First Church of Christ, Scientist.

"Christian Science" was the subject of the lesson-sermon in all churches and societies of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, June 30.

The golden text was from Rev. 12:10: "Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ."

Among the citations which comprised the lesson-sermon was the following from the Bible: "The Lord hath given me the tongue of the learned, that I should know how to speak a word in season to him that is weary; he wakeneth mine ear to hear as the learned. The Lord God hath opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious, neither turned away back. For the Lord God will help me; therefore shall I not be confounded; therefore have I set my face like a flint, and I know that I shall not be ashamed." (Isaiah 50:4, 5, 7).

The lesson-sermon also included the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "In the year 1866, I discovered the truth of science or divine laws of life, truth and love, and named my discovery Christian Science. God had been graciously preparing me during many years for the reception of this final revelation of the absolute divine Principle of scientific mental healing."

This apostolical Principle points to the revelation of Immanuel, "God with us"—the sovereign ever-present, delivering the children of men from every ill "that flesh is heir to."

The local post office will be closed tomorrow in observance of the 4th of July holiday. There will be no city or rural delivery. The general delivery window will be open from 11:30 a. m. to 12:30 p. m.

WILSON LIQUOR STORE DRAWS LARGE CROWDS

State's First Legal Store Attracts More Curious Than Customers at Opening

Reflector Bureau, Sir Walter Hotel.

By J. C. BASKERVILLE

Raleigh, July 3.—Curiosity attracted more people to the first liquor store legally operated in North Carolina in 26 years than anything else, when the first Wilson county A. B. C. store opened in Wilson at 11:05 o'clock Tuesday morning. For while more than one hundred people were on hand when the store opened, not all of them were prospective customers and many of these did not even go into the store after the doors were opened, although most of them went inside to look around and gaze at the rows of bottles on the shelves and scan the price list posted on the wall.

From the outside, the Wilson county liquor store, located on the main street of Wilson, looks more like a grocery store than anything else. In fact, until recently the building occupied by the A. B. C. store was a grocery store and some of the same shelving is now being used, although the interior has all been repainted and remodelled and has a counter running across the entire front of this store. Back of this counter are the shelves containing the bottles and cartons of liquor and gin and the four or five neatly dressed clerks and former Sheriff O. A. Glover, the manager of the store.

The clerks are not allowed to recommend any particular brand or brands of liquor to customers, who must consult the price lists on the walls or counter and then make their own selection. As the various customers selected the liquor they desired, the clerks, all dressed in neat tan coats, would get it from the various compartments in the shelves, ring up the sale on the cash register and paste half the sales ticket on the bottle or carton. The customers are required to sign the other half of the sale ticket, with a "yes" or "no" in reply to the printed question, "Are you qualified by law to make this purchase?" The customers are required to sign their names to the sales slips, as they are required to do in the Virginia A. B. C. stores.

During the first hour and a half the store was open it had 121 customers who purchased $169.65 worth of legal, bottled-in-bond liquor, according to a check made by Sheriff Glover. This showed that the average purchase made by each customer was only slightly more than a dollar each. Some of the customers—quite a number of them were from Raleigh, Smithfield and towns in "dry" counties—purchased several dollars worth of liquor of assorted brands. But most of the customers observed by this correspondent for the hour or so he was in the store purchased not more than one pint each and most of this liquor was in the cheaper brands. Some of the customers smiled broadly as they gave their orders to the clerks and carried the sacks containing the liquor out the front door and up the street, instead of a back door and up an alley, as many had undoubtedly done in

READY MADE WIFE

BY CORALIE STANTON

SYNOPSIS: The unexpected return to London of Rex Moore, the airman supposedly lost in the Pacific, has exposed the desperate life of Laurie Moore, told to save herself and her sister from a still more desperate situation. She has told her employer, Mark Albery, that she is Moore's widow; now she must keep up the deception so that Rex may hold his job. Albery has lent them a furnished flat until they can settle themselves.

Chapter 12

MONEY MATTERS

IT was in this hard and controlled mood that Laurie prepared to meet Rex Moore.

But he was not there. On the breakfast table was a large bunch of daffodils, with a card beside it.

"Good-morning! Hope you slept well. I'm off for the day. Sorry dinner and show off tonight. Albery wants me. R. M."

His handwriting appealed to her. It was neat and firm. This greeting rather took the wind out of her sails. Her emotional side rose to answer it with a rush of disproportionate pleasure.

She was so easily touched and gratified. How nice of him! He could be something else than a boor. She remembered his last words of the night before—"If you're the girl I took you for, you'll play the game!"

The day went by swiftly. She took possession of Miss Dixie's office near Mark Albery's private room. It was Saturday, and the Chief only came in for an hour and dictated a few letters.

"Moore told you I sent him down to my place in the country?" he asked her. "I want his advice on something. I'm just off there myself. I won't keep him longer than I can help. It's hard on you, Mrs. Moore, but you'll have to be patient. When we've got things going, you must have leave and go off together—on your second honeymoon."

His rare smile had the usual flashing charm, but it was not directed at her. She felt uncomfortable; that vague premonition of evil returned to her.

Rex came in while Laurie was out that night. She had gone to a movie. As she opened the door, she was aware of the tremendous energy of his presence in the flat.

"Have you had anything to eat?" she asked.

"Yes, thanks. The old body had left me a fine cold meal."

She did not tell him that she had sent Mrs. Budd home early, and prepared it herself and left it when she went out, in case he should come in.

He was in some way transformed. When he told her that he had been up in the air in a new machine from Albery's private aerodrome, she understood. That was his life.

"Thank you for the flowers," she said; and then added nervously: "I'm sorry I made a fool of myself last night."

"And I'm sorry I said that to you about Albery," he replied. "It was mean and silly."

"You're right about us," she went on, and gave him a frank smile. "It is a joke, and we must treat it like one."

"Good. We shall manage fine, I'm sure. I won't interfere with your life. I know you hate me."

"And you despise me!" she put in quickly.

"That's where you're wrong. I do nothing of the kind. You're being a sport about this. It's a bargain, then. Will you shake on it, Laurie? We look on the funny side."

"We look on the funny side, Rex!" she repeated, giving him her hand.

BUT it was not such plain sailing as all that.

During the next fortnight, which flashed by, there were many difficulties in this unnatural household.

They were constantly at loggerheads over some question.

Money had been the first one. Laurie insisted on paying her way. Rex objected. He had brought her there, he said. The flat cost him nothing. Albery said they were to stay in it until they found something suitable.

Laurie was adamant, and he gave way. She put it on a business basis. He understood nothing about housekeeping. She would board him for so much a week, and he could pay Mrs. Budd's wages. This was a concession to his masculine pride.

She was astonished at what she thought was his meanness. He wanted to spend nothing on himself, and as little as possible on anybody else. When, on two occasions, he asked some men to dinner, he told her to be economical as possible. It did not seem to go with the rest of him. And he so often talked of money, of making as much money as he could, as quickly as he could. When he wanted to be specially amiable to her he told her that she was helping him to do it.

She did not ask any of her friends to visit her. When he spoke about it, she said she had very few; she wasn't one for making friends easily.

He was in one of his rough moods, and remarked curtly: "I suppose not. They ask too many questions."

He would say such things, with what she took to be the deliberate desire to hurt her. She hardened herself, but she was sensitive to excess. And she told herself that she hated him more every day.

He was away for several days on end at the Albery factories in Cambridge. Then she breathed freely.

She could not get accustomed to him when he was in the flat. His very presence was overwhelming. She was aware of it all the time. She lay awake in her room, while he was sleeping peacefully in his.

It was the sense of strangeness that got on her nerves. She was not used to men. And Rex Moore was certainly a big personality to be boxed up with such artificial intimacy.

By the end of the fortnight, Laurie, who was always pale, looked quite washed out, and there were haggard lines of fatigue round her eyes.

Which Mark Albery, at the office, did not fail to notice, and which convinced him that Rex Moore had no use for his wife and was making unhappy.

REX MOORE was alone in the flat one afternoon, studying maps, with a row of books open around him on the dining-room table.

It was out five o'clock. Mrs. Budd had put his tea on a side table, and gone back to the kitchen, with an admiring glance at his broad shoulders and fine head and untidy dark hair.

She was a philosopher, and had given up worrying herself about this peculiar ménage—the mistress out at work all day, the master away for days at a time. And the two of them laughing and joking and talking nineteen to the dozen, but not a bit like man and wife.

She had overheard them quarrelling, true, but never making love, as she told her invalid husband, whom she supported, "never kissing or cuddling, nor nothing of the kind!" She knew they had been separated for two years. She could only suppose it took them a bit of time to get used to each other again. Come to think of it, there must be something queer about a dead husband come to life.

The door bell rang. Rex lifted his head, frowning. He did not want to be disturbed. He hoped it wasn't that man come to take his photograph—Rex Moore, the famous airman, in his Chelsea flat, planning his next sensational flight. Damn! Albery had advised him to submit to a mild publicity campaign, and he had consented because of the money. Curse money! How he loathed it!

Mrs. Budd came into the room. "A lady to see you, sir," she announced. "I said I'd see if you was disengaged."

Rex sprang to his feet. "A lady? It must be for Mrs. Moore."

"No, sir, the lady particularly asked to see you. I showed her into the drawing-room."

He shook his impatient shoulders. A woman to see him? He didn't know a single woman in England. It must be some female reporter from one of the papers.

He went into the sitting room. "Rex! My dear—my dear, how wonderful!" said a woman's voice, a rather high-pitched voice with a drawl in it.

It was not a reporter who came towards him, with large glowing dark eyes and a smile of uncontrolled joy on eager, brightly-painted lips. It was the only woman who had ever come into his life, except for little dead Bella Mason, the last woman in the world whom at the moment he wanted to meet again.

"Mrs. Steele! Wanda!" His voice was uncertain; his light eyes had that strange snowy look that seemed to withdraw him from every-day life. (Copyright, 1935, Coralie Stanton) into a legal liquor store to buy legal liquor.

"We are not anticipating the slightest trouble here or anywhere else in the county when other liquor stores are opened," Sheriff Glover said. "We are confident that the people here in Wilson county are going to behave themselves and help us prove to the state that liquor can be sold decently as well as legally and we think the people from other counties who patronize our stores will take the same attitude and help us make these stores a success. For the primary purpose of these stores is to control liquor and stamp out bootlegging."

Wilson county authorities are already convinced that the liquor stores and liquor control plan will prove successful and reduce drunkenness and bootlegging and believe that the public generally is going to cooperate with them.

ILLEGAL RUM DEALERS CUT THEIR PRICES

Raleigh Bootleggers Slash Prices as Wilson Liquor Stores Open

Reflector Bureau, Sir Walter Hotel.

Raleigh, July 3.—Bootleggers who have been doing a big business for the past year or two here and charging from 75 cents to a $1 a pint; more for many standard brands than they cost in the Virginia A. B. C. stores, today had either greatly reduced their prices or folded up and gone out of business as a result of the opening of the first county liquor store in Wilson, 42 miles from here, a survey of the bootleggers and speakeasies showed today.

One bootlegger who for the past year has been doing a big business here selling legal bottled-in-bond liquor and who did an especially large business during the four months the general assembly was in session, was not to be found at all here today and the telephone company said his telephone was "out of order." Another large bootlegger, who also did a very large business during the legislature and who also delivered telephone orders to hotel rooms or offices in almost any quantity, was selling bonded liquor for only $1.25 a pint which a few weeks ago he was selling was $1.75 and $2 a pint. Outside of Raleigh, some of the filling station bootleggers are reported to be selling bottled-in-bond or Federal tax-paid liquor for only 15 cents more than the A. B. C. store retail price in Virginia, the lowest retail prices in this territory. The prices in the South Carolina liquor stores are about 20 per cent higher than in the Virginia stores.

The Wilson liquor store, for instance, is selling Four Roses for $1.50 a pint, including the sales tax, while it has been bootlegging here for $2.50 a pint, with the bootlegger making a profit of more than $1 a pint on it. Paul Jones, another Franklin whiskey, retails in the Wilson store for $1.30 a pint, but has been bootlegging here for $2 a pint. Wolf Creek rye sells in the Wilson store for $1 a pint, but has been bootlegging here for $1.75 a pint.

LOCALS TAKE 1 TO 0 GAME FROM KINSTON

Kinston, July 3.—Greenville played a shade better base ball than Kinston here yesterday afternoon and defeated the Eagles, 1-0, in the fastest game local fans have seen this year.

Guy Williams had the better of Charlie Harris in a hurling duel in which each received ace support from his mates. Each flinger gave five hits.

The league-leading Greenies advanced a runner to second base on three occasions, and they pushed one home in the fourth for the game's only run. Kinston failed to get a runner to second.

Manager Ty Wagner's two-bagger to start the fourth inning gave Greenville the needed opening for victory. Harris struck out Ace Parker and caused Johnson to send an easy roller to first base, but Chubby Dean sliced a single through the infield to score Wagner.

This was the only threat that Harris couldn't throttle. The Eagle hurler handled six assists and two putouts and had the Greenies frequently grounding out to the infield. But his mates couldn't match that big run, and so the Davidson College star went down to his first defeat after racking up five victories for the locals in as many chances.

The five hits made by Kinston were scattered nobly by Williams.

Neither of the starting hurlers—Williamston's Dick Cherry and Snow Hill's Mike Briggs—went the route. Briggs was knocked out of the box in the seventh, while Cherry retired for a pinch-hitter in the same inning.

Corbett, with a homer and two singles, featured on attack for Williamston. Gaylord, with a double and two singles, came next. Marable and Gaddy made two hits apiece, and Marable batted in three runs. Buddy Crump, who hit a pair of singles, was the only visitor to connect more than once.

In addition to his fine work at bat, Corbett also shone afield by handling nine chances perfectly. McGready, Martin first-sacker, had 17 putouts.

The Martins' winning rally was started by Hantz's pinch single. McGready walked, and Gaddy singled to fill the bases. Marable's single got away from Griffin, and three runs counted.

Snow Hill made three of its runs in the second inning. Crump singled Neuman walked. Parrish singled. Perry walked, and Briggs singled.

Williams Warns Growers Against AAA Amendments

(Special To The Reflector) Winston-Salem, July 3.—S. Clay Williams, former NRA head, said in a statement here yesterday that pending amendments to the AAA act now before the Senate "may easily cost" flue-cured tobacco growers $15,000,000 in the possible return from the 1935 crop.

Williams, an official of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, laid his objections to the amendments before a Senate committee in Washington a few days ago. "Greatly benefited as the producer of flue-cured tobacco has been under the agricultural adjustment act he is now face to face with the proposition that adoption of the proposed amendments to that act may easily cost him some $15,000,000 of possible return from his 1935 crop."

"The most unobserving processor knows that these amendments will pass or not according to the attitude of producers toward them and that Congress now believes producers want the amendments because they know they like the present act and its results."

"The secret of what is about to happen to the flue-cured tobacco grower under proposed amendments is that flue-cured tobacco—different from practically all other commodities covered by the act but like its companion product, cotton—has to look to export trade for sale of about 60 per cent of the volume produced. "That fact makes the proposed amendments affect the currently good results to the grower more than anybody connected with AAA has been willing to admit, though everybody saw the effect of this difference in the fall of 1933. With flue-cured tobacco then selling at an average of 10 cents, domestic manufacturers entered into a marketing agreement to lift to at least 17 cents the 40 per cent of the crop which they would normally buy. Under this agreement about $20,000,000 additional money was put into the market.

"The effect of this was that, with tobacco for domestic consumption and that for export selling side by side on the market, the lifting of one served to lift the other."

"Through domestic manufacturers putting $20,000,000 additional into the market, the producers drew out of it $38,000,000 more than they would have gotten had the 10-cent, highly beneficial to flue-cured tobacco growers, the control program is established, has the support of the growers and is not necessarily dependent on these amendments. It is known that Mr. Hutson, tobacco administrator, has said that the ideal situation for the administration, whatever the proper price of tobacco, would be to have only part of this price paid to the growers on the market and the balance paid to them by AAA. That's all right for the grower until parity is attained, but after parity is attained and control established, having these amendments force on him a loss in the price of export tobacco which loss the government cannot possibly reimburse him for, presents a different situation.

"It is also known that Dr. Tugwell and Dr. Mordecai Ezekiel, economic adviser to AAA, want to force curtailment of advertising. Even if these amendments increase the chance of their accomplishing that purpose the growers know that it was largely through advertising that the market for the high priced tobacco sold through cigarettes was developed from 31,500,000 pounds in 1911 to 360,000,000 pounds in 1930 and that liberal advertising is necessary to sustain consumption and market."
