TO ASK PROBE INTO DEATH OF FIVE INFANTS

Prosecutor to Request Grand Jury Investigation

FIVE SUFFOCATED IN N. J. HOSPITAL

Escaping Steam from Radiator Valve Repaired with Adhesive Tape Believed Responsible

Perth Amboy, N. J., Oct. 24. — (AP) — Prosecutor Charles M. Morris announced today the Middlesex county grand jury would be asked to investigate the steam asphyxiation of five infants in a nursery of Perth Amboy General hospital.

Following a conference with County Detective William H. McDermott and Engineer Raymond C. Hunt, Morris said he would present evidence to the jury either on November 3 or 17.

Meanwhile, the tiny nine-day-old boy, sole survivor of the nursery tragedy, cried healthily in his crib as police blamed a defective radiator valve for the death of his five companions.

None of the infants never regained consciousness and the fifth, six-day-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Hatariak of Perth Amboy, died in the General hospital several hours after being revived.

Only the child of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Abary of Carteret survived. Police Chief Frank Selboth asserted that the escaping steam came from a radiator valve which had been repaired with adhesive tape.

French Ship In Flames At Sea

When the United States liner President Harding arrived on the scene in mid-Atlantic, she found the torpedoed French tanker Emile Miguet enveloped in flames and belching a cloud of black smoke into the sky. But there was no sign of survivors. However, the President Harding picked up 36 survivors of the torpedoed British freighter Heronport on her dash to the Emile Miguet, which is shown burning furiously. Later the American ship Black Hawk found the Emile Miguet's captain and crew of 38 in lifeboats some distance from the fire and landed them at Boston more than a week later.

Martin Man Held For Fatal Accident In Bethel

Oscar Edwards of near Williamson, alleged driver of a car involved in a collision fatal to B. B. Tetterton in Bethel Saturday night, October 14, was ordered held under bond of $1,000 for possible grand jury action at the next term of court, at an inquest called at Bethel today by Coroner A. A. Ellwanger.

The coroner's jury failed to prefer any formal charges against Edwards who is in Pitt General hospital with a broken knee, but ordered that he be held for possible action by the grand jury when it convenes next week.

Edwards, however, will be in the hospital for several days yet and it was doubtful the case would be tried next week.

Tetterton lived near Station's mill between Greenville and Bethel. He was driving a passenger car which was in a collision with another passenger car driven by Edwards.

Before the two cars were removed from the scene of the wreck, just beyond the Bethel city limits on the Tarboro highway, another car driven by Elwood Venters of near Scotland Neck struck Edwards' car and allegedly injured three occupants.

Meekins Released In Edwards Death

A coroner's jury assembled in Grimesland yesterday afternoon, found that Norman R. Edwards, 38-year-old man of that community, "came to his death while on the highway and being hit by one or more cars" last Wednesday night.

The jurors also found no negligence on the part of N. G. Meekins of Washington and no charges were preferred against him.

Meekins admitted running over Edwards, but declared the man was lying in the road and because of meeting a car he did not see him until too late to avoid the accident.

The theory was advanced that Edwards already had been struck by a car and was left lying in the road. His hat was found more than a mile from the scene where Meekins hit him and some expressed the belief that his hat was lodged in the car which first struck him.

On serving on the coroner's jury were D. W. Hardee of Greenville, C. E. Tucker, T. R. Dixon, T. W. Majette, L. B. Whitchard and J. S. Spain all of Grimesland.

Reported Government To Make Request on Ground Germany Had No Right to Send Craft Into Neutral Port, Regardless of Whether or Not She Was Carrying Contraband to Allies

Washington, Oct. 24. — (AP)—The American government was expected today to demand that Russia release the freighter City of Flint which was taken into the Soviet harbor of Murmansk by a German prize crew.

It was reported in official quarters that the government would make this request on the ground that Germany, in the absence of extraordinary circumstances, had no right to send the 4,963-ton vessel into a neutral port regardless of any contraband she might have carried.

While this international aspect of the seizure of the American vessel was fast developing, the White

Moscow, Oct. 24. — (AP)—Soviet Russia today told the United States government that full information would be furnished as soon as available concerning the American steamship City of Flint, which was captured by a German sea raider and sent to a Soviet Arctic port.

United States Ambassador Laurence A. Steinhardt in an interview with Vladimir Potemkin, vice minister for foreign affairs, asked for details of the ship's capture and the fate of her 42 crew members.

His interview was described as cordial and he was promised information as soon as obtainable from Murmansk, where a German crew took the vessel as a war captive.

House was represented to have taken the view that in so far as domestic law is concerned the City of Flint was on a "perfectly legal and lawful voyage."

Stephen Early, presidential press secretary, explained that in making this statement he was speaking only of American laws and did not mean that Germany had no right under international law to seize the freighter.

The question of right of seizure—apparently supported by the Germans on their belief that contraband was aboard—was being investigated by the State Department.

The first move of the government however will be to seek release of the ship and her crew of 42. The City of Flint was captured by the German cruiser Emden as a prize of war last week. She was out of New York bound for Glasgow, Liverpool and other English ports.

Already the American embassy at Moscow has asked the Soviet government what became of the crew and at Berlin the embassy sought an explanation of the seizure.

Large Buck Killed By Mrs. O. F. Mahrt

Mrs. O. F. Mahrt, office deputy in the Pitt county sheriff's office, last night bagged a 175-pound deer using an automobile instead of a gun as a weapon.

While on her way to Greenville, Mrs. Mahrt accompanied by her sister and a cousin, struck the deer about eight miles from New Bern on the Oriental highway.

She declared she was both thrilled and scared when the buck, which looked as if it was preparing to jump a small ditch and dart into the woods, apparently became frightened and made a leap into Mrs. Mahrt's car.

The automobile struck the deer head-on, doing practically no damage to the car, but killing the deer.

Mrs. Mahrt said she intended to make a rug of the hide.

Man Attacked By Dog Succumbs To Injuries

Deputy Sheriff R. W. King revealed today that hair taken from the clothing of Oscar Williams, Negro, who died in a Kingston hospital yesterday from wounds believed to have been sustained when he was attacked by a dog, has been sent off to be analyzed in an effort to determine what dog attacked the man.

The man was said to have been attacked Saturday night and to have suffered such injuries that he was unable to move from the scene. The Negro stayed at the scene of the attack, by the railroad tracks near Hanrahan, all night before being found.

Military dispatches said that the French also made a raid, seizing a German post east of the Moselle river, taking several prisoners and capturing a machine gun. A French ambush north of Forbach brought capture of a German lieutenant of artillery.

While the French strengthened their Moselle outposts near the Luxembourg border, the Rhine front was reported completely calm.

NAZI OFFICIAL SAYS GERMANY IS DETERMINED

Von Ribbentrop Says Hitler To Fight To Finish

ASSURANCE FOR REICH DESIRED

Address Delivered to Nazi Party Veterans In Danzig, One-time Free City Annexed By Germany

Danzig, Oct. 24. — (AP)—Adolf Hitler's foreign minister told the world tonight that Germany now was determined to conduct the war against Britain and her allies to the bitter finish and until the security of the German Reich in Germany was assured for all time.

Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop declared that "in the truest sense of the word, the war has been forced upon Germany."

His address, delivered to veterans of the Nazi party in this one-time free city which was annexed to the Reich September 1, was a detailed description of the diplomatic maneuvering which preceded the British and French declarations of war on Germany.

It was absurd to hold either Danzig or Germany responsible for the conflict, von Ribbentrop said. He added Germany and Danzig never more would be separated.

When Adolf Hitler in 1934 arranged a new orientation of Eastern Europe with Poland's late Marshal Josef Pilsudski, the Fuehrer left no doubt in the minds of the Poles that sooner or later Danzig and the corridor problem must be solved, von Ribbentrop said.

Maternal - Infant Clinic Undey Way

The regular monthly Maternal and Infant Welfare Clinic for Greenville is being held in the Pitt County Health Department Offices this week. The attendance at this clinic is so large that it has been necessary for some time to have a two day clinic.

The first day of the clinic was yesterday and the second clinic is being held today. There were 37 mothers and 23 babies in attendance at yesterday's clinic.

At these clinics, not only may the expectant mother get a medical examination and medical advice, but mothers with babies may bring them in for advice as to proper feeding and as to general care of the baby.

These clinics are available for all mothers who are not able to pay for private medical examination and advice.

It is understood that while many of the patients come from Greenville, there are also a large number who come from the surrounding country. One problem of the rural patient is the matter of transportation to the clinic but this problem is being solved by the Greenville Service League, a group of young women who are dedicating a portion of their time to welfare work.

Members of the Service League furnishing transportation to these patients for the month of October are Mesdames John Adams, Ficklen Arthur, Sellers Crisp, R. C. Stokes, Jr., J. C. Waldrop, and E. C. Wilkerson.

It was learned from the health officer that without this transportation service that many of these patients would be left without any medical service whatever.

Russian Organ Accuses U. S. Of Trying To Block Japan-Soviet Relations

Shanghai Dispatch to Moscow Newspaper Declares This Country Trying to Put Pressure on Nippon Government Because of Japan's Dependence on Imports From United States

Moscow, Oct. 24. — (AP) A special dispatch from Shanghai to the government newspaper Izvestia today accused the United States of trying to block improvement in Soviet Russian-Japanese relations.

Quoting "responsible quarters," the dispatch said "agents of Washington are active in trying to put pressure on the Japanese government because of Japan's dependence upon imports from the United States.

"Japan would like to improve her relations with the U. S. S. R., the dispatch added, but meets great resistance from representatives of the United States because improvement of Soviet-Japanese relations would strengthen Japan—which does not correspond with United States interests."

American representatives, the article said, continued to "consider neutrality of the United States a comfortable mask necessary to cover the policy of isolation of Japan and for upsetting the relations between Japan and the U. S. S. R."

"Apparently the Japanese people realize this maneuver of the United States are beginning to feel uneasy under such pressure from the United States," the dispatch said.

Exhibits Work Of Greenville Woman

An exhibition of oil paintings and miniatures by Georgie Pearsall Hearne of Greenville will open to the public tomorrow at the Greenville WPA Art Gallery. This is the gallery's first showing of paintings by one of Greenville's own artists.

The group of seventeen paintings includes nine portraits, four still life paintings, one landscape, and three sea scenes. The sea scenes are the artist's most recent pieces of work, having been painted during the past summer at Morehead City.

All of the paintings reflect on canvas familiar scenes and figures within Mrs. Hearne's own and her public's experience. Her technical precision and emotional approach to her work have gained for her a place of distinguished popularity. In 1936 and again in 1939 she was presented the Mrs. S. Clay Williams silver cup for the best portrait exhibited in the annual art exhibition of the North Carolina Federation of Women's Clubs. Her portraits, still life, and ivory miniatures have been placed in nine states.

This interesting collection typifies Mrs. Hearne's marked artistic ability. The public is cordially invited to visit the exhibition.

RECORD IS SET IN PRICE HERE

Farmers Paid $19.37 For Leaf Offerings Yesterday

A new high average price for the season was paid on the Greenville tobacco market yesterday, when offerings of 1,713,918 pounds sold for $31,926.76, an official average of 19.37 per hundredweight.

Monday's sale was regarded the most successful of this season and all types of tobacco were reported as selling stronger, with competition among the buyers keen and a demand in evidence for the various grades.

Sales Supervisor R. C. Rankin reported that while the advance applied to all grades, it was more pronounced in the better types of leaf. Sales as high as 40, 41, 42 and even higher were reported to have been made.

Farmers from a wide radius sold tobacco on Greenville warehouse floors yesterday.

So far this season 40,290,902 pounds of tobacco have been sold on the Greenville market and it was estimated that the figure would reach 46,000,000 by the end of the week.

Despite the unusually heavy crop, veteran observers predict that the market will be ready to close shortly after the usual time because of the unusually large amount being sold daily.

VOTE TO EASE RESTRICTIONS AS TO CANADA

Amendment Favoring Neighbor Unanimously Adopted

SENATE AGREES CURTAIL DEBATE

Each Senator Allowed 45 Minutes on General Discussion And Like Time on All Amendments

Washington, Oct. 24. — (AP)—The Senate, working under an agreement curtailing debate, amended the administration's neutrality bill today to exempt ordinary inland commerce with Canada from the "title and carry" restrictions of the measure.

The amendment, offered by Sen. Brown (D-Mich.), was approved without a dissenting vote after Democratic Leader Berkeley had won unanimous consent to a proposal aimed at getting a final vote on neutrality legislation this week.

As explained by the Michigan senator, the amendment would permit the shipment by inland waterways, rail or airplane any supplies, except arms, to Canada without the purchaser first being required to obtain title in this country. Shipments going by sea, however, could not be carried in American vessels and would require title transfer.

Brown said the effect of the amendment would be to permit the continuance of formal commercial relations with Canada and Mexico, affecting both countries alike.

The Senate then took up the controversial shipping sections of the bill. Republican Leader McNary of Oregon asked that the shipping amendments go over a day, but Sen. Pittman (D-NeV.), chairman of the Foreign Relations committee, insisted on their immediate consideration.

Spokesmen for both factions in the neutrality legislation fight agreed the speech-curbing agreement would hasten action.

The agreement would limit each senator's general discussion of the legislation providing for repeal of the arms embargo 45 minutes. In addition each senator would be permitted to speak for a total of 45 minutes on each amendment.

May Be Required To Cut Sales Day

Although there has been much talk of the possible necessity of shortening the selling hours on the tobacco markets because of the unusually large amount now flooding factories, one official today pointed out that the question had gone no further than the conversation stage at the present.

It was admitted, however, that tobacco was selling so fast that later on congested they would be unable to handle it and a shorter sales day would be required. Sales are conducted six hours daily at the present.

It was made clear that no official action had been taken on the question and that if any such move should be decided upon all concerned would be notified in due time.

Hollywood

Sights And Sounds

By Robbie Coons

Hollywood.—The tiny piano gives laboriously of Redwing, my Pretty Redwing, and in the darkened nickelodeon the flickering, jumping figures prance about the screen. Through ple-thriving, wild Keystone Kop chase, or tender romance, the tiny piano gives.

"Hollywood Cavalcade" the new movie about movie-making history, has many scenes and references to stir memories in picture fans of an earlier day, but none more potent than that tiny piano giving, giving while the slapstick rolled.

The picture didn't cover—musically, that is—that later period when studios sent out, with each picture, a thematic score for the guidance of the pianist, who had in most instances by then become an organist, if not a full-sized orchestra. And the film, concluding at the dawn of the talkie-sound era, naturally didn't go on to the great development in screen music as it is today.

The other day I dropped in on the set of "Four Wives" and saw Jeffrey Lynn conducting a full symphony orchestra for the camera. The composition at hand was that unfinished piece which John Garfield in "Four Daughters" left wilder Priscilla Lane as his one maternal legacy. In the new story Lynn has finished Garfield's work—given it a beginning and an end—and is presenting it to wife Priscilla.

Quite a few films lately have presented full symphonies: "100 Men and a Girl," "The Star-Maker" notable among them. But practically all pictures, whether we see the musithat was lacking dramatically.

There's a current score worth noting, too, for its high degree of success in the objective of every good score: to enhance without intruding. You'll hear it in "Elizabeth and Essex," and it was written by Erich Wolfgang Korngold. You may see the picture and not hear it at all, not consciously, when is the test of a good score. Yet, if you listen, you will be aware that every note of music is serving a thematic purpose, subtly aiding the players in their task of creating illusions for their audience.

Pitt-Greene Line Gets More Funds

The Rural Electrification Administration has announced an additional allotment of $69,000 for the Pitt-Greene Electric Membership Corporation, with headquarters at Farmville.

The corporation is composed of 1,178 members and proposes to erect 218 miles of rural electric lines in the two counties.

Out of the $69,000 allotment, $61,000 will be used to defray certain expenses connected with the initial operations of the project which can not be covered by the construction loan.

The cooperative has been advised of the allotment and supplied with the instructions for getting the lines under construction. The money will be available as details are completed.

Construction of these lines will provide nearly 15,000 man-hours of employment in direct labor alone it was estimated by the REA.

Other contestants included Master Jarvis Tripp, Nancy Wilmo, and Vivian Allen, Margie Dean Allen, Emmy Lou White, Ollie Allen, Sybil Gurganus and Maxine Hall, Dorothy Tyson Edwards, Bettie Sue and Joy Tyson, and Jane Tyson. Every number presented was thoroughly enjoyed.

Plans are under way to present the annual Red Oak Variety show in the new building some time during the week of November 5th. Plans in the plays have been given and practice has been going on for several nights. This program is entirely new and already invitations have been received to present it in three other communities.

Will everyone who owes the Red Oak Home Demonstration Club please make settlement by November 8th, as that ends our club year and we would like to know just how we stand? We are now working on our annual reports and we would like for every person who has not handed in a yearly report to do so by Wednesday, October 25. Bring it to Mrs. B. L. Tyson's home Wednesday night.

The 4H Club held its October meeting at the home of Joe Tyson last Wednesday night. There were nine boys and nine girls present. Miss Nice, Mr. Griggs, Mr. and Mrs. Tyson and Mrs. Jarvis Tripp were present also.

New officers for 1940 are: Joe Tyson, president; James Allen, vice-president; Norman Coward, secretary.

INFLUENCE OF 4-H CLUB IS SHOWN

4-H Youths Help to Promote Better Dairying

Raleigh, Oct. —One of the chief reasons why North Carolina is experiencing rapid and substantial development of its dairy industry is demonstrated when the 4-H club shows were held at the late Fair this week. John A. Arey, extension dairyman of State College who was in charge of the club shows, said that the entries were of better quality than ever before, and that the entries of adult exhibitors in the open judging classes showed the influence of the 4-H work.

Dempsey Morrison of Wilkes county won the grand championships in both the 4-H and open divisions with his Jersey cow. Archie (father) of Wilkes entered the junior champion in the club event.

Other 4-H Jersey show results were as follows:

Junior female calves — Kenneth (father) Morrison, first; Dempsey Morrison, second; James Freeman of Buncombe, third; and Dempsey Morrison, fourth.

Senior female calves — Archie (father) Morrison, first; John Mason of Iredell, second; Faye Morrison of Iredell, third; and Ralph Summey of Gaston, fourth.

Junior yearling females — Marshall Riggs of Buncombe, first; Kenneth Niblock of Iredell, second; Faye Morrison, third; and Lucius Moore of Buncombe, fourth.

Senior yearling females — Dempsey Morrison, first; Elizabeth Green of Buncombe, second; L. B. Bell, third; and Archie (father) Morrison, fourth.

Two-year-old cows — Kenneth Myatt, first; R. H. Kennedy, Jr., of Iredell, second; James Freeman, third; and Glenn McPherson of Lenoir, fourth.

Age cows — Dempsey Morrison, first; Lawrence Mason of Iredell, second; Ralph Summey, Jr., third; and Kenneth Myatt, Jr., fourth.

Wilkes entered the best county group, followed by Iredell, Wake, Lenoir, Buncombe, and Gaston, in that order.

Man About Manhattan

By George Tucker

New York.—As a drama or spectacle, the underworld in New York today is played by an almost entirely different cast from that which occupied a position of prestige and power a few years ago. Its social and economic structure has become so altered that the ghost of a late Harry Fawcett would need a guide to distinguish who's who. Gone are the overlords who manipulated fortunes and dealt in everything from penny ante to white slavery. Most of them have been assassinated, executed or imprisoned, and most of those who escaped Dewey's purge have fled.

I was thinking of this the other day when a heart attack finished Big Frency De Mange, the old Hudson Duster, who was once kidnaped by Vincent Coll, the Mad Dog killer, and forced to ransom himself for a sum reputed to be $5,000. Frency simply up and died, and the phenomenon of a gangster lying in bed so fascinated the New York daily newspapers that they all gave him headlines.

To understand Frency, his life and his times, it is necessary to have a knowledge of the Manhattan underworld during the turbulent years of prohibition. One can not build that background in a column, or an essay, or even a book. It is too complex and diverse. There are too many important names. In a letter, such as this one can scarcely do more than quote epitaphs from the graves of gangsters who died, almost without exception violent deaths. And that is what made the demise of Big Frency an interesting news story.

He was supposed to have been allied with Gerald Chapman, who died in a hangman's noose without saying one incriminating word about his Pal. He was supposed to have been a friend of Coll's, until the Mad Dog kidnaped him and wrenched loose from a part of his fortune. Coll was finally executed in a Twenty-third street telephone booth by gunmen imported from Detroit. Big Frency also knew Lucky Luciano, now in Sing Sing, yet Lucky might be a free man today by his attitude toward women had been personal instead of commercial. The story is that once in a restaurant Luciano spat in the face of a pretty but insubstantial booth of the underworld. She never forgot it, and when Dewey finally gathered him in it was she who gave him the works.

Incidentally, Lucky Luciano's name is another indication of the underworld's talent in selecting picturesque, rhythmic appellations for themselves. Hickman Powell records that in the Dewey drive his men picked up such characters as Silver-Tongued Elsie, Abie the Rabbi, Sarge the Chink, Jennie the Factory, Crazy Moe, Cockey Flo, Good Time Charlie, and Tommy Bull-Bull.

De Mange, or Big Frency, had a number of highly picturesque names himself, one of them being Big Polack. He got this name at the time of the stabbing of a Brooklyn gambler, for which he was indicted, but nothing happened. Although at least five murders pointed in his direction, Big Frency's luck never deserted him. The police were never able to pin anything on him.

"Probably," suggests one Manhattan newspaper, "not a soul will miss Frency. Most of the friends he had are in jail, executed, or gone on in a handsome coffin with the shillies bearing Dutch Schultz's card. And Schultz went, too. Schultz who never trusted the Frenchman

A CANDID TALK WITH

A TELEVISION 'M.C.'

WHO SHE IS

TWENTY-TWO-YEAR-OLD Helen Lewis, a top-ranking television announcer, is a Reno, Nevada, girl who got into television via stage and radio, the usual procedure. Discovered by Max Reinhardt at the University of Nevada, she had brief, Hollywood and legitimate stage experience, then went to New York, arriving with less than $25. She got her first paycheck there for a one-and-a-half-minute "commercial." Was called in for television after an audition for regular radio work. Serves now as an "M.C." (Mistress of Ceremonies) whenever her studio needs her. "M.C." jobs, however, aren't frequent.

"You don't get paid much in television. Nothing like what you get in radio. The hours and the way you work are much harder. And the heat of the lights is terrific. Sometimes your hair starts to burn. If you're not on the air you run for water."

"I think it's around 112. Anyway, it's so hot that a pair of rhinestone clips I had in my hair melted when they had me in a portrait setup. That's when they bring the camera up close."

"I suppose I'm in television because I want to be among the first in something. The old pioneer spirit, I guess."

"The idea, of course, is to build yourself a name. Until you get a name you have to take what you can get. After you have a name you or your agent can ask for what you want. But there isn't enough television work to make a career of it yet."

Washington—For the benefit of ourselves and 3,000 others, the army demonstrated its latest fighting gadgets to such telling effect that we are convinced that in war there is simply no place where a man can be comfortable or safe.

One plane dropped three dozen or more small bombs all in a row, the way you sow radish seed. Strewn along a road they would have wiped out a regiment.

One big bomber, from high up, dropped a 2,000-pound bomb. It is the biggest the army uses as a regular thing, although it has some 4,000-pound jobs—heavy as a Cadillac—in reserve. The one-ton item burst a mile from where we lay hidden behind some low bushes. It smashed up the air so badly that fragments of the noise reached us like a burst of machine gun fire before the shuddering "boom" closed in on us.

It threw dirt and brush 300 feet in the air and lifted out a cone of earth into which you could have placed a two-story house. We were told that medium artillery can shell a heavy concrete bridge all day without wrecking it but one of those 2,000-pound airplane eggs nestling into it will take out a whole section.

Where bombs fall there is no peace.

Planes Are As Bad
 But with anti-aircraft artillery busy on the ground, there is no peace for the planes from which the bombs fall.

A nastier sight we never have seen than the way the muzzles of those anti-aircraft guns follow a plane across the sky. It is like nothing so much as the way a snake, with head uplifted, eyes a bird, observing instruments spread over the ground in a wide triangular formation focus on the plane. The cumulative result of their "seeing eyes" is communicated to a central sighting mechanism which looks like the upper half of an iceless refrigerator, heavily studded with dials.

This mechanism directs the information and, together with data which may be supplied from other observers, transmits it to a dial on the gun. The gunners simply keep a sort of pointer on the gun following the sighting dial, and the muzzle creeps across the sky spitting three-inch shells at the rate of one every two seconds. From then on the clear-blue air about the plane is a thick mixture of flying shell fragments. Three targets towed across the sky in simulation of an enemy airplane were shredded by shell fire.

In turn, two tanks, armed with machine guns and small cannon, sounded across a ditchy field pouring a silver chain of bullets into two structures put up to look like machine gun "pill-boxes." There is no peace in pill-boxes.

Tanks Are As Bad
 Yet, on the other hand, when a tank, remotely controlled, was started across the field, a cluster of anti-tank guns cut loose at it. These guns, the army's newest weapon, shoot a two-second slug about the size of three golf balls laid end to end—if you get what we mean.

The bullet's tail is phosphorescent so that it sails through the air like a red-hot shot, easy for the gunner to follow. In the core of the shell is a bursting charge of powder. The thing will smash through an inch and a half of armor plate, then burst like a rocket.

That happened to the tank. Fire shot raced across the field, glowing like oranges. One of the first shots fired stopped the tank and another plied into its gasoline tank, setting it afire. So there is no peace in tanks.

The Creeping Man

by Frances Shelley Wees

YESTERDAY: Tuck hazards the opinion that perhaps her necklace has found the same hiding place as the Murchison diamonds. Later Michael talks with an old friend—the janitor of the Medical Building—who describes the terror caused by Murchison's visitation activities.

Chapter 14
Man With Crutches

WHEN Murchison asked what proof the delegation had that he was torturing animals, they showed him the order he had at the pound, signed with his own hand, said Jameson. "He was sure in wrong around here all last year over it. Most of the profits was away when it all happened, but it seemed like an awful lot of them felt they had to light in to him when they come back. He took it not to bad from the Medical profs, but when it come to some of the Arts and Law faculties, comin' over here to give him hell about the credit of the University and professional etiquette and all that, he simply told 'em off to a fare-you-well. You can't blame him. It's not much their business."

"He and Deane had a blow up, didn't they?"
 Jameson pursed his lips and let out a long whistle. "And did they? Well, you just better guess they did. I never heard so much language from people that's supposed to know better in my life. I saw Deane come in that day with fair murder in that little face of his, and I saw him stamp up to Murchison's lab and pound on the door, and I made it my business to be around. They was inside with the door shut, but the row was as plain as you like. Deane sure got what he come after and then some. I kind of felt like standin' up for Murchison there. Deane's such a snoopo old busybody. And when he come out of there, after Murchison told him he was a stupid old fossil that only held his job because the college didn't have pensions for worn-out wrecks, his hands was just shakin' like they do when he gets excited. He went out of here like a whipped kid fair daft with rage."

"Um," said Michael. He looked up at the glass jars filled with strange and awful specimens in the cabinet. "What do you suppose Murchison was doing with his cats and dogs?" he asked lightly.

"God knows. But it was something queer," Jameson turned on Michael suddenly. "What happened to their bodies after he was through with them?" he demanded.

"Bodies? Well—what should happen to them?"
 "That's it, I ought to know. I have to take care of that. But I tell you—even after I heard the groanin' and yellin' and knew damn well he was dragging infernal things to the poor beasts, never a hint of a hide or hair was there left around in the mornin'."

"Um," said Michael again. "Fifth dimensional stuff, maybe he's a wizard, Bill. Maybe he can wave his wand and change you into a— a piece of cheese."

"Maybe he can that. But there never was no pieces of cheese layin' around in the mornin' either," Jameson said good-naturedly.

"Mystery number one," Michael said portentously. "What about a furnace?"
 "No bones."
 "Dear, dear. No bones?"
 "Not a bone."

"Well, well. Indeed. Strange."
 "Mystery number one, you calls it," Jameson said, his tone lowered. "There's another mystery I ain't got straight yet."
 "Bill, you ought to quit running this University and get a job with the police force."
 "Too fat," said Jameson contentedly.

"What's your mystery?"
 "Shiverin' With Fright"
 "It's a man. He comes here every Thursday afternoon. He asks for Murchison, and he's shiverin' with fright every time. Then when I tell him Murchison's still away he brightens up and goes off with a bit of color in his cheeks again. He won't tell who he is or what he wants, and I say it's something fishy. Blackmail, I think, or something like that he's ashamed of. Won't say nothing but that he wants Murchison."

"Every Thursday?"
 "Yep."
 "What kind of a man?"
 "That's it," said Jameson. "He thinks I don't know anything about him, but you just have to take one look at him, and you can guess. Sandy-haired chap. He has to have a crutch, and he's got a service pin in his coat, and he comes only on Thursday. Any fool would know he's from the Veterans' Hospital. Thursday is their day out."

"And he won't say what he wants?"
 "No. Only Murchison."
 "Well, indeed," said Michael. "Bill ground the stub of his cigarette against the side of his dust bin and threw it in. Michael copied him.

"Afraid I've been talkin' an awful lot," he apologized. "I work here alone a lot, with this fussy stuff I don't dare let the new men touch, and I get a talkin' streak whenever anybody'll listen to me."

"Crutches?" repeated the young interne in the hallway. "Crutches? There's a whole room full of leg cases."

inch coast defense gun hurl a 2,000-pound shell across the countryside. We inspected 14-inch ships armor— heavier than that with the ill-fated British battleship Royal Oak. Sixteen-inch shells had bored a hole through it as easily as you would poke a pencil through a pancake. So there is no peace in battleships.

YESTERDAY: The Medical Building janitor poses two questions—what became of the animals Murchison experimented on, and why does a war veteran keep asking for Murchison. Michael finds the wounded veteran, Smith, in a hospital.

Chapter 15
Drawing Conclusions

SMITH fumbled in that breast pocket and brought out a certain dirty folded paper. "Murchison has the mate to this," he said. "He gave me the money when we signed it. He said the minute he sent for me I was to come. He said he might be ready any time. I . . . I been nearly crazy. I couldn't give the money back 't' it's gone. The wife . . . she ain't got so much nowadays." He gulped. "I didn't ought to have signed it. I was mad for the money. I never got it through my head that he was goin' to do with me."

"What he was going to do with you?" Michael repeated.

"Yes," Smith fumbled with the paper. Michael's fingers itched for it. "He said . . . he said he'd buy what I had to sell . . ." Smith went on shakily. "He'd give me half the money then and half to the wife after . . . after . . ." he stopped.

"This Murchison," the big man took up the story. "Smith here was broke. He'd heard about these here people that buy bodies to use for experiments. He went to the University and struck a bargain with this here Murchison. Only . . ."

"Well? It's been done before, surely."
 "Yes. Smith thought he couldn't hang out much longer. The doctors told him so. Only . . . Murchison didn't want him after he was dead. He doubled the sum if . . ."

"I see," said Michael quietly. His eyes were hard and cold. Smith looked up with awful fear in his eyes. "What would he do with me?" he asked. "What does he want to do to me?"
 Michael's voice was very low. "He won't be doing anything with you," he said. "Not now. Not at any future time, either."

Smith stared with unbelieving eyes. The big man gave a deep sigh of relief. "I said as how he must be dead," he exclaimed. "Either dead, or they got wise to him. They don't let that kind of thing go on. Smith here was the first one."

Michael was frowning. "I'd like to know all the details, if you please," he said in a tone of authority. "And I must have that paper, of course."

"I been waiting for something like this to happen," the big man said.

Smith cleared his throat. He was beginning to believe. "You got it all," he said. "I said he could have what's left of me after . . . well, after . . . the doctor gets through with me. Mary, she needs the cash something awful. He said all right, but he'd give me twice as much if I'd come before. He said we could fix it up that he was to operate on me, and he'd give me half the money now, and the rest to Mary later. And then . . . when the operation fell through . . . he could just say I'd died on the table. He said he could fix all that. And not to come hanging around until he sent for me. But that was last winter, and I been waiting and waiting, and thinking about what he'd do to me there all alone anyway, and no whiffs of stuff to take the pain away, and I been nearly crazy. Jake here says he couldn't hold me to it, but I been scared he could. You sure he can't?"

"Sure," said Michael. Smith held out the paper. Michael opened it and read. WE THE UNDERSIGNED HAVE ENTERED INTO BARGAIN ON THIS TENTH DAY OF JANUARY NEITHER OF US CAN BREAK IT WITHOUT THE CONSENT OF THE OTHER. THIS IS TO CERTIFY THAT WE BOTH OF US HOLD IT TO BE LEGAL AND BINDING.

E. MURCHISON.
 C. SMITH.
 "It doesn't," said Michael quietly, as he folded it and put it in his pocketbook. "It doesn't mean a thing."

"Black Books"
 The conversation at dinner was sedate. The District Attorney surveyed his daughter-in-law several times with keen and questioning attention, but she seemed quite well. Michael refused to meet his father's glance, so nothing could be learned in that quarter, and it was not until dinner was over and the two men were walking about the garden with their pipes that he had a chance to ask his question.

"What's the matter with the girl tonight?" he demanded. "I feel as if I were in her black books. She treated me just as if I were anyone at all," he finished with a touch of grievance.

"You are," Michael answered. Then, at his father's astonished glance, he hastened to qualify in her black books. Not just anybody. But I'm afraid Tuck's regard for you has gone to your head. That . . ."

Which ought to prove something or other—not to assume infallibility under any circumstances, maybe.

final remark of yours had just a touch of conceit, although I hesitate to point it out."
 "Humph," said John Forrester. "Why?"
 "Oh, I have a certain regard for the feelings of the aged."
 "You're a damned young puppy. Why am I in her black books? What've I done?"
 "Oh, that. Well, she knows that you had something up your sleeve when you got us here."
 "I thought you'd have sense enough to hold your tongue, Michael. It's no use getting her excited until we know the lay of the land."

"Hold my tongue? Why, I didn't tell her. She told me."
 "She told you?" His father regarded him incredulously.

"She did. She smelled mystery. So, to keep peace in the family, I told her what I had to."

"That Murchison has gone, and that the Commissioner suspects feathers in the soup, to say nothing of diamonds."
 "She knows it might be murder?"
 Michael sighed. "She does."

"Doesn't it give her nightmares?"
 "It does not. She's a bloodthirsty little devil. Murder is to her a thing apart and her sole idea is to catch the murderer. It doesn't seem to enter her funny little head that a man may have been foully done to death with plenty of blood here and there, and all that. He kicked at the stones on the path."

"I suppose it isn't the murder she thinks about. It's the riddle. She's crazy about cross word puzzles and charades. This seems so far to be about on a par. She doesn't really think of what might be ahead."

"And Bunny?"
 "You know Bunny. She'll do plenty of thinking, but she'll keep it to herself and be very sensible about everything that comes up. Unless Tuck leads her into deviltry."

The District Attorney puffed furiously at his pipe. "What about the blood stains on that paper you found in the desk? Doesn't that bring it closer home to them?"
 "They didn't see the paper, dad. I saw no reason for calling it to their attention, since they didn't notice that I'd found it."

"The expert make out the fingerprints?"
 "Nothing but a smudge. A smudge of human blood. And, under the circumstances, that needn't mean murder."
 "Under what circumstances?"

Unpleasant Aroma
 MICHAEL stopped and leaned on the gate. His father stood beside him, looking out into the dusk of the woods. Michael turned and looked at him, and dropped his voice.

"You gave me the tip," he said quietly. "The hint of the animal vivisectionists making trouble for Murchison. I've been asking discreet questions, and getting equally discreet answers. It doesn't . . . he paused. "It doesn't have a very pleasant aroma," he said with a gesture of distaste.

"Let's have it," his father said shortly.
 Michael told him of his afternoon's adventures, and of the information which he had unearthed. Forrester listened in silence.

"The authorities got onto the business with Smith?" he asked at the end.
 "No," a whisper. "It was the animals they knew about. There was a certain amount of most unpleasant publicity given to the University," Michael continued lightly. "Some of the older professors were quite put out. You might almost say annoyed."

His father glanced at him sharply.
 "Mr. Deane has not spoken to Dr. Murchison for several months," Michael said, looking straight ahead of him. "They had quite a blow-up in the early winter. Deane had been away during the summer, it appears, and came back only to hear about the vivisection affair in October. He went straight to Murchison and blew up. Murchison was very insulting. Told Deane among other things that he was an antiquated old fossil who only kept his job because the college was too soft hearted to throw him out, and Deane got black in the face. I gather it hasn't been too comfortable living here next to each other ever since; but neither could make the first move."

"They turned back to the house. "You'd better apologize to Tuck," Michael warned. "She may poison your coffee if you don't. I'm not exactly responsible for the effects this atmosphere of murder and mystery may have on her."
 "Um. Yes. So you think he might have been making some . . . some experiment and that bit of paper . . . what do you think, Michael?"
 Michael paused. "The paper," he said slowly, "was torn from the corner of the front page of the Star for the day he disappeared."

His father waited.
 "S.," Michael continued, "you can draw your own conclusions."

SHORT SHOTS

Reflector Bureau
 By HENRY AVERILL

Raleigh, Oct. 24.—Commissioner of Revenue Allen J. Maxwell has made numerous speeches in recent months and political intent and import has been read into each of them; but he made one short talk Sunday about which there wasn't the slightest taint of politics.

He was speaker for the Raleigh Community Chest at the First Presbyterian church's morning services.

Governor's Secretary Bob Thompson has also enlisted in the Community Chest campaign and was soon given a commission as "Major" or one of the divisions.

He forthwith sat him down and addressed a circular letter to all state employees as "Fellow Members of the Raleigh Gang."

He reminded that the state government machinery is Raleigh's "largest industry" but does not pay into the treasury of the city a single cent in taxes.

Urging all to contribute to the Chest, he closed with this paragraph: "No, we can't disclaim our responsibility to the city in which we live. Why, even Tom Cooper down in Wilmington has classified us all members of the 'Raleigh Gang.' I think he's right. I am proud of it. This 'gang' has the reputation of doing a good job and I am counting on it coming through as usual."

It is to be hoped that Senator Bob Reynolds' proof that Russia sank the Athenia is more potent and correct than the information on which he so vigorously declared there'd be no war in Europe.

Progress, in a big way, comes to Raleigh this week.
 A week later than anticipated, but still much too soon to suit a lot of grumblers, the parking meters have been installed along Fayetteville street, and the motorist who wants to stop on the main drag now pay 8 a. m. and 6 p. m. must now pay a nickel for his full hour, or a penny for twelve minutes.

It was interesting to watch the folks inspecting the meters Monday and trying to figure out how they work.
 Beginning promptly at midnight Saturday night, Raleigh's phones will switch to the dial system. New directories have been distributed and instructors sent round to tell phone subscribers how to handle the gadgets which so roused the wrath of U. S. Senator Carter Glass when they were installed in the Washington Senate building.

Ronald Hocutt, director of the State Highway Division, is State Highway Safety Division, is back from attending the National Safety Congress which met in Atlantic City.

He says that North Carolina's progress in highway safety is generally recognized by safety officials all over the country.

Mecklenburg county may be the scene of another wet-dry election next year. It will be two years come June, since the county last voted against ABC stores, and already the Charlotte News is offering a prize for the best letter on whether or not another poll ought to be called for.

Green Phantoms Face Conference Foe Here Friday Night

HALIFAX TEAM TO PLAY HERE

Local Highs to Stake Undeclared Record On Game

The first Eastern Conference game of the season for the Green Phantoms will be played at Guy Smith stadium Friday night. The kickoff time is set for eight o'clock.

The Phantoms will defend their undeclared record at the expense of the Yellow Jackets from Roanoke Rapids.

The Halifax team is also unbeaten, though Goldsboro tied them 0-0 last Friday afternoon in a hard-fought tilt. Such a record as the G-men and Jackets hold at the present should insure a bang-up ball game next Friday night.

The Farleyemen were defeated 6-0 last year by the Roanoke Rapids eleven. This year the Greenies are seeking revenge and intend to give the Jackets a fight to the finish.

Up to date the Greenville team has scored 79 points in four games against 29 for the opposing teams. Coaches Parley and Fulkerson are working on blocking and tackling this week and expect to present a finished club to the public Friday evening.

Because of a leg injury George Sakas has missed practice for two days this week, but is expected to see action in the Roanoke Rapids encounter. No other players are on the injured list at present.

A capacity crowd is expected for the first conference game with Roanoke Rapids, which boasts one of the strongest elevens in the state.

Other Teams Get Wins; State Gets the Break

Duquesne Victory Over Pitt to Pack 'Em At NCS

Reflector Bureau.

By HENRY AVERILL.
Raleigh, Oct. 24.—In last Saturday's football games involving Big Five teams, Carolina got the biggest hand for its gallant rally to the Tulane; Wake Forest got the biggest score, the adding machine finally stalling at 66 against Western Maryland; Duke got a satisfying victory over Syracuse, 33 to 4; but rather paradoxically North Carolina State, whipped 21-6 by Detroit, got the biggest break of the bunch.

This came in a game completely disconnected with the Big Five, or even with the South—the Duquesne-Pittsburgh affair in which the Lukes upset Bowser's boys 21 to 13.

Another paradox about the thing is that State's break comes from the fact that it will be playing these very Duquesne fellows, vic-the country.

And the Tar Heel aerial circus has any number of speedy elusive, glue-fingered receivers headed by Paul Severin and Jim Mallory eds. and George Radman, Mike Bobbitt, and Don Baker, backs.

Severin, who is a Natrona, Pa., boy by the way, caught both of Lalanne's payoff heaves against Tulane, and Radman snagged the pass from Stirnweis that beat N. Y. U. after Stirn had swept end for the tying marker.

Coach Ray Wolf is seeking to develop a stronger running attack to go with Carolina's brilliant passing game against Pennsylvania, but whether he can or not, the Tar Heels will be in there pitching Saturday.

And all the indications are for a brilliant aerial battle for Pennsylvania also has a fine aerial game built around Frank Reagan and Bill Koepsell, and in fact, beat Harvard 22-7 on two long heaves from Koepsell to Captain Harlan Gustafson.

can loosen up his intestine, gives Peahead Walker another barrel to his pistol. All of which adds up to a scoring spree. If (note the conditional) Wake scores in the first quarter this melee is just as apt as not to wind up thirty-some-odd to twenty-something in favor of either team.

If Pitt had beaten Duquesne, attendance at the game here November 11 would quite possibly have failed to go above 5,000—but it is obvious that thousands of fans will come out to see the team which beat the team which topped Wallace Wade's Dukes from Durham.

It gives Raleigh the same sort of "natural" as it drew in last year's Carnegie Tech game. Then it was the Tartans who had defeated the otherwise unbeaten Pitts who still had Duke to play. This time it will be the Pennsylvania Dukes who have tumbled the Pitts who have topped the North Carolina Dukes.

In short, it will give the fans something to look at other than a bunch of Pennsylvanians with unpronounceable names.

There is always the possibility, too, that Doc Newton's hands will turn in the same fighting sort of football they furnished against Carnegie last fall. It's about time they did it, and State usually comes up with that sort of thing about twice a season, which leaves them two times open for this year.

As for the U. N. C. Tar Heels they unquestionably deserve all the bouquets being tossed their way. A team that trails 14-0 with three-fourths the game gone, then comes back to get a tie, has plenty of the stuff they make chatteringlings out of.

Duke's win over Syracuse, coupled with Wake Forest's annihilation of Western Maryland set the stage for an afternoon of thrills in Durham this week end. The McAfee combine is versatile and can do lots of tricky running, passing and kicking; but Tony Galovich, who has never been known to run any way except to his left, and outside tackle, has done that so well he has averaged some 12 yards a try this season. In addition Red Mayberry can play for this corner's money in any league, and Polanski, if he loosens up like the doctors say they

CLAIM RECORD WITH PASSING

Tar Heel Team Averaged 71 1/2 Against Tulane

Chapel Hill, Oct. 21.—Calling all air crops! Special attention, Texas!

There may be a greater forward passing outfit, or more outstanding record somewhere in the land, but if there is North Carolina would like to know about it.

The Tar Heel aerial circus, which plays a one-day stand at Pennsylvania Saturday in its one appearance in the East, just completed 15 out of 21 of its passes against Tulane last week, or a cool 71 1-2 per cent.

Spectators said their last quarter-passing bombardment, which netted two touchdowns and a tie with the No. 4 team in the country, was the prettiest they had ever seen.

And folks here believe their mark of 71 1-2 per cent completions sets a new record—50 per cent is generally considered excellent—but would like to know if some team can claim a finer mark.

Some people may say a team that hits the mark 15 times out of 21 and scores two touchdowns in the last 10 minutes is lucky.

But the Tar Heels did exactly the same thing in the last 10 minutes to beat the strong New York University team at its own game 14-7. And any team that turns the trick twice in a row must be good, too.

General George Stirnweis, who pitched the New York victory and Sweet Lalanne who hurled the Tulane tie, rank as perhaps the finest pair of passers of any eleven in

Their Marriage Blamed For War

A British government white paper issued in London has hinted that the marriage of Germany's then war minister, Marshal Werner Von Blomberg, to his stenographer, the former Erika Gruhn, a carpenter's daughter, in January, 1938, started a chain of events which precipitated the present war. Sir Neville Henderson, former British ambassador to Berlin, expressed the opinion that removal of Von Blomberg from the war ministry (because his marriage was considered socially "impossible") started the elimination of the more moderate advisers from Hitler's entourage.

Voroshiloff Learned His Job In School Of Experience

WORKER-GENERAL: Up from the ranks of non-military workmen came Kliment Efremovich Voroshiloff. He acquired oratorical powers during his revolutionary days, and as war commissar likes to harangue the soldiers of the Red army. He directed army during its invasion of Poland.

RADICAL: "Klim" Voroshiloff's political career began when he was only 15. During a labor demonstration at a metal factory where he worked, he resisted a police officer, received a beating.

DEFENDER: At Tsaritzyn (now Stalingrad), Voroshiloff organized a Red army against the White counter-revolutionaries, held them off for a year, gave Tsaritzyn a reputation as a "red Verdun."

TOP MAN militarily, as Joseph Stalin is top man politically, Voroshiloff is reputed to take orders from no one but Stalin. They are old friends and comrades, both having graduated from the school of revolutionary hard-knocks. Russia's No. 1 general and Russia's No. 1 politico are seen above tete-a-tete.

By The AP Feature Service
The smaller armies of lesser countries are commanded by career soldiers from military schools. The gigantic army of the world's largest country is commanded by a man who learned his soldiering when he was thrown into it on the battlefield. Until then he had been a mineboy, shepherd, farm-laborer, factory-hand, revolutionist and many-times political prisoner. He is Marshal Kliment Efremovich Voroshiloff, Soviet War Commissar. Russia's present dominant position on the continent of Europe is due in no small measure to him. Convinced that Red Russia could expect, at any time, a war at the hands of the capitalist power or a group of powers, Voroshiloff organized a general staff, mechanized the forces, built a large air fleet, encouraged such novel military ideas as "parachute infantry."

Well-built, powerful-looking astride his horse, easy to talk to, cheerful, and handsome in Russian eyes, "Klim" has come a long way. Born in 1881 into the family of a railway watchman, he went to work at 7, earning a nickel a day in a mine. At 10, he turned shepherd and farm-laborer. At 18, he organized and led a foundry strike. Was blacklisted by the police, found himself unable to get another job. At 22, he joined the Lenin-led (Bolshevik) wing of the Russian Social-Democratic Labor Party. His life became a series of arrests, exiles, escapes and resumptions of revolutionary activity. The Russian revolution of 1917 turned him into a military man.

Generally considered the ablest commander to emerge from the civil wars that followed the revolution, Voroshiloff was promoted to increasingly important posts, finally became People's Commissar for Military and Naval Affairs in 1925.

Meeting Held By Local AAUW Unit

Miss Mamie E. Jenkins, of the College English Faculty, was the speaker last night at the first meeting of the A. A. U. W. for the year, and talked on the impressions she gained of nationalism and internationalism in her trip abroad this past summer.

Introduced by the chairman of the International Relations Committee, Miss Jenkins sketched in an itinerary of her trip, which took her through France, and into Italy, Switzerland, Germany, Belgium, Holland, and finally to England; and then told of experiences here and there which made stand out vividly the strong nationalistic trends in Italy and Germany and the tendency toward an international spirit in "the so-called democracies."

She found people in Italy, for example, admitting that they thought the persecution of the Jews terrible, but "though one may think what he pleases, one must act with the government," they would declare. And she was struck by the red tape at all the borders, the feeling by the officials that everything in the other side was suspect.

Then Miss Jenkins told of certain experiences she had in which she shared a feeling of internationalism with people from many countries, of friendliness without thought of border lines.

Once, she said, in a railway compartment between the Hague and the Belgian border, she had as fellow travelers a German woman and her daughter, a Dutch woman, and two Chinese students on their way home from a World Youth Conference; and they all talked together in English on very friendly terms. Miss Jenkins came to the rescue of the Chinese students in their efforts to manage their currency.
"This," said one of the students, "is real internationalism. An American helps us by trading us some Dutch money and filling out with an American quarter secured from an Italian in Naples."

After giving other experiences of the same international friendliness and quoting one man to the effect that there would be no hostility if that spirit which is strong in the common people could work up from the people to the leaders in the various countries, the speaker gave her conclusion—that people from various nations playing together, enjoying the arts together, talking together in a friendly way can develop a good-will that is obvious to border lines and national differences. By such friendly contact, she thought, better international relations would be fostered.

A number of guests and prospective members were present at the meeting.
Mrs. Luther Herring, who is serving as acting president in the place of Miss Dorothy Schnyder, presided.

States Requisites For Getting Old Age Insurance

Rocky Mount, Oct. 24—R. S. Marshall, manager of the Rocky Mount field office of the Social Security Board, discussing qualifications for monthly benefits under the recently enacted amendments to the Social Security Act, today stated that in order to qualify for monthly old-age insurance benefits, a worker (a) must be 65 years old or over; (b) must have worked on a job or jobs covered by the Act; (c) must have received a certain minimum amount of pay from such jobs during certain periods of time.

The amount of pay he must have earned in order to qualify for benefits is $50 or more in each of a certain number of calendar quarters. The quarters (three months) in which a worker earns $50 or more on covered jobs are called "quarters of coverage," with the quarters beginning January 1, April 1, October 1.

To Favor Payment For R. R. Officials

Raleigh, Oct. 24—(AP)—Governor Hoke said today that he would recommend to the stockholders and Carolina Railroad tomorrow that provision be made to pay salaries to the president and secretary-treasurer officials who will have few duties hereafter.
The stockholders and directors will meet at Kingston to elect officers of the company, which has leased its line to H. P. Edwards of Sanford. Salaries for the officers would be paid from the rent.
The railroad corporation has been operating the line between Goldsboro and Morehead City for several years as an independent.

You Can't Lock Up A Florida Policeman

Miami, Fla.—(AP)—Much has been written about policemen breaking into places provided they have search warrants.
But now comes Florida with a new criminal code one section of which gives an officer the right to break out again "if it is for the purpose of liberating himself."
The city of London succeeded in reducing by more than one-third the number of suicides from Blackfriars bridge by painting the gloomy old structure a gay, bright green.

Marked Tax Boost Noted In State Last 25 Years

Reflector Bureau.
By HENRY AVERILL
Raleigh, Oct. 23—When the National Association of State Auditors, Comptrollers and Treasurers recently issued an analysis showing that there have been "marked changes in state fiscal policies and practices during the past 25 years," it could have easily stressed the fact that in no state have these changes been more marked than in North Carolina.
It takes only the most casual sort of review of North Carolina's history for the past quarter-century to realize that changes in its fiscal policies and practices have been so vast as to be almost revolutionary. A study of the finances of North Carolina 25 years ago, and as of today make it hard to believe that the same state is being made the subject of analysis.

To begin with, the difference in state revenues and expenditure is so vast as to be almost unbelievable. In the auditor's report for the fiscal year ended November 30, 1914, for example, it is duly recorded that the State's receipts for the general fund were $4,683,875.13 and for the educational fund $128,553.47, for a grand total of less than five million dollars. There wasn't any highway fund.

In other words the entire year's receipts of the state of North Carolina twenty-five years ago amounted to little more than it now collects in two months from one item of taxation alone—the gallonage tax of 6 cents on gasoline, and if the quarter-cent per gallon inspection fee be added, the motor fuel tax alone now yields in two months as much revenue as the state collected from all sources in the entire fiscal year of 1914.

The gasoline tax, a levy which was completely unknown in 1914, has incidentally become the most important single revenue source in the United States—the National Association's analysis revealing that in 1937 this levy accounted for about 15 per cent of the total revenue for the 48 American states.
Getting back to North Carolina, however, the 1914 auditor's figures reveal that the state spent that year a total of $127,649.40 from its educational fund and $4,853,312.46 from its general fund. Here again, as in the case of receipts, the grand total was less than five million.

By way of comparison, the auditor's report for the fiscal year ended November 30, 1938—last to be printed and distributed—showed total cash receipts, including federal grants-in-aid and all other items, of $108,967,785 and total cash disbursements of $109,330,526; each of these items being more than twenty times its counterpart in 1914.
In 1938 the state paid out in unemployment benefits alone practically as much as it spent for all purposes from the general fund of 1914—the unemployment aid figures for 1938 reading $4,711,092 as compared with the $4,853,312.46 already listed as spent from general funds twenty-five years ago.
And so it goes all the way along the line. With the exception of property tax for state purposes, almost every item of revenue has risen tremendously, while there just isn't any comparison in the expenditures. Naturally, the fact that North Carolina has taken over complete operation of the state's eight-month school system and of its public highways has caused a rise in both state expenditures and receipts which would not occur in state's still following the old system of leaving these two agencies largely to local units to finance.
The trend all over the country has been away from state property taxes, the national analysis showing that in 1937 this sort of levy yielded on seven per cent of all state revenues, against 44 per cent in 1915. With the exception of North Carolina and a few others, however, this trend is due more to huge increases in other items of revenue rather than to decreases in the absolute total of state property taxes collected.
