German Reich Demands Reprisal Step Against Government Of Bolivia

Charge D'Affaires Is Ordered To Leave Berlin Within Three Days As Reprisal for Bolivia's Expulsion of German Minister; Nazis Direct Sharp Protest At Branding Minister Persona Non Grata

Berlin, July 22.—(AP)—The German government, as reprisal, demanded today that the Bolivian charge d'affaires in Berlin leave Germany within three days and also protested sharply to La Paz against the Bolivian action in declaring the German minister persona non grata.

(The Bolivian government, acting to suppress asserted plans for a Nazi coup, Saturday ordered the expulsion of German Minister Ernst Wendler, but set no time limit.)

The remaining legation personnel on both sides was not affected. Diplomatic relations were unbroken.

The protest criticized the Bolivian action as "in defiance of all the rules of international intercourse."

The protest charges that no reason was given for the unusual action to the German government by the Bolivian government.

"Reasons given to the press," it was said, "of course are devoid of all foundation."

Authorized sources declared that the Bolivian action must be regarded as part and parcel of President Roosevelt's move for agitatory measures against Europe. It is interesting one said, "that the Bolivian action was taken at this particular moment and that it was followed immediately by Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles' tirade."

London, July 22.—(AP) Strong Royal Air Force units roared across the channel this afternoon in continuation of widespread raids of last night and this morning on German-held territory.

This afternoon's raid seemed concentrated on the coast between Calais and Boulogne, where anti-aircraft guns blazed into action from the French cliffs.

Only a few Germans flew against England last night, the British said, and they concentrated on coastal areas, causing few casualties.

Residential quarters in several western German places were hit by British bombs and a number of civilians were killed or wounded, a German announcement said.

Strawbridge-Miller Dancers. Featuring dramatic, descriptive, and unusual interpretative dances, the Strawbridge-Miller dancers thrilled an appreciative audience with their unique program at the College last night.

Mr. Strawbridge, who has studied widely under the best Parisian and American teachers, and Miss Miller, who was trained by Ruth St. Denis and has appeared with her present dances of oriental nature as well as American dances. Two native Nautch dances of India, with appropriate beautiful costumes, were executed by Miss Miller and were characteristic of the rhythms and pageantry of that country. In "The Eagle," Mr. Strawbridge expressed vividly the spirit of the bird, and his facial expression, along with the movements of his hands to represent the talons, brought out the true significance of the dance. For mood interpretation Mr. Strawbridge offered "Aladdin and His Lamp," which was given emphasis and clarity by movements of the hands, eyes, and facial expressions.

The perfect muscular control and coordination displayed by the artists, along with the rhythmic actions in harmony with the music, exemplified the powers of visual representation of music as well as characters, and impressed the audience throughout the entire program. Even the movement of the eyes and fingers were most instrumental in conveying their real meaning of the dances.

For descriptive dances, the Strawbridge-Miller version of "The Cat and the Mouse," with its capricious and suggestive action, "The Little White Denkey" with Mrs. Strawbridge as the driver, were most enjoyable.

Very appropriate costumes were used with each dance and added much to their realistic nature. The accompanist at the piano was Mr. Leo Polk, who is of Polish descent, although he was born in America and has studied extensively in this country and in Europe.

Library News

Circulation figures do not give a complete report of library service, but they do show use of the book stock in certain lines. During the library year, closing June 30, a total of 74,387 books were borrowed from Sheppard Memorial Library; 9,086 or 12 per cent of this number were non-fiction; 41,519 or 56 per cent were adult fiction; 23,782 or 32 per cent were children's books. The large percentage of children's books is outstanding. Few libraries show even 25 per cent of the total as due to use by children. These circulation figures show an average loan of 273 books per day.

The total book stock is listed as 8,812 volumes; 2,165 or nearly 25 per cent of the stock is listed for children; 32 per cent of the circulation was done from 25 per cent of the book stock. The children's books wear out faster than they can be replaced.

At present there is a list of 6,678 registered readers; 2,454 of these live in Greenville; 3,224 live in Pitt county outside of Greenville. Much service to rural readers is given on Saturdays.

Reports are not due yet from the library units at Ayden, Bethel, Fountain and Winterville, or from the Carver library, colored, Greenville. Watch The Reflector for a complete report of library service in the county which will be ready by July 31. —Mrs. W. C. Vincent.

MODES of the MOMENT.

Mink handled like sable, in broad bands, is an innovation by designer Joseph de Leo. The collar is reminiscent of the "shawls" of other years; the wide, wide cuffs can serve as a muff. Here, again, is breadth above the waistline, slenderness below.

Nutria takes to tailored lines. The result, as developed here by designer Ned Arnhimer, is an abbreviated "ulster" you'd wear for both sports and dresses.

100 Stitches; That Ended That Spartanburg, S. C.—(AP)—The man walked unassisted into General Hospital where a physician took 100 stitches in an ugly wound—without benefit of anesthetic.

While the sewing was under way the man went to sleep. Awakened by a nurse he refused a bed, went into an anteroom where he sat and chatted with the man alleged to have wielded the knife that caused the wound. As a result of the conversation the attacker paid the hospital bill and together they reported the "incident" to Sheriff Sam Henry. Then both went home.

U. S. Ahead In Battle Of Bugs

AP Feature Service Washington.—There's good news from one battle-front—U. S. farmers pretty generally repulsed all bug attacks this year. Department of Agriculture field agents reported that weather conditions and prompt counterblitzes cut insect damage to a minimum this spring and summer, with every probability the damage for the year will also be cut down. Latest communiques from the battle of the bugs:

Boll Weevil On The March Deep South Sector: The boll weevil situation here is serious but not hopeless. Winter weather was ideal for maximum propagation. Dusting with poison must be increased to cope with the augmented weevil population.

Grasshopper Attacks An Apple Southwest Sector: Wet weather has almost eliminated "enemy activity." In other words, grasshopper hatches were decreased by the excessive rains last spring. The flying pests probably will do less damage this year than in a decade.

Codling Moth Consolidates Position Northwest Sector: "Air forces" here still active. The codling moth is the No. 1 problem in Pacific Northwest orchards, presenting an annual bill of $30,000,000 for damage and necessary control measures. Trees must be sprayed up to 11 times a year to control the pest. Arsenate of lead, sprayed on orchards, has also fouled the soil and cut down crop yields.

Beetle Blitz Eastern Front: Japanese beetles are slowly advancing their range, but scientific counter-attacks are succeeding. Introduction of the Korean wasp, a natural enemy, and a newly-discovered disease together are inflicting heavy losses on the beetle population, and damage is not expected to be so heavy this year.

Human Fly Goes For A Ride St. Matthews, S. C.—(AP)—Mrs. L. B. Wannamaker was rather provoked when a youth riding on the running board of her car crawled halfway in the window. "Get back out," she ordered. "I can't drive with you in here!" The boy turned white and pressed his face against the side of the car. It wasn't until Mrs. Wannamaker stopped that she realized the automobile had no running board.

Testifies As To Cigarette Prices

Lexington, Ky., July 22.—(AP)—A government economist testified at the tobacco anti-trust trial today that the "Big Three" defendants announced price changes on different days, but said they made the changes effective at approximately the same time. The witness, Merle Vincent, who conducted a survey of the tobacco industry for the prosecution, said on cross examination that one defendant would announce a price change and the others then would match "the change." Under questioning of counsel for the Liggett and Myers Company Vincent said that in making price changes, "the lead downward was taken by American and notice of (price) advances was inaugurated by Reynolds." He added, however, that in either case Liggett and Myers subsequently announced it would match the price changes on the date they became effective and consequently it "suffered no disadvantage." Liggett and Myers, R. J. Reynolds and the American Tobacco Company are the major defendants against the government's charges of criminal monopoly and price-fixing. Vincent testified that a price increase made by the defendants in 1940 was a little less than an increase in the federal tax on cigarettes that year.

HEARTBREAK HONEYMOON

YESTERDAY: Henry Pell's attachment for Marie Mason, the glamorous radio star, has gone too far—at last. Now Luella Pell has left him, and Henry learns from Tommy McIntyre that she is going to Florida to get a divorce. More, that Tommy would like to marry her later, if she will have him, and that he also has lent her his cottage in Florida as a home while establishing residence.

Chapter 23

Southbound. And Miserable
"I see," said Henry. "Doesn't offering my wife your cottage to live in while she's divorcing me strike you as something a little—well, odd? I mean, aren't you running the risk of being named the man who helped to break up my home?"

"Perhaps," said Tommy. "But I don't mind in the least. However, if I were in your place, Pell, I couldn't make things any worse. If you don't want Luella back, why not just keep quiet and let her get her freedom? The old mental cruelty thing will be her charge, I rather imagine."

He waited for Henry to speak, and when he did not, he said: "You can go on with your life, and I'll do my best to make Luella happy—it'll be my job."

Henry sat silent and miserable. He began to realize that he wasn't nearly the man of the world he had begun to think himself to be. A situation such as this one stunned him, left him dazed and helpless. He pushed back his chair, leaving his luncheon half finished.

"It'd better be getting along," he said. "I haven't even unpacked my suitcase yet. There are a lot of things to be looked after." He got to his feet. "Thanks for the lunch, McIntyre."

"Forget it!" said Tommy.

The two men walked out to Broadway together. Just outside the restaurant they hesitated.

"You're not going to do anything else to hurt Luella, are you?" Tommy asked.

Henry gave him a sharp look, his face flushed with anger. "The manner in which I handle this affair," he snapped, "is something that concerns Luella and me only."

"Wrong," said Tommy. "I love Luella, and whatever affects her is of the greatest importance to me." Henry opened his mouth to speak—but thought better of it. He turned on his heel and walked away.

But Not Happy
On the evening of that eventful Saturday in Henry Pell's life Luella Brown Pell boarded a train which passed through her home town on its way to Florida. And as it sped on southward, she sat staring out of the window at the scenery, and yet not seeing it. A great ache lay in her heart—an ache that was dull and like a heavy weight.

She had been so sure of getting some word from Henry, but not a word had come. His silence meant guilt. Of this she was convinced. He should have been back in New York on Friday, she thought. He would have found her note almost at once. "He'll at least send me a wire asking for a chance to explain," she had kept telling herself. But this had not done. She had stayed in the old home town two days, waiting, hoping, praying.

And now she was on her way to take the first steps toward obtaining a divorce. If Henry wanted to be free to marry Marie, she had far too much pride to stand in his way. She had made up her mind. There was nothing else left to do.

She had wanted to stay longer in the cottage her aunt had willed to her, but this was impossible. There were too many curious eyes upon her, too many questions to be answered. "How's Henry? Why didn't he come with you?" "Imagine coming home without your husband and married so short a time. Don't tell me you've quarreled, or something?" "What happened—did Henry lose his job?"

Questions, questions, questions. They seemed to be endless. And being forced to smile and make all sorts of explanations. "Henry's fine! I just came down to attend to a little business. I'm going on to Florida—Henry may join me there later."

Well, that was no lie. Maybe Henry would join her. And she had come down to the old hometown on business. That was no lie, either. She had come down to get hold of some money, for the business of getting herself a divorce. Florida—fifty days—mental cruelty.

She had drawn from the bank the $500 her aunt had willed to her along with the cottage. It had been in the bank for some time, drawing interest—as she had left it there in case anything happened which would necessitate extra funds.

Well, something had happened—although she certainly had never thought she would ever be using the money as an aid in ridding herself of her husband.

She remembered a conversation she and Henry had once had about the five hundred.

"It's as much yours, darling, as it is mine," she had said.

Henry had grinned, and said: "Listen, honey, I didn't marry you for your fortune."

"Then you consider my face my fortune, sir?"

"Yes, Ma'am!" Henry had kissed her then. "I'm marrying you because you're my woman, I'm your man, and because I love you like nobody's business."

How long, long ago that seemed. Ages and ages.

She picked up a paper she had bought on the way to the train. Her eyes fell upon a section headed "Public Notices." She glanced down the items in a disinterested sort of way. Then she saw an item that caught her attention. It said:

"Please take notice that my wife, Katie, having left my bed and board, I am no longer responsible for her debts—John Moorhouse."

She read the notice over again, wondering how soon it would be before Henry Pell put one like it in the New York papers, substituting the name Luella for the name Katie. Her eyes filled with tears. She flung the paper aside.

Almost angrily she snatched a paw and pencil from her bag. She began to write.

"Dear Henry:—I'll be at the Florida address given below, in case you find it necessary to communicate with me. I would like to have you keep my furniture until I can arrange to have it shipped back home—Luella."

She wrote the address of Tommy McIntyre's cottage at the bottom of the sheet, folded it, and placed it in an envelope. She then called the porter, and asked him to mail it for her at the first stop.

The Doghouse

It was nearly ten o'clock that night before Henry finally got in touch with Marie. He had spent the afternoon in the lonely apartment—which continued to seem like a place wherein someone had recently died.

There he had occupied himself trying to compose some sort of telegram or letter to Luella, and trying to get Marie on the telephone. Marie was out each time he called, and each time he felt a mixture of relief and disappointment. He dreaded facing her, and yet, he wanted to do so and have done with it.

The last attempt to get hold of her brought the information that Miss Mason would be at the studio at nine o'clock that evening for a rehearsal. "I think you may be able to catch her afterwards," the maid added. Henry thanked her, and then returned to his efforts to write something to Luella. He filled the waste-paper basket with half-finished notes, telegrams, and letters, and then he gave up.

He had slumped down into a chair, frowning. After all, he argued with himself, it was really Luella's place to write to him. She was the one who had done the walking-out, not he. Besides, how did he know but what she had already left the home town for Florida? Hadn't Tommy McIntyre said that she was going to Florida after a few days at home? Of course he had.

Well, let Luella do the writing—let her write him when she was settled. She had rushed off and left him without waiting for him to get back from Chicago, without giving him a chance to tell her that he and Marie were perfectly innocent of any wrong whatsoever. So—

And now he was waiting in a small room outside the studio, waiting for Marie to join him.

The door opened, and she came in, quickly, an expression upon her face which Henry felt boded no good.

"I've tried all afternoon to get you," Henry said, rising to meet her. "But you were out, and—"

"Of course I was out," Marie cut in. "I keep after what I want. I don't sit down and let someone else get my job."

"Then I take it you've heard the news," said Henry.

"I certainly have. Alma Latham was at the rehearsal, and she nearly knocked over the mike in her rush to tell me."

Henry shrugged. "Well, there's no need crying about it, is there?" he said somewhat dully. "I couldn't get back to New York a moment sooner."

"I think you could have if you'd really tried," said Marie. "But this is no place to talk. Take me home and we'll talk there. I'm tired, and I'm completely disgusted."

"With me?"

"Perhaps."

"In the doghouse for a fact," Henry said, with an effort at humor.

"Come on," Marie said. "Let's get out of here."

Into the elevator, down to the street, into a taxicab, and up to the hotel where Marie lived. Into another elevator, up and up—and then the quietness of Marie's sitting room.

"Sit down," she said. "Cigarettes there in that ebony box, as though you didn't know. She walked to the bedroom door. 'I'm going to get into some lounging pajamas, and try to relax.' She watched Henry moving restlessly about the room. 'Do stop pacing, Henry. Mix yourself a drink, if you like.'"

Iceland, America's newest eastern frontier, is a land of stony soil, tough people, simmering volcanoes and frigid glaciers, but it has a moderate climate, the oldest parliament in the world, universal education, an advanced program of social benefits and practically no crime. These exclusive pictures were taken by officers of Swedish-American Line ships.

REYKJAVIK, the capital, has 28,000 of Iceland's 118,000 population. The Althing, or parliament, was founded in 930. When the Germans occupied Denmark, with which Iceland was a sister kingdom, Iceland decided to handle its own foreign affairs.

THE TWO-WHEELED CART, drawn by a sinewy native pony, is the taxicab of Reykjavik. There are only about 2,000 automobiles in Iceland and no railroads. The island has good telephone connections and is linked to Europe by submarine cables.

BOILING SPRINGS are found everywhere in Iceland, an outcropping of volcanic rock about the area of Kentucky. There are 107 volcanoes and the land is 13 per cent covered with glaciers. Women wash their clothes in the springs. The bars are to keep them from falling in.

THE FISHING INDUSTRY is the most important in Iceland's commercial life, although only 18,000 persons work at it compared to 50,000 in farming. Hay is the chief farm crop; it is fed to sheep and cattle. These women split fish open and spread them on the rocks to dry.

Defferential Not Only Problem Facing Schools

Reflector Bureau.
By HENRY AVERILL

Raleigh, July 22.—Considerably more publicity has recently been given efforts to equalize white and negro teacher salaries than to any other phase of the state's school system; but vexing as this is, it is no more of a headache than several other complicated problems which must be worked out by Nathan Yelton and the School Commission or by Clyde Erwin and the Department of Public Instruction, in combination with others.

Either pressing for solution right now or in the immediate offing are such questions as: (1) School bus safety training, (2) the twelfth grade, (3) the new master's certificate, (4) vocational education with particular reference to national defense, (5) a history textbook, (6) Federal aid in caring for areas overrun with army cantonment personnel, and (7) the little matter of an election on a constitutional amendment changing the basic setup of the state's board of education.

This list is probably not exclusive or complete. It has been set down as it occurred to your reporter and there are no doubt other pressing problems not included. Certainly there is the matter of how the new organizational leadership of the North Carolina Education Association will function, and while the NCEA isn't, of course, an official state agency it is so closely related that its problems overflow right into the lap of the public school's duly constituted leadership.

And so it seems that there is still much to be done in the educational field, despite the outcries of fawning adorners last spring that Governor J. M. Broughton is the "greatest educational governor of all times."

As a matter of cold, hard fact it appears that the coming school year (1941-42) will start with nothing different from last except that the teachers will get slightly higher salaries and will be members of a retirement system which is supposed to be actually sound.

The children will have no longer term, no more grades, no North Carolina history textbook except one declared "illegal" by the Superintendent of Public Instruction, and no noticeable revision of curriculum. By virtue of increased funds voted by the 1941 legislature there will be a vastly enlarged program of vocational training. This last, in the minds of many observers, is the only distinct step forward in the interests of the school children.

A few months ago a county workers' council was organized in the county. This organization seemed to be the farmer's green light. The machine was put in motion to have more feed and food in the county. Each farmer present pledged he would do his part to have more and see that his neighbor has more. Reports coming from all parts of the county at our last meeting show that they are doing their best. So eager were the farmers to sign and return the food and feed cards sent from the agent's office, one farmer put a penny stamp on his card and it was on so tight it looked just like he told it (the stamp) "to stick until you get there."

Canning is being done as never before. It is not a strange sight now to see a farmer with his sleeves rolled up, canning to beat the band, trying to get 70 quarts of fruits and vegetables for each one in the family, and to help get the 70 quarts for the adopted family. Believe it or not, new occasions teach new duties.

WHOM THE GODS DESTROY THEY FIRST MAKE MAD

Just as the righteous work out their own salvation without miracle or apparent intervention of God, the wicked are destroyed by their own mistakes instead of by divine fire and wrath.

This has been amply proven by the confusion that ultimately overcomes power-mad world conquerors. It arises from small mistakes which they seem to make themselves, and not by divine cataclysm.

Consider the case of Napoleon in Russia. Contrary to popular belief, he captured Moscow intact, filled with provisions to carry him through the winter.

But for some reason which historians have never been able to fathom, he marched back toward the Polish frontier in the last fall. Then winter overtook him and destroyed his army.

DRIVE AGAINST CRIME WOULD AID DEFENSE

(Scottish Rite News)

In thinking over the burden of high taxes necessary to finance the United States defense program, Columnist Roger W. Babson turned to crime statistics. After a careful checking with the F.B.I. and other government agencies, he became convinced that if crime were eliminated in this country and the money thereby saved was diverted to defense, the program could be financed with no tax increase and no bond issues.

Mr. Babson is not foolish enough to believe such a thing can be accomplished right away, but he does believe that a great deal could be done if the people and the government cooperated to that end.

Consider for a moment the wide range of activities that are covered under the heading of crime costs. Enormous premiums are paid insurance companies annually to protect individuals and firms against criminal loss.

But this does not begin to give a complete picture. Crimes against persons mean

Just Like The Kitten He Gave Joe

hospital bills and loss of services and earning power while racketeering cuts into the profits of many a small business man forced to pay for "protection." No one knows the amount of "hush money" extorted annually from people who would rather pay to guarantee silence about a past indiscretion than openly and public fight the blackmailer.

Possibly even more important is the direct cost of police forces, jails, special investigators, and the costs of administration necessary to guarantee honest citizens the safety of their persons and property. Private institutions, such as banks, must keep a sizeable force of men to guard the money intrusted to them, must hire armored cars to safely transport it, must take a thousand and one precautions to prevent loss.

It is obvious that Mr. Babson's figures are not far wrong. And even in this day and age, $15,000,000,000 a year is a great deal of money. It is more than twice the amount called for by the Lend-Lease Bill. In other words, petty crime exacts a higher tribute than the United States was prepared to pay last April for insurance that Great Britain could check the huge scale criminal activities of Hitler.

Viewed from this light it would appear that an organized fight against crime is a necessary phase of national defense.

Washington Daybook

By Jack Stinner

Washington — The thorn in the side of the United States Army for more than 15 years may leave the House of Representatives — but if he does, it will be no consolation to the army, for he will move over to the senate.

Congressman Ross A. Collins of Meridian, Miss. may not be widely known outside his own state, but if there is a brass hat in the armed forces who can't tell you about him that brass hat is sleeper than Representative Collins ever has accused of being and that would be superlatively drowsy.

Representative Collins came to Congress in 1921 and except for a two-year interlude following his unsuccessful race for the Senate against Theodore G. Bilbo, he has been there ever since.

Back when the whole world was talking disarmament, Collins began to dip into our military history. He thought then were pretty much the same as they are today, he says: "To me, it is incredible that the policy makers of our War Department and our army have not seen the handwriting on the wall. I am only a civilian, but I like to suppose that the good Lord endowed me with at least some measure of common sense." Collins says.

To him then, it wasn't common sense that the Army, back in the middle 19th century, had waited 25 years to adopt the repeating rifle after sportsmen and hunters were proving its superiority. To him, it wasn't common sense that we went into the Spanish-American war with black powder we were the inventors of smokeless and rifles inferior to those of the Spaniards; that we invented the machine gun but didn't adopt it until every major army in the world was using it; that the Wright brothers had to sell their flying to European armaments; that Christie had to take his tank to England to get a market for it.

That started him off, and this round smiling, gray-haired lawyer has been ding-donging the army to the extreme irritation of the conservatives and the delight of the officer "radicals" ever since.

Back in 1932, a year before Hitler came to power, Collins stood in the well of the House and told his colleagues: "Mechanization implies the actual use of automotive machines in combat. The purpose of a mechanized force is to provide a fast-moving weapon, capable of wide maneuverability, which combines fire-power, speed and shock to a much higher degree than now exists... a fast-moving armed force, capable of striking suddenly from one direction, disappearing and then repeating those blows from another."

Perhaps in those days, Collins' colleagues considered him tiresome and the army merely ignored him. But he never let up. His first big "break" came when he put over the big warplane, and on a cabinet in his office today is a photo of the first such ship to take the air. Undneath it is a notation from Maj. Gen. H. H. Arnold that without him (Collins) this might never have been a reality.

In blistering comparisons, Collins still is dishing it out to the Army, scoring them for trying to develop a huge force, when they should be, he says, concentrating on a comparatively small, highly mechanized force. His goal is 25 (at least) panzer divisions, with a closely cooperating air force of tremendous firepower. (The Army now has two such divisions, and has set its goal at eight or ten.)

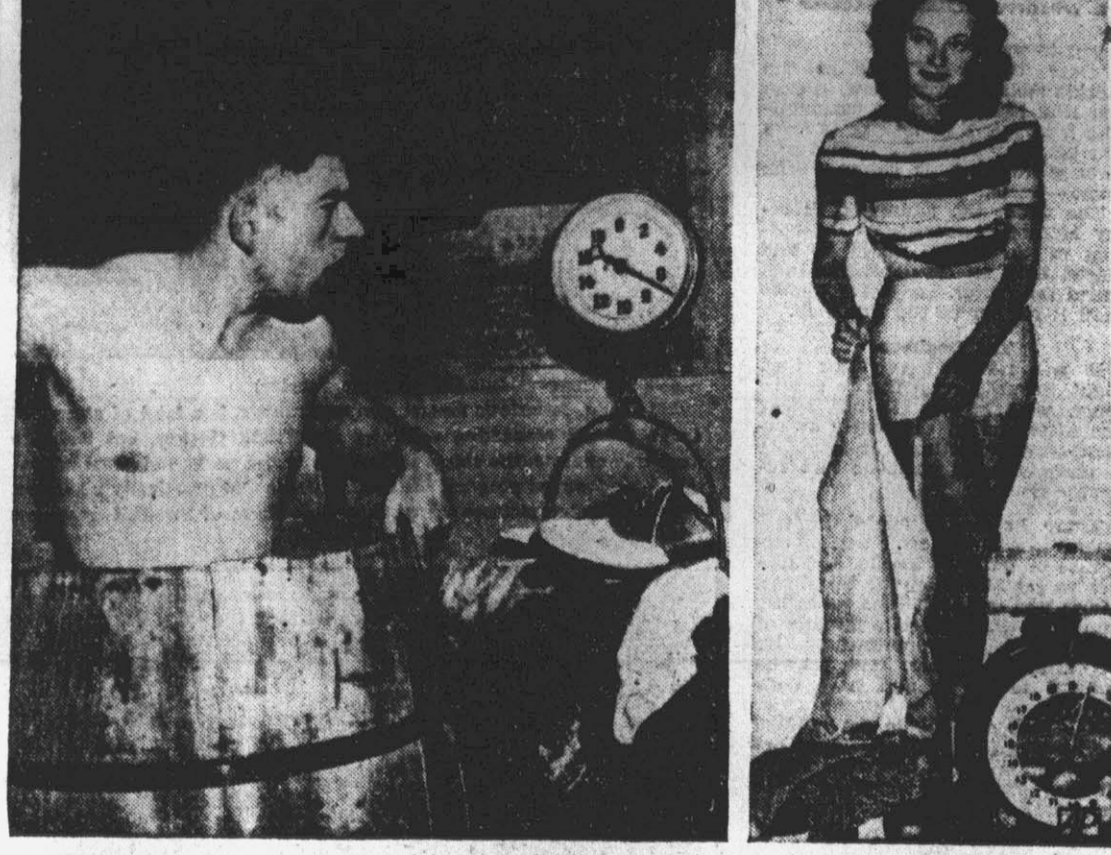

Although Collins himself is 61 and would be the last to decry the usefulness of age, his latest all-out on the Army has to do with the age of many dominant figures in high military places.

What Do You Know About ALUMINUM?

Five multiple-choice questions about aluminum. 1. The mine cars in the picture, headed for an aluminum plant, are loaded with the clay-like ore which serves as aluminum's chief component. Can you name it? 2. True or false? Aluminum, because of its great weight, is of little use in the manufacture of military airplanes. 3. Methods of producing aluminum in the wireless field based on the power of an electric current, when passed through a conducting solution, to break ore down into component parts. What is the relationship between this production process and the concentration of much of the nation's aluminum capacity in the Tennessee valley? 4. In order to forestall a shortage of aluminum needed for defense purposes, the federal government has asked households throughout the nation to take what joint action? 5. (a) What does "Alcoa" stand for? (b) What recognition was accorded aluminum on the OPM priorities critical list? Each part of the fifth question counts 10, all other questions 20 each. A score of 80 is good.

Short Shots

Raleigh, July 22 — What do you know about Regional Aubrey Fessenden? Chances are it isn't much; but you'll be hearing a lot more about him and what he did before so very long.

That's because North Carolina, at the instigation of a livewire group from the vicinity of the "Lost Colony" in Dare county, has decided that a $100,000 monument ought to be erected to commemorate his brilliant experiments in the wireless field back at the century's start.

It seems that Fessenden, born in Canada, went to Dare in 1902, set up a couple of 50-foot masts and went to work. He set up one on Roanoke Island and the other on Hatteras and after a few months he was able to send a message between the two points. Soon he could send them as fast as receivers could take them down. This was the birth of wireless.

Congressmen Warned. North Carolina's Congressmen in Washington have been warned that another federal tax on gasoline, piled on top of the two federal levies and the state tax, might jeopardize the finances of this state, says S. Ilmer Sparger, secretary of the North Carolina Petroleum Industries Committee.

Man About Manhattan

New York — We were talking with Jean Dalmryple, who is Grace Moore's personal manager, and she said, "Well, it looks like I may be off to South America again. We've got a 16-concert tour to do, and six weeks to do it in."

These are the lazy "dog days" in Raleigh particularly for political news. Plenty of officials and state employees are on vacation, and even those in town appear to be resting up, so far as political affairs go, for a later season.

There is a monument to Fessenden at Hatteras now, but it's a very inconspicuous one, and the idea is to set up the new memorial so that it will be as imposing as the other Dare memorial to the Wrights, who started the world to flying with their experiments at Kill Devil Hill.

GREENIES LOSE BY 5-3 SCORE

Goldbugs Take Lead In First Frame And Hang On

Goldsboro made two runs on a couple of walks and an error in the first inning of the game at Guy Smith park last night and clung desperately to the advantage although the Greenies seriously threatened in the last of the ninth. Greenville got one in the first frame. Caraway singled and Benny Crowe blasted one that hit a telephone pole above the score board. Benny was robbed of a homer and his mates were unable to get him home. Caraway scored the double.

The Goldbugs made two more in the fourth and added a final tally the fifth.

While the Greenville infield did look so good at times, McKinney's men rallied behind him in the fifth and two double plays cut short Greenville threats.

In the ninth the Greenies kept their fans glued to their seats with serious threat. Crowe walked and Jenks singled and as the ball got away from the fielder Wilson started to go to third but was caught. McKinney singled to score Jenks, but at the end of the scoring—two short outs.

Benny Crowe made two bullet-like throws home from centerfield that would be scorers. On the end of the two pegs Overton dug ball on the ground and hung on it to retire the runner as both led up in the dirt.

Wilson and Pitcher Adams were the only Greenville men to get more than one safety, each getting two.

New York, July 22.—(AP)—The stock market today acted as if it could not stand prosperity. At any rate, cashing in on yesterday's sharp bulge was in evidence throughout the session and became more pronounced in the final hour. The result was that early advances running to a point or so for favorites were cut or transformed into declines in many instances at the close. Transfers of around 1,400,000 shares were among the best in months.

W. Greenville Shaves Game Off League Leaders

West Greenville shaved a game off of Training School's lead in the A league this morning by pasting a 10-6 defeat on them. Training School led in the game until the sixth although they were being out-hit throughout the early stages. Williams pitching for the West Siders was stingy with hits but in two innings Training School bunched their hits to score. On other occasions Williams was invincible, striking out side in two different innings. Twice the leadoff man for Training School hit triples only to die on third.

Junior Wright and John Williams with four hits apiece led at bat for the winners, Ben Harrison and Gene Johnson with two for four led the East Siders. Training School 002 130 0-6 7 3 W. Japs Press Fears Action By British Tokyo, July 22.—(AP)—The Japanese press which often reflects official opinion, charged today that Chinese, British and Free French forces were prepared to invade French Indo-China and carried an unusually heavy mass of other dispatches concerning that territory which is listed in Tokyo's "greater East Asia" program. Not in weeks has there been so much copy in the newspapers concerning French Indo-China, in which Japan won three air bases last fall, and her neighbors at the southeast tip of the continent. The German wireless carried a Tokyo dispatch stating a government spokesman had no confirmation so far of "reports from Saigon according to which British troops had invaded southern Indo-China or are preparing an invasion." (A British radio broadcast heard in New York by CBS said reports of large-scale mobilization throughout Japan and requisitioning of horses and lorries indicate "big developments are imminent.")

Senate Committee Approves TVA Bill

Washington, July 22.—(AP)—Legislation to include the entire Cumberland river basin within the Tennessee Valley Authority was approved today by the Senate Agriculture Committee after a brief executive session. Chairman Smith (D-S.C.) who had opposed the TVA extension, said that the committee made no changes in the bill, which was offered by Senator Norris (Ind.-Neb). Defense and power officials and state and local representatives of the area supported the Norris bill at recent public hearings by a subcommittee. They testified that a series of 12 dams on the Cumberland would provide 800,000 additional kilowatts of prime power within the next few years that could be marketed through the existing TVA system and nearby areas. The railroad journey from Moscow to Vladivostok, Russia, normally requires ten days. It is estimated 5,000 pounds of aluminum are required to build a pursuit plane.

URGE FARMERS ATTEND MEET

Regional Grassland Conference Set Wednesday. Raleigh, July 22.—Farmers and agricultural workers are invited by R. M. Salter, director of the State College Experiment Station, to attend a Regional Grassland conference to be held at the college Wednesday, starting at 9:30 o'clock in the morning. Morning and afternoon sessions will be held in Withers Hall. "Grass is the South's coming crop," Director Salter declared, "because any livestock system of farming is based on pastures and forage crops. The conference also will include a discussion of legumes. Both grasses and legumes are important in national defense. "When animals graze good pastures and eat good grass silage," he continued, "they are healthier and more productive. They are better able to produce highly nutritious foods so urgently needed for our increased demand at home and for Britain. Legumes make it possible for farmers to grow their own nitrogen; they require less labor on the farm; and they will be extremely useful in adjusting agriculture to post-war conditions." The morning session of the conference will be opened with greetings from Col. John W. Harrison, administrative dean of State College. Dr. Sherman E. Johnson of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics will answer the question: "Should the South Shift to Livestock?" This will be followed by talks by Dr. R. H. Lush of the National Fertilizer Association on "The Forage Problem in Livestock Feeding," and by Dr. L. D. Baver, head of State College Agronomy Department, on "Soil Building with Grass." On the afternoon program, starting at 2 o'clock, will be discussions of "Better Forage Plants for the South," led by Dr. O. S. Anodot of the Bureau of Plant Industry; "Small Grain-Legume Rotations," by Dr. E. Marion Brown of the University of Missouri; "Forage Crops for Steel Land," by R. Y. Bailey of the Soil Conservation Service; "Making and Feeding Grass and Legume Silage," by T. E. Woodard of the Bureau of Dairy Industry; and "The Economy of High Quality Forage in Dairy Farming," by W. W. Fitzpatrick, manager of the Quail Roost Dairy Farm in Durham county.

of things besides the Dunkirk beach, with its bomb craters, its charred army trucks, its swarms of uniformed men, its burned skeletons of planes, and miscellaneous wreckage. We could see the rough backs of other sets, the various studio buildings, the off-scene workers, a bit of the city.

It wasn't a swimming day, but several prop-men in trunks were in the water, "sweeping" off cork debris from bomb explosions, and seeing to the compressed air pipes beneath the surface which, when in operation, created lumpy spraying geysers to double for bombs exploding in the water. Before the day was over most of the soldiers had been in the water, too—wading out to pile in the little boats, or once in, getting upset.

Lou Witte, the "disaster" man, had the beach and water charred for explosions, set off by electricity at definite intervals. The charred truck, when the loud-speaker voice commanded "burst again into flame"—from a controlled gas pipe. The evacuees lined up, two by two, for the quick, disciplined dash over the bridge of little boats to the sailing vessel. Other little boats pushed into the foreground, for other soldiers to crowd in. The cameras turned the loudspeakers rasped "Action!" and Dunkirk—the flaming, roaring hell—was under way.

Only this time it didn't flame, except on the truck, and it didn't roar. One of the foreground boats had tangled with a moored yacht, and couldn't get away. It couldn't get away from the spot where a compressed air "bomb" was set to go. They held the "bomb" and saved the soldiers from the upheaval. They tried it again, without the land bombs, because in the morning takes the smoke had obscured the camera.

And it was a gallant sight. The real Dunkirk must have been a scene of such confusion as to avert the possibility of technical errors in the filming. But Hollywood's "confusion" operated from a switchboard and a loudspeaker, made a convincing imitation.

He Wanted to Check Up Spartanburg, S. C.—(AP)—A garageman told a chauffeur that the new tires on his automobile were not entirely "balanced" but that it would not be noticeable until speeds of 65 or 70 miles an hour were attained.

A few minutes later, a state patrolman stopped the chauffeur while he was traveling at 74 miles an hour. "Next time," the chauffeur told a magistrate, "I'm going to let that garage fellow balance them tires."
