TWO ARRESTED AS SUSPECTS IN YACHT MURDER

Finding of Object on Beach Leads to Two Arrests in Collings Mystery

Huntington, N. Y., Sept. 22.—(AP)—A new hope for solution of Benjamin Collings' murder bloomed and faded today when two suspects arrested in Wilmington, Del., were found not to answer the description of the "old man and youth" named by Mrs. Collings as her husband's assailants.

Huntington, N. Y., Sept. 22.—(AP)—District Attorney Alexander Blue announced today that two suspects in the buccaneer-like murder of Benjamin P. Collings had been placed under arrest at Wilmington, Del.

Blue refused to reveal their names or the circumstances of their arrest. He said that Mrs. Collings' description of the two Long Island sound "pirates" who boarded her husband's cabin cruiser as it lay anchored at midnight and threw him overboard was being forwarded to Wilmington via the New York City police department.

The prosecutor held several long distance phone conversations with the Wilmington authorities and indicated that the arrests might be important enough to warrant his making a trip to Wilmington.

While the prosecutor was busy forwarding the meager description of the "pirates" given him by Mrs. Collings, two of his assistants were in Stamford, Conn., preparing to question Mrs. Collings again.

Blue said that last evening a local police officer had brought in "a small object" found on the beach near where the bound and battered body of Collings was washed ashore last Wednesday.

Although Blue would not say what the object was he said that its discovery resulted in great activity among the investigators that lasted all night.

The prosecutor said that discovery of the unidentified "object" had been followed by telephone calls during the night to Providence, Boston, Stamford and other cities, but he would not reveal the purpose of the calls nor to whom they were made.

He made no reference to the long examination last night in Stamford of Mrs. Collings by his assistant, Fred J. Munder, and Felix Di Martini, special investigator engaged by him. Arrangements were made for this interview because Di Martini had not yet heard Mrs. Collings' story from her own lips.

When it was over he said that the story to him was materially the same as her previous accounts to Blue, Munder and other officials.

Mrs. Collings' story is that two men boarded the cruiser on which she and her husband and their little girl were spending the summer, threw Collings overboard to drown after beating and tying him up, abducted her and abandoned the child, who was found later by another yachtsman.

Buried Alive When Apartment House Collapsed

Philadelphia, Sept. 22.—(AP)—One man was crushed to death, another man and woman were buried alive, and several other persons injured early today when a two story building collapsed.

Six hours after the building crashed into ruins, rescuers reached the man and woman buried beneath tons of debris. Both were still alive and later reported in a critical condition at a hospital.

LEGION PASSES IN REVIEW AT DETROIT TODAY

Detroit, Sept. 22.—(AP)—Memory and martial music brought back the freshness of youth to 100,000 feet today as the American Legion passed in review for the 13th time since its members were mustered out of their country's service.

Shoulders that once ached under pack straps and since have become rounded and stooped over desk and work bench straightened again as the boys of '17 who are the men of '31 heeded the cry of "Forward march."

The line of march was fully four miles long. It started forming three miles from the reviewing stand, and the last units were instructed to report in parade order four hours later.

Led by O. L. Bodenhamer of Arkansas, past national commander of the parade moved to the music of nearly 350 bands and drum corps—organizations which came from the far corners of the nation.

There were no restrictions on devices to put color into the parade, and so it became a conglomerate mixture of militant patriotism, brilliant pageantry and allegorical floats. Some of the latter were in a serious vein—more appealed to the spectator's sense of humor.

There were uniforms of all colors and descriptions. Shiny helmets, silvery and gilded, were in the majority, but every drum major has his gorgeous shako, those be-furred pieces of masculine millinery toward which the sun is merciless. The thousands of Legion members who marched in the body of the parade swung their Legion canes while Legion caps of the overseas style left their heads and faces at the mercy of the elements.

The Legionnaires marched sixteen abreast over the long route. They shouted and waved their sticks and acted as if they were the boys they once were.

Texas, wielding a balance of power as producer of a third of the nation's cotton, turned down the cotton holiday plan and yesterday both Houses passed their compromise bill to limit acreage to thirty per cent of the cultivated area in (Continued On Page Four)

LARGE OPENING TOBACCO SALES IN MIDDLE BELT

Poorer Grades and Low Prices Predominate; Estimate Average 8 Cents

Raleigh, Sept. 22.—(AP)—Opening breaks in the middle belt tobacco markets were fairly large today, but with huge quantities of poorer grades offered the prices paid averaged low. Estimates placed the general average at around $8 per hundred.

Sales were blocked on Durham's four warehouses where around 300,000 pounds was offered. Good weed was selling well, but the poor grades brought the average down to about $8 per hundred.

Henderson's average was estimated at the same as Durham's. Domestic cigarette types were scarce in the 200,000 pounds offered there, but were bringing good prices. Most of it was first primings.

Buyers passed by numerous piles at Henderson without bidding because of poor quality. Some complaint at the low prices was voiced from the huge crowd attending the opening, but there was not much view of the prevailing prices on the bright belt market.

Offerings at Oxford were estimated at 225,000 pounds. A little better average than at Durham was expected there with the price ranging from $1.30 to $28 per hundred and the weed apparently grading a little higher.

SEE NO DANGER OCEAN FLIERS AS RESULT OF BRITISH ACTION

American Government Believes It Will Stimulate Rather Than Hurt Business

Washington, Sept. 22.—(AP)—The American government regards Great Britain's temporary suspension of the gold standard as likely to improve economic conditions in England and elsewhere in the world.

This was made clear today in highest quarters. The position was taken that the actual suspension could not be regarded as serious as had been the constant possibility of the action.

So far as the United States is concerned, it may bring a stronger competition in certain exports where American business is in competition with British products.

This amounts to about ten per cent in such countries as the Argentine, where surveys recently were made.

The British action is looked upon by this government as the adoption of a variable standard rather than the complete abandonment of the gold standard.

It was pointed out in official circles that world trade would continue to be based on the gold standard, whether embodied in the dollar, the pound, or the franc.

There is a strong possibility that the action, while lowering wages and rents in England, which will stimulate the buying of raw materials. In this case, the United States would profit by the action as most of its exports to the United Kingdom are in the form of raw materials.

It can now be said the British action has been impending for many months. There has been a gradually increasing amount of British funds being invested in the United States, the latest figures estimating it at $1,500,000,000.

Adoption of the variable standard is regarded by Washington as likely to have profound effects temporarily on exchanges and cause temporary dislocations in the international world.

The first real effect was to decrease the value in gold of the pound and a consequent rise in commodity prices in England. The British action calls for a large amount of readjustment in Great Britain, but has had no material effect on commodity prices in the United States.

There may be a decrease in imports, but the Washington government does not expect it to have any appreciable effect in the United States, as only a small amount of American goods shipped to England are out of the luxury class, except raw materials such as cotton and wheat.

The American government is convinced the movement will have no real effect in the United States and will definitely improve conditions in England.

Kane Murder Hearing Is Set For Tomorrow

Definite Evidence for and Against University Professor Will Be Offered; Wife's Family to Help In Prosecution

Hampton, Va., Sept. 22.—(AP)—The testimony to be offered for and against Professor Elisha Kent Kane was definitely indicated today as preparations were made for his preliminary hearing tomorrow on a charge of murdering his wife.

Coroner George K. Vanderslice's certified report, which was filed yesterday, gave for the first time definite information of evidence the parents of Mrs. Jenny Graham Kane offered to support the theory that the University of Tennessee professor drowned his wife after premeditation.

The writer of the mysterious letters signed "Betty" was identified yesterday by her mother, as Mrs. Elizabeth H. Dahl of New York. The coroner said the letters were an important factor in the return of a murder verdict.

Mrs. Phoebe Harris, 70, the mother, said at her home in Philadelphia that her daughter had written but that the wrong impression had been given by quotations from them.

She told of an alleged attachment between Mrs. Dahl and Prof. Kane but said it had ended. Her daughter believed in the innocence of the accused man and was prepared to stand by him in his trial although now engaged to another man, the mother said.

Conflicting with this claim of a harmless friendship and innocent correspondence were the statements of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Graham, made at the coroner's inquest.

Graham testified his daughter had told him she feared something might happen, "but I will die before this woman shall have him."

Mrs. Graham told of a marriage relationship marred by the husband's alleged attachment to a woman named "Betty" with a last name something like "Dodd," and who wrote "lots of letters that a married man should not receive."

"Many times," Mrs. Graham testified, "she wrote that she longed for him to get rid of his wife and come to her. She was a divorced (Continued on page three)

Opposing Factions in China Unite Their Forces for Use Against Japanese if Force Becomes Necessary

Washington administration views Manchurian situation as having increased in seriousness over week end but state department loath to act.

Geneva, Switzerland, Sept. 22.—(AP)—The representatives of China and Japan at the League of Nations were called upon at a special session of the league council today to withdraw the Japanese and Chinese troops now in the disputed Manchurian area.

The spokesmen for the two nations were summoned by the council committee for the purpose of finding the best measures for withdrawing their troops without compromising the security of life and property.

The council meeting broke up with the promise that it would be convened "as soon as possible" to act upon the recommendations of its committee and to hear the spokesmen of the two powers.

Tokyo, Sept. 22.—(AP)—The Japanese government today notified its ministers to China that it stood ready to approve the proposal of T. V. Soong, Chinese minister of finance, for the appointment of a joint Sino-Japanese commission to endeavor to solve the Manchurian controversy.

While this definite step was being taken toward amelioration of the difficulties between China and Japan, Rengo News Agency here received an unconfirmed report indicating the military invasion of Manchuria by Japan was spreading.

The report said Japanese military authorities at Changchun, terminus of the south Manchurian Railway, had sent troops to Harbin, inland metropolis of Manchuria, in response to urgent appeals from Japanese residents there.

MAN BEATEN TO DEATH BY TWO NEGROES

Wife Found Bound and Gagged Near Body of Slain Husband This Morning

Fairburn, Ga., Sept. 22.—(AP)—Charles M. Curran, an accountant of Jacksonville, Fla., was beaten to death on a lonely country road near here last night and his wife, Mrs. Romie Curran was found bound and gagged near his body this morning.

She told authorities two negroes killed Curran after robbing them and then tied her fast and left her in the forest.

Although exhausted from prolonged exposure, Mrs. Curran gave the sheriff a vivid account of the attack.

She said she and her husband left Atlanta late yesterday to search for her child by a former marriage who she believed was living with her former husband in the Fairburn district.

About 9 o'clock last night as they proceeded along the lonely road, she said, the negroes halted them, ordered them from their automobile and robbed them. Then they set upon Curran, beat him brutally, dragged him into a ditch nearby and seized her. She said they dragged her into the woods some distance from the automobile and then departed.

Officers throughout the Fairburn section were searching today for negroes fitting the description she gave.

Curran was 35 years old. His wife is 30.

Fox hunters attracted by her cries found Mrs. Curran about 3 o'clock this morning. She had succeeded in removing the gag from her mouth. She did not know her husband had been killed until the hunters cut her bonds and she led them to the place where the attack took place.

Later she went to the forest with the coroner and other authorities and re-enacted the attack. She said the negroes took about $200.

She told the officers her former husband is Lucius Gaddis, a resident of this community, and said he disappeared about two years ago taking their small daughter with him.

Chapter 24 FLOOD TIDE AND EBB

On the Thursday night of the first week of April the Wayne Holcombs gave a party.

It was a cold, blustery night. The calendar called for a moon and a moon there was, but it was a pale, chill moon riding high in a tumultuous sea of scurrying clouds. The wind blew fiercely across the Holcomb's deserted gardens and hurried itself upon the brightly lit windows of the house.

In the Holcomb's cleared living room there was warmth and light. The floor was crowded with dancing couples. A fire was burning brightly in the huge fireplace, and near it stood Peak Abbott.

He was engaged in the profitable pastime of observing Sam Sherrill without being observed. Sam was dancing with Tod Markham, a tall, vapid individual.

Sam's dress was blue; a vivid kind of blue. Peak could not name the shade. He only knew that his vividness enhanced rather than diminished the whiteness of her shoulders, the blackness of her hair. He realized all at once that Sam was by "united action" we will lead the world to recovery.

The President is a strong believer in the return of recovery. In fact, he has been predicting that "prosperity was just around the corner" since his elevation to the office of presidency, but the public has not yet been able to determine what corner he was talking about.

But when he begins talking about economy, he is not talking about the Legion alone. He must inevitably include every department of government, and the several hundred members of Congress who have a way of opening the nation's purse to everything that comes along. Congress should be talked to in unequivocal terms by the President, for it is here the danger of continued extravagance exists.

Let him tell Congress that the nation is hard hit by depression and then be sufficiently impressed as to cut down on appropriations and the President will have found a solution for all his problems.

Tighten the purse strings for a few years and reduce expenses like other governments have found it necessary to do, and the United States, the wealthiest nation on earth, will be able to find that "Prosperity corner," Mr. Hoover says exists, but which he has been unable to locate up to this time.

beautiful. The sudden thought shook him from his composure. If Sam was beautiful, what was she doing dancing with the oaf, Markham? The thing was preposterous. It must be stopped. Peak moved across the crowded room.

All at once she was in his arms, and was looking up at him, smiling. He tried to speak but the words tangled themselves hopelessly before they reached his lips.

Sam had not noticed his difficulties. "Let's get out of here for a minute," she said. "I want a breath of air."

He found himself being led across the polished floor, and down a long hall to the garden door. In a moment the door was closed behind them and the Wayne Holcomb's party had vanished completely in a tremendous gust of wind.

The moon had been blotted out by a heavy bank of cloud and as a result the darkness seemed more profound than that of an ordinary night.

The wind was very strong. It rushed at Peak and buffeted him. It tore at his hair and at his half closed eyelids.

Sam looked up at him, laughed, and reached out her hand. Before he was fully aware of what was happening he found himself running by her side, her hand in his, across the grass.

The spring turf was treacherous; soft and squasy under foot in places and hard as flint in others. In the end, however, the bulk of the summer house loomed darkly. With his free hand Peak wrenched at the glass door. In another instant they were across the threshold and there was peace.

Sam moved across to the black square that marked the window looking over the valley. Peak followed, and as he reached her side the clouds vanished from the face of the moon and there was light.

The abruptness of the thing made them blink. The whole of the little valley was in view, a panorama in black and white. It was an orderly, neatly trimmed, sophisticated little valley, but it was no less pleasing because of that.

"Beautiful," Sam murmured the word, watching. "It's beautiful, Peak," she repeated swiftly, "and I'm happy!"

Peak looked at her and tried to speak. He half turned away, and then, suddenly, something stronger than himself took possession. A swift, savage sweep of his arm brought Sam close to him. He was holding her tightly in a rough embrace. He was kissing her mouth.

That kiss was in no way the tentative, hesitant caress of a doubtful lover. It was fierce, possessive, compelling, elemental. It marked the breaking of a dam against which the rising waters had been beating for weeks and months.

It was only when Sam at last turned her face away that the roaring in Peak's brain gradually began to ebb.

He held her all the more tightly. "Sam!" he whispered. "Sam!" "Don't go away. Kiss me again!"

"No, no!" She managed to slip free, taking two or three quick steps backward until she was leaning against the wall, breathing hard. He followed her grimly, but she held him at arm's length.

"No! Please don't!" She was pleading. "Peak! Stop! Please be sensible."

With the sound of her voice all the hot madness slipped away, leaving him drained for the moment of all emotion. He dropped his hands and stepped back.

"I'm sorry, Sam," he said quietly. "I don't know what happened."

"It's all right. She managed an uncertain little laugh. "I don't know what happened, either."

"I kissed you." He stared at her dully. "I didn't mean to do it, but I did. You kissed me, too, do you realize that? You kissed me just as much as I kissed you."

"I know."

"I wonder why you did." For a moment a gleam of light came into his eyes. "I suppose it was the moon—or maybe it was a sense of duty."

"No," Sam was calm again. "No, it wasn't the moon, and it wasn't because I felt that I should. I wanted to kiss you, so I did. I enjoyed it."

"You wanted to? You enjoyed it?" He swallowed with difficulty. "Why?"

"I don't know. Why does anybody want to kiss anybody?" "Why?" Once more the light flamed in his eyes. This time it flamed fiercely to match the sudden flame in his brain. "There's only one answer to that question, Sam, and you know it!"

He drew a sharp little breath. "You love me, Sam."

She looked up at him, her eyes grave and troubled. "Do I?" she asked quietly. "Are you sure?"

"Yes," he replied gently. "Aren't you?"

"No." She shook her head. "I'm not sure of anything."

"Then let me help you," Peak said. "Answer a few simple questions for me. Why have you been so different for the past month or more? Why have you been so much more happy than I've ever known you to be?"

"Have I seemed so very happy?" "Of course." He made an impatient gesture. "It has been as obvious to everybody else as it has been to me. It's been weeks since I've seen you have one of those proud streaks that you used to have so often. There's only one possible answer to the change. You've been happy. Don't you know, Sam, that you've been happy?"

"Yes," she nodded. "It's true. I've been happy."

"Of course you have! And now I want you to give me the reason for it."

"Yes," she admitted. "There's a reason, of course. But I'm afraid it isn't the reason you hope. I'm afraid you'll think it is a very silly reason."

"I won't think that. Tell me." "The reason why I've been so happy lately is very simple." She said the words slowly, with an air of defiance. "It is just because of money—the money Fourth made out of his invention."

Peak stared at her in bewilderment.

"I must make you see!" Sam said desperately. "I won't have you thinking I'm superficial and selfish; that I want money for money's sake. It's just that I'm sick and tired of being a charity patient!"

Peak shook his head wearily. "I don't know what you're talking about."

"Don't you?" she asked with sudden heat. "Well, I can tell you, because I've been one all my life and I know!"

"You admit that it isn't my fault that my friends have always been people with plenty of money. I didn't choose my friends and environment. I didn't choose my poverty either. It was foisted on me along with my friends. What has the result been?"

Sam asked the question fiercely, obviously demanding an answer. (Copyright, Freeman Lincoln)

What is to be done about the cotton situation.

This is the question which millions of people of the world are asking themselves at this time.

From the man on the sidewalk to the solons in the various legislative halls of several states the question holds place and what will be the final outcome is purely problematical at this time.

Meetings dealing with the question will be held in various towns in Eastern Carolina Thursday morning at 11 o'clock. Greenville and Pitt county planters will discuss the problem here, and like the rest of the people wrestling with it, are not sure exactly what they think would be the best plan to pursue.

It is not our purpose to discuss the plans under consideration by the legislatures at this time, but we wish to remind the conferences of this part of the country that they must not forget the bearing which any action they make take will have on the tobacco situation.

Reduction of the cotton acreage would mean that many planters who never grew tobacco before would begin doing so, and the market would be flooded far more hopelessly than it is at the present time. Some provision must be made to protect this industry, already severely crippled by over-production, and it is to be hoped this fact is borne in mind before anything definite is done about cotton in this part of the country.

In trying to lift cotton from the slough of economic depression, the conferees should also attempt to protect the tobacco crop, which is preeminently the leading source of revenue of this immediate territory.

It is a tremendous task these organizers have taken upon their shoulders and it is to be hoped they will approach the subject carefully, even prayerfully, and see that the situation is not made doubly menacing by failure to protect tobacco from the effects of cotton production.

Flights across oceans adding much to the safety of flying, and this has been developing from year to year until it is nearer a stage of perfection than it ever has been before.

Examples of the development in aviation are to be found in the ability of fliers to survive attempted ocean flights after being lost in inaccessible regions, and especially on the oceans.

It used to be that when a plane dropped into the ocean, it was as good as gone, but thanks to science, they make the dangerous drop these days and are able to float for days while ships scout the seas for them. It was this development in the structure of airplanes and the knowledge of flying obtained by the fliers that enabled two teams of ocean fliers to be rescued by ships.

Nobody likes the idea of drifting helplessly in the ocean for days and days at the time, but it is one of the prices to be paid for progress of aviation and the penalty is not nearly as severe as that of past years when death always followed in the wake of a wreck of this nature.

In years to come it will be possible for much larger ships to cross the ocean in comparative safety. Tremendous casualties will occur, of course, but they will be so reduced that they will be nothing compared with what they would have been today with the same type of plane and the lack of experience in operating them.

Flying is being developed faster and with greater surety than any other science of the day, and it is a source of gratification to the American people that the United States, in taking a lead in its achievements.

President Hoover, speaking at the annual convention of the American Legion at Detroit, urged the Legionnaires to enlist in a peacetime fight for government economies and help lead the world out of the slough of depression.

The President likened the world economic situation second only to war, and expressed confidence that

BRITAIN TAKES STEPS AGAINST PROFITTEERING

Will Prohibit Unwarranted Rise in Prices As Result of Suspension Gold Standard

(By The Associated Press) Drastic regulations under an emergency powers act, such as were effected at the time of the British general strike in 1926, were being planned by the British government today to prevent profiteering in food as an unwarranted rise in general retail prices as a result of the gold standard suspension.

The treasury issued an order prohibiting until further notice the purchase of foreign exchange or transfer of funds by British subjects except for financing normal trade requirements for contracts existing before September 21. The order also exempts reasonable traveling expenses or personal purchases.

The New York Stock Exchange continued to maintain a rigid ban against speculative short selling. The pound was slightly lower in the foreign exchange market there at the opening, being quoted at $4.11, off 21 cents.

An official announcement said the pound would continue to be listed on the Paris Bourse. At the opening today it was quoted at 104 francs ($4.077) and 103 ($4.110).

The Bank of Italy passed what amounts to an order to banks and brokers to cease exchange speculation and refrain from sterling transactions and retain all the pounds they hold.

At Berlin it was announced the German stock exchanges and metal markets, which closed yesterday, would not open today or tomorrow. The Bourse at Amsterdam reopened after being closed one day because of the British situation.

An official communique announced the Netherlands Bank would take over all outstanding contingent positions. London's stock exchange will open tomorrow. There was considerable private trading today.

Washington, Sept. 22.—(AP)—A cable from W. L. Cooper, commercial attaché at London, advised the commerce department today the general situation in England was quiet.

He reported that a sharp advance had occurred in basic raw material prices but the government was promising prompt action to prevent profiteering.

"The sterling uncertainty and the continued possibility of an early tariff," the cable said, "are causing importers and agents to hesitate in making new commitments, especially manufacturers competing with British goods."

Rutherfordton, N. C.—(AP)—Johnnie Jenkins, 11, probably will be sent to reform school following his arrest on charges of manufacturing liquor.

As a result of President Hoover's address yesterday, in which he discussed the condition of the national treasury, and of speeches by other leaders, including the national commander, Raleigh T. Interest was centered more strongly today on the possibilities of the prohibition question, an issue which heretofore has been kept off the floor of Legion conventions, several states were prepared to push their resolutions to the point of carrying them to the convention if they should be shut aside by the committee.

Twelve preachers have been selected to hear the charges. The prosecution will be led by Rev. E. V. Register of Alexandria, church; and the Reverends H. H. Sherman and J. J. Rives, will be associated with the lay attorneys in the defense.

Miss Williams, who made the charges, was secretary to two pastors who preceded Dr. Shelton at the Mount Vernon Place Church.

Mrs. Graham also told of Mrs. Kane's effort to have her accompany them on the morning of the tragedy. "I did not know why she didn't want to go, but she came pleading to ask me to go with them and I didn't understand," her statement said.

The coroner's report also contains the statement of Prof. Kane, that his wife was drowned accidentally in spite of his frantic efforts to save and then to resuscitate her. It had too the testimony of his father, Dr. Evan O'Neill Kane, noted Pennsylvania surgeon, who told of treating Mrs. Kane for a heart ailment and suggested that a heart attack might have led to her death.

Tomorrow morning Prof. Kane, who now is at liberty under $15,000 bond, is to appear before a county justice. His attorneys have indicated that they will not waive the hearing but will fight through every step of the trial.

Troops to Enforce Cattle Testing Law

Tipton, Iowa, Sept. 22.—(AP)—The militia was called upon today to enforce the state's bovine compulsory tuberculin test law.

Hurriedly mobilized members of the National Guard numbering nearly 2,000 began arriving on special trains as a result of a disturbance yesterday in which 200 Cedar County farmers rebelled against 66 sheriff's deputies who accompanied two veterinarians in an attempt to enforce the law.

When the deputies arrived in automobiles at the farm of Jacob Lenker, the farmers greeted them with a barrage of mud and rocks. Several windows in the officers' automobile were broken, one of the deputies was pushed into the mud as he stepped from his car. The officers then withdrew from the scene and Sheriff Foster Maxon appealed to James E. Riden of the State Department of Investigation, asserting the situation was beyond his control.

Adjutant General W. H. Bailey said that martial law would be declared in the entire county as soon as the troops had established their headquarters.

Market Report

Cotton--Stocks--Grain

N. Y. COTTON

New York, Sept. 22.—(AP)—Cotton opened steady at an advance of 7 to 11 points on future covering and trade buying.

The steadiness of the Liverpool market and reports of a better tone in Manchester, may have been sentimental factors on the advance but some traders thought the depreciation in sterling would call for a further widening of the differences between New York and Liverpool, and offerings increased after the early buying had been supplied.

Buying here against sales in Liverpool continued and business was fairly active up to the close of the English market but tapered off somewhat later with trading quiet and prices steady around midday.

Southern selling was much less active than it was yesterday, while there was considerable trade buying and covering with December contracts after selling off to 6.37 on the early reaction, holding around 6.40 at midday.

The Texas acreage legislation came in for comment but was not generally referred to as a factor in the immediate market, which seemed to be chiefly interested in the readjustment of differences between New York and Liverpool and the further course of sterling.

Chicago, Sept. 22.—(AP)—Big deliveries of corn 2,021,000 bushels to apply on contracts maturing this month, jolted the corn market down late today to a fresh bottom price record for the season.

September corn quotations fell about two cents a bushel. Wheat sympathized with corn weakness, but gave a good account of itself notwithstanding "spread" selling here against purchases at Winnipeg and despite rains where needed over part of the United States winter crop belt.

STOCK MARKET

New York, Sept. 22.—(AP)—Wall street financial markets regained their composure today.

Stocks fluctuated uncertainly in quiet trading after a little flurry at the opening, and foreign bonds rebounded rather briskly, although domestics encountered some further liquidation. More foreign currencies were quoted by foreign exchange dealers, although business remained highly restricted.

Share prices fell back 1 to 3 points for many prominent issues at the start, recovered during the late morning, and recorded numerous gains of like extent. By early afternoon, however, most of this advance had been lost, and declines appeared here and there. Issues of a point or two included U. S. Steel, Allied Chemical, Anaconda, Stone & Webster, Southern Pacific, Eastman and Union Pacific.

The improvement in the Paris Bourse, and restricted resumption of trading at Amsterdam and Brussels, were encouraging, together with announcement that the London market would reopen tomorrow. Much of yesterday's nervousness was due to the fact that all foreign markets were closed with the exception of Paris. It was feared that a world-wide rush to liquidate might converge upon New York. On the contrary, however, international bankers state that there is some buying of American securities in progress for foreign account.

Several Wall street bankers look for constructive developments as result of the British crisis, believing that it will expedite settlement of Franco-German differences, and lead the way to a revision of inter-governmental debts.

URGENT ENFORCEMENT 1932 COTTON HOLIDAY (Continued from page one) 1932 and 1933. Despite this action, Governor Long, Congressman John N. Sandlin, Col. M. L. Mott of Oklahoma and O. K. Allen, chairman of the state highway commission spoke at a mass meeting at Monroe, La., yesterday and the group, estimated by leaders at 5,000, adopted a resolution to carry on the fight for cotton prohibition in 1932.

A campaign of "pitiless publicity" was urged to induce Texas to rescind its acreage curtailment plan for the cotton holiday. The resolution suggested Louisiana foster the cotton prohibition campaign and raise funds for it through legislative appropriation. The fight, under the plan urged, would be carried to every cotton growing state with an effort to force Texas to assent by pressure of public sentiment. In Arkansas, Governor Harvey Farnell called for expression by farmers of their opinion as to whether that state should call a session of legislature to follow the acreage curtailment action of Texas. Governor O. Max Gardner of North Carolina, who recently proposed a conference of southern governors on the cotton situation, yesterday said "there must be some sign of cooperative effort not now prevailing before a conference would amount to anything except a debate over policy and procedure."

Clark Howell, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, had wired the governor a suggestion he continue to seek to hold the conference and call it for Atlanta.

... no bamboozlin' about that!"

SURE! When a word fits, you know it! "Satisfy" just fits CHESTERFIELD. A smoker picks up a package, and he likes its neat appearance—no heavy inks or odors from ink. That satisfies him.

Then he examines a Chesterfield. It is well-filled; it is neat in appearance; the paper is pure white. And that satisfies him.

He lights up. At the very first puff he likes the flavor and the rich aroma. He decides that it tastes better—neither raw nor over-sweet; just pleasing and satisfying.

Then he learns it is milder. That's another way of saying that there is nothing irritating about it. And again he's satisfied!

Satisfy—they've got to satisfy! The right tobaccos, the CHESTERFIELD kind, cured and aged, blended and cross-blended, to a taste that's right. Everything that goes into CHESTERFIELD is the best that money can buy and that science knows about. CHESTERFIELDS do a complete job of it. They Satisfy!
