DEMOCRATS WIN SWEEPING VICTORY IN ELECTION

North Carolina Puts Stamp Of Approval On New Deal

DEMOCRATS CHALK UP A CLEAN SWEEP

Returns From About A Third of State 1,832 Precincts Give the Democratic State Candidates Vote of 117,000 and Republicans 40,000; Balloting Reported Light Throughout the State

Charlotte, Nov. 7.—(AP)—Politically enigmatic North Carolina, normally Democratic state which bolted the Democratic party in 1928 and the first state decisively to reject the 21st repeal amendment, today apparently had written its okay on the New Deal.

Incomplete returns from yesterday's general election indicated the Democratic candidates made a clean sweep of all state offices at issue and retained their eleven seats in congress and 11 Republican made any gains at all they were in contests for the state legislature and county offices.

The New Deal was the predominant issue among the campaigners. Party stalwarts urged Democrats to go to the polls in large number to register approval of the national, state and local administrations and the Republicans attacking the administration from every angle.

Returns from about one third of the state's 1,832 precincts gave the Democratic state candidates in round numbers a vote of 117,000 and Republicans 40,000. In the 1932 election the Democrats had a margin of 285,000 of the 711,000 votes cast.

Yesterday's ballot was reported as light due to relatively little interest in the off year contest.

SEEKS TO CUT FOREST FIRES

R. W. King, Forest Fire Warden, Asks Co-operation of Public in Checking Fires

With forest fires already having burned over a hundred acres of woodland in this county, R. W. King, forest fire warden in this county today called on the public to do everything in their power to help reduce the loss of the fire season.

The warden said fires recently burned over valuable woodland on the farms of G. S. Porter, Blount Edwards and other landowners of the county, causing considerable loss.

"During this season," said an appeal issued by the warden to day "timber lands burn rapidly. Carelessness of smokers, hunters, brush burning and tourists are the chief causes."

"Citizens of Pitt county have voiced their loyalty to preserve forests from the tragedy of fire, and you are urged to notify your neighbors before burning brush and new grounds. Observe the forest fire laws which will appear weekly in the various papers of the state, and report fire troubles immediately."

King said district wardens who are always on the alert to help curb losses of this kind, are located in the following places:

W. Young, Beaver Dam; Robert Joyner, Farmville; Alex Dunn, Belvoir; Jesse Manning, Bethel; Henry Gurganus, Carolina; Robert Satterthwaite, Pictolus; Josh Smith, Chicod; L. E. Manning, Swift Creek; Walter Brown, Ayden; Nor Forbes, Falkland and George Mills, Chicod.

In view of the dry weather prevailing over this part of the state, King said it was highly important that the public give attention to the forest fire menace and that every precaution be used to reduce the annual toll from this cause.

To prevent damage by high winds, dahlias should be staked.

Pitt Voters Give Okay To Roosevelt New Deal

The New Deal which President Roosevelt handed the country not so long ago received whole-hearted approval when Pitt county people voted in the general election yesterday.

Although the vote was the highest probably ever cast in an "off year" general election it was sufficient to show that Pitt county is behind the president in his effort to lift the nation clear of the pit of depression and put it back on the high peaks of prosperity.

On the basis of incomplete and unofficial reports received from eight precincts of the county today the vote was hardly a fourth as large as that which swept President Roosevelt into office by a landslide in 1932. The five Republicans running for a similar number of seats on the Board of County Commissioners as well as those entered on the state ticket didn't have a "look in" as far as Pitt county is concerned. Of the eight precincts reported, only eleven votes were cast for the Republican candidates. That in the words of one of the political observers who watched the balloting in Greenville, "it looks like Mr. Roosevelt has the wind by the tail."

By reason of the new restrictions in Greenville and Chicod townships the vote was probably lighter proportionately than in some other parts of the county, but in all of the nineteen precincts on the basis of straggling reports coming to the city today, there was a disinclination on the part of the voters to go to the polls. They seemed to think that the overwhelming key which they gave the Democrats in the June primary was all necessary. And it was as far as the county and state tickets are concerned as nomination in the primary is tantamount to election because of lack of Republican opposition.

The four new voting places which the Board of Elections ordered set up in Greenville as well as the three in Chicod township enabled the poll holders to handle the vote in a walk and indications were that the largest ballot which the county sees fit to cast in the future will be handled with far greater speed and accuracy than ever before.

On the basis of unofficial reports approximately 581 persons voted at the four polling places here, including one or two Republicans. In the one precinct heard from in Chicod 79 votes were cast. Griffin had 115

CREDIT BODY WINS HONOR

Greenville Production Credit Assn., First To Collect Debts in Full

The Greenville Production Credit Association has brought honor and recognition to Pitt county because it is the first Production Credit Association in the United States to bring over $100,000 to collect in full.

J. C. Galloway, secretary-treasurer of the local organization, yesterday was advised by telegraph of the achievement. The telegram was sent by Ernest Graham, president of the Production Credit Corporation of Columbia, S. C., and read:

"I hasten to offer my sincere congratulations on your splendid achievement in making one hundred per cent collection. You have brought honor to your association and have demonstrated that a co-operative agricultural system can be operated successfully."

In commenting on the achievement today Mr. Galloway said "good prices paid for farm products and loyalty of stockholders made it possible to gain the distinction."

He said no field collectors were employed, for collections nor any extra expense incurred.

The local organization served both Pitt and Green counties and played an important part in financing farmers in taking care of their crops this year.

Mr. Galloway said today his association would be in position to render a higher type of service to the community next year and expressed his appreciation of the fine way which borrowers settled their debts and helped his organization win the greatest honor of any single unit in the country.

Paul Fitzgerald is president of the association. J. Paul Davenport, J. V. Taylor and John R. Carroll are Pitt county directors, and N. P. Palmer, Carl T. Hicks and G. L. Mawborn are Green county directors.

The officers were hearty in their praise of borrowers whose loyalty made the winning of such recognition possible for the local association.

Boy Scout campaign workers continued their canvass of the city today in an effort to raise sufficient money to assure the city of a permanent organization.

The committee, which started to work yesterday, were striving to make every minute count today and reported they were meeting with gratifying success.

Results of the canvass will be determined at a victory breakfast to be given at the Friendly Dining Room tomorrow morning at 8 o'clock. At this gathering the canvassers will make a complete report of their activities.

Committee members said today they felt sure they would "go over the top" in their effort to make Boy Scouting a permanent thing in the life of the community and urged everybody who has not contributed to do so at once.

It will be impossible for the committee to contact everybody during the whirlwind campaign, and those not contacted are urged to notify Rev. G. R. Combs, leader of the Scout movement, of any amount they wish to contribute to the cause.

Greenville is going to have a public park next year which the entire community will be proud of, it was stated today by Mayor R. C. Flanagan, who for the last several months has been working on the project.

Mr. Flanagan said at a recent meeting of the Garden club of the Woman's club had made the park one of its prime objectives of the year and would look after its beautification.

Landscape experts from Raleigh were here several days ago, conferring with members of the Garden club in regard to laying out the park and providing for its beautification and it was understood this work would be carried to completion as soon as possible.

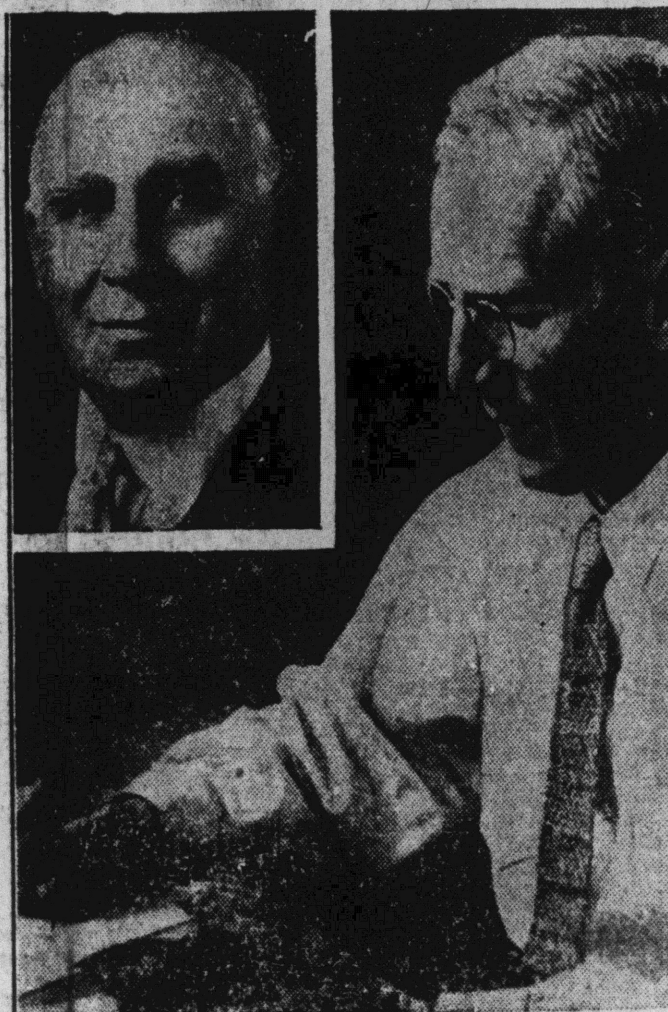

The principal spirits behind the Garden club's ambitious program are Mrs. T. E. Hooker, Mrs. J. Key Brown, and Mrs. J. H. B. Moore.

Plans for beautifying the park, located on the hillside near the swimming pool and covering an area of ground to the old Model School building, are being perfected under the direction of the Garden club and will be rushed to completion as soon as possible. By next summer when the swimming pool and playground open it was hoped to have everything in shape.

Proper lighting and seating facilities will be cared for by the city. Mayor Flanagan said the city would do everything possible to assist the club in carrying out its program of giving the city one of the most beautiful parks in this part of the country.

The area of land set aside for the park was given to the city by (Continued on page 6)

DISCIPLES MEET HERE

Convention of N. C. Churches of Disciples of Christ Opens Here Today

The State Convention of the Churches of the Disciples of Christ opened this afternoon with the Ministerial Session which convened at two o'clock. Reports were received from the Commission on Budgets and Promotional Relationship. This commission has worked for two years on a plan for better and more business-like distribution of denominational funds contributed for mission, benevolences etc. The report submitted and adopted this afternoon follows the general provisions of a similar report made at the International Convention of the Disciples recently held in Des Moines, Iowa, and effective for the whole denomination. This afternoon session included in their program a discussion of the problems involved in plans to re-group rural churches in order to eliminate as far as possible duplication of effort and overlapping of territory. Other reports and discussions of vital interest to the clergy of the denomination were presented and discussed.

One of the most delightful features of the Greenville convention is the fact that the home of Mr. and Mrs. Travis Hooker at five this afternoon at which time Mr. and Mrs. Hooker will entertain the delegates.

The evening session which begins at 7:15 today is expected to bring a large attendance to hear the address of the President of the Convention, Rev. Richard Bagby, the address of welcome by Mayor R. C. Flanagan, and the convention address by Dr. R. H. Miller, minister of the National City Church of Washington, D. C. Tomorrow's sessions begins at 9:35, 2:15 and 7:30.

TAX PAYMENTS MADE RAPIDLY

City Anticipates Larger Collection in November Than During Past October

Indications today pointed to the fact that tax collections in the city of Greenville would be larger during the month of November than in October.

The city collected over $21,000 in October in taxes dating from 1928 to 1934. City Clerk J. O. Duval, said in a statement issued the first of the month. It was a record for any single month for the last several years.

Mr. Duval, commenting on the fine way collections were pouring into his office this month, said yesterday it was believed collections this month would exceed the October figure.

The city clerk's office has been busy all week mailing out tax bills. The office was literally swamped with this important business along with collections reported by Tax Collector "Wash" Patrick. The job of mailing out bills probably will continue the remainder of the week.

Citizens were urged to watch their bills and make payments as promptly as possible and in that way help the city speed up collections.

With the financial situation in this part of the state better than it has been in years because of the improved prices being paid for the tobacco crop, it was believed the first of January would see an entirely new record hung up from the standpoint of collections. City officials expressed themselves as highly gratified over the progress made by the tax department and commended the collectors for the speed with which this work is being conducted.

Since its first motor ship was built in 1913 the United States has advanced to third place among nations for such sea-going craft, only Great Britain and Norway having more.

LEAF SALES LIGHTER HERE

Smallest Amount of Tobacco For Any Day This Year Sold On Mart Yesterday

The offerings of bright leaf tobacco yesterday was the lightest of the season on the local tobacco market, although Monday saw a comparatively heavy sale.

The report of sales made public this morning by K. W. Cobb, supervisor of sales, showed the market yesterday sold 208,630 pounds of leaf for $59,741.86, at an average of $28.65 per hundred pounds.

The price situation continues good, it was said, but the offering of much common leaf, always evident when the last of the crop is being sold, caused the general average to take a slight tumble.

Sales continued light today and work was completed around the noon hour.

With the major part of the crop already having been placed on the auction floors, only a small amount of tobacco remains to be sold and sales the remainder of the season are expected to be light, with Mondays and Fridays probably taking the lead with the heaviest offerings.

Bethel, thriving Pitt county town north of Greenville, today was in the midst of a street paving program that is going to play an important part in the future of the city.

Construction forces yesterday started paving Main street, Pitt Street, Railroad Street and James Street and it was hoped to complete the job in the next two weeks.

Two blocks of paving were to be placed on Main street, one on Pitt, one on James, and two on Railroad. The program will connect the principal streets of the town with highways leading to the place.

The laying of curbing and gutters was started about two weeks ago and when paving got under way yesterday morning, this part of the contract had been completed.

The construction work, it is said is being financed through funds provided by the state and town.

Citizens of the town today expressed appreciation of the paving program, declaring it would play a big part in improving traffic conditions there as well as helping to beautify the community.

Dr. Hollar Speaks To Students.
The importance of the ballot and the challenge to young people to take politics seriously, studying the problems and judging wisely which things should be continued and which changed, was the gist of the message Mr. Hollar, of the History department, gave the students of East Carolina Teachers College in his talk to them at assembly on election day.

He called attention to the fact that election day comes during Education Week this year and connected the ways in which the two are interrelated. He advised the students to attempt to steer safely through whatever difficulties they might encounter in both the political and educational world.

He warned them of new problems that will come up in the solving of which they will have no precedent to follow. He chose as an illustration of the problems that will confront future citizens, that of the nation with more old people in proportion to population than ever before because of the decrease in the size of families.

This was one of the series of Tuesday morning assembly talks by members of the faculty on questions of importance or subjects of special interest to the student body.

Shower For Miss Hadley.

On yesterday afternoon at their home on Seventh street, Mrs. S. T. White and Miss Helen White in their usual charming manner entertained in honor of Miss Rose Hadley, popular bride-elect of the month.

Pink and white chrysanthemums were artistically used throughout the home and in this lovely setting eighteen tables marked with suggestions of the approaching wedding were placed.

At the conclusion of a number of spirited rubbers Mrs. Archie Sugg was awarded pillow cases for high score. Floating prizes for slams and dead hands were captured by Mrs. Carl Reid and Mrs. A. B. Cosby. These were attractive tea cloths. Miss Hadley was presented with satin lingerie.

Guests were startled by the arrival of two pirates, Master Sammy White and Master Curtis Perkins, dragging a huge chest. They announced that they had captured the pirate ship and salvaged the treasure for Miss Hadley. On opening the chest Miss Hadley found it filled with a shower of lovely linens from the guests which she graciously accepted.

A delectable salad course was served to the bridge guests and the following tea guests: Mrs. J. H. Rose, Mrs. J. H. Blount, Mrs. J. Key Brown, Mrs. J. H. Waldrop, Mrs. J. L. Fleming, Mrs. W. L. Best, Mrs. Hortense Moye, Mrs. C. S. Forbes, Mrs. F. J. Forbes and Mrs. J. H. Woolard.

Lamar Stringfield At College.
Lamar Stringfield, musical director and conductor of the North Carolina Symphony, needs no introduction to the people of this community who have followed with interest and pride his career and his work with the Symphony. He will conduct the orchestra when they appear in concert at East Carolina Teachers College on next Tuesday evening, November 13.

Mr. Stringfield is well known in national music circles and was winner of the Pulitzer prize in composition in 1928. His "Suite from the Southern Mountains" was adjudged the best American composition for that year and has since been played by a number of orchestras throughout the country.

In addition to being a composer and director, Mr. Stringfield is an accomplished flutist and ranks with the best in America. He is also chairman of the chamber music and orchestra department of the National Federation of Music Clubs and director of the Institute of Folk Music at the University of North Carolina.

The North Carolina Symphony Orchestra is distinctly a Tar Heel product. The sixty musicians composing the orchestra were selected from 1,000 applicants from all sections of the state and were taken for their ability as musicians as well as for their promising talent.

During the current season several guest artists have conducted the orchestra in various concerts and each has praised the orchestra. Among those who have paid tribute to the orchestra are Dr. Hans Kindler, conductor of the National Symphony Orchestra at Washington, D. C.; Dr. Henry Hadley, conductor of the Manhattan Symphony Orchestra and well known composer, and John Powell of Richmond, Va., famous American composer and pianist.

Evangelist Says God Is Hid Only To The Lost Soul

Evangelist R. L. Erickson read for his Scripture lesson last night at the big tent tabernacle, corner Third and Cotanche streets, from the 4th chapter II. Corinthians, third and fourth verses as follows: "But if your gospel be hid, it is hid from them that are lost. In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them."

The evangelist told his hearers that Paul is revealing a great secret. Our God is hid only to the lost. If men can not understand God they are lost. The god of this world is blinding their minds. Many people believe that the devil is a big red, horned-looking forked-tail devil. The devil was created an arch-angel and a powerful person, so much so that he thought he could destroy God, and tried to do it but failed. When cast out he was so powerful he drew one-third of the angels with him. The devil is a cunning, shrewd, powerful, influential individual, whose power is surprising. He is not a horned-looking creature, but an angel of light and the god of this world. Wise and beautiful, he has an abnormal following, and a cleverness that is surprising an influential as well as deceiving to humanity.

For instance: you ask children the names of the apostles and they can not tell you half of them, but ask them the names of the movie stars, and they will stagger you naming many of them. The god of this world has blinded their minds. Satan is the father of all blindness; spiritual, mental and physical. Physical blindness is bad, mental blindness is worse, but spiritual is worst of all. Satan works every day blinding the minds of men everywhere. Influential hypocrisy is the devil's best tool today. One hypocrite in the church can do more damage than a hundred sinners outside. The teachings of today, against miracles, the supernatural birth of Jesus, and blood-bought salvation, is another one of Satan's many deceiving practices among men, who are hitching their star of hope to the chariot of intellectual advancement and attainment.

If our gospel is hid, it is hid from them that are lost, whose minds are blinded by the god of this world.

NOT TIME FOR HASTY ACTION

A special mass meeting has been called for Farmville tomorrow afternoon at which time resolutions demanding an immediate signing of a central program for tobacco for a period beyond the present contracts that cover next year's crop, will probably be adopted. We have previously expressed the opinion that now we have seen the benefits of controlled acreage the plan should be continued in operation but according to the available information it cannot be learned just how far the government can go in the way of rentals and benefits of an extended contract until the next Congress gives the matter attention.

Of course we want an extended contract, but certainly we want to be sure that the government can and will cooperate in the way of rentals, benefits and protection in the way of taxing the non-signers. At a meeting held sometime ago in Raleigh attended by J. B. Hutson, head of the tobacco division AAA, the growers were given assurance that the government would go the limit in aiding growers and would call for a new sign-up in sufficient time to protect the growers before the expiration of the present contracts.

While we are, as stated, heartily in favor of continuing our contracts and believe the controlled acreage plan is the only solution to our problem in the tobacco section, certainly we do not want the growers in their meeting Thursday to become over-anxious and get themselves placed in a position whereby they would get a less favorable contract with the government than if they waited until after Congress convened and learned just what to expect on the government's part from the new contracts.

What we want and need, it is possible to attain, is the same contract that we now have in force extended for a period of two or five years beyond its expiration at the end of next year. At first it must be learned whether or not the government can meet the terms of its contract.

We sincerely hope that these things will be taken to consideration and so indicated in any resolution at tomorrow's gathering thought rather than for jumping to hasty conclusions.

Marian Gordon

by JEANNE ROWMAN

SYNOPSIS: Marian Gordon's husband Lon is worried about the future of his business. He has a check over $100,000 which he has hidden away, and plans to use it to force his employees to pass defective material in a high school. Marian's firm is building, and she wants to free Lon, and to do it she must find Max Hamilton, who is the only man who can furnish the evidence necessary to control Marian.

Chapter 41 MESSAGE FROM KING

THE District Attorney had said that he believed McSwain would force Lon to bear the responsibility of the high school. Perhaps Lon was realizing this; perhaps this was what was worrying him. Marian wondered if he would have to choose between McSwain's orders and prosecution... persecution.

Choosing wouldn't be an easy matter for he would have her to consider.

She must hurry her counter attack. King should have an answer to her query before very long.

Lon stirred, awakened and Marian thought she detected a new attitude as he arose and prepared for the day. It was as though he had made a decision that night and his mind was at rest.

"I'm going to be late again tonight, only," and he gave a wry smile. "I won't be out with the boys."

"Oh, Lon," she couldn't help the fears which arose like a host about her.

"Tell you what, Ian, you come in on the five forty-five and we'll have dinner together; then I'll take you to a theater and call for you."

Marian hesitated a moment. She felt that after his visit of the night before he was going to someone, either for advice, or with his decision.

"Lon," she said, "you don't want me to go with you, or know where you are going... no, don't misunderstand, I don't need to know... but, would you want anyone else to follow you?"

"I don't know what you mean."

"I mean this, and don't laugh or be bitter. This house is being watched and I am being trailed. Wherever I go, one of McSwain's Kanaka boys follows."

"Ian!" He was shocked, she saw that, but she saw something deeper. He believed her.

"That's why I didn't want his gardener here. That is why I keep Waki here. He understands and will protect me."

He was silent a few moments. Marian saw the steeling of the grim lines about his mouth, then he spoke. "Can you find someone to come out and stay with you?"

"No, this is the Steele's Saturday night on duty. I'm not afraid. Hero will give the alarm; I have my revolver and as I said, I know how to use it."

"Maybe we'd better take an apartment in town," he said in a worried voice.

"No, I'd rather not leave here." She didn't say she considered it inadvisable to frighten McSwain into action before she had the evidence she needed. "There's really no danger, aside from having someone know every step I take."

"I won't be out late," he promised.

HE wasn't, but until he was well within the gates of home Marian stood guard at the window. As he approached the house from the garage she noticed that his arms were filled with bundles.

"Ran into Tony Gazetti, and he sent these things out to you," he explained, handing her a box which she found contained Mrs. Gazetti's famous chicken ravioli, and this, he handed her an armful of shaggy asters in rose and purple, pink and mauve.

"These, I brought," and Marian accepting the two small cornucopias flashed him a smile of understanding. Violets and marigolds. It proved that by some alchemy of thought, his understanding of her and belief in her had been restored.

"Ian," he said, after she had arranged the flowers in bowls and joined him at the fireside, "I'd like to have a serious talk with you. To begin with, do you trust me?"

"Trust you? In what way?"

"I mean, if in the future I were to do things that looked mighty strange to you, would you and could you overlook them, knowing I did them with a purpose?"

"Now that you've forewarned me I could and would."

"I am going to leave tomorrow with McSwain."

"Oh, Lon," the words flashed out of her own volition, "be careful."

"Don't worry," he smiled at her.

with demands that in the end will work to our disadvantage.

THE NATIONAL WHIRLIGIG

When this group finally gets together in agreement, it will report to Secretary Lakes, Relief Administrator Hopkins and Secretary Morgenthau. This trio will then pre-

Don't worry, he had said, as if she could keep from worrying while he was with any member of that family. And then a new question arose.

"Is McSwain in town again?" she asked. She remembered Lon having said he had returned to the northern part of the State where he was bidding on a building.

"He comes in on Sundays," Lon said. "He sent word today that he wanted me there for a conference."

"But that won't take long," Marian interposed.

"No, but he also left word that I was to come prepared to stay for dinner."

"Oh," a monosyllabic answer. It sounded stupid. She felt stupid, but after having promised to trust him...

"Will you be too lonesome here?" he asked. "Why don't you telephone your folks and have them drive down, or you might take me over, then drive up and see them."

"No," she answered, "I'd rather be here... right here on the spot. I'll read and then there's the radio."

But she didn't read and she didn't even look towards the radio. The day was warm and clear and she worked in the part of the garden from which she might hear a telephone, and when she could find nothing else to do, she would look down the path which led to the hill top.

Inaction, she decided was more trying than actual suffering. To be forced to wait while unseen forces seemed to be gathering about her was the most nerve wracking ordeal she had ever faced.

"Here I sit while he goes putting his head into a noose," she thought once. Not that she was sitting, or felt she would ever sit peacefully again.

HERO gave a short bark. Someone coming. She raced to the top of the hill hoping to see the familiar V of Lon's car; instead she saw the snub-nosed top of Waki's machine valiantly trying to make the grade. Waki bent earnestly over the wheel as if by pushing he would help.

His face was beaming when he arrived, May at his side. They had come to call, he explained. May wished to see the garden, but first the inside of the house.

Marian conducted them inside and, assured that he wasn't being observed, Waki brought a telegram from the innermost recess of the coat, sweater and vest he wore.

Marian tore it open eagerly. It was from King.

"Have located party stop he is waiting at Oakmere for word from you stop suggest you telephone for appointment stop advise immediate contact" John.

Marian read the telegram, then looked at the mantel clock. It was five-fifteen. She could make the five forty-five with Waki's help, and the car would go downhill, of that she was sure. She would leave May to catch any chance call from Lon, and to guard the house.

Like a whirlwind she flew into town clothes, pulled the new bat down over her hair at a rakish angle, grabbed gloves, purse, keys, talking meanwhile to May.

"If any strangers come, don't let them in," she admonished, "and don't let Hero out. Better keep the lights on, and the blinds drawn. If Mr. Casad comes home, tell him I went to... let's see... to Mrs. Steele's. Remember that?"

"I remember sat," May assured her. "I say, Miz Casad, she go Miz Steele's."

"You'd better say Anne Steele," Marian decided, "and if he needs me you have him telephone there, won't you, May?"

"I do."

The Waki car charged down the hill, Marian huddled down in the front seat trying to look as much like Mrs. Waki as her tall form would allow. Perhaps her shadow would decide the Wakis had merely come to call and were returning home, and would stay on, guarding the house.

They reached the depot just as the electric train pulled in and Marian was relieved to find no trace of a Kanaka boy or anyone else who seemed interested in her, in the background.

As they sped towards the city, she thought of the wire. The Oakmere, one of the more obscure hotels. She would go directly to Anne's, then telephone from there and wait for him.

(Copyright, 1934, by Jeanne Rowman)

Marian's talk with Hamilton is disturbed, tomorrow.

pare definite recommendations for submission to President Roosevelt so he, in turn, may lay a program before Congress.

Government statisticians have been working day and night assembling facts, figures and estimates.

It has been working out tentatively that expenditure of five billion dollars in a number of given directions should bring about re-employment of approximately 4,000,000 men.

Low-cost housing and slum clearance, rural electrification, grade-crossing elimination, factory and transportation modernization and construction of a number of rural industrial communities are outstanding features of the giant scheme over which the New Dealers are sweating.

The money would be poured largely into self-liquidating projects or loaned out where chances of repayment seemed likely. A fair portion, however, may have to take the form of grants.

Hurdles: Slum clearance has been a slow process to date because of the time required to get title to land and complete condemnation proceedings. Only four sites actually have been acquired—two in Atlanta, one in Cleveland and one in Montgomery, Ala.

Word has gone out to speed up the preliminaries so actual work may be started on a large scale by spring. Among the cities to get early attention are Indianapolis, Louisville, Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, Washington, D. C. and Baltimore.

Final approval of mode tenement projects in fifty other cities from coast to coast is said to be virtual certainty.

Rural electrification probably will be a big feature of the new job restoring program. It dovetails nicely with the ideas of the President's Power Committee. Uncle Sam has sunk a lot of money in dams and some outlet must be found for the power they will generate.

There are complications to be overcome in connection with grade-crossing elimination. Communities in which they exist uniformly think the railroads should pay to have them done away with. Most of the roads are already overburdened with debt and don't want to saddle themselves with any more that won't bring them returns.

Also, some salesmanship is going to be necessary to get industry sold on large-scale modernization.

Sunny: Up to the first of November the Census Bureau had issued 219 preliminary reports as a result of its biennial manufacturers' census. This compares with 148 issued up to Nov. 1, 1932, and therein lies a story.

One need not be a detective to learn why they came out so much faster just before this year's election than they did two years ago. It is only necessary to read and compare the reports.

Those two years ago showed a pretty black picture in 1931 as compared with 1929. The current ones—1933 as against 1931—look considerably brighter.

Christopher Explains

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER
"The gipsies have left!" exclaimed Willy Nilly, "and you have stolen something."

"Not exactly stolen," cawed Christopher.

"What do you mean by 'not exactly stolen'?" asked Willy Nilly.

"When the gipsies first came near Puddle Muddle one of them dropped this gold object from their ear."

She looked every where for it and couldn't find it.

Because I had picked it up at once. She didn't miss it right away—not until another gipsy told her she had lost an earring," said Christopher.

"I didn't exactly steal it because I saw it on the ground and found it, as you might say. The reason Top Notch came with the news about the gipsies before I did was because I wanted to find another place besides my nest in which to hide the earring. That delayed me. But now they've gone and I'm safe."

"And now you say the gipsies have left? I wonder why they went so quickly, but then I suppose they always do just pack up and leave when they're tired of a place," Willy Nilly said. He was worried, too, about Christopher and the earring.

"Now don't look at me like that," begged Christopher. "She wasn't upset at losing the earring. She said she had plenty more and put another in her ear at once. One of the older gipsies said it should teach her a lesson and that she couldn't lose an earring."

Willy Nilly did not know what to do. But at that moment Rip came rushing along, very much excited.

"He's gone, he's gone!" cried Rip.

Tomorrow—"Missing Quick-Dick"

this time it won't be so easy to divert it with the lightning rod of federal intervention. Auto labor circles are bitter on three counts. They claim that General Johnson promised them a rehearing before the auto code was renewed—and they didn't get it. They have a strong conviction they were doublecrossed in the previous strike settlement—which undermined organized labor by granting collective bargaining privileges to minority employ groups.

The Motor Meditation Board has done nothing to dispel the impression. And they are up in arms at the government's lack of interest in prosecuting alleged violations of Section 7a (this grievance is by no means confined to the auto workers). So they've decided their only salvation is to take matters into their own hands instead of leaving it to Labor Boards to protect their New Deal gains.

The motor manufacturers for their part are in no mood for further concessions. They're set for a knockout brawl and would just as soon get it over with now. So it's an odds-on bet that a tool and die makers' strike later this month will preface a sweeping walkout which will make the earlier rumpus look like a Sunday-School picnic.

The government may possibly engineer a compromise that will postpone trouble till spring but it will take a masterpiece of lion taming to do it—and in any case a free-for-all is inevitable sooner or later.

Then there are the building trades. A New York electrical workers' union has just put over an agreement for a 35-hour week at 40 hour wages with the Electrical Contractors' Association. It won't take long for other construction crafts to catch on—especially with the housing program getting up steam.

Other contractor groups are furious lying in dig in to resist similar demands to the last ditch.

Keen observers believe that the final outcome of the coming strikes will depend to an unusual degree on public reactions. Conservatives find a grain of comfort in the idea. Not that they think big industrialists are bright at cultivating good will—but past performances lead them to hope that labor leaders are—if possible—even dumber in that respect.

Crusade: New York has a very tentative eye on A & P developments. Many insiders rate this contest the key to the whole question of capital-labor relations.

They figure this way. The A & P is probably in a stronger position to tell labor to go climb a tree than any other American corporation. Moreover the Harfords are known to be as firmly opposed to labor "encroachments" as any business men you could name. Any weakening on their part is expected to encourage labor to press its demands in all directions and would certainly discourage capital resistance. Conversely, if they stick to their guns their example will stiffen all capitalist backbones.

The informed doubt that John Harford will give anything like as much ground as indicated by published reports. They are convinced his willingness to "think over" the concessions proposed by the Labor Board was merely a gesture to protect his company from the adverse public reaction of flat and immediate turn-down would have invited. A number of financial and industrial big timers have privately but fervently urged him not to yield an inch and tried to make him feel he's carrying the banner for the whole conservative crusade.

Wages: Labor's 30-hour week drive won't catch industry asleep either. Big business circles are mapping a vigorous counter-attack aimed for lower wages.

They've mustered a battery of ingenious arguments. The sequence they will stress runs as follows: High wages mean high prices which reduce consumption and thereby lead to contraction of industrial activity. So unless wage costs can be cut plants will be compelled to slacken production and make unemployment worse. Instead of better. On the other hand freedom to slash wages will bring lower prices, stepped-up activity and therefore more jobs. Profits will not be mentioned. Note the consumer appeal.

The point will also be made that high wage costs will inevitably lead to greater mechanization of industry—in self defense—and this will also reduce the number of available jobs.

There's a neat political slant in the battle-plan. The idea is to sell farmers that high industrial wages are costing them money in terms of the products they buy—thus driving a wedge between the farm bloc and Congressional supporters of labor.

Don't think that all business men share these views. Some important ones don't. But enough of them feel this way to prestage a lively argument.

Thankless: New York doesn't envy Donald Richberg his new job as "assistant president" to roll its prestige Comment runs that he will have to combine the wisdom of Solomon, the tact of Lord Chesterfield, the enacity of a bulldog and the patience of Job to make a go of it. Financial men will give you odds that he will wind up on his ear in the ally.

But all the same they wish him luck. He has made a good impression on street appearances here. One Wall Street remarks "Heaven knows it's time somebody made sense out of the New Deal's inconsistencies and Richberg should be able to if anyone can."

Chicken production has decreased 10 per cent in this country since July 1, 1933.

Learn From Doctors How to Treat Colds

Four Points to Remember
As colds cause more loss of time and money than any other disease, every one should learn what modern medical science teaches as to their proper treatment. Your doctor has the following objectives:

First—To relieve the congestion in the nose and throat, thus aborting or lightening the attack and relieving the symptoms caused by the congestion—Calotabs, the improved calomel compound tablets, accomplish this by attracting the excess blood to the bowels.

Second—to help the kidneys wash out of the blood the cold-poisons which cause the chilly sensation, feverishness, aches, and mean feeling—Calotabs are diuretic to the kidneys, assisting them in ridding the blood of the poisons.

Third—to expel the germ-laden mucus and toxins from the bowels, thus preventing their absorption into the blood—Calotabs accomplish this thoroughly.

Fourth—To keep the bile of the liver flowing freely through and out of the intestines thus relieving the biliousness and constipation, which attend and aggravate a cold. As Calotabs contain calomel, they promote the flow of bile.

Thus, Calotabs meet these four important objectives of medical treatment for colds. One or two Calotabs at bed time with a glass of sweet milk or water, is usually sufficient; but should be repeated the third or fifth night if needed. The milk tones down the action, making it milder, if desired.

Why risk doubtful or make-shift remedies? Get a family package of Calotabs containing full directions only twenty-five cents; trial package ten cents, at your dealer's (Adv.)

The game next Monday afternoon, Nov. 12th, in Washington between the Greens of Greenville and the Pam-Pack of Washington will be a continuation where the two schools left off year before last.

That year "Soup" Porter's team defeated Washington twice. In the Armistice game of that year Rogers Taylor was the big star, along with David Hardee.

Sgt. Junius Rose enjoys very much relating the account of a game played between Greenville and Washington back in 1929. It goes something like this: "Phoebe Smith and Glenn Robeson were playing on the team at that time. Washington was leading Greenville by one point. Greenville had the ball on Washington's 20-yard line, with about two minutes left to play. Phoebe started calling signals, and Glenn called 'signals off'; all of the Greenville players, with the exception of the center, raised up and started arguing with each other, giving the impression that they didn't know their plays. Every member of the Washington team stood up, yawned and started kidding the Greenville players. Our center, seeing that the Washington players were off balance, snapped the ball to Robeson, who tucked the ball under his arm and went over for a touchdown." The Washington fans are said to still be carrying a grudge against Greenville for that defeat.

The Greenville team doesn't mind this grudge against them, if they have a little success settling a grudge as did Kinston last week. Kinston had promised us a good looking to get even for the drubbing that our baseball team gave theirs in the playoff this summer. As you know from the results of the game last week they were completely outclassed in every department.

Washington is planning a real celebration on the day of the game. They have invited our own Mayor Flanagan to take part in the exercises before the game. Each captain is to be escorted to the middle of the field by a sponsor from each school. For Greenville, Eoline Sawyer was elected by the team as its sponsor. Mayor Flanagan has accepted and will be there to do his part in making the celebration a success.

In this game with Washington Monday, Greenville is to get half of the gate receipts. Every person going to the game can be assured our school will get half the proceeds from each ticket sold. A new ball will be bought, and after the game, the winning team is to be awarded this ball. If you wish to help this team along, this is a good chance to do your part; you can also be assured that you will be treated to a real good football game.

From comparative sources the two teams will be evenly matched. Washington has defeated Kinston twice by scores of 7-0 and 13-7. Both defeated Arden by one point. Last Friday Washington lost to the strong Williamston team 15-0. The Williamston eleven scored a pair of touchdowns in the first few minutes of play. After this, Washington outplayed them, making 9 first downs to their opponents 3. The Pam-Pack have a powerful line; most of their offense comes from ground plays. They use many deceptive plays. Most of these resulting from spinners and delayed backs. They use sweeping end runs, many times starting from punt formation for nice gains. Their passing game has been weak, but the Washington coach is giving much attention to this department. The team has not completed a pass all season. The Greens will be trying hard to help them continue this record.

All mail and airmail bound inland from Salonika, a division of Greece, must bear a special stamp. For that purpose a 20 lepta adhesive has just been printed.

The stamp bears a drawing of the patron saint of the state, St. Demetrius. It shows him charging forward on a fiery steed, with spear in hand. The color is dark brown.

British One-Penny
The second of the redesigned stamps of Great Britain's King George VI. has made its presence known in a bright scarlet 1-penny. Although basically similar to the previous 1-penny, the differences are easily discernible. For instance, the king's head is made to stand out in sharper relief due to the fact that its background is darker.

Another point is that the words "postage-revenue" across the top are differently placed. The crown at the top also is larger, being similar to that one the 3 half-pence.

Canal Zone
A new 3-cent stamp for the Canal Zone bears the portrait of General George W. Goethals and is colored deep violet.

Talks to parents

By BROOKE PETERS CHURCH

One of the greatest pleasures in reading is to be able to discuss books with other people.

The Smith children seldom had this experience. They were obliged to read "good books," and since few of their friends were guided in their choice of books, the Smith children were left out of nearly every literary discussion.

Their parents were useless because they could only say, "Read Dickens—or Scott." without being able to add any comment on the subject or characters. And when questioned as to why they liked this book or that, they could only reply, "I don't remember. I read it so long ago."

The parent who wants to guide his child's reading must keep in touch with the required books himself. If all that children hear is discussion of the latest murder mystery or the current serial in a popular magazine, they quite naturally wish to read the story too, so as to be able to get into the picture.

If, however, from infancy up, they see their parents' interest in good books, and by references or quotations from their elders are inspired with curiosity about these books, they will quite naturally take the old stand-by in their stride.

No matter how well read the parents may be, they are useless guides if they have lost all memory of their reading. There is no inspiration to be found in "The well read person knows his classics." But to hear someone say, "Have you never met Jenny Wren, the dolls' dressmaker? She's in our Mutual Friend. You've got a treat coming," rouses curiosity at once.

Part of the work of parents is to review the past in order to keep up with the present and guide and inspire the future.

N. Y. Stock Market

New York, Nov. 7.—(AP)—The stock market accepted news of the victory of the New Deal at the polls with unruffled calm today.

Prices dwindled a little during the first hour but stiffened by midday as buying came into some of the utilities, metals and irregulars.

The list was narrow and irregular. Bonds were under a little pressure with United States government record.

Commodities backed stocks held to a narrow range. Sterling was firm as usual. The price of gold from Paris as the Doumergue government seemed to be tottering.

The market pushed forward rapidly later in the day. Transfers were 100,000 shares.

Farmer Praises Local Leaf Market

A. J. Pickett, of the Kenansville section, today sang the praises of the Greenville tobacco market while paying a visit here. Mr. Pickett is one of the largest landowners in the Kenansville section, his holdings totaling around 15,000 acres.

This year he produced 250 acres of tobacco after cutting his crop 30 per cent, according to his government contract.

Mr. Pickett stated this morning that he paid his first visit to the Greenville tobacco market seven weeks ago yesterday and since that time he has marketed around 100,000 pounds of his crop here. He stated that he had tried several other markets earlier in the season, but after making his first sale in Greenville he decided that would be his marketing place permanently.

"I received more money for my tobacco in Greenville than on any other market," he declared, "and nowhere have I ever seen better cooperation between buyers, warehousemen and others connected with a tobacco market and nowhere have I ever received a warmer welcome than in Greenville."

When told that Greenville's slogan was "Our Greenville, Yours if You Come," Mr. Pickett said: "I do not know that before but since I have been coming to this market here I have learned that certainly you people in Greenville are living up to your slogan."

Some German forests are being protected against the ravages of caterpillars by spraying trees with a poisonous power scattered from airplanes.

Government experts have estimated that 75 per cent of the land in the United States is subject to damage by soil erosion.

Slightly less than half of the 126,000,000 people in this country are church members.

the Board of Trustees of East Carolina Teachers College with the understanding that it be returned to the college when and if ever the park is abandoned.

Negotiations for the land were started by Mayor Flanagan with the late Dr. E. H. Wright, former president of the college, and were completed by the Mayor and Dr. L. R. Meadows, new president of the institution.

It had been planned to open the park to the public during the past summer but so much trouble was incurred in completing the swimming pool, which actually started operation the latter part of the summer, this could not be done.

Mayor Flanagan expressed appreciation of the interest which members of the Garden club are taking in the project and lauded them for the way they are going after beautifying the grounds with shrubs and flowers.
