

REV. ALBERT R. H. MILLER TELLS OF LONDON, ENGLAND

The following letter from Rev. Albert R. H. Miller, pastor of the Greenville Christian church, who is touring Europe, will be read with interest by his many friends here:

London, July 14, 1925. "So this is London!" London is a man's city, while Paris is a woman's city. The former is masculine and the latter feminine in nature. In London one is conscious that he is in a great business center; in Paris one lives in the atmosphere of art. Here one realizes that he is in the center of a great empire. If one has been accustomed to think of America as the only or greatest country, he is likely to be disillusioned.

However, I must admit, as I have heard other confess, that I appreciate America as never before, and I welcome the day when I shall return to the U. S. A., even though she does not have old cathedrals or tombs of kings. We have been privileged to meet and hear great people. There is a frankness here that seemed to be lacking in Paris. That may be due to the fact that we speak the same language and understand each other better. We have a common heritage.

Lady Astor met us in a social evening at Toynbee Hall. She is very gracious and clever. She would not admit to me that North Carolina is better than Virginia, but assented that we had good roads. Premier Baldwin met us at his official home at 10 Downing Street. He is a pleasant and democratic type of man. His pipe is his constant companion. Mrs. Baldwin is charming and stately in her appearance and manners, and she is also very pleasant. Mr. Baldwin was telling us about the repairs on the mansion, which is quite old, going back to Walpole's day. Gladstone and many other great Prime Ministers lived in it. He suggested that it would probably outlast his residence in it. Yesterday we were served tea on the terrace in the House of Parliament, after which Mr. Henderson, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald and other labor leaders addressed us. Last night I attended the House of Commons. They have even more freedom in parliamentary rules than in our House of Representatives. Although one may say that human nature is about the same the world over, Viscount Astor has invited us to spend a social evening at his home next week. This week-end we shall visit Oxford and Stratford-on-Avon.

No doubt you are wondering if I am going to say anything about the miners' strike. We have heard all sides of the question, and I hesitate to make a prophecy. I cannot tell you what they told us, except in an indirect way. We were given certain information with the understanding that we would not tell it just now. No newspaper reports were allowed. Some predict that the strike may last from three to six weeks longer. Although we have heard the leaders on both sides, I cannot say what they told us, but I shall give my interpretation from all the facts obtained. The strikers refuse to work for lower wages, since the present wages are a ready too low. They also object to longer hours, for that would make them work longer than either German or American miners. They will not submit to a lower standard of life. They are faced with inefficiency and overproduction. Many mines have very primitive equipment, and consequently they cannot compete with the better ones. Thus we cannot blame the employer for wanting to reduce wages, and neither can we blame the worker for not wanting to live under worse conditions than he is already tolerating. The miner may quit his job, but there is no other job open for him since there are already over a million out of employment. This makes the labor situation very complicated. England finds herself without sufficient markets. Germany and the United States are her main competitors. Either she must find new markets, or learn how to decrease her population. Col. Wiley told us that the American industry is run more efficiently than the English. The worker here is likely to kill this and thus reduce production; this in turn lowers wages. Thus they travel in a vicious circle. They have much to learn from us from the standpoint of modern and efficient methods. A worker can only receive pay relative to his output. We leave tonight for Holland, and then on to Berlin. The English have treated us royally. Lady Astor threw her doors open to us and we were charmed with her beautiful mansion and estate. She said, "Do you blame me for being a capitalist? You would blame me too, if you owned this." To Mr. Mellon, our host at Toynbee Hall, who has run several times for parliament on the labor ticket, replied, "I shall own it when we have a revolution." This reminds me of Hyde Park on-Avon. We have nothing like it in America. Anyone and everyone may get on a box and expound his peculiar beliefs. We have the gambler who tries to get people to entrust him with their money, the man who opposes the revision of the prayer book, the expounder of Roman Catholicism and of Protestantism, the Indian who berates England and wants independence, the agnostic and the Atheist, the Fascist and the Communist. They denounce the government and have the red flag floating above them and no one tears it down. All this seems to work as a safety valve to let out the excess steam. The police do not interfere unless a fight should start, and that rarely happens. The rankest meeting I attended was a large Fascist gathering held for the purpose of denouncing Russia, who they blamed for the strike. The following epithets were employed: "Hatred, vilification, perveyors of sedition, scum of our gutters, outpourings of foreign links, mercenaries of Moscow, aliens and criminals, microbes of Bolshevism." None but Fascists or sympathizers were permitted, but three or four slipped by guards. They were ready to burn and kill certain liberal leaders, and go to war with Russia. This is a small group for which England may be glad. The strength in Great Britain is largely due to the people's stolidity and compromising nature. Many nations and individuals may do well to follow his example. I must close this morning, but I am sure you would like to hear a word from your World Christian Endeavor Convention held in London. I met Dr. Ab. Cory after one of the sessions. Hon. David Lloyd George made a strong appeal for the abolition of war and putting in its place a court which will settle all disputes between nations. "It is the task of you to do this," he said, "they have the desire and the faith which the older generation does not have." I might say something about paying or canceling the war debt, but that is after all Uncle Sam's business, and he is a good business man, therefore I refrain from telling him what others advise.

May I close by saying that the English know the way to American hearts, judging by the way the Bishop of London and Lady Astor entertained us. The best meals I had in England were at Oxford. It was my privilege to occupy W. W. Astor's (the son of Lady Astor) room there. Here is hoping that your weather is as agreeable as ours. We have not suffered from heat since we have been in Europe. May I add that so far I have not acquired a coin. Will Rogers is in London to help us be true Americans. His manners are the same abroad as at home. R. H. Miller.

A WORTHY CAUSE FINDS WORTHY CHAMPIONS City aldermen have a hard time pleasing the public. Greenville commissioners are no exceptions. But they have done something now the general run of people will agree is the best thing they could have done. They have voted to continue paying over the sum of $150.00 monthly for helping support the public library. It was thought advisable some time ago to do away with this expenditure, but the public raised such a howl that members of the board decided to let the matter stand as it was. And they were right. All public officials are servants of the people. They are placed in these positions and that they may be able to give to the city the best they have in them. And we believe members of the Greenville board are trying to live up to the confidence imposed in them. It is not always easy to handle affairs to suit everybody. In fact, it is impossible to suit all the people all the time. It would be the height of folly to try. There are times when the public is not acquainted with affairs affecting financing of the city. Some times it is necessary to cut expenses. Then again, it is necessary to do something else to meet exigencies of a moment. The public is not always familiar with these things. But they have the privilege of demanding an explanation, and in most cases, it will always be given. The aldermen might have decided it wise to set aside the appropriation for the library to meet some financial exigency, we do not know. But we are glad that they reconsidered the matter, and were able to continue paying over $150 a month to the library. Greenville is intensely interested in its public library. Our people are more interested today than ever before. They realize that books provided through this source are a great help to men and women unable to purchase them. And they are right. There are men and women reading today who would not be able to read were it not for the public library. They are able to keep in touch with the most gifted writers of the age by the liberality of the city government and those who generously contribute to the library from time to time. It is to be hoped the library will be enabled to increase the scope of its usefulness as the city continues to grow. This is one of the best means of maintaining an intelligent citizenship, and broadening the minds of those desirous of keeping pace with the busy times in which they live. CHARITY ALSO BEGINS IN INDUSTRY AT HOME Charity is not the only virtue which begins at home. Industrial growth should also be placed in the same category. Every community should be able to render certain financial assistance to industries not able to stand the pressure of depression occurring from time to time. The reason large manufacturing enterprises are flourishing in the larger cities is because they are located where they are able to secure such assistance as is necessary. Chambers of commerce in a number of cities are using their influence in behalf of small industries. Whenever such a business is found to be in a weakened condition, the chamber of commerce helps it to find its way to firmer ground. In this way they are able to keep the wheels of industry turning at all times, and there is no cessation of labor. Chambers of commerce in the smaller towns should take note of the activities of the large town organizations. They are setting an example it would pay the thriving young manufacturing center to consider. To be plain, they are opening the way for greater industrial development. And greater industrial development is what America needs. Eastern North Carolina is making an effort to attract the business man and investor. They are also desirous to bring as many new industries as it is possible to bring. But the trouble with most of them is that they fail to offer required inducements. The manufacturer has faith in his product. And the community in which he intends to locate should have enough faith in its own possibilities to offer sufficient financial aid to make his proposition possible. Many manufacturers do not always have the ready cash to pay their way through. It is such moments that they are willing to accept aid such as the chambers of commerce in the larger cities are giving. Greenville chamber of commerce may not be able to render much aid in a financial way. But its members should be able to help any legitimate industry desiring to locate here through aid from other sources. They have done so in other cases, and we feel sure they would do so now when the city is building as it never builded before. Greenville is to become the greatest shopping center of Eastern Carolina, according to present plans. But the program is not complete without including plans for industrial expansion. The chamber of commerce and other organizations should get behind this, and see what can be done in the way of encouraging more manufacturing.

NEW ENGLAND IS FULL OF LORE FOR TOURISTS

Boston, Aug. 9.—(AP)—Every night of fancy of the summer tourist finds its counterpart in New England.

There are the spots which saw the making of America's history, wintry temperatures or balmy weather, ocean bathing either cold or tepid, and scenery and legends which have inspired some of America's greatest authors.

Driving northeast from Albany, Lake Champlain lies between New York and Vermont. Burlington a center for tourists, overlooks this lake, and eastward lie the Green Mountains with Mt. Mansfield towering 5,800 feet above sea level near the town of Stowe.

Beyond the Green mountains lies New Hampshire with its own range, the White Mountains, where Nathaniel Hawthorne sought his inspiration. Interspersed between the mountains are mirror-like lakes dotted with cottages which have gained the region the name of The Switzerland of America.

Winnepesaukee, the largest one, lies between the Osepece and Belknap ranges, its surface dotted with 300 islands.

The cooling breezes of Maine's rocky coast, upon which are situated many resorts, offer seasonal retreat as one turns south to enter Massachusetts. The great epic offering in this state is the Berkshire hills, through which winds the Mohawk trail.

Within twenty miles of Boston lie Lexington and Concord where the first battles of the Revolution were fought, still maintaining much of the atmosphere of that day. The person driving there from Boston follows the approximate route of Paul Revere's midnight ride.

Concord is especially famous, both for its Minutemen and its writers. Four great names: Emerson, Hawthorne, Thoreau and Alcott, belong to it, and the bodies of many of New England's great characters lie in Sleepy Hollow Cemetery.

Plymouth is a shrine for the Plymouth Rock on which the Pilgrims landed, and a hall there contains clothing, furniture and other souvenirs of those first English colonists.

FATHER JOYCE SAYS U. S. CAN SAVE CHURCH IN MEXICO

Syracuse, N. Y., Aug. 9.—INS.—The Rev. Francis P. Joyce, confessor to Pancho Villa and other famed Mexicans of the last quarter century, said today that the American intervention alone can save the Catholic church in Mexico.

"Father Joyce, all his life an army chaplain, who is now retired and living here, knows Mexico from years of intimate contact.

"Mexico can't kill the Catholic church," he said. "Withdrawal of the United States recognition of the present Mexican government would result in its fall in two months, and restoration of the church's rightful place in that country."

To Father Joyce, the religious troubles of Mexico are the result of the work of the devil. "The church is a spiritual power, and won't take up armed force to protect itself. But its spiritual life cannot be endangered by man. It is a mysterious thing how hatred follows the cross, and of course, that's the result of the devil's work," he declared.

"The Mexicans think we are afraid of them because we are not interfered when they have damaged our property and taken our life. People say what is wrong with Mexico is the Catholic church. But that isn't so. It is only the narrow minded who will believe that."

"When the government realizes Mexico must be annexed or established under a protectorate then that country will be restored to its normal condition and the church may return to its buildings."

"The church will unquestionably return to Mexico, and then the new religion, this Mexican Catholic church, composed of priests who yielded to the mandates of the government and married and formed their own denomination, can never be taken back into the church."

INDIAN LORE WOVEN INTO PORTLAND GRAND OPERA NOW

Portland, Oregon, Aug. 9.—(AP)—Noble traditions of the American Indian are to be given the public through the medium of grand opera when the new opera Wiona is produced here by the Portland American Grand Opera Company in November.

The scene is a fitting stage. It was over the Old Oregon Trail that Shoshone, the Shoshone Indian woman, led Lewis and Clark to the successful culmination of their expedition to the Pacific coast, and over which poured the interpid pioneers in their covered wagons.

E. Bruce Knowlton, president of the opera company, in announcing plans for the production, said nothing has been allowed to intrude on the realms of pure Indian legend and music.

Characters, situations and musical themes found in the archives of historical societies and principally in the government records of the Smithsonian Institute at Washington were employed in weaving the story and composing the score, said Mr. Knowlton.

A chorus of sixty or more will be employed and an orchestra of forty from the Portland Symphony Orchestra will interpret the score. Indian ballets are in preparation for the event. Alberto Bimboni, New York, is the composer, and Perry S. Williams, Minneapolis librettist.

GOLF WON OVER THE PIANO FOR WOMEN CHAMPIONS

New Orleans, Aug. 9.—(AP)—Marion Turpie, eighteen year old Southern Women's golf champion, would rather have her fingers about a masher than upon the keys of a piano.

When a wee Scotch lassie the new champion was given an opportunity to become a pianist like her mother or follow the footsteps of her father in golf.

George Turpie, now professional at the St. John's club here, had golf clubs in his daughter's hands ten years before she won the Southern women's title. Mrs. Turpie saw in her daughter a great pianist and singer and the practice in music went hand in hand with two hours practice at golf each day. But the golf game was better, for she has not won a Southern music championship, although she was the applauded pianist and singer at an Eastern Star concert the week before she won the golf title.

City which had its inception in the White House. Chairman Porter of the House Foreign Affairs Committee believes that under this policy it will not be long before a white building will be looked upon as an American building. It also will aid our tourists who upon arriving in a strange port, or foreign capital, will guess at once that the white structure is the American building, said Mr. Porter. Mr. Porter also favors making the interior of each diplomatic building an exhibit of American decorating and furnishing.
