GREENVILLE FIRE SWEPT

Almost Two Blocks Consumed In Hurricane of Flame

LOSS IS ABOUT $150,000.00

Court House, Jail and Masonic Temple Principal Buildings De- stroyed—Loss is Less Than Half Covered by Insurance—Fire- men Had Hard Fight and Did Noble Work.

It has often been said that when one fire come two others will follow. Greenville has had her third fire within a month, and two blocks of the town present a deplorable picture of devastation and desolation.

About one o'clock this morning, in some unaccountable way fire started in the old frame building on Cotanch street that was formerly used by the John Flanagan Buggy Co., and after that company vacated it it was used as a storage house. Being almost like a tinder box it was quickly enveloped in flames, and several other similar buildings in close range made an inviting place for a great conflagration.

The wind was blowing almost a gale from the northeast, and when people turned out or their beds in response to the alarm and hurried to the scene of the fire they were almost dazed at the danger that threatened a large section of the town. Sparks and cinders flew before the wind and poured down upon the business section of the town, and even upon the residence section for blocks away. The heavens appeared almost as a sea of fire, and it filled every heart with terror.

From the building in which the fire originated it quickly spread northward, southward and westward, and also came near going eastward. The firemen first gave their attention to Hotel Macon just across Cotanch street, and after a noble battle saved that famous old building that seems to have a charmed life against destruction. In the meantime the flames had eaten through the close range of frame buildings to Second, Third and Evans street.

The firemen quickly moved their position and gave battle to prevent the flames leaping across Third street from the Hoell and Shelburn buildings, for had a foothold been obtained on the South side of this street practically the entire business section of the town would have been lost. They won out at this point, but by now the fire had crossed Evans street to the Pitt County Buggy Co's factory, the court house, jail and Masonic Temple were blazing furiously and doomed to destruction. The firemen followed and had another stubborn fight here to again prevent the fire crossing Third street to The Reflector building, the Bagwell building and residence of J. G. Moye. They made heroic effort and again won the victory, holding the fire on the north side of the street.

Just as the firemen had conquered the westward sweep of the flames at the old Blow residence corner, there came the cry that fire was burning in the roof of the second story of the brick block occupied by Carolina Club. This made people's hearts almost sink within them, for notwithstanding the preceding victories of the now hard-worked firemen, a foothold in that block meant the destruction of both sides of Evans street in such a terrific wind. Quick as it could be done the lines of hose were changed to this point and under two well directed streams this block was saved. Then the firemen had to go to the Smith boarding house, corner Second street, which was burning, and this was also put out.

After hard fighting for some over two hours the fire was under control. Buildings in various parts of the town caught fire from sparks and cinders and it required constant watching and work to put these out. Everywhere in the direction of the wind men were on roofs protecting buildings.

While the firemen were getting up a ladder to reach the fire above Carolina Club, Mr. Lee Shelburn fell down the ladder. He probably escaped being killed in a fall on the pavement by fortunately catching his leg around a rung of the ladder when about half way down. He was painfully though not seriously hurt.

While many men, both white and colored, worked nobly to save property, Mr. S. T. Hooker was the real hero of the fire. He is a born leader in such emergencies, and directed the efforts of the fighters at the most advantageous points and with telling effect. His coolness and encouraging words was an incentive to every one to do his best, and he did it.

The most serious loss to the town in this fire is the destruction of the handsome Masonic Temple building, containing law offices and Board of Education office on first floor, opera house and public library on second floor, and quarters of the Masons, Odd Fellows and Pythians on third floor. All the occupants of this building lost much of their effects. This building was insured for only $10,000, just enough to cover the preferred bonds.

The vault in the court house was opened this morning and the record books were found in good condition. This is indeed fortunate for the county.

The telephone cables and Western Union cables were badly damaged, and interfered with communication.

In the handicapped condition of The Reflector, the force having been broken down helping to save the building and getting books and files to places of safety, and the electric wires being so disarranged that power could not be obtained to run the presses today, we are getting out the best paper we can. In the confusion we have not been able so far to get a correct list of the individual losses and insurance, but the total loss is conservatively estimated at $150,000, not more than half covered by insurance.

Tomorrow we will endeavor to give a detailed list of the losses. Following are the losers:

The losers are E. H. Shelburn, building; Hines Murphy Co., Farmers Consolidated Tobacco Co., Jesse Speight, J. M. Reuss and York & Cobb, occupants of Shelburn building; Mrs. Mary Foley, residence and contents, the Rest Room, occupying wing of Foley building; W. H. Harrington, two stores, dwelling house and stables; John Flanagan Buggy Co., old factory building; W. J. Turnage, transfer stables; W. P. Norcott, store; Samuel Cherry estate, store; W. R. Smith, damage to boarding house; Pitt County Buggy Co. factory; W. L. Smith, dwelling and office building; County of Pitt, court house and jail; Masonic Temple and opera house, occupants of this building being Masons, Odd Fellows and Pythian lodges, public library, County Board of Education superintendent's office, Skinner & Whedbee, U. S. District Attorney office, S. C. Wooten, C. C. Pearce, S. J. Everett; Carolina Club damage to furniture; Taft & VanDyke damage to stock; A. H. Taft, damage to stock; L. C. Skinner, damage to Hotel Macon. There were also numerous smaller losses, as every occupant of buildings on south side of Third street opposite the burned district suffered some damage.

Characteristic of the Man.

In looking over those who suffered by the fire this morning, Skinners & Whedbee, attorneys, are large losers. Col. Harry Skinner, the senior member of the firm and the United States attorney, upon reaching the fire before Mayor H. W. Whedbee, the junior member, arrived, proceeded at once to save the files, records and important papers in the United States office, to the neglect of his personal interests. This conduct on his part, at the risk of his life, is not surprising to those who know him. He always puts the discharge of public duty above all else, and his sacrifice in this instance only illustrates the man as his neighbors know him.

What it Will Do.

Limburger cheese laid away in cupboards and refrigerators will drive ants away. No doubt of it. It will drive hogs out of a tan yard, it will drive a spide in a brick; it will drive a tramp away from a meal of victuals; it will drive a mule through a barbed wire fence; it will drive a herd of cattle over a precipice; it will drive a negro away from a chicken roost or a man to insanity who stays five minutes within ten feet of its unsavory presence. And yet some men will sit up and eat the stuff and profess to like it.—Ex.

Wilmington, Feb. 22.—Solomon H. Fishplate, three times mayor of Wilmington, and well known here and in New York, where he formerly resided, died today aged 67.

Washington, N. C., Feb. 22.—At a church conference, held in the Methodist church of this city Sunday morning immediately after the morning service, Rev. M. T. Plyler, the pastor, announced to the congregation that Mr. Andrew Carnegie had agreed to donate the sum of $1,250 to the church here for the purpose of installing a pipe organ, provided that the church raised $2,250. Mr. Carnegie is to make the last contribution. The pastor and a number of the stewards have been working toward this end for some time and at the meeting Sunday it was unanimously decided to raise the amount necessary to meet the conditions of Mr. Carnegie's offer. It is understood that nearly all the money has been already secured and that the remainder will be placed in the bank this week and Mr. Carnegie notified.

KING'S CROSS ROAD ITEMS.

We are very glad to know that our farmers have decreased their tobacco crop about one third and have sown wheat in the place of tobacco. We think that is a good change.

Mr. and Mrs. Willie Randolph, of Greenville, spent Saturday and Sunday with W. S. E. Smith.

Mrs. Marcellus Smith is very sick at this writing. Hope she will soon recover.

The Law in the Case.

Years ago The Record, speaking of a contest on between two attorneys as to the law in a certain case, said that almost anything could be proven by the law books, for which remark we greatly offend one of the brethren. We are reminded of this incident by the hearing in the aldermanic case, where Alderman King is charged with trading with the city "against the statute in such case made and provided." The law is a good one and we commend it, but it is said that a Supreme Court decision has been found which says that it is no offense if the selling to the city is done at the usual price charged on the market, or if it is done and proves to be a saving to the city.—Greensboro Record.

Mrs. Brinkley's Sister Dead.

On Wednesday Mrs. J. F. Brinkley received a telegram announcing the death of her sister, Mrs. Henderson, who lived near Toxaway. Mrs. Henderson was formerly Miss Helen Perry and a daughter of Mr. J. A. Perry. The remains will be taken to Scotland Neck and interred there Friday.

RENSTON ITEMS.

Renston, N. C., Feb. 23, 1910.

On Saturday evening the beautiful home of Mr. O. H. Langston was the scene of a happy occasion, when his daughter, Miss Eva, charmingly entertained a number of her friends. The guests were received in the hall by Miss Annie E. McGlohon and C. E. Langston and ushered in to the parlor where Miss Myrtle McGlohon most gracefully received. Here a delightful program was rendered. In the card contest Miss Rosa Whitehurst, of Bethel, won the prize, a lovely valentine. Mr. Worley, of New Bern, presented it in a most pleasing manner, causing much merriment by his witty remarks.

At 10:30 the guests entered the dining room where elaborate refreshments were served. The decorations throughout the house were white and green, and the dining room was indeed lovely. After a very enjoyable musical program, the guests departed for their respective homes, each voting Miss Langston a charming hostess.

Misses Laura Salisbury, of Hassell, and Mary Whitehurst, of Grindool, visited Miss Eva Langston last week.

L. L. Hooks returned to Goldsboro today.

Lorenzo McGlohon went to Kinston Thursday.

Trade Report.

Richmond, Va., Feb. 24.—Bradstreet's Saturday will say for Richmond and vicinity:

Trade conditions generally are good, however, an uneasiness in some lines is noticeable. Mills report orders for cotton goods irregular, and attribute this to high prices. Manufacturers of and dealers in paper, paper bags and kindred articles report trade satisfactory. Wholesale dry goods and notions are moving satisfactorily. The same may be said of shoes and leather goods. Lumber continues in good demand and practically all mills are running at capacity. Freight traffic is active and few idle cars are reported. Drugs continue active and naval stores are firm at recent prevailing prices. In some sections early farming operations have been commenced and early indications point to a full acreage of spring crops. Produce is quiet. Manufacturers of flavoring extracts report increased sales. Retail trade is quiet. Collections are fair.

A DR. JOHNSON STORY.

Illustrating the Difference Between Assertion and Argument.

Among the anecdotes of Dr. Johnson is one written not by his biographer, Boswell, but by another contemporary, Dr. John Moore. It is illustrative of Johnson's manner and the importance he gave to argument properly conducted. Dr. Moore said that he was one of a company at Mr. Hoole's. Mention was made that counsel were to be heard in a certain case at the bar of the house of commons. One of the company asked Sir James Johnson if he intended to be present. Sir James answered that he believed he should not, because he paid little regard to the arguments of counsel at the bar of the house of commons.

"Wherefore," asked Dr. Johnson, "do you pay little regard to their arguments, sir?"

"Because," replied Sir James, "they argue for their fee."

"What is it to you, sir," rejoined Dr. Johnson, "what they argue for? You have nothing to do with their motive, but you ought to weigh their argument. Sir, you seem to confound argument with assertion. But there is an essential distinction between them. Assertion is like an arrow shot from a longbow—the force with which it strikes depends upon the strength of the arm that draws it. But argument is like an arrow from a crossbow, which has equal force whether shot by a boy or by a giant."

The narrator of this incident said the whole company was struck by the aptness and beauty of this illustration, which certainly was expressed in clear and forcible English and with few of the Latin derivatives with which the good doctor delighted to ornament his sentences.

One of the company said, "That is indeed one of the most just and admirable illustrations that I ever heard."

"Sir," said Dr. Johnson, "the illustration is none of mine. You will find it in Bacon."—Exchange.

Deliver us from the cold storage turkey of seven years standing.

The Philadelphia street car strike has brought the city of "Brotherly Love" down to a walk.

Yes sir, Greenville is going to get that public building, and it will be one to bring credit to the town.

From the slowness with which people turn loose money just now, February might be called "tightwad" month.

The comic supplement has become so sorry that it is a little strange that the Charlotte Observer adopted it at this late day.

When the executive committee goes to select a place for the next meeting of the State Press Association, what is the matter with Lake Toxaway?

Greensboro is not having much to say these days about 42,000 population. It is so close to census taking time that the less said the less there will be to take back.

Newport News, Va., wanted to do some census taking on its own hook, and found fifty per cent less population than was claimed. That may put some other big claiming towns to bating their eyes.

Mrs. Nicholas Longworth played "Old Nick" at a dinner which she gave, or tried to give, in Washington the other day. Among the invited guests were two monkeys, the real article, and the monkeys not being well versed in etiquette broke up the dinner and turned the affair into a rough house.

We thank God that The Reflector has a home left standing today. During the terrible fire last night it looked like our building and plant were destined to be reduced to ashes, but in answer to earnest prayer in directing the heroic work of firemen and friends, it stands practically unharmed. Surely the goodness and mercy of God are great.

A Children's Congress.

A scheme has been devised by some Anson county people, interested in the betterment of the public schools which, we believe, will work well if carried out. This is a congress, to be composed of a boy and a girl from each school in the county. It will meet in Wadesboro at the time of the teachers' meetings. The members of this congress will be the guests of the people of the town, and in their meetings will hear talks upon the subject of making the school-houses prettier and more comfortable. They will be given instructions how to make these changes in a simple and inexpensive way. The members of each congress will attend two sessions, so they can report what they have done and get new ideas from each other's experiences. Then, according to the plan, a new congress will be elected by the members of the schools, and, we presume, a new one every two months whose members will hold two sessions. The plan is as interesting as it is novel. Mrs. Eugene Little, of Wadesboro, is at the head of the movement. She deserves much credit for the undertaking, for she must know she has assumed a rather heavy burden. If she and the friends of the movement accomplish only a part of their expectations they will nevertheless set an excellent example.—Charlotte Observer.

But, thanks to Mi-o-na stomach tablets, I can now eat anything. Last Christmas, after partaking of a hearty turkey dinner, I was seized with an attack of acute indigestion, and the doctor worked over me for hours before I got relief. FADING THE PAPER.

Cause of the Delay in Repairing the Torn Place on the Wall.

"Right alongside the door opening into our apartment from the public hall on our floor," said a city cliff dweller, "there was a bare spot on the wall. The wall paper there had come loose and curled up, and then the first boy that came along had just naturally got his fingers under the edge of the curled up paper and torn it off back to where the paste still held, leaving on the wall an irregular blank space about a foot and a half long by six inches broad in the widest part."

"Of course this didn't look very nice staring at us every time we went in and out, and we asked the superintendent to fix it, as we knew he could and would. He always keeps a spare roll or two of paper for use in case of emergencies, and he looks after the house in great shape. But when ten days later the paper had not been repaired we ventured to speak about it again, to learn then that the bare space had not yet been covered for the reason that he was fading the paper for it and it was not quite ready."

"The wall paper has been on about ten months, and we live high enough up so that in the public hall on our floor it gets a strong light and had become somewhat faded. To put on a patch of this paper of its original color would have been like patching white with black, so far as contrast was concerned, and so the boss had had a piece from an original roll out in the sun, fading it to match."

"Two days later he covered that blank space on the wall with a patch of new paper that matched in with the pattern of the surrounding paper perfectly, while in color it matched very well. A month under the light that comes into the hall will make it all right. But that 'fading the paper' was something new to us."—New York Sun.

A Man of Straw.

Many years ago in England men could easily be found to give any evidence upon oath that might be required, and some of these persons walked openly in Westminster hall with a straw in one of their shoes to signify they wanted employment as witnesses. This was the origin of the saying, "He is a man of straw." But the custom has high antiquity. A writer in the Quarterly Review says that such were common in Greece.

A Comical Blunder.

One of the most ludicrous mistakes made by the telegraph was in a telegram from Brisbane to a London news agency. As it reached London it read, "Governor general twins first son," which the news agency "edited" and sent around to the papers in the following form: "Lady Kennedy, the wife of Sir Arthur Kennedy, governor general of Queensland, yesterday gave birth at government house, Brisbane, to twins, the firstborn being a son."

The telegram arriving in the small hours of the morning, there was no time to check it or refer to Debrett, and it was published by most of the newspapers in London and the provinces and caused an unexpected sensation. Sir Arthur's friends pointed out with conclusive force that some one had blundered, as there never was a Lady Kennedy, Sir Arthur being a bachelor.

The repeat message which followed read: "Governor general turns first sod," referring to a railway ceremony.

STRIPED BASS.

And an Interesting Note About the Skimmer Clam.

It requires more than "catfish skill" to catch and successfully land the king of salt water fish, the beautiful striped bass. One must be patient, have no grouch, fish long and quietly, have endurance of strength and good nature, and then there is a possibility of the hook breaking or loosening, the line parting, or it may be that day that luck will be on the side of the salt water king.

One of the essential things to remember in striped bass angling is that one must be as careful in the selection of grounds as is the fish itself, for the larger and gamier bass select as homes or feeding grounds the great beds of skimmer clams along the coast, out on the ocean floor. While they have no "nutcracker" in their throats, such as the drumfish and sheephead possess, they are able with their powerful jaws to break the rather slender shell of the skimmer clam and obtain their food supply. The smaller bass, being unable to break the shells, enter the salt bays and feed on bloodworms, shedder crabs and such other food as their jaws can manage.

The skimmer clam deserves more than passing notice. So let W. H.

Ballou, who knows the striped bass and the skimmer clam, tell about it. "It does not belong to the edible foods of the human race," says Mr. Ballou, "although it has been found varying in weight from a quarter of a pound up to four pounds. The skimmer clam, like all other clams, has the fatal habit of walking on the ocean floor by suction—that is, it moves its hinge up and slightly opens its shell, thereby sucking its way along in the sand."

"The edible species have the same habit. But as they live and breed only in salt water bays there are no violent seas to drive them about. The skimmer clam, living on the ocean floor, takes his life in his hands, as it were, when he emerges from the sand and goes straggling over the bottom. Unable to resist great seas, tides and undertows grasp him in fatal grip and roll him over and over toward the beach, where he is landed high and dry at high tide. In the early morning small boys and anglers gather the juicy bait by the basketful. Thousands of seagulls likewise swoop down on the unfortunate skimmers, cracking their shells and gorging themselves on the big meats."

"At Barnegat beach I have often seen albatrosses and other huge birds sharing with countless gulls the loot of the beach. As the skimmers are rolled toward the beach they are followed by striped bass, drumfish and other species, and these often by sharks, the fish preying on the clams and the sharks on the fish. The reason, then, is obvious why surf fishers prefer the skimmer clam for bait to shedder crabs."—New York Press.

Early Needles.

It is said by some that steel needles were invented by the Moors. Before their general diffusion throughout the civilized world thorns and fish bones, the latter with a hole pierced for an eye, were in use. The first needles made in London were by a Moor, in the reign of Henry VIII., and in Queen Mary's day steel needles were sold in Cheapside and other streets of London. After this time the manufacture increased rapidly, many Germans migrating to England and establishing needle works in various places.

I do not know of any way so sure of making others happy as being so one self.—Sir Arthur Elphs.

One on Father.

William had just returned from college, resplendent in peg top trousers, silk hosiery, a fancy waistcoat and a necktie that spoke for itself. He entered the library, where his father was reading. The old gentleman looked up and surveyed his son. The longer he looked the more disgusted he became.

"Son," he finally blurted out, "you look like a d— fool!" Later the old major who lived next door came in and greeted the boy heartily. "William," he said, with undisguised admiration, "you look exactly like your father did twenty-five years ago when he came back from school!" "Yes," replied William, with a smile, "so father was just telling me."

Jowett and Tennyson.

On one occasion Tennyson was Jowett's guest at the Master's lodge, Balliol, with a few other men, and after some good talk the poet had retired early to his room. Next morning at breakfast Tennyson was in a silent mood, but as the men were rising from the table he said: "Jowett, after I left you last night I wrote a few verses. I am not sure that I have ever done anything better. I will read them to you." Jowett, preparing to go off for his day's work, replied hastily: "Oh, no; thank you, Tennyson. I've no time for that sort of thing just now. I am very busy."

Value of Capital.

Once upon a time two utter bankrupts were considering ways and means of getting needed money.

"I know how we can make $9," said one.

"Raise a dollar note to ten by placing a cipher after the one."

"Where will we raise the dollar?" Then the scheme failed for want of capital.

Moral.—The great financial difficulty is in raising the first dollar.—New York Herald.

Thorough Work.

Mrs. Youngwife—A friend has sent me a basket of quinces, and I don't know how to use them.

Mrs. Oldwife—Nothing is simpler. Pare and core them, make preserves of the best pieces, marmalade of the others and jelly of the cores and peelings.

Mrs. Youngwife—Well, I declare! And what shall I make of the basket they came in?

THE MICROBES.

But For Them All Green Plants Would Vanish From the Earth.

Few persons can realize at first what an immense number and variety of microbes there are not only around us in the air and dust and water, but also in us and on us and in and on every living thing. The work, the huge system of chemical change and the circulation of the elements—carbon, oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen and sulphur—which they carry on is incessant, varied and complex. Those five elements are the main and essential constituents of all living things. Supposing there were no microbes, there would be no putrefaction, no breaking down of the dead bodies of animals and plants which were once alive into gas and substances soluble in water.

They by a series of steps in which different kinds of bacteria or microbes are successively concerned convert the proteins and the fats and sugars of dead plants and animals into less elaborate bodies, organic acids, aromatic bodies and other compounds (some highly poisonous to man, and at last, when what were highly complex combinations of hundreds of atoms in each molecule have been reduced by the action of first one and then of another kind of microbe into comparatively simple substances of twenty or thirty atoms to the molecule, the coup de grace is given by certain special microbes, which convert these later compounds into still simpler combinations—namely, ammonia and nitrates, which are fairly stable, so that the whole elaborate chemical fabric of living matter in a few hours or days after death is broken down until it reaches the stable "mineral" condition, practically carbonate and nitrate of ammonia—smelling salts.

If there were no microbes this would never occur. The earth would be cumbered with the dead bodies of past generations of animals and plants—undecomposed. And very soon all the organic elements, all the carbon and nitrogen, if not all the hydrogen and oxygen, on the face of the earth would be fixed in these corpses, and the green plants would perish from the whole world for want of sustenance, for it is the green plants which feed on and absolutely must have as their food the carbonic acid, ammonia and nitrates into which the microbes resolve all living things when dead. It is the green plants which from these simple compounds build up again the more complex molecules, the sugars, fats, albumens and proteins and provide for the nourishment and increase of the most complex of all—the living matter hidden in protoplasm.—Sir Ray Lankester in London Telegraph.

How They Broke Up.

An amusing story is related in "Canadian Savage Folk" of the manner in which an adjournment was taken by a mass meeting. A missionary who had started a school among the Indians met with opposition, and the meeting had been called in support of the rival scheme.

There were several speakers who denounced the school in existence. We replied vigorously, showing the efficiency of the school and denouncing in turn the methods adopted by the opposition. An Indian chief produced some specimens of work done at the school, and several speakers supported the work as it was being done. The climax was reached when a gentleman rose and said:

"I move the whole thing bust!" The chairman put the motion. "It is moved and seconded that the whole thing bust!" The audience sprang to their feet and, waving hats, yelled "Busted!" and made for the door. Thus ended the first and last opposition in that matter.

A Match For a Matchmaker.

There is told by Allen Arnesworth, the British dramatist, of how a well-known peer who was the peer of matchmaking mamas for a long time and who was imprudent enough to show more than ordinary attention escaped responsibility. One day the mother of the young lady in question, thinking she had a trump to play, met his lordship and observed:

"People are talking a good deal about your attentions to my daughter and are asking when your engagement is to be announced. What can I say?"

"I authorize you to say, madam," replied his lordship, "that I asked you for your daughter's hand and that you refused it!"—O'Connor's Weekly.

One on Him.

"Pardon me," said a gentleman at the entrance to a downtown restaurant. "I have something on you." "And may I ask what it is?" "My hat."—Birmingham Age-Herald
