"I do not know that what he said in that letter was true. God knows. A woman knows, A dead man pret this letter justly?"

"If every line in that letter was lie Cole could have sent him to the road for two years." He then read the laws on slander.

"W. B. Cole has done something the legislature of North Carolina has never done. He has killed a man for what he said was stander." "He has been his own judge, jury, nd execution. He decided Ormond should be kiled, and he killed him."

"I have been practicing law for 26 rears tomorrow. In all my life I have never witnessed such inconsistency as that of pleading self defense and insanity." He testified on oath he would do again what he has done and now he says he did not know what he did." Hoey closed at 11 o'clock and James R. Pou, of Raleigh, addressed the court with the first argument for the defense.

"We contend first," said James R. Pou, speaker for the defense, "that Cole had a reason to believe his life in danger, and secondly that after a period of six months of worry and fear his mind was in such a state he believed he should kill him.

"The state says, 'Hang Cole for his crime, but if you cannot hang him for-that hang him for his money." "I charge the prosecution to declare the truth or falsity of that 'slander letter. They have beaten around the bush and have not said."

"If that letter was true it was a state to say."

Larry Moore accepted the challenge for the state.
