BENEFITS WIDESPREAD

Against professional sports and even against amateur sports as exemplified in college games, it is urged sometimes that the benefits are confined to too narrow a class, that the players are the only ones who get the exercise which justifies indulgence in such activities. This position is hardly tenable. While the players occupy the center of the stage when the games are in progress, in some instances the efforts made by spectators to be present involve more personal exertion than is expended by those taking part in the sports. The long vigil kept by no small number of persons of both sexes in order to secure tickets for the World's Series is indicative of what a non-player may be called on to endure in baseball. In the matter of college football certainly there is no want of activity on the part of the student body not members of the squad. With the "pep" meetings and parades in advance of the games and the jubilation of the victors after a game, it cannot be sustained that whatever of benefit exercise affords is withheld from the non-players. Observations of college sports would seem to bear out the statement that those not on the team get rather more of it than those who play. The latter are rather carefully guarded, while there is not much restraint placed on the former, other than what the human frame can endure. In the the endurance.

The roars that go up from the grandstand in applause of a brilliant play offer evidence that even spectators may exert themselves, though they do it in a manner at variance with the players. Recently Irene Castle stepped from her motor to enter a Fifth Avenue shoppe, and immediately all eyes in the vicinity were centered on her. A great deal of the attention she a'tracted was due to the fact that she wore this distinctive Coat tailored in the Parisian manner with Queen Anne collar and cuffs of Russian squirrel. The lining is of "Corticelli" Crepe Eldora, and a narrow belt introduces a voguish back flare.

The choice of Irene Castle when she wishes to appear her most stunning! "Corticelli" Crepe - Back Satin is very wittily reversed to form two bands across the back of this animated Frock, which boasts a side flare trimmed with red fox fur. Huge novelty buttons are stunningly effective and will intrigue the fancy of the great number of women who regard Irene Castle as the foremost style authority of America.
