They are adorable ways, and you'll know them in a minute. They are either very, very new, like the blouse, for instance, of else versions of former modes that have come to us in entirely different hues. The tunic, the bolero, the jabot are not like any other tunic, bolero or jabot you've seen.

The Jabot Flutters at Random

An interesting Bolero-like Jabot in a Frock of satin flutters aside and reveals a vestee of gold embroidery. Jabots have fascinating ways of coursing their way down the entire front of a Frock or naively seeming to be that which they are not -as this one does.

The Tunic-Belted Has Returned

The new version of the Tunic in crepe Elizabeth is an extremely clever one because it combines the very correct blouse and the smart front fastening. It is gathered in sections from the low waistline and flares out youthfully.

Fur, trimming the afternoon frock, is a luxurious mode which appears on the finest models. This one is trimmed in grey fox.

The Blouse Wins Its Way In

It is sucha cunning mode that one is surprised that we have waited for it so long. On this Frock of transparent velvet it is quite evident all around because the full skirt below is placed on a belt, The rather unusual sleeves are embroidered in pearls.

Tiers and Velvet-The Mode

Tiers may tier in many ways. They may follow an even course around the skirt; they may drape; or, as on this little Chanel red Frock, they may be scalloped. And note the simple cuffs dress themselves up just a bit by running a few scallops around their edges.

Velvet trimming is a delightful mode-this Fall's own. In the same shade as the dress it edges the scalloped tiers and the cuffs.
