FDR MAKES DIRECT APPEAL TO LABOR

Nazis Abandon Guns And Flee In Tula Sector

Thrust Back Strike-Affected Mines Eight Miles By Russians

Invaders Declared To Have Been Surprised In Night Attack And Forced To Flee Along Frosty Streets In Their Underwear; Soviets Also Claim Positions Wrested From Foe Around Leningrad

By The Associated Press Official Soviet dispatches reported today the Germans had been thrown back eight miles by Red army counter-attacks at Tula, 100 miles south of Moscow, and that the surprised Nazis "ran and ran" through the bitter cold in their underwear in a "panic-stricken rout."

On the Leningrad front, the Russians claimed further successes against Nazi siege armies around the old Czarist capital. The Russians declared Soviet troops had captured positions held by the Germans for two months and that they were still advancing along the left bank of the river "N", presumably the Neva river just outside Leningrad.

Tass, the Russian news agency, gave a graphic description of the Nazi rout at Tula.

Taken by surprise by a Soviet artillery bombardment at dawn, the agency said, German infantry housed in the outskirts of the city threw away their weapons as they fled "but our cavalry caught up with the fascists x x x running down the frosty streets in their underwear."

Berlin military spokesmen said German bombardments have forced the Russians to evacuate the southern part of Leningrad, but they did not claim that German troops had left their trenches to occupy any of the city.

In the Crimean campaign, Adolf Hitler's field headquarters reported that German planes dealt "devastating blows" to fortifications and port facilities at Sevastopol, Russia's great Black Sea naval base, while Nazi infantrymen were reported fighting before the city's outer defenses.

Nazi front line dispatches said 60 Russian transports had been sunk and 60 others damaged in aerial attacks at Sevastopol, Kerch and other Crimean ports. The high command reported yesterday the fall of Kerch, bridgehead to the Caucasus oil fields.

Strike-Affected Mines Marked By Disorders; FDR Ready For Action

Sheriff W. D. Allen (above) of Edgefield county, South Carolina, and a sharecropper were shot to death and two other persons were wounded in a gun battle at a farm house near Edgefield to which the Sheriff and Deputy Sheriff W. L. Clarke had gone to arrest George R. Logue, a farmer, and his sister-in-law, Mrs. Sue Logue. The Logues were sought on charges of being accessories in the slaying of a neighbor, Davis W. Timmerman, in a feud started by an argument over a yearling calf.

Washington, Nov. 18.—(AP)—Disorders, including the shooting of two men, broke out at strike-affected captive coal mines in West Virginia and Pennsylvania today as President Roosevelt was reported ready to exert the full powers of the government to get production resumed.

The United Mine Workers called out its membership in the captive mines, owned by steel companies which use the coal, yesterday. About 53,000 miners in Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Kentucky, Alabama, Tennessee and Illinois work in captive mines and the United Mine Workers claim 95 per cent are members.

President Roosevelt has said the coal must be mined to keep vital steel mills in operation on armaments. There have been insistent demands on Capitol Hill for anti-strike legislation and persons closely in touch with the President said today he was convinced now was the time to stop interference with defense production.

A White House conference called in the hope of averting a strike which would paralyze the nation's railroads broke up with both rail executives and labor representatives declaring no conclusions were reached. They added they would see President Roosevelt again tomorrow.

While discussions will continue, Alvaney Johnston, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, said that orders for a strike on December 7 still stood.

"Has there been any change in the situation," he was asked.

"Not a bit," he declared emphatically.

John J. Peiley, president of the Association of American Railroads, reported that he just discussed this wage situation reached no conclusion and are still discussing it.

The strike call was issued after the railway unions turned down the recommendations of an emergency fact-finding board for wage increases short of the union demands.

The carriers had accepted the compromise proposal.

In Alabama, Governor Frank Dixon ordered Home Guard units mobilized due to the situation created by the strike of 8,000 miners and a threatened strike in the Fairfield plant of the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company. About 200 men were moved into the Birmingham area, center of the state's steel industry.

The first serious coal strike disorder was a fight at the Number 10 mine of the U. S. Coal and Coke Company at Gary, West Virginia, in which two Negroes were wounded. An official of an independent union opposing the United Mine Workers' walkout said UMW pickets fired 15 or 20 shots.

Pickets closed Number Six mine at Gary, largest of six which operated yesterday despite the strike call. There was a brief, but bloodless, fight at a United States Steel mine in Fayette county, Pennsylvania, when 50 non-strikers started through 100 pickets. The pickets dispersed after arrival of state police.

In all, four parcels will be sold, one of which contains the tobacco warehouse. The purchaser will be required to make a deposit of 10 per cent of his bid immediately after the sale, pending confirmation.

Gorman's warehouse will be sold at auction at noon Saturday, December 20, before the court house door under an order of Superior court. It was disclosed in a legal document published today elsewhere in this issue by J. B. James, commissioner.

Two Men Shot at One Of Captive Mines Where Work Halted By UMW In Defiance Of Administration; President Moves To Avert Threatened Strike of Railroad Employees By Calling Conference

May Head Troops

Military circles in Washington believe Maj. Gen. Robert C. Richardson, Jr. (above) would command any troops called out if the army takes control of captive mines in the coal controversy. He now commands the 7th Army Corps and is stationed at Birmingham, Ala.

SCHEDULE SET TO ARM SHIPS

Ships To British Isles And Northern Europe First

Washington, Nov. 18.—(AP)—Secretary of the Navy Knox announced today that ships plying to and from the British Isles and "Northern Europe" would be the first American merchantships armed under the policy as established by revision of the neutrality act.

In the Navy's first official announcement on plans for arming ships, Knox said that second priority would be given to ships going into the Red sea and that third priority would be given to ships going into the south Atlantic.

While he did not say when work would start, other authorities predicted that actual arming of American merchantmen would begin this week. President Roosevelt yesterday signed the repealer which struck from the neutrality law a prohibition against mounting guns on merchant vessels and also eliminated the prohibition against voyages by sea.

While Russia was not named in Knox's announcement today, the references to Northern Europe covered the sailing of American merchantmen north of the British Isles and the Scandinavian peninsula and to the Russian port of Archangel.

Tojo Asserts Nippon Army Ready For Any Eventuality

Navy Minister Simultaneously Declares Navy Has Completed Preparations For Any Change In Situation; Although Statements Made In Reply To Russia, Both Believed To Be Aimed At U.S.

By The Associated Press Japan's Premier Tojo declared today that "the Japanese army is prepared for any eventuality," amid sharply strained relations with both the United States and Russia.

Simultaneously, Navy Minister Admiral Shimada told the Tokyo Diet that "the navy has completed all preparations to meet any change in the situation."

The two warnings that Japan is clearing her decks for possible action came as all eyes turned to Washington for the outcome of discussions by Japan's special "peace or war" envoy, Saburo Kurosu with President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Cordell Hull.

On the record both statements were made in direct reply to a question raised in the Japanese Parliament regarding the presence of Russian floating mines in the Sea of Japan, but the implication was unmistakable that they were directed to the United States as well as Russia.

Foreign Minister Tojo said Japan had refused to accept Moscow's reply to a recent Japanese protest over the sinking of a Japanese liner in the Japan sea, allegedly by Soviet mines.

At the same time, the Japanese Times and Advertiser, the organ of the Japanese Foreign Office, declared the choice of peace or war in the Pacific was up to the United States.

Japs Voice Optimism Washington, Nov. 18.—(AP)—Japanese Ambassador Nomura voiced optimism today over chances for settlement of Japanese-American difficulties.

Arriving at the State Department with Japan's special emissary, Saburo Kurosu, for a conference with Secretary Hull, Nomura asked waiting reporters:

"Why are the newspapers here all so gloomy? We are very hopeful. What a smile, the ambassador added."

"You Americans are always in a fighting mood. Why are you so worried?"

When a reporter suggested that the newspapers in Tokyo today did not sound exactly peace-minded, Nomura laughed.

Schools To Offer Holiday Pageant

"Thanksgiving Through the Ages," an elaborate patriotic Thanksgiving pageant, will be presented in the high school auditorium tonight at 8 o'clock. The program, arranged by the music department, and homemaking departments, is divided into five scenes, each depicting the significance of Thanksgiving at other crucial periods in American history.

Speaking parts in the pageant will be done by Jimmie Warren, Jasper Pollard, Leonard Briley, Tom Rowlette, Joyce Corbett, Eustace Conway, Mary Anne Durcan, Dorothy Mixon, and Ann Skinner.

During the tableaux, which have been arranged by R. G. Walsler, the combined glee clubs of junior and senior high school will sing sacred and folk music with the Thanksgiving motif. Between scenes there will be dramatic sketches.

Mrs. Roosevelt Is Heard By Capacity Audience

First Lady Describes A Day In The White House

To a friendly audience that came from all over this section and filled every seat in the large Wright auditorium at East Carolina Teachers College last night, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt spoke simply and naturally on "A Day in the White House," describing the work of the President and the President's wife in a way to create in every listener a more sympathetic understanding of the incessant toil demanded of the Chief Executive, the burden of responsibility he bears for saying the final word in history-making decisions; and the obligation each man, woman and child in the United States has to shoulder his share of the responsibility for the continued existence of a democratic way of life.

At the end of her address Mrs. Roosevelt graciously and adroitly answered a number of questions in an open forum. In her answers she showed a marked sympathy with labor as a whole, but said that in its leadership it had sometimes been led astray.

The First Lady was introduced by Governor J. M. Broughton, who said: "Our guest speaker would be welcome anywhere in North Carolina if for no other reason than that she is the wife of that great champion of democracy—Franklin D. Roosevelt, but in her own right by unique and outstanding attainment she has become one of the notable women in this nation and world. By insight into problems that beset the human heart and sympathy with all who struggle she has endeared herself to the American people as few women in our history have done."

In presenting Governor Broughton, Dr. Leon R. Meadows, president of the college, had described the occasion as "a great day for the college and Eastern North Carolina" and referred to the Governor as "our own beloved chief executive."

To show the real nature of a day in the White House in 1941, in a time of national crisis, Mrs. Roosevelt contrasted the typical day of Theodore Roosevelt, when she first had inside knowledge of a President's routine, with the work-crowded day of the present chief executive.

Speaking parts in the pageant will be done by Jimmie Warren, Jasper Pollard, Leonard Briley, Tom Rowlette, Joyce Corbett, Eustace Conway, Mary Anne Durcan, Dorothy Mixon, and Ann Skinner.

During the tableaux, which have been arranged by R. G. Walsler, the combined glee clubs of junior and senior high school will sing sacred and folk music with the Thanksgiving motif. Between scenes there will be dramatic sketches.

Members and officials expressed the opinion that when the campaign opens November 25 the people of Greenville will be glad to have a share in carrying on the worthwhile project.

Even Before Message Read, Convention Had Endorsed President's Foreign Policies and Denounced Lindbergh; Evidence Of Dissent Noted To UMW's Fight In Captive Mine Dispute

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 18.—(AP)—President Roosevelt called upon the CIO today to cooperate in the production of arms "without delay and without interruption."

In a message to the CIO's annual convention, the chief executive said: "We need guns, tanks, planes and ships and we must produce guns, tanks, planes and ships without delay and without interruption and the American people and their government are determined that we shall have them."

"I have every confidence that your members recognizing the imperative needs of the American people in the interest of American defense, will cooperate with all American groups in the common and the patriotic interests. Americans will demand such a contribution from labor and from all other groups for the production of arms, family religion and nation."

Mr. Roosevelt also called for the re-establishment of peace in the ranks of organized labor as a patriotic step of great importance in creating national unity.

Earlier the delegates cheered a call for formal endorsement of President Roosevelt's foreign policy, a denunciation of Charles A. Lindbergh and a plea for extension of all possible aid and cooperation to Hitler's enemies.

As union leaders came forward to speak on the resolution, the first note of dissent against complete support by the CIO of the fight of the United Mine Workers for a union shop contract in the captive coal fields was voiced by Sanders Gens, vice-president of the Textile Workers Union, who declared he was not in favor of abandoning any of labor's principles, but that he regarded the existing defense emergency as "more important than to help 35,000 miners on a closed shop now."

Grifton, Nov. 18.—The Grifton Book Club was in session on Thursday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Jack Tucker. Mrs. Alton Chapman presided at the meeting. After current events and the exchange of books an interesting talk on Historical Furniture was given by Mrs. W. F. Harding of Kinston.

At the conclusion of the program Mrs. Tucker served from a daintily appointed tea table, sandwiches, pickles, hot tea and cakes.

Guests were: Mrs. Harding, Mrs. Chapman, Mrs. Marsh Knott, Mrs. Raymond Johnson, Mrs. Lockhart, Mrs. George Sugg, Mrs. Cecil Cobb, Mrs. Robert Rasberry, Mrs. H. P. Quinerly, Mrs. R. A. Nelson and Mrs. T. J. Williams.

Alligood-Godley.
The Methodist Church at Grimesland was the scene of a beautiful and impressive ceremony on Sunday, November 16, at 9 o'clock in the morning when Miss Beatrice Godley of Grimesland became the bride of Mr. Harley Kugler Alligood, Jr., of Washington. The Reverend W. A. Crow, pastor of the bride's church, officiated.

Aisle standards holding white chrysanthemums were placed at either side of the altar and cathedral candles in seven-branched candelabra placed to the back of the altar. Floral decorations cast a soft glow over the wedding party. The altar was centered with white bridal tapers burning in a five-branched candelabra of silver and matching candles in four single holders flanking the fan-shaped bouquet of white chrysanthemums which graced the piano console.

Prior to the ceremony Mrs. J. Lyman Edwards, church organist, played a program of nuptial music. Her selections included "Moon Love," "The Rosary" and "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life." "Liebestraum" was softly played during the ceremony and the traditional Bridal Chorus from Wagner's Lohengrin was played as the processional and the Wedding March from Mendelssohn as the recessional.

The bride and bridegroom entered the church together, unattended, and took their place before the altar. The bride was beautiful in a dress and coat ensemble of leaf green wool. The coat had a fitted bodice and full skirt with brown beaver trim extending from the high neckline to the waist. The large pockets were fashioned of brown beaver fur and she wore a tiny hat made of beaver pom-poms topped with leaf green wool held to place with brown ribbon ties. Her purse, gloves and slippers were of brown and her bridal corsage was of yellow rosebuds tied with yellow and silver tulle.

The groom wore a dark business suit and a yellow rosebud boutonniere.

Mrs. Alligood is the attractive and popular older daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Maybrow Godley of Grimesland. She graduated from the Grimesland high school with the class of 1939 and attended East Carolina Teachers College in Greenville.

Mr. Alligood is the older son of Mr. and Mrs. Harley Kugler Alligood of Washington. He is a graduate of the Washington schools and is now associated in business with his father, owner of the H. K. Alligood garage on North Market street.

Immediately following the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Alligood left for a wedding trip to Florida and after November 23 will be at home on East Tenth street in Washington.

The Powers Girls
In the gay nineties the Gibson girls were famous the world over when along came the Follies girls who in turn gave their place to the Powers girls. The story of the Powers girls and their modeling is featured in an engrossing book in the Sheppard Memorial Library, entitled "The Powers Girls" and written by John Robert Powers, the originator of this type of a girl.

The book was designed for the benefit of every woman who wants to improve her personal appearance, the author believing that the fundamentals that make a good model are important to any woman, whether career woman or wife and mother.

This great critic of womanly beauty says that the girl who has individual charm and attracts others is the one who looks like herself. She does not borrow mannerisms from another girl. They are her own, controlled, graceful and assured. Every girl must first and foremost be herself; she must be natural, possess unaffected charm, poise and graciousness of manner and health. He believes that the most delightful woman is the harmoniously developed woman; the most interesting woman is the one who has developed all her potentialities, the woman who is mentally and physically and emotionally alive.

However, most of the author's advice is directed toward the physical development. He stresses again and again the fundamentals of good carriage and poise, of naturalness and self confidence. Says he, "Lift your head out of your waist, your waist out of your hips, and keep your chin up." A more modest command than the terse one the army officer gives the soldier.

Anyone who wants to improve her potentialities and personality may attend the famous Powers school where the following subjects are taught, not in classes but individually, good posture, graceful and effective use of the body, style, proper make-up, correct speech, self-knowledge and self-control.

Concerning clothes, Mr. Powers has this to say: "The first step in dressing well is to determine your type, then dress to suit it. (Your type is determined by your age, by your size, by your build and your personality.) The first rule is that clothes should be becoming, appropriate and well-cared for. Any woman, however limited her budget, can fill those requirements by the expenditure of time, thought and a little planning.

And he offers this optimistic opinion about growing old, that with animation and personality, with dignity of perfect poise and the grace of a controlled body, the woman of forty can make herself the most distinguished woman in any group. No woman with abundant physical vitality and mental activity need ever become old. —H. L. R.

GREENVILLE CITY OF SUNSHINE

Once more the pageantry of autumn passes before us lining the countryside about us with its breath taking colors. Because of the long drought those of us who love this autumn season best of all, had feared that there would be a less colorful one this year, but nature laboring under difficulties has done her best. Look about you now because it's too late and because of its lovely coloring of fall leaves, berries or twigs, select some tree or shrub that will add to the beauty of your own garden and lawn. Now is the best time to make that decision and also to do something about it. Many nurseries have them.

We in the south should make much of our own native trees in landscaping. Planted on our grounds, oaks, maples, redbuds, magnolias, sourwood, beech, sweet gums and sumachs, how their lovely coloring in autumn would brighten and cheer the passerby.

Crape myrtles planted mostly for summer bloom, are just as lovely in autumn for look about your own town now and see its lovely tones of burnished copper touched with scarlet and orange-red. They root easily and will grow for all of us.

Dogwood, our own state flower, is lovely in all its forms (of which there are many). The drought has been unusually hard on this beautiful tree and some have failed to come through, but most of them probably will perk up in the spring. Even now may be seen many of them in their lovely autumn reds.

Brilliant berries and mandarin hollies, cottonasters and mandarin with the fragrance from tea olives, eleanus and tea plants make the planting of these really worth while. Japonicas and azaleas of which no shrubs are lovelier, should be planted more and more in our southland.

There are so many shrubs I can only mention a few but decide on one or many, buy and plant now so that in the coming years you will have them to enjoy.

Our soil is so fertile and the climate such, that most trees, evergreens and blooming shrubs will grow and bloom in our homes for beauty and for us and protection from the sun for us and for so many of our smaller garden plants.

When planting be sure to remember our slogan "Greenville, City of Sunshine," and plant more and more of the forsythias and the yellow jonquils so that we may once again greet the springtime with our banners of gold.

In the coming years Mother Earth will be called on to produce more and more food for the hungering masses of this battered and suffering world, so let not a leaf be burned but give back to the earth all these for food to help her carry on her great task.

Admit your real pleasure at seeing the delicate tracery of twigs, limbs and branches outlined against a frosty sky. Think over past successes and plan for future garden achievements.

As we come to this Thanksgiving we should all be doubly grateful that we live in a country that does maintain this fine way of life which

Chapter 31
The Storm Ends

"Do you think things will be all right now?" Sue Ellen asked Johnny as they rode back to Tyler Springs together.

"I know they will, and before some other misunderstanding arises, I want you to know just what happened that night I failed to come to dinner," Johnny was serious.

"The night Riv was hurt?"

He nodded. "Deedora called me at Camp Shelby and said that the first time I came to Tyler Springs she and her father and I were there. He refused to listen to Deedora when she begged him to say, but rushed out into the storm. She was so alarmed that I said I would leave and follow him into town.

"I had not gone three miles until I found him in the ditch. I tried to get him into my car, but he was so unmanageable that I went back to Deedora's and got Joe to help me. We took him to Doctor Warren's and I then went back to Deedora, who had become hysterical. I sat with her, trying to calm her. Later, when I called Magnolia House, you were gone and your Aunt Car was confused and upset because you had gone to Oak Hill. I was a stupid brute to think what I did."

"That I still loved Riv, I had had reason to believe that, especially when you found me hovering over him as though I loved him. I couldn't explain that. I saw Deedora—but why think about what is over?"

"Do you think I want to think about the past?" asked Johnny. He stopped the car and took her in his arms.

"A month later, Sue Ellen sat in a New York hotel waiting for her husband to finish dressing for dinner. She read aloud to him as he dressed, from the mail which had come that afternoon from Tyler Springs.

"Aunt Pleas' letter first," she told him. "Listen, Johnny, Deedora has been taken to Oak Hill. At first Riv refused to see her, but consented to see the baby. The baby looks exactly like Riv—at least that's what everyone says. Now Riv and Deedora are reconciled and Ginny told me that Deedora looks almost beautiful, which is hard to believe, but Ginny always exaggerated to make a good story."

"You see?" said Sue Ellen with a toss of her dark curls.

"I see my beautiful wife."

"Goose, you didn't hear a word."

"I did. Moore and his wife are reconciled—happy ending," said Johnny.

The letter fell to Sue Ellen's lap. "Not like ours."

"Nothing could be like ours."

"Nothing could be like ours," Johnny paused to kiss her.

"Now listen to Ginny's letter."

"We'll miss our dinner engagement if we listen to that."

"Just this part: She writes, 'Toby is in' the Air Service and crazy about it, after years spent behind the grocery counter. He says he can't fly high enough. I'm keeping store and love it. I should have been a career woman in the beginning, but maybe simply adore him. I saw your Aunt Car this morning. Isn't her husband handsome? Much better looking than his son, although you won't like me to say that. They are out at Belle Acres and your aunt said that they would be there for a while until Johnny's plans were settled."

"That all?" Johnny smiled down at her.

"There's a lot more, but it wouldn't interest you."

"Why not?"

"It's about Toby and how she loves him and that I can't possibly love you as much—you know how Ginny runs on."

"And do you love me as much?"

"Does it take words to tell you, Johnny?"

He drew her to her feet and took her in his arms. His face bent and he kissed her wedding ring. "Mrs. Johnny Harris, U. S. A.," he said whimsically. "A soldier's wife. Someday—"

She put her hand across his lips. "When the time comes, if it should come, that you must leave me, I'll go back to Belle Acres and wait for your return. I'll be brave—but I'll miss you so very much, my dear."

"No regrets?" Johnny's voice was broken.

"No matter what comes—no regrets," Sue Ellen whispered.

THE END

Chapter One
"Bang it, Asey!"

Asey Mayo pretended not to hear her, but neither the distant chugging of the evening freight nor the rattle of halstones against the truck's throbbing hood nor even his own disinclination to listen could drown out the shrill, persistent stream of orders that issued from his Cousin Jennie.

"Bang it, Asey! Bang it! Take the wrench an' bang it. I tell you! Bang it! We only got fifteen minutes left to get over there! Bang it with the wrench!"

Ignoring her impatient knuckle-rappings on the windshield above his head, Asey continued his slow, gentle adjustment of the rusty nut under his fingers, and the recalcitrant windshield wiper continued to scrape grudgingly over a triangle half the size of an icecream cone.

"Wrench, wrench, wrench!" Jennie shrieked. "Bang it with the wrench—on, come here, Asey!"

With a weary sigh, Asey straightened up and brushed the accumulated halstones from the shoulders of his best gray suit. Then, glancing at the winding curves of the Tonset road ahead, he climbed back into the truck.

"See?" Jennie pointed accusingly at the wiper. "Look at it! It don't hardly even waggle now! All your tinkering's only makin' it worse! I tell you, you got to take the wrench an' bang at it like Syl always does. It's quarter to six, Asey, an' we're three miles from Quisset. Bang that wiper an' get along!"

Asey leaned back against the slatted seat and shook his head.

"Jennie, I—"

"It certainly doesn't seem a lot to ask you!" Jennie said hotly. "Just deliver a few clams on time for your poor Cousin Syl, lyin' home there with his ankle all sprained, worryin' if he's goin' to lose his Inn clam business or not! Six is as late as Mrs. Doane'll wait, an' I had a terrible time persuadin' her to wait at all. Six o'clock, she told me over the phone, or she'll get a new clam man!"

"But Jennie, I—"

"Trouble is," Jennie continued, "you're so busy bein' important these days, bein' a director of Porter Motors, an' gettin' your picture taken in Washington with Bill Porter an' all those other engine bigwigs, you don't care a snap for me an' Syl!"

"Now look here," Asey said as she paused for breath. "Ten seconds after Bill Porter left me an' my bag at the door, before my hand touched the knob, you were rushin' me off to deliver Syl's clams. You wouldn't listen to my shiffin' the clams to my roadster an' takin' the main road. You insisted on this truck an' this curvin' short cut. You wouldn't believe my warnin' about the hailstorm Bill an' I drove through!"

"Well, who would?" Jennie retorted. "Who'd expect hail the middle of June? The radio man said drizzle!"

"Whatever he said, hail's what you got," Asey said. "I want to beat this clam dead line, but I don't feel up to pilotin' this vehicle over these curves with two blind crossin' an' three bridges ahead, with a hail more than a half inch of road! An' I cannot make that wiper work!"

"Because you won't bang it! You got to bang it with the wrench!"

"One tap," Asey said, "just one tapan' that wiper'll break down entirely. Why, it's so near expirin' right now that a cross word'll finish it for ever."

"Oh, give me the wrench!" Jennie said in exasperation. "I'll show you! Give me the wrench, I say! I'll do it!"

"Jennie, if you bust that wiper, we're goin' to stay right here, clams or no clams, till I can see to drive! That wiper can't be banged by any wrench."

"Give me that wrench!"

Asey shrugged.

Jennie Bangs It

"Very well," he said. "Here you are Bang away to your heart's content. An' I'll promise you this, if you can bang that wiper into wipin', I'll get Syl's clams to Quisset by six, even if I have to fly through the hail with 'em gripped in my bare teeth!"

"You remember that?" Jennie said as she clamored out.

Asey winced as she hacked viciously at the wiper, half expecting the windshield itself to shatter under the force of her blows.

Then he opened his eyes wide as the wiper, after a preliminary palpitating spasm, began flipping evenly back and forth in clean, sweeping strokes.

"See?" Panting a little, Jennie plumped herself down beside him again. "Now, you get me an' Syl's clams to the Whale Inn, an' hustle up—no don't you start any more fussin'! You promised!"

"All I said," Asey told her with a chuckle, "was 'Uncle! I'll try to get you there on time, but don't expect any Superman miracles from this jalopy An' hang on tight!"

Swaying around some of the curves and skidding around others, the truck rumbled along the shore road toward Quisset with an accompanying clamor out of all proportion to its speed.

Asey heaved a sigh of relief when the ruttled short cut ended and he swung the truck back onto a tarred highway.

"Next time we get out on any clam deliverin' expeditions," he told Jennie as he relaxed his grip on the wheel, "let's give ourselves a break an' drive somethin' faster an' more flexible than this truck. A steam roller, say. How much time we got left?"

"It's eight of six," Jennie said. "We can just about make it. I know we could if you'd only put your mind to it—for mercy's sakes, what're you slowin' down for now? If it's that pesky four corners red light, don't waste time stoppin' for it! You sail right through, Asey!"

"I meant to, Only," Asey leaned forward and rubbed the steam from the windshield. "Only—here, lean over an' look, Jennie. See those fellers swingin' the red lanterns?"

"What for? What's the matter?"

"Army," Asey said briefly. "They are just startin' to pass."

"One of them columns? One of them long strings of cars an' trucks an' guns?" Jennie's voice rose in a crescendo of dismay.

"Uh-huh, Golly, Jennie, it's the same outfit that Bill an' I spent an hour passin' a week ago today.

See, now those fellers with the lanterns are switchin' the control box lights to red all around. I guess they're goin' to hold up everythin' on all sides. There's one bus from Boston pullin' up to our left. I'll get out an' see what our chances are of cuttin' through."

Turning up his coat collar, Asey walked across to the nearest soldier, who was energetically swinging his red lantern at the bus.

A minute later he reported back to Jennie.

"Looks like we got to wait till the bitter end. It's a timed problem, an' the column's runnin' late because of the hail, and they won't let the bus through even though that wouldn't mean stoppin' the column. Huh? If only I could beat it up the West Tonset road and circle ahead of them, but I could not ever make it in this truck of Syl's."

"Did you tell that fellow who you tell him your picture was in the paper with the Defense Commission yesterday, and that you was Cape Cod's detective?"

Asey chuckled. "Nope," he said. "I didn't bring up the Hayseed Sleuth angle, Jennie. We just got to wait. Everybody's got to wait. It's too bad about the clams, but we'll explain to Mrs. Doane how we got thwarted by the army. She can't carp at that. The Army takes precedence over anybody's clams. So—Jennie, where you goin'? Jennie, come back here and sit down! Jennie!"

"You leave go of my arm!"

"Jennie, this hail's changing to rain—look outside. It's already pouring pitchforks and gun shovels, and the only thing you'll get from going out and fussing at those fellers with the lanterns is a good drinkin'! Now, sit down and be patient!"

"After all I been through today, with Syl and his ankle, and the doctor taking so long to come, and trying to get someone to deliver these clams, and then you and that wiper, no army," Jennie said with faintly, "is going to stop me now, not with 'em Inn almost in sight! I'm going to deliver these clams by six!"

With a stride that reflected her belligerent determination, Jennie marched over to the soldier Asey had talked to.

Asey sighed and turned up his coat collar again, and watched her shrill exclamation, "Even even over the clams of the passing column. He had no desire to say forth into the downpour, but when Jennie began to pump her fist up and down in people's faces someone had to step in and curtail her."

He arrived on the scene just in time to hear the soldier's patient answer to her verbal onslaught.

"Lady, for the purposes of this problem, we're theoretically at war, and you can't pass through this column. This column's at war, see? You got to wait—hey! Hey, you! Lady!"

Practically swinging his lantern, the soldier alternately yelled and blew his whistle at a small sedan that had crept around the Boston bus and was now slowly edging behind him, in front of Syl's truck.

Under the impetus of the soldier's shouted orders, the sedan was rather reluctantly backed up alongside the bus.

"Women drivers!" the soldier said wearily to Asey. "Women are the worst! Always got something they got to get to. Baby to feed. Cake in the oven. They got to do this, they got to do that! They got to get past! My God, I can't seem to make 'em understand they're smack in the middle of a theoretical Blitzkrieg!"

"Young man!" The driver of the sedan, a slight woman whose face was barely visible under her large umbrella, had been politely clearing her throat to get the soldier's attention. Now, apparently realizing the futility of throatclearing in competition with so many varieties of engine noises, she reached across Asey and was tugging at the soldier's raincoat. "Young man, I fully understand—can you hear me? I understand the justice of your stopping cross traffic, but considering that I am driving on the same road, and that my passing this intersection will in no way impede the army's progress, I feel that you might reconsider and allow me to go through."

Many of those gnawing, maddening, painful backaches people blame on colds or strains are often caused by tired kidneys — and may be relieved when treated in the right way. The kidneys are Nature's chief way of eliminating excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may start nagging backaches, rheumatic pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisons from the blood. Get Doan's Pills.

Strength For The Day

By EARL L. DOUGLASS

IF WE KEEP UP OUR COURAGE
A man was touring through New England this summer and wanted as quickly as possible to get to a certain town. A road sign indicated that he could take a short cut over the mountain and thus eliminate almost a dozen miles of his journey. As he went along the narrow road, he encountered a pedestrian and inquired whether or not this road would get him to a certain village. The man replied, "Yes, this road will get you there, if you keep up your courage."
He came safely to the end of his journey, and when at last he was on the smooth concrete highway, he turned over in his mind the words, "This road will get you to where you want to go, if you keep up your courage." His conclusion was that any road, no matter how rough it may be, will get us where we want to go if we keep up our courage.

The man who took this trip declared that never in his life had he encountered such scenery as he did along this narrow mountain road. It is the same along many of life's rough pathways. There are compensations for roughness, and we always get where we want to go, if we keep up our courage.

WORTHWHILE

The value of fire drills in schools was emphasized today when 600 children in a Kinston primary school marched to safety without a single injury, although the fire swept the entire structure within a few minutes after being discovered.

Having been taught just what to do in an emergency the pupils were reported to have emerged from the building in perfect order. In this connection we are wondering just how widespread is the practice of periodic fire drills in schools throughout our state, including our own.

LABOR USES GUERRILLA TACTICS

Unions in this country are using what can be described only as "guerilla tactics" to block and delay defense production.

That is the astonishing fact produced in an article in Business Week describing what has been going on in Gary, Indiana, one of the nation's major steel centers. Gary steel plants are working at record levels. Yet steel workers are idle. Steel men, says Business Week, "call it 'union unemployment.'" The steel companies, with their vast payrolls, are never sure how many men will be at work on a given day. If, for instance, half a dozen crane-men fail to come on the job, a thousand men in other departments must be sent home because steel cannot be moved. Not long ago, the failure of key workers to report was responsible for a loss of steel production sufficient to have built 2,000 medium tanks or 40 submarines. This is done in such a manner that the government has no precedent for acting under existing laws.

This is all part of the drive of radical labor elements to dominate this country—its industries, its government, its people. It has become almost a commonplace for labor leaders, drunk with power, to defy the highest government officials, including the President of the United States. A few of these leaders are putting their own ruthless ambitions ahead of their country's safety.

Either Congress will pass legislation which will make sabotage of defense impossible, or we will have a system of labor dictatorship which will make Hitler chortle with glee.

Washington Daybook

Washington — Democracy works in strange ways but none is stranger perhaps than what has happened to the defense highway bill. Almost a year ago, the Federal Works Agency and the Public Roads Administration, with the help of the Army and Navy, drafted a report to the President on "the absolute minimum necessities" for new and improved highways in national defense areas.

With some revisions, the President made his recommendations to Congress, pressed upon them the necessity for speed, since some bridges already were collapsing and some roads being churned into successions of sink-holes by the army's new motorized and tank equipment (just light tanks, mind you—none of those 60-tonners has yet had a chance at making soup out of our super highways).

after the experts said it was "urgently necessary" and "vital to our defense effort." Democracy grinds along, but sometimes exceedingly slow.

CONGRESS immediately set about to rectify its fizzle but it meant putting up another bill — one that would NOT be vetoed. The whole business had to go back through committees and all the haggling over how much money was to be spent, who was to spend it, and where, gone through again.

The House committee, in making its report, discovered something that apparently was overlooked when Congress acted before — that there is some $266,000,000 already appropriated and unspent for highways and if even a portion of this is allocated to the strategic network it will be about all that the bottlenecks of technical labor and priority materials can take care of.

The committee, however, did break one verbal paddle on Congress: "The unfortunate delays in acting on the recommendations of Federal Works Administrator and the Commissioner of Public Roads, made public last February, have caused uncertainty and confusion. Urgently needed access roads to military establishments and defense plants have not been built." The committee estimated that "32,000,000 civilian motor vehicles operating daily over the highways of this country are vital to defense." Since that's about the crop of motor vehicles in the country, I guess the day of the pleasure car is gone forever.

The new defense highway bill now is before the Senate — ten months

Some of the Congressmen to uphold the President caught it in the neck politically. For example, the opponents of one such came out with the announcement that Rep. So-and-So, voting against overriding the veto, had cost the state $7-

Around... Capital Square

By BOB THOMPSON
DON'T KNOW — It's no use to ask Adrian Newton, new clerk of the Supreme Court, what he makes because he doesn't know. The annual income of the clerk of the Supreme Court has been a mystery around Raleigh for years. His salary is only $25 a month. The real money comes from fees and charges for mimeographing briefs and the like. A member of the State Auditor's staff several months ago estimated that the job netted close to $15,000 a year, or more than the Governor is paid. According to members of the court, however, he was mistaken, probably having got the net mixed up with the gross. They figure that the clerk's job is worth "from $4,000 to $6,000 a year."

Anyhow, Newton gave up a $4,680 job as chief counsel of the Unemployment Compensation Commission to take the job and nobody around here thinks he made a bad trade.

"SUPREME" — Insofar as fiscal matters are concerned, the Supreme Court is really supreme in these parts. The Budget Bureau fixes the salary of stenographers who work for such common people as the Governor and members of the Council of State. But does it dare stick its official nose into the pay of those who work for the Supreme Court. It does not. The court runs its own business, and how!

The Budget Bureau is a part of the executive branch of the government and, consequently, has no authority over the affairs of either the legislative or the judicial branch. The State Auditor's office is in the same category. Consequently there is no official check on what the clerk's job is worth in dollars and cents. Probably the first time that Newton will have a good estimate of his new income will be when he settles with the estate of the late Edward Murray, his predecessor. That he intends to do within the next six weeks.

BOND — The State Treasurer's office has received from H. T. Tudor of Bennington, Vt., a demand for payment of a $1,000 bond issued in 1862 and signed by "Z. B. Vance, Governor." But this is one debt that the State of North Carolina, not going to pay. The bond pledges the state to pay $1,000 in "good and lawful money of the Confederate States of America" and even though there probably is a $1,000 of Confederate money in the museum, it is not "good and lawful."

The treasurer sent Tudor's letter and bond over to the Attorney General to answer. First Assistant Attorney General Wade Bruton could not figure out whether Mr. Tudor was serious in his demand for payment or not. So he decided to take no chances and wrote a formal, legal opinion as to just why North Carolina could not make good this 79 year-old promise to pay.

ELIGIBLE — Tom Banks, private secretary to the Governor, has ousted Parole Commissioner Edwin Gill from the position of most eligible bachelor in the employ of the State. Gill gets more money but Tom has more "it."

Incidentally, in the opinion of people around here the appointment of Banks was one of the best Governor Broughton has made. The soft spoken Raleigh attorney is a political "smoothie" who knows his way around. At quite a few state conventions of the Young Democrats Banks has been one of the men behind the scenes who upset any applicants that were not to their liking.

Carolina And Virginia To Meet In Classic Thursday

TOUGH BATTLE SEEN FOR HILL

Came Is South's Oldest Turkey Day Classic

By MARION ALEXANDER
Chapel Hill, Nov. 18.—The Carolina eleven, which gave the undefeated bowl-bound Duke such a great scrap Saturday, will face another of the nation's top teams and individual stars here Thursday at 2 o'clock in a renewal of the South's oldest, continuous "Thanksgiving day classic."

Virginia rolled over Lehigh 34-0 last week, and Captain Bill Dudley pitched his sensational play, bringing three touchdowns, pitching fourth, and gaining an unbelievable 326 yards single-handed.

The Cavaliers are undefeated in the South, and their only loss was to Yale 21-19. Dudley ranked No. 3 among all the backs in the country last week in total offense, and is expected to regain the No. 1 spot since his spurge against Lehigh.

The 170-pound double triple-threat has just averaged 23 points and 186 yards a game—more than a whole team will make in most games—all season, and Virginia fans are hailing him as the greatest all-round back in the country.

The ancient and classic series is tied at 21 wins apiece with three ties. Carolina won a 10-7 thriller last year, but Virginia's once-beaten "T" model is the favorite this season.

The Tar Heel supporters were much encouraged by Carolina's splendid battle against long odds with the great Duke eleven and were backing the locals to give Virginia one of the finest contests in this classic 49-year rivalry.

CARE IS URGED OF EQUIPMENT

Farm Machinery In County To Undergo Repairs

To keep every farm machine in Pitt county in top-notch condition and place every usable piece of equipment in shape is vitally necessary if Pitt county is to do its part in the 1942 Farm Defense Program, declares J. V. Taylor, chairman of the County USDA Defense Board.

With the manufacture of new machinery and equipment in 1942 sharply curtailed because of defense demands on supplies of steel, copper, and other metals, farmers will have to depend more upon existing machinery. Mr. Taylor explained. In addition to the scarcity of new equipment, farmers may find the available farm labor limited in 1942.

Any difficulty in obtaining parts or materials needed for the repair of farm machinery should be reported immediately to the County USDA Defense Board, said Mr. Taylor.

The Board will attempt to help the farmer or the dealer obtain the needed articles. Some local or temporary shortages may develop because of unusual demand for certain replacement parts, but manufacturers will be able to secure sufficient metals to produce the necessary parts. Allocations of steel and other metals will be made manufacturers in order to meet the requirements, provided farmers do not wait until spring to place their orders.

County USDA Defense Boards, acting on the request of Secretary of Agriculture Claude R. Wickard, are urging farmers to check all machinery and equipment for possible worn or damaged parts and to order replacement parts immediately. Early orders can be expected to get right-of-way, said Mr. Taylor and by acting without delay, farmers

The patrons of the Bethel district are very proud because along with the gradual completion of a new high school at Bethel the operation of a new bus also has begun. The bus was bought and is being paid for by the parents of the following schools: Harris, Post Oak, Piney Grove, Holly Hill, Whitehurst, Highsmith, Bethel, Shivers and Sally Branch. Two busses are needed but they have paid for one already except two hundred dollars and that they hope to complete in a few weeks. Then the drive will continue until both busses are paid for. Aside from their quota for the bus some of those schools have through their P. T. A. built and equipped a lunch room at the school grounds. Every church in Bethel contributed.

SCHOOLS TO OFFER HOLIDAY PAGEANT

(Continued from page one) Winterville to Greenville each Monday night for a two-hour rehearsal, will also be musical numbers. Costumes for the pageant have been designed and executed by the homemaking department under Miss Louise Swanick supervision. Art work for the stage sets and for the programs has been directed by Miss Ruth Henry, art instructor in the city schools. Director Osa Shindler is in charge of all music for the program. Every indication is that the Thanksgiving pageant this evening will be the most impressive program the school has sponsored in a number of years," declares K. G. Waiser, who is assisting with the affair. Mitchell White and John Horne, stage managers, have constructed effective sets for the five scenes. The community is cordially invited to attend this patriotic Thanksgiving pageant at eight o'clock tonight in the high school auditorium. The entire program will last less than one hour.

MRS. ROOSEVELT IS HEARD BY CAPACITY AUDIENCE

(Continued from page one) executive. First, she took the audience through a day with the President, howing how the mass of business that must pass through a President's hands is expedited, and emphasizing the necessity for reaching clear-cut decisions from information gathered from numberless sources and for willingness to bear the responsibility for the consequences. She made clear the power of concentration needed by the President of the United States as he turns from one individual or group conference to another from which he must draw and remember needed information and varying points of view, and the tremendous background of general knowledge he must have to understand the problems presented by the banker and the laborer, the coal miner and the housing expert.

The press conference twice a week, which give the public press direct contact with President Roosevelt, the speaker described as "a game of wits" in which the task of the news men is to find out certain things and the President's aim is to tell only what he is ready to make public. Though one cannot know what will happen the next day and whether what he decides is the wise thing, he must make up his mind; the affairs of the nation will not wait. It is imperative, she declared, that one making such decisions discipline his mind to make the choice to the best of his power and then not let the results weigh too heavily on him, if he is to be of any value in his office.

Referring to the fact that there is now no purely social entertaining in the White House, and that both day and night are filled with work, she said that the whole tempo of life is intensified, the telephone perhaps ringing in the middle of the night with important news and finding the President still at work. Mrs. Roosevelt pointed out here the obligation of each individual to carry his part of the responsibility for the country and the government.

If you lived in the White House, said the First Lady, you would find yourself thinking very often that there never had been a President who did not need to be doing part of the work. "Feel that the day you put in has some bearing on what the President does in his day at the White House," every man, woman and child in a democracy has his contribution to make and his obligation to carry his part of the burden.

Mrs. Roosevelt then turned to the day of the wife of the President, showing that, even with all her trained staff she must accept a share in the duties of the average housewife.

Describing her day, now that she has added to earlier activities the duties of Assistant Civilian Defense Director, she showed how her time likewise is scheduled almost to the minute, to allow for the hours at the Defense office both morning and afternoon and still permit her to care for her other imperative duties.

In concluding her lecture, Mrs. Roosevelt pointed out that the chaos in Europe has come from dissatisfaction with the way of life there. We must make our democracy work here, she declared. We can show the world that what we believe in is better than any new order a dictator can offer. The auditorium in which Mrs. Roosevelt spoke was filled to capacity by an audience that gave her close and undivided attention from her first word to the last, and took advantage of the forum at the end to ask her a number of questions, such as her opinion on the possible use of the "mailed list" in labor strikes, and her position on the drafting of women for national defense.

The distinguished visitor was the guest of President and Mrs. Leon R. Meadows in their home at noon and of the college for dinner at night, in the dining hall with the students. She went first through the south hall, so that the students there might greet her to the guest table in the north hall.

At the dinner, Governor and Mrs. J. M. Broughton were also guests of honor. The guest list also included: Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Miss Malvina Thompson, her secretary, Governor and Mrs. J. M. Broughton, Dr. and Mrs. Leon R. Meadows, Mr. and Mrs. Robert R. Taylor, Dr. and Mrs. Paul Fitzgerald, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Forbes, Mr. and Mrs. J. K. Warren of Trenton, N. C., Mrs. J. L. Fleming, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Worthington, Mr. and Mrs. Con Lanier, Miss Mamie Jenkins, Dr. and Mrs. Clyde A. Erwin of Raleigh, Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Johnson of Raleigh, Mrs. Agnes Barrett, Mr. and Mrs. John G. Dawson of Kinston, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Murphy of Snow Hill, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Waldrop, Hon. Josephus Daniels and Mr. Josephus Daniels, Jr. of Raleigh, Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Whitchard, Jr. and Mrs. Dave Mosier, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Bost of Greensboro, Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Flanagan, Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Duncan, Miss Harriet Marshburn of Wilmington, president of Women's Student Government, Mr. Walter Tucker, president of Men's Student Government, Dr. and Mrs. Herbert ReBarker, Dean of Men at the college, Miss Annie L. Morton, Dean of Women. A tour of the campus in the afternoon took Mrs. Roosevelt down the main driveway, where she was enthusiastically received by crowds of the college people. Mrs. Roosevelt was met in Wil-

TOBACCO CROP SELLS HIGHER

Brings Average 76 Pct. Above Level For 1940

Reflector Bureau By BB THOMPSON
Raleigh, Nov. 18.—North Carolina's No. 1 crop, tobacco today is bringing a price of 76 per cent above the 1940 average.

Add the expenditures on and around four military camps to the money received from tobacco and it is easy to understand the prosperous smiles one sees all over eastern North Carolina.

Asked to explain the great increase in the price of tobacco, W. P. Hedrick, the State Department of Agriculture's expert on tobacco marketing, gave these five reasons:

1. Increased domestic consumption of leaf "due to the improved economic conditions."
2. A 12 per cent smaller crop "resulting from unfavorable weather conditions."
3. The prevalence of "a good quality smoking leaf for which there was an improved demand."
4. An improved outlook for export of flue-cured tobacco "as a result of the lend-lease program."
5. An increased purchases by domestic companies "to bolster supplies of leaf needed to satisfy an anticipated further increase in cigarette consumption."

North Carolina farmers had sold 93 per cent of their 1941 flue-cured crop by November 1 for an average of $30.14 per 100 pounds compared with 1940 seasonal average of $18.

Hedrick said that "the 1941 flue-cured selling season will be the shortest in the history of the state, with all sales expected to be completed by December 1 or about 14 weeks after the opening of the border belt."

"If farmers continue to receive $29 or $30 per 100 pounds for their leaf, on the basis of the present average, the total 1941 crop will bring $135,000,000 or about $44,000,000 ahead of last season's total returns," Hedrick said. "With seven per cent of their crop yet to be marketed, growers have already been paid $26,000,000 more for their 1941 crop than they received for the entire 1940 season."

ARGUE STATUS OF J.P. COURTS

Entire Magistrate System Before Supreme Court

Raleigh, Nov. 18.—(AP)—Two Rockingham attorneys asserted in oral arguments before the State Supreme Court today that justices of the peace in North Carolina were constitutionally barred from trying criminal cases. One of the two, Thomas L. Parsons, said the initials "JP" had to mean "judgment for the plaintiff."

The argument advanced by Parsons and his associate, George S. Steele, Jr., was that since justices of the peace received fees for conviction the justices were prejudiced against defendants.

"Both the state and federal constitutions guarantee to a defendant the right to be tried before a fair tribunal," said Parsons. "Under the justice of the peace law, as applied in Rockingham county, a magistrate receives $2 for convictions and gets nothing for an acquittal. Therefore a magistrate has a direct interest in finding a defendant guilty."

The case arose in Richmond county after Justice John H. Yates found Eldon Steele guilty of drunkenness. Steele was released under habeas corpus proceedings by Superior Court Judge Luther Hamilton on grounds that the financial benefit disqualified the justice.

George Patton of the Attorney General's office and Albion Dunn of Greenville representing the State Magistrates Association, argue that trial of criminal cases by justices was not unconstitutional.

Discloses Results Of Tobacco Tests

A summary of the results of the 1941 tobacco variety demonstration conducted on the Speight seed farm has just been made available through the cooperation of L. T. Weeks who had the demonstration graded by a disinterested person.

The Speights are producing certified Gold Dollar, Virginia Bright Leaf, Bonanza, and White Stem Orinoco variety, and are also selecting and improving Mammoth Gold, Yellow Mammoth, and "400" under the same conditions as are required for certification.

The results of the 1941 tobacco variety test are as follows: (The value per acre is after fertilizer cost has been deducted.)

- (1) The White Stem Orinoco variety produced 1316 pounds and sold for $490.45 per acre;
- (2) Bonanza produced 1330 pounds and sold for $479.81 per acre;
- (3) Yellow Mammoth produced 1281 pounds and sold for $469.38 per acre;
- (4) Gold Dollar produced 1267 pounds per acre and sold for $462.10;
- (5) "400" produced 1294 pounds per acre and sold for $456.01;
- Mammoth Gold produced 1190 pounds and sold for $436.13 per acre;
- Virginia Bright Leaf produced 1155 pounds and sold for $411.91 per acre.

These tobacco variety demonstrations have been conducted on the Speights' farms since 1938. The soil is a Norfolk Sandy loam and the tobacco was fertilized with 1,000 pounds per acre of a 3-10-6 and side dressed with 100 pounds per acre of sulphate of potash at the first cultivation. The tobacco was planted 24" in the drill.

In order to insure uniform soil and conditions for conducting these tobacco variety demonstrations each variety occupied two rows or 1-20 of an acre plots.

The varieties were planted side by side with a hand planter. They were cultivated alike and pulled and kept separate.

of the missing men was not in the building at the time of the fire. Local Rotarians Informed On Club

J. B. Kittrell, chairman of Rotary Information committee, presented a program of "Truth or Consequences" at the regular dinner meeting of the club last night. Various members of the club were asked questions concerning Rotary and an incorrect answer imposed heavy consequences on club members. In addition to providing information about Rotary, the program was entertaining and enjoyable.

The club appointed a committee to devise ways and means of carrying out a campaign to eradicate rodents in an effort to curb typhus fever, several cases of which are reported in this section.

Rev. J. G. Phillips, visiting Rotarian from Bethel, was a guest at the meeting.
