

Senators Wrangle Over Probe Issues

Angry Argument In MacArthur Hearing; Solons Agree
To Vote On Whether
They Should Ask
Bradley Tell Of Private Talks With President

WASHINGTON—(AP)—In angry argument at the Senate MacArthur hearings today, a Republican suggested the White House was putting an "iron curtain" over witnesses and got a sharp denial from Gen. Omar Bradley that there was one on him.

It was a climactic moment in a session that broke off questioning of Bradley about the dismissal of Gen. Douglas MacArthur and brought hot debate on whether Bradley should tell about his private talks with President Truman on firing the Far Eastern command.

Senator Knowland (R-Calif.) said Bradley's stand that the talks were a confidential matter, not to be testified to, raised a question whether the White House was dropping an "iron curtain" about witnesses.

Bradley, apparently looking on the issue as having political implications, told the senators he was neither a Democrat nor a Republican and had never voted. He added:

"Now, the statement has been made here to the effect that an 'iron curtain' has been pulled down over my testimony. I do not think it has, Mr. Chairman."

"I have only declined to answer one question on a confidential basis."

"I am perfectly willing, as I say, to give what I think is pertinent, and that is the conclusions reached at those conferences: (with the President) and I am perfectly willing to tell you the reasons advanced by the three Chiefs of Staff when they gave their reasons (for MacArthur's dismissal) to General Marshall."

Bradley also said he had been "referred to here yesterday as the President's witness." He added:

"I thought I was the committee's witness."

Bradley had refused yesterday to tell what he and Mr. Truman said to each other in their talks. And today, the White House said Mr. Truman does not want him to tell.

Nevertheless, some Republicans on the inquiry panel—made up of the Senate Armed Services and Foreign Relations committees—were insistent that Bradley should tell.

While Bradley sat silently for the most part, in the witness chair for more than two hours today, the senators argued heatedly. Charges implied and direct, of trying to play politics figured in the debate.

In the upshot:

1. Bradley was dismissed as a witness until Monday.

2. The senators agreed to vote at noon (EST) tomorrow on whether they should insist that the five-star general tell about his conference with the President.

This left the course of the inquiry up in the air for the immediate future, but stymied it for the day at least.

Atop the charges hurled in the committee room itself, Senator Fulbright (D-Ark.) told reporters on leaving that he fears Republicans may be "trying to sabotage" the whole inquiry into MacArthur's ouster.

End Bounty For Indian Scalps

HARRISBURG, Pa. —(UP)—The state of Pennsylvania may drop its bounties for Indian scalps.

A bill in the House of Representatives today calls for "repeal of the existing law providing for payment of bounties for Indian scalps by the commonwealth or any political subdivision."

How To Wage A War

MacArthur Argues Prolonged Korean War More Dangerous Than All-Out Effort; Doubts Soviet Very Effective If Entered Picture; Others Urge Caution

By JAMES MARLOW

WASHINGTON—(AP)—The ride of Russia is the No. 1 problem in the Truman-MacArthur argument over how to wage the Korean war.

Would Russia come in if we widened the fighting in Asia by bombing the Chinese bases in Manchuria? If she did, both sides agree a new war might follow.

General MacArthur has urged bombing the Manchurian bases as one of several steps he thinks should be taken to end the Korean war faster.

Secretary of Defense Marshall, as General and a spokesman for the Truman Administration, opposes the Manchurian bombing—at least now. So does Gen. Omar Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Does either side know whether the bombing would bring in Russia? No. Both can only guess. MacArthur guesses no. Marshall guesses maybe.

MacArthur argues that when you are in a fight, you ought to use all the strength you have to win and that when we don't bomb Manchuria we are fighting with one hand tied behind our backs.

President Truman, though, pointed out to MacArthur, in a message to him on Jan. 13, that trying to win a fight is right but sometimes other problems, besides winning that one fight, must be considered.

The message from the President said in part: "Pending the building up of our national strength we must act with great prudence in so far as extending the area of hostilities is concerned."

"Steps which might in themselves be justified and which might lend some assistance to the campaign in Korea would not be beneficial if they thereby involved Japan or western Europe in large-scale hostilities."

"In reaching a final decision about Korea, I shall have to give constant thought to the main threat from the Soviet Union and to the need for rapid expansion of our armed forces to meet this great danger."

But MacArthur told the secretaries: "I think the greatest risk we could run is not ending the war in

Senate Votes To Put Indian Grain On Basis Of Loan

Lawmakers Accept
Amendment By 52-
32 Vote; Passage
Slated Today

WASHINGTON—(AP)—The senate voted today 52 to 32 to put the proposed shipment of 2,000,000 tons of grain to famine-threatened India on a straight loan basis.

The provision was written into a senate bill which calls for supplying half the grain as a loan and half as a gift.

Acceptance of the amendment sponsored by Senators Ferguson (R-Mich.), McCarran (D-Nev.) and Bridges (R-NH) apparently cleared away any obstacle to final passage of the bill later in the day.

Most of the opposition had developed against the proposal that any part of the shipment should be a donation.

In requesting the relief measure last February, President Truman has suggested supplying the $190,000,000 worth of grain—mostly wheat—as a gift. The Senate Foreign Relations committee changed this to make it half loan-half grant.

The loan amendment approved by the Senate provided that the terms should be the same as those for Marshall Plan loans, with payment extending over a period of more than 30 years, low interest rates and a period of grace of six to eight years before any principal payments are due.

Senator Ferguson (R-Mich.), who offered the amendment for a 100 per cent loan, said India itself had not asked for a gift.

A grant, he said would be "part of a carefree, grandiose, global giveaway philosophy."

Smith backed Ferguson, contending that the Indian government had indicated it would prefer a straight loan to the half grant-half loan basis.

Military Junta
In Bolivia Coup

LA PAZ, Bolivia —(UP)— President Mamerto Urrutia's resignation today and a military junta took over control of the Bolivian Government.

The junta, headed by Gen. Hugo Ballivian, immediately proclaimed a state of siege although the situation appeared to be peaceful.

Early reports indicated the coup d'etat was staged because of the outcome of last Sunday's election, in which the government's presidential candidate, Gabriel Gosalvez, ran a poor second.

Urrutia's resignation came early today for Arica, Chile.

The La Paz prefect told reporters he had ordered the arrest of two right-wing leaders, Edmundo Vasquez, former head of the Bolivian Socialist Union Party represented by Gosalvez in the election, and Juan Manuel Balcazar, Republican Party chief and president of the Chamber of Deputies.

Approve British
Note To Tehran

LONDON —(UP)— The United States has approved a note on the Anglo-Iranian oil dispute which Britain is about to send to the Iranian government, authoritative sources reported today.

The note, understood to be firm in tone but conciliatory in its terms, was expected to be sent to Tehran within the next 24 hours.

A government spokesman said Britain and the United States had reached a "general alignment of views" on the oil dispute and the approach to the Iranian government.

Informed sources said the note will contain a blunt warning to Iran of the dangers facing the country if the oil industry is upset by "incompetent handling."

The British were understood to offer higher royalties for Iranian oil and "some scheme" which would help to improve Iran's economy.

One company, to be run exclusively by Iran, which would control oil production. A second, operated jointly by Britain and Iran, would refine and market the oil. Under this plan the western powers would remain Iran's best oil customers.

Garden Hose Is
Burrowing Kind

ANN ARBOR, Mich. —(UP)— A garden hose burrowed itself three feet in the ground and wouldn't come up for a week.

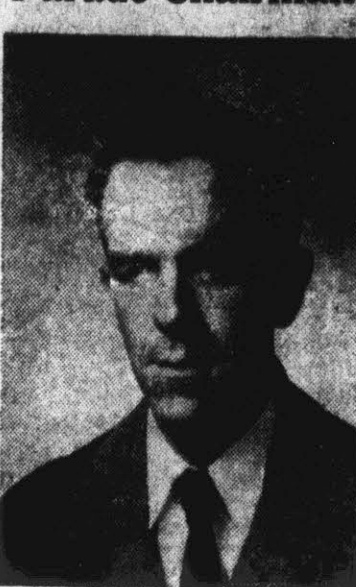

Mrs. H. O. Beck, wife of a physician, said she laid the hose on the ground while watering a tree, and it began hosing into the soft dirt.

"It just kept on going down," she said. And she was too surprised to grab it.

Yesterday, after seven days of futile tugging, Mrs. Beck pushed another hose into the dirt to try to force it up by water pressure.

Then she and a 260-pound helper pulled it free.

Ross is a member of the Greenville and Airborne Infantry personnel from Camp Lejeune and Pope Field to march in the parade. Also, bands from Greenville and Epsom high schools will supply music for the marchers. At the same time it is expected that planes from Army and Marine bases will fly over during the day.

Inquiry Ordered Of Slaughtering

Nationwide Probe Ordered By Price Enforcing Chief

WASHINGTON — (AP) — A nationwide inquiry into reports of illegal livestock slaughtering was ordered today by price enforcement director Edward P. Morgan.

Morgan said all district office enforcement agents have been directed to check on Class 2 slaughterers who were reported to have been in business last year but who have not registered in 1951 as required by price regulations.

A Class 2 slaughterer is one who does not have his products federally inspected.

Morgan said there were an estimated 10,000 to 15,000 such slaughterers last year. He said Office of Price Stabilization (OPS) records show only about 11,000 have registered this year.

OPS orders require a slaughterer to get a registration number in order to slaughter livestock legally. He must have such a number before he can receive such a quota of livestock for slaughtering.

Morgan said the difference between the number of slaughterers reported in operation last year and the number now registered is the basis of reports of possible illegal slaughtering.

Arrests Expected Today In Monday's Explosions

— Greenville police and Camp Lejeune authorities are slowly moving in on the persons who were responsible for the explosion at the Dickinson Avenue residents' early Monday morning with a giant firecracker.

Yesterday SBI agent S. G. Gibbs and police detective N. H. Byrd, in conjunction with the provost marshal at Camp Lejeune, talked to a driver of one of the two cars allegedly at the scene of the explosion. His name has been held from publication by authorities, pending other arrests.

Greenville police chief Guy Langston stated it has definitely been proved through an eye witness that two cars were involved in the pitching out of the firecracker near the Waldensian Bakery. He declined to name the Greenville person who saw the cars but the person informed Langston that he passed them further out Dickinson after the explosion.

Today a Marine colonel from Cherry Point informed Langston that planes from his base had nothing to do with the explosion. It was at first assumed by residents of the area that the plane that was flying overhead at the time of the explosion had dropped something explosive which caused the blast. Lt. Col. W. E. Closen discounted the incident on the basis that no Marine plane was in this area at the time.

Langston stated he was reasonably sure that arrests could be made today as soon as the other Marines allegedly involved could be interviewed. The other men in the cars, Langston said, were assigned to the rifle range yesterday and could not be contacted.

Pitt Legionnaires Elect Officers For New Year

Pitt County Post No. 39, American Legion, last night elected Lester Turnage, Greenville insurance man, commander for the coming year. He succeeds J. Howard Mays, banker.

Norman Wilkerson was named first vice-commander, Grover C. Wyne of Bethel, second vice-commander, and Asa V. Moore of Winterville, third vice-commander.

The legionnaires reelected Louis W. Gaylord, Jr. adjutant, L. B. Gowen, treasurer, and Dr. H. Glenn Haney, post chaplain.

Plans were made for continuing to pay tribute on Memorial Day, May 30, to legionnaires who die during the year.

The post endorsed Chaplain Haney for state chaplain. Herman Duncan, Louis W. Gaylord, Jr., and S. L. Bridgers a committee to draft a letter to other posts in the North Carolina Department, American Legion, urging support of the Greenville minister.

Acting Commander Turnage reminded the legionnaires about the annual state convention to be held at Asheville May 30-June 2.

The post will send one boy to the Boys' State at Chapel Hill during the summer.

A letter to the post from the Greenville Recreation Commission suggested that the post forward early the names of prospective players for plans to have a soft

Top Billing For Power Problem
Friday Evening

Aldermen and Utilities Commission
Called To Special Joint Meet

Greenville's power problem will receive top billing Friday night at a special joint meeting of the Greenville aldermen and utilities commission.

The call for the special meeting was sent out yesterday by Mayor W. S. Stafford. The meeting will be held at 8 o'clock in the aldermen's room of the city hall.

The aldermen and the members of the utilities commission will consider the proposed contract from Virginia Electric Power Company for an interconnection between the local plant and the VEPCO lines for an exchange of power. The contract likewise will carry provisions whereby the city may purchase firm power from the private company when and if it desires.

If the contract with the power is signed, a 110,000 volt power line is to be built by the power company into the vicinity of the city, and a substation will be built by the power company to transform the 110,000 current into 33,000 volt current so it can be handled by the local power plant. The city would build its own substation for handling the 33,000 volt current at a cost which has been estimated at $75,000.

Under the terms of the exchange contract the city could purchase power from Virginia Electric Power Company for three mills per kilowatt plus the average fuel cost of producing the current; and the power from the city plant would be made available to the private company on the same basis.

At the meeting Friday night the two boards are expected to adopt either separate resolutions or a joint resolution approving the interconnection with the power company and authorizing the necessary contract to be executed.

One or more representatives of the Virginia Electric Power Company are expected to be present at the joint meeting.

In addition to the power question, the aldermen at the meeting Friday night will consider a request from Vance Harrington of Greenville for taking into the city limits a certain area of property adjacent to the city limits.

The first monies from the REA loan will be used for the expansion of the present power lines of the utilities in rural areas of the territory already served. Approximately 300 miles of lines are to be constructed in Pitt, Beaufort and Craven counties, and will make electric power available to some 2,284 potential customers who are unable to get electric power at the present time.

The cost of the construction of the lines is estimated between $300,000 and $400,000. Only the money necessary for the construction of the lines will be borrowed by the city under the REA loan at the time the lines are completed. The remainder of the $910,000 loan which has been approved for the city will remain un borrowed until such time as the city desires to borrow it.

The bonds carry a two per cent interest rate and are to be repaid over a 35 year period. Only the interest on the money borrowed will be paid for the first five years of the loan, and the payment of the interest plus the principal will be divided over the last 30 years of the

German Firm Is Making Bayonets

FRANKFURT, Germany —(UP)— War weapons are being manufactured in Western Germany for the first time since the Nazis surrendered six years ago this month, it was confirmed today.

The knife manufacturing firm of Horster at the Ruhr city of Solingen is turning out 2,600 bayonets for the Dutch army. A spokesman for the Allied High Commission said the military security board issued the concern a license, and explained it was the first and only license that had been issued for war weapons.

Set Heavy Odds
No Early War

SEATTLE —(UP)— Lloyds of London gave odds of nearly 20 to 1 today that the United States would not become involved in a world war before June 25.

Dr. Frank Wood, Seattle dentist, said he took out an insurance policy with the firm that would pay off $10,000 if war is declared by the United States before that date. The policy cost $55.

Stafford Signs Bonds On $910,000 REA Loan

Signs 910 Bonds For Greenville
Utilities Expansion Plans

Mayor W. S. Stafford's signature was valued at $1,000 a clip to the city of Greenville this morning as the mayor set about the task of signing 910 bonds for Greenville Utilities Rural Electrification Administration loan.

The bonds were delivered to the utilities commission this week 17 months after the request for the REA loan was made by the city in December 1949. The decision to make the request for the loan was made by the utilities commission and the aldermen following several months of considering the needs of the rural areas in the Greenville utilities territory which do not have electric power facilities at the present time.

Dealing With Iran

Britain's Reluctance To Lose Vast Oil Concessions Could Spell Trouble; John Bull Looks To U. S. For Cooperation, But Washington Refuses 'Big Stick'

By DEWITT MACKENZIE

The dangerous dispute over Iran's nationalization of the tremendously rich British oil concessions in that country appears to be approaching a showdown.

It's a tense moment, for there's enough dynamite in this crisis to set off another world war unless the situation is handled with utmost caution.

Oil-rich Iran (Persia) is a key position in the Middle East, and three great powers—Britain, Russia and America—have for many years been vitally interested in its status. The appearance of any storm cloud over Iran immediately brings all three of these powers to the alert.

The crisis concerns the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company, in which the British government owns more than half the common stock. This concern supplies some 30 per cent of Britain's oil and much of the fuel for her Navy. Loss of the oil would be a catastrophe for John Bull.

London is said to contemplate sending a high-level mission to Tehran to try to negotiate a settlement. Meantime all indications

All-Out Assault May Be Under Way By Light Of Full Moon Friday Night; Ninth Corps Commander Welcomes Prospect Of Early Action

TOKYO, Thursday —(UP)— Chinese communists launched attacks of increasing ferocity across the Korean War front today and Allied commanders believed the signal had been sounded for a new offensive.

One Allied commander said the all-out assault might be underway by the light of the full moon Friday night.

The boldest probing attacks came in the Soyang River bridgehead east of Chunchon Wednesday. The Chinese struck by daylight under heavy clouds and through fog-bound mountains. They were engaged by roving Allied tanks ahead of the lines and masses of Allied artillery behind barbed wire and sandbag barricades.

Allied warplanes were partially blinded by the weather, giving the enemy just the opportunity he needed.

Officers said the communists were across both the Pukhan and Soyang, northwest and northeast of Chunchon, respectively, "in considerable strength."

Chinese reds recaptured Inje, highway hub five miles north of the 38th parallel and 25 miles inland from the East Coast. Wednesday after one of the heaviest communist artillery barrages of the war.

Most of the enemy attacks met rock-wall resistance. They struck in groups of 100 up to two battalions, and used hand grenades, automatic weapons and light artillery. Only the South Koreans fell back slightly. Other United Nations forces threw back the assaults.

Elsewhere along the line the reds stabbed at allied lines with a dozen trip-hammer attacks in what Allied officers said were attempts to find a weak spot.

Gen. William Hoge, commander of the U.S. 9th Corps, said the second round of the spring offensive is imminent and may come with the full moon in the next two days. Hoge said his troops will "welcome it."

"We expect an attack," Hoge said. "We are prepared for the worst the enemy has. We believe he will hit with no less strength than last month. We have never been better prepared for a counter-attack than now. We will welcome an attack. We would rather receive the enemy on our ground than go out and look for him. And I am confident that we will discourage him plenty when he comes at us this time."

The 8th Army communiqué said 2,890 communists were killed or wounded in the stepped-up fighting Tuesday which apparently set the stage for the red assault.

The communiqué said the enemy was massing troops north of Uijongbu, on the road to Seoul, and throwing probing attacks against Allied lines on the central front.

South Korean troops retreated on the eastern front in the Inje area after six enemy attacks Tuesday night and Wednesday morning, the communiqué said. Front dispatches said all attacks were beaten back except in the Inje area.

But the communists expanded their bridgeheads across the Pukhan and Soyang rivers on the central front under cover of rain and cloud-filled skies.

The renewed Chinese attacks were accompanied by a roaring artillery barrage on the eastern front and the familiar blast of bugles on the central front.

An allied officer on the western front above Seoul said the reds were moving into position for a major drive there.

Wesley Foundation Officers Installed In Sacred Ceremony

Officers of the Wesley Foundation, Methodist student organization at East Carolina College, were commissioned at an impressive service in Jarvis Memorial Church Sunday night, May 13, at 8:00 o'clock.

Billy Vendrie of New Bern, outgoing president of Wesley Foundation, presided at the service and read the Scripture. Ophelia Kirven, president of Alpha Zeta Chapter, Wesley Players, led the prayer. The Wesley Chorus, under the direction of Andrew Meador of Norfolk, Va., who was organist, led the music for the service. The pastor, Rev. Leon Russell, delivered the sermon, in which he emphasized the responsibility of these students as Christian leaders on their campus, and the necessity of their adequate preparation in building the homes of the future.

At the conclusion of the sermon, Marilyn Watkins, of Middleburg, lighted the twelve tall cathedral candles on the altar, symbolic of the leadership of the members of the Wesley Foundation Council. Ophelia Kirven read the special scripture, John 15:4-5, and the pastor commissioned the 12 young people in the name of the Methodist Church as leaders in the Methodist Student Movement on the campus of East Carolina College.

After the commissioning the members of Council knelt at the altar in silent prayer, then the director of the Wesley Foundation, Mamie Chandler, took a light from the altar and lighted the candles held by the officers. Following this the president, Waylon Upchurch of Sanford, led the recessional of Council members from the sanctuary as they sang the chorus of "Are Ye Able, Said the Master."

Officers commissioned by the pastor in this service are: president, Waylon Upchurch, Sanford; vice president, Charles Cherry, Stokes; secretary, Anne Osborne, Salisbury; treasurer, Betty Ann Shaw, Weldon; commission chairman: worship, Dorothy Howard, Garland; personnel, Elaine Smith, Wilmington; World Christian Community, Mattie Huber, Kingston; church relations, Marvin Brown, Rockingham; recreation, Hazel Burke, La Grange; literature and training, Charles Cherry, Stokes; public relations, Joan Edwards, Wilmington; evangelism, Donald Roebuck, Stokes; president Wesley Players, Ethel Parks, Goldsboro.

In one of the class rooms of the graded school on the first floor is an exhibition of specimens of drawings by the pupils of that department. To the lover of art this exhibit is of more than passing interest. This is the fourth year the subject of drawing has been taught in the graded school. The present teacher, Miss Kate Lewis, has brought the work up to a high standard of efficiency in the three years in which she has been in charge of it. The graded school authorities regret to give her up. However, the Training school, at which place she has taught two days per week for the past two sessions, will require all of her time. The Training school is to be congratulated on securing Miss Lewis.

LOVE IS EVERYTHING

"If I... have not love, I am nothing" (I Cor. 13:2).

Might one not have a great many things such as ability, energy, resourcefulness, and even a certain amount of personal charm, yet have a heart in which there is no love? No, these things without love become snares in which we are finally caught to our own undoing. We do not have them—they in the end have us.

St. Paul was right when he said that if he had not love, he had nothing. The greatest question in the world is, How much do you care about people? Do you have a vital interest in their welfare? Do you really value them as individuals?

The thirteenth chapter of I Corinthians suggests a method by which we can test the validity of our concern for other people. Are we easily provoked? Are we puffed up? Are we long-suffering and kind? Are we self-seeking? Do we rejoice when someone gets involved in evil? The way we answer these questions indicates whether we really love our fellows or do not love them.

If we have no love for others we have no real influence over them. We may force them to do our bidding. We may persuade them if we are clever enough. But we never really get down into their lives unless we love them. Nothing else counts. It has truly been said, "We become ourselves as we give ourselves to others. For we were made for one another."

A New Ray Of Hope For Air Service

Now that the Pitt-Greenville Airport Commission's petition for franchised air service has been consolidated with the hearing for Piedmont Aviation's franchise renewal, hope has been renewed that the local airport will become a stopping point on the regular air lines.

The airport commission has been trying to get franchised air service for a number of years, but without success. Greenville has a class four airport with ample room to take care of the commercial liners that frequent this section of the country. And the Pitt-Greenville airport is considered by flyers as one of the best in this section of the state.

With no passenger train service, Greenville needs the service a regularly scheduled air line would afford the people of the city and the surrounding area. From the standpoint of supporting franchised air service, Greenville is the center of the eastern portion of the state to which people would be drawn from Washington, Kinston, Tarboro, Farmville, Williamston, Robersonville and all the territory in between were air service available here.

This immediate section has a vital need for franchised air service. The two nearest points for regular franchised air service now are New Bern and Rocky Mount, and both are a little far removed to afford the air service the people of this immediate territory need.

Practically all the cities in this section of the state which have suitable airports are clamoring for franchised air service. The few cities which receive the service as a result of the coming hearings of the Civil Aeronautics Board indeed will be fortunate.

The Pitt-Greenville airport commission and the Greenville Chamber of Commerce are making thorough preparations to present the best possible case for Greenville at the CAB hearings. The decision which the CAB makes will determine whether or not Greenville and its surrounding territory get air service. It is a decision which is extremely important to this area.

But One Choice In The Power Matter

From both the immediate and the long range points of view, the board of aldermen and the Greenville Utilities Commission have little choice in the matter of the proposal for an interconnection with the Virginia Electric Power Company.

If Greenville is to have sufficient power to meet its needs two years from now, the city utilities must interconnect with the Virginia Electric Power Company.

Theoretically the city can elect one of two lines of action: It can interconnect with the private company on an exchange basis and pay an annual facilities charge of $20,000 plus a nominal rate for power exchanged; or it can issue $1,500,000 in city bonds and install the necessary equipment to provide the power the city will need by the fall of 1952 and 1953.

From a practical standpoint, however, the further expansion of the local plant must be ruled out at the present time for several reasons.

In the first place, the city's bonded indebtedness already is expanded to the limit if it is to have favorable interest rates on the bonds it issues. In other words the city can't borrow the necessary money on a sound business basis. Secondly, if the city could maneuver to borrow the money, it could not get delivery on the needed generating equipment for two and one-half to three years; and by that time the present power facilities would fall far short of providing the power needed on the lines of the utilities plant.

Thirdly, if the city did borrow the $1,500,000 to expand the plant, the annual overhead charge on the money to provide the additional power would amount to an estimated $97,500 annually, compared with the $20,000 annual overhead charge the city will have if it makes arrangements with Virginia Electric Power Company for the interconnection.

The city has secured from the private power company a favorable contract both for the exchange of power, and likewise for the purchase of firm power from the private company when the time comes within the next two years when the city needs to purchase firm power.

The terms of the contract for firm power will not only allow the local utilities to purchase power cheaper than it can produce it at the present time, but it will enable the local power plant to produce power at a more efficient level than it is doing at the present time.

Greenville must have additional power from some source. The only practical way now at hand for the city to get this additional power is through the interconnection contract with the Virginia Electric Power Company.

News Behind The News

By RAY TUCKER

WASHINGTON—Lieutenant General Albert Coady Wedemeyer's demand for retirement at the age of only fifty-three highlights the fact that the so-called "Truman purge" and integration of American military forces with the United Nations Army combine to deprive our defense establishment of some of its most experienced advisers and strategists.

As a result of differences over both foreign policy and domestic preparation for war, the United States will have lost within a few years such outstanding figures as General Douglas MacArthur, former Chief of Naval Operations Louis E. Denfeld, and now General Wedemeyer.

It is no exaggeration to say that there remain no trio of leaders who compare with them in their respective fields.

VICTIMS—Although the three left the service under different circumstances, assuming that General Wedemeyer rejects Pentagon requests to withdraw his retirement application, they were victims of White House disciplinary action. The MacArthur episode is too fresh in the public mind to require any discussion.

Admiral Denfeld resigned after he was demoted for daring to oppose the Truman-Johnson scrapping of the proposed super aircraft carrier, the United States. Ironically, former Defense Secretary Johnson was forced out soon after this episode, and the super-carrier is to be built.

SYMPATHY—Despite inspired reports to the contrary, General Wedemeyer has been in a quitting mood since his prophetic report on both China and Korea was suppressed by the White House and State Department several years ago.

Inasmuch as he will not be fifty-four until July 9, and is reportedly in excellent health, his friends here attribute his action to general sympathy with the MacArthur attitude on Far Eastern policies.

Although there are honest differences of opinion on this question, it is reported that naval morale suffered when Admiral Denfeld stepped out because he was known as a "sailor's sailor." Current reports say that MacArthur's dismissal, especially in view of the circumstances surrounding it, has had a similar effect throughout Army personnel.

LOST—Defense Secretary George C. Marshall has been promised he will be permitted to return to his quiet home in Leesburg, Va., as soon as the present session of Congress has enacted the defense program he has framed. With only a few changes, mainly a reduction in the amount of foreign economic and military aid, it is expected that the Marshall plan will be approved by early fall at the latest.

Insofar as leading, training or framing strategy for American troops are concerned, the United States has lost the services of General "Ike" Eisenhower, and one of the outstanding, younger men of the Army. He is Major General Alfred M. Gruenther, who now serves as Chief of Staff for General Eisenhower's European defense organization.

RAVAGES—In addition to these more spectacular losses, several less known Army-Navy executives have left the colors in the wake of the Denfeld and MacArthur episodes. Together with the disappearance of numerous World War II heroes for reasons of death, age or health—Admirals Leahy, Halsey, Nimitz, Generals Arnold, Patton, Walker—the Truman shakeup has caused the severest ravages in the ranks of top-level strategists in many years.

It is no disparagement to the surviving chiefs of staff—Joint Staffers like Bradley, Sherman, Collins and Vandenberg—to note that they do not begin to measure up to their predecessors. They are excellent soldiers, sailors and airmen, but it will take years for them to attain the stature and seasoning of the "old soldiers" who just fade away.

GENERALISSIMO—The most frequent, after-hours visitor at Blair House since the MacArthur blowup has been Democratic National Chairman William M. Boyle Jr. He is President Truman's generalissimo in preparing a nationwide counterattack against hostile reaction to the Truman-MacArthur disagreement on Far Eastern policy.

Mr. Boyle immediately scheduled two previously unplanned regional meetings for Denver, where party bigwigs from Washington will indoctrinate state and local Democrats and furnish answers to attacks on the Administration.

Delegates from twenty-five Midwestern and Far Western states, where MacArthur sentiment seems to be strongest, will assemble at the Colorado Capital May 23 and 24. On May 25, the Democratic National Committee meet there to select a 1952 convention site.

Mr. Boyle has listed "military problems and international relations" as a topic for discussion, although only organizational questions are usually taken up at these conferences. It is significant that two faces new political rallies—Secretary Acheson and W. Averell Harriman, White House adviser on foreign affairs—are listed as prominent speakers.

Don't Shoot Any Bears Til They Bite You

Somebody Told Me

By L. J. (Jack) EDWARDS, JR.

For some reason that I can't understand, Wife Rachel doesn't particularly enjoy my reading to her. However, there are times when I see something that strikes me as interesting, so I spell it off to her. Last night it was a few surprising figures, like:

1. More than 1,000,000 book matches are given away with tobacco purchases every hour of the day.

2. Money is worn out at the rate of $40,000,000 a day. Every 24 hours eight tons of discarded bills, 80 per cent of them $1 bills, are returned to the U. S. Treasury.

3. American families received $10,200,000 a day, or $118 a second, from their insurance companies last year.

4. In a lifetime, the average American woman washes 2,500,000 dishes, enough to make 72 stacks, each as high as the Empire State Building.

Frankly, I don't think W. R. had been listening too carefully until I read the one about the dishes.

"Well," she exclaimed, "I have often wondered how many it must be. But don't you think it's more than that? Only 2,500,000? It seems like almost that many a year to me."

Now W. R. never has particularly seemed to mind washing dishes, so I was somewhat surprised at her statement.

My comeback was, "That statement completely disregards the poor American man. How many million dishes a year does the poor man wash?" After comparing figures, W. R. convinced me that in this house the percentage would be very small.

Having lost my point there, I set out for a new one. "Whoever wrote this article," I said, "missed the boat. He should have stated how many tons of garbage the American man takes out of doors a year. To me it seems like a blue million, but I'll bet that an actual count would reveal that at least five tons a year are carried by the average husband."

"Wait just a minute," W. R. shot back. "I'll grant you that the average American husband probably takes out the garbage. But let me point out that the average American husband also works. And while he's off at work the garbage continues to accumulate. And even if the housewife does object to it, there are times when she is forced to empty it."

"Well," I replied, "let's settle this thing this way: The housewife probably empties a little garbage, and the husband probably washes a few dishes. Both do this only when they can't get out of it. At the end of the year it probably will balance itself out."

Therefore, you can give the wife full credit on the dishes and the husband full credit on the garbage. Washing dishes is a much more pleasant job than emptying garbage, so the wife has the best deal."

You don't have to be told that the conversation didn't end there. The grass always looks greener in the other man's yard, even with the husband and wife.

And I thank you.

NEWSPAPERMEN—Meetings of press associations get less publicity than those of comparable groups in other trades and professions. The reason may be that newspaper folks get so fed up with attempts to work propaganda into news releases that they go too far in the other direction with respect to publicizing their own affairs. That was true of the Eastern North Carolina Press Association spring meeting at Edenton. Voted one of the best ever held by the group, the meeting had a remarkably little publicity. It began Friday with a luncheon at Williamston—which wasn't a luncheon at all, but a real country dinner of barbecued chicken and vegetables, including corn on the cob and everything else passed for second and third refills if desired—and no speechmaking. The banquet at Edenton that night was an average affair of us 'inds, with an after dinner speech by Wade Marr. The program was concluded with an outdoor cafeteria-picnic style luncheon at Brandon, home of Mrs. Inglis Fletcher, noted authoress, and her family with "Squire John" and his ancient fox horn calling the tune. The visitors were charmed with Brandon and with the hostess, who sketched briefly some of the history of the community.

CLINICAL—These social occasions were enjoyable and valuable, but heart of the session was the morning and afternoon clinics when the editors and publishers let down their hair for frank discussion of problems. There was obvious interest in increasing business revenue, but major attention was given to service. Use of pictures, style and arrangement in presenting news, appropriate balance between local and general news, as well as balance in each division among stories dealing with crime, politics, society, sports and other topics took to place in discussion. More pictures are being used, the weekly and semi-weekly papers now giving as much attention to them as the dailies. In fact, weekly folks took the lead in discussion of photographic and engraving processes, as well as placement of pictures in the newspaper forms.

PROFIT—Newspapers are operated as business enterprises for profit. The old kind of newspaper that was published for propaganda purposes and devoted to discussions at Edenton also made it very clear that the business office does not dictate editorial or news policy. Most newspaper publishers regard their papers as public utilities, dedicated to the public service of collecting and purveying all the news and editorial interpretation of the probable effect of individual happenings upon current history.

DISCRETIONARY—There was frank admission that such interpretation inevitably involves the writer's personal opinion, and that there is wide discretion in "playing up" or "playing down" different types of news. Two newspapers, for example, will handle exactly the same story about crime and the same story about politics. One will put a front-page streamer headline on the crime yarn, put the political item on an inside page with a small head; the other will reverse the order. The discussions revolved around extent to which such discretion should be carried in order to maintain proper balance and keep faith with all readers. One newspaper may feature farm news, another may paramount industrial developments. Consensus seemed to be that while publishers have discretionary choice the readers also have right of selection and competition will take care of the whole matter. And that gets back to the profit motive, because newspaper folks are coming to realize that the reading public has displaced the business office and the editorial desk as the controlling agent in determining content of the newspaper. Within reasonable limits the papers publish what the readers want. One man confessed that he hadn't paid much attention to pictures until television forced him to do so. In other words, the business office did not want to buy cameras and engravers, the reporters didn't want to bother with pictures—but the readers demanded them—and got them.

What's wrong with the ABC small-salaried clerk getting into politics? Didn't he get place and position through and by reason of politics? And, do you expect him to give up his political rights automatically upon assumption of his liquor-selling job? Why should he? The people who gave him the job, and the Legislature, which made ABC jobs possible, are head over heels in politics. Why shouldn't government encourage, foster and actually construct, if need be, more power generating units, whether they be actual dams and plants or transmission lines to carry electricity where needed? Didn't government father some of this nation's greatest and most successful conservation, irrigation,

Let the doctors stay in politics, right where they have been all along and where they have a right to be. But, why stymie every step the government makes towards fostering a universal health program and making it possible for everybody to benefit by the program? Which brand of politics is the best, or the worst—the doctor kind or the government kind?

Where does politics begin and where does it end? Who should get into it, and when are you "in politics" anyhow?

I'm not sure this theory concerning the desirability of specialized ignorance will work out as well in all circumstances. I'll concede that today ambitious architects, doctors, lawyers and nuclear scientists who are also women stand in grave danger of being drawn into secretarial work if they have the ability. If the conversation of executives is any indication, a competent secretary today is a rare jewel indeed, and one which once discovered becomes a captive of her own unique perfection.

Business Today

By ELMER ROESSNER

A number of constructive steps to preserve small business from the pressures of the defense program have been taken by the Administration.

A month ago it was pointed out here that the plight of many small firms was serious, so serious that it was certain that the government would take action. This is now happening. Measures taken so far won't guarantee the survival of small operations, but they do give them more of a chance. Some of those measures are:

The Department of Justice has recommended speed in "central procurement planning" to spread defense contracts equitably throughout the economy. Washington observers regard this as a warning to the armed services to speed plans to give small contractors a better break.

Justice also endorsed plans to establish a counterpart of the old Small War Plants Corporation to accept government contracts on behalf of groups of small plants.

Administrator Manly Fleischmann of the National Production Authority promised small business would get a fair share of rapid tax amortization privileges, which so far have gone largely to big corporations.

The Defense Production Administration has launched a program to get war contractors to subcontract more of their work, to make better use of small plants, and to channel more information on contracts to small companies. The DPA has succeeded in getting commissions formed in 29 states to get more contracts for little fellows.

The Department of Defense is establishing more exhibitions of parts needed, with information on how to get contracts for supplying them. The Air Force recently held an exhibit on Navy Pier, Chicago, of items wanted by 76 prime contractors.

One of the reasons the fight to abolish the Reconstruction Finance Corporation died in Congress was that this agency has been helpful to small business—and could be more so. The RFC says that 90 per cent of its loans have been to small enterprises in amounts less than $100,000.

No one of these steps can safeguard every small business in times like these. In fact, no matter what actions are taken, a large number of small businesses will be closed by shortages and other effects of the defense program. But these steps do help, and small business will probably settle for a fighting chance.

VETERANS' HOMES' VALUE MAY RISE

Reductions in home building and possibilities of higher interest rates will put a lot of veterans in position to make good profits on their government-financed homes, real estate men say. The lack of new building will enhance the value of existing homes. And if mortgage rates rise, the transfer of existing long-term mortgages at low rates will mean savings of several thousand dollars to each buyer, some of which will be reflected in the selling price.

However, veterans' selling homes can't get another government-insured mortgage. ANCIEN CONTEST REVIVED BY BANK

One of the oldest guessing games is being revived as an attention-getter by a New Jersey bank. It has placed a large birthday candle in its window and offers prizes for the best guesses on how long it will burn.

Sweepstakes based on the length of time a candle would burn go back to early days of Rome, if not further. DRAWS HUNDREDS

A different kind of contest is being held by an Omaha appliance store. All visitors to the store were invited to sign a dated register. At the end of a month, the store will open an envelope deposited with a local bank and reveal a date. All those who registered on that date will receive a prize.

The contest is reported to be bringing in about 100 persons a day and to increase sales by 25 per cent. WINS GOOD WILL WITH BARGAIN CARS

To keep employees happy, one company sells them its used autos. When an auto is to be replaced, its trade-in allowance is ascertained. Then it is offered to employees for the trade-in price. When more than one worker wants the same car, lots are drawn. The company is considering the sale of used typewriters and other equipment on the same basis. The plan costs the company nothing.

A young woman architect, interviewed in New York recently, attributed much of her present success to the fact she had never learned typing and shorthand.

Her theory was that if she'd been able to take dictation with acceptable speed and to palm out letters for signature, she'd never have gotten out of a clerical rut. She would never have had an opportunity to address a drafting board and dream up ranch homes with extra closet space and time-saver kitchens.

This is a very interesting bit of philosophy and the woman architect has made a very persuasive case for herself. It is not, however, exactly new. My paternal grandmother operated successfully through her entire life on the theory of success through deliberate ignorance (although I've always thought she knew more than she let on.)

Grandmother decided as a young girl that if she never learned to cook she'd never have to cook. This was quite a decision in a day when a woman's role was almost entirely that of homemaker. She stuck to it, however, throughout a long married life, the upbringing of a large family and right up to her death a few years ago at the age of 85.

She sewed magnificently and constantly, loved to get into the middle of big housecleaning jobs, drove her own car and could fix ailing electric light cords. But she couldn't cook; she said. And she never did potwallop in her whole life.

During most of her life, of course, domestics were in great supply, this non-cooking never was much of a problem. But there were a few times of crisis when it looked as though Grandmother would either starve or get in front of a stove. Something always turned up to save the day usually a member of the family.

She must have been a bit of a fraud. I have heard her give instructions for the preparation of food in minute detail and I do know that through a long succession of cooks, food in her house always was prepared to the same standards. I've concluded that for some reason or other she did not like cooking and figured out that ignorance was the smartest way of avoiding a disagreeable chore. She thought highly of her decision and although she trained her daughters and granddaughters to be good needlewomen, electricians, sharpeners of carving knives and curtain laundresses, she counseled them to remain away from pots and pans. And without a single exception, they all turned out to love cooking, much to her disappointment.

I'm not sure this theory concerning the desirability of specialized ignorance will work out as well in all circumstances. I'll concede that today ambitious architects, doctors, lawyers and nuclear scientists who are also women stand in grave danger of being drawn into secretarial work if they have the ability. at cross-filing and stencil-butting could be a great help. The trick to win freedom from that grind—if it's a grind—is to become a mediocre secretary. A downright bad secretary would be fired, but an employer might consider giving a chance to an unsensational and replaceable secretary.

I know a successful New York talent scout who got her job because she was a nice, personable employee who got more wrong than right numbers on an advertising agency's switchboard, and made a less successful showing as a secretary. They finally made her an assistant to a department head and she succeeded her boss in the job.

Grandmother could have kept her successful distance from the kitchen if she had only demonstrated she was a wretched cook. She didn't have to make such a production out of ignorance.

Washington Letter

By JANE EADS

WASHINGTON—It's your capital, kids, and the Washington city fathers want you to come and see it in the easiest way and at least expense.

Estimating that some 400,000 school children come to Washington each year, they've come up with a concise 40-page, sprightly-illustrated how-to-do-it booklet. It tells would-be Capital visitors how to plan the trip and what to see in Washington and its environs. It even tells them how to behave once they get here.

Prepared by the Greater National Capital Committee in cooperation with the Division of Travel Service of the National Education Association, the booklet is aimed primarily at school superintendents and teachers.

Scout leaders and directors of young people's organizations. Already slated at request are some 2,000 or more of the 10,000 first copies printed.

When is the best time to visit Washington? Anytime, says the booklet, "because Washington bustles with activities 12 months of the year. The national

N.C. Soldiers Return To U.S. After Bitter Fighting In Korea

CAMP STONEMAN, Cal.—(UP)—Forty-seven excited soldiers, veterans of nine months of fighting in Korea, headed for their homes in North Carolina today.

The Southerners were part of a group of 1,442 Army men who came home yesterday on rotation for furloughs and new assignments. As the Navy transport Raymond D. Beaudoin passed under the Golden Gate bridge shortly after noon they were greeted by a 17-gun salute boomed from guns at the San Francisco Presidio.

Navy jets and Corsair fighters roared overhead in an aerial guard of honor. Ten flag-decked tugs spouted water and tooted their whistles. At the Fort Mason dock in San Francisco was a military police bagpipe band in kilts.

Despite the warm welcome the North Carolinians all said they were rarin' to go home as fast as they could get there.

After the ship docked the soldiers boarded a ferry for a 90-minute trip to Camp Stoneman across the bay. Last night they were processed and most expected to be on their way East today.

On the way into port the men talked of everything from food to Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

"Man, wait till I get that steak dinner!" said Cpl. Douglas L. Wolfe, 18 of 2138 Hollywood St., Winston-Salem.

For Wolfe, who is with the 9th Infantry of the Second Division it was the first look at San Francisco. He said he didn't think he'd stay around, however.

Sgt. Allen C. Hunt of near Rowland said he was really looking forward to a "big plate of oysters," something he hadn't found in Korea. Sgt. Hunt hasn't been home in two years.

Another North Carolinian, Sgt. William P. Tobias of Albemarle, said he didn't think much of MacArthur. Tobias, 25, is a member of the 7th Division 17th Regimental Combat Team. He hasn't been home for 46 months.

On the other hand Sgt. IC Berry H. Means of Mount Holly said that he thought nine-tenths of the soldiers would agree with him that "MacArthur is right."

Sgt. Meams is doubly anxious to get home. He has a son he has never seen.

M-Sgt. Eliza McLaughlin, 27, of Elberfe talked of the monotony on board ship. He said he just polished his shoes over and over trying to make them pass. He is also with the 9th Infantry.

M-Sgt. Ernest R. Pope of Hope Mills said he was routed out of bed at 3 a.m. to help get the Beaudoin "ship-shape" for its big entrance into San Francisco Bay. Pope has spent 37 months overseas with the 24th Division 8th Regimental Combat Team.

As the big gray ship nosed into a Port Mason dock there were three movie stars to wave hello. Alexis Smith, Craig Reynolds and Mercedes McCambridge were introduced to the men while nearly 1,000 relatives cheered.

Then the bagpipes played, the men picked up their duffle bags and the brightly colored Japanese cue sticks many were carrying, and filed onto the ferry for the last boat trip before home.

Sunlight Blamed For Explosions

GREENSBORO—(UP)—Two violent explosions here yesterday were blamed today on the warm sun which heated barrels of acid at Burlington Mills.

Company spokesmen said the acid was stored in 50-gallon drums. The acid ordinarily is kept cool because it is highly volatile.

The drums were set outdoors to get them out of the way of construction work, the company said, and the heat caused the acid to vaporize and build up pressure. The resulting explosion did little damage.

Good Literature As Well As Good Law In Opinions By Supreme Court

By LYNN NISBET

RALEIGH—The average layman is often confused by legal phraseology used by supreme court justices in enunciating opinions of the court. Most of the opinions, however, are well worth reading for literature.

Someone has proposed that supreme court reports might well be required reading in high school and college classes in English.

An example of easily understood legal expression and pleasant reading is afforded in a current opinion written by Associate Justice Sam Ervin, Jr., of the state supreme court.

A defendant had appealed from sentence imposed by Judge Hoyle Sink upon conviction on a drunken driving charge. The appeal was based chiefly upon contentions that the trial judge had been indiscreet in comments made in presence of the jury. After briefly reviewing the facts and contentions presented on appeal, Justice Ervin writes:

"Every person charged with crime has an absolute right to a fair trial. By this it is meant that he is entitled to a trial before an impartial judge and an unprejudiced jury in an atmosphere of judicial calm.

The responsibility of enforcing this right necessarily rests upon the trial judge. He should conduct himself with the utmost caution in order that the right of the accused to a fair trial may not be nullified by an act of his.

"The trial judge occupies an exalted station. Jurors entertain great respect for his opinion, and are easily influenced by any suggestion coming from him. As a consequence, he must abstain from conduct or language which tends to discredit or prejudice the accused or his cause with the jury.

"The bare possibility, however, that an accused may have suffered prejudice from the conduct or language of the judge is not sufficient to overthrow an adverse verdict. The criterion for determining whether or not the trial judge has deprived an accused of his right to a fair trial by improper comments or remarks in the hearing of the jury is the probable effect of the language upon the jury. In applying this test, the utterance of the judge is to be considered in the light of the circumstances under which it was made. This is so because 'a word is not a crystal, transparent and unchanged; it is the skin of a living thought and may vary greatly in color and content according to the circumstances and the time in which it is used.'"

Application of that test to the instant case lead the court to conclude and Justice Ervin to write that Judge Sink's comments during the trial had not prejudiced the case, so the verdict of guilty and the sentence were affirmed.

Presented Deed For Addition al Land For College

Business Manager F. D. Duncan of East Carolina College receives from N. H. Barber of Greenville the deed to the tract known as the Barber Land, which has just been acquired by the college. Looking on is President John Messick of the college.

The 36 acres included in the purchase lie just across Tenth Street from the East Carolina campus. "This tract," stated President Messick recently, "was the last remaining land located near the college and not having buildings already on it." The property was purchased with a view to development as intramural athletic fields for the health and physical education department and for future expansion of the college as need arises.

Last summer five Greenville business men and the Guaranty Bank and Trust Co. of the city realizing the need of the college for additional land, advanced $5,000 for an option on the Barber property in order to hold it until May 1. In addition to the bank, those concerned in this transaction were Ralph M. Garrett, E. Graham Flanagan, J. Herbert Waldrop, Marvin K. Blount, and James T. Little. Through action of the 1951 General Assembly, the purchase of the land by the college was made possible, and the Barber Land has now become the property of East Carolina College.

Plymouth's New "Safety-Flow Ride" Takes Bounce Out of Bumps

MOTION PICTURES made by our engineers show how little the new Plymouth goes up and down when passing over a bump, compared to cars that do not have the new "Safety-Flow Ride." New Oriflow shock absorbers, along with balanced weight distribution, synchronized springing, and other engineering features, hold the car closer to a level plane. They give Plymouth the riding qualities of a car weighing a thousand pounds more, in the opinion of Tom McCahill, automotive expert, writing in Mechanix Illustrated.

OUR TEST DRIVERS repeatedly drove the new Plymouth across ditches and deep holes. Instead of the terrific pitching and tossing you'd expect, the car absorbed the impact and stayed under easy control.

"SAFETY-FLOW RIDE" IS SO STEADY, even on rough roads, that you don't worry about giving rear seat passengers a toss or thump. This means peace of mind as well as bodily comfort. It's relaxed and restful—a completely new experience in riding comfort.

HEADS UP! With "Safety-Flow Ride" you can forget about the condition of the road immediately in front of the car and give your entire attention to oncoming traffic, pedestrians, and intersections ahead.

South Edgecomb Concedes Coastal Playoffs To Ayden

Tornadoes Trim Rivals By 19-5 Margin To Even Score

AYDEN—The Coastal Conference championship play-offs were evened up yesterday as Ayden High School walloped South Edgecomb 19-5 in a free-scoring contest, but a surprise move by the South Edgecomb coach this morning gave the Coastal championship to the Ayden lads.

According to an announcement received from the Pinetops High School entry in the Coastal League, after Ayden's victory yesterday the South Edgecomb team decided against playing the Ayden team again and conceded them the first place honors.

Ayden finished the regular season with only one loss in conference play, that being to South Edgecomb in an early season opener. The Ayden team went on to win the regular season play easily, then meeting South Edgecomb in the play-offs which were set to go three rounds if needed.

Ayden dropped the opening contest by the score of 5-3 in a game played in South Edgecomb on Monday afternoon.

Ayden pushed four runs across in the bottom of the second inning to take a lead which they never lost. Dal Worthington was struck by a pitched ball and was followed to win. Score by innings: S. Edgecomb . 101 000 3-5 4 3 Ayden . 041 140 x-19 11 4

Pitcher Bob Cain Traded To Detroit By White Sox

CHICAGO—(UP)—Southpaw Bob Cain, the New York Yankees' Number One nemesis, was traded to Detroit by the Chicago White Sox in exchange for Saul Rogovin today. Seven other big league clubs prepared to pare to the 25-player limit by midnight.

Cain, a 26-year-old Kansan, won nine games and lost 12 for Chicago last season, beating the Yankees four times. So far this season, he won one game and dropped two. Rogovin, a lanky 200-pound right-hander from Brooklyn, won one and lost one this season and had a last year.

Elsewhere in the American League, Cleveland got down to the 25-player limit by sending Pitchers Jess Flores and Charlie Harris, recently obtained from the Athletics, to San Diego.

That left the Yankees and the Athletics as the only American League clubs above the limit. Both teams have 28 players and must drop three before midnight.

Five National League clubs—the Cardinals, Pirates, Phillies, Giants and Dodgers—were still over the quota and will be forced to cut four players, Pittsburgh three, the Phillies two, and the Giants and Dodgers one apiece.

Robins Walk Home 2 Runs For Tenth Inning Victory

Defeat Rocky Mount 13-11 With Overtime Frame; Kovalchick Credited With Win

By BERT MOYE

Manager John Streza's Robins scored two runs in the tenth frame on walks to Jim Hancock and Jack Dunlavey and Sandy DeMartino's single and an error to defeat the Rocky Mount Leafs, 13-11, over in Rocky Mount last night. The overtime tilt for the Robins marked the second successive night for extra innings.

The Leafs had taken an 8-2 lead with eight runs in the second, but the Robins rallied for three runs in the seventh frame to send the game into overtime after the Leafs had knotted the count in the bottom of the eighth with a singleton.

Rocky Mount lost a chance to win in the ninth. With runners on third and second and one out, Bidwell's attempted squeeze bunt resulted in a double play.

The Leafs used five hurlers in the contest who gave up a total of 10 hits, 13 walks and struck out 11. Robins Manager John Streza with a homer and a double in five trips, Vince Lautato with a double and a single in four trips, Pete Plestrak with two singles in five trips, led the Robins' attack. Jack Dunlavey also hit a two-run homer for the Robins in two trips to the plate.

The Robins used four hurlers in the contest with Johnny Kovalchick, who pitched the final two and one-third frames, being credited with the win, his first of the current season. He has suffered two defeats. The four Robins hurlers gave up a total of 12 hits with Larry Seagraves collecting a triple and two singles in four trips. He also hit a ball out of the park in the first frame but was called out when he failed to touch home plate.

The Robins play the Rocky Mount Leafs here tonight at 7:45 o'clock at which time all ladies will be admitted free. Tonight's contest

No Rhumba For Kid Gavilan 'Til He Wins Crown

SUMMIT, N. J.—(AP)—No rhumba for Kid Gavilan until he wins the welterweight title Friday night in his fight with Johnny Bratton. The Keed is making the supreme sacrifice.

Word leaked back to his training camp that Bratton dismisses him as "just another rhumba dancer."

Gavilan was a little indignant. "Look fran," he said. "I have fight. No rhumba. My legs have balance because I dance mucho. But no rhumba until after fight."

Did the sleek Cuban expect to whip Bratton? "I thenk so."

What did he think of Bratton? "Heez good right hand puncher. No nothing else. Back. Back. Back. All a time back."

Brokers Buy Up Browns' Note

ST. LOUIS—(UP)—A group of St. Louis investment brokers has bought the $700,000 note which the DeWitt brothers owe for the St. Louis Browns.

The note was held by Richard Muckerman, former Browns owner. It represented the money Charles and Bill De Witt owed him for the ball club after their down payment.

Purchase of the note does not mean that the brokers, headed by Mark C. Steinberg, bought any part of the club.

Robins Release Three Players

Three players have recently been given their releases from the Robins, according to Business Manager John Pringle.

Included in the list of releases were two veterans and a rookie. Sam McLawhorn, veteran hurler, who was signed recently by the Robins, has been given his outright release. Willard Mauney, who played with the Robins during the 1949 season, was given his outright release yesterday afternoon. Nicholas Rossman, rookie pitcher, has also been given his outright release by the Greenville ball club.

OK Freshmen In Varsity Sports

NEW YORK—(UP)—Freshmen were given an okay today to play on varsity teams in the Eastern College Athletic Conference, which includes the Ivy League.

The action is part of a nationwide trend already adopted by the Big Ten, Pacific Coast, Southern, Southeastern and Big Seven conferences.

ECAC Commissioner Asa Bushnell said the move was made because the schools expect a sharp drop in enrollment this fall because of the draft.

Here's Where the Pounds Pay Off

FIRST thing that people notice when they take over a Buick is the sure-footed stance this fine automobile has on the road.

You head into a curve and hold firm and true. You travel a turnpike without sway or wander.

While your wheels may dance when you hit a stretch of washboard gravel—your car holds its level course.

A lot of things account for this beautifully poised performance, but it starts with stalwart structure and ample weight—plenty of pounds where pounds are needed.

Please don't get us wrong. This isn't "deadweight." Though a Buick like the one pictured here tips the scales at more than two tons, it's as nimble as an antelope at play.

It has a generous hoodful of valve-in-head Fireball power—packing a powerful punch of velvet velocity.

It comes with the smooth magic of Dynaflo Drive*—a lightness of steering that's gently responsive to a lady's hand—a front-end geometry that's pure genius—the finest brakes ever put on a Buick.

And every wheel rides on shock-eating coil springs that are carefree and trouble-free for the life of your car.

You'll also find—by a few moments of simple arithmetic—that the pounds in this bounteous beauty pay off in another way. On a cents-per-pound basis, it will cost less to buy than anything else near its weight and power and size.

Why not visit us real soon—like the first thing tomorrow—and let us show you why you and your budget will both be happy with this Buick?

Equipment, accessories, trim and models are subject to change without notice.

The SIREN of SILVER VALLEY

By PAUL EVAN LEHMAN

Chapter 21

The following morning dragged along without incident and without Diana. Jeff worried about her, wondering if the headache had persisted, if it had been a prelude to more serious illness. At last, around mid-afternoon, he sighted a buggy approaching along the trail and distinguished the features of Sam and Diana. When they drove into the yard he had assembled the men who were not on duty and made a short little speech of welcome.

"Diana, looking her sweetest, smiled on them and thanked them prettily. 'I'm going to have Mr. Cooper drive me out to see the guards so that I can thank them all in person. Please stay right here. You too, Jeff. When I come back I'll have something to say to all of you.'

They were gone over two hours and the cook had supper ready when they returned. When Jeff leaped forward to hand her from the buggy she said, 'We're going to eat with the men. Tell the cook to set places for us. No fuss, now.'

Delighted, he communicated her wishes to the cook and the men, and there was a concerted rush for soap and razors and clean shirts. Accompanied by Sam and Diana, Jeff entered the Starr home for the first time.

They ate in silence at first, but presently Diana began to talk, asking which was Bill and which was Tom and questioning them about their home and travels and experiences. And soon they were all talking eagerly, anxious for her smile, neglecting their dinners.

The meal was finally finished and Diana said to Sam, 'Will you get the box for me, Mr. Cooper?'

Sam went out and returned with a metal cash box which he set on the table before her. She looked slowly about her. 'This,' she announced, 'is a sort of special payday. To the men lent us by our good neighbors on the Lazy K and the 88, I'm going to pay ten dollars apiece for their one day's work. The rest of you have been signed on a fifty dollars a month and found. I can't keep you all indefinitely, of course, but I'd like you to remain for one month at least. In addition, I'm paying each one of you Double D men a bonus of fifty dollars and I'm going to hand it out now. Will each of you, as I call him, come up and get his money?'

She was a queen, dispensing favors. There was a moment of silence, then a roar of approval. When it had died Diana read the names from her book and handed each grateful cowboy a packet of money.

It was impossible to keep down the noise; men talked to each other and slapped backs and swore that never had they worked for such a boss.

And when they were all paid, Sam shouted for order and got it. Diana said, with that same soft smile on her lips, 'And now for the final expression of my gratitude. Your foreman, Jeff Payne, was engaged at a salary of a hundred and fifty dollars a month and promised a bonus when he drove the Starrs from the valley. He has served just half a month but I am paying him for a full month.' Still smiling, she put a package of banknotes before Jeff.

'As a bonus,' she went on lightly, 'I promised him some cattle with which to start a herd of his own. I'm authorizing him now to select any fifty animals from the Double D herd and will lend him as many men as he needs to drive them to the site he chooses for his range.'

Again came shouts of approval and the excited hum of conversation. Under its cover Jeff leaned forward, his face tight, his eyes glinting. 'And the rest of the reward, Diana? Darling, let me tell them now.'

Her forehead wrinkled in a little frown and she regarded him puzzledly. 'The rest of the reward? I don't understand. Tell them what?'

'That you love me,' he said tightly. 'That you're going to marry me.'

'Marry you! Jeff, you must be crazy!'

Cooper was eyeing him coldly. 'I'm inclined to think he is. What in the world's wrong with you, man?'

'She promised.' Jeff got to his feet angrily, leaning over the table. 'Back there at the Double D.'

She turned wide eyes on Cooper. 'The man's stark mad. I promised no such thing. How could I with Dan dead less than two months?'

Jeff said, 'Diana, look at me! Look me in the face and deny that you promised to marry me!'

She turned her wide-eyed stare upon him. 'Of course I deny it, Jeff. Now please sit down and stop being ridiculous.'

He didn't sit down; he stood there staring unbelievably at her, stunned, numb of brain, hoping he hadn't heard her aright. And then slowly his mind began to function and little suggestive truths began to filter through it. The way she had played both ends against the middle with Walt and Ben; old Pappy Davis' veiled disapproval of her; Ruth Starr's hot words of denunciation; Buddy's infatuation and her denial of having known him; the visits to Sam Cooper, supposedly on business, their drives together. By God, that was

Cooper's hat beneath her bed! Diana tried another smile on him, the smile of a patient mother for a willful child. 'Come Jeff; put the money in your pocket and sit down.'

'The money. Oh, yes.' He picked up the packet and tossed it to the table before her. 'I don't want your money. Sit still, Cooper, or I'll slap your horse face lopsided. I don't want your cattle. I don't want anything you have. You worked on Walt and Ben to get what you wanted and you worked on me to get Silver Valley. And now you have played Lady Bountiful to these men to win them to your side and you've lied about the promises you made to turn them against me. Well, you got everything you wanted. But you'll not keep Silver Valley because I'm going to take it from you.'

Cooper sprang to his feet, his long face white with anger. 'By God, Jeff Payne, you're not going to—'

Jeff hit him. He hit him with every ounce of force he could summon. Sam went backwards over the bench and hit the floor with a heavy thump; and Jeff turned and stumbled blindly through the doorway and into the blackness of the night.

Cooper came to his feet. His lips were bleeding and there was a tooth missing. He cried, 'Don't let him get away! A hundred dollars, five hundred, to the man who gets him!'

They leaped to their feet, reaching for gunbelts which had been hung on wall pegs; then they faced Diana questioningly, remembering that after all she was their boss.

Her cornflower-blue eyes glittered. She said tightly, 'That's my order too. Don't let him get away!'

They surged from the room in pursuit of Jeff.

DiSalle Beef Butchering Plan Is Laid Aside

WASHINGTON—(UP)—Plans to carve up a beef carcass before the House Agriculture Committee were abandoned today by cattlemen.

A spokesman revealed that the beef raisers, after thinking it over, discarded the idea. 'We're only planning to put on an exhibit before the committee Friday,' the spokesman said. 'Three cattle will be brought to the capitol grounds, and some carcasses will be brought into the committee room. It won't be necessary to do any carving and there probably won't be any, except possibly for cutting off a steak or two.'

The earlier plan was supposed to demonstrate publicly that it's impossible to carve up a beef carcass and price the cuts with the precision required by the government price control order.

Iron Triangle' n North Korea Key To Victory

By HARRY FERGUSON

United Press Foreign News Editor The outcome of the Korean War depends almost entirely on what happens in the 'iron triangle' made up of the three North Korean cities of Pyongyang, Chonwon and Kumhwa.

That is the communist staging area, the place where troops are assembled, where ammunition is passed out and where infantrymen are given the final pep talk designed to make them fearless in the face of United Nations artillery and planes.

Round No. 1 of the Chinese offensive started from the 'iron triangle', and it was the refuge that the beaten communist army sought when it fell back on April 27 with a casualty list of 75,000. The eyes and ears of the U.N. army are always on the triangle. Our planes search it constantly for signs that another human sea attack is about to start.

There has been much talk about bases on the Manchurian side of the Yalu river, but in the final analysis it is the troops that can be massed inside the iron triangle that determine the success or failure of any red offensive. Unless they are there they are too far from the battlefield to save the day.

The Chinese communists are not blessed with a surplus of artillery and anti-aircraft, but what little they do have is concentrated for the protection of the triangle. It is estimated there are 40 guns around Chonwon alone and probably more around Pyongyang. They are placed there in an attempt to shoot down U.N. planes and force back any Allied patrol that goes searching for information.

At times there have been as many as 300,000 enemy troops concentrated in the triangle. The apex of the triangle points directly at Seoul, the South Korean capital which is the key to the entire western defense line in Korea. The loss of Seoul would not be fatal to the United Nations cause, but it is a valuable defense hub. When the communist offensive got under way in late April, the Allies wheeled big guns into the streets of the city. The shelling they gave the communists was one of the big factors in repulsing the attack.

There is no indication of the exact number of communist troops massed in the triangle now but probably the bulk of the communists army either is there or on its way there. It could be between 250,000 and 300,000.

These men are trained in moonlight attacks, weird yells, bugle calls and all the other tactics which the communists consider to be psychological warfare.

Psychological warfare has its place in a modern battle, but so far the Reds have found out that no bugle call is a safe bulwark against the thing the Allies are relying on—hot steel pouring out of hundreds of big guns and bombs and jelled gasoline falling into troop concentrations.

Faith Of Imprisoned Peoples Looks To America For Their Light Of Hope

By JOHN FISHER

Among the emotional pinnacles scaled by General MacArthur were the moments, in speeches and testimony, when the old soldier solemnly appealed to the American conscience.

Not only did he express anguish at the prospect of continued, futile "sacrifice of thousands and thousands of American boys" but he recoiled from the thought of abandoning 30 million Koreans to the endless horrors of Communist captivity.

To him "the whole moral tone" seems supremely important, as, through the centuries, it has been to countless others from Jefferson to Lincoln to contemporary Americans. Often in our history comfort, prosperity, even peace, have been subordinated to principle. Perhaps that is why we are a great, as well as, a powerful nation.

The substance of the following is from statements in Washington and elsewhere who oppose appeasement both on the military and ideological levels. They maintain that moral issues must have a pre-eminent place in national policy.

Most Americans, they say, are outraged by the reports that Britain has allowed supplies to reach Korea, via Hong Kong, that were employed by Red China against British Tommies and American soldiers. They are contemptuous of the pettifoggery of United Nations diplomats who offer lame excuses against an arms embargo.

We Have a Pledge and a Duty. Informed readers know that Britain, France and others in recent months have prohibited the export of arms to Russia and Red China. Shipments of many materials vital to munitions also have been limited. Nevertheless some rubber, chemicals, metals and petroleum still reach the Reds and are eventually employed in the process of killing American troops.

Hong Kong "merchants of death" profit on American blood. Their puppet authorities permit unbridled propaganda against the United States. "Comic books" are allowed to circulate portraying Americans as barbarians beating Orientals to death.

Another moral issue is embedded in the question of pulling out of Korea, in case we accept neither the current stalemate nor the expanded action against Communist China.

Koreans trusted us when we intervened. They are fighting shoulder to shoulder with UN forces. As a reward, should they be cast to the wolves? If so, thousands of true friends of America will be murdered and the people held in hideous bondage, aggravated by Communist vengeance.

Our Word Is Our Pride. We were driven from Bataan. But MacArthur kept his promise to return. Were we to quit Korea, the likelihood of return and deliverance is almost non-existent. The sanctity of an American pledge would perish along with countless martyrs.

There was a Germany that deemed an agreement a mere "scrap of paper." And there once was an England that considered her word her bond and rushed Kitchener's tiny army to Belgium to meet the Kaiser's hordes—and, for similar reasons, sped to the aid of Poland against Hitler. That fidelity of word will be honored in history.

"In its nobility," said MacArthur, "the United States, and the United Nations following them, intervened to save Korea." Americans were proud to risk so much for principle. Will not shame be our lot, if now we wash our hands of moral responsibility?

Another moral issue is raised in the question of turning over Formosa to Red China, as some in high places suggest as a bargaining point. If done, Chiang Kai-shek's group will not be the only victims. With him are thousands who helped us fight Imperial Japan and who are dedicated to democracy.

Is it gratifying to sell them down the river? Dreams and Hope Still Live. Not only here but in London powerful voices are crying out against such a deal. "If our spiritual values are really to involve handing over the eight million people of Formosa to be slaughtered," declared Lord Vansittart in the House of Lords. "I think we need a different set of spiritual values."

In solving the problem of predatory world communism, we cannot run away from moral responsibility. It follows and accuses. Of course, our hands cannot always do what our heart whispers. But on the day Americans silence conscience, will they not cease to be Americans—as we have always known the word?

Those holding these opinions point out that Asia is not the only place for soul-searching. They insist that although we do not yet have the key to unlock the Baltic prison, we must not forget the Lithuanians, Estonians and Latvians, whose independent countries were devoured by Russia in 1940.

On last Feb. 16 exiled Lithuanians celebrated the 33rd anniversary of the founding of their republic—as did Estonians on Feb. 24—and dreamed dreams of future independence.

Beams of hope were sent through the Iron Curtain by the "Voice of America." But they did not reach thousands of divided families in far-off Siberian slave camps. These forsaken souls can only pray that the West will not stop doing what it can to eventually set them free.

A System of Depravity. In addition to our will to fight when necessary to save our country the belief is growing that our enmity to Communism is based not only on threats but also on our hatred of the unspeakable evils pervading Communism.

What American can be unmoved by the spectacle of Robert A. Voge, ransomed from a Budapest cell on his arrival in New York, a physical and mental wreck, his wife explained that his voice was weak because "he had spoken to no one in the last 14 months of his imprisonment."

But Communist brutality is not confined to Hungary or Russia.

A Bulgarian, who recently escaped, says Red guards "tied my hands and legs with wire and suspended me head down. The hung weights on my arms. Then they beat me. My wrists started to bleed. Just before I fainted I heard a guard yell, 'I'll gladly drink all your blood, you dirty, capitalist swine.'"

We face more than military power. We face a depraved system that is turning half the world into a dungeon, stamping out religion and depriving mankind of the precious rights won since the Dark Ages. Confronting such malignancy and malevolence, the American conscience is America's greatest weapon.

Still Deadlocked In County Feud

BENTON, Tenn. —(UP)—The "Good Government League" four-some of Polk County's controversial administrative court showed up for a meeting today but about all they could do was answer present.

Four court members on the opposition side stayed away, thus preventing transaction of county business for the fifth time in three months. The court chairman who could break tie votes was killed from ambush last week.

Warning About Dynamite Caps

A city-wide warning to children and young people was issued today by Chief of Police Guy Langston cautioning them not to play with or even touch any dynamite blasting caps they might come upon.

The little cylinders might be shiny copper or aluminum and are loaded with a powerful, sensitive explosive which can put out an eye or tear off a hand or a foot.

"If lost or stolen blasting caps or other forms of explosives are found do not touch them, but advise the local police or sheriff's office," the chief said.

"I have been asked by the International Association of Chiefs of Police in cooperation with the Institute of Makers of Explosives to seek the help of everyone to make a determined effort to carry this warning to all children."

"Maybe we haven't had many or even any accidents like these so far, but that doesn't mean that explosives may not get into the hands of our youngsters."

"These caps are necessary to make dynamite useful in important work, such as mining, building, highway and railroad construction, and clearing farm land of tree stumps and rocks. Often caps are left lying around in unlocked tool sheds, barns, or alongside highways and railroad tracks."

Workers and farmers are cautioned to keep all explosives under strong lock and key."

Results of a national survey reveal that blasting cap accidents to children between the ages of seven and 15 years occurred in 28 states during 1950.

Lobbyists Paid $74,000 In 1951

RALEIGH—(AP)—A tabulation shows lobbyists were paid at least $73,931.58 for their legal services and expenses during the 1951 legislative year.

The figure was compiled yesterday from all lobbyist reports filed to date with Secretary of State Thad Eure. Monday was the deadline for filing reports but several were filed yesterday.

Companies, groups and individuals who were interested in supporting or opposing legislation paid out a total of $46,126.52 to lobbyists for their services and $27,805.06 for their expenses.

The figures do not show the total cost of lobbying. Many lobbyists who reported to Eure were full-time employees of the companies or agencies they represented and did not receive extra compensation for lobbying.

Direct Traffic From Airplanes

SOMEWHERE IN KOREA —(UP)—The MP's are now directing traffic from the air.

Lt. Col. William M. Campbell of Rock Hill, S.C., 10th Corps provost marshal, said the idea worked so well it will be used regularly.

His military police used an L-19 plane to direct five MP Jeeps by radio when a regimental convoy moved down a Korean road.

The aerial MP's watch for engine failures along the roadway and avoid congestion by ordering convoys to speed up or slow down.

Fish-Hungry Burglar Hunted

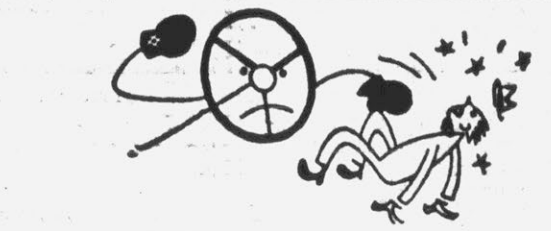

LOS ANGELES—(UP)—Puzzled police were on the lookout today for a burglar with a powerful hunger for fish or a lot of mosquito trouble.

The thief broke into a city health department office and carted off 1,000 tiny Gambusia Affinis, mosquito eating fish.

What puzzles Police is that the health department was giving the fish away free in a drive to liquidate the mosquito population.

Asks Housewives To Conserve Food

Mrs. Amelia Capchart, Negro home demonstration agent for Pitt County, today reminded that "production and conservation is the watchword for farm women and others this year." She pointed out that it is the patriotic duty of every home-maker to see that her family receives proper foods for nourishment. She also reminded home-makers that it is their duty to produce, conserve and preserve food in order to carry out the program to "produce, conserve and consume."

Gardens are at their very best at this season of the year in Pitt County and home demonstration club members and others are urged to produce all the food possible during the growing season. Strawberries are making their highest yields at this time. These berries come in at a time when nature decides that the human body needs the food value and vitamins in them," the Negro home demonstration agent advised.

She suggested using the surplus crop of strawberries for making jam and preserves and storing them in freezer lockers for use during the remainder of the year. Mrs. Capchart said early gardens provide foodstuff for canning or storing in freezer lockers. She advised housewives to conserve all the foodstuffs possible now and leave the way clear for the more strenuous work of the tobacco season.

"Rural Negro families in Pitt County can spend less money and eat better food by producing more food at home and conserving it," the Negro home demonstration agent stated.

Privilege License Based On Census

The 1950 census will be used in determining State Schedule "B" license tax liability for the tax year beginning June 1.

The public was reminded of that fact today by Ronald E. Mintz, local deputy collector for the state Department of revenue. He called attention to the fact, also, that many privilege licenses are based on population and suggests that the taxpayers refer to the Schedule "B" partial list which is being mailed together with application blanks to taxpayers throughout the state within the next few days.

Privilege licenses not based on population will not be affected by these population changes, he said. The 1950 population figures, subject to correction, for some of the places in Pitt County are: Ayden, 2,277; Bethel, 1,398; Farmville, 2,941; and Greenville, 16,713.

If any taxpayers in Pitt or Greene counties are in doubt as to their correct tax liability or need assistance in filing their applications, Mintz suggested that they contact his office in the courthouse here or telephone 618 for the necessary information.

Another 'Explosion' In County Was Just A Large Firecracker

Another explosion took place in the county yesterday but the sheriff's office called it just a "prank."

About 11:45 yesterday morning, a large firecracker exploded in the yard of Bruce Patrick at Grifton. Patrick's wife was in the back yard and ran to the front as she heard the explosion, which burned grass about five yards in front of the house and 20 yards from the road. The large firecracker was about six inches long and three inches wide and officials believe it was thrown from a passing car.

Grifton Chief-of-Police Herbert Adams, the SBI and the sheriff's office investigated the explosion.

Police found the woman in a lonely place near the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad tracks Saturday night. She was drunk and in a profound stupor when officers carried her into the police station. The offensive exploded on the

The communists knocked South Korean troops off two hills, stormed into Inje early Wednesday, and continued driving south with attacks of mounting fury.

The Inje assault followed the usual pattern of a communist offensive—to strike against South Korean troops, break through, and force the Allies to withdraw in other sectors.

the Pacific. I think that is infinitely greater in its potential destructiveness to western Europe than if we let it run indefinitely. . . .

Marshall and Bradley don't agree that MacArthur's ideas for ending the Korean fighting fast would work.

Why does MacArthur doubt that Russia would be pulled into a world war if we bombed Manchuria?

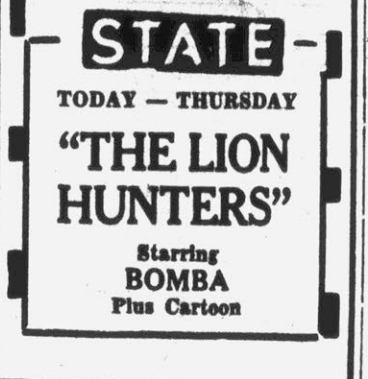

(Russia has an agreement to come to China's assistance if she is attacked. So far no attack has been made on Chinese territory but only on the Chinese in Korea.)

MacArthur was asked that question by senators.

MacArthur gave this reply, sharply briefed down here:

He doesn't think Russia will be pulled into a war by anything that happens in Korea or Asia unless the Soviets are ready to go to war anyway and want to. He said he doesn't think Russia could wage "all-out" war in Asia very long.

However, there seems to be no

Indication at this writing that Uncle Sam would agree to joint use of the big stick.

There is a strong feeling in some Washington circles that Britain's handling of the oil developments has been injudicious and that a more liberal attitude should have been adopted. Some critics claim that the British have given in only where they were compelled to,

with the result that the Iranians finally have revolted. As a matter of fact, the United States has advised Britain in previous developments to make terms.

The above appraisal can be qualified by the statement that if the British would abandon the "big stick" attitude, the United States might follow her. But any idea of an ultimatum would be out, as being dangerous.
