Lieut. and Mrs. Pittman Honored.
On Saturday evening, Lieut. and Mrs. George H. Pittman, who were recently married in West Point, N. Y., were honored at a surprise linen shower by a party of their friends in Falkland.

The room was beautifully decorated with gladioli, hydrangeas, ferns and other summer flowers. The wedding colors of green and white were used throughout. Wedding bells were used effectively to carry out the idea.

Ten tables were arranged for bingo. Prizes were awarded to the following: Miss Anna E. Little, Mrs. Lloyd Allen, Mrs. O. H. Lemoy, Mr. Ralph Stokes, Mrs. David Morrill, Mr. David Morrill, Mrs. Jack Russell, Miss Ruth Smith, Miss Mattie Little, Mrs. J. W. Little, and Miss Virginia Atkinson.

A contest was played, with the winner being Mrs. D. L. Moore of Winterville.

Following playing, little Miss Josephine Little and Master Jerry Mayo of Lucama, entered the room, dressed as bride and groom. The pulled a white wagon loaded with shower gifts all wrapped in green and white. Master Mayo was dressed in white pants and an army coat, resembling Lieut. Pittman's uniform, which was very effective. Mrs. William Grimsley of Ayden, a recent bride, was also remembered.

Following this, delicious green punch, cakes and nuts were served, using the green and white color scheme.

Winterville, July 16.—Winterville just at this time is the most enviable place imaginable. Every morning and evening our streets are thoroughly crowded with the most prettiest girls one ever saw, and the sweetest to be sure. July, here, is a lovely month.

Thus far the features of the teachers' institute have been of a very interesting nature, everyone seems to enjoy themselves and spend a delightful time. The closing exercises are looked for with grave apprehensions and many misgivings by some who anticipate an examination too rigid for a happy termination of their own interest.

Club met Wednesday afternoon with Mrs. J. L. Gurganus. The meeting was called to order by the president. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and the roll called. Thirteen members and four visitors were present.

A supper meeting was planned for August, at which time the members may invite their families. Reports from various departments were made. Mrs. W. R. Bullock spoke on parent education in a very interesting and enlightening way.

The main feature of the meeting was a canning demonstration given by Mrs. Williams from Greenville. The demonstration was interesting and instructive. Tomatoes, soup mixtures, peaches, tomato juice and corn were canned. The pressure cooker and hot water bath methods were both demonstrated.

After the canning was finished Mrs. Gurganus assisted by Miss Salie Joe Gurganus and Miss Frances Mae Rives, served delicious home made ice cream and cake.

W. C. T. U. Meets
On Monday afternoon the W. C. T. U. met with Mrs. F. C. Martin and Mrs. J. W. Rook, at the home of the former. The meeting was called to order by the president, Mrs. R. L. Whitley. Mrs. Whitley spoke briefly of some of the conditions surrounding army camps and urged the members to cooperate with other agencies trying to better these conditions.

Mrs. J. D. Hemmingsway had charge of the program. The devotional was led by Mrs. C. M. Burton, Eph. 6:11 being used as the scripture. Mrs. C. G. Garrenton made a very interesting and helpful talk on "The Influence of the Home on a Child's Life." Othelia Compton was used as an illustration of a mother whose influence developed the necessary characteristics of great men and women in her four children. One of them is the president of one of our largest universities, one an influential business man, one a great writer, and the daughter is a missionary to India.

Hitler's mother was used as an example of how over-indulgence and devotion fail to develop characteristics needed in the molding of character.

At the conclusion of the program Mrs. Martin and Mrs. Rook served delicious ice cream and wafers.

HEARTBREAK HONEYMOON

YESTERDAY: It is enough, Henry Pell thinks, that his friendship for Marie Mason has almost estranged his wife, Luella. But now Marie, who has been trying her best to make a place in radio, has just confessed that she has not got over the infatuation she felt for him years before in their home town. This will break things up, Henry knows, unless he can do something about it.

Chapter 18

"I love singing—my career," Marie gasped. "But I haven't got over loving you. I don't suppose I ever shall."

"Gosh!" said Henry. He was at a loss for words. Maybe Marie was modern, but he, personally, had never before felt so completely unmodern. Here was indeed a situation for a man-of-the-world—and he couldn't handle it. It was a situation that was completely and utterly beyond him. "Listen, Marie," he began again.

"Why didn't you come here before you were married?" she rushed on. "Why did you have to be in such a hurry to marry? We could have tested ourselves, seen if we loved each other—maybe gone on together."

"But you said you didn't want marriage," Henry reminded. "I took you at your word—and—"

"Never take a woman at her word!" said Marie. "That is, I mean—Oh, I don't know what I mean. All I know is that you're married to Luella, that she's holding you back, retarding you, that you're letting her ruin your life."

"Get hold of yourself," Henry said, wishing he could do the same. He looked into Marie's tear-wet eyes, and struggled to keep from taking her in his arms.

Maybe Marie was right, he thought miserably. Maybe it would have been fairer to all of them if he hadn't rushed Luella into marriage. But what could he do about it now? Nothing, apparently.

Marie began speaking again. "We've got so much in common, you and I," she said. "We could be so happy working together. Working on songs, planning programs. And if Mr. Everett and Malcolm do decide to take you into the organization, just think of the things we could do."

"I am thinking," said Henry. "Oh, Henry," Marie wailed. "What are we going to do?"

"I reckon," said Henry, "that all we can do is try to make the best of the situation." He sank back into the taxi seat. "I don't see what else there is. Maybe I was unfair to you and Luella, but it's too late now to do anything about it."

"It isn't too late," said Marie. "Modern people—people like ourselves—Henry—don't accept defeat. They learn by their mistakes, and go on from there."

"Go on to where?"

"I—I mean, you don't have to go on being married to Luella, just because you went through a ceremony with her," said Marie. "If it was intended that you and I belong to each other—help and encourage each other—it's up to us to do something about it."

"You mean—divorce?"

"Of course, and don't look so shocked!" Marie slid her hand into one of Henry's, intertwined her fingers with his. "People are getting divorced every day."

He turned to Marie. "I think we'd better wait until we're a little less emotional," he said, "before we discuss the matter any further. We don't want to do anything that will make others unhappy, nor act too quickly ourselves." He watched Marie's face. "Don't forget that Tommy McIntyre is in love with you. He'd be hurt if—if you did anything—rash."

"I suppose so," said Marie wearily. "But I'll have to harden myself against that. Luella will be hurt, too—so—"

"Poor little Luella," said Henry. "She covered his eyes with his free hand. "God!" He steadied himself. "Maybe in the morning we'll seem a little less mixed up—and dramatic."

"I shall still be loving you though," said Marie. "In the morning—the morning after that—and on and on."

Henry tightened his hold upon her hand. Then he lifted it and laid it against his lips.

"Well, here we are!" he said presently, glancing out of the window. "Here's where the Southern Singer of songs parks her lovely self."

Marie laughed heartily. "I know you're trying to be funny and make things easier for me, Henry," she said. "But I'm in no mood for humor. Don't get out, good night—and—thanks."

"Good night to you, Marie," Henry called, as the doorman opened the taxi door. "Good luck."

"I'll need it," Marie retorted. And went on into the hotel.

Luella Furies

Henry gave the driver his own address, and a short time later he was feeling for his key in the small vestibule of the house in which he lived. Hearing a footfall behind him, he turned quickly, to see Luella framed in the outer doorway, her latchkey in her hand.

"Hello, Henry!" she said. "Did I startle you?"

"You certainly did," said Henry. "What on earth are you doing out at this hour?"

"Been dancing with Tommy."

"Oh!" Henry frowned there in the semi-darkness. And something evil way down deep inside of him forced him to say: "Aren't you and McIntyre seeing an awful lot of each other?"

"Perhaps," said Luella. "But so are you and Marie."

"That's beside the point, Marie and I are working together—on the radio program."

Luella flared. "And I hope to high heaven you'll get that damned program on the air eventually!" she said.

Henry gasped. In all the years he had known Luella, this was the first time he had ever heard her swear. "Listen, Luella," he began, "We've simply got to—"

"I'm tired and sleepy," Luella cut in. "I'm going straight to bed."

She got the door open, and walked into the hall, Henry behind her. At the foot of the stairs she paused, looked Henry directly in the face and said: "Henry Randolph Pell, you make me sick."

"Luella, you can't talk to me like that!" Henry said, angry. He reached for Luella's arm, but she eluded him, and ran up the stairs. He was at her heels, "You talk like someone who's been drinking."

"Well, maybe I have," said Luella. "If you men can drown your sorrows in drink—why can't women? We've got equal rights, haven't we?"

"You're talking like a little fool!" said Henry.

"And you've been acting like one," said Luella.

And so on, and so on—into the bedroom and out of it.

"My wife getting tight," said Henry. "Disgusting."

"As a matter of fact," said Luella, "I had one small glass of wine. I hate drinking—hate women who do it—I hate—"

She stopped short, and got into bed. "Hurry up, and turn off the light," she said. "I want some sleep. And you've got a job, in case you've forgotten."

"The devil!" said Henry. Then he too got into bed. He lay thinking, and what he was thinking actually frightened him. For the thought kept coming to him that maybe Tommy might turn out to be the means of getting his freedom from Luella—that is if he ever really wanted to be free.

Trip For Henry

It was on an afternoon two weeks after the rehearsal of the radio program that Henry came home earlier than his usual time. Luella, surprised, exclaimed, "Are you ill, darling?"

"No," Henry replied. "They let me off early in order to pack up and catch a train for Chicago." He laid down the brief-case he was carrying. "I've got to go out there and look into some sort of real estate proposition."

"You mean you're leaving right away?"

"Yep. Got to take a train from Grand Central Station at eight."

"Goodness! That doesn't give us much time!" said Luella. "How long will you be gone?" She tried to speak calmly, casually, but she was thinking: "Dear God, let him take me with him. Out there, away from Marie, we might be able to get back on the old basis—get to know each other again."

Henry was getting out of his coat and vest. "I'll probably be gone a week," he said. "Maybe longer. It all depends on what I find when I reach Chicago." He carried the brief-case, the coat and the vest into the bedroom. "If you don't mind, I'd like you to pack my suitcase while I'm having a shower."

"Of course I don't mind!" said Luella brightly. "I'll be glad to!" She followed Henry into the bedroom, thinking—"Well, anyway he'll be out of Marie's reach, and that will be something!" She went over to the clothes closet, and opened the door. She took from a shelf three suits—the boys down home had given Henry for a farewell present. "Are you going alone?" she asked.

Henry whirled on her. "Good lord, of course!" he said. "Who in the devil did you think I'd be taking with me?"

"Your wife," said Luella. "That's all."

Henry had the decency to look sheepish. "Sorry," he said. "Here of late I have been feeling that you think I'm dashing off somewhere with a female, if I'm late or the slightest bit noncommittal about my movements."

"Like your Uncle Peter?" said Luella. She got fresh underwear and shirts from the chiffonier drawer. "You know, the philandering family skeleton."

"Why bring him up?" said Henry.

"Oh, I don't know. I was just thinking. Aunt Lila used to worry a lot about you and your Uncle Peter. She was afraid you'd grow up to be like him."

Henry frowned at her, and went into the bathroom. He left the door open, and Luella could hear him splashing in the tub.

"I'm sorry I can't take you with me," he called out above the sound of the shower. "But I'll be pretty busy, and my expense allowance for the trip won't permit two people traveling."

"That's all right," said Luella. Then when Henry came in, drying himself, she looked up and said: "I was thinking we might have a sort of second honeymoon."

Negroes Get Part In National Drive

Reflector Bureau.

By HENRY AVERILL

Raleigh, July 15.—Growing importance of Negroes in the economic and spiritual life of the state is well evidenced in the current campaign for the Old North State fund—to raise $75,000 for purchase of an ambulance plane for Great Britain.

Recognizing not only that it is possible to raise a substantial sum from Negroes in sympathy with the movement, but also that it is desirable to give them the right to share the responsibility, the executive committee of the fund has set up a special Negro Division and named members of a special advisory committee in 33 counties.

Dr. J. E. Shepard is chairman and W. R. Johnson is secretary of the division. Both are connected with the North Carolina College for Negroes at Durham.

The counties in which Negro members of the advisory committee have been appointed are Anson, Buncombe, Cabarrus, Caswell, Craven, Cumberland, Durham, Davidson, Edgecombe, Forsyth, Granville, Gaston, Guilford, Iredell, Johnston, Halifax, Lee, Lenoir, Mecklenburg, Moore, New Hanover, Pasquotank, Pitt, Rockingham, Sampson, Scotland, Wake, Wayne, Warren, Wilson, Union and Vance.

Reports reaching State Auditor George Ross Poul, who is serving as treasurer of the Old North State fund, indicate that excellent progress is being made by Negro workers in the campaign.

Strength For The Day

By EARL L. DOUGLASS

AN EMPTY LIFE IS DANGEROUS
Atrophy is one of the grim realities in the natural world. Any power which is not used, dies. Nature works for the elimination of any species or any organ which has ceased to be useful.

Jesus once spoke a parable about the danger of an empty life. He counseled men, once evil was cast out of their hearts, to fill the empty space with something that would produce good. He declared that a demon, when it was cast out of a man's life, went about seeking rest, and finding none he said, I will return unto my house whence I came out. When he returned, he found it swept and garnished. Then he took seven other spirits more wicked than himself and together they entered into the man's heart and dwelt there, so that his last state was worse than his first.

Someone has said that the only thing the modern dictators have done was to occupy the empty thrones of Europe. We are often told that nature abhors a vacuum.
We can be sure that empty places will be filled.

A race is continually going on between good and evil to fill that emptiness. The most dangerous thing in the world is to leave a heart empty, a mind empty, a life empty. Fill it with something less evil come steadily and fill it with everything ruinous.

The suggestion of President Roosevelt for daylight saving as an aid to the defense program is a good one and should receive prompt attention. Governor Broughton has already indicated that he will cooperate, so there is little doubt that North Carolina will come under the change immediately it receives congressional action.

There is probably not a home in Pitt County in which there is not some piece of aluminumware that is unfit for use or is not needed, and the government is anxious to obtain it for use in the manufacture of airplanes. Within the very near future there will be a drive throughout the county for this aluminum, so we suggest that in the meantime every housewife begin to look around and pick out those discarded articles and have them ready to turn over. This is one way in which almost every household can contribute to our defense program without much individual sacrifice.

Congress should lose no time in making the necessary changes in the draft law that would make it possible to hold selectees and guardsmen in service for the duration of the emergency and station them wherever their services might be needed.
Despite favorable reports from Russian sources, Hitler is still a long way from beaten and there is little doubt that the all-out efforts of this country will be needed before the job of stopping Hitlerism can be accomplished.

-- Till We Catch The Bear

In view of these circumstances, it seems to us that it seems to us that it would be unwise at this time for our country to demobilize its armed forces when all of them and more too will likely be needed for the task that lies ahead. The time has passed for playing ostrich by refusing to see that there is trouble ahead for us; and the task will likely be one that will tax our manpower and resources to the limit.

Washington Daybook

By Jack Stappett

Washington — Congressmen and a good many other government officials have their noses to the defense grindstone, but, like little boys in school when they hear the first notes of the circus callopie, they are casting eyes out the window.

In the case of Congress, et al., the glance is toward Texas, and what they are wondering is will Gov. W. Lee O'Daniel, newly elected senator (to fill the seat of the late Sen. Morris Sheppard) try to play the same topsy-turvy with national politics that he has as two-time governor of his state.

About three years ago, a comparatively unknown flour man, who never had held public office jumped into the Texas political arena with both feet; a six-piece "hillbilly" orchestra; a wife, daughter and two sons who campaigned with him; a sound truck and frequent radio programs.

He announced his platform was the Ten Commandments and his motto, the Golden Rule. His political power was a $30-a-month pension for folks over 65, talk of economy and a lot more talk about "the professional politicians." But with that, he blasted his way into the governor's mansion at Austin.

Admitted His Failure.
His inaugural was held in the University of Texas football stadium and the crowd was reported at 50,000. Two years later he ran again, using almost the same tactics, but adding to it the frank admission that he had been a failure and asking the people to keep him in office so he could whip the legislature and the "professional politicians" into line. Once more it was O'Daniel all the way.

Last month, by a margin so narrow (less than 1,100 votes) that it won't be official until another canvass is taken, chubby, grinning showman W. Lee O'Daniel won a U. S. senatorial toga.

If you still have any wonder that congress and the "professional politicians" of Washington have cocked a curious eye in the direction of Texas, let's turn the page and glance a little more of the picture.
When O'Daniel was inaugurated the second time, he tossed a gargantuan barbecue and searing on the coals, among other chunks of meat, was 2,000 pounds of buffalo that the governor had begged himself on a southwest Texas ranch.

Claiming that he was treated unfairly by the press, the governor jumped toward the publishing game himself with "The W. Lee O'Daniel News," a 25-cent weekly, all profits from which were to go to the Red Cross.

March On Washington?
Every Sunday morning, the governor did a radio broadcast that reached every corner of the largest state. His "hillbilly" orchestra played hymns and the governor spoke.

Added to versification, O'Daniel has delivered portions of official speeches in rhyme.

A sizable part of his campaign for the Senate seat was reiterated promises to "twist the tails" of "pussyfooting professional politicians" in Washington.

There's talk now that he might make a triumphant barnstorming trip to Washington, his soundtruck and hill-billy band announcing his tour across the intervening states.

It won't be the first time that a political bombshell has come to Washington from a state office.
Sometimes they develop into duds, smothered completely in the blanket of national and international affairs. Sometimes, they settle down to the quiet congressional life and spend their days hewing to the party line and mending political fences to keep all their votes in one pasture. Once in a while, however, they continue to explode with the same display of pyrotechnics they showed at home.

Short Shots

Raleigh, July 16 — Straws in the wind often point the way more effectively than the most garish sign board, and so it is possible that appointment of Parole Commissioner Edwin Gill as commissioner of revenue is forecast by comparatively minor incidents.

Thus it has been reported to your correspondent by out-of-Raleigh attorneys that Mr. Gill has been called them up, or written them, urging them to take quick action in preparing parole applications and in requesting hearings for their clients.

Ordinarily the lawyers are more
in a hurry than the commissioner; and so the switch may well indicate that Mr. Gill is bending every effort to clear up all pending matters before moving into the chair now occupied by Allen J. Maxwell.

In the event Mr. Gill does get the revenue place, there is little difference of opinion among prophets as to the identity of his successor.

The overwhelming consensus names Hathaway Cross, Gill's assistant who served as secretary to Governor Clyde R. Hoey during the last part of the late regime.

What Mr. Maxwell will do in the event he is definitely out of the picture as revenue commissioner is something else. There are reports, which seem to their face to be backed by some authority, that it's whole hoo or none with the veteran tax gatherer who failed of the governorship in 1932 and again in 1940.

Despite the apparent authenticity of these reports, however, it is generally believed that Mr. Maxwell will, in the end, wind up by accepting a post at the head of the tax analyzing and expediting board the 1941 legislature authorized to be set up. He is not believed to be well heeled financially that he can go sit under his vine and fig tree, tiddling his thumbs.

Motorists Buy Quality Tires to Avoid Rubber Shortage

Anxious to equip their cars with tires that will carry them through any possible rubber shortage, motorists are buying premium-quality General Tires more than ever before, according to L. A. McQueen, vice-president in charge of sales. Mr. McQueen is shown here inspecting a white sidewall General Tire as it is removed from a special "watchcase" mold, which represents the latest step in modern tire manufacturing efficiency. "A tire that gives the greatest possible mileage per pound of rubber actually helps to conserve rubber, and the motorists who are buying tires that will last certainly are aiding the rubber conservation program," Mr. McQueen said yesterday in Akron. Man About Manhattan

New York.—A big American Airlines transport, her nose pointed to the east, was humming softly over the moon-painted cornfields of Indiana. She carried a crew of three and a full cargo of passengers. One of those passengers was Helen Hayes, the actress.

Captain Johnson, in command of the liner, strolled through the ship, nodding pleasantly to his guests. He told them they were about eight thousand feet up. He told them the approximate speed they were making. Finally he paused beside Miss Hayes.

"Back to New York?" he asked.

"Yes," she replied. "I've got to go to Maplewood. Maplewood, New Jersey. I'm acting in a play in Maplewood."

"This is a coincidence," suggested Captain Johnson. "I live right near Maplewood. I know that theater well. You know I have trouble obtaining tickets to that theater.
Sometimes you have to ask three weeks in advance."

They talked a little while, and the captain returned to his duties.
But next day at the airport he found a note and a pair of complimentary tickets to the theater from Helen Hayes.

Farm Homes Are Getting Warmer Columbus, O.—(AP)—The day of furnace-equipped basements for rural homes is giving way to more efficient storage and heating plants, says George R. Shier, agricultural engineering specialist at Ohio State University.

Put the furnace in a utility room at the rear of the house, Shier suggests. Blower systems will deliver the proper amount of heat throughout the dwelling.

Utility room furnaces eliminate the need for basements entirely says Shier, and without them farmers won't be bothered with the problem of keeping them dry.

Shier expressed the belief that furnaces because of their heat probably have ruined more good basement storage space for vegetable and fruit than most farmers realize.

Five Hits Made by Greenies Off Martin Ace

While the Williamston Martins reached Adams and Pickering for a total of 15 hits, Pea Green, N. C. State college pitcher, held the Greenies to five hits in the third game in a row. The score was 9-3.

Greenie errors did not cause any. Adams started on the mound for Greenies, but left the game in the middle of a three-run rally in the fifth after he had allowed two in the third and fourth. Pickering took over the mound duties after the fifth the Martins scored only in the eighth, when they pushed two more runs across the plate.

Only three Greenie players were able to reach Green. Overton and Jenkins getting two each and Crowe getting one.

Shelton, former Greenville player, got four for five, but had to take second-place batting honors as Wilcox, Martin catcher, got four for four.

 It was in the seventh and last inning that the Greenville F. F. girls put five runs across home plate to take the game from the strong S. A. girls team 7-5.

The teams got two runs apiece in the first inning, while in the fourth S. A. team put two runs across, giving them a two-run lead. Then in the lucky seventh Greenville F. F. turned on the steam to win.

Pauline Perkins, Greenville F. F. star third baseman received a leg injury and had to be removed from the game.

The batting stars for the game were L. Sprayberry, A. Bond, and E. Burns for Greenville F. F. leading their team to victory while A. Hammond, G. Blizzard and M. Pugh were the best in batting for the losers.

The fielding honors went to T. Burns for Greenville F. F. with a nice sensational catch. The S. A. team will meet Third Street this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

SPEIGHT HURLS PERFECT GAME

West Greenville Hurler Beats High School 1-0

SPORTS-42-SPEIGHT
 In the fastest and best played game of the season in the "A" league West Greenville won over High School 1-0. John Speight hurled himself into the hall of fame with a no hit, no run game. Henry Andrews pitching for High School was not far behind, he held the opposition to three very scattered hits and would have probably had a shutout if it had not been for an error that preceded Floyd Williams' triple in the fourth.

The only run of the game came in the fourth when Brown errored Garrett's hard roller to short which went for two bases, then after one man had been retired Williams cracked out a drive to right center that scored Garrett.

With the exception of being a trifle wild, Speight had the High Schoolers eating out of his hand. He fanned eleven men and walked six. High School came very near tying up the game in the last inning when Musselwhite was walked and stole second, third and was thrown out at home in an attempted steal in a very close play that ended the game.

High School ... 000 000 0-0 0 2
 W. Greenville ... 000 100 x-1 3 0
 Batteries: Andrews and Moye; Speight and J. Williams.

GOT A DATE? Don't neglect your Breath

If you've got a date with the girl friend, or a business appointment, play smart and take the proper precaution to see that your breath doesn't offend unnecessarily. After all, nothing is so inexcusable and so offensive as a neglected case of halitosis (bad breath). Before your next date or business appointment, rinse the mouth with Listerine Antiseptic. Almost immediately your breath becomes sweeter, purer, less likely to offend. Most cases of halitosis, say some authorities, are due to the fermentation of tiny food particles in the mouth, although some cases may be due to systemic disorders. Against the former condition, Listerine Antiseptic works wonders because it first kills the fermentation and then overcomes the odors it causes. Don't forget to use it. It's the first aid of thousands of popular and successful people.

There's Still A Frontier
 Anchorage, Alaska.—(AP)—Mrs. J. S. Wood was cooking dinner in her Lake Spenard home when she saw a black bear wandering aimlessly. Taking up her rifle, she trailed the bear for quarter mile and then shot it. She went back to the kitchen to find that her husband—who already had shot his season's bear—had kept the dinner from burning, and he dished it up in her honor. The bear weighed 300 pounds.

 Rock Hill, S. C.—(AP)—Boys at a camp for underprivileged were asked to make sentence prayers at bedtime.

The last little fellow had not shared in the ball equipment but he promised: "Lord, I haven't got a prayer tonight but I'll be sure to have one tomorrow night."

New York, July 16.—(AP)—The July rise in stock prices encountered leader selling resistance today, and profits generally closed fractions to around a point lower.

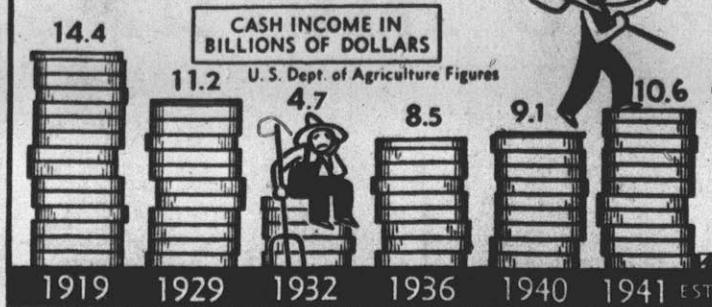

By hard scratching, a number of the recent favorites were able to extend their gains in the early dealings, but near the end it became evident that many Wall Streeters who had been riding the forward currents for the last week or so were eager to cash in.

DOWN ON THE FARM

THINGS ARE LOOKING UP

A forecast of Federal agricultural economists of a farm cash income of $10,600,000,000 for 1941, contingent upon favorable weather, would mean the best year since the $11,221,000,000 of boomtime 1929. Economists figure that the 1941 farm dollar will buy about 15 per cent more non-farm goods and services than did the 1929 dollar.

valorem load and the taxes he paid when he bought his car and it will take him much nearer three than two weeks to scrape together enough to pay off all the collectors.

This load is increasing every year, too, primarily because the consumption of gasoline has moved upward by leaps and bounds in the last four years. Thus the state's motorists used 305,578,000 gallons in 1935 compared with 394,659,549 in the 12 months ended June 30, 1941, and increase of 60 per cent in five years.

So if Secretary Ickes gets a 20 per cent reduction, he would lop off about 100,000,000 gallons a year; which would bring a reduction of $6,000,000 in state gasoline taxes, and a loss in federal gas tax income (at the existing cent and a half a gallon rate) of $1,500,000.

Official Worries

That's where the highway officials begin to worry. Highway revenue in North Carolina has increased steadily, going from $31,000,000 for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1938, to more than $40,000,000 in the 12 months that ended June 30, 1941.

That's an increase of about one-third, but despite this big increase in funds available for road construction and maintenance, it remains that only three per cent of the state's rural highways have all-weather surfaces, the remaining 97 per cent being easy to classify as "muddy" during even short spells of bad weather.

The 1940 census figures show that there has been a great improvement since 1930 (made possible, of course by the increased revenues. Ten years ago there were 22,501 farm on hard-surfaced highways; 60,560 on gravel, shale, shell, etc.; roads; 74,074 on improved dirt roads and 101,365 on unimproved dirt roads. In 1940 the corresponding figures were: On hard surfaced highways, 38,964 (an increase of 70 per cent); on gravel, shell, shale, etc., 19,230 (a decrease of about two-thirds); on improved dirt roads 120,458 (an increase of more than 70 per cent); and on unimproved dirt roads, 82,662 (a decrease of almost 20 per cent).

Withal, there is still a tremendous task ahead of those charged with care and construction of the road system.

Both motorists and highway authorities have a keen personal interest in this program of improvement. That's why nobody would thank Mr. Ickes for making it harder to get North Carolina out of the mud—even if it did save the motorists money.

Mr. Breen left his Hays job because he couldn't take it any more—he was "punch-drunk." They wanted him to stay, he says, thinking maybe more money could change his mind, but that wasn't it. This was his job: to pass on some 3,600 stories, books, or plays a year out of which Hollywood would make between 500 and 600 pictures; to pass on each selected story, with an average of three and five-lengths compared with 394,659,549 in the 12 months ended June 30, 1941, and all the time to make changes to conform to the code. (His way was "affirmative"—if he demanded a change he always tried to suggest a better way.)

Breen as a movie executive, as an ex-code man, realizes that many pictures aren't entertainment, and he's now out to make entertainment. He's aware that the majority of movie patrons lie in the 16 to 26 age group. He's aware that good stories are the sine quo non of good movie entertainment. He'll challenge you to name one star who has survived bad stories, and you can't. He can point out many stars who are now "out" because of poor stories. His aim now: to develop good new writers, good new producers, good new faces.

Henry Hathaway, the director, is on the warpath. His last picture was "cut" after he left the job and he's sick about it.

"It was the best picture I ever made," he says, "but now—well, I haven't seen it since they finished with it."

He makes an interesting point: "We previewed it first in San Bernardino, in 14 reels, on a Friday night before a tough audience. We got no complaints on overlength. We cut two reels out, took it to Santa Barbara on a Thursday night. Cook's night out, class audience. We got 12 preview cards saying it was too long. We took two more reels out, previewed it in Pasadena, and 20 cards said it was too long. How do you like that? It wasn't too long at 14 reels, but it was at nine. Why? Because fans don't notice length if they're kept interested. If he story builds scene by scene and holds together tightly. Cut out a motivating scene here another there, and it's loosened up—then it drags and seems too long. Why do they cut it down? To be able to run five shows daily instead of four, on the theory they'll fill the house, oftener and make more money. But why can't they see that four full houses are better than five empty ones?"

I wonder how the fans feel about it. I'll skip the name of the picture.

Right And Sound

By Robbie Cooper

Hollywood—Joseph I. Breen, the former movie code administrator, makes the kind of studio executive that makes life a pleasure for us who want to know what's what.

Joe Breen, eight years on the hot spot at the Hays office charged with making movies do their own housekeeping, has taken charge of RKO production. When Joe holds a press conference, as he did the other day, he says things and answers questions. He cites book, page and number sometimes off the record, but with no dodgings.

Ten Ways To Get Federal Cash

There are (1) Mortgage loans (Federal Land Bank and Land Bank Commissioner); (2) Short-term credit loans for production purposes (Production Credit Associations); (3) Emergency crop and feed loans; (4) Loans to farmers' cooperatives; (5) Rehabilitation loans Farm Security Administration; (6) Tenant purchase loans (Farm Security Administration); (7) Group loan for equipment or services (Farm Security Administration); (8) Home financing; (9) Debt adjustment; and (10) credit unions.

And so if any Tar Heel agriculturalist can't get money he needs for farm purposes he must be either very dumb or a very bad financial risk.
