French Land On Island Of Elba

Allied Forces On Italian Mainland Continue Northward Drive 100 Miles Above Rome; Several Strategic Points Taken; Airmen Destroy 70 Enemy Aircraft

By LYNN HEINZERLING Rome, June 17.—(AP)—French forces landed today on the island of Elba, once the place of exile of Napoleon, and have secured it for the Allies, headquarters announced today.

A special communique said a detachment of the French army (B) led by Maj. Gen. Jean de Lattre de Tassigny had landed on the barren rocky island. It gave no details, but it was unlikely the Germans were prepared for any large-scale organized resistance.

The landing on the strategically valuable island close to occupied Corsica came as Allied forces on the mainland swept on northward against a faltering enemy who showed no sign of making an immediate stand.

The regular communique disclosed that the Allied armies in Italy were continuing their rapid strides, with the Eighth army sweeping on to Foligno, about 27 airline miles north of Terni, whose capture was announced only yesterday.

Spoleto and Trevi, both on Highway 3 on the way to Foligno, fell to the Eighth army.

In the Adriatic sector other units of the Eighth army made contact with partisan forces who already were in possession of Teramo, about 15 miles from the east coast and 30 miles northwest of Pescara.

On the west coast American troops have captured Grosseto, nearly 100 airline miles from Rome and on the mainland opposite Elba. Other forces pushed 12 miles north of Orvieto.

Sixty-five to 75 miles up the peninsula from Grosseto is Pisa, the west anchor of the Pisa-Florence-Terme line at which the Allied armies and the naval base of Livorno and the city of Florence, Grosseto, with its airport facilities, is expected to be of immediate value for air attack on German prepared positions in the northern Apennines whose footholds come down to these cities.

(A German broadcast said that landings on Elba were made at both the southern and northern end of the island, with one just west of Portoferraio, the island's major city, extending towards Corsica and Sardinia, with the highest elevation Mont Capanne, 3,340 feet.

The Mediterranean air force took a heavy toll of enemy aircraft in widespread attacks, destroying 70 enemy aircraft at a cost of 12 heavy bombers and nine other aircraft.

AIRMEN BLAST NAZI TARGETS

Airbases Beyond Battle Zone Pounded Today

By AUSTIN BEALMEAR Supreme Headquarters, Allied Expeditionary Force, June 17.—(AP)—American heavy bombers pounded half a dozen Nazi airbases in a great arc extending nearly half way around the Normandy battle zone today.

Six airfields in southern Normandy, the Paris area and near Boulogne were hit by around 1,000 Fortresses and Liberators as the Germans continued to hurl pitiless planes against Britain in spite of a double-barreled blow by Allied bombers against the French sector from which they are launched.

Clouds again hampered the bombers just as they did yesterday when the heavies slashed at the Pas-De-Calais coast and three airfields in France, but the weather was somewhat improved and fighter-bombers ranged over and beyond the Normandy fighting zone in attacks on motor convoys, bridges, tanks, machine-gun nests and a German airfield on the Cherbourg peninsula.

Six Mustangs and two Thunderbolts failed to return from these late forenoon missions although one pilot landed safely behind Allied lines.

RAF heavy bombers too hit at the Pas-De-Calais coast last night while others hammered at a synthetic oil plant near Duisburg and targets in Berlin.

Aneta, Dutch news agency, said a Netherlands air officer in the RAF reported one of the rocket plane bases was wrecked in an attack at Doullens.

The night blow against Pas-De-Calais came a few hours after U. S. Flying Fortresses and Liberators in the last hours of daylight yesterday pounded these same installations.

Despite day and night thrusts at that portion of the French coast nearest to England—an area battered repeatedly before the invasion—the Germans kept their mysterious robot planes hurtling across the channel last night in a continuation of attacks kept up yesterday and the previous night. Damage and casualties were caused in several places in England.

Although miserable flying weather once more hampered the air support.

Guerrilla Action Flares In France

London, June 17.—(AP)—Guerrilla action has flared up only 150 miles south of the Caen beachhead, Spanish border dispatches said today, while underground reports to official French quarters in London declared battles of French patriots against Vichy militia and German occupation troops were spreading throughout France.

Several hundred guerrillas, riding in trucks, entered Bresuire Wednesday, isolated the Nazi garrison, then spent four hours wrecking five rail lines that cross the town, and dynamiting roads and bridges, the dispatches said. The raid indicated the guerrillas were moving toward the Loire valley in the Saumur and Tours area, where German supply lines are located.

BREAK WITH FINNS NEAR New Blows Taking War Closer To Jap Shores

State Department Orders Minister To Leave Country

By JOHN M. HIGHTOWER Washington, June 17.—(AP)—Finnish Minister Hjalmar J. Procopé was held to his home under police guard today with virtual orders to leave the country as soon as possible because of activities the State Department termed "inimical to the interests of the United States."

The ban was imposed late yesterday on Procopé, Finland's representative in Washington during several critical years—when he was called to the State Department and handed his passport and "requested" to go home as soon as transportation could be arranged.

The unprecedented action, which did not involve an actual diplomatic break with Finland, extended also to three counselors of the Finnish legation and to the families of all four diplomats.

The action, regardless of the incident which caused it, brought American-Finnish relations to their lowest point. It apparently increased the probability of a complete rupture.

Invading Forces On Saipan Island Making Slow But Steady Progress

(By The Associated Press) U. S. Pacific Fleet Headquarters, Pearl Harbor, June 17.—(AP)—Grimly fighting Yank invaders, after street-by-street seizure of a coastal town and capture of its airstrip, punched slowly inland today on Saipan in the Marianas—unlocking bombed Japan's inner defense perimeter.

Official sources also disclosed that a task force had made the war's first attack on the Bonin and Kazan islands, destroying 47 planes, sinking two ships and damaging 10. This completed the dramatic picture of a grand scale air and naval operation which smashed Japan's steel industry and every one of 3,000 miles along a defense line from Prampushiro to Palau. The Bonins were the last link.

The first eyewitness reports from Saipan, where the American forces which landed Wednesday along a two-mile beachhead have won the town of Charan-Kanoa, supported the campaign by actually like Guadalcanal and Tarawa combined.

Richard W. Johnson, representing the combined Allied press, wrote today aboard a flagship at Saipan. "The troops were faced with a savage land battle after surviving the fight for the beachhead and (Continued on Page Four)

Navy Task Force Blasts Matsuwa Island in Kuriles North Of Japan

By NORMAN BELL Aboard a U. S. Task Force Flagship, June 17.—(AP)—Japan's north Pacific headache hurt in a new spot—Matsuwa island in the Kuriles—today from the shells poured into it out of the foggy night by this task force.

The 30 minute bombardment of Tozan point air field and administrative headquarters early June 17 was a remarkable exhibition of navigation and gunnery.

The small but important base was completely concealed from the ships by fog but officers declared modern devices assured accurate shelling of the concentrated target area.

The action, latest move by Vice Admiral Frank Jack Fletcher, commander of the north Pacific to harass the Japanese at the top of the empire, came while they were suffering from terrific body blows delivered by carrier task forces in the Marianas.

VIIIPURI FALL IS IMMINENT

Finns Fighting Desperately To Halt Russian Advance

By EDDY GILMORE Moscow, June 17.—(AP)—The Finns are blowing up all the bridges on two highways leading to Viipuri on the Karelian isthmus, seeking to halt the Red army's entry into the city, front dispatches said today.

But Soviet capture of the city appeared inevitable. The rumble of Russian big guns already was echoing strongly in its streets.

"As the offensive develops the battle assumes a more violent character," said Red Star Correspondent Grigory Ivanov. "All attempts to stop the offensive are failing."

With more than 100 newly-captured populated points behind them, the Russians with strong artillery and bomber support hurled an impressive weight of tanks, tommy-guns and infantry in massive waves across the Karelian isthmus. (A Finnish communique admitted the Finns had abandoned Uusikirkko, about 32 miles southeast of Viipuri after severe fighting in which they previously claimed to have killed 5,000 Russians and knocked out 25 tanks.

(The communique also announced withdrawal from Selivstoe and Kanneljervi, in the same area, and said "the enemy's pressure continued very powerful.")

Stockholm, Sweden, June 17.—(AP)—Compulsory evacuation of the Finnish city of Viipuri toward which the Russians are driving with a great weight of men and armor now is in progress. Helsinki dispatches reported today.

Refugees also are streaming from other Karelian towns under long-standing plans, dispatches said. Finnish reports said a large scale battle was being fought in the vicinity of Sillamäki. For the first time in the Finnish-Russian war the (Continued on page two)

KING VISITS FRENCH FRONT

English Monarch Praises Work of Allied Leaders

London, June 17.—(AP)—King George VI visited the Normandy beachhead yesterday, his trip marking the first time in four centuries that a reigning sovereign of England has set foot on Norman soil to visit his armies fighting there.

The King crossed the channel on the British cruiser Arethusa and landed from an amphibious "duck," Louis Wolff, Reuters correspondent representing the combined Allied press, said in a dispatch from the warship.

When he stepped ashore on a beach just west of Coudeselles, the King heard shells screaming overhead from the cruiser Hawkins firing at a target 10 miles inland. It was the first time in this war the King witnessed actual firing at enemy positions.

Before he returned safely to an English south coast naval port the monarch lunched with Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery at advanced headquarters and Maj. Gen. Keller, commander of the British Empire.

Keller, from Kelowna, B. C., is in command of the Canadian third division. Five British officers and two British non-commissioned officers also were decorated in an investiture held in a grove of trees while Spitfires maintained a protective umbrella over the area.

Recruiting Workers For Farms In Pitt

Judge J. W. H. Roberts, cooperating with the county farm agent's office today reminded of the shortage of labor on farms and urged workers to apply to the county agent or their neighborhood group leaders—white and colored. The county is being organized into two lines of thought, the colored groups with group leaders to help recruit labor for the farms. The colored merchants have been organized into the Merchants' Brigade to assist in recruiting farm help. The work is being carried on under the direction with the Extension Division of State College in cooperation with the War Manpower Commission.

Oil Pool Bill Is Approved By FDR

Washington, June 17.—(AP)—President Roosevelt today approved a bill amending basic naval oil conservation statutes to permit the pooling of government and Standard Oil of California properties in the Elk Hills reserve for operations as a unit.

He said in a formal statement, however, he disliked provisions of the bill which would vest executive powers in the congress for administration of the oil reserves.

The legislation, known as the Elk Hills Reserve law, permits the unit type of contract between the government and private interests which had been declared illegal under former law.

In his statement the President said he approved the bill because the secretary of the navy had assured him there is an immediate need for measures to deal with the problems of drainage and current production for naval oil reserves. He added the measure approved would aid the prosecution of the war to the extent that it accomplishes these objectives.

Invasion Trends Effect Of Invasion Upon Markets

Babson Park, Mass., June 17.—Readers of this column are already asking me what effect the invasion will have on the prices of stocks, bonds, commodities and real estate. Frankly it is too early to tell what will happen. The Allies appear headed for Paris and this city may be captured by the time this gets into print. The early fall of Paris is essential to the Allied psychological phase. It may be the signal for the underground contingent, estimated at 12,000,000, to begin action.

The Allies must also secure, almost immediately, a number of good ports. Undoubtedly these will be Le Havre and Cherbourg and Brest. These three ports have excellent facilities and were used by the Americans in World War I. Hence, our men are familiar with them. After certain beachheads are secured, it will be necessary to spend many weeks in getting supplies and men ashore before the real Berlin drive can be started. Of course, the Germans may be willing to surrender to us with the idea of saving their strength for resisting Allied occupation of the German Fatherland.

Is a Bullish Position Justified? In my talks with experts since the invasion started, there seems to be quite different. Some feel that early Allied successes will bring about a "peace scare." This would be especially bearish on railroads, heavy industry and other war stocks; yet some market analysts are taking the opposite position. They are inclined to be bullish on everything whether the Allies are initially successful or meet with heavy reverses.

It may be that the pattern of this great invasion will follow that set in the Italian Campaign. There it took months to land sufficient supplies and men, but once these were ashore progress has been most rapid. There will necessarily be many trial and error sorties in the invasion plan. The markets took the initial news in their stride and in an optimistic manner. Naturally, the actual invasion was discounted, but there was no way for the stock market to discount whether the initial move would be successful or not. Now that we are over the first hurdle, the market must digest the first news, prepare itself for unforeseen contingencies and await the error moves mentioned above. It may be some weeks before sufficient information is at hand to make any real forecasts.

Supply and Demand Without any qualifications, I can safely impress upon my readers at this time that prices of stocks, bonds, commodities or real estate will depend upon whether there is an excess of sellers or an excess of buyers. Irrespective of theories, or irrespective of precedents, and irrespective of wars, panics, politics, success or failure of the trial and error moves mentioned above, there are more sellers than buyers prices go down.

There is, of course, one other factor in this situation, and that is the position which results when buyers and sellers are about equal. In such a case, neither invasion nor any other factor would materially affect prices. Under this condition, however, the tendency would be for Army and Air WAC uniforms, Captain Stone of Camp Seymour Johnston Field, Goldsboro, a former Broadway producer, is directing the show.

The WAR TODAY AN ANALYSIS OF THE NEWS

By J. M. ROBERTS, JR. (Substituting for Dewitt Mackenzie) The last 48 hours have been a staggering amount of news about the way the world is going. The word "signalment" has been written in the sky on the land and sea and on the diplomatic front.

The Germans have launched the secret aerial weapons which Allied airmen tried for months to knock out. Even President Roosevelt's post-war plans were overshadowed by the wings of the B-29s and developments in France. Sensational reports about General de Gaulle, revealing much of the temper of that man and why we have been reluctant to go too far with him; received only passing attention. (And now, in passing, there is only room to say that de Gaulle continues to swing his military strength as a political club, promising and withdrawing according to the tides of negotiation, he will create one of the most critical military crises the Allies have had to face.)

All of these, and Russia's resumed military activity, carry weights which almost founder attempts at correlation. But off in the far Pacific and down in New Guinea the prologue has been spoken to a two-act play

Advancing U. S. Troops Draw Closer To Complete Entrapment Of German Garrison After Cutting Rail Line; American Casualties Total Date 15,883

By WES GALLAGHER Supreme Headquarters, Allied Expeditionary Force, June 17.—(AP)—American troops driving to pin off the top of Cherbourg peninsula brought the Germans' last escape road under hammering artillery today, and a U. S. fighter pilot reported signs of German flight from the cape and its great port.

One U. S. column beating west of Garentan fought within 10 miles of La Haye Du Puits, Nazis' last main road junction on the shortest neck of the peninsula and forces farther north had Cherbourg's western railway seizing St. Sauveur Le Vicomte. Other Americans had recaptured Montebourg, 14 miles southeast of Cherbourg.

Even as artillery blasted the Germans' last road on their dwindling western strip of the peninsula, American pilot said he saw enemy trucks and staff cars moving south and declared he believed the Germans "want to get out of there, our troops are moving in fast hell."

Cherbourg threatened to become another Sevastopol for the Germans with their escape cut off except sea, as happened in the Crimea. Lt. Gen. Omar N. Bradley, commanding six American divisions fighting in two army corps, 3,328 Americans were killed, 12,600 wounded in the first 11 days of the invasion. These 15,883 casualties included reports up to midnight, he told a press conference in France.

American losses are expected higher than those of the British and Canadians—figures as yet unissued because the U. S. 1st and 29th divisions met the heaviest fighting on landing. Going in the center, these units ran a Nazi division holding mane on a difficult beach. Both the British and Canadians made their initial landings comparatively easy as did other Americans on the flank—although they have been sited in heavy fighting since.

Although the pilot reported indications of possible German evacuation below Cherbourg, Bradley's press conference held here said there was yet no sign Germans were pulling out. He declared the Nazis might fight as long as possible for the port, even if the peninsula were lost perhaps moving their troops of the powerfully-gunned city in boats by night to the channels and then to Brittany.

The Americans alone have evacuated 8,500 Germans so far from the peninsula from Normandy. (Continued on page three)

Today On The Home Front

JAMES MARLOW and GEORGE ZIELKE

Washington, June 17.—(AP)—The worst black market in food now is in meat, mostly beef. The one who gets stuck is you, the consumer. This is what OPA officials say about it: "For the past month—or since almost all meats except beef went off rationing—the black market has been growing. Dealers are taking advantage of the tight beef supply. Here is an example of how it works: A wholesaler orders beef from a slaughterer. The latter, for the record, gives the wholesaler a bill for the meat at the regular price. The wholesaler pays that regular price but then has to pay the slaughterer a cash bonus on the side. This doesn't show in the records. Then the wholesaler repeats the same ruse on the retailer. To catch up, the butcher makes you pay in one of three ways: He sells to you over the ceiling price, with or without your connivance; he gives you short weight; or he charges you for a better grade of meat than he sells you. You ask: 'Well, why don't the wholesaler and retailer refuse to take part in this black market? The answer is: They can't. The slaughterer could refuse to sell any meat to a wholesaler who refused to crooked bill with him. You ask: 'Well, couldn't the slaughterer go to another slaughterer? Answer: Not easily and for profit at all. Because the beef is tight, slaughterers are not new customers. This doesn't mean that all slaughters, wholesalers and retailers, are in this black market. But plenty are. OPA has stepped up its enforcement effort. As to the black market in line, OPA officials say: They have stopped an increasing number of coupons. New counterfeiting rings regularly. RATION GUIDE Foods—Blue AS through V 4) good indefinitely. Meats—Red AD through Book 4, good indefinitely. Sugar—Stamps 30 and 40 indefinitely. Shows Airplane stamps 1 Gasoline—A-10 stamps.

Strength FOR THE DAY
By EARL L. DOUGLAS
ORPHEUS AND THE SIRENS

There are two ways to overcome evil. One is to make a frontal attack against it, and sometimes we find ourselves in situations where such procedure is imperative. But the other way—and in most cases the best way—is to try to overwhelm evil with a flanking movement. The Bible expresses this in the words, "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good."

Greek mythology gives us a beautiful story illustrative of this truth. When Odysseus and his soldiers passed the island of the Sirens, he filled the ears of his sailors with wax and had himself bound securely to the mast lest he and they hear the ravishing songs of the sirens and be lured to destruction. But when later other Greeks, searching for the Golden Fleece, passed the island of the Sirens, he filled the ears of his sailors with wax and had himself bound securely to the mast lest he and they hear the ravishing songs of the sirens and be lured to destruction. But when later other Greeks, searching for the Golden Fleece, passed the island of the Sirens, he filled the ears of his sailors with wax and had himself bound securely to the mast lest he and they hear the ravishing songs of the sirens and be lured to destruction.

This is not only a lesson for youth on the way to overcome temptation, but it is the setting forth of a great moral principle which may profitably be employed by all of us, regardless of age. If we can just allow ourselves to be overwhelmed by the realization that goodness is so much more desirable than evil and that goodness alone can make us happy, we shall come to love the singing of Orpheus above any Siren songs.

AMERICA IN WARTIME
By JACK STINNETT

Washington—Any one who emerges from the cloisters of wartime Washington long enough to get acquainted with the rest of the country can't help but be impressed by a number of things. The principal one, I think, is that from border to border and ocean to ocean, the United States is as thoroughly "war conscious" as any country could be. When the invasion finally came, I was in the middle west. There and elsewhere, it caused hardly more than a ripple. Talk, yes, much of it. From a score of cities there were reports of churches filled for fervent prayers. Newspapers, with reports of the invasion, disappeared from the stands within minutes after they were stacked. Radios still were tuned when the milkmen came around.

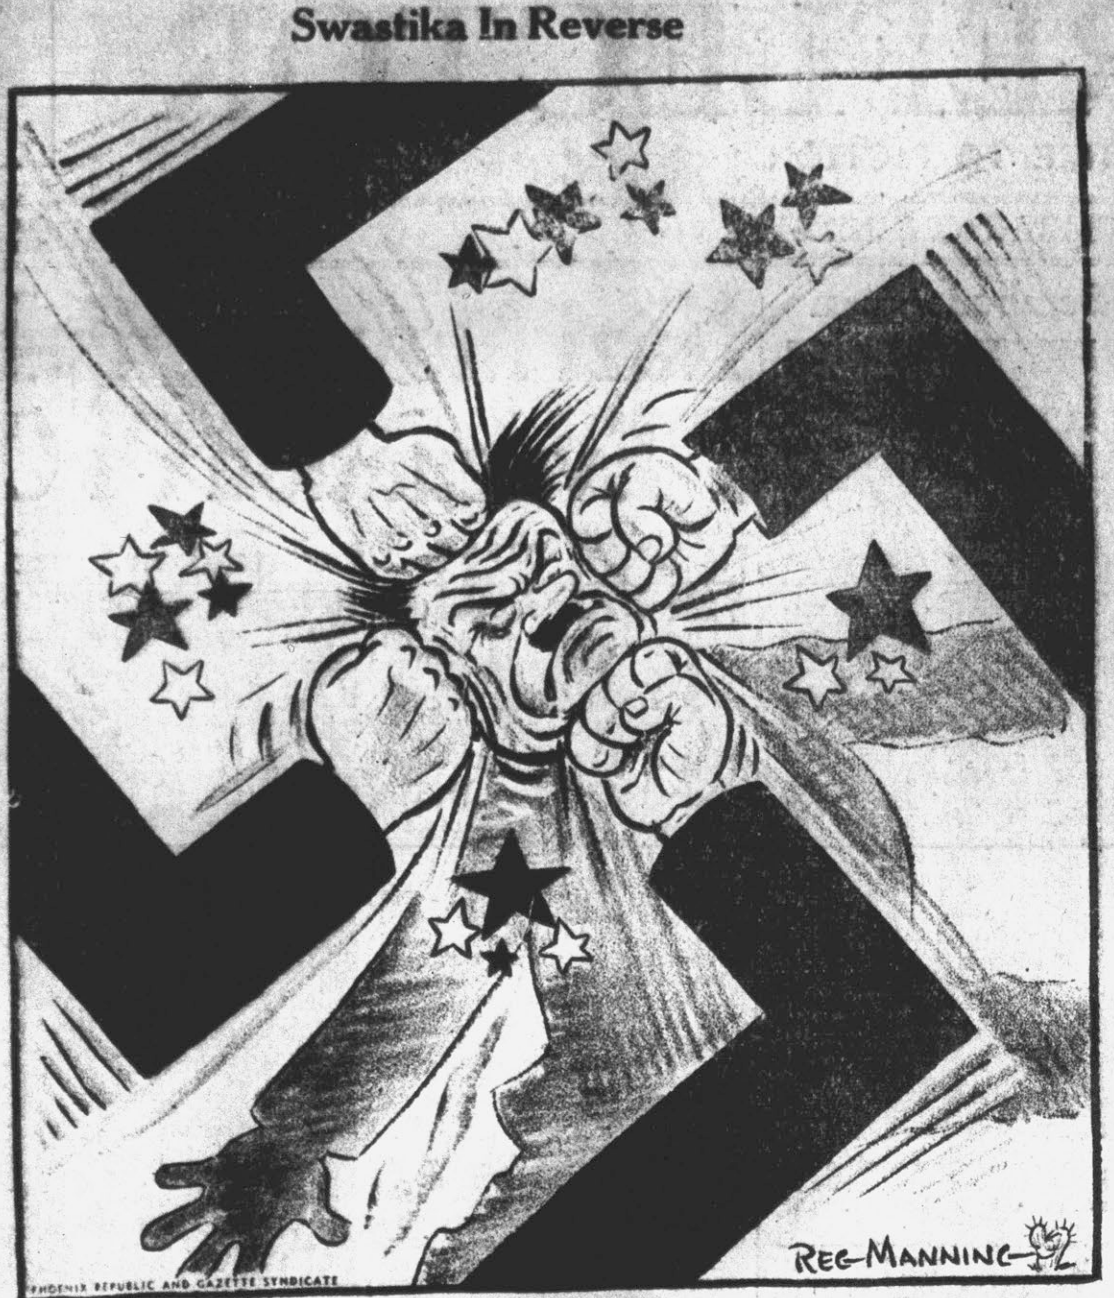

But to a people who have given millions of their sons and daughters and billions of their dollars to the job in hand, it was just one more important phase, albeit a vital one, of that job. President Roosevelt, Secretary of War Stimson, Prime Minister Churchill, and others, could have saved their words in warning the people about being overconfident. I have talked to scores of persons. A confidence in our ultimate victory there certainly is, but I found no illusions about the difficulties ahead.

The question, "When do you think it will end?" has almost disappeared from American speech. The phrase, "Let's get on with it" is much more common these days.

In some industrial areas, there are, of course, outbreaks of the "peace jitters." I will take that up later, but it is only a phase of the overall picture and in those sections where it is prevalent perhaps a very justifiable one.

In every city I visited, from Chicago to San Francisco and back through the middle west and south to Washington men and women in uniform were as much in evidence as they have been at any time since the draft started. But more and more now, you meet men and women whose sons and daughters are on the fighting fronts.

There was a taxi driver in Denver who had two boys in Italy and a daughter in the WACS; an advertising man in Omaha, with a son on each ocean; a banker in San Francisco with a son in the Navy and a daughter with the Army Nursing Corps. Such people don't think in terms of over-optimism and if some stop to worry about what the peace will bring, they are doing it without slackening off on their war-time jobs.

Chapter 21

The count stopped. He peered up the trail and down the trail, and to both sides. Then he saw a man in a white shirt and dark trousers, a trench over his head. He looked uneasy but went on. As soon as he was out of sight Cora left her place and hurried down the path toward home. She burst out of the woods behind the cottage like a frightened bird, startling Pete who was sitting where she had left him. He dropped his pipe. "What is the matter with you?" he demanded, jumping up. "Pete! Thank heaven! I thought I'd never see home again!" Cora gasped. "The most terrible thing! There's something or somebody lurking in a cave. I was never so frightened in my life! I got lost—and the count!" "Here! Here!" Pete grabbed her by the shoulders and shook her roughly. "Get yourself together. And stop hiccoughing!" "I can't," she told him. "Hold your breath," he advised. He took the frayed bouquet and threw it in the brook. Then he removed her glasses, straightened them as best he could and put them back on her nose. "Pin up your hair," he commanded. Then, between hiccoughs, she managed to give a fairly lucid account of what had happened. "I do sound sort of queer," he admitted, when she had finished. "But likely it's just a camper up there."

"But the count? What was he doing up that way carrying a package?" "Damned if I know. But look. I know where that cave is. I'll go and take a look at it tomorrow. You go change your clothes," he told her. "It's almost lunch time." Then as she started towards the house, he said, "Say, maybe you'd better not mention anything about this in front of the count." "Don't worry," Cora said. "I won't. There's something funny going on around here, and if you want to know what I think, I think he's mixed up in it." "Now don't go jumping to conclusions," Pete laughed. "Fob!" said Cora and went in the house. She hurried to her room. How was she to sit at the same table with the count and act as though nothing had happened was more than she knew. But it had to be done if she wanted to keep him from suspecting that she had seen him on the mountain that morning. Everything, she thought, has been in an uproar since he came into our lives. I wish he'd go back where he came from—wherever that is. She wondered if even Zeldia knew where he came from. Why, she thought, maybe he isn't a count at all! She paused in the act of leaving the room, her hand on the doorknob. Then suddenly she hurried out and crossed the hall to the count's bedroom. She listened at the door for a minute, and then went in. Almost immediately she came back out with something wrapped in her handkerchief. She sat on her own room and locked the door.

...ugged. "I have to go and I don't want her here alone with that gangster. He's apt to talk her into running off and getting married." "You're getting batty on the subject of the count," Pete told her. "Well, all right. If it'll make you happy I'll trade them around like a shadow. If Teddy isn't a crook you'll make him one. You'll drive him to crime." "I don't care where I drive him—as long as it isn't in Zeldia's direction," Cora said, and she flounced off. A few minutes later she came roaring out of the garage in Zeldia's car. Zeldia heard it and ran down the steps to the drive. "Hey, where you going?" she called. "To Antenville," Cora screamed back, without stopping. "Let's all go. Hey, Pete—Teddy—" Zeldia called. But Cora pretended not to hear, and the car bounced away and disappeared down the mountain. Pete appeared in answer to her call. "What's up?" "That Cora!" Zeldia said with exasperation. "Honestly she makes me furious sometimes. Now she's gone off alone—sneaking, that's in it—and simply because she doesn't like Teddy." "Well, angel," Pete started hesitantly as he re-lit his pipe, "now that you've brought the subject up—I—that is—you won't be too hasty with this Teddy business, will you? After all we don't know much about the guy. Sometimes it's—" "For heavens sake, you too. I didn't think you had a suspicious mind. Don't let Cora fill you with silly notions. I know all about Teddy. He's told me everything." She wrinkled her nose at Pete. "After all every one isn't as slow as you, you know." "What do you mean?" Pete asked quickly. "Well, Cora told me you were in love with someone. What's the matter? Won't she have you?" "I've never asked her," Pete said quietly. "Why, you old slow poke, you! Who is she? Do I know her?" "Pete," Zeldia coaxed. She put her arm around him. "We never used to have secrets from each other." Pete tipped her head back and kissed her on the nose. "What you don't know won't bother you," he said. Zeldia was annoyed. "Very well," she said, and jerked away and called Pete to the telephone. When Pete got inside she sidled up to him and whispered, "That count was watchin' you and Miss Zeldia from behind the curtains." "Curiosity killed the cat," Zeldia said. "Pete smiled as he lifted the receiver. "Too bad it don't work that way on the likes of him," mumbled Eglantine as she went back to the kitchen. The next morning Pete went up the mountain. He had been gone quite a while before Cora missed him. "I hope," she told herself, "that he don't go to look at that mysterious-occupied cave all alone." "That was exactly what he had done, however. He appeared again just before lunch. Cora had been watching for him and when she saw him coming she went to meet him. He shook his head at her chidingly. "There isn't a thing up there," he said. "Not even a burnt match." "But, Pete, there was someone there yesterday." "So what? Some young fellow camping, just as I told you. You saw him coming up things in your mind." "Well, why did he act so furtive? Why didn't he say something?" "For that matter, why didn't you say something? You probably started him as much as he started you." Cora was silenced, but unconvinced. To Be Continued

Will Teach Canning Free During Summer

Twenty-two organizations were represented at a meeting in the interest of the summer program in food production at the City Hall yesterday. Mayor Bruce Sugg presided and praised the home demonstration office plan of encouraging canning and preserving of food during the summer. Miss Verona Lee Joyner, home demonstration agent, and Mrs. Ethel Reid Waters, emergency urban war food preservation assistant, outlined the canning program.

The program is intended to stimulate interest among householders and others in producing more food and preserving more of it as a wartime measure. Mrs. Waters, specially trained and experienced in home demonstration work, will advise with householders about canning. The state, county and city are providing funds and equipment for using to preserve food. Next week will be "Invasion Week on the Home Front." Preserved food will be displayed in store windows. During the week there will be garden demonstrations, a pressure cooker clinic and food demonstrations.
