GIVE DEMONSTRATION ON 'COOL FOODS FOR HOT DAYS'

A demonstration on "Cool Foods for Hot Days" was given by Mrs. Ethel Reed Watters, emergency Urban War Food Preservation assistant, in the auditorium of the Agricultural building last night.

How to keep yourself and your family as cool and comfortable as possible in the summer time and yet maintain maximum health through nourishing meals was the theme of the demonstration.

A simple meal consisting of foods from the basic seven groups, which could be easily and quickly prepared and which included foods appropriate for warm weather, was chosen for the demonstration. The menu consisted of a main dish, a salad and a dessert.

The discussion included choice of food, selection of equipment, and methods of preparation. How to regulate perspiration, how to regulate sleep, and general health habits in warm weather, how to keep yourself and the house cool, and other factors were discussed.

Bulletins giving recent and reliable information on the above questions were distributed, together with a group of specially selected recipes.

Mrs. Watters was ably assisted in giving the demonstration by Miss Verona Lee Joyner, home demonstration agent.

Information On Use Of The Mails

During these times when there is such a tremendous volume of mail handled throughout the United States it is imperative that the Post Office authorities receive close cooperation from the public if we are to be successful in the delivery and general handling of the mails. Post Offices all over the United States are confronted with the problem of securing additional help to meet the emergency. It takes quite a bit of time to train men in the responsibility of handling mail in the office as well as learning the city route deliveries. As I stated above it can be done in a satisfactory manner.

1. Due to the new rates in postage quite a few people seem to be confused as to the correct amount of postage required on both domestic and foreign airmail. Domestic airmail is that which is addressed anywhere in the United States proper and requires postage at the rate of eight cents per ounce or fraction thereof. Foreign airmail referred to here is that airmail addressed to recipients with APO addresses in the following cities, New York, N. Y.; San Francisco, Cal.; Seattle, Wash.; New Orleans, La.; Miami, Fla.; Presque Isle, Me.; and Minneapolis, Minn. Airmail addressed to any of these places requires postage at the rate of six cents per half ounce or fraction thereof. Note the difference here, domestic airmail eight cents per ounce and foreign airmail six cents per half ounce. Frequently airmail is returned to the sender for insufficient postage. If proper care is exercised by the sender this can be avoided and will result in a savings of time for the post office as well as better service for our patrons.

2. City and rural carriers and parcel post deliverymen are not required to have money on hand to make change effecting the delivery of COD parcels. The Post Office Department does not expect them to go out and get change for a patron in order to deliver a COD due to the time involved. If you have a COD parcel in transit to you try to arrange to have the proper amount of change on hand when the parcel arrives. If the carrier happens to have change from a previous sale he will be glad to accommodate you to that extent, however, he might not be able to do so. All carriers work on a schedule and if they are unduly delayed on their routes they cannot return to the post office in time for their collected mail to be dispatched promptly.

3. This last item has been presented before but it is of paramount importance, therefore my parting word today is before mailing any piece of mail be sure that it bears your complete return address as well as the complete address of the party it is addressed to. By complete address we mean the name of the addressee or sender, the street number and name, and the name of the city involved.

More Buzz Bombs Hit London Today

London, July 12—(AP)—A scattering of flying bombs banged in to southern England and the London area today as it was disclosed that some of the projectiles have been dropping silently in long glides that make them more difficult to escape.

After London had experienced its second successive raid-free night a few of the bombs buzzed over in the early daylight hours but this flurry was followed by another quiet spell.

One of the bombs which smashed a house and killed an occupant this morning came in in a long, slow and silent glide. Witnesses described it as "almost like a feather." Ordinarily the robots roar over and drop in a steep dive as soon as the engine stops but in this case the motive power apparently stopped some distance from the impact point.

It was announced officially that Australia house, one of London's familiar buildings, was damaged by recent hits.

Australia house is headquarters of the Australian government in London. The massive building still is in use and work proceeded today in many windowless and doorless offices. Several passersby in the street were killed.

Another bomb damaged the Brazilian consulate.

Peaches were first introduced into England from Persia in 1562.

OPINIONS BY ATTY GENERAL

Public Utilities Cannot Be Sold Without Vote Of People

Raleigh, July 12.—(AP)—A municipality has no right under the general law to restrict the number of taxicabs which may be operated within the corporate limits of the municipality, if the operators are in a position to comply with the other provisions of the general law regulating taxicabs, Attorney General Harry McMillan ruled today in a digest of opinions.

In other cases relating to municipalities, he ruled: A municipality has no authority to sell a municipally owned public utility without the approval of a majority of the qualified voters of the municipality.

When a customer makes a deposit with the water department of a municipality and receives a receipt therefor, the receipt, in the absence of a local statute or special agreement, draws interest at the rate of six per cent per annum. There is no state privilege tax upon the business of selling second-hand clothes except the regular sales tax. Counties may not collect a privilege tax for engaging in such business, but municipalities may levy and collect such tax.

Cities and counties are authorized to levy a capitation or poll tax of not more than one dollar on every male inhabitant of the city or town who is over 21 and under 50 years of age. Taxes so levied and collected may be used for any purpose permitted by law.

Other rulings: When a juvenile court acquires jurisdiction of a juvenile and awards the custody of said juvenile to a person, the court's jurisdiction is not exhausted, but it may change its order and award the custody of the child to some other person.

The quarantine and isolation laws relating to venereal diseases are applicable to minors. However, if a minor under 16 is to be prosecuted criminally for a violation of such laws, the juvenile court has exclusive jurisdiction.

Those military officers authorized by the 1943 session laws to take acknowledgements of instruments permitted or required to be registered, may also take affidavits for the verification of pleadings in divorce and other civil actions.

The board of trustees of a city school is not liable for, nor does it have authority to pay, medical and other expenses incurred by a student because of injuries received in a practice athletic contest. In the absence of a local act to the contrary, a county should furnish janitor service for the upkeep of the various offices within the courthouse.

Missouri cottontail rabbits rear 3.8 litters annually, with an average of 4.4 animals in each.

Strength FOR THE DAY

By EARL L. DOUGLAS

RIGHT SEQUENCE NECESSARY

Taking the human race as a whole, there is probably nothing more ardently sought after than money.

It is interesting, therefore, to note the attitude and teachings of Jesus regarding money. Almost half His parables dealt in some way with the attitude a man should maintain toward possessions. He frankly implored on more than one occasion that more people are kept out of heaven by money or the desire for money than by any other factor.

In the parable of the rich householder, He drew a picture of avarice leading to self-indulgence and sensuality. In His encounter with the rich young ruler, He pointed out how fatal it is for one to lean upon wealth and to believe that it carries with it any real security. In the story of Zacchaeus, the extortioner, we have the delightful account of the conversion of a dishonest and cruel chap who saw the evil of his ways and did something decisive about it.

Our Lord never said that money is evil, but He did say that the love of money is spiritually ruinous. His formula of correction is very simple. We are to put first the things which belong first, namely, the kingdom of God and His righteousness; and having done this, we can be sure that all worldly matters will find their appropriate and useful places in the manifold scheme of human living.

AMERICA IN WARTIME

By JACK STINNETT

Washington—Chalk up the end of an era. On July 1, the Works Projects Administration (WPA) and the Public Works Administration (PWA) passed from the American scene.

In the last weeks, these two once mighty federal agencies presented almost a pitiful appearance. WPA had 25 persons on its staff, and PWA ten. They were working only on records—the amazing record of the two agencies designed to lift us out of the depression and give work to millions who were in or near the breadlines of 1932 and '33.

Those records certainly will deserve a place in the nation's history, for coupled with the Congressional Record and the speeches pro and con made from platforms and microphones, they represent a picture of one of the most controversial efforts of the New Deal.

On the one hand there was the greatest program ever put forth by any nation to make work for its millions of hungry jobless. On the other were all the charges of "boondoggling," graft, politics and waste—charges which anti-New Dealers leveled against that program. Perhaps those records some day will provide the answer to the question of whether the New Deal or its opponents were right.

It's more likely that no one will ever take the trouble to dig through and digest them—at least not until another depression rolls around and the past has to be unearthed to provide new New Dealers with the experience of their predecessors.

In the midst of global war, it would be pretty hard to stir up an argument over whether the nation-wide art projects, the WPA theater, the raking of leaves and the moving of dirt were good or bad for the national economy and the public pocketbook.

Although billions are still going out for the war effort the economy-minded members of Congress are getting a little satisfaction out of the folding of WPA and PWA. The former is turning back to the Treasury around $130,000,000 in unexpended funds and the latter about ten millions.

On paper, at least, PWA also has made a little profit on its bonds. In the process of financing works projects, PWA bought approximately $25,000,000 of county and municipal bonds that neither bankers nor individuals in those days wanted any part of. PWA now has, through RFC, disposed of more than 600,000 of them to those same bankers and individuals.

Like the millions who once were on WPA rolls and employed by PWA, the 35 left in the organization didn't find themselves put of work when it was all over. The day their agencies folded, they started receiving their pay checks from Maj. Gen. Philip Fleming's Federal Works Administration.

over control.

The wire operator was handed the single line which Wormley had written. Instantly he rang a bell 12 times. In AP bureaus and newspaper offices everywhere identical bells were ringing 12 times, a signal to all listening that a "flash" was coming. Then the "flash" moved as the operator beat it out on his wire's keyboard.

Meanwhile Fleger was dictating—he had no time to write a line the story itself to Wormley who was beating out a line at a time, ripping the paper out of his typewriter, flinging it to the editors, inserting another sheet, taking another line from Fleger.

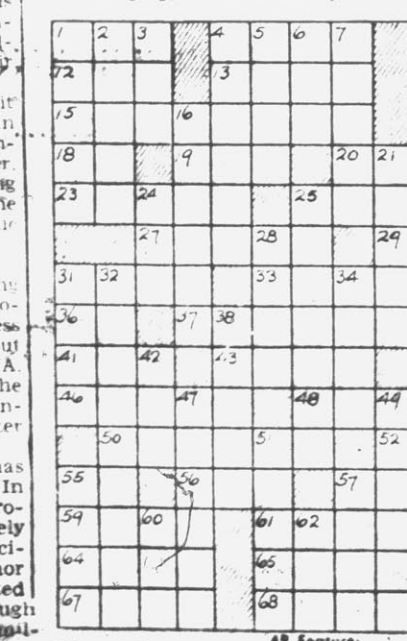

Fleger was gasping for breath from the run to the phone and the heat of the booth. Sweat soaked through the knees of his pants and the shoulders of his coat. Wormley said later Fleger sounded as if he had run six miles.
Fleger kept pumping it in, one of the hardest of all newspaper tasks, dictating, as fast as Wormley could take it down, a running story, packed with color and so-called perfect the editors hardly needed to change a word.

Hitler's loss in man-power has far exceeded his supply. He is forced to supplement his weakened ranks with mere boys and men of fifty. As for materiel, the foreign administration report tells us that Russia alone has forced the Germans to consume finished supplies almost equal to their total production for the three years of the war. Thus the Fuehrer is racing madly about in a closed circle of disaster.

If, as stories from Headquarters have indicated, the Normandy operation has not met quite as quickly as had been hoped, it probably has been because of the weather. Luck has been against the Allies in that respect, and a long siege of bad weather not only prevented full exploitation of Allied air control, but slowed up also the seaborne shipment of equipment and supplies.

But not once have the Allies lost the initiative in Normandy.

NATIONALS WIN ALL STAR GAME

Southworth's Boys Break Up American Streak

By JACK HAND
Pittsburgh, July 12 (AP)—The balloon pitch and the nothing ball got credit for stopping the American league's all-star victory march today as Billy Southworth's Nationals celebrated their fourth win in the 12-year history of the dream game.

While the boys from Ford Frick's circuit were rapping five assorted hurlers from Joe McCarthy's stockpile for 12 hits, effective pitching by Ken Raffensberger of the Phils Rip Sewell of the Pirates and Jim Tobin of the Braves insured last night's 7-1 decision, the most lopsided score in the series.

Most of the 29,588 customers who helped boost the service bat and ball fund by $106,275 were pleased with the sudden halt of the Americans' 3-year win streak as the series came around to Forbes field for the first time.

Southworth's winners adopted an old American custom in pounding Tex Hughson of the Red Sox for four runs in a big fifth inning. Hughson had relieved Hank Borowy of the Yanks after he finished his three-inning stint with a 1-0 lead but Tex yielded five hits before Joe McCarthy weaved in Bob Munchief of the Browns.

With Borowy in control of the situation, the junior circuit stepped out in front in the second inning after threatening on two hits off starter Bucky Walters of the Reds in the first. Ken Keltner of the Indians opened the second with a single to left, moved around on infield outs by Bobby Doerr of the Red Sox and Rollie Hemsley of the Yanks and scored when Borowy beat out a hopper to Bobby Doerr for a scratch hit.

The roof caved in on Hughson in the fifth after the Nationals had gone scoreless for four frames. Connie Ryan of the Braves opened with a single to center, stole second and romped home when Bill Nicholson of the Cubs delivered a pinch-double into right field and completely altered the complexion of the game.

Aurie Galan of the Dodgers drove a hard smash through the box that Vern Stephens of the Browns got a glove on but couldn't hold. The ball rolled into short center for a single and Nicholson roared in to put the Nationals out in front. A walk to Phil Cavarretta of the Cubs who enjoyed a perfect night with a triple and single and three passes.

an error by George McQuinn of the Browns loaded the bases. Walker Cooper of the Cards lined a single to left, scoring Galan but Cavarretta was cut down at the plate on a beautiful play by Bob Johnson of the Red Sox. In the first inning, Stan Spence of the Senators had nabbed Phil at the plate with a new loss from right.

Dixie Walker of the Dodgers rifled a single down the right field line chasing home Stan Musial of the Cards and McCarthy yanked Hughson for Muncie for the retired side and got by without serious trouble until fired for a pinch-hitter in the seventh.

Lefty Hal Neuman of the Tigers gave up the last three National runs, two in the seventh when Whitely Kuroski of the Cards doubled to the scoreboard and left following one-beggers by Cavarretta and Cooper.

Walters yielded five blows to the Americans in the first three frames but they were stopped completely by Raffensberger, Sewell and Tobin. The only hit in the last six innings was Spence's single to right in the fifth off the Phils southpaw.

Sewell's balloon pitch baffled the Americans who let it float past without an offer except in the case of McQuinn who looked at one and bunted the next but was thrown out at first. Tobin's nothing ball returned the side in order in the ninth.

Chapter 2

The passengers were coming out of the plane now. Men in uniform, their eager eyes seeking familiar faces among the waiting crowd, suddenly finding them, then hurrying forward to take wife, mother or sweetheart into their arms. As she watched them, Louise felt a sudden surge of pity for Angel whose Jimmie would never come home to her. It must have been hard for her riding on that plane with home-coming service men. It must have brought back a flood of memories and made her own loss all the more poignant.

A fat middle-aged man dressed in civilian clothes stood in the door of the plane now. He was smiling a little diffidently and shaking hands with himself, his pudgy arms raised high above his bald head. "A not-so-hopeful politician," thought Louise, "giving his imaginary constituents the glad hand."

She smiled as she watched the two photographers snap the man's picture and begin to fold up their cameras. It was clear that they weren't particularly sold on their subject. Louise could almost hear the tall red-headed one say, "Nuts to you, old boy. You haven't a chance." She could tell by the way his lips moved and the unidentical look on his face that he was saying something like that—or worse. He was grinning, and she found herself grinning with him.

He saw her, waved a hand, and his lips formed the words: "Hi there, Beautiful!" It was unmistakable. Louise frowned and looked back at the plane, but her suppressed smile unleashed a provocative one in her eyes and made her dimples all the more obvious. The politician had stepped out of the doorway now and was waddling his way toward the gate. Evidently he was the last passenger. Where was Angel? Hadn't she come?

Louise glanced at her mother, and saw that the anxiety in her eyes had given way to sharp disappointment. "It's all right, Mother," said Louise, catching Martha's hand and holding it tight. "She didn't come—but that doesn't mean anything. It just means she couldn't get a seat. Priorities, you know. She'll come on the next plane."

The tears had begun to well up in Martha's eyes. "It might mean she's not coming at all. She thinks we don't want her—poor Angel. We—we didn't answer—"

"Of course we didn't answer her letter. How could we? It only came this morning. Don't worry, darling. She knows we want her. She'll be here."

Martha started to say something, but was interrupted by a whoop of joy from a young airport attendant who was standing nearby. "Lookit!" he was saying. "Oh boy! Lookit what's gettin' off dat plane. It's something outa dis world!"

Louise and Martha turned quickly, their eyes following the boys' pointing finger. Standing on the ground near the plane was a tall, thin woman in a nurse's uniform. She was holding a baby in her arms. Angel's baby? But Angel had said nothing about bringing a nurse. In the door of the plane, her slim figure silhouetted against the silver background, stood a young woman dressed in black. Her accessories were black too, and the effect was that dramatic simplicity which designers strive for and so rarely achieve. But it was the girl who dominated the costume—and the scene.

Her hair was pure gold—and it fell in soft waves to her shoulders. Her eyes, the color of blue cornflowers, seemed to accentuate the pallor of her face, giving it an ethereal quality. Her full lips were parted in a smile that was at once wistful and alluring. Aware of her audience, as if for the first time, she lifted her chin a little and almost perceptibly straightened her slim shoulders. Without knowing her or anything about her problems, the people watching her were strangely impressed. Here, it was obvious, was a brave little woman determined to face the world calmly after a trying emotional experience of some kind. And, apparently, she was somebody important.

The photographers began hastily unloading their cameras, setting them up again. They hadn't expected this. But they knew a photogenic windfall when they saw one, and they could practically smell a good story. Evidently the young woman expected to be photographed. She was posing.

Who the hell is she anyhow? asked one of the men as he focused his camera on the vision. "Strikes me as a little too perfect to be real." The other man grinned and aimed his camera. "Even if she's phoney, she's got what it takes for a pin-up."

Louise and Martha, standing motionless on the ramp, were silent for what seemed like a long time. Then, "It's Angel," said Martha, the tears welling up in her eyes. "She looks so pale and so sad—poor Angel. But she's lovelier than ever. Her pictures will be in all the newspapers tomorrow."

"Yes, she's gorgeous," said Louise. And refrained from adding, "But she's making an entrance as usual. Poor Mother!"

At that moment Angel turned and looked toward the ramp, saw her mother and sister. "Darlings!" she cried, lifting her hand to wave at them.

Louise returned the wave with a grave salute, and Martha blew a kiss with trembling fingers. But Angel did not see them. She had turned new and was facing the cameras.

Chapter 3
Louise hadn't expected they'd go home in a taxicab. This she felt was a luxury they couldn't afford. Especially after Angel had confided, tearfully, that the plane trip had cleaned her out for the time being, and had borrowed all of Martha's cash for tips. Louise had only five dollars in her purse—and it was a long way from La Guardia Field to Washington Avenue, Brooklyn. Certainly it would be less embarrassing to go home by subway and bus than to be thrown out of a cab because they didn't have money enough for the fare.

But the red-headed cameraman—presumptuous creature—who had stood at attention while Martha and Louise greeted Angel, had taken it upon himself to hail a cab for them. Miss Larkin, the nurse, with Baby Jeanne asleep in her arms, had climbed in immediately. There had been nothing for the others to do but follow.

Then, as if to top off a situation already embarrassing enough, the cameraman climbed into the cab too, dragging his paraphernalia in after him. He unfolded the seat next to Louise and sat down, as snug as you please.

So now here they were, ambling along in a taxicab that was practically bursting at the seams and groaning aloud under the combined weight of luggage and people. Martha, Angel, and Miss Larkin with the baby were crowded together on the big seat. Louise sat on one of the small folding seats, unable to move for the luggage, with the imperturbable cameraman on the other.

He was not only fresh, he was crude, Louise decided. He was pretending to be helpful, and all the time he was amused at their plight. Oh, she could tell by that gleam in his eye and that insolent grin on his face that he wasn't laughing at the cab or the driver. And when he winked at her—it was unmistakable—that wink—it was almost as if he knew they didn't have money enough for the fare. He had probably ordered the cab to embarrass them. She wouldn't put it past him.

She had turned and stolen a glance at the others. Martha and Angel appeared to be very much engaged with the terrain surrounding the airport, although there was nothing to see—less than nothing. But Miss Larkin, who had shrunk back into her corner of the cab, was watching the little byplay between the cameraman and the driver with unconcealed disdain. The cameraman was staring at Louise by this time, and he was grinning.

"Of all the consummate nerve!" she had stormed inwardly. "Who does he think he is, anyhow?" As if in answer to her unspoken question, he had announced, "I'm Dick Stanley—Global Features." His cavalier manner indicated that this explained everything, that no apologies were necessary.

Then had followed another disturbing scene, when the cab driver asked for the address. He had groaned aloud when Louise said Brooklyn, giving them a perfectly good excuse to get out of the cab and go home by bus. It was a situation that fairly cried out for righteous indignation on their part. A chance to save face, get rid of the persistent cameraman, and arrive home with money to spare.

But no, Dick Stanley had had to come out with a belittling "Step on it, sourpuss! I'm warning you!" So the driver, mumbling something about war and women and gas shortages, had turned on the motor and started the car.

"You can drop me out at the bridge, if you don't mind," said the cameraman when they were on their way.

Louise looked at him coldly, but Martha rose to the occasion with a feeble attempt to smooth things over. "Of course, Mr. Stanley. But are you sure we can't drop you off at your—er—your office? That is, if it isn't too far out of the way," she amended hastily, realizing that her magnanimity was getting a little out of bounds.

"No—thanks a lot. I'll take the subway in. It's quicker. I just wanted to talk to your daughter here for a few minutes."

He turned to Angel, who was sitting quite still, her hands folded in her lap. Her eyes were pensive, as if her thoughts were far, far away.

"She's thinking about Jimmie," Louise decided, and a sudden wave of pity swept over her. "She must have missed him a lot. She doesn't want to talk. She doesn't want newspapermen coming around taking pictures of her, asking her questions. If this Dick Stanley starts it, I'll—"

But Dick Stanley didn't follow the usual procedure of a reporter getting a story. After all, he was a cameraman, not a reporter.

"Who are you anyhow?" he asked simply. "You're a celebrity, of course—arriving by plane in these days. I should know—but I've been racking my brain and for the life of me I can't place you."

"No," said Angel, in a voice so low that it could scarcely be heard above the noise of the cab. "I'm not anyone you would know. I'm not a celebrity. My husband was. I'm Angel Saunders—Jimmie Saunders' wife."

Louise caught her breath. Was Angel calling Jimmie a celebrity? You didn't call men who gave their lives for their country celebrities. It was too trivial a word.

Dick Stanley studied Angel for a moment; then he said, "I'm sorry. I can't tell you how sorry I am. I shouldn't have asked you like that. But—well, I don't look on Jimmie Saunders as a celebrity. He was a hero. There's a hell of a lot of difference."

"Exactly," said Angel, with a faint smile that made her eyes seem the more tragic. "But so few people know the difference. Yes, Jimmie was a hero. He was tops."

Labor Shortage Hits Wheat Crop

Kansas City, July 12—(AP)—More than 22,000,000 bushels of newly harvested wheat are piled on the ground in Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas because of insufficient labor to get it to storage facilities. Midwestern grain men were told today, and an army officer told them prospects for use of prisoners of war were slim. The 200 grain dealers, elevator operators and railroad executives assembled at the suggestion of Senator Clyde Reed, (R-Kans.), in an effort to find a solution to the problem that has caused wheat shipments to be put under a permit system at most winter wheat markets.

Lt. Col. Loyd H. Shafer, commanding officer of the prisoner of war camp at Fort Riley, Kas., in answer to a question from Senator Reed said: "So far as we know there is not prison labor available."

Plane Crash

Washington, N. C., July 12—(AP)—A military airplane, believed to have been from Goldsboro, crashed near the Pungo post office today and the pilot was burned to death. The plane was one of a formation of three.

Army Nurses Get Official Ranks

Washington, July 12—(AP)—President Roosevelt today ordered all army nurses commissioned as actual army officers in lieu of the relative rank they now hold. The effect of the executive order will give nurses, female dietitians and physical therapy personnel of the army medical department the full authority of their officer rank. Heretofore nurses have been commissioned by relative rank, somewhat limiting their authority.

Tells Story Of Nazi Atrocities

Temple Tex., July 12—(AP)—During the invasion of France Allied paratroopers were "hung in trees with their heads cut off" by the Germans, a wounded glider infantry scout declares. Pvt. Kenneth P. Knight, who was flown from the front to McClosky General hospital here, said in an interview yesterday that "Germans hung them up there with their feet in the air, the stumps of their necks toward the ground, almost at eye level. One look was enough." "I saw another paratrooper with his throat cut," the former professional baseball player from Kansas City, Kans., continued.

French Patriots And Nazis Battle

Port Bou, Spain, July 12—(AP)—Germans and French patriot forces are battling in the Perigord region of southern France, with the Germans attempting to reestablish their communications through the city of Perigueux, border advice said today. German regular army and SS formations are reported to be driving through the woods from the west, south and southeast of Perigueux along a line based roughly at Chalais, Montpon, Bergerac and Sarlat.

Arrive in Britain. Supreme Headquarters, Allied Expeditionary Force, July 12—(AP)—Secretary of War Stimson arrived in Britain today for an inspection of the European theater of operations. Stimson came to Britain from Italy. He was accompanied by Executive Assistant Harvey H. Bundy, Major Gen. Thomas Kirk, surgeon-general of the United States army, and Maj. Gen. Alexander D. Surles, army public relations director.
