WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN IS DEAD

GREAT COMMONER DIED OF APOPLEXY WHILE ASLEEP IN DAYTON, TENN., YESTERDAY

Great Figure in American Public Life Passes Away Following Victory in Famous Tennessee Evolution Trial; Was Devoting Life to Fight to Preserve Bible Against Encroachment of Modernism

Dayton, Tenn., July 27.—William Jennings Bryan, who many years ago as "The boy orator of the Platte" with his "cross of gold" speech won a Democratic Presidential nomination, and a lasting place before the American public, is dead.

The end came yesterday afternoon while the Commoner was sleeping in the house of Richard Rogers, which had been assigned him during his stay here for the Scope's trial. Two doctors who examined the body, stated death was caused by a hemorrhage of the brain, resulting in apoplexy. He was 65 years old.

James McCartney, the family chauffeur, was sent by Mrs. Bryan at 4:30 o'clock to awake her husband. McCartney shook Mr. Bryan twice attempting to arouse him, and then noticed he was not breathing.

Rushing to the home of Arthur B. Andrews, a neighbor, the chauffeur called for physicians, who reached the home within a few minutes. After examination, the doctors said Mr. Bryan probably had been dead thirty or forty minutes before they arrived.

Funeral arrangements had not been completed early today, but Mrs. Bryan indicated the body would be interred in Arlington Cemetery as Mr. Bryan, who, as Colonel in the Spanish-American War, several times had expressed a desire to be buried there.

The Commoner had been living under a strenuous program since he came here three weeks ago to assist in the prosecution of John T. Scopes, found guilty of violating the Tennessee anti-evolution law. He appeared in excellent health, however, and was planning to launch a great campaign this week in behalf of fundamentalism.

Mrs. Bryan, who has been an invalid for a number of years, stood bravely the shock of her husband's unexpected death. She immediately took charge of funeral arrangements and received a few of the hundreds of persons who called at the residence to express sympathy.

"I am happy that my husband died without suffering and in peace." His last words to her as he entered the room for his nap were, "I am so sleepy." Before he went to sleep, Mr. Bryan autographed two books for Judge John T. Raulston, who presided at the Scopes trial. One of the books was opened when physicians reached the room and the ink was not yet dry.

After traveling over 200 miles Saturday and delivering speeches at Winchester and Jasper, Tenn., Mr. Bryan returned to Dayton early yesterday from Chattanooga where he had spent the night. During the trip the Commoner expressed his determination to "see the case through." Mr. Bryan showed no evidence of bad health, but remarked he was suffering with diabetes.

While in Chattanooga Mr. Bryan completed arrangements for publication of the speech he was to have delivered during the closing hours of the Scope's case. Although Mr. Bryan appeared to be in good health, he realized it was necessary for him to conserve his strength. During last week he visited Dr. Raymond Wallace, in Chattanooga, who informed him that he had a slight dilation of the heart with arrhythmia (missed beats).

Previously on July 17 Mr. Bryan had been advised by the physician to refrain from further strenuous activities. Dr. Wallace particularly advised him against an address he had planned to deliver at Pikesville on the following Sunday. Mr. Bryan delivered the speech, but limited it to ten minutes, telling his friends that he had to conserve his strength as he feared he might not live through the coming trial.

Body Lies in State Dayton, Tenn., July 27.—The body of William Jennings Bryan will lie in state this afternoon between the hours of two and four o'clock, while the public will be invited to view the body of the dead political and religious leader. Mrs. Bryan and her friends decided this today. The body will lie either at the home where Mr. Bryan died, or in the Rhea County Court House where he fought his last great battle.

The fallen champion of religious orthodoxy lay this morning on a couch by the front window of the Rogers house, a veil like fabric covering his classic features. A light breeze stirred the covering as a few friends viewed the body.

Peaceful and serene as though in a happy slumber, Mr. Bryan never looked more life-like than he did today. His lips were set in the accustomed determined lines with the slight suggestion of a coming smile. The gentle closed lids of the eyes which burned piercingly when the great man was in action, added to the effect of perfect content.

In the front room across the hall Mrs. Bryan rested in bed. Her attendants said she slept little if at all during the night, although she lay quiet most of the long hours. It was in the room just to the rear of where his window lay today that the great Commoner breathed late yesterday's last breath, unwatched by the eye of man. Later he was removed to where he reposed today in the privacy of the simple home.

To Rest in Arlington

Dayton, Tenn., July 27.—The body of William Jennings Bryan, who died suddenly here yesterday, will leave here on a special railroad car from Dayton for Washington at 8:40 Wednesday morning. Mrs. Bryan announced through her friends today. Interment of the political and religious leader will be in Arlington National Cemetery, Virginia, at a time to be determined later.

Washington, July 27.—On a spot high over a slope of Arlington overlooking the capital and near the monument erected to those who died on the Maine, will be the burial place of William Jennings Bryan.

Simple Funeral

Dayton, Tenn., July 27.—Mrs. William J. Bryan is insistent that the funeral and burial of her dead husband shall be without ostentation. "We are simple people and we want all arrangements simply made," the wife of the Commoner told Dayton citizens who had asked permission to pay special honor to the former Secretary of State. She declined with expressions of appreciation the offer of local residents to form a military parade of honor of former Dayton service men to bear the body to the place of interment. "Bring your white clothes, don't bring black ones," Mrs. Bryan advised her children with whom she talked over long distance telephone before they left their home for the East.

Sketch of Life.

In all the history of American politics there are few names which carry that brilliant luster of spectacular effort which has become a part of the memory of William Jennings Bryan.

His life for almost thirty years was a panorama of national sensation, piled one upon the other. At thirty-six he became almost overnight not only the leader of his party, but the idol of millions. Three times he carried the party standard as its choice for the highest office of the land; in another Presidential year 1912, he reaped much of the credit for placing Woodrow Wilson in the White House; and in almost every other national Democratic convention

Nansemond County Virginia Swept By Storm Late Sunday

NEGRO SHOT AND KILLED AT PARTY SATURDAY NIGHT

Jasper Cox Killed by Herbert Strong When He Attempts to Stop Auto; Strong Being Held in County Jail

Jasper Cox, negro, was shot and killed Saturday night by Herbert Strong, at the home of John Andrews, Ayden Township. In default of bond Strong was placed in the Pitt county jail. The coroner's jury returned the verdict that "said deceased came to his death as result of pistol shots in the hands of Herbert Strong and we recommend that he be held under bond, for action of the grand jury."

The shooting took place on Saturday night while the men were attending an ice cream party at the home of John Andrews. During the evening Jasper Cox and Jessie Cannon went to Grifton for the purpose of buying liquor. They returned about midnight and began raising a roughhouse. Andrews was at the barn and seeing that things were getting too lively his wife sent for him. Upon his arrival he ordered all the boys out of the house.

Made Strong, Eugene Blount, Charlie Hardee, and Herbert Strong, who resides in Greene county started to leave and had cranked their car, when Jasper Cox and Jessie Cannon ran out to the car and attempted to keep them from departing. Cannon held the left front wheel while Cox jumped on the running board, and ordered them to stop.

Herbert Strong, at this point, evidently became exasperated and ordered Cox to get down. Upon failure to do so, Strong shot him, death being instantaneous.

The four men then left for their home. Upon arrival there and after considering the matter Strong came to Greenville and gave himself up. Being unable to give bond he was placed in jail to await action of the grand jury.

Steele, Nashville, Tenn.

Prior to the Stockholm meeting and immediately following Bishop Cannon will attend other conferences of international significance, of which he is a member. This will be the twenty-fifth time Bishop Cannon has crossed the Atlantic ocean since the winter of 1918. On this trip he will go to London where at 89 Fleet street he has had European headquarters as chairman of the executive committee of the World League Against Alcoholism since 1920. This office and the office at Lausanne, Switzerland, are the centers of prohibition activity in Europe.

Houses Demolished and Crops Ruined As Section Near Suffolk Is Struck By Wind, Rain and Hail

Norfolk, Va., July 27.—Several small houses were demolished, more substantial structures were unroofed, many trees were uprooted, many automobiles were overturned, and crops badly damaged by wind of cyclonic ferocity which cut a swath a quarter mile wide and several miles long through Nansemond County late yesterday. No one was killed, but many persons had narrow escapes from serious injury.

The town of Nansemond, five miles from Suffolk, bore the brunt of the storm which lasted about twenty minutes. The wind was accompanied by a heavy down pour of hail and rain which broke some windows and left roads in the section blocked by fallen trees. No monetary estimate at the time was made today, but it was believed would be considerable.

Calm Reigns Along Morocco Front Today

Fez, French Morocco, July 27.—Calm reigned along the front in Morocco where the French troops are facing the rebellious rifian tribesmen. The enemy is understood to have abandoned all idea of an offensive and the French are not yet ready to begin their movement with a view of bringing the forces of Abd El Krim to terms. The airplanes alone are active and are continuing to harass the Rifians.

Abd El Krim when informed of a tendency bring shown by certain tribes to join the French forces, sent his brother to their country. 500 notables among the tribes were gathered and sent to the headquarters of the Rifian leader as security for the fidelity of the tribesmen. Marshal Pétain, who came to Morocco a week ago commissioned by the French Government to go into the situation here, is expected to return to Paris by the end of the week as his presence is no longer needed. On his return to Paris Marshal Pétain will report fully to Premier Painlevé of all he has seen and done and make recommendations for the successful termination of the French campaign. It is regarded as highly improbable that he will return to Morocco.

Declares Present Trend Toward Balance Power Latin - Amn. Countries

Williamston, Mass., July 27.—Dr. Leo S. Rowe, Director General of the Pan American Union at Washington, asserted at the institution of politics today that a distinct trend toward a balance of power exists in the Latin-American countries today, and may have as disastrous consequences as has the balance of powers in Europe. Conducting a discussion at a round table conference on outstanding problems in Inter-American relations, Dr. Rowe said in part:

"The first of the great problems confronting the American continent is to ascertain how it will be possible to avoid the balance of power at its European form. We must devise some way of preventing that system from taking deep root.

SWEDISH WIRELESS REPLACING CABLES FOR MESSAGES TO U. S.

Gothenburg, Sweden. — Wireless transmission of messages has so developed in Sweden that the government's station at Grimeton now sends about 95 percent of all telegrams from Sweden to the United States. The receiving station, on the other hand, gets only about 40 percent of the telegrams coming from the United States. In order to meet the new competition the cable companies have reduced their pre-war rates.

Lake Gladys—my own lake—lay like a sheet of quicksilver before me, with a reflected moon shining brightly in the center of it. It was shallow, for in many places I saw low sandbanks protruding above the water. Everywhere upon the still surface I could see signs of life, sometimes mere ripples and ripples in the water, sometimes the gleam of a great silver-sided fish in the air, sometimes the arched, slate-colored back of some passing monster. Upon a yellow sand bank I saw a creature like a huge swan, with a clumsy body and a high, flexible neck, shuffling about upon the margin. Presently it plunged in, and for some time I could see the arched neck and darting head undulating over the water. Then it dived, and I saw it no more.

My attention was soon drawn away from these distant sights and brought back to what was going on at my very feet. Two creatures like large armadillos had come down to the drinking-place, and were squatting at the edge of the water, their long, flexible tongues like red ribbons shooting in and out as they lapped. A huge deer, with branching horns, a magnificent creature which carried itself like a king, came down with its doe and two fawns and drank beside the armadillos. No such deer exist anywhere else upon earth, for the moose or elks which I have seen would hardly have reached its shoulders. Presently it gave a warning snort, and was off with its family among the reeds, while the armadillos also scuttled for shelter. A new-comer, a most monstrous animal, was coming down the path.

For a moment I wondered where suddenly the sound was repeated, still behind me, but louder and more menacing than before. My heart stood still within me as it dashed across me that the beast, whatever it was, must surely be after me. My skin grew cold and my hair rose at the thought. That three monsters should tear each other to pieces was a part of the strange struggle for existence, but that they should turn upon modern man, that they should deliberately track and hunt down the predominant human, was a staggering and fearsome thought. I remembered again the blood-beslobbered face which we had seen in the glare of Lord John's torch, like some horrible vision from the deepest circle of Dante's hell. With my knees shaking beneath me, I stood and glared with starting eyes down the moonlit path which lay behind me. All was quiet as in a dream landscape. Silver clearings and the black patches of the bushes—nothing else could I see. Then from out of the silence, imminent and threatening there came once more that low, throaty croaking, far louder and closer than before. There could no longer be a doubt. Something was on my trail, and was closing in upon me every minute.

The ground shook beneath his tremendous weight, and his gulping of water resounded through the still night.

I could have seen that ungainly shape, that arched back with triangular fringes along it, that strange bird-like head held close to the ground. Then it came back to me. It was the stegosaurus—the very creature which Maple White had preserved in his sketch-book, and which had been the first object which arrested the attention of Challenger! There he was—perhaps the very specimen which the American artist had encountered. The ground shook beneath his tremendous weight, and his gulping of water resounded through the still night. For five minutes he was so close to my rock that by stretching out my hand I could have touched the hideous waving hackles upon his back. Then he lumbered away and was lost among the boulders.

Looking at my watch, I saw that it was half-past two o'clock, and high time, therefore, that I started upon my homeward journey. There was no difficulty about the direction in which I should return, for all along I had kept the little brook upon my left, and it opened into the central lake within a stone's throw of the boulder upon which I had been lying. I set off, therefore, in high spirits, for I felt that I had done good work and was bringing back a fine budget of news for my companions. Foremost of all, of course, were the sight of the fery caves and the certainty that some troglodytic race inhabited them. But besides that I could speak from experience of the central lake. I could testify that it was full of strange creatures, and I had seen several land forms of primeval life which we had not before encountered. I reflected as I walked that few men in the world could have spent a stranger night or added more to human knowledge in the course of it.

I was plodding up the slope, turning these thoughts over in my mind, and had reached a point which may have been half-way to home, when my mind was brought back to my own position by a strange noise behind me. It was something between a snore and a growl, low, deep, and exceedingly menacing. Some strange creature was evidently near me, but nothing could be seen, so I hastened more rapidly upon my way. I had traversed half a mile or so when were exceedingly alert. For a moment, as I saw its shape, I hoped that it was an iguanodon, which I knew to be harmless, but, ignorant as I was, I soon saw that this was a very different creature. Instead of the gentle, deer-shaped head of the great three-toed leaf-eater, this beast had a broad, squat, toad-like face like that which had alarmed us in our camp. His ferocious cry and the horrible energy of his pursuit both assured me that this was surely one of the great flesh-eating dinosaurs, the most terrible beasts which have ever walked this earth. As the huge brute loomed along it dropped forward upon its fore-paws and brought its nose to the ground every twenty yards or so. It was smelling out my trail. Sometimes, for an instant, it was at fault. Then it would catch it up again and come bounding swiftly along the path I had taken.

Even now when I think of that nightmare the sweat breaks out upon my brow. What could I do? My useless frowning piece was in my hand. What help could I get from that? I looked desperately round for some rock or tree, but I was in a bushy jungle with nothing higher than a sapling within sight, while I knew that the creature behind me could tear down as ordinary tree as though it were a reed. My only possible chance lay in flight. I could not move swiftly over the rough, broken ground, but as I looked around me in despair I saw a well-marked, hard-beaten path which ran across in front of me. We had seen several of the sort, the runs of various wild beasts, during our expeditions. Along this I could perhaps hold my own, for I was a fast runner, and in excellent condition. Flung away my useless gun, I set myself to do such a half-mile as I have never done before or since. My limbs ached, my chest heaved, I felt that my throat would burst for want of air, and yet with that horror behind me I ran and I ran and ran. At last I paused, hardly able to move. For a moment I thought that I had thrown him off. The path lay still behind me. And then suddenly, with a crashing and a rending, a thudding of giant feet and a panting of monster lungs the beast was upon me once more. He was at my very heels. I was lost.

How can the Warrens afford such things?

— their income is no larger than ours”

“I USED to wonder how they do it, too,” replied Mr. Butler. “Until Tom Warren got to talking while he was showing me over the place today.

“It seems that the Warrens buy practically everything from Sears Roebuck, and Tom says they save enough on necessities in that way to pay for the extra conveniences and luxuries that you see in their house and around their place.

“Tom showed me the latest Sears catalog and said that it contained over 35,000 items, on everyone of which there was a real saving.”

One customer who has always got comparative prices on the goods he has bought of Sears Roebuck reports that he has actually saved $800 on $3,000 worth of goods bought here. $800 will pay for a great many luxuries at Sears' prices.

And there is no additional profit tacked on luxuries at Sears—although most merchants seem to feel that buyers of luxuries will pay prices that allow such extra profits.

It is one of the proudest achievements of Sears Roebuck that this house has been able to bring so many modern conveniences and comforts within the reach of the workers of the nation.

This is, first of all, a store for those who must earn what they spend and who, therefore, cannot spend carelessly or extravagantly.

William Jennings Bryan

Having declared in the face of Modernism and Evolution that he knew enough about the Bible to believe in It, live by It and die by It, William Jennings Bryan, following a great victory for Christianity and on the eve of an even greater battle, yesterday passed to his eternal rest while he lay in peaceful slumber and assurance that his life had been devoted to the greatest of all causes.

Conceiving the great truths of Christianity from his early childhood, these truths have been a part of his daily life and no worldly undertaking has been great enough to crowd from his being his love for and practice of Christianity. As an orator his eloquence was unsurpassed, as a statesman he gained international fame and as a believer in Christ and a follower of the teachings of the Bible he leaves an example which if followed will lead the world to salvation and life eternal, that greatest of all rewards.

Ahead of his time with the advancement of his ideals and theories both politically and religiously, Mr. Bryan naturally became the subject of severe criticisms and caricatures but this did not dampen his enthusiasm to carry out his ideals and instead of these thrusts causing hatred on his part they created within him even a greater love for his fellowmen, by whom he was so misunderstood, and a determination to show them the light, if possible, regardless of the cost to himself. His greatness is exemplified in the fact that he could jest over his three defeats for the highest office that his country could offer and express love for his opponents who failed to see the issues the same as he. Plainspoken, without equivocation, was his attitude toward all issues and this was probably his greatest so-called stumbling block along the road of his political attainments but to dodge issues was not his policy and he would have accepted no post nor honor that must be gained by so doing. As one of its greatest factors, the Democratic Party, to which he belonged, suffers a great loss at his death, opposing parties suffer the loss of the wisdom of his words but most of all the world suffers the loss of the greatest present day crusaders against those who would discredit the belief of our fathers by declaring the Bible an example of Israelitish mythology and disputing the divine origin of man.

was fire in his eye when he began to speak. "I would be presumptuous, indeed, to present myself against the distinguished gentleman to whom you have listened," he said, "if this were a mere measure of abilities; but this is not a contest between persons. The humblest citizen in all the land, when clad in the armor of a righteous cause, is stronger than all the hosts of error. I come to speak to you in defense of a cause as holy as the cause of liberty—the cause of humanity."

Evils of Day. Then charging the evils of the day—the idle mills, the social unrest and low wages—the scarcity of money and the "idle holders" of idle capital in Wall street, he continued:

"The individual is but an atom he is born, he acts, he dies; but principles are eternal; and this has been a contest over a principle. Having behind us the producing masses of this nation and the world, supported by the commercial interests, the laboring interests and the toilers everywhere, we will answer those who demand a single gold standard by saying:

"You shall not press down upon the brow of labor this crown of thorns. You shall not crucify mankind upon this cross of gold."

The convention was stamped for Bryan, who was nominated over eight other candidates on the fifth ballot, following a speech by a Georgia delegate in which the eloquent young orator was referred to as "a Saul come to lead the Israelites to battle." Subsequently Bryan received the nominations of the People's and the National Silver parties.

Broke Records. The nominee broke all speaking records in his first campaign, traveling more than 18,000 miles and making about 800 speeches in 27 States. He polled 6,502,925 votes to McKinley's 7,104,779 and received in the Electoral College 176 votes to his opponent 271. Although defeated, Mr. Bryan remained the leader of his party and, after the Spanish-American war in 1898, in which he commanded the Third Nebraska Volunteer Infantry as its Colonel, he opposed the permanent retention of the Philippine Islands by the United States.

In 1900, when again nominated for the Presidency, he made anti-imperialism the paramount issue but refused to omit an explicit party declaration in favor of free coinage of silver in the party platform. This time he was defeated with a popular vote of 6,358,133 as against 7,207,123 for his opponent. He received 155 electoral votes to McKinley's 292.

Mr. Bryan returned to Lincoln, and started the publication of a weekly political journal called The Commoner. Four years later, 1904, although not actively a candidate for the nomination, which eventually went to Judge Alton B. Parker, he vigorously opposed Democracy's "conservative" attitude.

Peerless Leader. The interim between this period and the next presidential election of 1908 was occupied by Mr. Bryan, now known by many of his followers as "The Peerless Leader," in several enterprises that kept him in the public eye. Notable among these was the trip around the world on which he started September 21, 1905. Accompanied by his wife, son and a daughter, Mr. Bryan first went to Japan, and China where he was hospitably entertained and made numerous addresses one of which, entitled, "The White Man's Burden" was commended by the Japanese-American Society.

The Bryan's were presented to the Emperor of Japan and were everywhere accorded the honor of foremost Americans. Later the party went to the Philippines where Mr. Bryan's views on Filipino independence were welcomed. During this visit the savage Moros of Mindanao Island created the Nebraska a "datto" or chief of one of their tribes.

Leaving the Philippines the party went to India, the Holy Land, Turkey, Austria-Hungary, Germany, Russia, Italy, Norway, Sweden and other European countries, finally arriving in London on July 3, 1906. Meanwhile, Mr. Bryan had "interviewed" King Edward VII, the Emperor of Russia, and other potentates, and Count Leo Tolstoy and had made numerous speeches all of which were reported in the American press and which inspired a desire on the part of Democrats at home to give him a great reception which was done upon his return to America the following September.

For Disarmament. About this time Mr. Bryan came out for world disarmament, an ideal which is said to have prompted his drafting in 1913, when he became Secretary of State, of the particular form of peace treaty between the United States and foreign nations "by which all disputes were to be submitted to an impartial investigation commission for a year before hostilities could begin." This has been regarded as Mr. Bryan's greatest achievement for thirty foreign nations, including the Central Powers, and representing three-fourths of the population of the earth, became signatories to the document. About a year later the World War broke out in all its fury.

In 1908 Mr. Bryan was again named as the Democratic standard bearer. The campaign was waged on the principal issue of opposition to "trusts" and for a third time the Democratic nominee suffered defeat, polling 6,409,104 votes to Taft's 7,678,908 and receiving 182 electoral votes to his opponent's 321.

Notwithstanding Mr. Bryan's reverses in politics, it is said, he was "a good loser." Of a Presbyterian forbear, optimistic and of a religious nature, his setbacks failed to make him lose faith in his future. He refused to become discouraged. For the next four years, or until the campaign of 1912 which resulted in the election of President Wilson, Mr. Bryan continued to edit his newspaper and to attend the councils of his party.

Home a Mecca. In his first campaign his home in Lincoln was a Mecca for prominent Democrats, where Mrs. Bryan, scholarly woman, formerly Miss Mary E. Baird, of Perry, Ill., who had greatly aided her husband in his political career, was a charming hostess. The Bryans had three children, one son and two daughters.

Always in demand as a lecturer, especially at Chautauquas, Mr. Bryan's income was augmented by his writings for newspapers and magazines and his authorship of several books. The latter included "The First Battle" (1897); "Under Other Flags" (1904); "The Old World and Its Ways" (1907); "Heart to Heart Appeals" (1917). In addition to his Nebraska home, Mr. Bryan after his final defeat for the Presidency, established residences in Asheville, N. C., and Miami, Fla.

A few months before the time for the 1912 Democratic National Convention, Mr. Bryan publicly announced he would not be a candidate, declaring he was "ready to enter upon a campaign in behalf of a true Democrat with even more vigor than that with which I have fought at any time on my own behalf."

As to Wilson. Woodrow Wilson at this time was Governor of New Jersey and had attracted the attention of the Nebraska, it was said, by reason of his "progressive" legislation. The fight on the floor of the Baltimore convention, led by Bryan against the Tammany men in the New York delegation, is a matter of history. Despite the fact that Champ Clark, Speaker of the House of Representatives, led on 27 ballots for the nomination and had a clear majority of nine, which ordinarily would have made him the party's candidate, the Nebraska's eloquence and persistence against "domination" of the party by Wall Street resulted in failure of the Missouriian to get the necessary two-thirds of the convention and in the designation of Wilson.

Mr. Bryan and Mr. Wilson held many ideals in common. When Mr. Wilson was elected President he appointed Mr. Bryan Secretary of State. The two years Mr. Bryan occupied a place at the head of Mr. Wilson's cabinet were years of perplexity and stress. The Mexican embargo, the Japanese anti-alien land controversy in California and the correspondence with Germany and Austria-Hungary, antecedent to America's entrance into the war, were problems that gave the Nebraska statesman many sleepless nights.

Mexican Trouble. During his term of office, because of an insult to the United States flag and the refusal of "Dictator" Huerta of Mexico to fire a salute as an apology, American troops were dispatched to Vera Cruz, which was captured April 21, 1914. Subsequently, the soldiers and warships were withdrawn, Huerta was deposed and a Constitutional government under Venustiano Carranza, who was favored by the Administration, was set up in its stead.

At the height of the anti-alien land controversy in California, Mr. Bryan journeyed to the Pacific coast where he held several conferences with the Governor and delivered speeches before the State Legislature. Relations with Japan during this period were reported as somewhat strained. The upshot of the matter was that a new measure, known as the Webb Bill, was drafted and passed. It modified the restrictions against the Japanese but evoked a protest from Tokio.

Quit Cabinet. Mr. Bryan's resignation from the cabinet, which occurred on June 9, 1915, came as a thunderbolt out of a clear sky. It was known there had been disagreements between the President and his chief cabinet officer but that the breach had gone by the public mind. Germany's aggressions and her ruthless U-boat policy were daily drawing the United States into the vortex of war. Mr. Bryan seemed pledged to peace. The time came when President Wilson's notes to Germany had to take a final tone and with the sinking of another American ship and an ultimatum from the United States Mr. Bryan, who had previously declared "there is nothing final between friends," sent his letter of resignation to the President. Mr. Wilson, deploring his action as a "personal loss," in reply, accepted his secretary's withdrawal from the cabinet stating that they both sought the same end but by different methods.

The zeal of Mr. Bryan to bring about world peace, led him in the excess of his enthusiasm, it was said, to the public and acts that brought upon him a great deal of hostile criticism. Before the United States had entered the war the Nebraska had pledged himself to accompany an expedition financed by Henry Ford, the Michigan manufacturer, to Europe for the purpose of "getting the boys out of the trenches." Mr. Bryan later changed his plans and did not go. Subsequently he was accused of unintentionally aiding the propaganda of the Central Powers by his speeches and writings. "Fomented" by war he declared it was "address in San Francisco he said that for the United States to go to war with Germany would be like challenging a madhouse."

Offered Services. Sometime before this he was reported as being opposed to permitting the United States to make any loans to the belligerents. When the United States picked up the gauntlet of battle thrown down by Germany, however, Mr. Bryan promptly declared "she must be defeated at all costs" and offered his services to President Wilson as a private soldier.

While Secretary of State, Mr. Bryan was often absent from Washington as a lecturer and this subjected him to no little amount of railway in the press. In a public statement he said the $12,000 salary he received as a cabinet officer was insufficient to meet the ordinary household demands upon his purse and he felt obliged to supplement his income in other ways. One of his most popular lectures was "The Prince of Peace."

When he entered the cabinet, Mr. Bryan astonished Washington by announcing that grape juice would be substituted for alcoholic beverages whenever the Secretary of State and Mrs. Bryan entertained the members of the diplomatic corps. Indeed, Mr. Bryan in his long advocacy of teetotalism was credited by many with having done more than any other American outside of the prohibition party, to force the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution making the United States a "dry nation. From March 1918 he was president of the National Dry Federation.

Mr. Bryan's leadership of the Democratic party definitely was broken at the national convention at San Francisco in 1920, when he was defeated in his efforts to have a dry plank included in the platform. Throughout the campaign he remained silent and afterward said it was the first time in 40 years that he had made no speeches for a Democratic presidential candidate. The reason for his action, he said, was that he did not agree with James M. Cox, the party's candidate who was defeated by Warren G. Harding, and that he did not want to debate with the candidate of his own party.

Defeat at Frisco. After his defeat on the convention floor relative to the proposed dry plank Mr. Bryan said: "My heart is in the grave with our cause. I must pause until it comes back to me."

Soon after the election of President Harding, Mr. Bryan suggested that President Wilson resign because the people had voted against the League of Nations, one of the dominant issues of the campaign, and in favor of an association of nations as proposed by Mr. Harding. The former secretary of state proposed that President Wilson immediately turn over the office to Vice President Marshall with the understanding that the latter appoint Mr. Harding as secretary of state at the beginning of the new congress and then resign so that Mr. Harding immediately could become president and put into effect his association of nations.

Having become a permanent legal resident of Miami, Fla., Mr. Bryan was elected from that state a delegate to the Democratic National Convention at New York in 1924. He took a prominent part in the proceedings but his influence was greatly curtailed as compared with that which he exerted at previous national conventions of the party. His advocacy of the nomination of William G. McAdoo had no effect in breaking the deadlock which continued for nearly two weeks between Mr. McAdoo and Governor Alfred E. Smith of New York, the contest eventually being ended when the delegates switched to John W. Davis, who was nominated.

Mr. Bryan was a member of the resolution committee and at one of the sessions when the K. K. K. issue was being discussed he dropped to his knees and urged the other members of the committee to join with him in prayer that they might be guided in the right light. The former Secretary took part in the campaign, but was not so active as he had been in some previous ones. His brother, Charles W. Bryan, then governor of Nebraska, was the Democratic nominee for Vice President.

Easing up his political activities with the 1920 national campaign, Mr. Bryan took a greater interest in the affairs of the Presbyterian church and devoted more of his time to lecturing. In 1923 he was defeated for moderator of the general assembly of the Presbyterian church after an exciting contest. He was elected vice-moderator at the general assembly of 1924.

An avowed opponent of the Darwin theory of evolution, Mr. Bryan made many addresses on the subject. Speaking in 1923 before the legislature of West Virginia, which was considering a bill to prohibit the teaching of the Darwin theory in the schools of that state, Mr. Bryan said:

"School teachers paid by taxation should not be permitted to teach under the guise of science or philosophy anything that undermines faith in God, impairs belief in the Bible or discredits the Son of God and the Savior of the world. Evolutionists rob the Savior of the glory of the virgin birth, the majesty of His deity and the triumph of His resurrection. They weaken faith in the Bible by discarding the miracles and the supernatural, and by eliminating from the Bible all that conflicts with their theories. They render the Book a scrap of paper."

Later in an address in New York Mr. Bryan denounced the Darwin theory as the greatest enemy of religion, and declared that in the schools it was undermining Christianity. "I don't object to scientific truth," he said, "for no truth disturbs religion. What we object to is for any scientist to put forth his guess and demand that we substitute it for the word of God. Evolution is an enemy of the Bible and furnishes a respectable excuse for men to deny the Bible."

Among his writings on the subject were "The Menace of Darwinism" and "The Bible and Its Enemies."

GREAT COMMONER DIED OF APOPLEXY WHILE ASLEEP IN DAYTON, TENNESSEE, YESTERDAY

Named to Cabinet. As a recognition, many said, of his long leadership, President Wilson made him Secretary of State—a post from which he resigned two years later under the most sensational of circumstances, because he felt the nation was verging toward participation in the European war. World peace always had been his passion in his earlier years, just as in his later days he made the espousal of religion his all-absorbing concern and turned his talents to an attack on evolution.

Throughout all his active years his followers clung to his standard in unswerving devotion for the man and his ideals, while his enemies reviled and hated him, calling him ignorant and misguided in both his economics and his religion. His great power of eloquence, which first brought him to a place of national prominence, remained unimpaired for many years; but toward the last his old-time brilliance on the platform and the stump began to dim perceptibly.

Although he found time for many venturesome excursions into other fields, politics was his forte, and the story of his life work is almost a history of the National political campaigns that began when the Chicago Democratic convention of 1896, stamped out of a death-gloom by his "cross of gold" speech, made him its candidate for president.

Famous Convention. Bryan went to the convention as editor of the Omaha World Herald and a former member of the House, but entirely unknown to any considerable portion of the rank and file of his party. Nevertheless he took with him an unflinching faith in his destiny, and as the leading candidates—now forgotten—began to muster their strength for the fight, he turned to some of his intimate friends of the press stand and remarked that he himself would be the nominee of the convention. None of them believed him, and very few believed that he was speaking seriously.

It was but a few hours later that he set the convention wild with his speech for free silver, and that night a group of delegates hired a band and went to serenade him at the Old South State Street Hotel where he was staying. He rose from bed, slipped on a pair of trousers over his night shirt and in bare feet received his visitors with a warm handshake and a smile that soon enough was to become famous the world over.

First Campaign. His first campaign against McKinley was epochal for its earnestness and not until the votes had been counted did he believe it possible he could be beaten. In 1900, with McKinley again for his opponent, he adopted "imperialism" for a paramount issue and for a second time stamped the country in a vain effort to reach the goal of his ambition.

After this second failure many of the leaders within his party turned away, and the nomination four years after Alton B. Parker was a bitter disappointment to him. In that convention he made a spectacular fight against the forces that he declared were handing over the party to Wall Street, delivering a speech which was regarded almost universally as the swan song of his career. Yet in another four years the pendulum had swung back again and he was nominated as the opponent of William Howard Taft.

Baltimore Convention. The part he took in the Baltimore convention of 1912 was of a piece with the spectacular strain that ran through and through his whole career. Rising on the convention floor at a time when his long-time friend, Champ Clark, was within reach of the nomination, he denounced the Clark forces for accepting the support of Tammany, and declared Wall street was trying once again to fasten its talons on the Democratic party. The reaction to Wilson, who had been running well behind, was instantaneous, and Bryan was one of the first to be named to the Wilson cabinet. The breach between Bryan and Clark never was bridged.

As Secretary of State, he came under attack many times; was ridiculed by many both at home and abroad for his policies, but always loyally supported by his friends; and finally made his exit from the cabinet rather than sign a note to Germany, prepared by Mr. Wilson himself, on the submarine outrages. It was after a long talk between the President and the Secretary that the resignation was announced. Summoned to the White House on a bright June morning, Mr. Bryan entered the President's private office unruflled, apparently believing that by throwing his powers of persuasion onto the scale he could convince his chief that the note should not be sent. After he had talked alone for an hour, Mr. Wilson pressed a button on his desk and a negro usher entered to find the President calm and silent and the Secretary nervous and volatile.

Quit Cabinet. "Mr. Bryan wants a drink of water," said Mr. Wilson. When it was brought, Bryan's hand was so unsteady that he upset a part of it as he raised it to his lips. He demonstrated later in many ways that he had been cut to the quick by his failure to avoid what he believed was a war-like gesture by his country, and by his parting from the man, he had helped lift up into greater leadership than he himself had been able to attain.

Helped Davis. He did not oppose Mr. Wilson's renomination in 1916, but the party candidate of 1920 and 1924 were chosen over his opposition. He went on a vacation trip during most of the campaign of James M. Cox, but he took the stump for John W. Davis in 1924.

At San Francisco in 1920, however, most of his energies were directed toward the writing of a platform rather than the choice of a candidate. His fight this time was for a bone dry plank, and he took the speaker's stand in its espousal. With his old-time form, face shining and his eyes alight, he sent his rounded periods rolling and rattling through the great convention hall, and when the speech was ended the delegates gave him an ovation that lasted for an hour. His intimates said that until the vote was taken he firmly believed that once more he had stamped a national convention; but it was only the tribute of a party for an old and tried friend, for the plank he advocated was lost overwhelmingly.

At New York. Even more spectacular was his part in the New York convention of just a year ago. A member of the sub-committee which drafted the platform, he was in the thick of the fight over the League of Nations and the Ku Klux Klan. At the end of one futile all-night session of the sub-committee, when the members had agreed to separate for a few hours' rest, he rose in his place at the committee table and asked his colleagues to remain for a moment while he led in prayer. Then with bowed head he asked Providence for guidance in the dark hour of discussion and bitterness.

Later he took the floor before the convention, on one occasion to defend William G. McAdoo, and on another to oppose a plank condemning the Ku Klux Klan by name. But for the first time he had found a Democratic convention he could not, quite. Applauds, mingled with hisses and boos, came both from the floor and the galleries. His delivery lacked the fire of other years and his presence the command that was his wont. Only once or twice was there a flash of the old-time brilliance, as when he took up the challenge of a spectator who applauded his remark that this might be the last convention he would attend.

"Don't applaud," he said. "I may change my mind." His career has been likened to that of Henry Clay who also was three times nominated for the Presidency and as many times defeated. Clay, too, became a Secretary of State. Friends of Bryan insisted that like Clay, he was too conscientious, consistent and scrupulous for a politician and that the famous Whig's declaration "I would rather be right than be President" well described the man from Nebraska.

Born in Illinois. The former Secretary of State was born in Salem, Ill., March 19, 1860. His father was Silas Lillard Bryan, a native of Culpeper county, Virginia, a lawyer and judge. The son, after graduating from Illinois College in 1881 and Union College of Law, Chicago, in 1883 entered the law office of Lyman Trumbull, former United States Senator. Subsequently he removed to Jacksonville, Ill., where he practiced law until 1887 when he settled in Lincoln, Neb.

During the presidential campaign of 1888 young Bryan's speeches in behalf of the Democratic ticket attracted attention, and in 1890 he accepted a nomination for Congress in the first Nebraska district, a Republican stronghold, "because no one else would have it," he said, since it was believed no Democrat could win. He was elected and served from 1891 until 1895. He was made a member of the important Ways and Means Committee in his first term.

Two speeches in this period gave Mr. Bryan nationwide prominence one against the policy of protection, delivered on March 16, 1892, and the other against the repeal of the silver purchase clause of the Sherman Act on August 16, 1893. In the latter he advocated "the free and unlimited coinage of silver, irrespective of international agreement, at a ratio of 16 to 1," a policy with which his name was afterward most prominently associated until he entered the cabinet of President Wilson.

First Nomination. The first nomination of Mr. Bryan for the Presidency at the Democratic National Convention in Chicago on July 10, 1896, has since been characterized as one of the "miracles" of American politics. The nominee, after serving in congress, had run for the United States Senate and was defeated by Senator John M. Thurston, of Nebraska. Abandoning the law, Mr. Bryan became editor of the Omaha World-Herald and championed the cause of bimetallism as vigorously with the pen as he had upon the forum. He had been beaten for a third term in Congress on the issue of "sound money," and when the time came for the national convention this question was rending both big political parties. There were Free Silver Republicans as well as Democrats, but the nominee of the former, Henry Teller, of Colorado, threw his support to Bryan when the Nebraska won the nomination at Chicago.

The "cross of gold" speech by Bryan, which has been quoted often, perhaps, than any other of his words, and which made him a rival of William M. Kinley for the Presidency—came at the close of a debate on the floor of the convention in advocacy of a free silver plank. Men nationally prominent in the party had preceded him, and opposed the plank unless it could provide for bimetallism by international agreement. The situation was tense when the Nebraska, then only 36 years old—one year more than the Constitutional requirement for a President—arose to speak.

Everybody was tired; everybody seemed ready for compromise. Not so the delegate from Nebraska. There

JORDAN-WILLIAMS.

Farmville, July 27.—A beautiful wedding was solemnized at the Methodist Episcopal church, Thursday, July 23, when Miss Hazel Mae Williams became the bride of Mr. Francis Alva Jordan of Greenville.

The church was beautifully decorated in long leaf pine, potted plants, tall candles and cut flowers.

The impressive ring ceremony was performed by Rev. B. B. Slaughter, pastor of the bride.

Prior to the entrance of the bride party, "Oh Promise Me" and "At Dawning" were beautifully sung by Mr. John Dwight Holmes accompanied by Mrs. Haywood Smith at the piano. To the strains of the bridal chorus from Lohengrin, the bride party entered. First the little ribbon girls, Misses Helen Burnette of Greenville and Miss Clara Williams, of Rocky Mount. They were followed by the ushers: Mr. Alfred Moore and Mr. Claude Barrette of Farmville, then followed Mr. W. H. Williams, of Rocky Mount, brother of the bride with Mr. Graham of Greenville as groomsmen. Miss Margaret Lewis of Rocky Mount, cousin of the bride and Miss Sarah Pollard of Farmville as bridesmaids, wearing lace dresses over charmeuse with large picture hats and carrying shower bouquets of colored asters. Then came the bridesmaids, Mrs. C. B. Harris of Henderson and Mrs. Roy C. Daniel of Oxford, sisters of the bride, gowned in georgette beaded dresses over satin charmeuse, with picture hats and shower bouquets of asters. Then followed Mrs. Thos. Truett, of Lamar, S. C., sister of the groom as matron of honor. She was gowned in apricot charmeuse with lace overdress, picture hat and shower bouquet. Miss Bettie Joyner of Farmville was maid of honor, wearing white georgette trimmed in flowered georgette and beaded with picture hat to match carrying shower bouquet. Then entered little Miss Ruth Benson of Henderson as ring bearer carrying the ring on a silver tray. She was gowned in a peach voile trimmed with ribbons, rosebuds and lace. Next little Misses Jean Lewis of Rocky Mount, cousin of the bride and Edith Truett of Lamar, S. C., niece of the groom entered with large baskets of roses strewn them for the bride. They wore white georgette dresses. Then entered the groom with his best man, Emmette Jordan of Iama, S. C. The bride entered on the arm of her brother, Mr. Fred Williams of Farmville, who gave her in marriage. She was lovely in white georgette over charmeuse trimmed in real lace and crystals, with tulle hat to match and trimmed in orange blossoms with long streamers caught with orange blossoms, she carried a shower of bride's roses and lilies of the valley.

During the ceremony "To a Wild Rose" was softly rendered by Mrs. Haywood Smith.

Mrs. Jordan is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Williams of Farmville, she is one of Farmville's most attractive young ladies and will be missed from her place in the social circles as she goes to Greenville to make her home.

Mr. Jordan holds a responsible position with the Water and Light Commission of Greenville and has a host of friends throughout the state as well as in South Carolina, his native state.

Refreshments consisting of block cream and cake were then served. The guests departed at a late hour amid showers of good wishes for the happy couple.

Miscellaneous Shower.

Farmville, July 27. — One of the most delightful events of the season was a miscellaneous shower given by Mrs. H. H. Benson of Henderson and Mrs. C. L. Finch also of Henderson at the home of their mother, Mrs. J. M. Christman to the Young Peoples Missionary Society in honor of Miss Hazel Williams, bride elect, she being president of the society.

The living room and reception hall were artistically decorated with potted plants and cut flowers, beautifully arranged.

The guests were met at the door by Mrs. Benson, Mrs. Finch and Miss Williams, the honoree, they were then directed by Mrs. Claude B. Harris and Mrs. Roy C. Daniel to the gift room and deposited their packages and were then taken to the living room.

After many amusing games were played a unique contest was held "an automobile wedding." Mrs. G. M. Holden, the fortunate contestant was presented with a lovely vase, which she presented to the bride-elect.

The cards on the gifts were hidden, and Miss Williams was told to play hide and seek which she did to perfection. As she found each card and called the name the guests would arise and bring their gift. The opening of these afforded much merriment. The numerous and beautiful gifts attest the popularity of the bride.

The hostesses then served salad sandwiches, tea and pickles.

After showering the bride to be with all good wishes the guests departed.

BUILDING AND CONTENTS DESTROYED BY LIGHTNING

Kinston, July 27.—Lightning Saturday night at about 8 o'clock struck a jack house on the farm of H. D. Stanley, near Grangers, killed a horse, cow and eight hogs, and ignited the building containing seven cured barns of tobacco and a quantity of feed and implements. The building and contents were entirely destroyed with a loss of around $5,000. The tobacco and livestock were the property of Carson Sutton, colored, a tenant on the Stanley farm. It was understood last night that no part of the loss was covered by insurance.

The electrical discharge was declared by those living in the vicinity to have been the most violent ever witnessed in that section. One man stated that the entire building appeared to be wrapped in a sheet of flame when the stroke occurred. The ensuing clap of thunder shook houses and rattled windows in Kinston. The building appeared to have caught fire in a dozen places at once, it was stated, and nothing was saved.
