RETAIN CLAUSE OFFERING FDR MORE POWERS

President Would Be Able To Regulate Combat Zones

EMBARGO OFFER BEING REFUSED

Wives of North Carolina Congressmen to Attend British Embassy Garden Party

Washington, June 7.—(AP)—The Foreign Affairs committee refused today to strike from the new administration-approved neutrality act a section which Rep. Fish (R.-N.Y.), a member, said would "give the President more power than that given any other President."

The section authorized the chief executive to define combat zones through which armor ships could not pass except by regulations issued by the chief executive.

The committee also refused again to write an embargo clause into the legislation, this time by Rep. Schiffer (R.-W. Va.) who wanted to retain a ban on all shipments to belligerents. A modified embargo provision was defeated by the committee yesterday.

The bill on which the President has been represented as wishing a veto at this session would repeal the embargo provision. The committee will meet again Monday.

Other developments: President Roosevelt sent the nomination of Archibald McLeish of Farmington, Conn., to be librarian of Congress. President Roosevelt told a calling list to a minimum and the White House officials said he had an appointment from Governor through Sunday during the visit of the British sovereign.

President Roosevelt worked last night in his study to clear his desk and arranged to spend this afternoon on similar work at his desk in the executive office.

Wives of the members of Congress in the Carolinas will attend the British embassy garden party for King George and Queen Elizabeth. They will put on their finest for the ultra-exclusive social event, but there was grave doubt that there would be any curtsying. Mrs. Jeriah William Bailey said she could curtsy, but expressed doubt that a bob to the Queen of England would be expected. She and Senator Bailey will attend.

Senator Reynolds (D.-N.C.) said he would go to the party unless some other development requires his attendance.

Preparations for the party among the wives of the representatives from the Carolinas likewise included the assembling of special gowns for the occasion, but among them, too, prevailed the sentiment that curtsying was not called for.

Mrs. Lindsay Warren of Washington, N. C., whose husband is chairman of the House Accounts committee showed a small yellow print chiffon, a large beige hat, with gloves and shoes to match. Mrs. John H. Kerr of Warrenton, N. C., planned to wear a street length white crepe dress. She was definite she would not curtsy.

The idea of dispensing with the meetings came about because the Spring sessions of court have been concluded.

Trustees Delay Election Of Controller For U. N. C.

Reflector Bureau. Raleigh, June 7.—Last-minute discovery of a statute which prohibits any present or past trustee of the University of North Carolina from holding any remunerative position at the University was principally responsible for postponement in selection of a successor to the late Comptroller Charles Woolen.

According to a source so authoritative as to be all but unimpeachable, the nominating committee of the trustees was ready to submit the names of three men, all trustees, from whom the choice would likely have been made, but it occurred to one of the three nominating group members that there is a law such as mentioned and inspection of the KING TO MAKE HISTORY WITH VISIT TO U. S.

Armed Forces of Two Nations To Stand Guard at Border

HULL TO DIRECT ENTRY PROGRAM

To Be First Time in History a Reigning British Sovereign Has Set Foot On U. S. Soil

Niagara Falls, June 7. (AP)—Armed forces of two nations smiled across the international border today in a joint mission of peace—protection of King George VI, who will make history tonight as the first reigning British monarch ever to set foot on United States soil.

Soldiers of the regular army, national guardsmen and police of the United States eagerly awaited the task to be turned over to them by Canadian troops and constabulary when the King and Queen Elizabeth cross the border, unfortified for more than a century.

Weeks of preparation have preceded the entry ceremony, expected to last scarcely five minutes. Its climax will be a welcome extended by Secretary of State Hull.

After a brief visit in Niagara Falls, Ont., ending the first phase of their tour of Canada, the royal couple will ride their blue and silver train across Whirlpool Rapids bridge and stop under a train shed in time-timed suspension bridge station.

The sovereigns will descend and be greeted by Sir Ronald Lindsay, British ambassador to the United States, who will present Secretary Hull and Mrs. Hull in a ceremony scheduled for 9:35 p. m. The royal party and Secretary Hull's reception committee will then enter for Washington.

Police and private guards yesterday began vigil over abutments of the Whirlpool Rapids bridge. Police chiefs of cities on both sides of the gorge issued orders prohibiting anyone from approaching close to the abutments until after midnight tonight.

BURIED TAXES ON FOOD HIGH

Greenville Residents Pay Nearly $60,918 Annually

Families in Greenville pay an estimated $60,918 in hidden taxes annually through their purchases of food, a National Consumers Tax Commission survey showed today.

"Nearly eight per cent of the total food bill represents shifty taxes buried in the price of every purchase," the report stated. "These unseen levies, for example, take 11 per cent of butter costs, 6 1/2 per cent of bread costs, 10 1/2 per cent of sliced bacon and 14 1/2 per cent of the cost of coffee."

The report was made public through Mrs. William T. Hannah, of Waynesville, state director, who leads NCTC study groups in about 110 North Carolina communities in the educational crusade against "unnecessary consumer-penalizing taxes." The report added:

"Chief offenders, and those that fall most heavily on lower income families, are hidden taxes. These are levied originally against the producer, manufacturer, shipper and distributor. Unable to absorb the load, each must pass on a share of its taxes and the consumer ultimately pays them, usually without knowing it."

The commission, in whose non-partisan crusade groups in 4,600 communities have launched tax study programs, said the hidden tax figure does not include the many other hidden and direct taxes families here have to pay.

The food estimate was computed from NCTC averages based on last available U. S. Bureau of Census figures which placed 1935 food sales in Greenville at $781,000. Government estimates of total sales in the county last year approximate the total in the 1935 study, the NCTC said.

U. S. Department of Agriculture Officials To Explain System To Pitt Residents

A referendum will be held in various townships of the county June 19 to 24 for the purpose of giving Pitt farmers an opportunity to say "whether or not they wish to have the service of government grading of tobacco on the Greenville market." R. R. Bennett, Pitt county farm agent, revealed today.

"Farmers who sold tobacco on the Greenville market in 1938 are the ones who will be extended the opportunity of making this important decision in the referendum," declared Bennett.

The referendum comes on the heels of the offer that "free government grading of tobacco on the warehouse floor will be made available to one large market in Eastern Carolina.

In order that farmers may obtain a clear conception of the government grading system, representatives from the United States Department of Agriculture will explain the system and answer questions at a meeting in the Ayden Town Hall Monday night, June 12, at 8 o'clock, for the first of a series of such meetings in the county.

CAMP TO OPEN ON JUNE 14TH

Fort Bragg Prepares To Receive 650 Young Men

Fort Bragg, June 7.—Preparations are rapidly being completed for the reception on June 14th of approximately 650 young men at Fort Bragg, for a month's training with the Citizen's Military Training Camp. A great deal of interest has been shown this year by the return of a large number of men who have attended the Camp at Fort Bragg in previous years.

Extensive plans are being made to make this year's camp both beneficial and pleasant for the trainees. The Camp will be organized as a regiment of light artillery consisting of two battalions of three batteries each. The batteries will be equipped with the "French 75" gun, one of the finest weapons in use during the World War. Supervised athletics will be held for all men in camp and numerous competitions will be held in such sports as swimming, boxing, tennis, volley-ball and track.

The Camp Area is under the command of Brigadier General Bryden who is in command of Fort Bragg. Lieutenant Colonel James A. Lester, 17th Field Artillery, will be Camp Executive and, under his direction, a small group of regular army officers and enlisted men will carry on the administrative functions of the camp, while instruction in military subjects will be given chiefly by officers of the 334th, 335th and 336th Field Artillery.

RECORD IS SET IN BOND SALES

North Carolina Sells $2,250,000.00 In Bonds Today

Raleigh, June 7.—(AP)—The State of North Carolina sold $2,250,000 worth of bonds today at a low record interest basis of 1.26677 per cent. The old record was 2.07 per cent.

Kirchofer and Arnold Company of Raleigh, took the issue. This is the second time in two years the firm has bought an entire issue of state bonds—at record low interest rates—the only two times a North Carolina firm has taken the securities to "keep them at home."

The bonds to repay $1,500,000 spent for text books and $750,000 for permanent improvements at three state insane hospitals and Caswell Training school, were authorized in 1937 but not issued then as the state could use available funds. State Treasurer Charles M. Johnson said if the bonds had been issued two years ago their interest cost probably would have been $978,000 while the interest cost under the Kirchofer-Arnold bid would be only $188,750, a saving to the state of $790,000. By using the money it had on hand instead of issuing the bonds in 1937 the state also saved $125,000 interest during the past two years.

There were 13 bidders. The Kirchofer-Arnold bid called for the first $300,000 maturities to bear 11-2 per cent and the remainder to bear 11-4 per cent.

County Agents Campaign To Retain Dean Schaub

Reflector Bureau. Sir Walter Hotel. Raleigh, June 7.—County farm agents throughout the state are campaigning actively against the appointment of anyone to take Dean I. O. Schaub of State College his duties as acting Director of Experiment Stations, a post which has been vacant since the resignation of R. Y. Winters in October, 1937.

Appointment of an experiment director is reported to have been practically pledged to members of the General Assembly by University of North Carolina President Frank Graham; and it is known that Dr. Graham has had the matter under consideration.

Record Holder Had Started On Trip To See Mother

Washington, June 7.—(AP)—Francisco Serabia, Mexican aviator who recently broke the non-stop record from Mexico City to New York was killed today in taking off from Bolling Field on a visit to his mother at Ciudad Lerdo, Durango.

His wife and their 10-year-old son, Francisco, Jr., who were watching the take-off with members of the Mexican embassy staff, saw him fall with his speedy biplane into the Potomac river.

Four minutes after leaving the ground the plane fell. Lieutenant commander M. Cereno and Dr. L. Quantanilla of the Mexican embassy staff, swam to it in the hope that the flier was still alive.

After two hours a crane hauled in the ship, which the young flier had called the sky conquerer. His body was inside.

Serabia came here Monday after an uneventful flight from New York. He had landed there May 24 from Mexico City, with only one gallon of gasoline left in his tank.

An army doctor expressed the opinion Serabia's neck was broken when the plane hit.

Army field officials said that Serabia gunned down the run-way carrying a heavy load of gasoline. The craft left the ground after a run of about a mile and obtained an altitude of about 100 feet and then fell into the river.

Syphilis Clinics Opening In Ayden

A venereal disease clinic will be opened in Ayden on Monday, June 19, at 2 o'clock in the Town Hall, the Pitt County health department revealed today.

Such clinics are already in operation in Greenville, Farmville, and Bethel, and last month 1,584 persons were treated at the Greenville clinic, 217 at Bethel and 250 at Farmville, for a combined total of 2,051 persons receiving treatment.

The Ayden clinic will be under the auspices of the health department, and conducted by Ayden physicians. It is being supported by county, state and federal appropriations.

In all of the venereal disease clinics in the county, a blood test may be had free by all who apply and treatment is free to all who are unable to pay for private treatment.

Man Held On Charge Of Whipping Children

R. S. Pool, Greenville white man, is facing a charge of assault after having allegedly whipped two children on the streets about a block from their home late yesterday afternoon.

The two children, Bobby and Walter Ray Perry, are the children of Mr. and Mrs. Clifton Perry.

Assistant Chief of Police J. L. Whitchard declared that Pool is being drinking and, when taken to police headquarters, said he did not know why he whipped the children.

County Agents Campaign To Retain Dean Schaub

North Carolina, presumably at the request of University officials, to look the field over and for consideration of the post.

It was this visit which appears to have the active efforts of the county farm agents to keep Dean Schaub on the job—one of the three supposedly full-time ones. He is now filling at one and the same time.

A group of agents called upon at least one member of the committee recently appointed to formulate a new policy for the school of agriculture at State College and besought him to leave Dean Schaub's present duties and functions unchanged. It is likely that they made the same representation to other members of the committee.

Decision to Send Special Representative To Seek to Effect Mutual Assistance Pact Announced In House of Commons By Prime Minister Chamberlain

London, June 7.—(AP)—Great Britain decided today to send a special envoy to Moscow to speed up negotiations to bring Russia back into the British front.

Prime Minister Chamberlain announced the decision in the House of Commons and said the envoy would go with instructions to "facilitate and accelerate" attempts to complete the proposed three-power mutual assistance pact.

Although the name of the envoy was not announced, Chamberlain said he would be a representative of the foreign office, a civil servant and not a member of the government.

The prime minister declared that Great Britain and Soviet Russia were agreed in principle, but there still were some obstacles such as opposition of Baltic states to being given guarantees of assistance against aggression by the three-power group.

A special British representative, he said, would be in position to inform Sir William Seeds, ambassador to Moscow on the government's attitude and thus avoid further delay which must necessarily accompany exchange of diplomatic notes.

He continued that Finland, Latvia and Estonia had expressed opposition to receiving guarantees such as Russia had proposed and that the British government did not want to impose guarantees on states against their will.

He said the British government was satisfied that the Soviet government was prepared to conclude an agreement on the basis of full reciprocity.

Privies Available Under W P A Plan

J. H. Moore, Pitt County sanitary inspector, today declared that "the privy program sponsored by the W. P. A. and State laws governing the ownership of privies do not seem to be fully understood by citizens of the county."

Under the W. P. A. program, all labor used in the construction and setting of the privies is free, the owner providing the material. The lumber need not be new, but may be old lumber which is in good condition, according to the inspector.

Upon the request of Moore, he will furnish W. P. A. labor to any point in the county where two or more privies are to be constructed. He may be reached through the Pitt County health department in Greenville.

In connection with the program, Dr. N. Thomas Ennett, Pitt county health officer, stated "One case of typhoid has already been reported in the county, and as the typhoid season is approaching, I especially urge all citizens to protect themselves against typhoid fever by providing a sanitary privy for the home."

Visitors to Crater Lake National Park, in Oregon, increased 23 per cent in 1938.

Star-Spangled Banner. During the British attack at Beaufort, Francis Scott Key wrote the "Star-Spangled Banner." That was the night of September 13, 1814. On that night Francis Scott Key was a prisoner on a British ship. The darkness of the night the fort could not be seen. When the sun burst he could see glimpses of it. While in front of the fort he saw the figures of men and their guns. By the gun firing he knew the fort was still fighting. At the break of dawn he strained his eyes to see that Baltimore was safe. Joy came to his heart and tears to his eyes. Words seemed to come to his mouth. So he took a piece of paper from his pocket and wrote the "Star-Spangled Banner."

Dixie-U. S. A. At The Pitt. "Dixie-U. S. A." is the title of the new "March of Time" being shown at the Pitt today and Thursday. The subject deals with the South today, and recently one of Dixie's leading newspapers made the following editorial comment concerning it: "All too frequently the South as pictured by an outsider is either all magnolias and melody, or a dark blot of social and economic backwardness. Since both views are distorted and lacking altogether in perspective, it is refreshing to have the editors of the March of Time offer as honest an appraisal of the South and its problems as the current release on the screen this week at the Pitt Theatre."

"Dixie-U. S. A." is the title of the release. It neither drips with honeyed hokey nor does it dodge the realities of problems which cause us greatest concern. But through it all there is a note of hopefulness and progress characteristic of the new South of today.

At the conclusion of the games, Mrs. James Picklen was awarded the high score prize.

A delightful frozen salad course was served by the hostesses.

The hostess' gift to Miss Fleming was a bride's book, attractively wrapped in white, tied with white satin ribbon and showered with sweetpeas and fern.

Stroud-Settle. The Eighth Street Christian Church was the scene of a beautiful wedding on Tuesday afternoon at five o'clock, when Miss Helen Settle became the bride of Mr. Otto Stroud, Jr., of Ayden. The church was beautifully decorated to carry out a green and white color scheme. Stately palms, ferns and southern smilax were artistically arranged on the altar, the greens interspersed with tall baskets of white lilies. The only light was furnished from white cathedral candles burning in seven-branched candelabra.

As the guests assembled, Mrs. C. R. Hinchshaw of High Point, aunt of the bride, played a beautiful program of nuptial music.

During the ceremony she played "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life." Lutheran Wedding March was used as the bridal party entered, and Mendelssohn's was used as a recessional of the bride party.

Just before the entrance of the bride party, Mrs. Harper Holliday of Wilson, also an aunt of the bride, beautifully sang "All For You," "Because," and "I Love You Truly."

The ushers were Messrs. William C. Shreve of West Falls Church, Va., Tommy Neal of Richmond, Va., Clyde Tyndall and Roy Turnage of Ayden, and were first to meet her engagement a short time ago.

Next came the bridesmaids, Miss Mary Woolard, Miss Garnett Hinchshaw, cousin of the bride, of High Point; Miss Florence Holliday, cousin of the bride, of Wilson; and Miss Madeline Woolard. The bridesmaids wore princess gowns of marquisette on similar lines in rainbow shades, with hats in corresponding shades of flowers and tulle. They carried arm bouquets of mixed garden flowers.

They were followed by the maid of honor, Miss Mary Lorraine Horne, who wore a gown of Eleanor blue lace with godets of tulle and a flower crowned hat of net. She carried an arm bouquet of Johanna Hill roses.

Next came the matron of honor, Mrs. Horace Herndon Settle, mother of the bride. Her gown was of cyclamen chiffon made with bolero and she wore a corresponding hat of flowers, and carried an arm bouquet of Talsman roses.

Preceding the bride was the dainty little flower girl, Suddie May Spain, cousin of the bride. She wore a full length frock of Eleanor blue tulle, made Empire style, with full skirt, and a tulle hat of the same shade. She carried a basket of roses and sweetpeas.

The bride entered with her uncle, Mr. Sprill Spain, who gave her in marriage. She looked unusually lovely in a demure Victorian model of Duchess satin in pictorial width, with Chantilly lace bodice and a full marquisette skirt over tulle worn en train. Her long veil of satin was caught with orange blossoms and worn in a halo of seed pearls. Her flowers were a bride's bouquet of orchids and bride's roses showered with valley lilies. The groom, with his best man, Mr. Richard H. Weightman, of Chevy Chase, Md., met the bride at the altar.

Rev. S. P. Spiegel of West Point, Ga., uncle of the bride, performed the ceremony, using the ever beautiful ring service. He was assisted by the bride's pastor, Rev. W. A. Ryan.

Mrs. Otto Clay Stroud, mother of the groom, wore hyacinth blue lace with a corsage of Briarcliff roses.

The bride is the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Settle. She was born, reared and educated here, where she has made a host of friends. After graduation from the city schools, she attended East Carolina Teachers College. She has been the recipient of a number of social courtesies since the announcement of her engagement a short time ago.

The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Clay Stroud of Ayden, and is well known here. He received his Bachelor of Science degree from the Virginia Military Institute in 1937. At present he is connected with Tyndall-Boyd-Stroud Wholesale Company in Ayden.

After a reception at the home of the bride's mother, the couple left for a wedding trip through the Shenandoah Valley and other points north. For traveling, the bride wore a navy blue and white crepe model fashioned on princess lines with a full length matching coat and a corsage of orchids. Her accessories were navy blue.

Brides-Elect Honored. A delightful event complimenting three brides-elect, was the party given on Monday afternoon when Miss Louisa Hooker entertained at her home on East Fifth street, honoring Miss Laura Fleming, Miss Hulda Nobles, and Miss Margaret Bostic.

Guests were received by the hostesses and invited into the reception hall, where delicious punch was served by Mrs. W. E. Hooker and Mrs. Troy Burnette from a beautiful and most unusual punch bowl, made of ice with frozen roses, giving it an effective, cooling and silvery appearance.

A bridal motif of pastel shades was carried out in the decorations of larkspur, gypsophelia and feverfew used in the library, music room and dining room, where eight tables were arranged for bridge.

Each bride's place was marked with a corsage of gardenias.

Following the games and during the refreshment hour, the tables were centered with miniature crystal hats filled with flowers. These were given as table prizes and were won by Miss Elizabeth Skinner, Mrs. Berry Bostic, Miss Christine Wilkerson, Mrs. Ed Wilkerson, Mrs. Bill Barbra, Mrs. Staunton Harvey, Mrs. Jack Nobles and Miss Mary Sinau, Robeson.

Mrs. John Hodges, Sr., was presented the high score prize, and Miss Christine Wilkerson the low. Mrs. Kenneth Gallup, who has recently moved to Greenville from Fayetteville, was given a remembrance.

Ices, moulded in wedding bell and slipper designs, green and white individual cakes and white mints decorated with lilies of the valley, were served.

Miss Hooker remembered the honorees with monogrammed crystal in boxes attractively wrapped in silver and white paper, tied with white satin ribbon and bearing miniature corsages of white flowers.

Report Of West Greenville P. T. A. On the fourth Wednesday evening in September, the Parent-Teacher Association of West Greenville school held their initial meeting for this term in the school auditorium. This meeting was called for the purpose of making an appeal toward traffic regulation in West-end school zone, thereby assuring the safety of the children. Our Mayor, Chief of Police and Superintendent of Schools were present to offer suggestions and cooperation. The asso-

THE DAILY REFLECTOR Wednesday, June 7, 1899

J. L. Little, cashier of the Bank of Greenville, left this morning to attend the bankers' convention at Raleigh. If he happens to be heard from over in Tennessee while away no one need be surprised, as he knows the way back.

The Singletary chapter of the Daughters of the Confederacy will meet tomorrow at 4:30 o'clock. Any ladies desiring to become members of the chapter will be heartily welcomed.

Charlotte now has telephone connections with Richmond, Philadelphia and New York.

The free-will offering made at each meeting has kept a steady income for the treasury, but our outstanding financial success was realized on Party Night at West-End, when our treasury was swelled considerably, thus enabling the association to reach its yearly goal, which is to place $75 worth of books in the library to be in readiness for next year. Owing to illness and other complications, the play by the school mothers was finally dropped, but work will be continued again next year.

Our organization has functioned with a most inspiring spirit of cooperation and the "good-will bound" the good-will of faculty, parents and student-body has never been green slack, and now at the close of this school term we know that we have enjoyed another good year at West Greenville.—Reported.

Hollywood Sights And Sounds

Hollywood—Sydney Guilaroff rides a nightmare for a living. He toys with dynamite, he braves tigers, he dangles from high cliffs with professional oblivion below. In other words, he is a stylish for women's hair.

Not just women, however. Movie women. Movie women in "The Women." There are 40-odd, each with hair to be styled, in the picture. The prospect would appall a lesser man, send him jittering into retreat. Not so with young Guilaroff, who flaunts a mean comb and speaks persuasively to assorted tempers and temperaments and—usually—gets his way.

If you think hair is hair and should be worn as it comes, Guilaroff will go part of the way with you. He agrees that hair is hair. But that he insists, is the main difficulty in his work. A dress designer, he points out, can twist a harel here or take in a tuck there and he has something "new." With hair now, there are just so many ways to treat it and that's why his (says Guilaroff) is a tough bed to lie in. A fellow in hair-styling has to step lively, thinking up things, apart from his movie duty of keeping ahead of current styles. Guilaroff, true to his word, was stepping lively all over the set. He'd no sooner finished "styling" Rosalind Russell than Lana Turner came in for a hair-do, and after that it was Charlotte Wynters who needed a re-teaching.

As you'll want to be sure to avoid becoming a hair-stylist, a short history of Guilaroff will point the way. At 17 he was "sweeping the floors" in a New York beauty shop when he was one of the help in Antoine's when Joan Crawford came in, and all the other operators buy, and went to Sydney. From then on, Sydney was famous in Hollywood. Joan came back, and sent him Connie Bennett, and Claudette Colbert, and other cuties. And in time he came to Hollywood and a Metro contract.

He still thinks Joan is tops, even though she was hard to convince about the hair-do she finally accepted for "The Women." Sydney worked out on seven wigs, each a little shorter each time than Joan's own long bob, and finally evolved the "reversed wind-blown" adaptation of the baby-bob she is wearing.

Joan's hair is about an inch long now. Norma Shearer's, too, has left the shears. Norma, the top star in the picture, has only two hair-dos. The most-Guilaroffed of the stars is Rosalind Russell, who has more costume changes and hence more coiffures than the others.

"I have to please not only the stars but the director, George Cukor, and the producer, Hunt Stromberg," Sydney was answering my question as Miss Russell, newly Guilaroffed, stepped from her dressing room.

That was when I decided that any anguish friend Sydney endures he wholly deserves. Miss Russell, you know, is a good-looking girl. Smart-looking, too. This day she was wearing a middling-length dress with a bustle. Yeah! And the rear view as she walked, was simply whipped up and called a hat. Red, with tall ribbons protruding crazily from a skull-cap base. But that wasn't all, either. Guilaroff had worked the Russell hair over it as part of the decoration. And one hefty lock stood up in a stiff curl to one side. Between Adrian and Guilaroff, the gal looked like a gold-damned freak.

"I had to use lacquer to make that curl stand up," said young friend Guilaroff proudly.

IN JUDICIAL ROBES, Felix Frankfurter, new associate justice of U. S. Supreme Court, posed for this new portrait.

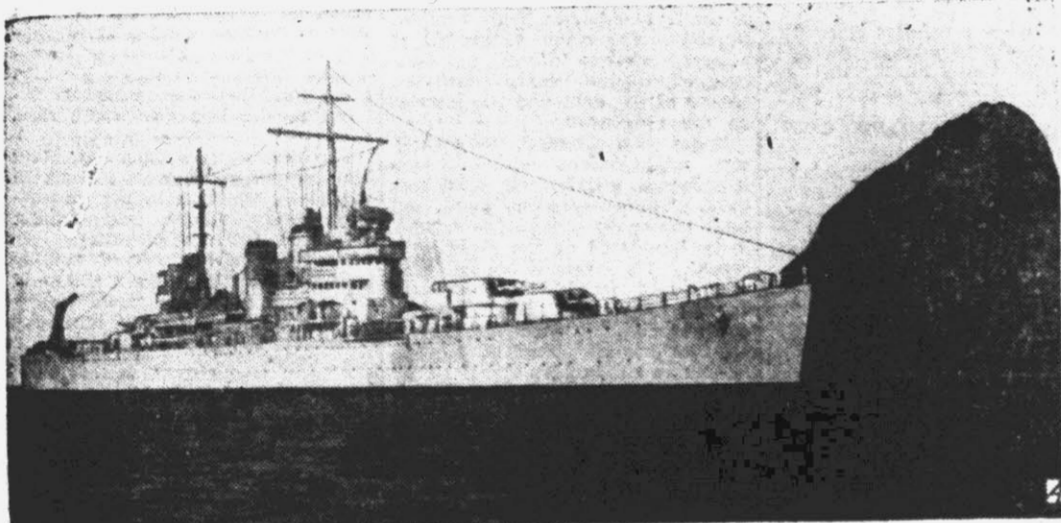

IF HE 'CROWS' OVER HIS PALS, young Billy Schwensberg has a good reason—this jet-black crow that's his pet and constant companion. Where Billy goes, "Blackie" goes, too, and the bird's an expert at begging bits of food from his indulgent master. Blackie's waiting now for a handout from Billy. (A. P. Universal Newsreel Photo.)

REFUGEE PROBLEM!—There's none so far as pretty Teresita Osta is concerned. A refugee from war-torn Navarra in Spain, she rehearses on the mission steps at Santa Barbara, Cal., for a role in Santa Barbara's annual fiesta Aug. 2.

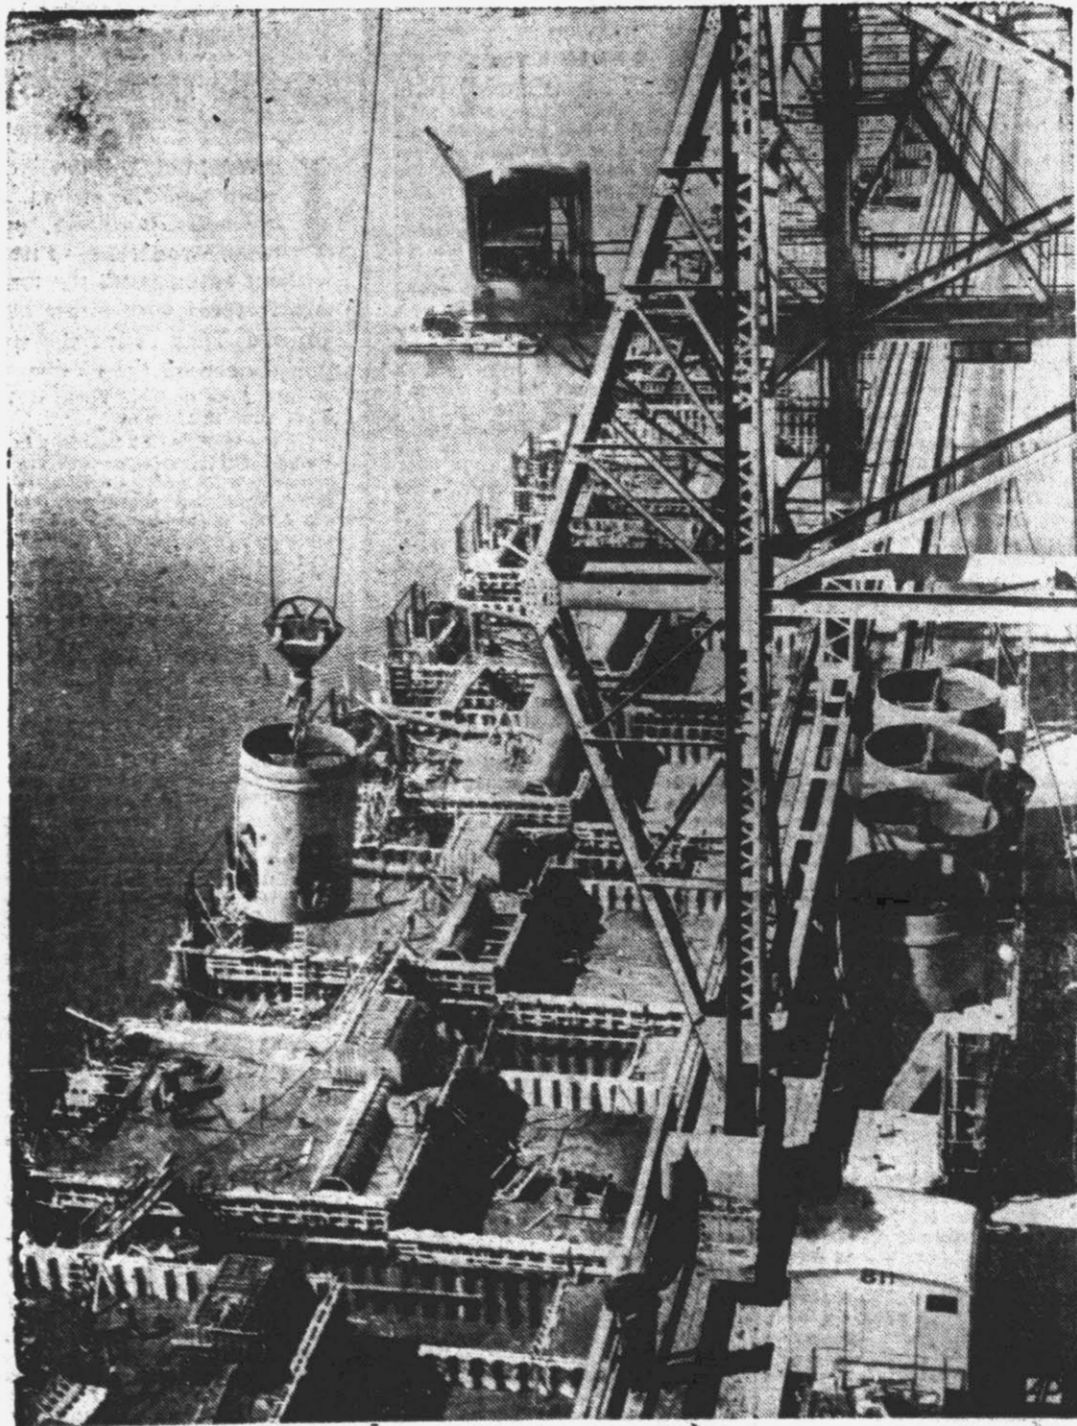

SOME OF HIS LIP—That's what Manager "Lippy Leo" Durocher tried to give Harry Goetz, the plate umpire, in a Brooklyn Dodgers-Giants game at N. Y., but the Dodger boss didn't get far in the argument. Durocher complained about the umpire's calls in the sixth inning—to no avail. Despite his oratory Leo remained in the game which the Dodgers won, 7-4.

'GOOD NEIGHBOR' POLICY—Past Rio de Janeiro's Sugarloaf mountain slips the Nashville, bearing U. S. future chief of staff, Brig. Gen. George Marshall, to Brazil. Returning, the cruise will bring Brazil's chief of staff, General Goes Monteiro, for a visit—a fact having significance since he accepted U. S. invitation before acting on those of Germany, Italy.

NEW ROLE—Fame being what it is, Ellsworth Vines, the tennis star, rates a golfing pose since he's become a fan. He's teeing off for an amateur match in England.

DOINGS AT GRAND COULEE DAM—Here's a crane operator's view of a bucket of concrete ready for a landing at Grand Coulee dam in Washington. The dam recently made a record for concrete-placing, the mark for a day being that one of these buckets dumped its 8 1/2-ton load every 17 seconds of the three-shift 24-hour day. Note waiting buckets (right).

MODERATOR—Election of Dr. Sam Higginbottom, 64, as moderator of the Presbyterian church in the U.S.A., marks the first time since 1927 that a layman was named to this office. He's been engaged in missionary work in India 35 years.

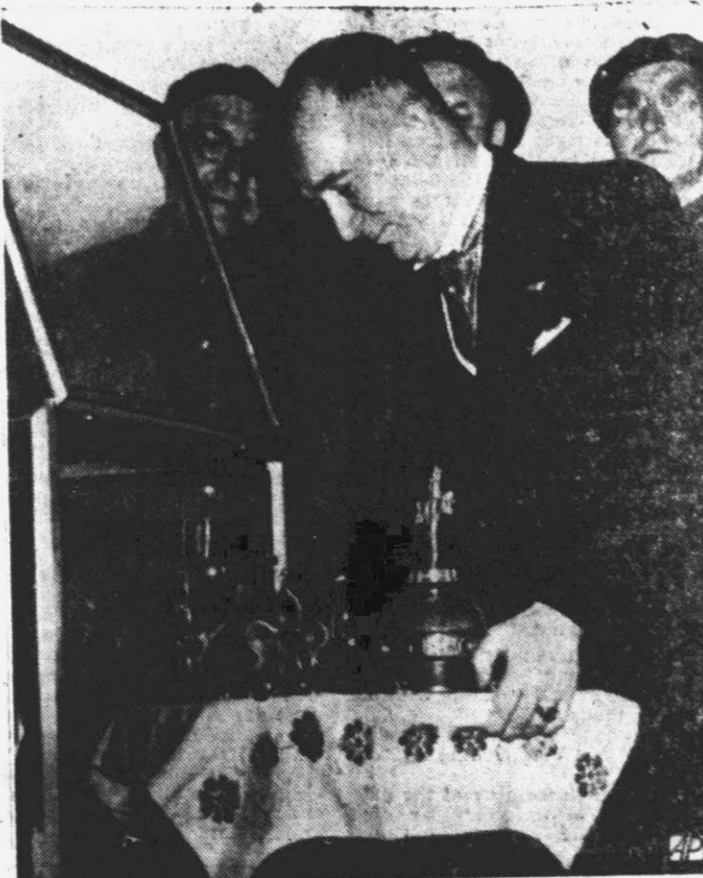

TOPS—Most honored man among naval academy graduates at Annapolis was Midshipman Louis Harry Roddis, Jr., who got nine senior awards for excellence in mathematics, engineering, navigation, seamanship. He's from St. Paul, Minn.

HAIL AND FAREWELL—With a vigorous handwave, Mary Pickford, former movie star once called "America's Sweetheart," bids U. S. goodbye as she and husband, Orchestra Leader Buddy Rogers, sail on the Normandie for a visit abroad.

'BLUE BLOODS' OF ENGLAND—The female proved less deadly than the male in the matter of clothes recently worn to Epsom. The woman is the Duchess of Norfolk whose husband (left) is the premier duke of England. Sartorially snappy are Lord Rosebery (right), owner of "Blue Peter," the derby winner, and the Earl of Harewood, brother-in-law of King George VI.

MAN WITHOUT A COUNTRY—"Nazdar, nazdar," meaning "good by," the crowds cried when Dr. Eduard Benes, last president of Czechoslovakia, placed the crown jewels of Old Bohemia in a case at the Czech pavilion at the New York world's fair. In his dedicatory speech, Mr. Benes expressed a conviction that his country—seized by Germany—would again be free.

THE HOUSE OF HOPE—To thousands at the dedication of above Czechoslovakian pavilion at the world's fair, N. Y., this building symbolizes a dream that the country absorbed by Nazis will again find independence. A sign explains that the structure, though unfinished, is "maintained by its friends in America," and at the right a flag flies at half staff, mourning the country that lost its identity last March after aggression by Germany. Dr. Eduard Benes, exiled former president, and Czech Minister to U. S. Vladimir Hurban dedicated the building.

THIRD TERM?

The movement for a "Third Term For Roosevelt" now seems to be under way with official sanction, and as was to have been expected, the first call for support goes to the WPA workers and others who are receiving a handout from the government or otherwise profiting from the New Deal. To our way of thinking, we have already had too much of the New Deal with its "crack pot" ideas of spending ourselves out of the red with borrowed money. We hope there are still enough thinking people left in the Democratic party to prevent the President's nomination for a third term, but if he should be able to acquire the nomination we see little or no hope for his re-election; for in the election it will not be a case of Democrats against Republicans, but one of sensible Americans joining hands to overcome a block of votes bought and paid for out of the public treasury.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

No sane American will sympathize with an individual who becomes intoxicated, gets under the steering wheel of an automobile, and proves a menace to motorists. However, we are sometimes inclined to forget that carelessness will cause just as many road accidents, if not more, than whiskey.

Statistics recently compiled by the North Carolina State Highway and Public Works Commission show that 36.7 of highway accidents in the State in 1938 were caused by reckless driving; 20.4 by drivers who would not stay in traffic lanes; 15.4 because of speeding; 15.4 by drivers who lost control of their automobiles; 8.8 by drunken drivers and 3.3 by all other causes.

Although drunken driving is generally conceded to cause an enormous number of highway accidents, and it does account for many, it is interesting to note that accidents caused by drunken driving in this State in 1938 were 27.9 less than those caused by reckless driving, and only 5.5 greater than those caused by means other than driving in the wrong

TWO AGAINST LOVE

Chapter 33
Arson

A NAUSEATING odor rose from the burned wood and mixed with the fog.
With powerful flashlights and hand axes the men went through the smoking ruins, searching for the man who had caused the fire. They found Jocelyn and Mrs. Mack. Each one advanced a different theory as to the fire's origin, but their premises were knocked into a cocked hat when one of the firemen emerged from the wreckage with an empty kerosene can from which extended a lens of blazed kerosene.
"He eyed them all accusingly. 'Somebody deliberately started this fire!' he growled. 'I'd say it was planned and set by a professional firebug!'"

Jocelyn gasped. The man turned to her. "What do you know about this, Miss?"
"Nothing—except—"
"Except what? Listen, lady, if there's an arsonist around here we've got to get him before he has the whole county on fire! Come on, speak up!"

"I'm not sure this means anything," she hesitated, then told him about her suspicious boarder.
"Sounds like our man," he gave orders to search the property. Frightened now, Jocelyn recalled how interested the little man had been in the fog and in the seclusion of Seaciff. But before she had time to relate any of this two husky firemen appeared from the station, dragging the weeping Mr. Jones between them.
"Sure I did it," Jones was saying. "Never figured you'd get here so quick to put it out—would've made a beautiful bonfire—beautiful!"

Rough questioning elicited further facts. He had served a five-year term for arson at San Quentin. Aileen had pronounced him a pyromaniac and recommended an asylum, but the state had decided he knew right from wrong. Jones himself told all of this in detail, obviously enjoying his moment in the spotlight.

"Come on you'll be in an asylum for good this time!"
As they led him away, weeping once more at the failure of his "bonfire," the Mack's old car rattled into the driveway and Bob and Gretchen jumped out.

In the midst of excited explanations Gretchen cried, "Where is Betsy? Gramp?"
"Gramp wouldn't go far away on his crutches," Tally soothed. "He's probably up in his room. Betsy and Tex are sure to be with him."

"I'll run up and see," Bob said. He returned a few minutes later, the answer plainly written on his distraught face. "Nobody in the house. Didn't any of you see them around here?"

The uneasy circle exchanged glances. "No," Tally rasped. "Too much excitement. Besides, the fire wasn't anywhere near them."
"But... were they... near the fire?" Jocelyn asked.

"Badly burned!"
ALARMED, apprehensive, the group split into ones and twos and began a search of the house and grounds after agreeing upon a sign to be placed in the lost were found. Jocelyn found herself paired off with Tally. Stealing a look at him she saw that every exposed bit of his skin was covered with a film of soot and his clothes were scorched and wet.

"You ought to go in and go to bed," Tally said. "You're the only one who did anything to save the house. We'd have lost everything if it hadn't been for your courage. Are you sure you are all right?"

He brushed her words aside, said: "I've got to find Gramp and Betsy. Come on if you're going with me. It doesn't seem to make sense but we'd better start combing the fruit orchards."

There was no need, now, of going around the eight-foot fence. There was no fence. There was no vegetable garden.
"I'm sorry about the garden," she said, touching his arm. He winced, either from physical or mental pain. She had no way of telling.

"Thank heaven, it didn't get to the chickens," he muttered, his voice still hoarse from smoke.
"From then on they trekked through the orchards in a silence broken only to call the names of the missing ones. Jocelyn stumbled over the rough earth, feeling drugged and faint with weariness. She seemed to be plodding on and on in a nightmare. Her eyes burned from straining into the fog-laden darkness; her ears ached from straining for the signal that would announce all was well.

In the gray dawn both families gathered once more by the charred black ruins in the back of the house. All of their faces were haggard. Low voices worried.
"They might have been trapped in the garden... they might have been smothered with smoke... they might have..."
Suddenly through the gray mist came a querulous old voice.

"What inarnation's all the fuss about?"

lane, speeding and losing control.

There were approximately 32,000 people killed in automobile accidents in the United States last year and 937 of this number were slaughtered on North Carolina highways; also, there were 16.3 people killed in automobile wrecks in the United States for every 10 million gallons of gasoline used and 24.2 in North Car-

Gramp, hobbling on his crutches, tagged by Betsy and Tex, materialized before their eyes. Gretchen snatched Betsy into her arms and covered the bewildered child's face with kisses.

"You worried us to death, Gramp," Mrs. Mack scolded, tears running down her face. "Where were you all night?"

"Well..." Gramp stopped to relieve himself of tobacco juice, then continued "... Betsy came a-runnin' in and says there's a fire and she's scared. She wants to get out o' the house. I couldn't do no good with these here legs o' mine, so I just up and takes her and Tex down to that empty cottage way off on 'tother side o' the driveway, and we jest naturally went to sleep. That's all."

Tally broke in quietly: "You got burned a little, folks... I getter get me a doctor..."

He fell to the ground before anyone could catch him.
Once more that night a siren shrilled through the fog and drew up Seaciff. The ambulance doctor made a superficial examination, frowned, and ordered Tally removed to the hospital in Santa Barbara.

Jocelyn spoke to the doctor before going into Tally's room a few hours later.
"He's burned badly about the face and arms," he told her. "He has a high fever and his condition is, to say the least, dangerous."
"Not—not—he won't die?" she pleaded.

"I don't think so. He's healthy, young. He's still unconscious, though."
"I won't disturb him, Doctor. Just—just let me stay in the room until he—he is out of danger."

'I Do Love You'
JOCELYN stayed three days in the hospital. When, after long hours beside the bandaged man she drooped with fatigue, she let the nurse lead her to a bed in the room next to his. And in those three days she learned the truth in her heart. No longer, if Tally lived, would she stand back and let another woman take him. She would fight for him. Fight with every weapon a woman possessed!

The morning of the fourth day Nola sat in the doorway of his room and looked at Jocelyn with wondering eyes. "You haven't been home at all," she said.
Jocelyn advanced toward her, a declaration of war written on her determined face.

"I'm not coming home," she announced. "I'm going to stay here until he's out of danger. Then I'm going to tell him I love him! Nola, I don't care how much you want him—I'm going to try and marry him the minute he can sign his name to a marriage license!"

Nola laughed softly. "I did want him, Lynn, but I never had a chance. He always loved you and I knew it, but I thought I still had an advantage because of your stubbornness. I knew I had lost, though, that night he left me and went to you because he thought you might be frightened. I guess I really faced the truth that night when you wept. We wouldn't have clicked, anyhow. I'm not a farmer's wife and he isn't a rich woman's pet. Last night Thorn and I had a long talk. I... I care for him, Lynn. He's the kind of husband I want. We are going to be married as soon as you can get away from here. The truth is that I think it can be done, too, with the help of the soil conservation department of the government. After that... well, who knows?"

When the door had closed quietly Jocelyn resumed her place beside Tally. Suddenly she pushed her cheek against his hand. "I love you so," she whispered. "I—I've been such a fool!"

His hand moved. She raised her chin, saw his eyes were open, saw he was conscious at last.
"How long has it been?" he murmured through his swathing bandages about his head.
"Four days. Oh, Tally, it seems like four years."

"I guess I'll have to start my farm all over again," he sighed.
"You don't have to," she said meekly. "We can marry and sell the farm and live on enough money to do as we please."
"No." His voice was so weak she could scarcely hear him. She leaned over him, her face so close to his she could feel his breath on her cheek. "I—I won't marry any woman—for any reason except I love her and she loves me—house or no house—"

"I do love you, Tally—house or no house."
His hand closed over hers and she knew then that Nola had been right. "Then," he said, "let's work together—never sell the house—never."
Gently, tenderly, her lips found his and somehow, although bandaged by bandages, his arms crept about her and held her very close.

The End

FOUR BLIND DATES

By Edwin Ruff

"Hey!" Tacks said suddenly. "I've just got a swell idea."

Chapter One Game In Hearts

IT WAS hot, hot enough to melt the bristles off an aluminum pig. Manhattan, with its network of streets and towering buildings, might have been likened unto a waffle-iron. Such of the citizenry as were abroad moved without enthusiasm, the male representation fanning boiled-lobster faces with straw hats. Even the motor cars seemed affected. They rolled slowly through clouds of steamy glaze that danced off their radiators and their horns made ho-hum sounds. June in New York! Heat-wave time in Gotham!

On the terrace of a building high above Fifth Avenue sat four young gentlemen in white linen suits. A table separated these gentlemen one from the other and upon the table were two decks of cards, and four tall, frosty, lemon-colored Adases. For this terrace was part of the drinking arrangements provided for the membership of the exclusive Penguin Club and the young gentlemen were all Penguins in more or less good standing.

Under an awning in a corner of the terrace was a small bar whose presiding deity was one Gus, a citizen in a white coat. All afternoon Gus had been watching the most desultory of desultory bridge games with languid eye, but leaving his post behind the bar only to refill the tall glasses with more of the lemon-colored liquid as need arose. As a creator of the game, Gus was unquestionably the most popular man in the establishment.

At the bridge table Tacks Adams was dealing. Tacks had keen gray eyes that appeared to look out upon this world and find it vastly amusing. Separated from the eyes by a wide, smooth forehead was a wave of wiry black hair. Below the eyes was a straight nose, a good size in mouths and a knife jaw which proclaimed that, given certain circumstances, Tacks Adams would stand no fooling. An overlay of tan did something extra special for these rather pleasant natural arrangements. Looking at Tacks you would have said that here was a tall, rangy young man on the sunny slopes of thirty, a young man who'd go well, Groton and Harvard. You'd have been all straight except the Groton and Harvard. Tacks was Andover and Yale.

The Groton and Harvard entry half-sat, half-reclined, directly across the table from Tacks, a drowsy expression upon his aristocratic countenance. This was Van Harkness. Even in semi-repose Mr. Harkness contrived to give an impression of extreme elegance. There was a kind of dignified stoop to his slim shoulders, a suggestion of poised languor in the way in which his right arm hooked over the back of his chair. Mr. Harkness was, indeed, a lily of the field. You visualized him sauntering carelessly through life as if it were his own private clover patch. But for all his exquisiteness and insouciance, Mr. Van Harkness was, however, unaware of that fact as yet.

"Two hearts," said Tacks Adams, finding his mitt full of high class red ones.
Bill Steele, who sat on Tack's left, passed. Then it was that Van Harkness distinguished himself.
"Bye me," said Van sleepily.

"It's Ho!"
Tacks glared at him.
"I did you or did you not," he inquired, lily polite, "ever hear of a demand bid?"
"Eh?" grunted Mr. Harkness.
"Oh, nothing!" said Tacks. "Skip it. These guys'll go home with our shirts, that's all."
"Anybody who wants my shirt today," said Van, waking up, "can have it."

The fourth member of the most desultory of desultory bridge games spoke. Mr. Jumbo Cutler was short in stature, rotund and moon-faced. Like Tacks, Mr. Cutler was the son of Old Eli. He wiped the moonface now with a huge monogrammed handkerchief and brought forth a platitude.
"Gee, it is hot," he remarked.
"Copyright that one," suggested Tacks. "I doubt if anyone else in New York has thought to say that today."
"Funny guy, aren't you?" Jumbo said.

Bill Steele, Jumbo's partner, hunched his great shoulders. Mr. Steele hailed from California, where they make 'em big, brawny and breezy. In his collegiate days Bill had been stationed at fullback for Stanford and out on the Coast they still talked of the horrible havoc he had wrought with opposing lines. It was not Mr. Steele's custom, however, to carry his berserk tendencies of the gridiron into private life. For ordinary usage he was an affable, if cumbersome, gentleman with corn-colored hair and kindly, blue eyes.
"What about the bridge game?" rumbled Bill Jumbo.
"Sure," Tacks said. "Nuts. With you birds a couple of thousand up? Just watch us quit!"

"What's a couple of thousand to a tycoon like you?" grinned Steele.
"Plenty," said Tacks. "You keep forgetting, Williams, that the three of us are depression babies. We used to be the idle rich back in the golden twenties, but now we're just the idle. You Westerners don't understand, of course. When you're rich you're so darn sure your pants are lined with gold leaf."
"Whose pants?" Bill Steele wanted to know.

"Bored Stiff!"
Harkness dropped his cards. "I'm fed up with this game. How about paying 'em, Tacks?"
"No," Tacks said. "Besides, if we don't play bridge what will we do?"
"Don't want to play," Bill Steele spread his hands. "Don't want to quit. It's an impasse."
"No bid," said Jumbo Cutler suddenly. "Let him get stuck with his couple hearts!"
"Ha!" said Tacks. "Another station tunes in. Okay Bill. Give a lead!"

Tacks dropped the ace of spades to Bill Steele and then, with Harkness's hand, was able to lay them down.
"See there!" he said bitterly. "See how you fumble! The ball?"
Bill Steele's eyes swept the table.
"North, South, East and West," he said. "The good old Culbertson set-up. And all of us bored stiff. How about a show tonight?"
"In this heat?" wailed Jumbo Cutler. "We'd die."
"Okay! No show. A swim?"
"You're hotter when you come out."
"Tell you what," continued Mr. Steele, undaunted. "Let's collect four show girls and get married. Very exciting, getting divorced again."
"All right with me," said Van. "If you'll pay for the divorce."
"Hey!" Tacks cut in suddenly. "I've just got a swell idea. This North, South, East and West stuff gave it to me. It's going to be a good stunt. It'll take brains, nerve, ingenuity and cleverness. There'll be excitement in it and maybe a thrill or two. In fact, it's just the game for a hot Saturday night. Want to hear about it? Or would you rather go on with the cheap wisecracks?"

"Shoot," invited Bill Steele lighting a cigarette.
"Now listen carefully! According to the bridge-table set-up I'm North, Van's South, Bill is East and Jumbo's West. Is that right?"
"What a bump of locality! What a sense of direction!"
Tacks raised his voice. "Hey Gus! Bring me a telephone directory, will you?"

"North, South, East, West"
"Now, look!" Tacks said, when Gus had brought the book. "In here you'll find people named North, South, East and West."
"That all?" said Van. "N. Smiths? No Joneses?"

Tacks looked at him in a pained way. "There are times when well since you're doing so much talking Van, we'll use you as a horrible example. You're South here. Now what you've got to do is to look in this book, pick out some girl whose name in South, get to know her and one month from today bring her down to dinner at my Uncle Dick's place on Long Island Simple enough, eh?"

Harkness's jaw dropped. "Wh-a-a-?"
"You heard me. Girl named South, Long Island."
"But what's the point?"
"The point is," said Tacks, "that while you're doing that, Jumbo here, who's West, will be making time with some girl named West who'll be picked at random from the phone book. He'll also be required to produce her at my Uncle Dick's place. Similarly, I must show up with a Miss North. Even a Mrs. North gets by. And Bill's got to find himself some neat Miss East. Get it?"

"Yeah," Van said. "I get it. But what of it? Say we do get hold of these unknown women. I still don't see the point."
"Just this," Tacks told him calmly. "To add a little spice to this game, anybody who fails to produce his Miss East or West or what have you one month from tonight, forfeits one thousand bucks and the rest of us split it. If nobody has to forfeit—we'll just have the fun of the thing and a swell party at the end of it. That's all."
"He broke off, his eyes shining."

"How about it? Didn't I say it'd take nerve and cleverness. There might be a bit of adventure in it too. And by our own statements we're all bored to death."
There was a moment of silence then:
"Deal me out of it," Bill Steele said. "I've got an understanding with a girl in sunny California. I looks like a cinch to me," said Harkness. "Never heard of a girl yet who wouldn't go for a dinner like a hound after a rabbit."
"Wait up!" said Tacks. "You can't tell the girl about the dinner. That'll be against the rules. What you'll have to do is date the girl up for that night without letting her know where you're taking her. See? This thing's a test of ingenuity. We're all going to be on our honor not to give the show away to the girls."

"But what are we going to tell them?" Jumbo demanded.
"I don't know," said Tacks. "That's where each guy has to draw on his own resources. A moment ago Van said this was a cinch. I disagree. Somehow we have to meet these girls and get to know them well enough to have dates with them. It sounds easy, but wait till you try." He flipped the pages of the phone book. "For instance, here's Miss Margery North... West 177th Street. Got any ideas on how I'd go about meeting Miss Margery North?"
"Not a one," said Jumbo. "Unless you rang her doorbell and said: 'Hi, beautiful! I'm Tacks Adams. Put it there.'"
"And what would she do then?"
"Call the police if she had a brain in her head."

"Well," said Tacks, "maybe she would. But you see the possibilities of this thing, don't you? It's got what the movies call the lure of the unknown. Who knows what'll happen to us? We might get jailed or shot or married or—or anything!"

Washington Daybook

By Preston Crocker

Washington—It may be that at one time there was "something rotten in the state of Denmark," but at present there is a solid effort to convince the American public that there is something good in the state of Denmark, and in Sweden, too. It is a double budget system which permits governments to spend money for work-making public improvements without throwing the regular budget out of balance.

Its present exponents on this side of the Atlantic are leading figures of the New Deal together with a group of economists. One of them, Dr. Alvin Hansen of Harvard, outlined the plan before the Temporary National Economic Committee, which President Roosevelt asked recently to find a way to put idle money to work.

The system won't let the government have its cake and eat it too. But it does let the government take credit for the benefits gained.
As a matter of fact this government already is operating on a double budget system in a limited degree. The present idea is to expand the system steadily, not abruptly.

How It Works
This is how the Swedes and Danes do it. They build a low-cost housing project. Maybe it costs $10,000,000. The rents are to pay the operating expenses and perhaps amortize $8,000,000 of the capital outlay. That $8,000,000 debt then goes in the special capital budget and as the payments come in it is retired. But the regular budget absorbs the interest charges on the $10,000,000 and pays the $2,000,000 debt.

What has happened then? Instead of the regular budget being required to absorb the whole $10,000,000 of outlay as well as interest and running expense, it absorbs only $2,000,000 of the debt and the interest on the $10,000,000.

Under such a budget the government might borrow capital to lend to railroads, utilities and small business. The government would put such money in a separate budget, to be liquidated as the loans were repaid. The regular budget each year would absorb only the losses. Or the government might borrow money to lend to small industry at cut-rate interest, absorbing the difference in the budget.

Several members of the Senate threw up their hands in dismay as Dr. Hansen outlined the plan. But Hansen countered with the assertion that already the United States was successfully operating such a plan.

He cited the Federal Housing Authority, among others. It builds low-cost homes with bonds for which the government stands good. The projects built will pay off part of the bonds, the government will have to meet the rest. TVA, Boulder Dam and Panama Canal could qualify.

Separates Debts
But why go through all this rigmarole if it means merely keeping two sets of books instead of one? I'm healthier bookkeeping, says Hansen. It separates the good self-liquidating debts from the "dead-weight" debts. War debts are dead-weight debts. When the war is over there is nothing to show for what is borrowed and spent.

During a depression if it is necessary to start more self-liquidating projects than the government can afford in any one annual budget it spreads the cost out over a period of years. Sweden spans it over five years. Hansen insists that enough should be collected in boom times to make up for depression shortages in the regular budget. The regular budget should be balanced at the end of the depression-boom cycle.

If there should be anything left over at the end of the cycle, or it seemed likely higher taxes should be imposed to check an excessive boom, then maybe some of the "dead-weight" debts could be paid off. But war debts and some of the relief debts incurred during the depression perhaps should never be paid off, said Hansen. The government could just go on paying the interest, forever and forever.

Raleigh, June 7. — Dudley Bagley, State REA head and a University trustee board member tells this one about the election of Dr. Ralph McDonald to a U. N. C. post at the board session Monday.

When the recommendation of the McDonald appointment was put to a vote there was a chorus of approval and no distinctly audible dissent. However, there was something suspiciously like a collective sigh or grunt and one of the members sitting near Mr. Bagley remarked:

"I wonder if those were sighs of relief at getting McDonald out of politics or if they were votes against him just from habit."

All accounts of the trustee meeting indicate that Marvin Ritch, erstwhile firebrand and political stormy petrel, was just as docile as during the General Assembly.
"Faint right, and some of these days Marvin is just naturally going to blow up and, but if he don't let off that steam."

New Hanover Johnny Morris lit briefly in Raleigh from his job of traveling the state looking out for collection of the $1 extra costs from every criminal conviction; dollars which go to the Law Enforcement Officers Pension fund and to support of the State Bureau of Investigation and Identification. He says there just isn't any noticeable interest in the 1940 Governor's race.

The Morris job, incidentally, takes him everywhere there is a court in the State; which is to say into almost every village and hamlet there is a J. P. has an office.
He estimates his average weekly travel at something like a thousand miles, and when he starts calling off his itinerary for the next day he sounds like a train announcer.

Most recent political report to reach this column's eager ear is that John Umstead, State Senator from Orange and the leading insurance lobbyist of North Carolina, is considering candidacy for lieutenant governor. It's just rumor, however, without word from Mr. Umstead to give it even a remote approach to authenticity.

Low down on the lieutenant governorship nowadays is that State Senator and President Pro Tem W. Erskine Smith of Stanly and former House Speaker Reggie Harris of Person county are the most likely of all prospective candidates to go through with their preliminary canter an actual gallop into the stretch.

Those foisting this dope ever that Anson's Pat Taylor has all but abandoned the idea of running. The same goes for Gordon Gray, Forsyth's wealthy Senator and publisher, they say.

Office of the Farm Security Administration here sent out notices a day or so ago that bids will be received on Cumberland Home-stands Projects in Cumberland county, Tennessee. Most casual readers of the copy took it for Cumberland county, North Carolina, without checking up on it.

Tarboro Loses To Greenville In Ten-Inning Party Here

THREE ERRORS SPARK 5-4 WIN

Jenkins Leads Locals' Hitting With Double, Two Singles

By JAMES WHITFIELD
Three tenth-inning errors gave Greenville a 5-4 verdict over Tarboro last night after the score was deadlocked at 4 in the ninth via a sacrifice fly poled to right field by Tarboro's Lehman, whose error in the nightcap helped Greenville score the winning run.

Greenville retained its league lead in the tenth when Smith went out on an infield fly. Spence reached first on Shatzer's error, advanced to second when Allen got out via Lehman's error, and scored when Christopher hit to Yent, who apparently got excited, and threw wild to first.

Tarboro deadlocked the score in the ninth when Burnett singled, advanced to third when Shatzer doubled to right and scored on Smith's passed ball, which also advanced Shatzer to third. The latter scored on Lehman's sacrifice fly to right. Rube Wilson's boys took a one-run lead in the second when Harry Jenkins, who led the locals' hitting last night with three hits for four trips, doubled to left field and scored on Don King's single to center field.

The visitors went ahead in the third when Lehman was hit by a pitched ball and got out at second when Shultz reached first on a fielder's choice. Single by Black and a walk by Myers loaded the sacks. Kessler's infield hit scored Shultz. Coyle's infield out enabled Black to score.

Greenville took the lead again in the fifth inning when Christopher singled to right and scored when Wilson reached second on Shatzer's error and a sacrifice. Wilson advanced to third on Brannon's double to right and scored on Heavener's sacrifice fly to right. The locals' eighth inning run came when Smith reached second on Myers' error and scored on Allen's single to left.

In its part of the tenth, Tarboro had a good chance of scoring when a fielder's choice, a walk, and an infield hit loaded the sacks, but Shatzer, batting with two men away, went out when he hit a blow toward the sky that dropped safely in Christopher's glove.

Whitkey Heavener clinched fielding honors for the night. In the seventh inning he caught Kessler's drive to centerfield and then ran across second to force out Lehman, who ran to third, thinking perhaps that Heavener would drop, or had dropped the ball. Heavener's best catch, however, came in the eighth when he ran into the left field zone to rob Myers' blow.

The tenth-inning party could have been thwarted when timely hitting, Greenville saw 14 of its players die on bases, while the visitors left ten men on bases, many of whom were in scoring position.

'39 Suicide Toll At Niagara Falls May Be This Century's Highest

Dotted lines on this air view of Niagara Falls show courses followed by most suicides, who waded into the river and were swept over. Ho never, a number leaped, some from either side of Luna Falls.

By The AP Feature Service
Niagara Falls, N. Y.—It's suicide season again at Niagara Falls where the roaring waters have claimed an estimated 300 lives since 1900.

And with a half-dozen deaths at the falls already down as 1939 suicides, Coroner Harry R. Ems says the toll during the rush tourist season may send this year's mark high above the average.

Suicide is almost as much of a tradition at the falls as the American honeymoon.

Indian legend tells of a god who lived in the river and whose voice was Niagara's roar. Twice each year the tribe chose its most beautiful maiden and she voluntarily went over the falls in a canoe to her death—a sacrificial bride for the god.

MARTINS LOSE AS BEARS WIN

Snow Hill Hammers Wilson Hurlers For 17 Safeties

New Bern's Berry hurled two-hit ball last night as the Bears turned in a 2-1 triumph over Williamston. Berry also whiffed nine batters.

Peahead Walker's Snow Hill Billings, apparently determined to regain first-place honors in league standings, hammered out 17 hits yesterday afternoon in a 16-9 win over Wilson.

Home runs featured in Kinston's 8-5 win yesterday as the Eagles handed Goldsboro its fifth consecutive defeat.

Park officials say the rushing torrents have a weird fascination for the discouraged or unhappy, and the 20 reservation police, as part of their duties, keep a close watch for persons pacing nervously near the shores.

But it's impossible to guard all of the thousands who throng there during rush season and many plunge to what Coroner Harry R. Ems says must be a "horrible death."

He says many victims, only stunned by the plunge over the falls, float and are swirled about and beaten to death among the rocks, "taking minutes and sometimes hours to die."

Most victims choose to wade into the rapids far above either the American or Canadian falls, letting the swift current sweep them over. Some leaped directly into the brink, most of them at Luna Falls.

How many have slipped into the river and plunged to their death unnoticed never will be known, says Major Albert B. Cole, secretary of the Niagara State Park Commission. He explains that bodies often are not found, even those of persons whose death plunges were witnessed from the banks.

Ropes are kept handy for rescue work, but can seldom be used since the swift water sweeps its victims over the brink only a few seconds after the current hits them.

Man About Manhattan
By George Tucker

New York—You looking for material for a real-life novel? I'll tell you what. You walk down Broadway till you come to that theater which says "Nancy Carroll in 'I Must Love Someone'—A New Play by Jack Kirkland."

Then you do some digging into the amusement files of the newspapers, and some talking to actors and producers around town, and you'll have it.

It's there, all right—plenty of romance, plenty of glamor, plenty of bitterness and fist fights, and public face slappings, and critical jeers, and an equal amount of success and failure. That's enough meat for a good story. And it's all contained in that marquee legend, and floods into light every day at dusk on Broadway.

"I Must Love Someone" is Jack Kirkland's third play on Broadway, and Kirkland, an ex-newspaperman, is now married to his third wife. But starring in the play is Nancy Carroll, who was Jack's first wife.

Before he got around to writing "I Must Love Someone," he adapted "Tobacco Road," which sometime next November will eclipse "Able, Baker" and all the other long runs plays in Broadway history. It is in its sixth year now, and still going strong.

But 24 hours after it opened a resentful and rebellious Kirkland wouldn't have given a dirty hanky for its chances. The critics were flaying it. The Purity leagues were calling it vile names. That was six years ago. Nobody knows how much money it has earned, but it has been a play of destiny for more people than you can remember. It brought Sam Byrd into prominence and earned him enough money to discontinue acting and become a producer in his own right. It made stars of Henry Hull, James Barton, James Bell, and Eddie Garr. It gave Kirkland enough money to abandon his career as a reporter and become a playwright-producer.

Road companies began spreading across the continent, welcomed in some cities, barred in others. Sally Rand, the fan dancer, always insisted that the play "sickened me" every time she saw it, which prompted some people to wonder why she went back to see it so often. Chicago banned it until a judge gave the producers a green light.

Then Kirkland wrote "Tortilla Flat," an abrupt and dismal failure. The critics were so outspoken against it that Kirkland, meeting one of them in a restaurant, promptly indulged him in a knock-out, drag out brawl. Then he left Broadway "never to return," but he came back with "I Must Love Someone," which immediately was labeled the vulgarst of the vulgar. Kirkland promptly made use of this publicity, calling attention in his ads to the fact that it was the bawdiest show on Broadway.

When "Tobacco Road" first opened the bankers controlling the theater where it was stationed read the sour reviews and urged them to move. "Tortilla Flat" wasn't open long enough to have anybody try to oust it. But "I Must Love Someone" has not escaped. It has been involved in litigation, the outcome of which is pending.

Plainly, ex-reporter Kirkland can never be accused of leading a dull life. He may be kicked around in print, and occasionally in the late hour restaurants, but he has fun, and he makes money.

WHAT IT MEANS: Neutrality Debate

By MORGAN M. BEATTY
AP Feature Service Writer
Washington—The most misunderstood word in the English language is having a new fling on page one.

That word is—
N-E-U-T-R-A-L-I-T-Y!

Secretary Hull tossed it into the national arena with his latest message to Congress. He advises repeal of the arms embargo part of our neutrality laws.

Congress is now carrying the subject into public hearings, where all shades (and that means oddities of shades) of opinion contribute to the headline parade.

Neutrality as a word is about 600 years old. For 400 of those years, men and governments have been trying to make it mean something.

Neutrality is a dangerous business. It got the United States into two disastrous wars—the War of 1812 and the World War.

It is the answer to a campaigner's prayer. To him it is a talk-in-more-and-say-less subject, like taxes.

Note: Both major political parties have publicly laid the groundwork to put it daily in their 1940 platform. Both have the same general aim—to keep America out of war. Give us the orators is HOW that can be done.

Plenty of Ignorance
Despite all the danger and talk, neutrality is surrounded by a fog of plain and fancy ignorance to outdo the courage of a Spartan.

Leastways the famous American authority on neutrality—Philip C. Jessup of Columbia University—says ignorance of the history of neutrality is the cause of many of our international difficulties. In a neutrality quiz, he hazards the guess that 300 educators and 300 master minds would turn in 300 wrong answers.

International trade and its profits are the flies in the neutrality ointment. No less a great American than Jefferson was all for young America making profit out of the "fellow's war" of the Russia-Turkish war in 1822, he said.

PARKWAY LINK OPENS JULY 1

Important Blue Ridge Stretch to be Completed Soon

Reflector, Bureau, Str. Walter Hotel
Raleigh, June 7.—An important step in transforming an extravagant dream into reality will be completed this month, according to detailed bulletins of the State Highway and Public Works commission and reports from the scene of activity that on July 1 approximately sixty miles of the Blue Ridge Parkway in western North Carolina will be opened to traffic.

All 60 miles are in Ashe and Alleghany counties.

For three and a half years now—since December 8, 1935 to be exact—engineers and road builders have been carving away at the rugged, beetling heights of the Appalachians, and out of their labor there is beginning to emerge a miracle on the mountain tops.

Although the entire 500-mile parkway will not be completed before 1943 or 1944 at the earliest, the next year should find the long link between Virginia's Shenandoah park and Asheville paved and open to traffic. The 100-mile link west of Asheville, leading into the Great Smokies, will be the last constructed.

At present 160 miles of the scenic route have been completed in Virginia, including the Skyline Drive through the Shenandoah Park. In North Carolina some 70 miles are under construction in addition to the 60 miles to be opened the first of next month.

The Federal government has already spent $16,000,000 on the Parkway in the two states, while both Virginia and North Carolina have put up several million to obtain rights-of-way. It is estimated that the entire parkway will cost about $35,000,000.

The National Park Service, which will administer the scenic drive, is purchasing land along the right of way for camp sites, picnic grounds, recreation areas and hotels. Projected as strictly scenic drive, the Parkway's traffic will be limited to passenger cars and sight-seeing buses.

For Recreation Park Fence Expected Soon

City Purchasing Agent Marvin L. Westmoreland revealed today that the new fence to enclose the entire recreation center, including the Gray Smith stadium would be here soon.

A total of 2,670 feet of steel chain length fence will be placed around the grounds. The fence is expected here this week.

Australia plans to open 268,000 square miles of grazing land to settlement.

Four Are Nabbed Following Escape

Raleigh, June 7.—(AP)—Oscar Pitts of the state penal division, said this afternoon four escaped convicts had been taken back into custody and two more had escaped. Seven got away yesterday and Monday.

John D. Fort, serving 25 to 30 years from Cumberland for second degree murder, who escaped from Watauga county camp, was caught in Wilkes county, and Henry Hill walked off from Calendonias farm yesterday, serving 18 months, imposed in Durham county, was caught near the farm last night.

Two men escaped from the Randolph county chain gang between Siler City and Asheboro. One was caught quickly, but officers are still hunting Clinton Williams, sentenced in Pitt county in January, to eight to ten years for breaking, entering and larceny.

Robert Taylor, sentenced to two to five years in Guilford in July, 1938, for larceny and receiving stolen goods, escaped from Hertford.

Suit Is Entered In Lucama Voting

Wilson, June 7.—(AP)—J. R. Lucas, who was named mayor of Lucama in an election May 9 and the town commissioners designated at the same time, filed suit today against the current municipal administration charging the town's officers had been usurped.

Attorney General Harry McMillan filed recently because the election was held May 9, which was a week too late, the old board could hold office until 1941. C. F. Thompson of Elizabeth City, will hear the case in Wilson June 26.

The complaint states that the present mayor and commissioners now in office had refused to relinquish their duties.
