Chapter One REBELLION

WHEN Emily Felton was eight years old she ran away from home with the intention of joining a street carnival.

Her flight was not precipitated by neglect; at home she had every care and attention that a child of eight might expect or wish.

But the street carnival, which held forth on a vacant lot belonging to her father, seemed at a glance to be extremely gay and noisy and unrestrained, and Emily's home was none of these things. It was correct and luxurious, with a great deal of emphasis upon the loftier virtues, such as Duty to One's Parents, and Responsibility to the Poor.

Fortunately, or perhaps unfortunately, the owner of the carnival was not an opportunist. Instead of angling for a reward he immediately found out her name and conducted her back to the paternal roof.

"Mrs. Felton" was incredulous. "Emily, how could you possibly want to leave your beautiful home and go away with those dirty vagabonds?"

In view of his sporting conduct, the owner of the carnival considered this a bit thick. He retaliated.

"If you ask me, there's worse things than dirt."

us to see you every week or so," Frances pointed out.

That, Emily thought to herself, was why she had put in for Bryn Mawr. Bryn Mawr was twenty-four hours from home, and she wouldn't have that uncomfortable feeling that her mother was apt to drop in at any time.

Her mother was wonderful, and Emily had no intention of doing anything of which she might disapprove.

deal because he cramped their style; not intentionally, but thoroughly. He tried to laugh at their jokes, but it wasn't until everyone else had laughed that he realized they were jokes, and that made him difficult.

With Emily he felt thoroughly at ease, probably because Emily rarely laughed either. She had tried it once or twice with Edwin, but the result was discouraging, and she had relapsed at last into gravity.

They sat in a swing on the terrace, chaperoned by a flood of golden light from the living-room window. There was a moon shining, and the air was heavy with the sweetness of a nearby rose garden, but Edwin manfully kept his head and talked about college.

"I understand that Ardmore has the finest swimming pool in the South."

"Yes," said Emily, without enthusiasm. She was watching Edwin's face in the luminous darkness and realizing for the first time that it had a certain delicate beauty. She wished, with a sudden thrill of horror at her own depravity, that he would quit talking about swimming pools and take her in his arms. She had never kissed anyone but her own family, but this sense of closing a door on childhood was doing something to her.

If the commission decides to go ahead and set up a rental textbook system this year in as many schools as possible, it will have to accept the terms being dictated by the textbook publishers and will have to consent to pay Alfred Williams and the N. C. School Book Depository approximately $150,000 as indemnity because the general assembly set up the new rental system without having the depository as the distributing agent. It will also have to go ahead and distribute these textbooks to the schools and rust to luck that the local superintendents and principals will keep track of the books as best they can.

But if the commission decides to call the bluff of the publishers and refuse to accede to their terms, thus making it necessary to postpone the old retail contracts, despite the fact that it will buy in large lots direct from the publishers and pay cash. But the publishers have their own facts, some of which run for four or five years yet, and they have no intention of accepting contracts that will yield them such fat profits, especially since it is now apparent that twice as many books will be purchased under the rental system as were purchased under the old retail sales system when parents and children had to buy all their school books at retail.

There are two schools of thought among the members of the rental textbook commission as to what should be done at the present time. One group thinks that the rental system should be set up this school year, regardless of the cost and even if it is forced to pay Alfred Williams and N. C. School Book Depository a bonus of $150,000 for doing nothing and for the failure of the general assembly to enact a rental textbook law that would give the commission authority to adopt books and make new contracts. The other group in the commission favors postponing all efforts to set up a rental textbook system this school year so it will have more time to study the situation and have an opportunity to work out new contracts with publishers for the purchase of special editions which will not be governed by existing contracts.

inauguration of the rental system until next year, it is believed that much better prices can be obtained and that, if necessary, the state can buy the printed sheets direct from the publishers and bind the books itself and at a decided saving. This course is being advocated by the more conservative members of the rental textbook commission.

STATE STILL FAR SHORT OF GOOD ROADS

Over $100,000,000 Is Needed For Hard Surfacing Projects Already Requested

Reflector Bureau, Sir Walter Hotel.

Raleigh, Aug. 13.—There are only 2,833 miles of concrete highways in North Carolina, only 1,907 miles of asphalt and only 5,100 miles of actual hard surfaced highways in the entire state, including both state and county roads, while there are 20,875 miles of highways which do not have even a sand or gravel surface, it was pointed out today by Chairman Capus M. Waynick of the State Highway and Public Works Commission.

"There is probably more misinformed opinion prevalent about North Carolina highways and the state highway system than any other state activity, and before I became chairman of the highway commission I thought we had just about built all the hard surfaced roads we needed in the state," Waynick said. "But I find now that I was all wrong."

"We still have 30,875 miles of absolutely unimproved roads in the state, as compared with only 2,833 miles of concrete road, and a good many miles of this concrete is now too old or too narrow to be safe and most of the 1,907 miles of asphalt should be replaced with concrete."

"There is only 467 miles of surface treated macadam, and only 317 miles of surface treated gravel road, and 260 miles of traffic bound macadam, with only 2,695 miles of treated topsoil roads. So counting both the paved highways and the surface treated roads, there is only 8,900 miles of roads with any kind of surfacing, including oil treated topsoil. There are only 1,630 miles of unretreated gravel roads and 15,476 miles of untreated gravel roads.

These are requests on file in the commission now for at least $100,000,000 worth of new highway construction, all of it worth while and badly needed, Waynick said. Yet the state, with what it will get from Federal funds, has only about $15,000,000 available for new construction this year.

"Yet there is one county which can't understand why we can't build a 70 mile concrete highway in that county, which if we should use that same proportion in the other counties would call for an expenditure of $300,000,000 a year," Waynick said.

Emily ran away to join a street carnival.

Frances Felton had the grace to look ashamed, but his back was up. He continued his assault.

"Not being able to laugh, for instance, or to slip the leash occasionally."

Mrs. Felton bridled. She felt that he was presuming upon the obligation she was under. "You see what happens when a child of eight does slip the leash, as you call it."

"No'm. This is what happens when she don't slip it occasionally." He turned to the tearful Emily. "Did you ever steal green apples, or run away and go wadin' before the correct day to go wadin'?"

Emily shook her head. Until this recent revolt none of the extra-legal pleasures had seemed even a remote possibility.

"Then," he concluded, "that's why you ran away to join a street carnival. If I was you, ma'am," he suggested to Frances Felton, "I'd give her a little more 'ope."

Mrs. Felton's pretty chin looked stubborn. "I shall be the judge of that." She produced a bill and handed it to him. "I'm really very grateful to you."

He took the bill and looked at it thoughtfully. "I wouldn't take this," he said at last, with a disrespectful twinkle. "If your husband hadn't charged us too much for that lot."

With that one brief bid for freedom Emily's energy was spent.

WHEN Emily was sixteen the question of college arose. Mrs. Felton considered it judicially with her husband.

"Ardmore is really an excellent school."

Mr. Felton considered it too. Besides being president of the soundest bank in northern Alabama, he was big and shrewd and twinkling; but he was no match for his wife.

"Ardmore's no pink tea," he demurred.

"I'd like to go to Bryn Mawr," Emily put in, knowing quite well that she would go where Frances decided to send her.

"But Ardmore has almost as high a standard, and it's near enough for but college was supposed to foster independence, wasn't it?"

Frances Felton didn't think so. Her idea of parenthood was careful supervision until the day when she could commit her daughter, to a state of pristine innocence, to the arms of some fine young man selected by herself. She was plump and pretty and deceptively soft; that type of woman who boasts of not cutting her hair or shortening her skirts because "John won't let me," thereby preserving her own illusion of complete submission.

She expected to rear her daughter in the same illusion; to hand on the torch to a young man of unimpeachable morals. A decade ago there were a great many women of her type; it is probable that there all ways will be. And Ardmore was chosen as her daughter's Alma Mater.

The next fall Emily entered Ardmore. She was seventeen, then, slight and dark, with a small, exquisitely chiseled face that might one day flame into beauty. Mrs. Felton had selected her wardrobe carefully; excellent garments appropriate for a child of seventeen.

She herself had been married at seventeen, but the fact had escaped her mind, and Emily's clothes, although quite as expensive, were not at all those of a bride.

Edwin Barnes came over the night before she left to say good-by. She had played tennis with Edwin on the Felton court, had gone swimming with him in the Felton pool, but he had never so much as held her hand.

Although he would have enjoyed it very much, Edwin had no idea of holding her hand until he was in a position to ask her to marry him, a fact which had early marked him out as a possible successor to Frances Felton.

HE WAS sober and very reliable. When other young men were drinking heavily and sedulously avoiding the mention of careers, he was quietly finishing up his course at business college and planning to enter his father's wholesale grocery business.

The boys didn't like him a great deal because he cramped their style; not intentionally, but thoroughly. He tried to laugh at their jokes, but it wasn't until everyone else had laughed that he realized they were jokes, and that made him difficult.

With Emily he felt thoroughly at ease, probably because Emily rarely laughed either. She had tried it once or twice with Edwin, but the result was discouraging, and she had relapsed at last into gravity.

And Insist On Old Contract Prices To North Carolina

Reflector Bureau, Sir Walter Hotel.
By J. C. BASKERVILL

Raleigh, Aug. 13.—The new state Textbook Purchase and Rental Commission, in session here today, is in the soup. The soup is so hot and so deep that it may prevent the setting up of any rental textbook system in the public schools for this school year, even on the greatly limited basis on which it had planned to set it up. For the textbook publishers, holding state contracts on adopted books continue to insist that the textbook rental commission buy the books under the old contracts and through the North Carolina School Book Depository, although not a single book will go through this depository. This means, in turn, that the textbook rental commission will have to make Alfred Williams and Co., Raleigh office supply firm which owns the School Book Depository, a gift of $150,000 merely because the present state textbook contracts specify that all adopted books sold in the state must be purchased through the depository. It means that the commission must also pay the very high prices for these books under the

Reflector Bureau, Sir Walter Hotel. By J. C. BASKERVILL

Raleigh, Aug. 14.—The merchants of the state are almost 100 per cent opposed to the minting of fractional coins, such as half-cent pieces and mills, such as is now proposed in Congress.

Willard L. Dowell, executive secretary of the North Carolina Merchants Association said today. Nor is this opposition based solely on the fact that the minting of these fractional coins would make it easier for the public to pay the sales tax and hence tend to perpetuate it, but on the trouble and expense the minting of these fractional coins would cause.

"I have just completed an intensive survey of the merchants and in which I personally travelled more than 2,000 miles talking with merchants about the proposal," Dowell said. "And in the course of this survey and in my contact with merchants I was not able to find more than one merchant in 200 who thought the minting of these small coins would be of any help."

The principal objection on the part of the merchants to these small coins is that they would completely upset all present accounting systems and accounting equipment, such as cash register, adding machines, bookkeeping machines and so forth.

It is impossible to estimate how many hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of these machines would either have to be scrapped entirely or modernized at tremendous cost if these fractional coins should be minted by the Government, as is proposed in a pending bill before Congress. The merchants are convinced that the use of these fractional coins would cost them hundreds of thousands of dollars in accounting costs alone.

"Still another objection to the use of these fractional coins is that it would tend to bring about tremendous complications from the standpoint of prices, both wholesale and retail, and would tend to increase rather than decrease price cutting among individuals merchants, especially on the part of the larger merchants against the smaller ones. For example, larger merchants might advertise prices only two-tenths of a cent under those of other merchants and on very slim margins that would be destructive to the smaller merchants. In fact, the more the merchants think of the proposal the more reasons they find for opposing it."

Dowell agreed, of course, that many merchants opposed it because it would tend to remove one of the principal objections to the sales tax and hence tend to make the sales tax even more permanent in the state that have sales taxes. For instead of having to pay a 10 per cent sales tax on 10 cent purchases, customers would be able to pay the exact amount of the tax, or three mills, by adding three of the tenth-of-a-cent pieces to each ten cent purchase. It would likewise mean that the sales tax could be collected on 5 cent purchases, by adding two of the one-mill pieces to every nickel. It would thus make it possible for customers in states having a sales tax to pay the exact amount of the tax in fractional coins instead of the approximate amount in pennies, as at present. The merchants feel that this would not only help to perpetuate the tax in states now having a sales tax, but would encourage other states to adopt it.

'Lunatic' Held Abusive Term. London (AP)—The words "lunatic," "idiot," or "imbecile" are in future only to be used as terms of abuse. A recent decision of the mental hospitals committee of the London county council forbids the words being used on any memorial stone, brass plate or notice board at its institutions.

Mr. Newcomb discussed the psychological and psychological nature of laughter and demonstrated his philosophy of laughter by relieving "the tension" of his audience with many humorous stories.

COPS BURST ROSITA'S BUBBLE

Rosita Royce, shown in the midst of her nude bubble dance, insists it is art to trip the light fantastic toe with no more concealing effects than something that resembles a huge soap bubble. But deputy sheriffs, who couldn't see art in that light, arrested her in a night club near St. Louis and charged her with indecency. (Associated Press Photo)

THE NATIONAL WHIRLIGIG

Harold is smiling again.

After traveling 15,000 miles the Interior Department's engineers, lawyers and publicists report that the states prefer Ickes to Hopkins projects. They want to spend federal money and their own contributions for "useful and permanent projects" rather than for "boondoggling." This prejudice was particularly strong in the Far West, where numerous state Governors protested bitterly against the Hopkins theory of quick spending.

Although Mr. Ickes' scouts may be suspected of partisanship, other signs reflect dissatisfaction with the Hopkins regime. Labor groups are striking against his wage scale.
In the Northwest the needy refuse to go on relief—sign a pauper's oath—to qualify for the works program rolls. President Roosevelt is hearing plenty about these troubles and may do something about it soon.

RELIEF: President Green of AFL says his organization is pursuing a hands-off policy in the matter of union strikers against PWA wages.
This doesn't jibe with Green's determined fight in the Senate to knock out the "security wage" provision of the works relief resolution.
It's well known that the Federation sympathizes with kickers against security wages. Green himself predicts the strikes will spread.

Harry Hopkins renews his threat to deny relief to everybody who strikes. This goes contrary to his policy last year, when he gave relief to strikers in industry. Success of the strike would demoralize work relief plans and make impossible the hiring of 3,500,000 employables.
But it has already been made known that this number will not and cannot be hired. Outside of CCC only 125,000 are employed at present.

Some of the states are not taking steps to care for the unemployables now on relief, but Hopkins says they will surely be dumped on the states on November 1.

BOYS: Carter Glass' apparent victory in the banking bill controversy demonstrates the supremacy of mind over matter—or physical weariness.

Behind the scenes House conferences took a mean advantage of the 75-year-old Senator. Wise to the fact that excitement upsets the choleric Virginian, Rep. Henry Stea-gall missed no chance to anger Mr.
Glass. He advanced preposterous ideas repulsive to the Senator. "It's your crazy ideas on banking that are responsible for my arthritis,"
Mr. Glass sputtered. Inflationist Goldsborough made matters worse by advancing even more revolutionary schemes. The up piped 75-year-old Chairman Fletcher: "Now, boys, quit frolicking around and let's get down to the bill!"

The Senate's banking expert had to compromise a bit. But he's chuckling at the way he thinks he outwitted the "House playboys."

NEW YORK

By Louis Schneider
CONFIDENCE: According to informed quarters the public has changed its attitude toward banking houses. During the past few months the public has shown more confidence. Deposits have substantially increased. Interior banks—where closings were greatest during 1932 and 1933—report that deposits are from 100 to 300 per cent greater than the low point touched during the panic days. Increased confidence in the national bank structure is viewed as an encouraging business omen. This is particularly evident by the increase in bank clearances.

ENCOURAGING: Informed military contacts disclose activity of a high nature in the War Department. The atmosphere is tense and expectant. It is at its highest peak since 1917. It is hinted that the United States is preparing for a possible emergency. The Department of State, too, doesn't like the out-

IN NEW YORK THEY CALL THIS DANCING

"This," said these couples to the photographer when he snapped them in these curious positions, "is dancing." Taking part in a dance contest in New York, Mr. and Mrs. J. Kelly (left) give their version of the "Lindy Hop," while Midgie Dean and Henry Gompertz (right) are doing the "Tumble Rhumba." (Associated Press Photos) mittee on Military Affairs is asking for an emergency appropriation of $40,000,000. The War Department has asked for 800 new military planes. It is felt that something is about to break somewhere and we must be set.

PEAK: British business conditions are showing marked betterment as indicated by London stock market prices. The average price index advanced from 19 to 21 during the second three months of the year. Bank of England note circulation shows a marked increase. It is at a new high record for all time—$2,027,000,000. Quite a portion of this money is reported coming into American securities. For the first time since 1930 unemployment in Great Britain eased below the two-million mark as compared with a three million peak in January, 1933. Prosperity in Great Britain is attributed to better business conditions in the United States. This is evidenced by the importing and exporting volume between the two nations.

HEALTHY: Banking quarters say that some corporations do not wish to obtain large sums of money through bond issues. They would rather take it on short term credit from banks. It's a form of installment borrowing. Commercial banks are now active for the first time in some years. Bank statisticians believe a wider outlet for dormant capital is in sight. It is regarded as a healthy sign indicating the trend of business. It not only discloses consumer confidence but business confidence as well. Commercial paper is currently being arranged on 90 to 120 day terms. That takes in the busy fall months and holiday season.

SIGNIFICANT: There is a contrary opinion to the belief that the

New York City utility rate situation has been permanently adjusted. Mayor LaGuardia hinted as much in a recent statement. He is determined to seek a vote in the fall elections on the plan to build a municipal power plant. He insists on competition with private plants to force rates to lower levels. Since the Mayor is in constant touch with administration officials in Washington, some quarters regard it as a tip-off that the utility rate structure in other cities is in danger. Long term holders of utility equities regard the LaGuardia statement with more significance than the fact that the House refused to include the "death sentence" in the utility holding bill.

EXPECTED: Reports of a Coughlin-Roosevelt peace treaty blow hot and cold. Some quarters insist that Jimmy Farley came to terms with the radio priest. Others say President Roosevelt can't possibly retract emphasized statements on Congressional bills which Father Coughlin pushed. In any event, the fighting priest is expected to fall in line and swing his following next year to President Roosevelt. Even Republicans don't doubt this.

AGREE: Strange as it may sound security dealers do not particularly favor the tax exempt feature of federal and municipal bonds. The move to eliminate the tax exempt feature—started by President Roosevelt—is gathering momentum. Only a constitutional amendment will accomplish the desired result. Municipal dealers believe that there will always be a demand for village, city, county, state or federal issues. It is certain that institutional and wealthy investors will always give preference to federal and municipalities over those of stock corporations.

Bond dealers, however, are not openly expressing their opinions on July 29-14w-4w.

tax exempt. They feel that if they did say something it would get them in bad with larger distributing organizations and the banks. But they do agree even though they don't say it. (Copyright McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

READY MADE WIFE

Chapter 45
REX IS MISSING

ONLY on one point did Laurie stand up bravely to Mark Albery.

It was about Gladys. "I cannot be separated from my sister until the time when the supposed divorce will be made public," she said. "Gladys will have to be told the truth, so that she can come and be with me. She is not strong. I don't want her to work for a little while. She would break down. I should be worrying about her all the time."

"It is surely foolish to force her to give up her work," Albery retorted, with a certain amount of reason.

"I'm not thinking of doing that. I'm too fond of work myself. And Glad will be a great dancer some day. I want her to have a chance. I want her to go to the best teacher in the world. I want her to go on working and learning until she is ready. But I want her to have a rest first. She is really ill. And she is all I have in the world."

"You surely don't want us to take her on our honeymoon, Laurie?" Albery asked, with his disturbing smile.

Physically and mentally she shrank from him, from the very thought of their married life together. But she must not show it.

"If Gladys is ill," he suggested, "let us leave her in a good nursing home. I will tell my cousin, Mrs. Dent, to look after her. I can think of some plausible story to tell her. She is very simple, kind woman. And then we can decide where Gladys is to go for her training. Anything in the world that is possible I will do to please you, my dear little girl."

So it was settled that way. Laurie had a fairly easy task with Gladys. The girl was really broken. She was in a sense desperately ill. She had a great deal more emotion in her nature than her sister had thought, and more power of suffering. She was listless; she cared for nothing.

Laurie told her that she had to go away on a business trip for her employer. She also told her that she and Rex Moore were going to be divorced. Gladys was not well enough to finish her present contract. Laurie had communicated with the manager of the troupe, and he understood.

Laurie wanted her to go into a nursing home for two or three weeks, so that she could get quite strong again. Mr. Albery's cousin would look after her. Mr. Albery was being kindness itself, as usual.

"Because he's potty about you!" remarked Gladys, with that strange, divining glance of hers. "When you and Rex are divorced, are you going to marry him?"

Laurie admitted that she was. But it was a dead secret.

"Does he know about Jimmy?"

"No, darling. Not from me, of course. And it isn't likely that he'll hear it from Dallas himself. Only Rex knows, and you may be sure that he will never tell."

"You're funny, Laurie," said Gladys. "I can't help feeling that you're in love with Rex all the time. And yet you're divorcing him! But I suppose you've got a reason. Men are all alike."

But she was not really interested. She was too much taken up with her own misery. She fell in with Laurie's plans for her without a word of protest.

MARK ALBERY went over to France.

Not a word about Rex Moore passed between him and Laurie before he left.

Laurie did not communicate with Rex, or he with her. She supposed he was back at Gretton, making his final preparations for the great Pacific flight.

She did not know of Wanda Steele's death. There had been only a brief reference to the accident in the papers, which she had missed.

The day came when, as Laurie told herself, her life would end.

Everything was ready. Her modest luggage was on a cab. Gladys was comfortably installed in the nursing home. She had immediately taken to the rôle of the luxurious patient, and her beauty enchanted the nursing staff, who, one and all, were only too eager to wait on her hand and foot. The rest, and the seclusion from the outside world, were indeed a boon to the girl, and her sister knew that.

Laurie refused to see Mark Albery during the next days. She could not bring herself to. That look on his face haunted her.

There was no news of Rex Moore. Albery accepted her decision with a surprising meekness, and sent her a message every day to say that he had heard nothing, in spite of all his efforts.

He gave his excuse for his return to the office and his postponement of his holiday. It was natural enough.

But when he was alone, he looked as Satan might have looked when his plans went wrong. Rex Moore had started a day too soon. Once in France, he could have kept all news of the airman's flight from Laurie. And once she was his wife, it could not have mattered. She would soon have settled down.

It seemed as if the fellow could not be dead. The report had come from a village in the North of France, but it was found to refer to a young Frenchman who was flying his private plane and crashed and been killed, and who was quite unknown in that part of the country.

(Copyright, 1935, Coralie Stanton)

Laurie has a message from France, tomorrow.

Hot Weather Gets 'Hoppers' In Minnesota

St. Paul, (AP)—Even the clouds that brought rust to decimate the northwestern farmers wheat yields have their silver lining.

A. G. Ruggles, professor of entomology at the University of Minnesota, declared that the sultry and rainy weather responsible for the ravages of black stem rust in the northwest wheat belt this year was the factor that eliminated the grasshopper and chinch bug.

"Grasshoppers and chinch bugs," Ruggles asserted, "have been kept under control by weather this year so that very little damage from either is expected."

At the Albery offices it was understood that Mrs. Moore had gone on her summer holiday. Laurie was keeping on her rooms for Gladys to go back to. Albery had told her to, so that nobody should suspect the truth.

Albery had come back to London yesterday, and was meeting her at the station.

She drove away from her little home with despair in her heart.

Albery was in the station courtyard. He hurried to her and clasped her hand, his eyes devouring her face that looked rarely beautiful today in its pallor and fragility, with the blue eyes, dark and haunted, a light in them not of this earth. The face of a woman who was offering herself as a sacrifice. And Albery's face that of a man who was gloating over a victim, with insanity in his brain.

As they went into the station, Laurie saw a newspaper headline.

The black letters danced before her eyes: "REX MOORE MISSING. REPORTED DEAD."

Albery saw the paper at the same time as Laurie.

The girl stared at him unseeing, and turned to go out of the station again.

"Rex—missing!" she said "Rex reported dead!"

Albery gripped her arm. "Don't be a little fool! Come and get into the train."

"No, I can't go away without knowing."

"Don't make a scene here! Come on—we shall miss the train."

BUT she suddenly recovered herself and said firmly: "I am not going away. How can you expect me to? Where is Rex? Where has he flown to?"

"I can't say for certain. He was going to cross the Alps, to make some tests."

"Why didn't you tell me?"

"I didn't see why it should interest you any more. Come, Laurie, don't stand here talking!"

"Nothing will induce me to leave England until I know that he is safe," she answered calmly.

"You are being ridiculous. Everything is arranged for our marriage tomorrow."

"Marriage?" She spoke the word as if it could have no connection with herself. "But if Rex is dead—"

She stopped. The look on his face froze the words on her lips. He was looking at the contents bill. He was smiling that terrible smile. His close-set lips parted in that cruel, triumphant grin of a man revelling in some childish satisfaction. She had seen it on his face that morning on the Gretton airfield when she had been about to go up with Rex Moore and he had come and prevented her.

And, all of a sudden, she knew that if Rex Moore were dead, Mark Albery had sent him to his death. She felt it not as a suspicion but as a certainty. She looked at the man beside her with horror in her eyes.

"If he's dead, you've killed him," she said tonelessly.

"You are mad!" he retorted, but the madness was in his own eyes, and again he gripped her arm and tried to force her into the station.

But she tore herself away. "I am going back home."

Laurie refused to see Mark Albery during the next days. She could not bring herself to. That look on his face haunted her.

There was no news of Rex Moore. Albery accepted her decision with a surprising meekness, and sent her a message every day to say that he had heard nothing, in spite of all his efforts.

He gave his excuse for his return to the office and his postponement of his holiday. It was natural enough.

But when he was alone, he looked as Satan might have looked when his plans went wrong. Rex Moore had started a day too soon. Once in France, he could have kept all news of the airman's flight from Laurie. And once she was his wife, it could not have mattered. She would soon have settled down.

It seemed as if the fellow could not be dead. The report had come from a village in the North of France, but it was found to refer to a young Frenchman who was flying his private plane and crashed and been killed, and who was quite unknown in that part of the country.

Laurie has a message from France, tomorrow.

Chapter 46 LAURIE'S MESSAGE

WHERE was Rex Moore, then? Did he bear a charmed life, or was he dead?

So the madness worked on that brilliant, unbalanced brain. Until, on the fifth day after Rex Moore had been reported missing, Mark Albery was found unconscious on the floor of his study in his Chelsea flat.

When he recovered from the stroke, his mind was affected, and he babbled nonsense about having sent Rex Moore to his death in a plane that had been tampered with. Nobody believed it, of course. His doctors sent him into a nursing home for such cases, and declared that it was only a temporary breakdown and that he would recover his reason very soon.

It was on the following day that Laurie received a wire from a doctor in a remote French village, asking her to come at once, as her husband was laid up there with a broken ankle.

The journey was like a dream to her. She flew to Chamounix, and from there hired a motor car that took her up into the mountains.

And there she found Rex, under the shadow of Mont Blanc, the snowy giant on whose icy slopes he might so easily have found his grave.

He was bruised and shaken by the crash, but had no worse injury than the simple fracture of his ankle. He had been delirious for three days, from the results of exposure in a high valley, where a party of guides had found him, hence the delay in letting anybody know of his plight.

They met in a simple room, with varnished wooden walls and scrubbed floor. From the balcony one looked on the tall, solemn pines and the eternal snows, under the blazing sapphire arch of the August sky.

Laurie walked slowly to his long chair. Then, she suddenly knelt down beside it.

"Oh, Rex—Rex—I've found you at last!"

"I had to send for you, Laurie," he answered in a strangely solemn voice. "I didn't want to. I knew you wouldn't want to come—but you would come, because you think you owe me something."

"Oh, Rex, how did it happen?"

"That's what I felt I must tell you. Albery tried to kill me."

"I knew it," she whispered. And she told him what had happened at the London station.

"He tried before," Rex went on. "That time when you were going up with me. You remember. I couldn't find my usual mechanic. He must have told the strange man to fill my tanks with the new fuel. Luckily, I had warning from the engine in time, and had a parachute."

"And this time?" she asked fearfully.

"This time the plane had been tampered with. You wouldn't understand. It was done by an expert. No body could have discovered it—until the plane fell to pieces in the air. I was lucky again. I started off the day before I intended to, and the job wasn't quite finished. So I escaped with my life. I had to tell you, Laurie. I couldn't bear the thought that you were going to marry a murderer."

"I knew it, Rex. And I'm not going to marry him." She was distracted.

"And I think he's gone mad. They've put him into a home."

But here there seemed to be no comfort, either. Rex Moore was still so far away, so remote. His face was set; his eyes had that inhuman, snowy look; his mouth was angry and stern.

"I knew that day at the station that I couldn't marry him," she went on. "Not for anything in the world, not even for—" She stopped abruptly.

"Not even for what, Laurie? Why were you going to marry him? For his money, for his position—for what else?"

"No—no!" She broke down. He was all she wanted in the world. He was her happiness; he was her man. Nothing mattered but that he should know the truth.

"Rex, he forced me to say I would marry him. He found out about us; I didn't tell him. I had to lie to you. And he threatened to ruin your career if I didn't marry him. He said he could. He wouldn't help you any more, he wouldn't let anybody else help you. He said he had the power, and I believed him."

She looked at him in an agony of fear lest he should not believe her. His arms closed around her and held her with a fierce tenderness.

"Laurie, you did that for me! How could I be so blind? Of course, Albery could have ruined me in my job. Then, you do love me? You love me as much as that?"

Their lips met. They were one in that tremendous and awesome rapture that is both violence and peace.

A long time passed before they spoke again.

Then Laurie said: "But your career will be ruined. Mr. Albery will never forgive us. You don't mind now, but later on you will be unhappy. Can I make up for that?"

"You would make up for anything, my sweet, my wonderful Laurie!" he told her. "But I'm no longer a penniless beggar, thanks to Wanda Steele."

He saw that she did not understand, and told her of Wanda's tragic death and of his inheritance. She felt a little pang of jealousy that another woman could do so much for him, so much more than she ever could, even though she was dead. But, of course, she had to be glad.

Laurie stayed in the little village until Rex Moore could get about. Then they went to Geneva, and were married by the British Consul.

"So now you're really Mrs. Rex Moore!" he said teasingly the next day, as they strolled by the lake.

"And how does it feel to be married to a poor devil who started out hating you?"

"I never hated you!" she laughed happily. "And it feels too wonderful for words! And life is wonderful—and you are wonderful! And, what's more, it's real!"

They went back to England to pick up Gladys. Rex agreed with Laurie that they could not leave the girl alone.

And all the outside world ever knew was that Mrs. Rex Moore had come to Switzerland to be with her famous husband after his accident, and the devoted couple so dramatically reunited a few months ago, were on their way to California, where the airman had recently inherited a beautiful estate.

PARIS OFFERS NEW 'PICK UP' SPORT FROCKS TO BRIGHTEN DROOPING SUMMER WARDROBES

A FROCK which Paris designs to brighten drooping summer wardrobes is this one of beige wool barred in brown. It has a divided skirt and is fastened with brown leather buttons and belt. A slouch hat in the same tones and a brown wool jacket complete the costume. Designed by de Nagornoff.

Black is a favorite town color, with dark blue, wine red and mustard green likewise shown. Brown and beige appear more often in sports frocks. There are a number of black crepe frocks designed with slender waists and big sleeves just short of full length, which are finished with striking accents. One has a cluster of mother-of-pearl leaves at the base of the draped neckline, another is trimmed with white silk braid frogs. Colorful touches such as an irregularly shaped pimento red crepe yoke or a wide green leather belt finish others. Some of the new black wools are marked by such fur trims as a black breitschwanz plastron or a shaved lamb cowl collar and belt, while others have bodices worked with shiny black sequins darts or belts touched with a palette design. A dark carnation red crepe frock is smartened by velvet pipings of the same color which encircle the round collar and band the wrists. A red velvet carnation closes the neckline. Wools, both knitted and woven, make the smartest country frocks which often appear in wood brown and sand beige tones. Some of the smartest are cut with divided skirts and topped by short jackets so that they are ready for golf links or fields.

ARE YOU A SAFE DRIVER?

... ask yourself these questions

1. Which requires greater caution—a curve to the right or a curve to the left—and why?
2. What is the safest way to handle your car on a highway curve—when do you use the brakes—when do you throw out the clutch—when do you accelerate?
3. In rounding a curve at high speed, is it safer to hold the steering wheel steady or "jiggle" it?
4. In passing another car on the road, is it safer to make a short, quick swing around, or a longer, more gradual one—and why?
5. On a slippery or icy road, your rear wheels suddenly start skidding. What is the way to bring the car out of the skid?
6. When is it safe to pass another car on a hill?

Even the most experienced drivers seldom know the correct answers to these questions. And there are several additional safety questions that every driver should be able to answer. Get them all, and get the right answers, from the nearest Hudson and Terraplane dealer. Come in today.

WADE HURLS 3-1 VICTORY OVER BEARS

Larry Wade turned in a great pitching performance at Third Street school grounds yesterday afternoon and helped Greenville to trounce New Bern 3 to 1.

The victory enabled Greenville to make a clean sweep of the two-game series with the Bears. Wade was also credited with winning the first encounter, having relieved Williams in the latter stage of the game.

In making the visitors to only three hits, Wade also caused six batters to whiff in a vain attempt to connect with his offerings.

Although Stuart Flythe held the Greensies hitless until the fourth inning, the murderers' row of the leaders launched a terrific attack in the fifth that resulted in two runners crossing the rubber.

Billy Huiskamp started the rally with a free pass to first. Johnson singled and Farley doubled to score Huiskamp. Johnson scored on Stine's long fly to the center garden.

The final fly came in the eighth on a series of singles by Parker, Johnson and Farley.

The Bears, not quite as vicious as the day before, tallied in the seventh on a walk to Norwood and double by Eason.

Shipp, Cleary and Eason were responsible for the three hits obtained by the visitors, while Johnson with two singles, and Manager Bo Farley with a double and single, led the batting attack for Greenville.

It was the first game played by the locals in several days that one pitcher was able to go the entire route. Virtually every club in the league has had to use more than one pitcher in any single game recently, each staging a titanic struggle to increase its lead in the standing of clubs with the season rapidly drawing to a close.

Today found Greenville playing at Snow Hill and one of the big fights of the last several days is expected. Snow Hill, with a greatly improved lineup, has forged virtually into a tie with Kinston for second place, and will offer a slashing offensive in an effort to retain the advantage.

However, with Greenville due to win at least three straight to maintain its record of five straight after a loss, the Greene county boys are finding it very difficult to increase their average.

TARBORO GETS 9-5 WIN

Tarboro, Aug. 14.—Tarboro gained a split in a two-game series with Snow Hill by taking a 9-5 slugfest here yesterday afternoon.

Rhymer, local hurler, yielded 14 hits but was able to coast to victory after his mates tallied five times in the fifth to break a 2-all tie.

Parmelee started on the mound for Snow Hill but was yanked in the fifth after issuing a walk to Male and hitting Cobb with a pitch. Bobby McFadden relieved Parmelee. Bassin was safe on Perry's error, McArthur singled to left, and three runs scored when Neuman erred. Bryant's fly to center scored McArthur. Short drew a walk. Askey flied out, and Rhymer and Chumbris hit safely for the other run.

Tarboro's attack was led by McArthur, who hit a double and three singles for a perfect average. He drove in five runs and scored one. Parrish, with two singles and a double, and Perry, with three singles, led Snow Hill. Ralph Williams, second-sacker, featured a field for the losers and contributed two doubles to their attack. Williams had a perfect fielding mark for nine chances.

Bassin, Tarboro outfielder, accepted eight chances in fine style.

DEAN STILL LEADS RACE WITH STICK

With 59 safe cracks, several of them for extra bases, "Chubby" Dean, Greenville pitcher and outfielder, continued today to lead the local club's race with the stick. He went to bat 141 times and appeared in a total of 43 games.

It is the third successive week Dean has led the team at bat. He received additional honors the past two weeks by leading the entire league.

Dean, who has been with the local club for three seasons, further increased his average yesterday with another circuit drive, along with Ace of Hearts Parker, who occupied fifth place in the batting averages.

Barley, pitcher, who held the batting lead for some time, was in second place with 14 hits out of 42 trips to the rubber. "Ty" Wagner, catcher, was in third place with 69 safe drives out of 197 times at bat.

Johnson, first baseman, with 208 safe drives to the rubber, was credited with 63 hits, more than any other player in the league, but he has been to bat more times.
