from fixed income securities is still attractive. Thus, it is okay to keep normally diversified between bonds, preferred and common stocks. Yet we all know that in individual instances certain of these securities will rise substantially and others will decline regardless of market trends.

Seek Special Situations

From a tax standpoint, many investors would be better off by avoiding income securities in favor of capital appreciation bonds and stocks. A portion of every portfolio should be set aside for investment in "special situations." Perhaps the most outstanding of these have been in reorganization railroad bonds. However, every other industry such as merchandizing, financing, chemicals, paper, bus transportation, oil, electrical and so on, has shown in specific instances large capital gains.

The investor should be continually on the watch for outstanding attractive situations which will be better than average market performers. Certain preferreds with large dividend arrears are well set for gains. In every group, little known companies are contracted with the best. Companies with no outstanding debt, whose capitalization consists solely of a relatively small number of common shares, are particularly good. Investors should pay less attention to security ratings and more attention to indenture terms. In the case of bonds and to issue provisions with respect to the rights of common and preferred stockholders.

Forrest Shuford Kiwanis Speaker

By CHESTER WALSH Forrest H. Shuford, head of the State Department of Labor, speaking at the Kiwanis club's meeting at Proctor hotel last night, outlined the program of the Veterans' Service Division for providing assistance to veterans and their dependents in applying to the government for hospitalization, rehabilitation, allowances, etc. Frank Sasser of Fayetteville, state service officer, and William H. Corey had charge of the program.

The Veterans' Service Division was set up under the State Department of Labor for the benefit of veterans of all wars. His secretary, Miss Willard, will be in the office to provide information for service men. The office is open daily from 9 until 5 o'clock, Saturdays from 9 until noon.

Shuford explained that the organization for assisting service men in procuring benefits provided by the federal government and administered by the Veterans' Administration is just now in process of formation and it will be perfected in time goes on.

Raleigh, Aug. 5.—(AP)—A resolution urging local school officials to defer school openings until September 18, because of the infantile paralysis outbreak, was adopted by the executive committee of the State Board of Health here last night.

Most schools are scheduled to open between September 1 and 10. Thursday the State Board of Education ruled that the opening dates of the schools would be left to the discretion of local school and health authorities.

PRINCE AT PLAY—Prince William, two-year-old son of the Duke and Duchess of Gloucester, sails his toy boat in the duck pond of Barnwell Manor, Peterborough, England.

Chapter 22 Dick Stanley was still watching her. "If you've finished riveting what seems to be a real thought-catcher," he said, "let's dance. We'll have time for one number before the food comes."

The band slowed down to a waltz —one of the old, romantic ones. The jitterbugs watched with a cold eye from their tables, so the floor was less crowded than usual. Dick and Louise danced well together, and they made an attractive couple —the tall, red-headed man and the pretty brown-haired girl whose head barely reached to his shoulder. On a quick impulse, surprised at himself, Dick kissed her soft hair lightly, and tightened his arm around her. She responded before she was aware of it, realizing that she had reacted involuntarily. "But I liked it," she thought, a little dismayed.

Dick found himself unexpectedly happy. "You're a sweet dancer," he whispered, "and an even sweeter girl. I think—at least, I think I think—we ought to have a talk one of these days."

Just then the band stopped. The jitterbugs were clamoring for more rousing music, so there were no more dances for the waltz. Louise and Dick walked back to their table.

Following the next dance it was time for Angel's second number. Steve Turcot and Bob Grant had been moving from party to party, sitting first at one table and then another. Just now they were at a table near the orchestra and near the spot where Angel was standing. Suddenly Turcot got up from his chair, whispered something to Grant and hurried over toward the orchestra.

Eiding her annoyance at what she considered bad manners on the part of the orchestra, Angel began her second number.

"I'll get by as long as I have you. Though there be rain—"

At that moment, for some reason which Angel could not fathom, the orchestra missed a beat, then began to play a little faster. Angel, still singing, turned to glare at them —and saw the fire. At the bottom of the lattice-work, directly behind the orchestra, some paper flowers had caught fire—probably from a carelessly dropped cigarette. It was visible to only a few of the patrons, only to those who were sitting directly facing the orchestra. A few of the people half rose in their chairs, prepared to help or to flee, depending on what happened in the next few minutes. Steve Turcot had already thrown off his coat and was smothering out the flames.

Angel stopped singing. The orchestra leader threw her an appealing glance, and the musicians continued to play on. Bob Grant stepped over and said in a stage whisper: "Keep on singing! It's nothing serious. Steve's putting it out. For Gee's sake don't start a panic. Keep singing. It's your job—you've got to do it!"

For a moment Angel stood as if rooted to the spot, her face rigid with terror intermingled with rage. Fear for herself, scorn for this small-time musician who would demand that she keep on singing regardless of what happened to her. Then she gave one piercing scream that echoed and re-echoed from every corner of the big room. "Fire! Fire!" she shrieked, and rushed blindly to the nearest exit.

A rising murmur passed around the room, and for a brief space it seemed that pandemonium was about to break loose. A few people got up and left. Then Steve Turcot walked over and spoke to the crowd, the orchestra swung into a lively dance tune and order was restored.

Angel was lying on the couch in her dressing room, her limb figure shaken with sobs, when Bob Grant entered.

"Mrs. Saunders," he began, "do you realize that you've done a pretty cowardly thing? A thing that no good trooper would do? As a matter of fact, no singer worth her salt indulges in hysterics—especially at a time like that. She goes on with the show. It was sheer luck and Steve Turcot's presence of mind that prevented what could have been a most disastrous panic. It was certainly no credit to you."

Louise started to say something, but Angel motioned her to silence. She turned back to Grant. "But there wasn't any panic. Nobody was hurt. Why all the fuss?"

"No, there wasn't any panic—but it wasn't your fault."

"You—you mean you actually expected me to stand there and sing? Angel's eyes opened wide in honest surprise. "Why, the place might have burned down and I'd have been trapped. I—"

Washington, Aug. 5.—(AP)—Senate Republicans sought support today from southern "states rights" Democrats to oppose a bill to create a super-reconversion agency and set up $35 a week federal post-war unemployment payment standards. Reported out of the Military Committee last night by a 10 to 7 vote, the bill was termed by Senator Austin (R-Vt.) an "unprecedented grant of power" to Washington. Sponsored by Senators Murray (D-Mont.), Truman (D-Mo.) and Kilgore (D-W.Va.) it would create an Office of War Mobilization and Adjustment to preside as top agency over production and manpower until two years after the close of the war, when the unemployment provisions also would expire. The bill envisions the appointment of a work administrator with authority to transport workers to new jobs, and to provide six months of federally-paid vocational educational training to any worker, plus paying $50 a month subsistence, $75 if he is married.

Washington Man Killed In Action

Word was received this morning from the War Department of the death of Lt. E. T. Harris, Jr., 24, of Washington, N. C., who had previously been reported missing in action in France. The message received by his wife gave no other details. Lt. Harris, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Harris, well known residents, was one of the most popular young men in Washington. He was born March 15, 1919, and attended Washington schools. He attended Wake Forest college three years and would have entered law school, but was called into the service September 14, 1941. He received his first training at These houses were among many at Carolina Beach, N. C., that were blown from their foundations by a tropical storm which swept in from the Atlantic ocean. Damage estimated at $2,000,000 was done along the coastal beaches and in the nearby port city of Wilmington. About 10,000 people were evacuated from their homes on the beaches, but no lives were reported lost. (AP Wirephoto).

New York Cotton... New York, Aug. 5.—(AP)—Mill' buying in the nearby months ralled cotton sharply today in late trad- ing as buying encountered a scarcit- y of offerings. Local covering in later positions was also a steady- ing factor.

N. Y. Stock Market... New York, Aug. 5.—(AP)—Buyers again took on sizable blocks of low priced motors in today's stock mar- ket, but while scattered pivots at- tracted modest bids, many issues failed to climb out of the losing rut.
