To-night she retired early, and George joined Ryanne's audience.

"It averages about nine cards to the play," he commented.

Ryanne turned over an ace. Ten or fifteen minutes went by. In the several attempts he had failed to score the full complement. George laughed.

"What's in your mind?" cried Rypeevishly. "If it's anything telling, shoot it out, shoot it worth

George ducked. He and the boys gathered in the fluttering paste-boards. "You're right, Percival," Ryanne admitted humbly. "It will not hurt us to talk out loud, and we are all brooding too much. I am crazy for the want of tobacco. I'd trade the best dinner ever cooked for a decent cigar."

George put a hand reluctantly into his pocket. He brought forth, with extreme gentleness, a cigar, the wrapper of which was broken in many places. "I've saved this for days," he said. With his pen-knife he sawed it delfcately into two parts, and gave one to

"You're a good fellow, Jones, and I've turned you a shabby trick. I shan't forget this bit of tobacco."

"It's the last we've got. The boys. you know, refuse a pull at the waterpipe; defiles 'em, they say. Funny beggars! And if they gave us tobacco, we shouldn't have paper or pipes."

"I always carry a pipe, but I lost it in the shuffle. I never looked upon smoking as a bad habit. I suppose it's because I was never caught before without it. And it is a bad habit, since it knocks up a chap this way for the lack of it. Where do you get bank, I think they said." your club-steaks in old N. Y.?"

And for an hour or more they solemnly discussed the cooking here and there upon the face of the globe.

By judicious inquiries George ascer tained that the trip to Bagdad, barrfive days. The daily journeys proceeded uneventfully. Mahomed maintained a taciturn grimness. If he almed at Ryanne at all, it was in trifling annoyances, such as forgetting to give him his rations unless he asked for them, or walking over the cards spread out upon the sand. Ryanne carried himself very well. But into the blood of the two men there crept a petty irritability. They ders promptly executed by answered one another sharply, and often did not speak. Fortune alone seemed mild and gentle. Mahomed, since that night she had braved him, Phones 149 let her go and come as she pleased, nor once disturbed her. Had she shown weakness when most she needed courage, Mahomed might not have altered his plans. Admiration of courage is inherent in all people. So, 8 without appreciating it, that moment 8 had been a precious one, saving them |g all much unpleasantness.

By the twentieth day, the caravan was far into the Arabian desert, and 8 early in the afternoon, they came upon a beautiful casis, nestling like an 8 emerald in a plaque of gold. So many 8 days had passed since the beloved $ green of growing things had soothed 8 their inflamed eyes, that the sight of | g the trio picked up heart. Fortune sang a little, George told a funny story, and wouldn't take a hand at euchre. Indeed, that oasis was the turning-point dreary, profitless sands, and their spirits would have gone under completely.

This casis was close to the regular camel-way, there being a larger oasis some twenty-odd miles to the north. But Mahomed felt safe at this distance, and decided to freshen up the caravan by a two-days' rest.

George immediately began to show Fortune little attentions. He fixed her saddle-bags, spread out her blanket, brought her some ripe dates of his own picking, insisted upon going to the well and drawing the water she was to drink. And oh! how sweet and cool that water was, after the gritty flat liquid they had been drinking! Just before sundown, he and Fortune set out upon a voyage of discovery; and Ryanne paused in his game of patience to watch them. There was more self-abnegation than bitterness in his eyes. Why not? If Fortune returned to her mother, sooner or later the thunderbolt would fall. Far better that she should fall in love with Jones him curiously. Whenever he succeed- than to go back to the overhanging shadow. A smile lifted the corners of his lips, a sad smile. Percival didn't look the part of a here. His coat was variously split under the arms and across the shoulders; his trousers were ragged, and he walked in his cloth pads like a man who had gout in both feet. A beard covered his face, and the bare spots were blistered and peeling. But there was youth in Percival's eyes and youth in his heart, and surely the youth in hers must some day respond. She would know this young man; she would know that adversity could not crush him; that the promise of safety could not make a coward of him; that he was loyal and brave and honest. She would know in twenty days what it takes the average woman twenty years to learn, the manner of man who professed to love her. Ryanne left the game unfinished, stretched himself upon the ground. Oh, the bitter cup, the bitter

Round the fire that night, the camelboys got out their tom-toms and reeds, and the eerie music affected the white people hauntingly and mysteriously. For thousands of years, the high and low notes of the drums (hollow earthen-jars or large gourds covered with goat-skin at one end) and the thin, metallic wail of the reeds had echoed across the deserts, unchanged. The boys swayed to and fro to the rhythm, ecstatic frenzy.

"You still think I'm that chap?" "I am sure of it. The first morning you gave yourself away." "What did I say?" anxiously,

"You mumbled foot-ball phrases." "Ah!" Ryanne was vastly relieved. He seemed to be thinking.

"Do you persist in denying it?" "I might deny it, but I shan't. I'm Horace Wadsworth, all right. Fortune knows something about that chapter, but not all. Strikes you odd, eh?" continued Ryanne, iron in his voice. "Every opportunity in the world; and yet, here I am. How much do you

"But what place have I in all this?" evasively.

"What do you mean by that?"

"Why did Mrs. Chedsoye pay me back, when her original intention had been not to pay me?"

"You'll find all that written in the book of fate, as Mahomed would say. More, I cannot tell you." "Will not?"

"Well, that phrase expresses it." They both heard the sound. Fortune, her face white and drawn, stood immediately behind them.

The Two Main Functions ofa Bank Are:

1st, To provide a safe place for the deposit of money for safe keeping.

2nd, To place a large portion of its funds out on good secur ity, distributed as well as possible throughout all lines of industry, so as to do most good in the upbuilding of the Whole Community.

THE FACT that the United States, and the State Governments have selected this Bank as their Depository in this section, are sufficient evidence that the Bank fulfills the first function.

There are a few items which appear in this paper more important to Green ville people than the statement pub lished below. In the first place, it is from a citizen of Greenville and can be thoroughly relied upon. In the second place, it indisputably proves that Doan's Kidney Pills do their work thoroughly and not temporarily. Read this carefully:

Mrs. E. G. Worthington, Washington street, Greenville, N. C., says: "I have been so greatly benefited by Doan's Kidney Pills that I am glad to recommend them. My back ached nearly all the time and I could not rest well. The kidney secretions caus ed me annoyance and it was plain which I got from the John L.
