ROOSEVELT TO SPEAK TONIGHT

Candidate or Presidency to Address Democrats at St. Paul, Mo.

St. Paul, April 18.—(AP)—The agricultural northwest took a close look today at Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt of New York and wondered whether it would hear an echo of his recent radio speech and the apparent exception taken to it by former Gov. Alfred E. Smith.

For tonight Gov. Roosevelt, giving one of the rare public addresses of his presidential campaign and the first since Smith denounced him inferentially for a "damnable attitude," will deliver a speech he traveled nearly 2,500 miles to make. He arrived here this morning.

There was no word from him about his topic, out as he stopped in Chicago yesterday en route here, it was apparent to interviewers he attached as much importance to the local address as did political observers.

The remarks Smith apparently aimed at Gov. Roosevelt were occasioned by a radio address the New York Chief Executive made about ten days ago. Subsequently, Gov. Roosevelt promised to give a detailed explanation of some of the points he had raised: Resignation of the farmer's buying power, relief to small banks and home owners, and a revised tariff policy.

The docket contains approximately 145 cases and for the first time in years no murder charges are involved. The majority of cases consist mainly of violation of traffic and prohibition laws, larceny and robbery.

ABOUT TOWN

The public should respond liberally to the fund now being raised with which to purchase uniforms for the high school baseball team. In spite of lack of clothing and equipment, the lads have forged into lead of the Northeastern Athletic conference and promise to win the championship if properly supported.

The organization has been hard hit for lack of funds the last several years but the condition is more severe this season than ever by reason of the unprecedented economic condition affecting the district and the world generally.

The number of fires is on an increase in Greenville at this time and the fire department is being kept busy combatting flames both night and day, but mostly at night. Unless the people begin taking more precautions it is impossible to say to what extent the loss will go during the year.

The fire department, co-operating with the State department, is doing everything in its power to reduce hazards in homes and public buildings, and if advice along this line is followed the situation should undergo a pronounced improvement in the near future.

The list of candidates for both county and state offices continue to grow and by the latter part of this month it is expected it will be swelled considerably more.

The race in Pitt county picked up sharply in Pitt county the past week with announcement of candidates for the legislature and other county offices.

The fitness of each candidate should be carefully weighed this time, probably more so than ever by reason of the critical economic situation facing the nation.

In a national way the Democrats seem to be gaining considerable support because of failure of the Republican administration to improve conditions, and it would not be surprising to see Mr. Hoover ride out of office as fast as he went in on that landslide several years ago.

Gossip is not only despicable but it is dangerous, as was proven by the death of a man in the western part of the state last week.

A community gossipier told somebody that another man had been drunk, a fight ensued, one being killed and another wounded.

People should be careful how they spread reports derogatory to somebody's character. It is not only provoking and humiliating but oftentimes causes anger resulting in physical injury as the case in the upper part of the state.

The courts protect the public from slander, but there are lots of cases of this kind that never reach the courts. In the majority of instances they produce a spirit of malice on the part of the one assailed, and instead of carrying his case to the courts, he takes some retaliatory measure greatly complicating the situation and resulting in bodily harm.

If you know something against somebody, the best plan is to keep

Chapter I A LOST ICICLE

Jenny Revell looked down from her high window-sill, that was still warm from the summer sun, and watched the daylight creep step by step away from the corner of Eyle Street. Soon it would become dark. She had never, in all her twenty-four years, grown quite indifferent to the coming of dusk; it called all manner of little magics, little flickering fantasies into her mind. In the country, she thought, drowsily, evening comes like a bat, everything darkens under its wings, but in the city its drops like a dragon-fly gleam with light and swirl with enchantment.

"Jen-nee!" She sighed a little and turned away from the window, rubbing her eyes with her hands like an awakening child. Midway between the window and the voice that was still gaily calling, stood a tall mirror ailt on its stand. She hovered before it, desparingly conscious that she seemed barely twenty, when she was actually 24 today, and far more competent than anyone believed.

"Jen-nee? Getting ready?" The shadows she loved were crowding into the room but still she dawdled at the graying mirror. She saw a tumble of pale-gold hair, so silvery blond and fine that it lay gossamer about her face. Her dark brows and her dark long lashes painted little shadows on the faint flush of her skin; they gave mystery to her eyes. Very wondering eyes, wide-set and of that pansy-black that has purple in it, under the sun.

But here came George from her bath; fresh, glowing, scented. "Jenny! We shall have to pretend we thought they said supper instead of dinner—oh, you've left the blinds up!"

Jenny blinked. The light by the mirror, the light by the dressing-table, the two lights over the bed—with a clicking rush George had turned them all on. The room that had been full of velvet twilight was now a stream of color. Color was everywhere; and most glowingly of all, in George. George was color.

George, thought Jenny, looked most wonderfully aglow tonight. The thick creaminess of her skin seemed to have a golden tone under it. Her eyes had the amber gleams in them that Jenny loved; even in the shadow of their brown was not dull or slow. She picked up the bright enamel brushes and her splendid arms moved up and down like falls. George's red-brown hair was short and she meant to keep it so.

"Which shall I wear, George, the blue or the biscuit-colored lace?" "The lace? My dearest kiddie, are you mazed? That dejected rag at Milli's?"

"But the blue is really a dance-dress." "I know, love. But strange to say people do dance quite often, of an evening in this naughty little old hamlet. Especially at Milli's..."

What an amazing infant you are! Jenny chuckled. It was a sweet, deep, sudden sound, more appropriate, some how, to George's throat than to Jenny's. "You call me a scatter-brain but do you know what you've forgotten?"

George, half-way into her frock, was struck rigid in the midst of fold upon fold of apricot velvet. "Jenny! Oh, Jenny, whatever possessed me to forget!" She flashed into the frock and threw her arms round the younger girl. "Many many happy returns, Jenny-sweet! Jen, I didn't forget altogether! Wait—look!"

A little breathless, Jenny waited. George was rooting energetically on the floor of the wardrobe and presently she swung out a flat, jade-stained box, stamped superbly—"Parfaite." "Oh, but you shouldn't have!" stammered Jenny. "Parfaite is most terribly expensive."

"Open it, pet, and put it on. Ryder Vale is always worth looking nice for. Besides, there's that unknown stalwart he's bringing with him. It fits you quite wonderfully. And here are the shoes to go with it. They fit, too."

Jenny, blinking again, gazed at herself in the long glass. It was a silver dress—silver touched with a faint, cold green and, where it fit to yourself and let the other fellow do the talking.

Activity for resubmission of the Eighteenth Amendment continues throughout the country at this time, and leaders are predicting that promoters are going to win.

It is difficult to forecast the outcome of another vote on the question, but it is a well known fact that thousands of people who formerly voted for it would vote against it now.

However, there is another faction that would fight until the end to prevent prohibition from going down in defeat and the battle would be one of the most spectacular this country has witnessed in many a day, in fact, since the day the saloon went out of business.

While members of both parties are watching the struggle with interest, certain factions are attempting prevent injection of the question into the campaign fearing it will either injure or benefit their cause but unable to say definitely which side the preponderance of opinion would be on.

dropped to the silver shoes, with an even colder, steely blue. "Come here and let me see to your hands," George told her cousin. "I believe you've been putting them into greasy water again. Didn't Mrs. What's-her-name come?"

"Oh, yes. But there's a lot of work and I like helping her. I feel so useless, doing nothing here in the apartment and with no job. I ought to earn my keep either here or somewhere else."

"Don't bother your head about it. You're happy here. You can't want to go governessing again?" Jenny was silent. George wielded file and buffer confidently. "I'll see about some little half-time job at Milli's," George said. "There may be something you can do on the clerical staff under Mr. Croze. I'll ask him."

"Oh, George, there's no one in the world so kind as you! If only I can pay you back some day!" George's fingers snapped derisively. "Get your cloak—no, wear my jade shawl, there's a touch of silver on it."

"Let the fringe hang, child, it gives you height." She added, almost casually, "Do you know you're going to be a very lovely woman?" "I'm a woman already," said Jenny sharply. "I'm 24. I wish you'd grasp it."

The next second her hand had flown to her mouth. What in the world could have possessed her? To be rude to George, when the very clothes on her back were George's gift?

It was a tremendous relief to hear George's easy laugh. "Twenty-four! Heavens, you chicken, wait till you're my age." "You're only 28."

"Nearly 30." On George's lips it sounded a gay, reckless achievement—being nearly 30. "A jolly good age, too. You don't get naughted or patronized and you can spend your money as you like. I should be a fool to marry yet, Jen."

"Shall you tell Eddie that you won't marry him for ages yet?" George's big, creamy shoulders shrugged. "Oh, my dear infant—" She began to redden her mouth lavishly but with competence. "Yes I suppose I shall tell him," she agreed presently. "Seems a shame in a way, when he's so proud-making. He is proud-making, isn't he, Jen?"

"He's nice," Jenny said softly. "And good natured and fire-sided; and he adores you. And he's famous in his way. There was a lot in the Record this morning about his last flight. When is he coming in to town again?"

"Not this evening, I hope," George said, grimacing. "I'd so dread arguing with him. 'Frail I'll give way, I suppose, and find myself in a semi-detached house, with a daily maid.'"

"And yet you want to marry Eddie," Jenny said. "I do wish that you didn't have to leave Mr. Matching if you marry. Is it absolutely out of the question that he would make an exception in your case? Couldn't you possibly persuade him to let you stay on?"

"No, no, no!" George slithered into the chair and hid the way partly by the stars. "All his money and he has this one of his friends—a woman in his employ—she must go."

Jenny followed the splendid occasion into the waiting car. Was there another word that so well described George's wretched Jenny?

"By the way, Jen, when we get to Milli's, go straight into the lobby while I tip the chauffeur. Ryder phoned that he might be late but the man he's bringing is to wait just under the light."

Milli's...

Jenny gathered her frosty skirts together and got obediently out. The man under the light—she sighed a little—looked very much like all the rest of Ryder Vale's friends; polite, over-groomed, and slightly ill-at-ease.

Then the man under the light was suddenly whisked away by a big woman in petunia chiffon. Jenny, at a loss, adrift like a little

Kitty Frew

By Jane Abbott

SYNOPSIS: Kitty Frew opens a shop with her sister in law, Carol, to help forget the sudden death of her husband, Gar. She has taken for granted the friendship of Gar's half-brother, David, though she has known he loves her. Now he is a successful writer and she misses his companionship.

Chapter 41 ON THE HILLTOP

From outside of the office came the sound of Josie's high brisk voice talking to a customer, from a back room the hum of a sewing machine where alterations were being made.

Kitty wrote letters. She visited the fitting room. She met some customers who called for her. One was Diana Close. Diana did not buy anything. "I had a letter from Marge yesterday. She's coming home before Christmas."

"That's nice." Kitty could say it quite calmly, because she felt no smallest interest in Marge's coming or staying away. "Mrs. Frew! Some one to see you." It was Josie again, in the office door.

"Oh, I wanted you to come today." "Did you think I'd forget what day it is?" "But you're so busy—" "Not too busy for that. What say to celebrating?"

"But I can't—" "Of course you can, Mrs. Frew," put in Josie from the office door. "Mrs. Somerset will be down after lunch and if we get in a jam, Miss Foster can come out."

"Of course you can," echoed David, laughing. "We'll drive out to the little house if you'll use your car." "Oh, David, I'd love that!" "I've telephoned Mrs. Dundy to have some lunch ready for us. Put on your bonnet quick."

"But how did you know I'd go?" "I intended to kidnap you if you balked at all. This is my day—as much as yours." The new David, assertive, charming, spirited. He wore a new suit, a new hat.

"It seems to be you are looking particularly well, today Mr. Frew!" They drove swiftly out of the city into a russet-brown and gold country. The wind in her face brought the old high color to Kitty's cheeks; her eyes had darkened in the old way of delight.

"It's been five weeks since I've seen you!" "Don't I know that?" He told her of changes he'd been making in the new book, of the people he'd met. David, going ahead, she thought. Well, she was, too. And she told him of the precious balance that marked the success of the hop.

"Of course, I knew it would be!" "I'm most pleased on account of Carol. Sometimes I can't believe she's the same girl. And Pat's getting well. He's nice, David. I like him now."

She told the latest of Dorcas, laughing. Dorcas had gone to live with her Aunt Lydia. Aunt Lydia had had a slight stroke which made an invalid of her. And she needed Dorcas. But Dorcas had simply transplanted her flag of independence. She'd taken Old Timer with her and Emil and Max and Mark and the others ran in and out of Aunt Lydia's house, as much at home there as they'd felt on Ketchum street. Mrs. Gentle was running a boarding house at 92.

They found the little house almost buried in gold and red-yellow leaves. Chrysanthemums were blooming in the garden some late roses and gladioli and dahlias lingering portulac bright along the borders. A few grapes still hung on lost icicle upon an acreage of red carpet, turned to wait for George.

She turned sharply—and a man, not in the least like the one who had been whisked away, looked down into her eyes and asked—"Miss Revell?" "Yes, No. Not the Miss Revell." In vain Jenny tried to be coherent about it.

The man continued to look down at her. She had never seen such intent eyes. They were laughing at her, those eyes—or weren't they? Copyright, Julia Cleft-Addams.

Who is this man? Jenny had him interesting tomorrow, but he asks her an embarrassing question.

the vines, deeply purple against the yellow leaves. "Oh, it's lovely," cried Kitty, drawing in a long breath. "It's like—coming home!" And then she added, hastily: "That's what your father said, David, once. I don't think he'd felt that way for a long time. You made it like that for him."

"Well, I'm glad." Mrs. Dundy built a lunch for them. David built a fire on the hearth and they sat before it. David told her amusing experiences he had had in New York, of plays he had seen. Kitty told him of some of their customers.

But while they talked Kitty had the feeling of distance between them—they'd both changed, she said to herself. Jan, at David's heels, was coaxing for a walk. When they had finished their luncheon they climbed the hill. And reaching its top, they sat down under the old trees.

"I used to sneak away from the others and come here every day. I called it my own. Wasn't that presumptuous in me, when it's really yours?" "It's a big hilltop," David answered easily. David had no need now, for its seclusion, Kitty thought.

"Do you remember that first day we came here, David? How long ago it seems now. That girl that I was then is—almost—a stranger to me now."

She looked soberly out across the valley, not seeing it but seeing that Kitty Frew of those days when she had had to lean on David. What a foolish, bewildered, uncertain, blind girl she had been! But, even thinking that she felt a wistful tugging at her heart; there was something homesome in going ahead—without David!

"You're happy, now?" David asked abruptly. "Yes, I guess I am." Then she straightened, laughed. "How absurd to put it so doubtfully! Of course I am! Ought I not to be with the Treasure Island Shop to safely established? I like the work. I like seeing Carol so sure of herself. I like the way your father depends on me. I like Pound. You can't know how nice it is to have Pound waiting for me when I go home, to have him fuss over me. And David, he's so proud of you, as proud as your own father. He asked me if he might take Lily Lady to his room. I gave him my autographed copy to keep. David, can you know how proud we all are of you?"

He sat clasping his knees, his chin bent to his hands. "I mean—" his tone was gruff, "are you contented to go on like this—the rest of your life? Is it going to give you—everything you want?"

She answered quickly. "Oh, yes, of course." And then as though another voice had asked the question, she repeated: "Of course I am!" She could not see his face. It was turned from her. But she saw him give a little expressive lift of his shoulders.

"I had to know that. I'm going away, Kitty, abroad. Norwood wants me to write a biography. It will necessitate digging up some gay old scandals from their respectable graves. Norwood says I have the touch he wants. I can't tell you much more about it now."

"How perfectly wonderful! David Frew, with such an assignment! Do you remember when Dorcas used to send you home like a bad boy who had not done his lessons?" But there was a sharp pain under the lightness of her voice. "David, when are you going?" "He turned to her. He did not touch her but his eyes betrayed his longing. "Oh, right away, I guess. I told Norwood that I could go now, unless—Kitty, I came back hoping that you'd tell me that you needed me. But you don't need me now. You're walking very well on your own two feet. I see, I ought to be glad. But you're so young—if you were thirty or more I could reconcile myself to seeing you contented with business. But you—"

"I'm not!" she cried it involuntarily and the words released all the longing in her heart. "It isn't all I want! But, David, what else can there be for me?" She said it in the old troubled way of appeal to him. With the old gesture she put her hand on his arm.

He bent swiftly and kissed her hand. "I love you, Kitty." She drew her hand away, trembling. She put it to her face. "I'm afraid, David." Her voice faltered. He saw a deep flush spread from her cheek to her throat. He waited, patiently, his eyes caressing her.

"I've missed you awfully—this year. It—you not being here—made a—difference with everything. I guess—I do—need you."

HIGH WINS MUSIC MEET (Continued from Page One) After they had played this year, the judge could not make a decision and asked that the two contestants play again. This was done and the judge finally awarded the decision to the Kinston contestant. The Farmville contestant was somewhat handicapped by virtue of the fact that her teacher, Mrs. Smith could not be present at the contest because of the accident and death of her son the night before. The performance of both of these young ladies in this contest was such as to reflect credit upon this part of the state and particularly upon their schools and teachers. The contest began at 9:30 a. m. and was not completed until 4:30 p. m. There were an unusually large number of entries this year and this, coupled with the fact that there had to be a repeat of certain numbers, caused the contest to lengthen out more than it ever has before.

Supt. H. B. Smith of New Bern, addressed the audience and called attention to the fact that most of the music work done this year is being done by teachers who are doing their music work because of their love of children and love of music. The thanks of the patrons of the schools are due these teachers for the work they have done.

The judges of the contest were Mr. Frank Hufty of Wilson, and Miss Eugenia Thomas of East Carolina Teachers College. Mr. Julius H. Rouse, chairman of this district, presided over the contest. There were approximately 600 pupils present from the various schools for the contest.

The winning groups in the Greenville High school are now making plans to attend the state contest in Greensboro, April 28-29. Last year the local school was successful in winning second place in the state contest with a total of fifty-seven points. This year they are very anxious to better that record.

David! I guess I've always needed you. What you gave me—" He drew her gently to him until her shoulder rested in the hollow of his arm. He said no word, content to feel her relax against him, content to see the happiness slowly suffusing her face. She broke the silence first. "But, David, you ought to go to write that—" "I'll wire Norwood tonight—that I'm staying. I'd rather work here, Kitty—with you."

PITCHERS ARE GOIN GOOD FOR MAJORS

By HERBERT W. BARKET (Associated Press Sports Writer) Not since the days before the lively ball have major league pitchers demonstrated such striking early season mastery.

The season is barely a week old yet they have written into the records 13 games in which the opposition made not more than five hits.

Dazy Vance of Brooklyn and Hal Schumacher of the Giants have contributed two-hit masterpieces. Vic Sorrell and Earl Whitehill of Detroit and St. Johnson of Cincinnati have pitched three-hit games.

Monte Weaver of Washington and Whitlow Wyatt of Detroit have four-hit contests to their credit. The five-hit hurlers include Pat Caraway of the Chicago White Sox, and Dick Coffman and Sammy Gray of the St. Louis Browns; Ed Brandt of the Boston Braves, Ed Holley of the Phillies, and Guy Bush of the Chicago Cubs.

Schumacher, young St. Lawrence University graduate, pulled the Giants out of a slump with his excellent effort yesterday and enabled them to beat the Braves 6-0.

Johnny Vergez's home run with the bases filled was the big blow in the Giant attack. Urbanski got both of the hits Schumacher allowed.

Holley's five-hit game gave the Phillies a 2-0 triumph over Brooklyn in 11 innings. A single by Chuck Klein, double by Don Hurst and a triple by Hal Lee decided the duel.

Bush stopped the world champion St. Louis Cardinals cold and the Cubs won 4-1 with Riggs Stephenson driving in three runs. Pittsburgh scored three runs in the ninth to beat Cincinnati 4-3, in the other National League game.

In the American League, St. Louis tried out the Detroit Tigers, 1-0, although Vic Sorrell allowed only three hits. A pass to Goslin, followed by a sacrifice and Kress' single produced the winning run in the eighth. Coffman gave the Tigers five scattered singles.

George Earnshaw fanned 12 men as the Philadelphia Athletics battered Washington 11 to 3. The A's drove Fred Marberry out of the box in the fourth inning and battered three other Senator hurlers over the rest of the route. Jimmy Fox hit his third homer.

Cleveland stopped the Chicago White Sox 6-1 on a six-hit pitching performance by old George Cennally, a White Sox castoff. Willie Kamm, another former White Sox star, collected three hits, was walked twice, drove in four runs and scored another.

Cold weather forced postponement of the New York Yankees-Boston Red Sox game at Boston. Ruth came down with grippe. The Babe did not expect to travel with the team for an exhibition game at Springfield today but probably will start in the double header on Tuesday.

Louisburg Grabs 1 to 0 Game From Collegians

Ralph Deal's Teachers won glory aplenty Saturday when they held the slugging Louisburg team to a lone run and four hits. The lone error charged to the Teachers accounted for the lone run.

Louisburg has been piling up for herself a hitting and scoring record, having averaged, in all games played until Saturday, 15 hits per game. The fewest hits in any one game was ten, and the greatest 19.

To cut this record to the tune of three hits and one run took a man's size ball game. And that's what the Teachers had.

Tucker pitched what was, perhaps, the most masterful game of his career. The very few times he was in trouble, he either extricated himself by good judgment and fine pitching, or was taken out of the hole by the spectacular playing of his teammates, who every minute of the game played airtight ball.

The Teachers' outfield had a perfect day, accepting all chances, with Forbes and King taking a couple that brought the crowd to its feet. With the exception of one error and that debatable, the infield fielded a thousand, and they had to play ball to do it.

The Teachers batted the opposing pitcher for six hits while Tucker was allowing four. Brown led the batting with three hits. Rumley, Thomas and Hodges got one each.

It was one of the fastest and most spectacular games ever seen in this section. Playing time: 80 minutes.

MAN HAS TWO LIVING WIVES

George Presnell, Freed of Murder Charge, Now Must Decide on Wife Issue

Bakersville, April 18.—(AP)—His flight from the North Carolina mountains in 1902 after slaying a neighbor left George Presnell, 60, was in trouble, he either extricated himself by good judgment and fine pitching, or was taken out of the hole by the spectacular playing of his teammates, who every minute of the game played airtight ball.

While the mountain girl he married in the hey-day of his youth, now a gray-haired woman, sat beside him, Presnell was acquitted in Superior court here Saturday of a charge of murder for killing Lewis Buchanan, his next door neighbor, in 1902.

He pleaded self-defense and said he stabbed Buchanan in a quarrel which followed improper advances Buchanan made to Mrs. Presnell. Waiting the verdict in the mid-west was a second wife who mortgaged her property to furnish funds for his defense. Freed of the murder charge, he still faced the perplexing problem of which wife shall claim the remaining years of his life.

"I just don't know what I'm going to do," he said. "Both the women I married are fine women. But I don't know how I'm going to straighten this thing out. I've got to do something, but I won't decide exactly what for several weeks."

He added that he first went to Erwin, Tenn., for a visit with relatives to "think things over." Presnell brought about his dilemma unwittingly and Solicitor John R. Jones said no bigamy charge could be lodged against him since he had not lived with two wives in this state.

It came about in this manner: After the killing Presnell fled to the mid-west and took the name George Miller. He wrote his father, but the latter, fearing the letters would be traced, advised his son not to write again and told him Susie Beddix, the girl he had married two years before the killing, was dead.

Time passed and Presnell then living in Geneva, Ill., met and married Clara Ekin. He became a substantial citizen, was elected to the school board, to the road commission, and was named a justice of the peace.

Having no children, he adopted a girl and boy. The girl is now married and the boy recently completed his college education.

Later Presnell moved to Columbia Mo., and leased and operated a coal mine. A sister came from North Carolina to Columbia and he sought to aid her two children, but one, a boy, refused to go to school. Presnell turned him over to the tract officer. Incensed, his sister informed officers her brother was wanted in North Carolina for murder.

AUTOS SHOW DROP IN PITT

Both Trucks and Automobiles Show Decline Compared With Past Year

Raleigh, April 18.—Pitt county citizens owned 4085 automobiles and 650 trucks on April 1st, as compared with 4750 automobiles and 700 trucks on April 1st, 1931, it is shown by a compilation made in the office of L. S. Harris, director of the motor vehicle bureau. The average for each of the 100 counties April 1st of this year was 2,579 automobiles and 484 trucks, as compared with 2,986 automobiles and 423 trucks on April 1st, 1931.

North Carolinians had a total of 306,339 motor vehicles at the beginning of this month, including 257,898 automobiles and 48,441 trucks. The total number of about 34,000 less than the 349,838 motor vehicles licensed in the state a year ago. While the number of automobiles dropped from 298,623 a year ago to 257,898 at the beginning of this month, the number of trucks showed a decrease, from 42,215 a year ago to 48,441 at the beginning of this month.

The report shows that 1,650 of the automobiles and 770 of the trucks licensed in the state are owned by non-residents, while 636 motorcycles are in operation.

Guilford leads in automobiles with 18,660, which is a drop from 22,250 a year ago; Mecklenburg has 16,385, as compared with 19,975 a year ago; Forsyth has 13,535 now as compared with 15,775 a year ago; Wake has 11,400 and had 12,135 a year ago; Buncombe's automobiles dropped from 11,475 a year ago to 9,945 now; Graham county has only 30 automobiles and Clay only 32.

Mecklenburg leads in trucks with 2,860, increased from 2,600 a year ago; Guilford is second with 2,860, and had 2,200 a year ago; Forsyth has 2,350 and had 2,010 a year ago; Wake has 1,825 and had 1,800 a year ago; Buncombe has 1,800 now and had 1,675 a year ago, while Durham has 1,265, as compared with 1,000 a year ago.

The count is made, Mr. Harris points out, by counting and measuring a stack of the cards on file in his office and then measuring the cards, each representing a licensed vehicle, for each county, making the count accurate to a dozen or two in each county.

Three Jailed in Bribery Case

Richmond, April 18.—(AP)—Doomed bail, at the direction of Commonwealth's Attorney Dave E. Satterfield, three men charged with an attempt to bribe a Burns detective investigating the theft of $20,000 in Federal Reserve notes from a Philadelphia bank, were in jail today awaiting a hearing.

One of the trio, David N. Chadwick, of Wilmington, N. C., is charged with the theft of the $20,000 notes and will be tried in Tusculum court on April 25.

He was arrested in company with Jack Seaman and Charles Green, both of New York, in Green's hotel room after Green allegedly had attempted to bribe J. Ward Erb, local manager of the Burns Detective Agency, in an attempt to halt the investigation. Erb is employed by the Philadelphia bank from which the notes were stolen.

Commonwealth's Attorney Satterfield said that Erb accepted $200 of $2,000 which was offered him by Green in the latter's hotel room, and then immediately reported the incident.

N. Y. COTTON

New York, April 18.—(AP)—Cotton opened steady today at a decline of 3 to 5 points on southern selling. May sold at 6.08.

Trade interests were buyers of May against sales of later deliveries but selling was stimulated somewhat by the rather easy opening of the stock market and prices worked off another point or two during the early trading with May declining to 6.05 and October to 6.47, or about 6 to 8 points net lower. There was some trade buying and covering on the decline and prices held fairly steady at the end of the first half hour although prices were within a point or two of the lowest. Liverpool cables reported local and Bombay liquidation in that market on the weakness in Alexandria. Egyptian futures in the Alexandria market were 19 to 31 points lower.

apparent, the week-end business and trade reports failed to provide enough encouragement to banish the cautious attitude toward stocks and trading was sluggish. Even the bond market, after the sweeping gains of last week, was given a breathing spell.

After a morning sag which carried some stocks to new lows, the list was bolstered for a time by a ripple of buying in the rails. The market turned heavy again by early afternoon, however.

American Telephone was sold in some volume, sagging 2 points to a new low since 1921. It then recovered partially, but met fresh selling on the upturn. U. S. Steel sagged a point to 32 3/4, the bear market low, before meeting support. Eastman dropped 3 points and Coca Cola 2. In the rails, several issues sold up a point or so including Chesapeake & Ohio, New York Central, Union Pacific and Santa Fe, but in the main these advances were short lived.

The rails received some stimulation from early reports of March earnings. Chesapeake & Ohio made a particularly favorable showing, with net operating income of $2,866,022, a gain of about $500,000 over a year previously.

FROM Xanthi and Cavalla... Smyrna and Samsoun... the finest Turkish tobaccos travel 4,000 miles to add flavor and fragrance to CHESTERFIELD.

for better taste

CIGARETTE smokers owe a lot to Turkish tobacco, for it was cigarettes made out of Turkish tobacco that first became the vogue in this country.

Then it was found that a blend of Turkish and Domestic tobaccos was better than either kind of tobacco straight. It takes just the right amount of the right kind of Turkish tobacco to give a cigarette better taste. For Turkish tobacco is to cigarettes what seasoning is to food—the spice—the sauce. You want enough but not too much.

There is just enough Turkish in CHESTERFIELDS to give them a better flavor, a more pleasing aroma; to make them taste better.

Turkish tobacco must pay an import duty of 35c a pound; but cost doesn't count when it comes to making CHESTERFIELD the best cigarette that science and money can produce.

TURKISH tobacco is strung leaf-by-leaf and hung in long strands to dry and cure in the sun. In every important tobacco-growing center of Turkey, CHESTERFIELD has its own tobacco buyers.
