruffles the serenity of one's countenance."

The antiquary opened another sheet of foolscap and said that he would now read an extract from a love letter, a typical love letter of the eighteenth century. The extract was: "That the silver stream of my dearest affection and faithful love will be willingly received into the millpond of your tender virgin heart, by your walling up the floodgate of your virtuous love and affection which will completely turn the wheels of your gracious will and understanding to receive the golden grains!" The antiquary ceased and smiled. "So, for page after page," said he, "that single sentence runs on."—Philadelphia Record.

BREAK INTO THE HOMES OF THE PEOPLE BY ADVERTISING IN THE REFLECTOR. A REFLECTOR advertisement will walk into the homes every day and will let your wants be known to the people. A REFLECTOR advertisement will bring customers for your goods, find tenants for your house, find employment or employes, in fact fill any reasonable want you may have. THE REFLECTOR goes into the homes of the people and is read for what it carries them, hence the place to tell your wants is in THE REFLECTOR. The cost of an advertisement in THE REFLECTOR is the easiest part.

CAREFUL attention to details in our Job Department is shown in the high class of work we are turning out. We have the best equipped office and do a class of printing hardly equalled in this section. If you are particular as to the quality of your printing, we want your work. We give you the best.

Reitz the Unconquered. Dr. F. W. Reitz, former state secretary of the Transvaal, who is soon to visit this country, is as bitterly opposed to English rule in South Africa as he was during the war. Some months ago he said, "When I return to South Africa, it will be with a gun on my shoulder." The other day in Paris he said: "I will never take the oath of allegiance to Great Britain. I would not swear allegiance to the British flag to save my wife and children from starvation." Speaking of his proposed visit to the United States, he said, "I am going to America to tell the American people of the inhuman treatment which our women and children received at the hands of the English."

Told of Justice Gray.

The retirement of Justice Gray of the United States supreme court has furnished a text for many reminiscences of his earlier days. While he was a member of the supreme court of Massachusetts he had an amusing experience with a certain Boston lawyer, an exceedingly pious man with a taste for evangelization, who had his letterheads printed with a verse from Scripture in large type following the name and address. On one occasion, having to make an ex parte preliminary argument before Judge Gray in chambers in which it would be necessary to disclose certain parts of his client's case which he desired not to make generally public until the trial, he wrote the judge a note, asking that he be allowed an opportunity to speak to him in private. He was somewhat chagrined when his note came back to him with a scrawl across the bottom, "Request denied, with a suggestion from the court that counsel base future petitions on a more appropriate citation."

The Anti-Saloon League.

There was a meeting in the Christian church, Sunday afternoon, of the Anti-Saloon League. It had been intended to carry out the program announced for the previous Sunday, but so much of a business nature came up that this was omitted. There was some question raised and discussion of the object of the League, which led to the adoption of a resolution declaring the purpose of the Anti-Saloon League to be the use of all honorable and legal steps to abolish the whiskey traffic in Pitt county.

The League will meet again next Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock in the Baptist church. All interested in the object of the League should be present.
