Announcement of Candidacy For Solicitor

As the Judgeship of the District has now been shifted from Pitt to Craven County by reason of the resignation of Judge Albion Dunn and the appointment of Judge Romulus A. Nunn, and as I made a very creditable run for the Solicitorship in the last District Primary, being defeated by only about 400 majority out of a total of 10,000 votes, and having received flattering encouragement from all sections of the District, I hereby announce my candidacy for Solicitor of the Fifth Judicial District, subject to the approval of the voters in the Democratic Primary to be held on the 5th day of June, 1926.

Respectfully Submitted,

CABLE LETTER

London, Jan. 30.—(AP)—Would-be get-rich-quick Wallingfords among Great Britain's credulous investing public who put more than $1,250,000 into the now bankrupt enterprises of Sir Broderick Hartwell, the "rum-running baronet," still hope to recoup their losses by exchanging their worthless stock for shares in other schemes to run the American prohibition blockade.

Playing upon the willingness of inexperienced investors to send good money after bad, others anxious to take the money of the trustful have obtained Sir Broderick's "sucker lists" and many of his creditors have been roped in on new whiskey-selling schemes in which it is planned to use islands off the southern states as bases.

Many people here firmly believe that the Atlantic coast from New England to the Gulf of Mexico is lined with thirsty Americans awaiting arrival of rum ships and as the liquor traffic in Britain is not only legal but a highly respectable business, carried on by many families of social and political prominence, the little fellow with a few hundred pounds to invest sees no reason why he should not share in this bonanza.

Experts on investment are continually warning the public against indulging in the high finance of bootlegging enterprises, and so far their advice has been sound. The small investor in such schemes invariably has lost.

Complete accord on the fine points of jam making is partly responsible for the fondness of Queen Mary for Princess Asyrid, niece of the King of Sweden, who is expected to be a guest this spring at Buckingham palace, and who, in the belief of those close to court circles, may become Princess of Wales.

The queen, who was taught to cook by her mother, and the princess exchanged jam recipes during one of the latter's visits here. Mar-malade from the princess' formula was served at the palace one afternoon when the Prince of Wales dropped in for tea, and he commented upon its delicious flavor, and asked his mother where she obtained it.

Princess Astrid's (correct) specialty in cookery is jam-making. In Sweden jam is served chiefly as a dessert. And its excellence is considered a test of a good house-keeper.

Lady Astor's system of attaching labels to each guest at the reception, which are famous for the presence of leading politicians, statesmen and artists, has been adopted and improved upon by other London hostesses.

The latest is to fix a label with a colored ribbon to the lapel of a man's coat, or to the corsage of a lady's dress, with either a name printed on it or the title of a book or work of art by which the guest is best known.

The practice is made necessary by the large parties given nowadays, and the result is that anyone feels entitled to talk to any one else after scrutinizing a label.

Suzanne Lenglen, although greatly vexed by what she terms the "wild reports" published about her from time to time, especially the latest, alleging that she was suffering from nervous break-down, displays a sense of humor nearly as well developed as her proficiency with the racket.

Two days after the published report that she had been ordered two months' rest by her doctors, Suzanne, paired with Jacques Brugnon, won three matches in two days without the loss of a single set. After the close of another tournament, a few days ago, Suzanne, surrounded by sports writers, said with mock interest, "I shall never speak to newspapermen again." Then she added confidentially, "I am having handbills printed for denials and will give them to you any time a silly story is printed about me. I am getting a large stock."

"I AM NOT, in huge capitals printed in the extreme upper left corner, are the only three words in the bill. Then there is a dotted line extending to the right of the sheet to be filled by hand according to the occasion. "Engaged to be married," "suffering from nervous break-down," "contemplating becoming a mannequin," afraid to meet Miss Wills," are some of the phrases which Miss Lenglen expects she will have to fill in.

The church and state in France may be separated beyond hope of reconciliation but the church and state seem to be growing closer together. Recent works have seen in formation of two Catholic associations for the uplift of the church and important members of France's leading theatre, the Comedie Francaise, are active in each.

The first association, known as the "Brotherhood of Saint Genest" was formed to group Catholic theatre workers of all classes, and the second, the "Federation for the Artistic and Moral Defense of the French Stage," is to react against indecency on the stage.

The two associations joined in a mass celebration on the anniversary of Mollere's death and they have received a letter from Cardinal Dubois, archbishop of Paris, asking them to hold another ceremony when he can preside over it in person.

Americans, especially American women, are the subject of many more or less sarcastic comment in the French press. Here are two from daily papers of good standing, quoted merely as specimens of what is printed, without guarantee of their having any other foundation than the imagination of the writers.

"Wet America!" A fine blonde woman, wrapped in costliest furs enters a fashionable grocery store in the Etoile district and orders a well known pick-me-up of high alcoholic strength. "Yes, madame, a bottle?" "No, 25 bottles." "Ah! then it is for a bar?" "Oh! no, just for myself. I am going away for 25 days this month."

The scene of the second was a much frequented Russian cabaret in Monte Martre, one of Paris' most admired matinee idols was there with some women friends, said the newspaper, when an unknown lady with an accent that showed her trans-Atlantic origin came in and asked him to dance with her. When he refused, she took out a five-hundred franc bill and thrust it on the young actor. This annoyed the girls with him, the story goes, and it was not merely the bill that was thrown into the undiscerning American face.

Berlin, Jan. 30.—(AP)—Jascha Heifetz, whose reappearance on the Berlin concert stage has been received with enthusiastic demonstrations, has been led to lament that Berlin journalism is becoming "Americanized."

"I thought that here at least I would be safe from reporters," he complained. "But the Berlin press, which at the time of my last visit, was most discreet, has so changed that my throat is hoarse from talking to reporters and choking on flash-light fumes."

Berlin music lovers have displayed exceptional curiosity about the violinist, the general verdict being that he has fulfilled all the hopes he inspired in 1914 when as an infant prodigy the Russian boy appeared on the concert stage in knee breeches as a Buster Brown collar and curly locks.

The German patent office has prohibited the use of President von Hindenburg's name as a trademark or trade name. Officials said they do not consider it proper for liquor dealers to offer "Hindenburg whiskey," for druggists to advertise "Hindenburg pills" or for delicatessen shops to dispense "Hindenburg salad."

From time to time the patent office issues an index expurgatorius, a list of designations banned as trade names because they have become incorporated in the German language. Hindenburg is one of these names.

General Ludendorff is not in the index. The former Kaiser and Fern Andra and Emil Jannings, the movie stars, have been placed in the same class with the president.

Flu Victim

PREMIER KATO

Viscount T. Kato, the Japanese Prime Minister, is dead after a four days' illness with influenza. He was a bitter foe of America's immigration policy.

All of them are regarded as having "arrived."

A prince who worries little over parlers and legal battles over settlement of Parisian claims against the government is Prince of Sigismund, 29-year-old nephew of the former Kaiser and second son of Prince Henry of Prussia. He is one of the few members of the Prussian royal family, which totals 49, who have set out to earn their own living regardless of prospective adjustments and inheritances.

Prince Sigismund is in Guatemala, as representative of Hamburg importing and exporting firm of Schunbach, Saper and company. He hopes eventually to become a member of the concern.

Discharged from the navy with the rank of lieutenant in 1919, the prince, who was in the submarine service, married Princess Charlotte Agnes von Saxony-Altenburg and with her took up his work in Central America. They are living within the income of an ordinary business man.

WHAT PEOPLE THINK OF AVAILABLE ELEC. POWER FOR EASTERN CAROLINA

(Continued from page 1) rise to that position of leadership and importance for which, to judge from its fertile soil, Providence must have designed it.

There are a number of reasons why this will be true, the first of them being that with the comforts and conveniences which electricity provides for farm homes, the owners of farms who have moved into towns in search of these very advantages will come back to their homes in the countryside, which will mean not only a great benefit to the farms themselves, by reason of better and more intelligent farming, but also the building up of country communities into a higher and sounder type of civilization. And in this return of owners to live in their country homes, there will be found a beginning, perhaps, of the solution for a part, at least, of the tenant problem that is facing North Carolina today.

There may be a tendency created among the larger tenant farmers to own their own homes, and certainly this would affect in a beneficial manner the country life in Eastern Carolina. Another reasonable expectation is that with the advent of electricity to relieve the problem of hard and constant drudgery in the average farm homes today, there will be time and strength left for the development of those things that matter most in the lives of individuals and communities—education and worship, recreation and rest, friendliness and fellowship—and the rearing of splendid children—and nowhere may these things be so happily accomplished as in comfortable, convenient country homes. There are others in addition to land-owners now living in crowded town conditions who will be glad to enjoy the benefits of country life when country homes are provided with the lights and water and electrical conveniences that a comfortable modern existence demands.

With the League plan in operation, these townspeople, professional and business men and their families will, in many cases, move out to become helpful and desirable citizens in the communities easily accessible to the business of the heads of such families. Thus, by raising the standards and methods of farming, together with the cultivation of higher rural citizenship, will the electric power generated by the League of Towns bring agriculture into its rightful position of leadership in Eastern Carolina.

And then, with agriculture as leader, the other arts will follow, even as Mr. Washington has said. He might have gone further and have included other industries as well, for these, too, particularly in a section like the one under discussion, follow naturally in the wake of agricultural development.

With rural Eastern Carolina prospering, the towns likewise will prosper, for new industries have a way of coming into towns in the midst of well-equipped rural districts. It is the same old story of "to him that hat it shall be given." And it is the purpose of the League of Towns to see to it that Eastern Carolina shall have those things to which much that is well worth while may be added.
