Success too often breeds overconfidence, and this is a good time for us to look at the string we tied on our finger to remind us that the present gratifying Allied progress in Europe doesn't necessarily mean victory is just around the corner.

Strength FOR THE DAY BY RAIL L. DOUGLAS

REMEMBERING AND DOING A little girl, in preparing her Sunday School lesson, was requested to write out the Ten Commandments from memory. She wrote the fourth commandment as follows: "Remember the sabbath day to keep it wholely."

There is a great deal of truth wrapped up in that childish mistake in spelling. Almost everyone makes some use of Sunday, but few people make the full use of it. They keep the Sabbath, or some portion of it, but they do not keep it "wholely." They lie in bed in the morning and get their rest, and one thing the Sabbath was established for is to give men rest. But it is as intended as a day when we honor God, and to that end betake ourselves to a sanctuary and there worship.

For many people the Sabbath has become half a day, half sports day, and if there is nothing more interesting to do, a portion of the day may occasionally be given to worship. It was not so intended by God. He meant it to be a day of rest, a day of worship, a day of good works, and a day of joy. God is the King of the universe, and as such should be honored by His subjects. One way we honor Him is by setting aside a day each week for that purpose. We dishonor Him when we allow anything to come in and steal the time intended for Him. We are to keep the day "holly" and "wholely."

Washington—Tucked away in the reports of the Treasury Department is something that is interesting in the law of Treasury Enforcement Commissioner E. L. Irey: the Treasury Department in 1944 is becoming more and more serious in its department seizures were greater than in previous years and there were positive indications that the Treasury Department is big time with well-financed national and even international gangs operating. New York City, says Irey, is the focal point of the illicit traffic now and four major gangs peddling marijuana have been broken up there in the last year. Where previously Treasury agents took a few ounces of the smoke weed, they seized pounds last year.

Traffic in opium and its derivatives apparently has declined some, says Irey, but heroin—one of the most vicious of all drugs—has made its appearance again in the United States for the first time in several years. Treasury Enforcement officials are particularly perturbed about the spread of marijuana because it so often leads to violence.

Drugs, however, haven't been the only headache that Treasury Department enforcement agents have had in the last year. Secret Service has embarked on an entirely new sea in the last year or so—black market dealers. More than 1,000 persons actually were arrested and charged.

Treasury claims the black market in liquor has virtually been smashed, but other major activities in this field included arrests for the counterfeiting of ration stamps, illegal diversion of sugar and attempts to export or import controlled commodities. One-fifth of the thousand arrests in black market operations were for counterfeiting of ration stamps, principally gasoline and sugar stamps. In these cases printing plants and thousands of counterfeit stamps were taken by the operators.

The number three heads-be of the government last year was the Treasury of government checks. In this comparatively new field, the department made 1,500 arrests. Often these cases are so local in nature that they never make headlines. Measured in 1944, they are almost new fields of crime that have spread throughout the country. There are dozens of minor racketeering operations from the fact that the Treasury has had a hand in breaking up. These include the prevention of a drain of (where there's no ceiling; the break-up of a counterfeit outfit that was turning out $5 automobile use stamps; and the smuggling across the border of jewels and such things as Mexican silver cigarette lighters.

THE WAR TODAY

(Continued from page one) der and total defeat alike involve the destruction of Germany. It is better to go on fighting and so preserve the idea of national socialism for the future. To call this a mood of desperation would be to convey the wrong idea. It is a cold, unemotional and passive acceptance of the doctrine (which is death to dispute) that there is no alternative but to go on to the bitter end. That's what we are up against—and it means a fight. However, it also should be noted that there are clear signs of discontent among some sections of the population, not all of whom have swallowed Nazism. There also is a great, though at present more or less passive, menace to national morale in the some 12,000,000 foreign slaves within Germany. Once Berlin falls and Himmler's picked military forces have to abandon the northern part of the Reich we are likely to see a radical change in civilian attitude.

In this connection, I am reminded of a wise old gentleman who used to visit my office. He was Hon. Westmoreland Davis, ex-governor of Virginia. He always carried a steel suit case. One day we asked him why he carried the odd suit case. He replied, "Because it looks like a carpet bag than any other type of hand luggage and I want to forget carpet bags! This opened up conversation with regard to the uncertainty of investments. The old gentleman became deathly sincere and told us that we of the north could never understand what real chaos and tribulation could follow a war because we had never experienced it. He had lived through the Civil War and the reconstruction days. He said, "There was never any piece of paper representing the ownership of property that came through those evil days of the south. Our bonds were no good; our cash was worthless. There was only one thing that came through. That was the land which we occupied. Those of us who stuck to the land came through. Security-owners, mortgageholders and absentee landlords were all wiped out." I do not mean to suggest that anything like this could happen here during the next 20 years; but it is wise to insure against everything.

Japs Fight ...

(Continued From Page One) of Moron in a 10-mile drive down the west coast of the historic peninsula to which many Japanese are believed to have fled. The Yanks on Bataan have seen some of the toughest fighting of the entire Luzon campaign. South of Manila, the Japanese counterattacked twice near Tagaytay against elements of the 11th airborne division but were "bloodily repulsed," MacArthur reported. North of Manila, the Sixth division secured crossings on the upper Pampanga river at Rizal and at Bongabong, the farthest eastern penetration of the central Luzon plain. From Bongabong a good mountain road leads to the west coast of Luzon at Baler bay. American bombers, striking wide-spread targets, heavily pounded Formosa communications and shipping.

Superforts ...

(Continued From Page One) home many Japanese fighters which otherwise might have struck our forces in the Philippines. A Domei broadcast said three Japanese areas were hit and "the enemy's objectives today seemed to be aircraft factories." The main force flew in against a westerly headwind, bombed the Ota sector, northeast of Tokyo, for about a half hour and then sped away with the benefit of a tailwind toward the Marianas, it said. Two Superforts penetrated the sector of Hamamatsu, on the coast 135 miles southwest of Tokyo, and a few others dropped explosives and incendiaries at Tate-Yama, 125 miles northwest of the capital, the enemy reported. Saying that results scored by Japanese air intercepted units "are still in the process of being checked," Domei declared that "damage caused in Ota was minor, while Tate-Yama and Hamamatsu sustained negligible damage."

Major Tom Coles Talented Magician

By CHESTER WALSH A "magician from the South Pacific" entertained the Kiwanians last night with a bagful of tricks and used Mayor Bruce Sugg as a victim on a miniature French guillotine to thrill the audience. Major Tom Coles, commander of Marines Air Squadron 912, was the magician and he performed his tricks with professional skill. The major and Mrs. Coles, week-end guests of Mr. and Mrs. Felix Scheller, were special guests of the club's weekly supper meeting. Judge Jimmy Roberts had charge of the program. President John M. Barrett presided, Eli Bloom led the singing of Kiwanis songs, with Camille Jernigan, talented musician from the college, was accompanist. Dr. Robert S. Boyd inducted G. C. Honeycutt into membership of the club. Announcement was made that committees are being appointed for the annual Kiwanis minstrel show, to be staged by Eli Bloom and Tige Gardner. The show is given annually and the proceeds are for the benefit of the club's underprivileged child activities. Vice-President Ed (Little Lamb) Rawl read a letter from District Governor Sam Bundy of Tarboro congratulating the Greenville club for its assistance in organizing the Farmville Kiwanis Club last week. Dr. "Rhod" Williams is president of the new club.

Chapter 11 The redhead's face was an expressionless mask, his right arm was crooked above his holster. "You ain't arresting me, Parker," his voice was bleak. "I'm coming," said Parker. "Go for your gun!" grated O'Shane. As he spoke his hand slapped leather. The Marshalls hand swept down, and up. Before he could thumb the hammer, a streak of fire spurted from the redhead's side. Parker's brawny arm jerked back and his 45 clattered to the floor. The fugitive spun round. His smoking iron pivoted from left to right as he backed towards the door. O'Shane felt the swinging door at his back. Focused by a hundred eyes he eased through, backwards—and felt the harsh pressure of a gun barrel between his shoulder blades. "Drop that iron!" came Wacker's curt command. "Stretch!" O'Shane's arms reluctantly moved ceilingward; the dance hall owner adroitly twisted the 46 out of his hand. Tension relaxed, sound cascaded from the throng of onlookers. The Marshal broke through the crowd. "March!" he grunted to O'Shane. "I'll trail along," volunteered Wacker. "This jasper is as slippery as a rattler." Silas dogged their footsteps, the two clumped along the plank walk in the direction of the jail, a square adobe structure on the rear of the Marshall's two-room office and living quarters. "Sorry I had to wing you," said O'Shane, as their footsteps echoed hollowly on the planks, "but that coyote," his head jerked backwards, "framed me for Curran's murder. I was hunting him, figured I'd hammer the truth out of the stinker." "Forget it!" returned Parker. "You could have cut me down. Reckon I don't know that?" Restlessly pacing the length of his prison the redhead reviewed the events of the past few days. Now he was discredited in Joan Curran's eyes, helpless to combat Wacker's scheme to take possession of the Double O, and branded as a cowardly killer. His gamble for peace and security had placed him in the shadow of a noose.

During the fracas at La Bonita, Colonel Thornton and Viola rode into town. He swung off his chestnut gelding before the post office and Viola dismounted beside him. "You go ahead and read your mail. Dad, I'll be back soon," she said. Viola sauntered casually past the marshal's office and glanced inside. As Parker's spur-scarred desk sat a leathery-faced old-timer, Baldy, the Marshal's deputy. "Where's Bill?" "Up at Doc's gettin' fixed up. Rip-roaring galoot, name of O'Shane, plugged him." Parker's entrance cut short the question on her lips. His right arm was bandaged and in a sling. "Is it serious?" she asked quietly. Parker smiles ruefully. "Nope, a flesh wound." "So dad was right, he's nothing but a crazy killer," she exclaimed half to herself. "At all," returned the Marshal forcibly. "If O'Shane had been a killer, I'd be done for right now. I forced his hand." "I want to hear all about it," demanded Viola. Parker told her of the affair in La Bonita. "There's something wrong, Bill. I've heard O'Shane's story, and a certain intuition tells me it's true." "Yeah!" "Yeah! Mr. Know-all! And now you'll hear it." "Go ahead!" grunted Parker and listened in polite silence as she repeated O'Shane's story. The Marshal shook his head doubtfully. "Could be, but I'll gamble my badge he'll swing." "Let me see 'em, Bill." "Okay," he grunted. When O'Shane saw her, he gasped in astonishment. "What are you doing in this hole, Miss Thornton?" "Oh, I came to cheer you up," she said, looking up at the window. "Look, I can see the stars!" she exclaimed with delight. But her eyes were on O'Shane and her right eye dropped significantly. "They can be so helpful." After she left, O'Shane, puzzled, sat on the bed. Study the stars? Well, he'd watch those stars, if he sat there until snuff. For an hour O'Shane figured he must have watched that window, but nothing happened. Then unexpectedly, a package sailed right through the aperture. Swiftly he unwrapped a silk bandanna and beheld a dainty 32! Breathing a prayer of thankfulness to the resourceful Viola, he hefted the little gun. Baldy came along to see how he was doing. His head snapped back as the muzzle of the 32 protruded, not six inches from his pony nose. "Open this door or I'll scatter your brains, pronto," rasped O'Shane. Gaping at the gun barrel, the deputy slowly opened the door. Lifting Baldy's 45 he slipped the little 32 into his waistband and forced the deputy into the cell. Then slipping down to the empty office, he picked up his gunbelt hung on the wall, tossed Baldy's iron into the waste-basket and stepped out on the plank walk. Square jaw set, O'Shane stepped briskly in the direction of the dance hall. He had a score to settle with Silas Wacker.

U. D. C. Meets. The George B. Singletary Chapter U. D. C. met Thursday evening in the art room of Sheppard Memorial Library.

It was a happy occasion for the members of this chapter to have the opportunity of meeting where the collection of beautiful Corrow paintings were on display and of hearing Mrs. J. E. Ross give a very interesting and instructive talk, her subject being "Miss Mildred Lewis Rutherford," whose portrait is in this collection.

Mr. Corrow, a native of another state, has a summer home near Hendersonville and it may be of interest to know that the subjects of some of his portraits are outstanding North Carolinians.

Mrs. Rose, in her usual pleasing manner, reviewed the book "Stars and Thunder" by Virginia Clare, which is the life story of Miss Rutherford. This remarkable woman was a lecturer, author, civic leader, president of Lucy Cobb School, Athens, Ga., a world traveler, and an ardent supporter of southern traditions, southern customs and southern ideals. She held the office of historian-general in the U. D. C. and was an indefatigable worker in that organization in the state of Georgia. She was imbued with the idea of giving the south its rightful place in the history of the country and through her efforts with pen and on the platform, she contributed much which resulted in correcting errors that had crept into our history.

When viewing this admirable portrait, painted by Mr. Corrow, we see a woman in her maturity, a woman whose face denotes strong convictions and as strong a will to carry out these convictions. There is determination in the clasp of her hands and strength in her pose. A militant figure, yet a gentle and lovable person. Truly a great woman.

After expressions of appreciation to Mrs. Rose for her portrayal of this outstanding woman and to those sponsoring this art collection for permitting us to hold our meeting in such inspiring surroundings, the meeting adjourned.—Reported.

Mrs. Evans' Mother Dies. Mrs. John C. Hughes of Parkton, mother of Mrs. David Evans, died early Friday morning after long illness. Funeral services will be held Sunday afternoon in Parkton.

Free Will Baptist Circles. Circles of the Free Will Baptist Woman's Auxiliary will meet in the following homes Monday evening at 8 o'clock:

troop in the ways of another country, since this month is International Month. Plans for our semi-annual Court of Awards to be held March 11 at the Presbyterian Church were discussed. All applicants for awards should be in the office by Feb. 28. Each troop was asked to collect books for the war-torn areas. The public is asked to contribute when called upon if you have a desirable book for this cause.

A report was made to the leaders' club of the commissioner, Mrs. W. P. Moore, first deputy, Mrs. R. E. Lee, Staff and Office Chairman, Miss O. N. Here is a poem that Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Hardee of Norfolk sent to us:
BY CAPT. HARDEE
Here's to Camp Hardee, girls,
A place we dearly love,
Nestled calmly here on the river,
Sent like a gift from above.
Her buildings are rustic and peaceful,
May she always continue to grow.
Her food is the best in the land,
Her program we all love and know.
Each teacher and counselor always doing her best
To make everything work out right,
And each girl with her daily chores,
Is certainly one wonderful sight.
So, here's to Camp Hardee and Helen,
Old faithful so needy we'll say,
To you both we will always be faithful,
Loyal, kind and loving each day.

Interesting Talk Of Future Cars

While discussing transportation today with E. Graham Flanagan, president of the Flanagan Buggy Company, Ford dealer in this district, he quoted a recent statement by Henry Ford II about a low-priced car after the war, which is interesting in many respects. The statement in part follows:
"We have been pleasantly surprised at the increasing interest shown in a low-priced car ever since the first rumor leaked out that the Ford Motor Company was contemplating such a model in the postwar period," Henry Ford II, executive vice-president, stated recently in outlining the Company's future plans.

"Starting with that favorable public opinion as a premise, we have found some interesting things in studying the possibilities of the manufacture of such an automobile.

"First of all, it is necessary that we understand that the contemplated Ford low-priced car is not a miniature automobile, nor is it to be fabricated from materials and parts which in any way whatsoever could be regarded as second rate or low grade. The kind of a war we have in mind would be a full-sized automobile with all of the built-in conveniences one gets in the regular model.

"Second, there would be the economies derived from the improved design and engineering of the Ford more miles per gallon of gasoline, less upkeep cost, plus the original savings, for we are hoping to be able to price this car at somewhere around 15 to 20 per cent lower than the lowest-priced regular model Ford after the war. We don't know yet, naturally, what the increased labor and material costs will mean to actual prices.

"Third, there would be a social significance to the appearance on the market of the Ford low-priced car. My grandfather, Mr. Henry Ford, has ever since the early days of his business, striven to give the public the most car for the least money, with emphasis on both items.

"It would be thoroughly in-keeping with his thinking and an additional step in his program if we can produce a car which would make cheaper transportation for family enjoyment of an automobile available to more and more people. After all, the post-war cost of automobiles may be substantially higher compared to the prices before the war. We should be prepared to have a car for the people who will not be able to buy the comparatively high priced cars but who are used to and want automobile transportation. We have found out how essential automobile transportation is in wartime and it will be comparatively as important to peace time industry."

"This demonstration will be put on by D. P. Hooker, district forest ranger, who will bring with him a large caterpillar, sufficiently strong to plow these lanes through the woods. It will be put on under the auspices of the Coastal Plain Soil Conservation district.

Farmers and business men of Greene, Edgecombe, and Martin counties, as well as farmers of Pitt county, are invited to attend. You are urged to come in order that you may learn something practical in the way of forest fire prevention.

Jaycees Will Provide Marker

At its regular meeting last night, the Greenville Junior Chamber of Commerce decided to provide the necessary funds for the erection of a huge aerial marker on the top of some local building as a guide for civilian and military flyers. Action was taken on the matter after the local GAP unit had been ordered to raise funds for such a project by the commanding officer of the North Carolina wing of the CAP. Thus Greenville becomes one of the 25 cities in the state to have such a marker.

The Jaycees were instrumental in getting a CAP unit organized here. The organization now has a membership of some 50 boys and girls and is progressing rapidly under the able leadership of Lt. Matt Long.

Final plans were discussed and approved for the coming home to house paper drive to be held Sunday afternoon. Chairman Barrett stressed the urgent need for waste paper salvage. He further pointed out that some of our own state paper mills have only enough paper on hand for six or eight days production.

The collection will be held Sunday afternoon between the hours of 2 and 6. Every citizen who has waste paper to contribute to the drive is urged to take the newspapers and magazines in bundles, pack loose paper in boxes and place all bundles in front of the home before 2 o'clock. Pick up trucks manned by Jaycees will collect it during the afternoon.

A committee composed of Belle Lamm, Alton Barrett, Charles Marston, Jack Nobles, Jake Hadley, and Melvin Whitford was appointed to investigate the request of the National American Cancer Society for aid in conducting its nationwide appeal for funds for research and treatment in the field of cancer cure.

A letter of appreciation from the editors of "Green Lights," local high school newspaper, was read to the club. The Jaycees recently gave the newspaper the sum of $50 for assistance in reorganization of the publication.

The meeting was well attended and was presided over by President Charles McBrayer.

New York, Feb. 10—(AP)—The stock market tried for recovery today, and selected issues were more or less successful, but rallies and many industrials found the going a bit difficult.
Dealings turned sluggish on the attempted comeback and turnover for the two hours of around 500,000 shares was about half that of last Saturday. Improved tendencies were present at the start. Numerous issues wavered, however, and near-closing prices were pretty well jumbled.
Bonds were relatively steady and commodities hesitant.

New Air Blows Against Nazis

London, Feb. 10—(AP)—U. S. Flying Fortresses attacked a German motor fuel depot at Duemlen, southwest of Muenster, today and submarine pens at IJmuiden on the Netherlands coast. Only 150 heavy bombers and approximately 130 fighters participated in both operations.

IJmuiden, which has been bombed four times in the past week, is one of the most active submarine bases the Nazis have left on the European coast.

Road and rail convoys in the Netherlands and western Germany were attacked last night by continent-based tactical air force light bombers.

Sixty-eight Nazi planes, including five jet-powered Messerschmitt-262's were destroyed in daylight yesterday and Allied losses were 26 planes.

First Meeting
Raleigh, Feb. 10—(AP)—Governor Cherry met with the Council of State for the first time today since assuming office. Only routine business matters were discussed, with most of the talk centering about the duties of the council.

Gift Returned
Detroit, Feb. 10—(AP)—A War Department spokesman reported today that the nation's first all-negro fighter squadron, now in action in Italy, has returned a $1,000 gift from a Detroit union local with the request that it be used to better "inter-racial goodwill."

Reshuffle In Jap Cabinet

(By the Associated Press)
The Japanese cabinet has been reshuffled in response to continuing criticism, the Domei news agency reported today, but Premier Gen. Kuniaki Koiso remains at its head.

The dispatch was beamed to occupied Asia and recorded by the Federal Communications Commission.

A change in the cabinet comes on the heels of months-long criticism of Japan's war effort which has increased with each of the continuing Japanese reverses. Koiso has met each protest by partially yielding to his critics while still maintaining the dominant role.

Announcement of partial reshuffling of Koiso's cabinet coincided with Tokyo admissions that the U.S. conquest of the Philippines is interfering with the flow of vital raw materials from the Dutch Indies and other southern areas.

A Tokyo domestic broadcast, recorded by FCC, said interruption of southern supply flows makes it "impossible to obtain the wealth and materials in China be more and more utilized."

Koiso's government issued a decree accelerating the mobilization of students into the armed services.

Allied Armies ...

against the Canadian First army push which apparently had breached completely the main pillbox line protecting Kleva.

Gen. H. D. G. Cremer's men seized Neuterdun, 21-2 miles from Kleva on the main road to Nijmegen in a two-mile push beyond Kranenburg. The town makes it "impossible to retreat, fall, and Crerar's troops fought into Milligen.

At least 16 towns and 2,500 prisoners have been rolled up in the Canadian onslaught gaining some seven miles, but forward troops now have engaged elements of at least three veteran German divisions.

The Canadians bored through the Reichswald itself, and some of the heaviest fighting flared on the southern bank of the lower edges of the forest. Allied progress there was slow.

The first ballation, 306th regiment of the U. S. 78th division, reached the Schwammeneel dam after a half-mile advance from the north, with artillery and mortar fire the main resistance.

The troops had no way of knowing whether the huge structure, the largest of a series of 11 dams at the Roers headwaters, had been wired for demolition.

Just after midnight there were three explosions—one at the control house on the south side, another at a spillway bridge, and a third not immediately traced—but the big dam remained intact.

Late front dispatches said no additional progress had been reported by other Third army units which already were within three-quarters of a mile of Pruem on the northwest and west.

The Germans counter attacked three times in the Pruem area, twice with tanks, but were beaten back.

Twenty more pillboxes were cleared in the Habscheid area southwest of Pruem, completing penetration of the main Siegfried belt and widening the breach to nine miles. Bridgeheads over the Our and Sure rivers in the Dasbour, Wallendorf and Eichternach areas were built up against strong Nazi opposition.

Germans Report ...

Russians had thrown in strong forces on the newly active Breslau-Liegnitz-Glogau front and had rolled 35 miles west of Breslau in Silesia. In Pomerania the Russians have pushed to within seven miles of Stagard and 25 miles southeast of Stettin, the Baltic port of Berlin.

Enemy accounts described the big new drive by Marshal Ivan C. Konev in Silesia as "gigantic" and said that it had reached the edge of Liegnitz, transportation and industrial center of 76,000 on the direct Berlin-Breslau communications lines.

Moscow dispatches, although not directly confirming the German reports, said early today that Konev had stepped up his attacks along the Oder and was threatening to split the Germans defending Silesia and the southeastern roads to Berlin.

Breslau's Nazi garrison appeared in imminent danger of complete encirclement. The Russians simultaneously were threatening to break open the door into German Saxony in their drive on Liegnitz.

Other Russian troops in East Prussia surrounded the harbor city of Elbing with new drives to the Baltic that further sealed the fate of the remnants of perhaps 250,000 Germans originally trapped below Koernigsberg. The Moscow midnight supplement said Soviet units continued to advance along the shores of Frisches Haff, large lagoon between East Prussia and the Baltic.

Berlin said the heaviest fighting was in Pomerania where the Nazis, aware that the capture of Stettin would set up a solid Berlin assault arc along the Oder to below Frankfurt, were resisting desperately. The Soviet supplemental communique said 5,000 Germans were killed yesterday in the area.

The drive on Stettin threatened to trap a force of Nazis in eastern Pomerania perhaps as large as that isolated in East Prussia.

The tempo of fighting along the middle Oder was undiminished. The Germans said the Russians built a bridgehead on the river's west bank of Lebus, five miles north of Frankfurt, south of Frankfurt other Soviet units were said to have cut communications lines between Fuesenber and Frankfurt and to be fighting in the outskirts of Damm, eastern suburb of Frankfurt.

22,460 bags of cement at a cost of $13,105.72. The defense endeavored through its questioning to establish that actual purchases, including those made by Dr. Meadows but allowed in the audit during the period covered by the report were 26,763 bags or 4,303 more bags than shown by the Widenhouse report.

The defense by its questioning regarding the cement likewise endeavored to show that practically all the paving that has been done at the college, was during Dr. Meadows' administration. Defense questioning of the witness regarding several conversations with W. S. Shaw, Henry Freeman and Alonzo Taylor implied the possibility of coercion or persuasion on the part of Widenhouse in procuring statements that would aid the prosecution.

On his redirect examination Jesse Jones, of state counsel, Widenhouse answered questions on certain disbursement items not covered by the defense cross examination and in this way such items of the audit that had not previously been presented into evidence found their way into the court records.

Widenhouse's final testimony dealt with total figures involved in Dr. Meadows' accounts showing receipts of $27,238.82, allowed disbursements of $7,391.03 leaving a difference of $19,847.79. Widenhouse stated that as a matter of civil procedure he had since credited to Dr. Meadows a total of $1,464.80 that had been turned over in cash or refunds to other funds during the course of the investigation, leaving a net unsatisfactorily supported total of $18,472.39.
