Washington, Dec. 23. A Salon

at Capital city was reading in a literary society session of MacFarland Junior High School a newspaper story as to the religious affiliations of members of Congress. The table has recently been published by a church board here, and indicates—even if it be what they and many men call mere "statistics"—that Senators and Representatives are a truly pious lot. Most of them "belong to Church."

This student reader of the article rooted off the list of various religious denominations, and among them was this notation: "Reformed—House, 3; Senate, 0."

"Good gracious," rasped another girl, "Only three reformed members in Congress, and those in the House? I knew the Senate was wicked, but is it so terrible?"

The Reformed Church is a strict sect, indeed. But the girl had other ideas.

One of the "political prisoners" released during President Wilson's administration and freed by Mr. Coolidge after a rather bitter newspaper campaign is trying to "rub it in" on the government. He has come to Washington and opened what he calls the "Free Speech Book Shop." It has nothing to do with Vice-President Davis' Senate closure campaign, but seeks to extend the sale of books of so-called liberal writers—both political and religious. The particular offense alleged against the keeper of this shop was that he made speeches designed to interfere with the operations of the censorship law. He did not deny the charge, and now is experimenting commercially to broadcast his ideas and at the same time make a livelihood off his principles.

Both Senate and House admitted they contain numerous potential candidates for the 1928 Presidency. In the Republican camp, aspirants in the nomination are much embarrassed by inability to guess whether Mr. Coolidge desires to succeed himself. All undertakings thus early in obtaining delegate pledges are necessarily predicated on the stipulation "if Cal doesn't run again." Among Senate possibilities the Vice-President is considered first, and of course there is the question of whether he is the "heavenly" candidate as to what "heaven" means to do. Cummins of Iowa, although in poor health is looked upon as no unimportant quantity in the event of a convention fight, and Willis of Ohio, Watson of Indiana and several eastern men also have their respective followings. In the House the number is even greater, for it is well remembered that Presidential lightning has men frequently struck on this side.

There is much lively interest here as to Governor Pinchot's purposes with respect to 1928. It is the frankly expressed opinion on Capitol Hill, and especially among Pennsylvania members of Congress, that the Keystone state governor intends going in the running in the Republican national convention.

Among the Democratic alignment is more freely possible, owing to there being no such complication as Presidential influence exercises among the Republicans. More talk of a "good southern man" is heard now than ever before marked the plannings for a Presidential battle. Of course most of the men given support in the 1924 Democratic convention have friends who proffer aid in the next contest. Senator Copeland is expected to be a new entrant. Swanwick's present work gives him public attention to a helpful degree. The session now on offers many opportunities for members to advance their ambitious interests before the people, so that considerable candidating for 1928 is being daily dozed now.

"This town's weather reminds me of Texas," opined Senator Mayfield upon a recent sunny day. "I did not know winter was so pleasant this far north." To which Senator Nye, the new enplaced arrival from North Dakota, added: "Makes me think of North Dakota—same fine bracing air; same nipping breezes and same gusts sweeping your hat off as you turn the corner of a tall building."

"Tall building!" exclaimed Senator Hale. "Who ever heard of one in your state? Don't all you fellows live in sod shanties and dug-outs?"

Senator Copel, who is something of a prairie native himself, looked his scorn at Hale. "Of course you don't use sod for building purposes in Maine," he said. "That's the only thing you can grow to eat isn't it? Except, of course, the pine needles you use afterward for toothpicks."

Washington's winter thus far has been mild, indeed. Flowers will bloom on the terraces of private homes, and in parks where the caretakers have not consigned all plants to the hotheouses. Grass is green as in May and dandelions peep forth after every shower. The National Capital winter usually arrives along with the close of January, or even later. In Presidential inauguration years, to be sure, it is more likely to break March 4.

In some circles the Mitchell case will always be known as the hot air ship case.

Daily News Letter

Gossip of Staff Correspondents at World Centers of Population.

By H. R. KNICKERBOCKER
I. N. S. Correspondent
Moscow, Dec. 23.—Hostilities have broken out among the warlike bootblacks of Moscow, and the first armed engagement has filled a small hospital, but two victims in their graves, and forced all Muscovites to shine their shoes at home.

All the bootblacks of the city belong to two tribes of Assyrians, the Tleri and the Conel. Both tribes boast shoe-shining traditions running back to the time when men first began to wear boots in this part of the world.
The Tleri claim an ancestor who blacked the boots of Napoleon when he took Moscow in 1812. The Conel say it was a Conel who put the first shoe paste on the slippers Peter the Great brought back from Western Europe in 1688. Neither Tleri nor Conel ever did anything but black boots. Both tribes call bootblacking an art, and honor their profession above all others. Each tribe hates the other, and declares it better to go barefooted than wear shoes blacked by the other.

With this background of historical enmity, enhanced by the fact that the Tleri are Turkish citizens, and the Conel are Persian citizens, and accentuated by the habit they both have of wearing two-foot knives stuck in their belts, the spilling of blood was a foregone certainty when they began to quarrel over a good stand on Tverskaya street.

The stand belonged to Zuma Mihaloff, wielder of the swiftest brush in all the Conel clan. But Zuma became ill, and during his sickness, Khana Vaziroff, a Tleri warrior noted for belligerence, one short leg, and a deep knowledge of shoe cream slipped in and took Zuma's place.
Then Tleri warriors were hastening to the rendezvous when sixty Conel, backed by their wives and forty or fifty of their children, fell upon the hurrying Tleri, and proceeded to mop up the sidewalk with them. Before police reserves arrived, two stalwart Tleri bootblacks lay toes up for the undertaker and eight others shared places on the cobblestones with thirteen wounded Conel braves.

To clear up the killings, police arrested virtually the entire bootblacking fraternity of Moscow. Until the court trial, Muscovites must black their boots at home.
Russia has cold feet. A shortage of the national footgear developed just as the first cold winter weather hit the country, and today the shoe stores of Moscow are jammed with mobs demanding galoshes.
The galoshes famine has added another set to the strings of people lined up to buy in front of Moscow stores. Every government dry goods store has had its two or three hundred customers standing patiently in line each day for the last three months, and since 40 per cent vodka came back, the government liquor shops have boasted even longer lines of thirsty citizens, waiting with buckets, milk bouffes and pitchers for their quota of the potent beverage. Now the queues of galoshes seekers bid fair to stretch the others.

To combat the speculation which along with wet feet, followed in the wake of the galoshes shortage the government has issued ration cards, and no citizen may buy more than one pair. The prices of over shoes, which had jumped to 5 or 7 roubles a pair, were forced back by government decree to the normal price of 3 roubles.

SALE OF VALUABLE FARM PROPERTY.

Under and by virtue of authority conferred upon us in a deed of trust executed by Isreal E. Hardee and wife, Emma E. PREVENTING DIPHTHERIA.

Attempts to make toxin-antitoxin treatment for diphtheria compulsory among school children have encountered in some quarters the same resistance experienced when vaccination for smallpox was made mandatory for children entering the public schools. Public opposition in both cases was occasioned by fear of fatal results and ignorance of the nature and purpose of the operation.

Where objection is made today against vaccination for smallpox it is hardly without exception because of some religious belief. As a whole, the public has as great confidence in diphtheria immunization, and physicians predict a time close at hand when opposition to it will have disappeared.

The only argument of any force against immunization is that injections have been fatal in certain cases. Serum inadequately tested caused deaths in Dallas, Texas, but regulations adopted by all biologic plants now make the danger of such accidents negligible, if not impossible. Even in its incipency the immunization process was less perilous than crossing a busy street.

The diphtheria preventative has passed the stage of experiment; it is an assured fact of medicine. By the Schick test it can be determined whether or not a child is immune from the disease. If it is not, then he can be made immune by injections of toxin-antitoxin, which give lifelong protection.

Many people have developed from natural causes the antitoxin against diphtheria, but for those who have not the only way to immunity from the disease is submission to injections of antitoxin.

The man who protests against exaltation of birthdays may feel that his own are growing too numerous to be observed with elation.

The South Carolinian who has erected a statue to Eve because she was a "distant relative" may regard the apple as his family tree.

Gerald Chapman wouldn't be so much prejudiced against hanging were it done 25 years hence, but he is opposed to having it done now.

The good old days were when refreshments consist of axle grease and cabbage leaf.

ANDREWS AND KNOWLES

LORAIN OVEN HEAT REGULATOR

Unless the Regulator has a RED WHEEL it is NOT a LORAIN.

This is the famous "Elastic" Oven, an exclusive feature of the Direct Action line. This Oven can be increased in capacity fifty percent by simply raising the partition between the oven and the broiler, throwing the two compartments together.

Make Mother's Work More Like Play

An old-fashioned stove takes all the play out of meal cooking—makes housekeeping drudgery, but the Direct Action Gas Range with a Lorain Oven Heat Regulator makes home making seem like grown-up "playing house."

DIRECT ACTION Gas Ranges

No back-breaking stooping—the broiler is above the oven, near the eye-level.

No lifting of heavy, hot roasters—the lower oven rack is flush with the opened oven door, enabling you to slide the roaster out on a continuous shelf.

No waste of time waiting for the oven to get ready. The bottomless oven requires no pre-heating. Economical of fuel. No gas wasted heating a heavy oven bottom.

No lifting of heavy, hot roasters—the lower oven rack is flush with the opened oven door, enabling you to slide the roaster out on a continuous shelf.

LORAIN OVEN HEAT REGULATOR

The Lorain Self-regulating Oven of the Direct Action Gas Range accurately measures and automatically maintains any desired oven temperature for perfect baking, Lorain Oven Canning or cooking Whole Meals in the oven for hours without watching.
