Iran Spokesman Pledges Stand Or Destruction

Declares Either Oil Nationalized Or Will Destroy Selves And World

TEHRAN (AP)—Hussein Maki, right-hand man of Nationalist Premier Mohammed Mossadegh, said today Iran either will achieve her goal of nationalization of oil or "we will be destroyed and all the world with us."

This statement—described as the most inflammatory yet made by any responsible member of Mossadegh's group—was given to reporters shortly after the Premier read to a secret session of the Senate the text of President Truman's letter urging Iran to try to settle peacefully the explosive British-Iranian oil dispute.

Maki, who is secretary of the joint parliamentary commission appointed to take over the vast resources of the British-owned Anglo-Iranian Oil Company, said, "We have burned all bridges behind us and there is no way of retreat."

"We have reached a stage that either we will reach our goal and be prosperous or we will be destroyed and all the world with us," he told a news conference.

A senator who was present at the secret session termed President Truman's message to Iran "very strong." Although the text of the letter still has not been made available he expressed "great concern" over the oil crisis and urged Iran to negotiate with Britain on the basis of the principle of nationalization.

(The president also sent a letter to Prime Minister Attlee. London informants said he urged the British to try to satisfy some of Iran's demands in the dispute and work toward a settlement. The British government, which owns 40 percent of the stock of the billion dollar Anglo-Iranian Co. Company, is resisting nationalization.)

A reliable source who said he had seen the Truman letter to Mossadegh gave this version of what the President said:

"I am greatly concerned over the explosive situation which exists at present between Britain and Iran.

"I welcome, however, the fact that you are willing and indeed anxious to receive a delegation including, if necessary, (British) government members for the purpose of negotiations on the basis of the principle of nationalization; and I hope to persuade the British government to send such a delegation."

The president's letter also was said to have urged Iran to take no action which would deteriorate relations with Britain.

'Truck' Fire Alarm

A big truck passing through Greenville about 3 a. m. today collided slightly with a pole on which a fire alarm box is attached at Five Points and accidentally turned in an alarm.

Assistant Fire Chief Jasper Jones said the truck driver left his vehicle and ran to the fire station to report what had occurred. The fire trucks did not leave the building. The driver, whose name is unknown, continued on his journey.

North Carolina Conference Of Woman's Society Of Christian Service Closing Annual Meeting Today

By MARTHA FORBES

The presentation of Honorary Life Patron pins and an address by Mrs. Frank G. Brooks of Mount Vernon, Iowa, featured the Friday morning session of the North Carolina Conference of the Woman's Society of Christian Service meeting for its eleventh annual session on the campus at East Carolina College.

Mrs. H. L. McLeod of Johns, Conference vice president, presided over the morning session, and Mrs. E. L. Hillman of Durham, gave the meditation, using as her theme "The Community Is Our Parish."

Rev. J. E. Garlington of Conway, president of the N. C. Conference Board of Missions and Church Extension, gave an inspiring message on the relationship of the Woman's Society to the total program of the church.

He stressed the fact that there are great opportunities for work and expansion offered to churches today, and the women of the church through their interest, enthusiasm and wide field of knowledge are largely responsible for carrying forward the program of the church.

"We need to feel, like Jesus, that we must be up and doing about our Father's business," Mr. Garlington said. The various divisions and organizations of the churches are working toward one common goal of bringing the world to Christ, he stated, and they must beware of getting bogged down in non-essentials.

"We must be on speaking terms with our Lord if we are going to work for Him," he suggested in emphasizing the role of service. "We were born to serve and not to be served, and we must give ourselves in service in winning souls for Christ."

Mrs. Frank G. Brooks spoke of the urgent needs in fields of service, and suggested that the greatest responsibility of the more mature people in the church is to present the challenge for life service and dedication in such a way that it will be appealing to young people and attract more of them into the fields of missions, education, medical work and social services.

"If this challenge is not presented through local churches," she said, "it will not be answered. There is an urgent necessity for older people to teach the young people about the work on home and foreign fields and to guide young people to dedicate their lives to this service. The world needs builders, constructionists, engineers, technologists, teachers and workers in all fields, and the church can find a place for them in their various activities. It is the duty of society members and parents to inform young people of these opportunities."

Following the closing prayer by Mrs. J. H. Rose who made some appropriate remarks to graduation. Diplomas were awarded to the following students by J. B. James, chairman of the Board of Trustees, and O. E. Dowd, high school principal: Douglas Allen, Joan Allen, John A. Melba Andrews, Burren Theodore Batson, J. George William Brady, Betty Jane Bunch, Joel Bunch, John David Cannon, Carolyn Clapp, Catherine Clark, James Clark, Joseph Clark, Shirley Rose Clark, and Peggy Ann Cox.

McDonald Crawford, Joseph Earl Daugherty, Doris Dawson, James Dillingham, Dolores Faulkner, Mar-

ceeding one and he pointed out the things in which the youth of Greenville believe in and portrayed the situation as he saw it. Fulcher cited five major convictions which he said were prevalent in the minds of the young people of Greenville: First, we believe in God; second, we believe in Church; third, we believe in school; fourth, we believe in a home; and fifth, we believe in you, parents, teachers, ministers, and city fathers.

After the speakers, a girl's trio composed of Mary Ann Waldrop, Barbara White, and Carolyn Clapp, sang "Clair de Lune," followed by J. H. Rose who made some appropriate remarks to graduation.

General Advises Reds, 'Go Home'

Van Fleet Reins In Eighth Army For 'New Phase'

Eighth Army Commander Says His Force Can Whip Chinese Any Time And Any Place; Cites Huge Casualties Of Enemy

Brings Drive Into North Korea To Virtual Halt As Red Defenses Build Up

TOKYO, Sunday (UP)—Lt. Gen. James A. Van Fleet reined in his 8th Army Saturday and announced that the Korean war had entered a new phase.

The United Nations forces brought their drive into North Korea almost to a halt, apparently to clear the way for a new attempt to negotiate a peace settlement.

In the central and eastern sectors, fighting still was under way. UN forces used flame throwers to gain from one to three miles in these areas, but Van Fleet indicated he planned no major push deep into North Korea.

A dispatch from the western front said Chinese forces in the area refused to yield more than a few yards and there were signs the Reds were building up their positions south of Chorwon.

The dispatch was heavily censored, but it said that Red artillery has been growing in power during recent weeks. There were suggestions that the Chinese might have one of their Russian-style artillery divisions in the Chorwon sector.

Officers were quoted as saying that Red morale is more impressive now than at any time since the Chinese army tried to storm the Pusan bridgehead last summer. A Red artillery division usually has up to 72 guns, mostly 76 and 122 millimeter types. The Chinese lost part of such a division in April.

Van Fleet's statement, in effect, put the responsibility for any future large-scale fighting on the Communists. However, he did not rule out the possibility of minor UN tactical advances in the future.

An 8th Army communique tonight reported UN attacks only in the Hwachon Reservoir area of central Korea and around Inje in the eastern mountains.

Kinston To Be Site Of Air Force Training School

KINSTON (AP)—Some of the Air Force's cadets will come to Kinston to earn their wings, beginning next fall.

Truman Miller of Raleigh, president of Ser-Air, Inc., announced yesterday that his company has been awarded a contract to set up a flight training school at the Kinston air field, used by the Cherry Point Marines during World War II.

Approximately $250,000 will be spent to rehabilitate the base in preparation for the training program which is set to begin in November, Miller said. It will be able to take care of close to 600 cadets, Miller said.

Summer School

Summer school at Greenville High School will begin Tuesday morning, June 5, at 9 o'clock.

All students who are entering summer school are requested by O. E. Dowd, principal, to report to the auditorium, and students who have not registered may do so all day Monday, June 4.

By WILLIAM BURSON United Press Staff Correspondent

8TH ARMY—Korea—(UP)—The 8th Army has killed, wounded or captured nearly 100,000 Reds in smashing the Communist spring offensive and can "whip the Chinese Army anytime anywhere," Lt. Gen. James A. Van Fleet said today.

"The Chinese Army in Korea hasn't a chance," the 8th Army commander said. "The best thing it can do is go home."

But, he told a press conference, the Reds have enough reserves in forward areas for "still another round."

Van Fleet implied strongly that his forces will not push much farther north of the 38th parallel and might even find it necessary to fall back south of that old frontier in the event of a new Communist offensive.

The 8th Army's pursuit phase has now ended with the clearing again of enemy units from South Korea—less those in the former border areas west of the Imjin River (northwest of Seoul)," he said.

"The 8th Army will continue, however, to stop the enemy's unwarranted aggression against South Korea and will, when necessary and profitable, meet such threats within North Korea."

Van Fleet said United Nations ground forces under his command had inflicted "well over 100,000 casualties on the enemy" since the Reds launched the second round of their abortive spring offensive May 16.

Another 70,000 to 80,000 were killed, wounded or captured in the first phase of the enemy offensive in April, he said.

Van Fleet said he had pared drastically front-line estimates of casualties.

"If I took all reports from the front," he said, "the figure would be double that. I have discounted many figures as duplication and reduced the total drastically."

"But not counting air, it is safe to say that well over 100,000 casualties were inflicted during the period May 16 through May 31."

Some Chinese units lost 80 to 90 per cent of their strength in the second phase of the Red offensive and subsequent Allied counteroffensive, he said. About 10,000 Chinese were taken prisoners, he said.

Moreover, he added, incomplete reports listed following equipment captured: More than 11,000 rifles, 1,000 machine-guns, 310 mortars, 120 artillery pieces, large quantities of ammunition of all types, 51 truckloads of rations, 83 serviceable trucks and 400 horses.

He called the battle one of the most critical of the Korean War. The speed, strength and determination with which the 8th Army organized its counter-offensive surprised both the Communists high command and the individual enemy soldier, he said.

Some Chinese were captured in large groups, he said. While many showed signs of physical exhaustion and ravenous hunger, he said, others apparently were in excellent physical condition.

"They were fully capable of continuing the fight except for realization of the futility of the situation," he said.

Asked about the future of U.N. efforts in Korea, he said: "We can whip the Chinese Army any time or place—I have thought that since first I arrived in Korea. The best thing it can do is go back home."

Columnist's Farewell

Mack Says Goodbye And Admits To Uneasiness Over Prospects Of Retiring; He Plans To Write, Fish And Travel; A Final Word To Thousands Of Friends

By DEWITT MacKENZIE

This is the most difficult article I ever have had to write, for it is to say good-bye to the readers of our column.

I am "retiring", having reached the age at which the actuarial chaps say a man should cease his labors and devote himself to repenting of his sins.

Retirement is a mile stone towards which the average life-traveler moves with equanimity—especially if his journey is along pleasant lines, as mine has been. But time plays sly tricks with the imagination. Always the end seems far away until, with sudden rush, the mark is reached, leaving the traveler bewildered, since beyond that point his journey isn't charted.

It was the only dud the Germans threw into my neighborhood that day. However, it had put me up against a great uncertainty. And that's the way I feel about this retirement. I just don't know what to expect.

Still, I've made some plans, for the canny blood of my Scottish Highland forbears runs strong in my veins. Having spent many years chasing thrills of all sorts to the four corners of the world, I quite realize that it would be folly now to retire to idleness.

Marjorie (that's my missus) and I have established an "old homestead" for our young daughter and son and ourselves, in a sweet Connecticut valley within easy distance of many friends. It's a place which we long had wanted but which only recently became available.

Acheson Refuses To Reveal Conversation With Truman

Senators Told He Is Under Instructions From President To Keep Silence On What Was Said Concerning MacArthur

WASHINGTON (AP)—Secretary of State Acheson told senators today he was under instructions from President Truman not to repeat what was said at White House meetings on the ouster of Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

Acheson's stand was taken in his second day of testimony to the Senate Armed Services and Foreign Relations committees on the firing of the Far Eastern commander.

Under questions, he had told them earlier he knew nothing about published reports that Britain was sounding out other governments on the possibility of a truce in Korea.

Gen. Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, when in the witness chair earlier, also refused to testify about the White House talks. However, Bradley said he had not consulted Mr. Truman as to whether or not he should tell about them. The White House later said Mr. Truman regarded the conversations as his private business and felt Bradley was right in refusing to testify about them.

Bradley's stand touched off a row which finally ended with the committee voting 18 to 8 that he had the right to refuse to talk about what individuals said at the White House conferences.

Acheson told the senators he was under "direct instruction" from the President not to testify about the conversations.

Senator Wiley (R-Wis.), who had raised the issue with Bradley, also brought it up with Acheson.

Wiley asked Acheson's attitude about "the conversations that took place between you and the President and others in relations to the MacArthur matter, between the 6th and the 11th of April." It was on April 11 that Mr. Truman dismissed MacArthur.

"Would you claim such conversations were privileged; would you say they were confidential; or make the claim of both privilege and confidentiality?" Wiley asked.

Week's Balance Sheet

Good News And Bad News Of The Past Week Relating To Cold War; While Outlook In Korea, Italy And Paris Improves, There Are Other Signs Of Danger

By HARRY FERGUSON

Balance sheet for the week between good and bad news in the hot and cold wars:

GOOD NEWS

1. Round No. 2 of the Chinese Communist offensive in Korea has ended in the biggest United Nations victory of the war. All lost ground has been recovered and the U.N. troops have made a successful counterattack. The victory was won with unexpectedly small casualties for the Allies and extremely heavy ones for the enemy. The Chinese Reds have not been destroyed but the edge of their offensive power has been blunted badly.

2. Communism has suffered its second political defeat of the year in Italy where the Reds were able to poll only about one-third of the votes cast in provincial council elections. Next to Russia, Italy has the largest Communist Party in Europe. Earlier this year there was a bad split in the Italian party when some of its leaders broke away on the issue of too much interference from Moscow in Italy's internal affairs.

3. After about three months of fruitless negotiation in Paris, the Western powers have called for a showdown on whether the foreign ministers of Russia, France, Britain and the United States can get together to discuss ways of ending the cold war. The three Western powers handed a note to the Russians asking them, in effect, to say yes or no on whether there should be a meeting of the Big Four foreign ministers.

BAD NEWS

1. The Communists are on the offensive again in Indo-China where the French are attempting to hold the line. This is an attack designed to gain control of the rice-growing sections so the Reds can harvest the crop. If it were not for Korea, Indo-China would be the No. 1 danger spot in the world. The Chinese Reds would be pouring troops and equipment into Indo-China in an attempt to open up the conquest of neighboring nations.

2. The Korean War isn't over despite the bad beating the Communists have taken in the past three weeks. Gen. Matthew Ridgway said this week that the enemy

Eighty-Eight Graduate From GHS

By MURIEL SHOTWELL

Eighty-eight Greenville High School seniors ended their high school careers when they received diplomas last night at the commencement exercises held at the Robert H. Wright building of East Carolina College.

The seniors entered the Wright auditorium to the professional, "God of Our Fathers," played by the high school band. Lyman Ormond, Jr., graduating senior, gave the invocation and the high school band played "The Hymn of Freedom."

The girls' glee club sang "Echoes of Your Song" and the mixed chorus and alumni sang "Send Forth Thy Spirit." This number by the mixed chorus is traditional at the Greenville High School commencement.

Speakers at the commencement exercises were Margaret Fleming and Rodney Fulcher, graduating seniors. The overall title for both speeches was "Our Crisis" and they were correlative speeches. In her speech, Margaret Fleming pointed out numerous conditions which are common both in the nation and in our community in relation to an indifferent attitude toward Christianity. She cited cases in a national scale and community scale.

Fulcher's speech developed the preceding one and he pointed out the things in which the youth of Greenville believe in and portrayed the situation as he saw it. Fulcher cited five major convictions which he said were prevalent in the minds of the young people of Greenville: First, we believe in God; second, we believe in Church; third, we believe in school; fourth, we believe in a home; and fifth, we believe in you, parents, teachers, ministers, and city fathers.

THE CHURCH FOR ALL... ALL FOR THE CHURCH
The Church is the greatest factor on earth for the building of character and good citizenship. It is a storehouse of spiritual values. Without a strong Church, neither democracy nor civilization can survive. There are four sound reasons why every person should attend services regularly and support the Church. They are: (1) For his own sake. (2) For his children's sake. (3) For the sake of his community and nation. (4) For the sake of the Church itself, which needs his moral and material support. Plan to go to church regularly and read your Bible daily.

Plans For Vacation Bible Schools Announced In Various Churches

By MARTHA S. FORBES
Nine of the churches of Greenville are making plans for Vacation Bible School in their individual churches.

For several years it has been the custom among the various churches of the city to hold one- or two-week sessions as soon after the close of school as possible for the young members of the Sunday School departments. The Vacation Bible Schools are well attended, and each year the interest of the children has grown and enrollment increased.

Some of the churches are beginning their schools on Monday, June 4; others are opening on the following Monday, June 11, and the West Greenville Presbyterian and Meadowbrook Presbyterian are not beginning their schools until Monday, June 18.

During the periods of Vacation Bible School, children from the primary through the junior departments are enrolled. Special instruction in Bible Study, singing, games, movies, art and handwork are offered, and light refreshments are served by the women's organizations of the churches in mid-morning.

Plans for the individual churches, as completed to date, are given in detail below.

At First Presbyterian
The Vacation Bible School of the First Presbyterian Church will be conducted for the children in the Division of the Church School June 11-15 from 9 until 11:30 o'clock each morning.

The courses of study are as follows: Kindergarten, ages 4 and 5, "Friends in God's World"; Primary, ages 6, 7, and 8, "Bible Friends and Friends Today"; Junior, ages 9, 10 and 11, "Choosing God's Way."

Miss Gwen Miles is the principal. Miss Kathleen Whitehead is secretary. Mrs. E. S. Hamrick is pianist, and Miss Pauline Bell is chorister.

Classes will open with a worship and song service, marching of the children and salute to the flag.

Memorial Baptist Church Sunday School is sponsoring the Vacation Bible School. The theme of the school is "Training and Christian Living." Class activities will consist of Bible and character stories, recreation, arts and craft work.

There will be three departments: Beginners, Primary and Junior. Following is a list of the workers: Supervisors—Mrs. R. L. Holt, superintendent, and Mrs. J. Archie Rogers, Mrs. G. W. Jordan, Kitty Collins and Joanne Hardee.

At Pentecostal Holiness
The Pentecostal Holiness Vacation Bible School will begin on Monday, June 4, and extend through June 15. All children between the ages of 3-13 are cordially invited to attend.

The program will consist of teaching, handwork, singing, recreation and refreshments during the hours of 9:00-11:00 a. m.

The staff will consist of Rev. Arthur Crawford, Jr., principal and teacher of the intermediates, assisted by David Johnson. Mrs. C. A. A program of Bible study, recreation, arts and handicrafts, music, recreation and refreshments will be provided for children from the kindergarten through the junior departments. A complete roster of supervisors and assistants will be announced next week.

Seven Seniors Entertain At Friday Dance

The Seniors of the graduating class of Greenville High School, their dates, and faculty members and their husbands or wives were entertained at a dance at the Recreation Center on Friday night following the graduation exercises in Wright Auditorium.

Hosts for the occasion were seven members of the Senior class: Johnnie Aman, Milton Foley, Floyd Hendrix, Lewis Howe, Kent Lee, Lyman Ormond, Jr., and Bob Watson.

The hall of the Recreation Center was decorated with profusions of greenery and red roses. Stands of fern and shrubbery formed a lovely background on the stage, and the drink bar was attractive with low bowls of roses on each end.

The refreshment table was gaily decorated in class colors of red and white. Crepe paper in red and white strips covered the table and red ruffled flounces outlined the edges of the table and were used around the bottom.

The centerpiece was formed by a pyramid of ivy and red roses and topped by a doll graduate dressed in white. Tiny pairs of dolls dressed as graduates in red were placed at either end of the table.

Varieties of attractively made sandwiches, red and white iced cakes in wicker trays, potato chips, popcorn and cheese spread crackers were accompanied by iced drinks served from the drink bar.

The young people enjoyed dancing with music furnished by a mechanical record player.

Approximately 125 young people were present for this crowning event to the termination of their high school days.

Radio Programs
The Sunday morning services for the month of June will be broadcast from the First Presbyterian Church, Rev. Leonard W. Topping, pastor. The Morning Devotions this coming week will be conducted by the Rev. Leonard Russell, pastor of the Jarvis Memorial Methodist Church, at 9:30 each morning, Monday through Saturday, over WGTC.

FOUNTAIN—Monday night of this week some one got $15.44 out of the Fountain Motor Co. cash register. The cash was mostly in change.

Mr. W. C. Redick, one of the stockholders, is puzzled to know how the intruder gained entrance to the place of business as the door going to the garage was fastened on the inside of the office where the cash register is, and the door was opened from the inside, showing whoever got the cash left the office by way of the door going into the garage, and out the back door of the garage.

Mr. Redick discovered the cash had been taken during the night Tuesday morning on his arrival at the office.

Chapter 3
"Your question about how long the brunette'd been dead. The medical report shows she was killed p. m. yesterday." The plainclothesman looked at Jigger shrewdly.

Jigger said, "Coincidence. You're crazy if you build on it."
"What should we do?"
"Catch the murderer and mail me an apology."

"Then the theory that this was your girl, that you were mixed up in something together, that you were forced to shut her up—"
"Smells."

"How about the theory that you were doing a body disposal job for somebody, for a fee—"
The big wall-clock now read four a. m.

That spotlight died and the lights were sudden; Jigger blinked, then explored into the depths of the room. The covey of plainclothesmen rimming the bare room was gone. Besides his inquisitor, just one man remained. He was leaning against the far wall, holding a stenographic pad.

The secretary closed his pad and went out. The plainclothesman went to the door. He turned and said, "A friend wants to see you. I'll send him in."

The door opened and a costless figure entered.

Jigger identified him with a pang. The skinny fellow with the close-cropped hair and perennial campus look was Red, free-lance journalist and improvident writer of plays, features, fiction, columns. Red was the one-man operator of "The Independent Feature News Service," an agency whose vitality rose or faltered in exact ratio to the stock of postage stamps in the petty-cash box. Red was also a fact-finder, amateur gumshoe, and hapless companion in chaos to Jigger—if and when seduced into the spider's web.

Jigger said compassionately, "What'd they do to you, Red?"
Red's hand described Jigger's battered appearance. "Same as you, feller." There was a wistful note in the attempted irony. "I'm your accomplice in crime, no matter how respectfully I try to live."

Jigger smiled fondly. "Where'd they pick you up, chum?"
"During second-act intermission at the Morocco Theater. Two cops hustled me out of the smoking lounge and into a patrol wagon."

"Tickets are on me, when this is over," Jigger promised.
"When this is over?" Red eyed Jigger suspiciously. "For me it's the minute the cops bow me out of this slaughterhouse. Whatever this set-up is, count me O-U-T. I'm not even interested in reading about it in the morning papers."

Jigger protested, "Nice unfriendly attitude! I'm just an innocent bystander like yourself."
Red was a man twice-bitten times ninety. "Like Louis XVI an innocent bystander at the French Revolution."

Jigger reached to pat him and Red reared disdainfully. A moment like a tug of war ensued. Red held Jigger's eyes, first resolute, then waveringly, as an unspoken understanding grew and was cemented.

Jigger said simply, "On the level, Red. I just fell into it. All I did was haul a trunk."
Red studied Jigger's face. He said anxiously, "True or not, right now the police aren't buying it. They're trying to pin it on you with the biggest safety pin they can find."

Jigger inquired fearfully, "What did they question you about, Red?"
"The whole book. They asked about the women in your life, and who you know—especially in police circles." Red sighed heavily, "Fending them off aged me ten years."

Jigger made a sudden shushing noise. There was a delayed alarm radiating a message to his brain. This reunion with Red by official arrangement!

He prowled about the basement, exploring. He found the dictaphone cleverly camouflaged, tooled into the stone floor.

Jigger said loudly, "Show's over, boys. Now how about a little legalism known as due process? If it's an arrest, I demand the right to phone an attorney."

A gap of silence, then a lock sounded and the door opened. The plainsclothesman with the feathered speech regarded them quietly. He said, "You're a smart cookie, Jigger. The voice sharpended. 'May be too smart.'"

Jigger said, "Which is it—arrest or the open door?"
The plainclothesman gestured. "You're free, for now."

Outside the storm was over. There were the first pulsing sounds of dawn; the whining exhaust of rolling trucks, the abrasive noises of garbage cans.

Jigger asked, "Well, whaddaya think, Red?"
The whites of Red's eyes were speckled. He said gloomily, "I see two possibilities—Either the corpse just happened to you, which—knowing you—I still find hard to believe. Or—someone's paying you off for past favors. That corpse was earmarked for Jigger Moran, adventure boy and pathological buttnut."

"Frame-up?" Jigger thought it over, then shook his head. "I doubt it."
Red said wearily, "I suppose it's no use my advising you to lay off and let the police solve this one for themselves."

Too plainly, it was no use. Jigger was withdrawn busily rearranging the furnishings of his mind to make room for a new, yet familiar object—a corpse. Soon he began briskly like a man who had clearly formulated plan of procedure.

"First, get some sleep, Red. Then some around. Start with the little we know; inquire about an Ames Brown. See neighbors, more tradespeople, anybody. Get a line on her, while I beat the brush for the stumblebum who hooked me with a five-dollar bill. When you are finished, we'll meet at Christy's—say around eleven a. m., Okay?"

"One question," Red said irritably. "Nobody's retained you, nobody's invited you in, and there's not a kopek anywhere in sight to tempt your larcenous soul. So what's your motive in sleuthing this one?"

"Preventive. The police might try to make the character fit the crime."
"Bull. The first hard fact the uncover will make you the forgotten suspect."
Jigger grinned. "Okay, you've cornered me." His eyes lighted. "This one promises to be a puzzle to end all puzzles. A bashed-in brumette in a trunk, and practically left on my doorstep, begging to be adopted. No face, no identity, character, kin, no nothing. We're beginning with a great blob of protoplasm, and from it we've got to assemble enough of a personality portrait, construct enough of a life story, to find a murderer!"

Red looked into Jigger's face uneasily. "There's that unholly look in your eyes. With you, playing detective is like hop to a drug addict." He shook his head disgustedly, and a note of lamentation crept into his voice. "How I ever got myself handcuffed to a wild man..."

Joint Hostesses Entertain For Frances Aman

Mrs. Leslie Briley and Mrs. Frank Moseley entertained at a miscellaneous shower and bridge on Wednesday night at the home of the former in honor of Miss Frances Aman, who is a June bride-elect.

The home was festively decorated in a color scheme of green and white. The mantel and the dining room table featured arrangements of fever few and baby's breath.

Upon arrival the guests were served a dessert course of molded bricols, decorated individual cakes, nuts and mints. At the conclusion of the refreshment hour and before the bridge game began, the honoree was presented with her gaily wrapped shower presents, gifts from the guests, which she opened.

Bridge was played later in the evening and during the progressions, iced drinks and salted nuts were served. Miss Marion Brown was winner of high score and Miss Jane Massey was recipient of a prize for second high. Miss Aman was remembered with a gift of silver from the hostesses.

Guests for the refreshment hour only were Mrs. Robert May, Mrs. James Evans, Mrs. J. M. Ward, Mrs. Frank Brown and Mrs. J. D. Aman.

There were 14 members present. Mrs. G. E. Trevathan, circle chairman of the program, presided. Mrs. Hardy Johnson led the devotions, and Mrs. Philip M. Cory read an article telling that this year's birthday offering would go to Africa.

The president, Mrs. R. A. Fountain, held a short business meeting.

A beautiful white cake decorated with green candies, was served with other refreshments by the hostess, Mrs. Dostler, assisted by Mrs. Bill Jefferson and Mrs. C. L. Owens.

Strength for the Day

By EARL L. DOUGLAS
PRODUCTS OF CHRISTIAN HOMES
Most ministers in the United States—probably a majority—are the sons of ministers.
Ponder for a moment what a fine comment this is on the spiritual atmosphere prevailing in most ministers' homes. The children in such homes grow up realizing that the calling of the minister involves financial sacrifice and trials of many kinds. Yet tens of thousands of men in the ministry today are the children of these homes where the going was always hard. They undoubtedly come to feel that there are compensations which make up for lack of money and other things which the world calls privileges. Furthermore, they see the fine work their parents are doing, and they want to follow in the footsteps of these fine people.
And of the ministers who are not the products of the manse, almost all are nevertheless children of devout Christian homes. Ministers and consecrated laymen and the wives of both are the parents of probably ninety-eight per cent of the men who lead the spiritual life of this country. And when a minister comes to pick a wife, he usually picks a girl from a Christian home.
There is nothing so marvelous as a home truly devoted to the faith of its fathers.

New Items For The Luxury List

Is getting a haircut at the corner barber shop or one of those frequent trips to the beauty parlor a luxury or a necessity?
The Associated Master Barbers and Beauticians of America have urged the Senate Banking Committee to exempt barbers and beauty shop operators from ceiling prices because it is a "luxury" to patronize them. The group may be able to convince the solons of Washington that haircuts and permanent waves are luxuries, but we'll wager the solons will hear a different story when they get home to their wives.
Imagine, if you can, how far the man of the house would get if he requested his little lady to cut out her trips to the beauty parlor on the grounds they are a luxury? Or just imagine how long he could stay around the house without getting a haircut by arguing that the family budget couldn't stand such a luxury as a visit to the barber's chair.
Such arguments may hold up in the halls of Congress, but they wouldn't get far in the home.

A New Goal For Iranian Negotiations

The nationalization of the gigantic Anglo-Iranian Oil Company is practically assured through the action of the Iranian government. The matter of maintaining British management of the oil fields should be the prime point of negotiations between the Iranians and the British.
The bountiful oil fields of Iran are essential to the future welfare of Great Britain and the rest of the Western nations. The British are understandably reluctant to give up their rights to the Iranian oil fields without a diplomatic struggle, but what other choice have they?
They could use force to keep the fields, but such action would touch off World War III which nations have carefully avoided for the past few years.
With the exception of its oil fields, Iran is a poor country indeed. Less than one-fifth of the mountainous and desert country is fit for farm land, and the farm land is very poor. By and large the population of Iran is poor, and the people see in the government ownership of the Anglo-Iranian oil fields a promise of great new wealth... both collectively and individually. The people of Iran are anxious to seize this promise of wealth.
Without the technical assistance of Britain and the other Western nations, Iran could by no means operate the oil fields as they have been operated under British control. Without the British and American ships, Iranians would find their present oil market out of their reach.
But first and foremost the Iranians are anxious for a greater portion of the profits from the oil fields. This they see in nationalization.
In spite of the widespread demonstrations in Iran against the British and even the Americans, there is a moderate group in the country which recognizes many of the underlying factors involved in the nationalization. They are aware not only of the Western need for Iranian oil, but likewise the Iranian need for Western technical knowledge.

Britain will have to make large concessions indeed in the settlement of the Iranian oil question. But with proper negotiation, we believe the British can maintain the management of the Anglo-Iranian fields even under the nationalization program of the Iranian government.

The efforts of the governments of Great Britain and the United States should be pointed toward that goal.

Midsummer Night's Dream Of Rain

Was there ever a summer evening wholly wasted listening to the irregular patter of rain and the distant grumbling of thunder?

And remember those cool breezes wafted across the yard to the door, and spreading to all rooms of your home?

Then there was the flickering of lightning in distant horizon or the vivid flashing bolts seemingly nearby... the acrid tang of ozone.

The earth and its creatures are cooled and refreshed. Growing things greedily drink the moisture and Mother Earth stores the surplus for another day.

Slowly the rain diminishes; dripping eaves are heard above other sounds in the night. The humid, restless evening is at peace. A star emerges and somewhere a dog barks. Suddenly it's no longer an effort to fall into dreamless slumber.

At least that's the way we remember it. By the way, just how long has it been since it rained... really rained, in these parts?

News Behind The News
By RAY TUCKER
Every Saturday this veteran Washington newspaper correspondent devotes his column to answering readers' questions of general interest on national and international policies and personalities. Questions may be sent direct to Ray Tucker at 6808 Hillcrest Place, Chevy Chase, Md.

WASHINGTON—"I have never seen an explanation of why the North Atlantic Pact was not extended to Turkey," writes D.B. of Oroville, Cal. "I recently asked a college professor of history for the reason, and he was surprised at the question. It never occurred to him to find out. Can you tell us?"
Answer: The United States has sponsored the admission of both Turkey and Greece to NATO, which is a military alliance of nations bordering on the Atlantic Ocean.

Washington believes that these states, so strategically situated in the Middle East and the Mediterranean, will be needed in a war with Russia. They would form some protection for the right flank of Eisenhower's land force, as well as bases for bombing the Soviet's and satellite countries' oil fields and industries.

BLOCK—The opposition has come chiefly from the Scandinavian members of NATO, as well as from London and Paris. Since it requires an unanimous vote for admission of a new member of the alliance, they have been able to block our proposal so far.

The Scandinavian countries, especially Norway, fear that giving military guarantees to Turkey and Greece would be stretching our commitments too far and too dangerously. They believe it might provoke Russia to immediate war, for no NATO member's territory now adjoins Russia's.

TURKEY'S DEEDS, Turkey's control of the Dardanelles under the Montreux convention also bars Communist warships, especially subs, from entrance into the Mediterranean.

Britain and France, although more agreeable to Turkey-Greece membership worry lest it mean that they would receive a smaller amount of money and munitions from the United States.

ALTERNATIVE—Our military experts believe that our position throughout the area of the Mediterranean should be strengthened for many obvious reasons. They advocate an alliance that would include Turkey, Greece, Yugoslavia and Spain.

A possible alternative which the British have proposed is a separate Mediterranean Pact that would take in these countries, and possibly some of the friendly Arab states in the Middle East, if there are any.

Unfortunately, from the standpoint of anti-Communist defense, many elements among NATO members, including some in the United States, oppose the inclusion of Yugoslavia and Spain on the ground that they are Communist and Fascist dictatorships respectively. They don't seem to realize that no individual or nation can afford to be too "choosy" in picking friends in a showdown.

DISCRIMINATION—Mrs. G.A. of Grand Rapids, Mich., says that "on all sides we find disgust and resentment over the college deferment plan because it is discrimination on behalf of one group of young men against another. The ultimate result is well understood. The college boys must not have their future spoiled, and this is one way of protecting them."
Answer: I hesitate to tackle this question because I know it will mean bricksbats for me. However—
It does seem unfair, of course. There should be no favoritism or preference or discrimination, particularly in time of war. The protests against this system are understandable.

DECIMATION—But the sponsors argue that deferment should be granted to young men who have already begun their education. It does not, of course, mean that they will not serve at some future time. In fact, they may be called up when the going is far more severe than it is now—that is, for an all-out war.

A secondary consideration is that no country can afford to halt the training and education of future generations of scientists, physicians, lawyers, teachers, business men, industrialists, public officials etc. I have heard prominent Englishmen attribute their country's 1920-1950 difficulties to the decimation of so many brilliant and promising men in World War I. It may explain why we have so many broken-down politicians in high office today.

ENDORSEMENT—R. B. Jr. of Altoona, Pa. chides me for mentioning Senator James H. Duff of his state and General "Ike" Eisenhower as possible Republican presidential nominees in 1952. He thinks that both selves to be a "me, too" type of G.O.P.-er. He also thinks that General Eisenhower is "too easily controlled."
Answer: I wish that R.B. Jr. as well as other readers, would realize that my mentioning of a man as a presidential possibility does not constitute an endorsement. I report only what I hear on my rounds at Washington. If the politicians are talking of these men, even as bare or remote possibilities—and I find that they are—that is news which it is my job to report for whatever it may be worth.

Somebody Told Me

By I. J. (Jack) EDWARDS, JP
Frankly, it's discouraging to find out how crooked some people are. And the longer I live the more crooked people I meet. But I'll have to admit that as I meet the crooks, there are some honest ones that pop up here and there.
Today I'm talking about people who buy items from department stores, keep them several years, and return them for a refund. After all, the department store can't afford to take a loss on such returns, so naturally they must hike their percentage of profit to allow for the bringer-backers. So the honest customer has to pay the extra percentage every time he buys an item, to allow for the inconsiderate customer who expects to get something for nothing.
This happens every day in Greenville, but the examples I have to cite were taken from surveys made in Philadelphia, New York and Boston:
Three sprays of 25-cent artificial flowers returned because, after trying them out for 13 months, the customer decided that "white deadens my parlor; I'd rather have pink."
A lamp, bought one year ago, returned because the cellophane dust protector on the shade was beginning to crack.
An $18 bathrobe returned after five months' wear, badly soiled and pocket marked with cigarette holes because "the robe at that price should wear better."
A pair of white kid wedding gloves returned as defective. It turned out that they were five years old. Being soiled, the customer attempted to wash them and actually bolted them.
A flag returned because the silk was beginning to split. "But," the department store adjutant said, "we haven't carried flags since war time." This flag was bought during the war: World War I.
A pair of woman's size 8AA shoes, twenty years old and never worn, returned for refund. They had long pointed toes and at least 20 eyelets.
The adjustment men are finally getting smart. When a person makes a habit of bringing items back, a card is made giving his name, description, and any information that would help to identify him. This information is passed around to the department stores, and such a person is asked to take his business elsewhere.
The "Return and Allowance" in 140 department stores that were checked ran from 9 to 13 per cent of total sales. It's high time the stores made an effort to stop the man who's getting something for nothing. The rest of us are paying for that man's goods.
And I thank you.

Around Capitol Square

Daily Reflector Bureau
ADJUSTMENTS are authorized for enhanced value due to development of neighboring property, growth of cities or industrial enterprises. These circumstances materially affect the market value of real estate, but exercise little if any influence upon its taxable value as reflected by the official ratings.
TAX RATES—With static valuation the only adjustment that can be made is in the tax rate. To avoid raising the tax levy some counties have resorted to the practice of horizontal increase in value. Effect was to raise the rate in 1947, when it increased every piece of real estate five percent in value. Effect was to raise the taxes of every homeowner to that extent, without giving any relief in the way of equalizing values that were too high or too low. The whole purpose of periodic re-appraisal is to afford a reasonable equitable distribution of the tax load among all the citizens.
Most frequent objection to revaluation is that the county commissioners would levy the same rate on the higher values, thus greatly increasing the total tax bill paid by the citizens.
HISTORY—There may be in some places justification for that fear. History shows that such instances are rare. In 1920 when Governor Bickett's crusade to "make the tax books tell the truth," valuations generally were almost "doubled" and tax rates were cut in half. That year, for example, the city of Raleigh cut the rate from $1.75 to 83 cents per $100 valuation—a decrease of more than 50 percent. It is incontrovertible that more tax revenue is required now than a few years ago, because of increasing costs in all phases of operation. It does not seem reasonable that with government costs advancing, market values of real estate going up even faster, that property should be carried on the tax books at the same figure it was ten years ago. That inevitably results in higher tax levies for everybody, with particular pressure upon the owners of sets, stocks of merchandise and other personal property. Since there are more automobile owners than land owners, more automobile dealers than real estate agents, it is a little surprising that they have not raised more fuss about the discrimination against them, and made more "active" demand for revaluation of real estate.
RATIO—Point is that it doesn't matter about valuation or tax rate, so long as there is equitable distribution of both. A Home valued at $10,000 with a tax rate of $1.00 will pay $100 in taxes. The same home valued at $20,000 with a tax rate of 50 cents will pay the same $100. But if the homes have the same market value, and one is listed at ten and one at twenty thousands with the same tax rate, one pays twice as much as the other. Obviously that is not fair. Since there has been no general revaluation in all the counties since 1941, it should be obvious to the most casual student that innumerable inequities exist. The increase in market price of automobiles and real estate since 1941, it should be obvious to the most casual student that innumerable inequities exist. The increase in market price of automobile and real estate since 1941 has been approximately the same. Automobiles are paying on the increased rate, real estate is not. That is why so many folks insist that there should be a house to house, lot to lot, farm to farm, revaluation of real property for 1953 taxes.

What Other Papers Are Thinking

RELIEVING SMALL RETAILERS (Wilson Daily Times)
We quite thoroughly agree with the Office of Price Stabilization that small retailers should be exempt from filing charts. For many of those stores are made up of the owner and one clerk. Where the dollar volume is under $50,000 and where the normal gross profits run 25 per cent, they earn, before rent, wages and the like, only $12,500. Let the overhead come out, then, and few have $5,000 left for their ownership. If they must pay experts $3,000 or so to do their charting for them, what will the owner have left?
Many of our peace-time programs have stepped up book-keeping costs considerably. The small industrial plant with 100 employees almost had to hire a personnel man. That, as common sense shows us, was a levy against profits. But how could small plant comply with many of the new laws without such a man? It had to keep wage and hour records and it had to make deductions for security and unemployment. It's not like the old days when a man got $25 a week regardless of the hours he worked, when he got the full $25 and the office had no further record to keep.
Perhaps it isn't so harmful to penalize the large industrial plants, those with 1,000 or more employees. They might be well able to carry the load. But when you put all industrial establishments in the same category, when you say that a store is a store, regardless of its annual volume, you overburden those doing only a small amount of business with routines that they can't afford. Some in Washington are forever prating about helping the small business man, but their red tape has slowly been driving him out of business. Perhaps the OPS sees the light.

Business Today

By ELMER ROESSNER
When America takes stock of the first year of the Korean war in a few weeks, the figure will create an impression that the economy has expanded marvelously.
The total output of goods and services and the total income will be shown to be billions of dollars higher.
But as a matter of fact, the expansion of the economy will be far less than the figures indicate. What appears to be an increase in production and earnings will be largely an increase in production and earnings will be largely an increase in prices. It's mostly inflation.
The gross national product—the total output of all goods and services—was at an annual rate of $271,600,000,000 in that June a year ago. The latest figures at hand, for March, 1951 show it to be $313,900,000,000. That's an increase of 15 per cent.
How much of that is added production? how much higher prices for things produced? It's hard to tell. Here's a clue: The index for wholesale prices of all commodities stood at 157.3 in June, 1950, and at 184.0 in March, 1951. That's a gain of 16 per cent. Wholesale prices are not an exact yardstick for measuring the gross national product but they do reflect the general level of prices.
Total personal income last June was at an annual rate of $217,100,000,000. It was at a rate of $225,000,000,000 in March. That's an increase of a little more than 11 per cent. Average weekly earnings in factories in June were $58.85. In March they were $64.36. That's an increase of 9 per cent.
But the consumer price index was 170.2 last June and 184.5 in March. That's a little less than 9 per cent. Prices went up a little more than factory wages, a little less than other forms of incomes. Considering the increases in taxes, the average factory worker or other income earner was no better off than a year ago.
Unemployment has gone down. Department of Commerce estimates had 3,384,000 unemployed last June and 2,147,000 in March. Civilian employment is higher. While the March figures are less than the June figures, when allowances are made for seasonal variations, they are better. Certainly, they are about 2,500,000 higher than in March. And military employment has, of course risen.
On the whole, the economy expanded very little in the first nine months after the start of the Korean war. It has probably expanded more in April and May and will continue in June. The real expansion will come in the last half of the year.
PEOPLE STILL SAVING, BUT NOT SO MUCH
People increased their savings less during the first three months of this year than they did a year earlier. Figures gathered by the United States Savings and Loan League showed a net gain of total savings of $306,000,000 in the first quarter of 1950 was $447,000,000.
The buying spree early this year, during which many people withdrew savings, was to blame, says Walter J. L. Ray, president of the league.
THE AGE OF WINGS AND HIGH PRICES
If England was, in years gone by, a nation of beef-eaters, Americans may become a nation of poultry consumers.
Ten years ago commercial producers turned out less than 150,000 broilers. Last year they produced 615,000,000. That's not an exact measure of the increase because the industry has largely shifted from a side line of many farmers to mass-production by specialists.
But this year production is expected to be 15 per cent higher. As meat prices have gone up, producers have put more eggs in incubators.
DISTILLER INVOKES CLAN "SPIRIT"
"It's a good promotion," said the O.P. "Will be widely imitated, adapted and plagiarized. There's no reason why manufacturers of other products, or even retailers, shouldn't try to organize a bit of clan spirit to build loyal customers."
That's a good idea and we gladly relinquished a good cigar to the O.P.
NEW AND HOT MASKS: A protective mask weighing less than an ounce is being made for industrial workers and others exposed to irritating dust, by General Scientific Equipment Co., 2700 W. Huntingdon St., Philadelphia 32. It is made of aluminum with a replaceable laminated filter.
SOUNDIES: Nursery rhyme books that include text for reading, score for piano playing and a musical box for cranking are being marketed by Mattel, Inc., 6438 Warner Dr., Culver City, Calif.
PURIFIER: An electrically-driven purifier that can kill bacteria in 400 gallons of water-an hour, and which requires no chemicals or attention, is being introduced by Sepeco Corp., Pottstown, Pa.

Hal Boyle's Column

NEW YORK —(AP)— Saturday shavings by a Curbstone So-crates:
The personnel executive of a world-wide business firm recently had an interesting problem in labor relations.
The native help in a Far East branch came to the low manager with the complaint that one of their fellow workers was a witch. They said he was putting the whammy on them—at the office as well as at their homes.
One worker already had broken out in a strange rash. Others were having violent quarrels with their wives. All agreed the wives had been put under a spell by the mumbo-jumbo arts of the suspected witch. They threatened to walk out in a group if he weren't dismissed.
Uneasy at the prospect of keeping a professional devil-dealer on its payroll, the firm conducted its own inquiry. And after questioning the culprit it fired him.
"Had to," explained the personnel executive. "He admitted he was a witch."
Do you like to collect old-fashioned sayings? I do, because they have a down-to-earth freshness that never stales. Here's my current favorite:
"I'll do it—yes, I'll go ahead and do it even if it harlepins the whole family."
Here is another, mailed in recently from a woman who heard it from her elderly mother who said it had often helped her in times of distress:
"If everybody in the world hung up all their griefs and troubles on the same laundry line, at the end of the week they would all want to take back their own laundry."
Thomas B. Watson of the International Business Machines Company always thought people ought to use their heads more. He made a regular campaign of it, distributing one-word signs far and wide that said only: "Think!"
But people just don't seem to believe in signs. And today his company, like others, is turning out machines to take some of the load off modern brains.
If something goes wrong with one of the machines, nobody holds up a sign in front of it that says "Think!" Somebody opens it up and repairs it mechanically.
So far science hasn't reached the point where it can accord a lazy human brain the same privilege. But it stands to reason it, too, needs a spark more than a slogan.
The oddest ambition I ever encountered was that of a soldier in Korea who had made an undertaker the beneficiary of his $10,000 service life insurance policy.
"All my life I wanted something that nobody else in Georgia ever had," he drawled. "And I decided a $10,000 funeral was the answer. Folks'd come from

Washington Letter

By JANE EADS
WASHINGTON—Some of those recipes that the womenfolk whipped up back home no doubt won as many votes as baby-kissing did in helping send their husbands to Congress. Pooled together in the wives' Congressional Club Cookbook, the recipes brought a profit of $30,000 by 1930 and helped the women pay for their own handsome meeting house here.
Tribute was paid to the club's original cookbook committee at the organization's Founders' Day brunch the other day in a rollicking skit, "Chiffon, Politics, Pennies and Pies," put on by the lawmakers' wives. Not only that, guests celebrating the club's 43rd anniversary had a nibble of a delicacy that put the 1949 edition of the cookbook up in the best-seller list. Served as an after-dinner tid-bit, it was Mrs. Harry Truman's recipe for "Oscar pudding," one of the First Lady's favorite dishes.
There was no argument about its goodness. There was curiosity on the part of the lawmakers, however. They remembered the controversy that arose when the recipe first appeared in the 500-page cookbook. Letters flooded the White House from housewives who said the pudding didn't come out right.
The White House explained the recipe is a very old one and that the beating of eggs and so forth in those days was done with a fork, or wire whisk, which took a long time. People using the new gadgets wouldn't get the same results.
Mrs. Carroll Kearns, wife of the Republican Congressman from Pennsylvania, wrote the Founders' Day skit. It showed how the 1930 group planned a family night dinner to celebrate the cookbook's phenomenal financial success. That dinner started with Mrs. Herbert Hoover's mushy room soup and a cucumber-on-tom-celery-sweet pickle relish substituted by Dolly Gann, sub-hostess for Vice President Charles Curtis. Chicken fricassee, made from the recipe of Mrs. New, wife of the postmaster general; Senator Harry Flood Byrd's Virginia cured ham, stuffed onions and coleslaw, macaroon ice cream, date torte, Boston cookies, coffee and grapefruit punch completed the menu.
The Congressional Cookbook has gone through three editions and sold about 20,000 copies. It sells for $3.75. There's a less-least edition with each member's recipe in her own handwriting. This sells for $2.75. Cookbooks can be purchased from the Congressional Club house, 2001 New Hampshire Avenue, Washington 5, D. C.

By CHESTER WALSH

Fibber McGee said to Molly the other night on the radio, "I know where all of the good fishing places are," but he had never fished in Sheppard's Millpond, on the Coy Forbes plantation, near Stokes.

The 200-acre cypress-studded pond is teeming with fish—big-mouth bass, some of them weighing up to eight pounds; bream, a rod fisherman's delight; speckled perch, or Chinquapins, as fishermen describe them, ranging up to two pounds, jack some times weighing up to four pounds.

The pond is exactly 14 miles from the Daily Reflector building.

Sheppard's Millpond is a sportsman's paradise. Nature built the pond and gave it a background of dense woods, where wildlife finds a safe haven. Quail, doves and water fowl abound there.

Sheppard's Millpond is a tract of 200 acres of water on a 248-acre piece of land.

The old water-grinding mill was used for nearly a century until the Coy Forbes family discontinued it.

The pond has an average depth of four feet, but in the rainy season the depth approaches from eight to 14 feet, Forbes told a Reflector staff writer.

Sheppard's Mill served its purpose in the old days. It was a place of meeting for farmers and their families from far and near. A farmer would drive up to the old mill—and the dirt road ran straight through the mill building—unload his corn, and while it was being ground, he and those who accompanied him on the day-long trip sought favorite spots baited their lines and caught fish. The miller's toll was one-eighth of the meal. There always was plenty of fish in Sheppard's Millpond, Forbes said.

The mill, now is a landmark with an interesting history. "Old Man" Tom Sheppard, as he was affectionately known, built the Mill in the middle of the 19th century. The mill is four and a half miles from Stokes. The property remained in the hands of the Sheppard estate until it was divided by will in 1903.

At that time Charles McLawhorn, Coy Forbes' father-in-law, and J. R. Barnhill, bought the mill property. The Sheppard estate originally consisted of 1,700 acres of land.

The mill continued in operation until 1920, when high water washed out the dam. The new owners rebuilt the concrete dam. The grist mill continued in operation until 1940, when Forbes discontinued it.

Sheppard's Millpond always was a favorite spot for fishermen and hunters. It was an ideal spot for a church and Sunday school and family picnics. There is no record of any person ever being drowned in the pond. Some spots on the pond's shores are ideal for swimmers.

The land now is posted and permission must be obtained to fish or hunt there. Suggestion has been made that the old mill site would be a fine place to build a hunting lodge. In addition to the millpond land, Forbes own 570 acres of land in that section.

Only two persons, C. J. Little and his wife, an elderly couple over 80 years old, friends of the Forbes family, have a permanent permit to fish in Sheppard's Millpond at any time. Coy Forbes has several skiffs on the pond.

The Sheppard's Millpond tract has an abundance of timber, much of it being cypress, gum and pine. Forbes has sold considerable timber off the tract. Proper thinning of the forest is paying good dividends in the quickened growth of the standing timber, Forbes said.

Old-timers remember when Sheppard's Millpond was the baptismal font for many denominations. Baptizings were important events and always drew big crowds.

An elderly resident of the community smilingly said, "More sins have been washed away in that pond than in any other piece of water in this part of the state."

White and negro ministers officiated at baptizings in the pond.

In the long, long ago, it was a custom among the religious Negroes to do a lot of "chaning" at church services and at baptizings. During baptizings the woods for some distance were resonant with the continued chanting of "Amen's". The Sheppard's Millpond tract is hallowed ground, a long-time resident said.

The Coy Forbes home, a short distance from Sheppard's Millpond is a typical country estate, with every modern convenience available. He built the house about the time he was married to Miss Jennie McLawhorn, daughter of Charles McLawhorn, in 1926. He couple have two children, Miss Jean Forbes, teacher in the Grainger High School in Kinston, and Charles Alfred Forbes, who operates the farms with his father and who also runs a dairy. He has 30 cows and milks 17 of them. He sells milk to a dairy in Greenville.

The Forbes practice diversified farming and raise everything possible on the three farms. Incidentally, Coy Forbes installed tile on 22 acres of one of the farms last year, and this year there is coming along 22 acres of fine corn as may be found anywhere. They use tractors and double gang plows only using mules where it is necessary. A tractor and a double gang plow can do the work in one day that would require four men and eight mules to do, Forbes said.

Sheppard's Millpond is one of nature's contribution to man's comfort and joy, but there are many man-made fishponds completed or in process of construction in Pitt county. The Pitt County Wildlife Club, and Connor Eagles, soil conservationist with the U. S. Soil Conservation Service, in Greenville consistently encourage the building and improvement of artificial fishponds. The soil conservation engineer consults with landowners who are planning for fish ponds. He engineers the job for the owners and follows thorough with advise as to the best methods of maintaining sufficient fish in the ponds. Eagles said there are now 18 fish ponds in the county, and 18 fish being planned. The Soil Conservation Service also arranges for procuring fingerling fish for the pond owners and supervises delivery, Eagles said.

Exhibit Of North Carolina Displayed By Eighth Grade

By MURIEL SHOTWELL

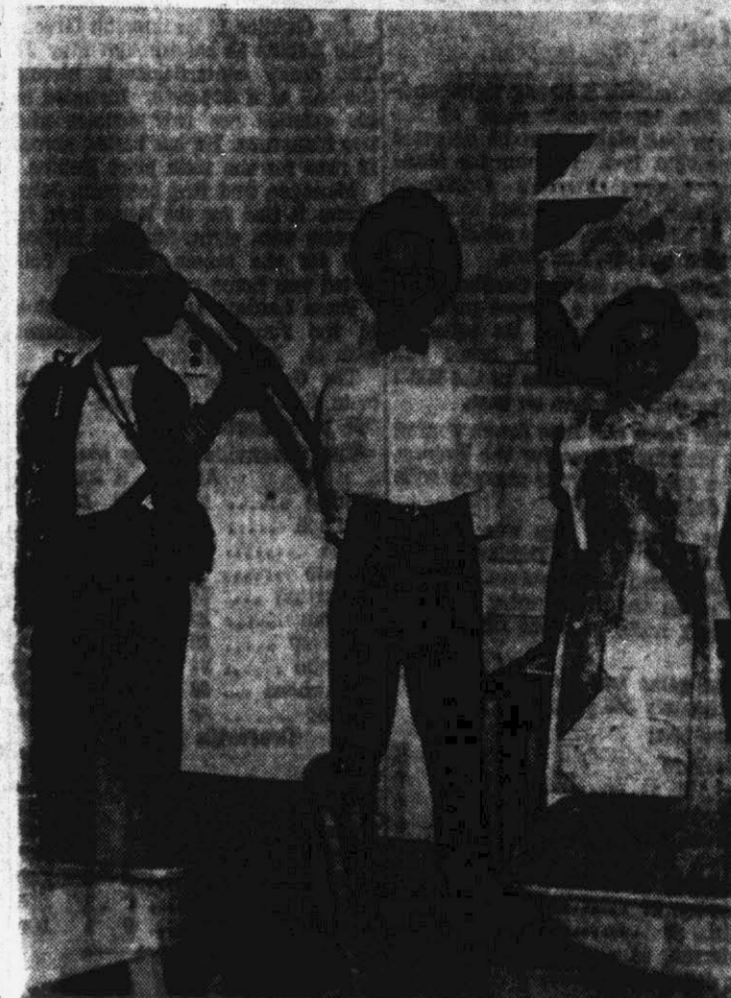

The eighth grade of the Training School, taught by Elisabeth Hyman, had on exhibit in their classroom last Wednesday, the culmination of the year's work with pictures, posters, literature, and maps to show what they had done.

During the year, the pupils in the class have been working on a around North Carolina. The work was divided into groups, representing 18 phases of North Carolina life. Pupils had written to various places and secured literature to build their work around. There were maps showing sections of North Carolina and emphasized the main point of interest in those places.

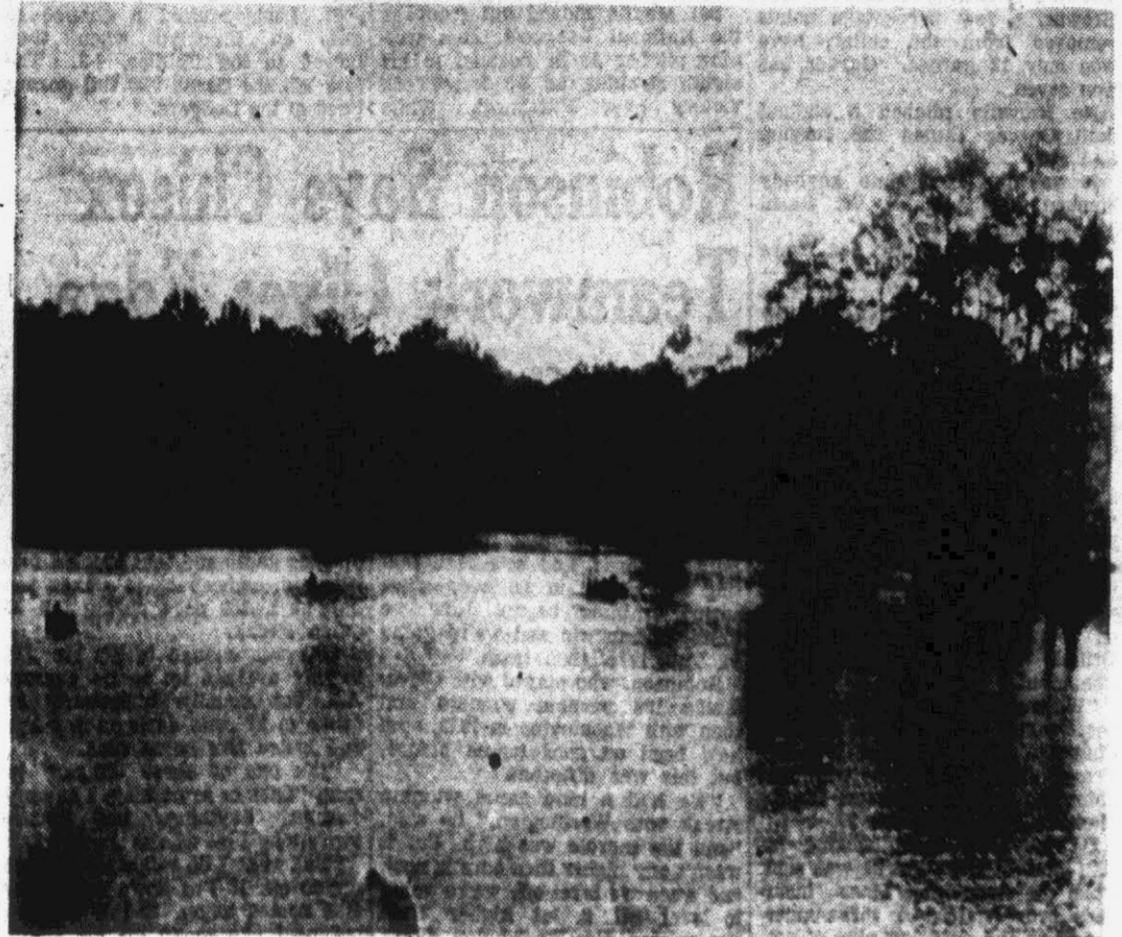

To complete the study of North Carolina the pupils took trips to places of interest, such as Cherry Point, Bath, Edenboro, New Bern and other interesting parts of the state. From these visits, the class brought back souvenirs to help complete the unit.

On the day of the exhibit in which parents, teachers, and the two seventh grades of the Training School were invited to come, members of the eighth grade dressed in costumes which were complementary to the part of the unit they had worked on. The pupils prepared their own costumes and each costume represented what they had done.

The 18 phases were divided into art, literature, music, education, cities, counties, manufacturing, agriculture, minerals, leaders, resorts, history, fishing, government, topography and geography, forestry, wildlife, and transportation.

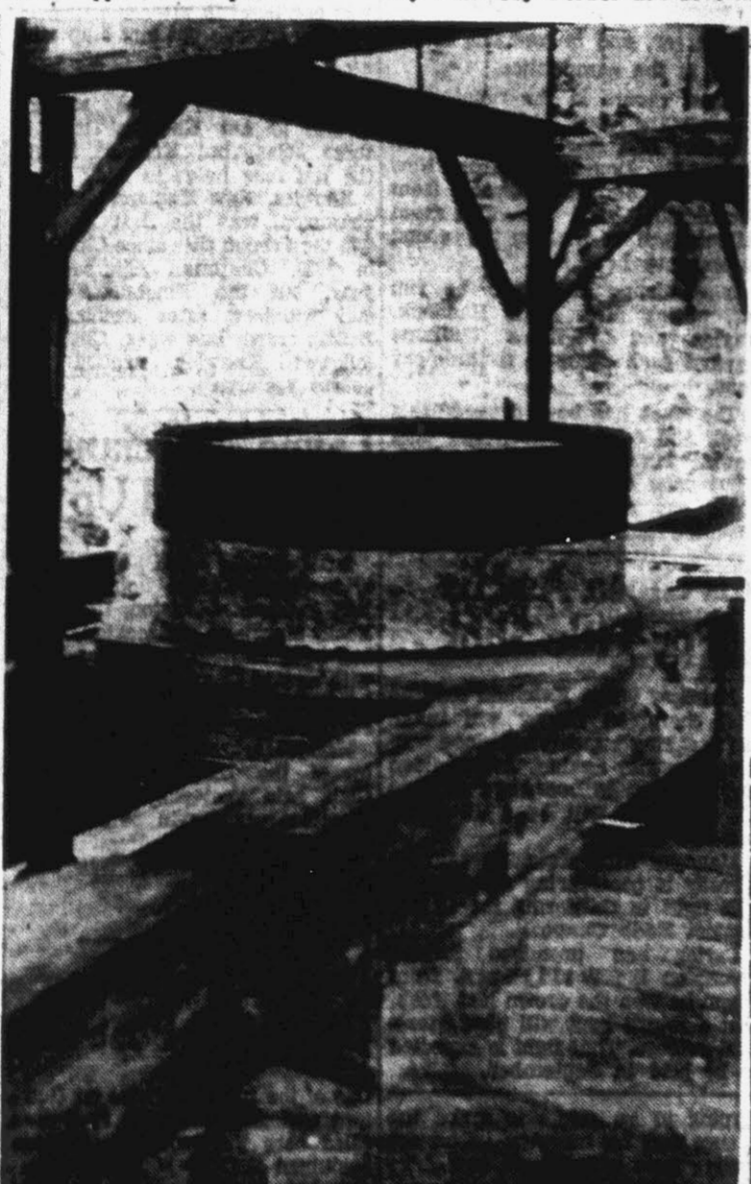

Pictured above are three of the pupils who dressed in costume to represent the exhibit by the eighth grade. Gene Brown, mining; Mitchell Johnson, government; and Rachel Steinbeck, topography. (Staff photos by Muriel Shotwell).

Here is a view of the black pond water and big-hipped cypresses that dot Sheppard's Mill pond.

The bunching-up of the cypresses seems to point up the lonely atmosphere that pervades the pond at twilight.

A great deal of water has flown through the sluiceway to turn these mill stones since the mill began grinding Civil War corn.

Representative of literature are Joanna Hardee and Kitty Collins (background) dressed in clothes made of newspaper; Joe Ward, woodwork; Jimmy Perkins and Hannah Proctor, representing the cities; and James Speight representing farming.

Representing the unit work on life in North Carolina done by Miss Hyman's eighth grade is Clark Nobles, dressed to represent the lumbering industry in the state; Roy Smith and Joe Taft, fishing industry; and Barbara Barber, representing art.

Friday's Cases In Police Court

In Police Court Friday Judge J. W. H. Roberts found Mrs. Rosa McCall Duncan, 215-pound housewife, guilty of assaulting her husband, J. J. Duncan, 125-pounder, with a deadly weapon (a butcher knife). He sentenced her to a year in the women's division of State Prison, Raleigh.

The woman was charged with assault with a deadly weapon in the warrant. Solicitor Ell Bloom and Judge Roberts agreed to amend the warrant and eliminate the phrase about intent to kill. Mrs. Duncan's husband was not in court and his whereabouts are unknown. Police Chief Guy Langston said.

Testimony was that during a family row last July 29, at the couple's home in the rear of the American Express Company's office, on Dickinson avenue, Mrs. Duncan assaulted her husband with a knife, inflicting painful wounds. She provided bond for a hearing in Police Court, but when her name was called she had vanished.

Greenville police located her and her husband while they were in the Salisbury jail serving 90 days each for flashing bad checks. Deputy Sheriff Jasper Lee Mills and City Detective N. H. Byrd brought her back to Greenville several days ago.

The case in which Leslie H. Jones, 20-year-old Negro youth, 618 Albemarle avenue, deliveryman and janitor at Bell's Pharmacy, on Evans street, for some time, is charged with larceny of merchandise from the store, was continued until June 1. Jones was arrested several days ago after police, with a search warrant, had found a quantity of drugs and sundries claimed to have been stolen from the drug store. Jones provided bail and was released from custody.

John T. O'Neal, colored, convicted of hit and run driving, was given three months on the roads and for improper lights and brakes, two months on the roads. The court suspended sentences on condition that he pay court costs in the first case, and pay $60 to Jack Davenport, Jr., and court costs.

John Stuart Murphy was fined $15 for being drunk and $25 for resisting arrest.

Lyman P. Wood, charged with not having an operator's license was called and failed to answer. A capias was issued to bring him into court.

Allen Moore, colored, $15; Charles L. Baker, $15; Guy

J. Campbell was called and he failed to answer to his name and a capias was issued.

J. A. Pollard, who lives in the 1200 block on Pitt street, is charged in a warrant issued by neighbors with having a dog in his possession that is a public nuisance. Witnesses in the case were quoted by police as saying Pollard's dog's barking annoys them and is a public nuisance. Judge Roberts continued the case.

'Youth For Christ' Program Set Tonight

GRIFTON—The next program of "Youth For Christ" will be presented at the Free Union Free Will Baptist Church in Greene county at 7:45 tonight.

Rev. C. L. Patrick, of Grifton, says the attendance at previous meetings has been good, but there is always room for improvement.

A "Youth for Christ" organization came into being several months ago in Pitt, Greene and Lenoir counties and programs have been presented in various churches every other Sunday night since then. The purposes of the "Youth for Christ" are to win young people for the Lord, to train them for service, and to broaden fellowship as they work together.

Native Son Awarded Honors In Louisville

Daniel Murray House, a native son of Greenville, has been recently bestowed with honors in Louisville, Kentucky.

He was elected president of the Pastime Boat Club of Louisville which has approximately 200 members and was reelected president of the Planned Music of Kentucky, Inc., the Louisville Musak music broadcasting company. House has been affiliated with Frank Stanton, vice-president of the Columbia Broadcasting System, since he was released from the Army in 1946.

House is also a member of the Board of Directors of the Downtown Louisville Kiwanis club for 1951.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. A. R. House of Greenville.

Home Damaged By Fire In Fountain

FOUNTAIN—A fire which started about 3:45 p. m. Tuesday at the home of Nance Dupree, colored man, on East Mill street, was brought under control about 4:15 p. m. by Fountain firemen.

Margaret Pitt, colored undertaker of Fountain, owner of the house, said the fire began in the bedroom from a red hot electric iron.

The fire, which did an estimated damage of $50 or more in the home, and $150 or $200 damage to bedroom suite and personal belongings, may be a total loss.

Margaret Pitt, heir to the home through her father, the late R. E. Hamby, hadn't had time to find out if her father carried insurance on this house before his recent death.

Kiwanians Hear Herbert W. Lee

By WYATT HIGSMITH

In last night's meeting of the Greenville Kiwanis Club Herbert W. Lee gave a very informative talk on the effect England is having on Egypt and the other countries of Africa. Mr. Lee has been serving as a diplomatic courier with the U. S. Consulate Service and has been stationed most of the time in Cairo, Egypt, and therefore had a wealth of experience upon which to base his talk.

The speaker brought out in a picturesque manner the good job that England has done in teaching Egypt and those other countries self government but he stated that since Egypt has its independence they are anti-British. He stated that Egypt's religion would prevent her from becoming Communist but that the Russians were attempting to create a spirit of antagonism toward the United States.

Dr. R. E. Hardaway had charge of the program. The attendance prize was won by Guy Langston and Bill Taft paid a nickel for each year of his age on the occasion of his birthday.

War Film Shown Exchange Club

"The Crime of Korea," a War Department film made since the Korean fighting broke out, was shown to members of the Exchange Club last night. It was the second film on the war shown to the club in the current series depicting the fighting.

The film showed U. S. troops taking over the country after the Japanese surrender in 1945, depicting the peaceful surroundings of the land. Then it carried to the current war, showing some of the troops that were massacred during the railroad tunnel incident and also the retreating soldiers and Korean non-combatants.

During the meeting Fred Forbes, employe of Flanagan Buggy Company, and Roy (Curly) Wilson of the

Blunt-Speaking General Relieved Of His Command

ATLANTA (UP) - Brig. Gen. Walter A. Hanna, who once said U. S. troops would be kicked out of Korea faster than they could pull out, was relieved of active duty yesterday. Last month he lost his post as deputy commander of the 31st Division.

A Third Army spokesman said the blunt-talking officer was released "without prejudice" at his own request so he could "assume his former duties as adjutant general of Alabama."

The Army did not give its reason for relieving Hanna of his division assignment. The Birmingham general had several times criticized U. S. foreign policy.

Soviet Mission Ordered Leave

VIENNA T-(UP)- The United States has ordered a Soviet repatriation mission to leave the American zone of Austria by June 1.

A State Department spokesman said last night that all displaced persons have been given an opportunity to return to their homes and the mission no longer serves any useful purpose.

She stated that it was alarming, in a sense, that most of the candidates for Christian service come from homes of ministers or former missionaries. More should be coming from the homes of lay people, she thought, and the need is for more parents who will catch the vision and translate their enthusiasm and interest in it into the lives of their children.

"The doors are not closing," she concluded, "but are opening ever wider to fields of service and challenging opportunities."

Prior to the address by Mrs. Brooks, six Honorary Life Patron pins, representing more than $1800 that had been contributed for special missionary projects were presented to honor members in the Conference. Mrs. H. R. Odum of Gibson, Conference secretary of Youth Work, Mrs. E. C. Thomas retiring secretary of the Durham District; Mrs. J. M. Jerome of Rose Hill, Conference secretary of Christian Social Relations; and Church Activities; Mrs. George Jackson, retiring secretary of the Elizabeth City District; Miss Priscilla Steegar, industrial worker in East Laurinburg, and Mrs. H. A. Davis of Raleigh, Conference treasurer, were the recipients of the pins.

The Lillie Moore Everette Study Jewel was awarded to the Raleigh District, with Mrs. H. C. Turlington accepting it. The Elizabeth City District was given special mention as it was only 2 per cent behind in second place.

In her president's message to the Conference Mrs. J. H. Outchin of Whitakers, stressed compassion, conviction, courage and consecration as attributes to be cultivated by Methodist women. She said, "Each woman has a definite part to take and a specified task to accomplish. With courage, compassion and consecration, we will follow our convictions."

Reports from various secretaries were given at the morning session, and during the afternoon session the program was devoted entirely to reports from secretaries and chairmen of various committees.

The evening session meeting at 7:30 featured a solo by Miss Allison Hearne and another address by Mrs. Frank Brooks.

Most doors that could lead to a negotiated settlement are rapidly being closed by the Iranians. A vast source of fuel that is vital to our European allies and the army which Gen. Dwight D. Acheson said he would be "very glad" to tell "what matters were taken up, what the outcome of each particular meeting was, what no particular meeting was, what conclusions were reached and what action was agreed upon and taken."
