BRITAIN STRENGTHENING POSITION IN MIDDLE EAST

BRITISH SHIPS MAY BE KEPT IN WAR ZONES

All Shipping Elsewhere May Be Turned Over to U.S.

MOVE HAS BEEN LONG EXPECTED

Agreement Yesterday To Turn over Routes To Australia And New Zealand May Be Forerunner

Washington, June 4.—(AP)—An agreement for American merchantmen to take over all British shipping routes from the United States and Canada to Australia and New Zealand was regarded here today as the probable forerunner of a complete British withdrawal from maritime activities outside the war zone.

Such a withdrawal, with United States vessels taking over the abandoned routes, long has been considered likely, but the first formal action did not come until late yesterday.

In a brief formal announcement, the Maritime Commission reported the agreement and said the dozen British vessels would be released for Great Britain's war effort.

The expectation was that British enroute ships in the South American trade would soon follow.

The Maritime Commission's announcement capped a day that saw various aspects of Britain's lifeline battle figure prominently in capitol developments.

One provocative disclosure was that "a number" of the Commission's new cargo vessels had already been converted into aircraft carriers. John J. Dempsey, a member of the Commission, gave the information to a Senate committee investigating the defense program.

He also said that merchant ship deliveries were expected to reach the one-a-day by November. He gave the number of vessels now under construction as 746.

Fire Loss In May Near $4,000 Mark

Greenville firemen answered 11 calls during the month of May, the total loss for the period being $3,929.20, of which $3,809.20 was insured, it was revealed today by Chief George Gardner.

Value of the buildings in which the 11 fires occurred was estimated at $12,900, on which $6,050 in insurance was carried.

Figures for the year show that buildings valued at $217,600 were threatened by fires and $200,000 worth of property was destroyed.

Loss by fires for the year to date amounts to $43,384.31. Of this $41,729.31 was insured and $1,655 was uninsured.

Protection!

Berlin, June 4.—(AP)—Berlin has received unofficial reports of "certain protective measures" taken by France along the borders of some of her colonial possessions, an authorized spokesman said today.

But Berlin, he continued, was not disposed to comment on such reports beyond observing that France was faced by "positive aggressions," particularly bombings in Syria, and so was justified in defending herself.

The situation in Iraq, with an armistice effective in some parts of the land, was pronounced obscure.

CALL MEET ON COTTON STAMP

Plan To Be Discussed At Mass Meet On Thursday Night

All retailers and their clerks, and wholesalers of American grown and manufactured cotton merchandise are urged to attend an important mass meeting to be held in the Pitt County Courthouse at 8:00 P.M., Thursday, June 5.

Mr. O. P. Matthews, chairman of the Pitt County Cotton Stamp Committee will preside. Speakers will include: Ellwood R. Willis, representative of the Surplus Marketing Administration, and an opportunity will be given to those in attendance to ask questions regarding the program.

In announcing the meeting, County Agent R. R. Bennett, stated that as far as possible not only merchants but their clerks as well as bankers and others interested should attend this important discussion of how merchants may participate in the benefits of the Supplementary Cotton Stamp Program, soon to be launched in this area.

He said that in order to be eligible to accept Cotton Stamps for redemption from the Government, merchants must first complete a "Retailer's Statement" form which will be available and fully explained at the meeting.

According to Mr. Willis, S.M.A. representative of this area, $25,000,000 worth of Cotton Stamps are available for distribution to cotton farmers during 1941, and any merchant unprepared to accept these stamps in trade in the prescribed manner would be at a distinct disadvantage. "The simplest way for merchants to fully understand the Program," said Mr. Willis, "is to attend this meeting. They will learn how they may get their share of this additional business; what goods may be exchanged for stamps; the rules and regulations they must comply with in making cotton stamp sales; and how to redeem the stamps for cash."

"By aggressive merchandising methods pushing the sale of cotton goods not only to those using stamps—but to every family in the community—retail merchants will make a substantial contribution toward solving the problem of price-depression cotton surpluses and under-consumption of cotton goods by a large part of our people."

TO BE BURIED DOORN MONDAY

Full Military Honors To Be Conferred Upon World War Kaiser, However, Upon Orders Of Reichsfuehrer Hitler

Berlin, June 4.—(AP)—Former Kaiser Wilhelm, II, of Imperial Germany died today at his exile estate of Doorn, in the quiet backwash of a new German conquest almost 23 years after he fled from the crumbling failure of his own European war plan.

D.N.B. German official news agency, reported from Amsterdam that the 32-year-old, white-bearded former emperor died at 11:30 a. m. in a sudden relapse of an illness which brought members of his family to his bedside last week.

He is to be buried at Doorn next Monday, but, on the orders of Adolf Hitler, a military funeral with full honors is to be accorded Imperial Germany's last emperor.

The German high command has taken full charge of the military phase of the funeral, a token, perhaps, that reconciliation between the Fuehrer and the former emperor had been complete.

At his bedside when he died were only a few close members of his family—his second wife, Princess Hermine; his daughter, the Duchess of Brunswick; and his grandsons, Louis Ferdinand, Karl and Franz Joseph, and the latter's wife Princess Henrietta.

The former emperor's eldest living son and successor as head of the Hohenzollern family, Crown Prince Friedrich Wilhelm, had been at his father's side earlier, but left last week when the former kaiser seemed to rally.

Forest Fire System Proving Effective

Reflector Bureau. By HENRY AVERILL. Raleigh, June 4.—North Carolina's system of forest fire protection and prevention isn't yet by any means completely adequate—as witness the recent appalling fires in all sections—but even so the state has come a long way since active forest fire control by a state agency began in a small way in 1915.

The history of forest fire control in the state, as sketched by W. K. Beichler of the division of fire control of the Department of Conservation and Development, runs like this:

The 1915 legislature enacted the law which forms the basis of the present forest fire setup; but it carried no appropriation. It was administered by the North Carolina Geological and Economic Survey which was the immediate predecessor of the present Department of Conservation and Development.

Though there were no state funds, cooperation with the U. S. Forest Service enabled the Survey to appoint a few part-time forest wardens, principally in the mountain counties. Under the Weeks law of 1911 small sums were available (from $280 to $2,000 annually) during the period 1915-20.

The title "State Forester" was first put into official use under the 1915 state law.

In 1920 the State Forester was allowed an assistant in charge of fire (Continued on page six)

Any Official Holding Up Program To Be Ousted

THREAT MADE AT DEFENSE HEARING

Warning Comes During Testimony By OPM That Production Program Would Be Speeded

Washington, June 4.—(AP)—Senator Connally (D-Tex.) declared today that the Senate Defense Investigating Committee was ready to "put the skids" under any official responsible for not speeding up the nation's armament program.

Connally's assertion came during sharp questioning at a committee hearing of Stacy May, OPM statistical chief, who had testified that the production program ought to be speeded up.

May said he thought the army, navy, OPM and the country as a whole had "not taken the job seriously enough" in the past. There has been a realization of this, he said, and as a result Congress could look for more defense fund requests later.

May said he was convinced that there was a "tremendous" number of machine tools not yet being used in the production program.

Connally insisted on knowing why the OPM had not taken decisive action to speed up production of these items.

"If the OPM is not doing its maximum, and you say it is not," Connally said heatedly, "then tell us who is at fault and we will put the skids under him."

"I can't answer that question," May replied.

"I'm tired of all this buck-passing to other people," the senator went on.

May testified the government must virtually double present defense expenditures by fiscal year 1942-43 to $40,000,000,000 production program for 1941-42 was to be fulfilled.

Half Of Merchant Fleet Lost By Great Britain

50 Per Cent Of Force At Start Of War Been Sunk

Berlin, June 4.—(AP)—More than half the merchant fleet with which Britain started the war has been sunk and she is "bleeding to death," Germans declared today.

Since the beginning of the conflict, German sea and air units have destroyed a total of 11,664,000 tons of British shipping, D.N.B. official German news agency asserted.

British merchant tonnage at the outset of the war was estimated at about 21,000,000 tons. British figures on allied shipping losses through April total approximately 6,000,000 tons.

The newspaper Boersen Zeitung, commenting on these figures, said Britain thus had lost during 21 months of the war as much shipping as English shipyards were able to construct in 11 years of peace.

Scuffing at the idea Britain's needs for ships could be filled by the United States in time to save her from defeat, the paper declared that according to English figures only 27 vessels totalling 221,000 tons were launched in American shipyards during the last four months.

NAVAL PATROL WORK STUDIED

Unable To Tell Yet Whether Action Is Effective

Washington, June 4.—(AP)—Secretary Knox said today that the navy had been unable to determine yet whether expansion of the American naval patrol had substantially reduced the effectiveness of German submarine operations.

Knox said the Germans were claiming a tremendous number of sinkings, while the British have contended the true figures were much less. He added, "hitherto the British have generally been right. To this Knox added the explanation that "we haven't had time yet to tell just what the results are of expansion of the United States patrol."

Extension of U. S. Atlantic operations has been under way for many months, but last week it received new impetus from President Roosevelt, who declared that whatever methods necessary would be taken to insure delivery of American munitions to Britain.

Previously both Washington and London officials have said the work of the neutrality patrol had greatly increased production given to British supply convoys.

Replying to a variety of press conference questions, Knox said that the situation at France's Caribbean island of Martinique was "unchanged" and that as for reports that the Germans had moved to the French naval base at Dakar, West Africa, "I know no more about that than you do."

Big Battle Is Believed Taking Form

Reoccupation Of Oil Center Of Iraq By British Troops And Completion Of Precautions Regarding Syria Officially Reported As Preliminaries For What May Be Portentous Struggle

London, June 4.—(AP)—Britain claimed today to have strengthened her hand for the great battle shaping up in the Middle East by two steps aimed at thwarting German strategy, but her position in Iraq apparently still was delicate.

These preliminaries for what may be a portentous struggle for Middle East oil and control of the Suez canal were announced by the British as successfully completed:

1. Re-occupation of Mosul, the oil center of Iraq, by British troops.
2. "Necessary precautions in regard to Syria," the potential bridgehead for an Axis thrust into Iraq and backdoor drive toward Suez.

Cairo, June 4.—(AP)—The Egyptian cabinet resigned tonight. It was understood that Premier Hussein Sirry Pasha would be designated to form a new cabinet tomorrow.

The reshuffle was declared by authoritative quarters to be occasioned by the "present grave circumstances" involving fear of a German thrust into the rich valley of the Nile.

Although order was said to have been restored, the Middle East general headquarters conceded that martial law had been declared by the Iraq government in Baghdad yesterday following "serious rioting."

(Authorized German sources in Berlin intimated that Britain's troubles in Iraq may not be ended by the armistice and formation of a new regime yesterday. The Berlin view is that the Iraq government is acting under protection of British bombers and armored cars and that the truce is only partly effective.)

A House of Commons inquiry into Britain's Crete disaster and a parliamentary inquiry into conduct of the war as a whole were predicted by political correspondents. One said there was widespread dissatisfaction among members of Commons, who regard the loss of Crete as the price of "a grave lack of foresight on the part of responsible authorities."

17,000 Prisoners Taken By Britain

Nairobi, Kenya Colony, June 4.—(AP)—British forces have captured more than 17,000 prisoners, including 5,872 Europeans, in the Battle of the Lakes in Ethiopia, the British command announced today.

A communique said the captured material included 14 tanks, 700 cars and 85 guns.

The Battle of the Lakes is in south-central Ethiopia, where the last vestiges of Italian resistance to British conquest of the entire country have been holding out.

Seeking To Check Executive Power

Washington, June 4.—(AP)—A well-supported move developed in the Senate today to put a congressional check on the wide powers asked by President Roosevelt to requisition private property, temporarily or permanently, for defense purposes.

Two influential senators, who asked to remain anonymous, said serious consideration was being given by administration leaders to suggestions that the property confiscation bill drawn by the War Department be amended to make it simply a temporary measure under which the President could act only after Congress directed such action by passage of a resolution.

This, these senators said, would meet the objection of some critics who have said that to permit the President to take over private property of all kinds for defense use or for re-sale, as proposed in the bill, would be to give him dictatorial powers.

The President made it plain at his press conference that one of the prime objectives of the bill was to make it possible for the government to deal primarily with strikes or lockouts in defense industries by taking over the affected plants.

A LAMB LIMERICK FOR JUNE BRIDES

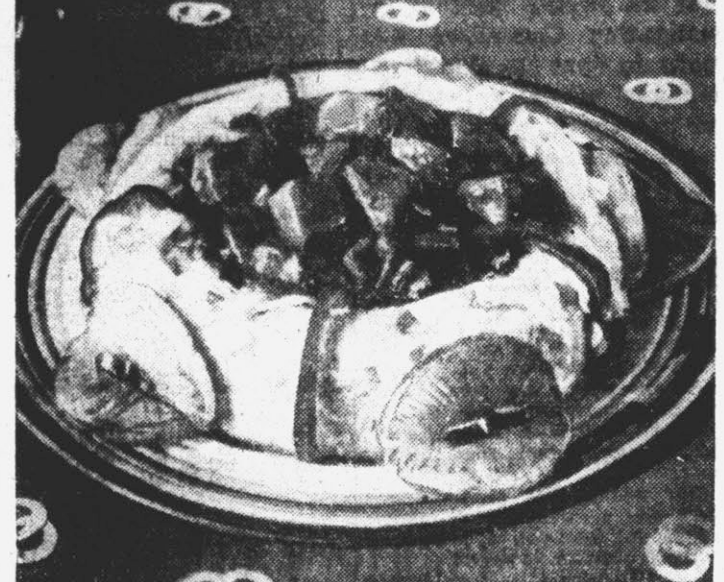

A leg of lamb is a big investment for a small family dinner unless you have a plan for handling the inevitable left-over problem. Here's a formula to carry a lamb roast from Sunday through Tuesday—a timely tip for the June bride.

SUNDAY'S LAMB IS GOLDEN BROWN—

Proper cooking will turn out a with salt and pepper. The oven golden brown roast. A slow temperature prevents shrinkage. The leg should be placed with cut side up and skin side down on a rack in an open roasting pan. Season

MONDAY'S LAMB IS RINGED AROUND—

Cream lamb and peas in noodle ring makes a dish that saves work time and dishwashing. And it tastes fine, too. Cook a package of wide noodles as directed on the package, drain and rinse. Combine with four tablespoons of melted butter and put into a greased one-quart ring mold. Set the mold in a pan of hot water for 10 minutes. To cream the lamb and peas, you first cut enough cold lamb in inch cubes to fill three cups. Sauté a sliced onion in butter until tender, add two cups of left-over gravy and season with one-

TUESDAY'S LAMB—GETS LOST IN A SALAD

Lamb goes nicely into your salad bowl. Place 2-1/2 cups of diced cold lamb in the center. Arrange 2 cups of diced celery around the lamb. Repeat, using one-half cup of chopped green pepper. Cut an apple in half, core and slice cross-wise. Place slices around the edge of the bowl, peel side up and extending about one-eighth of an inch above the edge. Serve with mayonnaise to which has been added the chopped fresh mint. (Six servings). —Margaret Kernodle.

Daughters of The Confederacy
On June 3, in obedience to a requirement of their national constitution, the Singletary chapter met to celebrate the birthday of Jefferson Davis, the President of the Confederacy.

The president called the chapter to order and after the routine work gave a brief sketch of the great scholar, statesman and orator. The chapter then decided to take a recess during the summer months. Delicious refreshments were served.

These Women!

Mrs. Charles Guggenheimer, handsome, gray-haired, blue-eyed Chairman of the New York Stadium Concerts Committee, is one of Manhattan's biggest gamblers.

She gambles on the weather. As head of the open-air stadium concerts she spends thousands of dollars on conductors, guest artists and musicians with the risk that their performance may be called off because of rain. The concerts, scheduled every evening for eight summer weeks, have to be paid for whether they take place or not. Rain before intermission means rain checks. The committee never has carried rain insurance.

So for the June-to-August season the weather is an ever threatening bogey to Mrs. Guggenheimer. Nobody around her is allowed to mention rain. From her 57th street office she keeps an eye on the weathercock on top of the Heckscher building, calls up the weather bureau a dozen times a day. As a last resort she calls for advice from her chauffeur George. (Her friends say he always says, "No, I don't think it will rain.")

Mrs. Guggenheimer is Mother of Music to millions of New Yorkers. Twenty-four years ago, during the World War, she launched the Stadium concerts, chiefly for the benefit of soldiers and sailors. Since then, up to 300,000 persons a season have listened to symphonies under the stars and applauded such guests artists as Jascha Heifetz, Efram Zimbalist, Albert Spalding and John Charles Thomas.

Minnie Guggenheimer's inexhaustible energy, imagination and determination have kept the concerts going through boom, panic and depression. She has badgered big business tycoons for support and has got it; she has launched innovations and made them click. She introduced the Fokine Ballet, Nelson Edy and George Gershwin, added stage equipment which fills a score of trucks and advocated dimmer stadium lights to create a more romantic atmosphere. (Her concerts are jammed with young people.) This season, which begins June 19 she has arranged to have soldiers and sailors in uniform admitted free on Saturday and Sunday nights.

During the season she is usually to be found at one of the front tables at the concert at least two nights a week, an ivory cigarette holder held between her ruby-nailed fingers. She wears simple clothes—often blue—and carries a little vial of old-fashioned smelling salts. During intermissions she circulates among the critics and says: "Say something nice about so and so." Before she goes to bed she calls the box office to learn the evening's take. Next morning she calls the weather bureau and starts all over again.

Greater Benefits Offset Drop In Farm Revenues

Reflector Bureau total income for the year. "During the first quarter of 1941.

By HENRY AVERILL
Raleigh, June 4 — North Carolina farmers got less cash for the products they sold in the first quarter of this year, but the payments of a beneficent federal government to them more than offset this decrease and boosted their total cash income from all sources to a point slightly above the corresponding period of 1940.

The state's total January thru March cash farm income, including government payments, was estimated at $29,430,000, or four per cent above the $28,362,000 received during the first quarter of 1940," said T. L. Stuart, junior statistician of the State Department of Agriculture.

Of the three items going to make up cash farm income two increased (livestock sales and government payments) against decrease in the other, cash sales of crops.

Of the total cash income $13,870,000 was from sale of crops, $32,000 from sale of livestock and $7,271,000 in the form of government payments of one sort or another. These figures represented a decrease of 9.3 per cent in crop sales, and increases of eight and 35 per cent, respectively, in livestock sales and government payments.

"Of the total cash income received by North Carolina farmers during the first three months of this year, receipts from the sales of crops contributed 47 per cent; livestock and livestock products 28.3 per cent, and government payments 24.7 per cent," Stuart said.

"Sales of farm products in North Carolina are light during the first quarter and income these months is by no means indicative of the forefinger. . . . Princess Kyril Sheratow spikes the lapel of her brown tweed coat with a diamond grasshopper. . . . Mrs. Orson Munn of New York wears china rooster earrings.

cash income including government payments in the North Atlantic states and west north central states was just slightly smaller than in the first quarter of 1940; whereas in the remaining regions income increased from four to sixteen per cent.

"In the north Atlantic region, lower prices of potatoes, smaller marketings of tobacco and smaller government payments more than offset the increase in income from poultry, eggs and meat animals.

"Marked increases in income from fruit and truck crops in Florida and from both crops and livestock in Georgia accounted primarily for the increase in farm income of the South Atlantic region in the first quarter of 1941."

THE SWORD DASSER

By Edith Hamilton

YESTERDAY: First Anne Willard and the two men who were taking her to her parents' desert camp were abandoned, well fed but without any further provisions, by the servants of the Emir they had thought they were escaping. Now Anne finds that Blaise Sherwood is still with her, but that Pete Mackey, the only one with a revolver, has disappeared.

Chapter 15 No Place To Go

"Pete had a gun," Anne recalled. "Maybe the men are chasing him." "Or he, them," grinned Sherwood. "But it doesn't look it, according to the condition of the camp." They regarded each other a bit shyly. "Well," they left us life," Anne remarked, "and air and water. Let's go get a drink."

It was then Sherwood noticed the scroll lying beside his traveling bag. Anne watched him unroll it, she stared over his shoulder at the strange script. "Can you read it?" "I can figure it out in time. Go get your drink."

She looked down at her long, ruffled dress. "I'd better change and have a plunge too." "Good idea." He went out and tossed in her bathing suit before closing the tent. She found him working busily with pencil and paper when she appeared. "Have you deciphered it?" He shook his head. "I speak this tongue easier than I read it."

When she returned he did not look up. She put on the tweeds she had worn the day before and came out and sat down beside him. Presently he threw the papers down and turned towards her, his face unreadable. "What have you found out?" she asked, and felt he was debating whether to tell her or not. "A message to me from the Emir," he said at last. "Do you want it?"

Of course I do. He searched her eyes intently for a moment, then he smiled that special smile of his that always changed the rhythm of her heartbeat. "We've faced death together before, haven't we, Anne?" Her hand groped for his and clung to it. "What is his message, Blaise?"

Sherwood's eyes turned from hers to the papers between his feet. "The Emir is very frank. He acknowledges his debt to me for saving his life. Had he followed his usual procedure, he assures me, Mackey and I would have died at once and you would have been sent to the slave market. As it is, he gives me a taste of paradise—this castle in the desert—and you—for the length of time it takes us to die from starvation."

"Sent here to starve! I can't believe it!" Anne whispered. "The Emir thought he was giving me Mackey, too. A friend to talk with and a girl to love—what more could any man desire during the final days of his life?"

Slowly Anne drew her hand away from his and sat up straight. "But you said he would take no chances on the Nagaras avenging my death." "Not death—murder. These people make a nice distinction. Taking life as an unsanctified butcher does is murder. Letting people die of hardships or hunger is the will of God."

"How dreadful!" "The Emir warns me that men die of thirst in a very few days on the desert while with hunger, after the initial pangs, he has heard, the suffering is not severe, and one lives much longer."

Sherwood gave Anne a swift scrutiny to see how she was taking it, then he went on tonelessly: "The Emir had once hoped to raise an army and conquer the Nagara tribesmen, but Shani Lun and Sinking discouraged the idea. Now he is negotiating with Russian archaeologists to fulfill the Nagara prophecy—when you can no longer—claim the dagger."

Anne remembered the words in her father's last note. "Fulfill the prophecy." "What is the prophecy?" she asked. "I have been two years ferreting it out. Your father stumbled upon it accidentally. Recently the Emir learned it—I don't know how." "Tell me," she urged. "Let's move into the shade first." "Up under the rock," she suggested. "I'm thirsty again."

fiere natives pledged to keep all knowledge of the place secret from other men until the appointed time. "Which has come?" she asked. "It all depends," he said with an amused glance at her, refusing to be hurried. "Tradition has it that in this section of Asia a great colonial nation, springing from some continent farther west, 'a land of bliss and mystery,' had been established thousands and thousands of years ago, before the mountains rose. This country here is supposed to be the land bridge between the Pacific continent and Siberia, reaching to Europe." He changed his position and stretched out beside Anne resting on one elbow.

"With the rising of the mountains this one city was lifted up intact—neither shattered by earthquakes nor buried in volcanic ash." "That seems impossible," she murmured. "So does the great pyramid seem impossible when you think of it, but there it stands. The story goes that ruling inhabitants of this city of ours soon sank with their slaves to a savage remnant from which has sprung the Nagara tribe."

"How wonderful if it proves to be true?" murmured Anne with shining eyes. "The only man not a Nagaran known to have seen the city was a Tibetan hunter who came out carrying this two-headed image of mine in one hand and two rubies the size of marbles in the other. But his hardships had been too much for him. He died in delirium a few weeks later."

"And the prophecy?" Anne prompted. "On The Horizon Sherwood walked back and forth while he talked, and happening to lift his eyes to the horizon, suddenly stiffened like a man turned to stone. Anne sprang to her knees and then to her feet. She saw the same object. "Is it some one moving?" she asked.

"I cannot tell. Let's climb to the top of the cliff." For the object they saw seemed to move behind a ridge of clay like a man behind a fence moving with only his head visible. From the crown of the rock when they arrived there, climbing swiftly, they could see no sign of movement. Anne felt sick with disappointment. The view that spread out before them was revealing in its desolation. An endless expanse of shallow clay ridges, dunes encroaching on the east, reached to hazy distances that had no background save sky except in the direction of the Bekkan Bula mountains which rose afar off, to glistening snow heights and merely served to show the helplessness of man.

"This will be a furnace in another month," said Sherwood. He looked at Anne, who had dropped down panting. "We shouldn't race like this and use up our strength for so little profit." He reached out a hand to pull her to her feet. "Let's go back to the tent."

"There's no object," she said listlessly. "We'll have something softer than stone to rest on." "I am feeling bruised," she admitted rising and examining the weathered rock pattern indented on the heel of her hand. They looked once more at the ridges across the bowl, lowly an eagle rose and glided away in the sunset.

"So that's what it was! At least we have aristocratic neighbors," murmured Anne, Sherwood made no reply. "Wait!" His lips tightened in a smile more grim than amused. "Wait! When there are only a few more days in which to feel really by cross winds of secret emotions trying to tear her from her mooring. "We shall be rescued," she told herself vehemently. "I refuse to believe anything else." They paused before the tent and Sherwood turned and regarded her in an odd way, his eyes dark and narrowed under their thick lashes. She felt her pulses begin to race despite an effort at calm. "What about our relationship, Anne?" "Let's not think about it," she cried. "Let's wait." "Wait!" His lips tightened in a smile more grim than amused. "Wait! Man About Manhattan

By George Tucker

New York—Sidney Kingsley called them Dead End Kids, and Jack London knew them as "Children of the Abyss." They are, actually, underprivileged children of the New York slum areas, and one of the great boons to their lot in recent years has been the finely organized Boys Clubs of New York.

There are some 18 of these clubs. The only one I am familiar with is the Kip's Bay Boys Club at 301 East 52nd street, which utilizes seven floors for the welfare of more than 2,000 kids.

The idea of these clubs is to substitute a health environment for that of the street. There is a fine swimming pool and it is open practically all of the time. "That keeps them out of the East River," explains G. Dana Younger, managing director of the club. "If the pool wasn't open they would spend half their time in the river. So we keep it open."

Before they go in, they have to scrub themselves clean. Even if they weren't dirty, they would still have to do this. If you make a boy scrub himself thoroughly every day, you teach him the habit of cleanliness. It's something he seldom forgets. That is important. The Kip's Bay Boys Club has three gymnasiums (one open air); it has motion pictures, public speaking classes, a library. The boys play tennis, checkers, hockey on roller skates. They have a fine basketball team and annually play Columbia City College, NYU, and other schools.

Once each week there are parties to which the older boys bring their girls. There are wood-work rooms, manual training courses, a machine shop. "Some of our boys" Mr. Younger tells you proudly, "have become contractors, engineers, even instructors in universities. Here's a case in point. We argued with one boy's father for weeks to permit him to go to a university. His

Strength For The Day

By EARL L. DOUGLASS

DO WE ALWAYS HAVE JUSTICE?

People often complain that they do not get their just deserts in life. This is true, and we can thank God that it is. Justice is a two-edged sword. If there were nothing but justice in the world, you and I would be in a sorry plight. If we had received our just deserts on every occasion, we would be suffering punishment today for many evils which God in His mercy has overlooked. When we are disposed to complain and say that God has not given us as many blessings as we should have, we should look at the other side of the picture and become very conscious of the equally important reality, namely, that He has not held us fully accountable for all our mistakes and sins. Justice is no more perfect in this imperfect world than is anything else. There is not as much justice in the world as we would desire, but there is infinitely more mercy than we deserve. Man may not give us everything that is coming to us, but God withholds His hand very often and the hand of fate man, that we suffer not the full extremity of our wrong doing.

There could be worse things in life than injustice, and the inflexible working of the principles of strict justice in our lives every day would be one of these.

NO MORE TIME SHOULD BE LOST

As might have been expected, the isolationists now declare that they will stage a fight against the proposed legislation that would give President Roosevelt additional powers to deal with our emergency. Of course, the group might be able to cause a delay in passage of the measure but certainly they have no chance to defeat it, for as each day passes the country as a whole is more fully realizing that America must lose no more time in getting its house in order for the grave task of defending our rights and liberties wherever they might be jeopardized.

If the proposed legislation does not already include it, there should be a provision added whereby the President by executive order could conscript labor for defense industries in the same manner that the legislation would permit him to draft property for defense purposes and in the same manner that the army conscription bill permits the drafting of young men for military training.

Nothing short of an all-out effort on the part of our country at this time will suffice and it is time to quit squabbling and get down to business.

APPLICABLE TODAY

I preach to you then, my countrymen, that our country calls not for the life of ease, but for the life of strenuous endeavor. The twentieth century looms before us big with the fate of many nations. If we stand idly by, if we seek merely swollen siothful ease—then the bolder and stronger people will pass us by and will win for themselves the domination of the world. Let us, therefore, boldly face the life of strife, resolute to do our duty well, and manfully resolute to uphold righteousness by deed and by word; resolute to be both honest and brave, to serve high ideals, yet to use practical methods.—Theodore Roosevelt.

--And Since When Has He Started ASKING?

Washington Daybook

Washington.—The Nazi attack on Crete has brought the "gliders for America" fight out into the open again, with Senator Pat McCarran of Nevada leading the pro-gliders and the north wing of the Capitol and Rep. W. Sterling Cole of Bath, N. Y., leading them in the south.

Asks For $500,000.—Senator McCarran's bill (Representative Cole has a similar one in the House) would appropriate $500,000 for setting up glider clubs of 20 persons each in high schools and colleges. Two members of each club would be taught to soar with sufficient proficiency to teach other members. The clubs would be furnished, at cost, plans and instructions for building gliders (which can be turned out in almost any wood-working shop).

The bill was introduced six months ago, but no committee hearings have been held on it. Oddly enough, the army, navy and commerce department (in which the CAA is located) have all expressed themselves against the bill. War Department Secretary Stimson once said, in part, "Flight training in gliders or sailplanes as a preliminary step in power-plane training is of doubtful value," and that the War Department "does not look with favor on enactment of this legislation." Then-acting Secretary Bard of the Navy said experiments at Pensacola (Fla.) Naval Air Station definitely determined that inclusion of glider training in the flight training program was not worth while. Commerce Secretary Jesse Jones said the civilian pilot training act of 1939 provided the requisite authority for carrying out a glider pilot training program, making the Senator's bill unnecessary.

Nazi Tactics Not Discussed.—None of the departments in written recommendations on the bill discussed the phase of wartime gliding which the Germans used to some extent in Belgium and Holand and to a far greater extent in Crete.

If gliding to battle suddenly proved the most effective way of getting there "fastest with the mostest men," the United States might again be in the position of having had the prophet—but nothing else.

Eleven years ago, the late Frank Hawks, among others, was shouting for glider development for military use. He envisioned, even then, planes pulling trains of transport gliders and hordes of soldiers sliding down from the skies. He even had himself towed in a glider from coast to coast to prove it could be done.

A few years after that the Germans started their glider program which was said to have reached a total of 300,000 glider pilots in 1938.

Short Shots

Raleigh, June 4.—Although forecasts have been a source of revenue in North Carolina for almost 300 years it is only within comparatively recent years that Tar Heels, official and common folks, began to realize that throughout these three centuries the state has been wastefully wasteful in the management of its forest resources.

Now that for the last several decades the state has been forced to adjust itself to utilization of second-growth timber instead of the rich accumulation of centuries and now that a disastrous series of forest fires has just destroyed a significant proportion of the remaining timber, there appears to be something of an awakening.

The Governor has stressed the dangers in the situation, and the Department of Conservation and Development has set aside this week to put special emphasis on forestry facts and figures.

It is well, for while North Carolina still holds a leading position in the south in timber production there are many things which must be done if it is to hold this leading Tough Spot.—Pity poor Marshall Kurfees, on the Fifth district ballot as Republican nominee for Congress! The attorney general has ruled that he cannot take his name off.

"He can't run, can't win and can't quit," summed up one observer.

These Hoey's.—Perhaps alarmed lest Governor J. Melville Broughton take away his laurels as the state's most prolific speech maker, Clyde Hoey has impressed his wife into service!

While the former governor was advising Clemson's graduates how to grapple with the world's affairs, Mrs. Hoey was "busting" the Woman's College at Greensboro.

Red Cross Record.—The Wake county chapter of the American Red Cross is much too modest to do any bragging itself, but many who have looked over the report of its annual roll calls from 1933 through 1941 would like to challenge any other organization to show a better. In 1933 the roll call yielded $314. Each subsequent year has shown a substantial increase until this year's campaign closed with subscriptions totalling $7,026.

Adams Hurls Greenies To 13-7 Victory Over Martins

LADIES NIGHT AGAIN TONIGHT

Adams Strikes Out 10 And Walks Seven Batters

The Greenies continued their winning streak last night, defeating the Williamston Martins 13-7, but Wilson also continued its pace to keep two and one-half games ahead of the locals as the two teams continued to set the pace in the Coastal Plain league.

The locals will entertain Rocky Mount here tonight in another Ladies Night affair.

Although yielding 14 hits—more than the Greenies garnered—and walking seven men, Adams struck out 10 men and proved effective in several tight spots as his mates were making the best of their 13 hits and three Martin errors.

Adams also was effective on the offensive, getting two three-baggers to drive in three runs. Jenkins and Scagg each got two doubles and Caraway came through with one as the game produced some heavy hitting. Two Williamston homers were marked up during the night.

The Greenies were behind only a short while. They scored one in the second and the tally was matched by Williamston in the same frame. The Martins, however, went ahead with one in the third, but the Greenies made four in the fifth and were never seriously threatened as they added six in the seventh—the same inning in which the Martins went on a scoring spree, getting four.

control work, and this assistant was appointed under the title of Chief Forest Fire Warden. Between 1915 and 1920 data on forest fires were compiled from reports of volunteer correspondents over the state. Actual work was confined practically to that under individual owners and fire protective associations. In 1921 the General Assembly passed the first law authorizing the counties to cooperate financially with the Survey in the work of forest fire control and prevention. Some immediately took advantage of it and in 1921 about $350 in county money was spent on the work. In 1922 this rose to about $951 and in 1923 it was about $3,500. By 1922 forest fire wardens, under very moderate compensation, had been appointed in 21 counties and were being supervised by two salaried foresters in the field who were called District Foresters.

In 1925 the General Assembly reorganized the Geological and Economic Survey as the Department of Conservation and Development. At that time the federal funds available under the Clarke-McNary act of 1924 were about $30,000 annually and some 30 counties cooperated with the state appropriating an additional $10,000.

In 1926 the first lookout tower was constructed by the State Forest Service. It was a wooden tower near Cameron Hill in Harnett county. Only slight progress was made in this type work until the coming of the Federal Emergency Conservation Work Program in 1933. At present the fire detection and reporting service of the State Forest Service consists of 91 lookout towers (with seven more on order through the CCC) and about 900 miles of connecting telephone lines. North Carolina has about 18,000 acres of forest lands, with a conservatively estimated investment of over $200,000,000 annually in these lands. The federal government through several of its branches owns and protects about 1,375,000 acres. The remainder is mostly privately owned. In 1930 the Department of Conservation and Development had about 10,000 acres under a measure of forest fire protection. During the depression this area dropped as low as 6,500,000 acres. It has now risen to 11,720,000 acres in 55 counties which are cooperating financially with the state and federal governments.

Defense Tries Factory-Built Housing

(AP Feature Service)

A success chapter in the quest of defense workers for homes is that being written by prefabricated houses—factory-built dwellings turned out on a mass production basis.

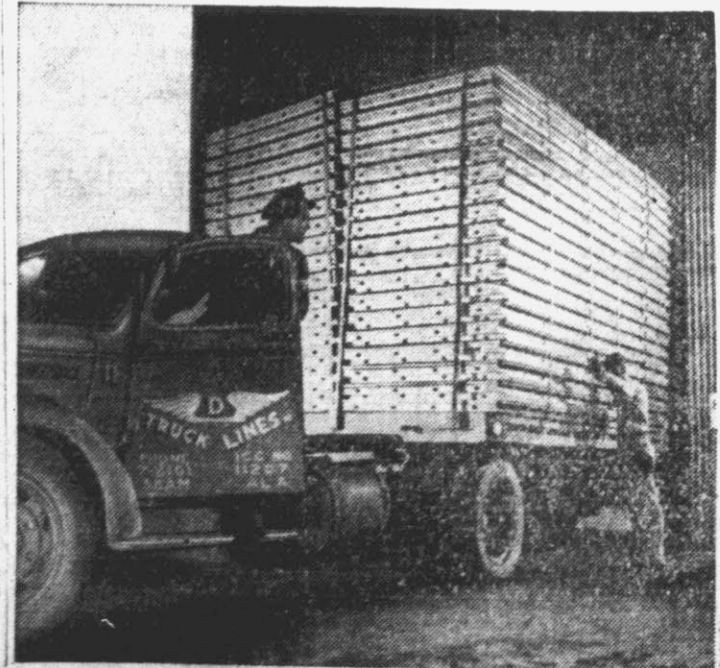

Put up in hours, rather than days, they are playing an important role in answering demand for quickly built homes in the industrial areas which form the backbone of defense production. Most can be demounted as easily as assembled, shipped away when needed in another area.

The house being built in these pictures has a demountable steel frame anchored to a steel base, welded steel wall framework, and steel sheets for its roof. Sheathed with wall board and finished off with asbestos shingles, it can be erected by a 10-man crew in a single eight-hour day.

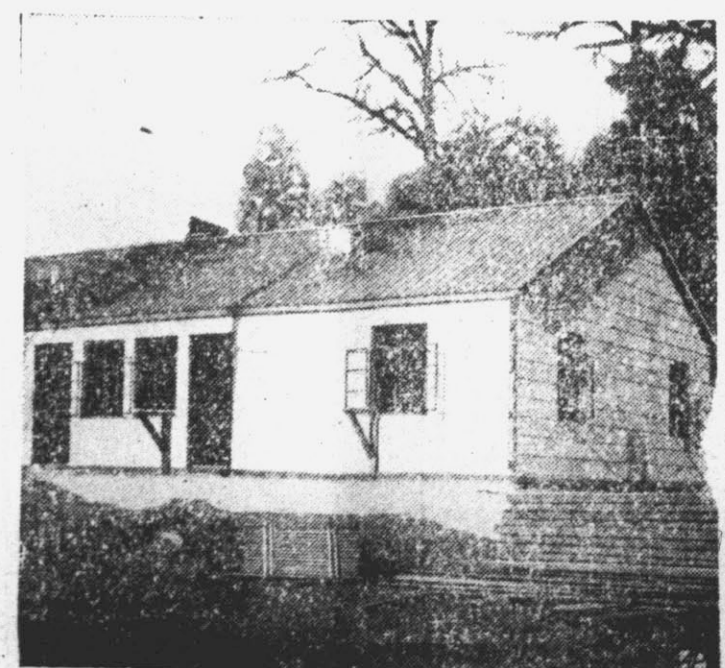

This house was built at the Quantico, Va., base of the U. S. Marine Corps, one of several thousand prefabricated houses ordered by the government.

The story of the prefabricated house begins at the factory where its parts are turned out on a mass production basis. These workmen are applying paint to steel panels preparatory to shipment.

Imagine moving a house on a truck this size, but that's virtually what you see. These panels are for the roof...

Its steel framework covered with wall boarding and asbestos shingles, the finished house looks permanent.

Hollywood Sights and Sounds

Hollywood. — "Caught in the Draft" Screenplay by Harry Tugend. Directed by David Butler. Principals: Bob Hope, Dorothy Lamour, Lynne Overman, Eddie Bracken, Clarence Kolb.

B. G. DeSylva's first production at Paramount is still of the showmanship he made famous last season on Broadway. It's loaded with laughs, provided mainly by the star but bolstered by all. Hope plays a movie star, allergic to noise, who courts the colonel's daughter for "exemption" purposes and tricks himself into enlisting. As a rookie, he always has his foot in it (even more so than did "Buck Privates") but he wins the gal in the end. Miss Lamour should wear clothes oftener. She's a cutie dressed up, too.

"Shining Victory." Screenplay by Howard Koch and Anne Froelich from play by A. J. Cronin. Directed by Irving Rapper. Principals: James Stephenson, Geraldine Fitzgerald, Donald Crisp, Barbara O'Neal. Adult and smoothly-told tale of a young English scientist in a stodgy Scottish asylum who discovers that science without heart isn't all he thought it was. Splendid performances by Stephenson, Fitzgerald and the others add exalting director Rapper to an impressive start on his own.

EUROPE'S SIDE DOOR

Thus far in the war Lisbon, Portugal, has remained an open port serving both Allies and Axis, and has been made a veritable world capital for refugees and spies. However, Portugal's nearness to Gibraltar, the Azores and Canary Islands gives it a strategic importance which eventually may draw it deeper into the conflict.

Blasco Ibanez novel. Directed by Rouven Mamoulian. Principals: Tyrone Power, Linda Darnell, Rita Hayworth, Nazimova, Anthony Quinn, J. Carroll Nash, John Carradine, Lynn Bari, Laird Cregar. The old tragic tale of the boy of Spain who was born to die in the arena is told again in a movie that for artful use of color has the others backed off the palette. The story of the good wife and the bad siren who fought for the matador's love of the mother who had lost her husband in the ring and anticipated her son's fate, of the arena's fatal fascination, is still good. Matador Power handles his first real character role well. Wife Darnell and Siren Hayworth are both good, but the best acting is Mother Nazimova's. Bullfight Critic Cregar's and Down-and-Out Matador Nash's. Unobtrusively stealing the whole however, is the dramatic color photography—in spectacle scenes especially.

"Billy The Kid." Screenplay by Gene Fowler. Directed by David

Miller. Principals: Robert Taylor, Brain Donlevy, Ian Hunter, Mary Howard, Gene Lockhart, Lon Chaney, Jr., Henry O'Neill. More color—this time focused on the natural beauties of Arizona's Monument Valley country as a background for a new tale of the legendary youthful killer. Added up, it's cops and robbers, with more shooting and hard riding than most of its type. Billy meets his historic fate, which is too bad after (in the movie) he has tried so hard to go straight. Taylor will surprise you as the toughest for he's believable in the characterization—and fits "Billy," though it may not jibe entirely with history, is a well-rounded character. Miss Howard is a photogenic, and sincere, heroine.

Here is a new trick for frankfurters. Split large "franks" half-way through, stuff in some chopped sweet pickles, or pickle relish. Wrap with bacon and toast.
