Ask Names Of County War Dead

British Government Would Send Memorial Volume To Next-Of-Kin

Names of all Pitt County servicemen who lost their lives while operating from British bases during World War II are being urgently sought by the English government.

Astor explained in his letter that an American Memorial Chapel has been constructed in St. Pauls, the great cathedral of Sir Christopher Wren which is the parish church of the British Commonwealth of Nations.

It is the plan, Astor stated, to have stained-glass windows in the chapel to depict the insignias of the 48 states which represent the birthplaces of the 28,000 American men and women who died in the war.

"It represents a national tribute, an act commemorating American service and sacrifice, in the common defense of world liberty by millions of ordinary men and women," the British publisher's letter stated.

According to Astor, an illustrated volume entitled, "Britain's Homage To 28,000 American Dead," has been carefully prepared which tells the story of the creation of the American Memorial Chapel.

Requests by the next-of-kin for a copy of the volume should be written on a postcard, giving: 1. Name of the relative who died while serving with U. S. Forces based upon Britain; 2. Name or title of the unit in which he or she served; and 3. Writer's name and full address and relationship to the dead person.

Cards should be addressed to Colonel the Hon. J. J. Astor; The Times, London, Inc., 45, East 51st Street, New York 22, N. Y.

Attempt Reach Plane Wreckage By Ground Team

SAN BERNARDINO, Calif. (UP)—Air Force rescue officials abandoned attempts to reach a crashed C-47 transport high on snow-capped Mt. San Geronimo by air today, and launched a slow but steady ground expedition toward the wreckage.

Thirteen bodies are believed to be in the demolished plane.

A 12-man party was to leave a lake some four-airmiles from the wreckage early today and was expected to reach the crash scene by Wednesday.

Earlier efforts to reach the wreckage, both by air and ground, were defeated by howling winds and deep snow drifts.

The wreckage is believed to be that of an Air Force transport which disappeared last Monday night while approaching March Field from Arizona.

Castle For Rent To Goo Tenant

EDINBURGH, Scotland (UP)—The Duke of Montrose offered today to rent his family home, Buchanan Castle, Strlingshire, for 10 pounds ($28) a week.

He stipulated, however, the tenant must keep its 16 bathrooms, 40 bedrooms and $15,000 elevator in top condition.

London Paralyzed By Worst Peasoup Fog

LONDON (UP)—The worst peasoup fog in London's history paralyzed vital city services and the capital's normal life today and gave a perfect cover to robbers, burglars and other criminals.

The fog—in its fourth day—was reported to extend one-half mile over London. It had rolled hundreds of feet underground into subway tunnels and stations.

It covered 100 square miles around London paralyzing rail, road and air traffic. Only the London subway was running on schedule—and that very late.

Men carrying torches and flashlights led fire trucks and ambulances through city streets. In a lanes through this morning firemen ran ahead of their engines for six miles, guiding the drivers with flashlights, but when they got to the fire it had burned itself out.

In a southeast London borough 30,000 persons were deprived of electricity—used for heat, cooking and light in many homes—when an overloaded transformer in a sub-station blew out.

Motorists abandoned hundreds of automobiles in city streets and the

Nat'l Guardsmen Move In On Armed Prison Rioters

SANTA FE, N.M. (UP)—National guardsmen today seized control of the riot-torn New Mexico state prison, where armed convicts had demanded their freedom and threatened to kill seven guards held as hostages.

Acting on orders from Gov. Edwin Mechem, a 55-man detachment of guardsmen armed with carbines moved into the old brick prison. Meanwhile, an ambulance raced out of the main gate taking a prisoner who was shot last night to a Santa Fe hospital. There was no report of the unidentified prisoner's condition.

A Los Alamos security policeman told newsmen that the convicts were armed with a sub-machine gun, two rifles, two double-barreled shotguns and two pump shotguns.

Mechem declared a state of emergency and flew from Phoenix, Ariz., to take charge at the site after the rioting convicts demanded that authorities throw open the gates and let them drive out to freedom.

"They're not having a tea party in there," one official said. "They're threatening to kill the guards if there is any 'funny stuff.'"

One state patrolman was slightly wounded by a bullet from another officer's gun and one prisoner was reported injured in the riot which broke out early Sunday night.

Officials threw a virtual news blackout around the prison. Details as to the cause of the riot and the exact number of convicts involved could not be learned.

Officials said "only about eight or nine" of the 600 convicts were actively engaged in the riot and that they were demanding a car and safe conduct through the prison gates.

State Police Chief Joe Roach summoned all available state patrolmen. More than 100 patrolmen, security police from the Atomic Energy Commission, in addition to nearby Los Alamos, prison guards, sheriff's deputies and local police surrounded the penitentiary.

They were armed with tear gas guns and sub-machine guns but made no attempt to enter the barred cell block.

Reports that seven other convicts were loose in the prison could not be confirmed officially.

The riot reportedly started when convicts were being escorted to their evening meal. They overpowered two unarmed guards, seized their keys and broke into a deputy warden's office where they armed themselves with shotguns, rifles and pistols.

Slower Defense Spending Cuts Federal Deficit

WASHINGTON (UP)—A slow-down in defense spending may cut this year's federal deficit to about $5,500,000,000.

That is a little more than half of the $10,300,000,000 deficit for the 1953 fiscal year which the administration predicted four months ago.

And it is only 38 per cent of the $14,400,000,000 deficit which President Truman foresaw when he sent his budget message to Congress last January.

Government experts said that a lag in defense spending, which has never been fully explained to the public, is mainly responsible for keeping the Treasury from going as deep in the red as expected.

Tax collections have been running a little higher than the Treasury anticipated, but not much. It now appears that the government will take in about $69,000,000,000 before the 1953 fiscal year ends next June 30, instead of $68,700,000,000 as previously thought.

The big change which has thrown the administration's guesses out of kilter has been in spending. The experts now figure that it will run about $74,500,000,000 instead of $79,000,000,000.

Congress helped to put a crimp in spending by cutting many of President Truman's budget requests. But all of the Congressional cuts were supposedly taken into account last August, when the Treasury revised the expected deficit downward from $14,400,000,000 to $10,300,000,000.

The 55-day steel strike last summer was an obvious explanation for the lag in defense spending which has taken place since Congress went home.

Administration officials possibly influenced by a desire to defend President Truman's handling of the steel strike, discount its importance in slowing down defense purchases. But they have no alternate explanation.

One other possibility, seen by unofficial observers, is that the military simply asked for, and got, many billions more than they are able to spend this year.

In any event, official figures show that defense production fell off sharply in August and did not climb back to June levels until November.

The defense Department still claims that military output will hit its peak, as scheduled, next June. But President Truman's budget experts evidently are skeptical of this claim. They have cut almost $5,000,000,000 from the defense spending originally included in Mr. Truman's tentative budget for fiscal 1954. The Truman budget for next year is now expected to total about $80,000,000,000.

Probe Political Role In Rackets

NEW YORK (UP)—State Crime investigators expected to hear today the part politics plays on the racket-ridden waterfront.

A steamship company executive was scheduled to tell the story at the Crime Commission's hearing into conditions on the docks of the world's largest and busiest port.

Although the commission would not announce the names of witnesses called to testify today, it was believed that Gerardo (Jerry) Anastasio, a business agent of the International Longshoremen's Association (ILA) would return to the stand.

Anastasias refused to answer questions last Friday other than to state his name. He was told that unless he changed his mind about testifying he faced a contempt charge.

Anastasias is the brother of Albert Anastasia, so-called low high executioner for the infamous killer-for-hire "Murder, Incorporated."

The commission has been trying to put Albert Anastasia on the stand to tell what he knows about shakedown, thefts and other crime along the waterfront but he has refused to answer a subpoena.

It was learned Sunday that Anastasia had been injured in an automobile accident and was confined to his bed in his luxurious home in New Jersey.

Anastasias's lawyer said his client expected to recover from his injuries in a week or 10 days and would testify the hearing.

As the commission sought to gain information from Anastasio, three other reluctant witnesses awaited a ruling by Supreme Court Justice Felix C. Benavente on their motion questioning the legal right of the commission to subpoena them.

Drunk Charge Is Based On Nap

PHILADELPHIA (UP)—Police charged Milton Hall 37, with drunkenness Sunday for taking a nap.

Hall went to sleep on the roadbed of the Broad Street Subway. A subway train was held up 15 minutes while police tried to awaken him. He finished his nap at the police station.

Plans No Charge Against Fiancee

BOSTON (UP)—The man's missing wallet was found concealed in the dress of his woman companion and police asked him Sunday night if he wanted to press charges.

"Oh, no," the man said, taking the woman roughly by the arm. "We've been keeping company seven years and we're engaged to be married."

SPIRITED CHRISTMAS

ENFIELD, N. C. (AP)—This should be a very spirited Christmas for thieves who broke into an Enfield liquor store yesterday. Police Chief F. C. Sykes said 110 cases of whiskey were stolen.

Conferences Open At Sea For Eisenhower, Top Aides

PEARL HARBOR (AP)—Eleven years to the minute after the Japanese sneak attack on Pearl Harbor, somber Americans gathered in a misty rain yesterday and heard warnings of a possible new war to come.

At 7:55 a.m. (12:55 p.m. EST) ground was broken for a $75,000 shrine to honor the dead of the U. S. Navy, more than 2,000 of whom lost their lives on that fateful Sunday in 1941.

Frank Serrao, acting governor of Hawaii, warned the assemblage, "Our avowed enemy—creeping, insidious communism, hard, mean and ruthless—appears not only on every frontier of the world but in our towns and on our very doorsteps."

Far across the Pacific, the Japanese ignored the date. Most Japanese seem to regard the attack as the nation's greatest mistake.

Hopes Court Will Hear Draft Case

WASHINGTON (UP)—A mild-mannered Nashville, Tenn., lawyer hoped today the United States Supreme Court would hear his case against drafting soldiers for service in Korea without war having been declared.

Fyke Farmer has asked the court to consider the case of Stanley Dale Sydow, 23, Lyons, Neb., who refused to answer the draft board order requiring him to appear for induction.

Sydow, a farm boy, was convicted last Oct. 7 for failure to report for induction and was sentenced to three years in prison. He is in jail in Omaha awaiting the outcome of his appeals to the Circuit and Supreme courts.

Sydow, brother of a World War II vet and son of ardent peace advocates, decided war was wrong and that the Korean war was illegal, Farmer said.

The Nashville attorney, who has spent several years working to out-law war by international law, wants to raise these constitutional questions before the Supreme Court:

1. Whether President Truman has authority to call men for possible service in Korea in the absence of a declaration of war by Congress.

2. Whether there is an expressed restriction on presidential power contained in the United Nations Participation Act of 1945, requiring Congress to consent to use of U. S. military forces in a United Nations action.

1952 Cotton Crop Estimate Raised

WASHINGTON (UP)—The Agriculture Department today fixed the size of the 1952 cotton crop at 15,283,000 bales, up 133,000 bales, or about one per cent from last month's forecast.

The final estimate of the year, based in Dec. 1 conditions, compares with production last year of 15,144,000 bales and 10-year average output of 11,775,000 bales.

Last month the crop reporting board estimated a 14,905,000 bale crop was in the offing this year. The official 1952 total called for a 16,000,000 bale crop, but needs have been revised downward.

The department estimated yields of 288.4 pounds of lint per acre was produced on the 4,995,000 acres it estimated were harvested this year.

Last year yields from 26,687,000 harvested acres were 271.9 pounds an acre. In the 10 years, 1941-50, an average of 21,020,000 acres were harvested with average yields of 267.6 pounds of lint from each acre.

The board estimated that 5.5 per cent of the 26,460,000 acres planted to cotton last spring were abandoned during the year because of weather or insect damage.

In July, when it made its first and only other estimate on planted acreage this year, it figured farmers planted 26,051,000 acres of cotton. That figure was the basis for production estimates made in the past four months.

Queen Decrees Coronation Will Be On Television

LONDON (UP)—Queen Elizabeth II decreed today that all but the most intimate parts of her coronation ceremony in Westminster Abbey next June 2 shall be televised.

There was such a clamor that the commission reconsidered and recommended to the queen that as much of the ceremony as possible be screened.

As the result the queen ordered today that nearly all of it be televised.

Hear Warnings

Test Of Draft With No Declaration Of War Is Sought

Young Swimmer Killed By Shark In Furious Fight

PACIFIC GROVE, Calif. (UP)—A 17-year-old boy was killed after a furious struggle with a man-eating shark yesterday in the first such case ever known off the Pacific coast of the United States.

Berry Wilson, 17, of Pacific Grove, was swimming in Monterey Bay about 80 feet off the municipal beach when the shark attacked him. He screamed and a companion, Brookner W. Brady, 15, went to his aid.

At first, Brady thought Wilson was fighting with a sea lion. He swam out with a GI trench knife he was carrying to open abalone shells. When he saw the shark, he stabbed the man-eater three times near the eye.

Brady said the shark was "15 to 25 feet long," with a large pointed head.

National Forests Show A Profit

WASHINGTON (UP)—The government, which barely broke even on forest operations in 1951, made an $11,384,511 profit on its national forests in fiscal 1952. The Agriculture Department reported today.

Higher prices for timber were chiefly responsible for the tenfold increase in profits. The government makes money—forest operations through sale of timber, grazing permits and land-use and water power permits.

Final Election Tally Due Soon

WASHINGTON (UP)—Complete official returns from 38 states and unofficial and slightly incomplete returns from 10 states showed today that Dwight D. Eisenhower got 32,836,948 votes and Gov. Adlai E. Stevenson 26,548,730 votes in the Nov. 4 presidential balloting.

Final official returns for all the states are expected in a week or 10 days.

Korean War Believed Leading Topic, But Press Secretary Says No Announcement On Meetings Will Be Released

ABOARD U.S.S. HELENA EN ROUTE TO HAWAII (AP)—President-elect Dwight Eisenhower today opened a formal conference with advisers and future members of his administration within two hours after they were brought aboard the heavy cruiser by helicopter from Wake Island.

The Korean War was believed to be the main topic of discussion. But Eisenhower's press secretary, James C. Hagerty, told reporters there would be no announcement now of subjects discussed or decisions that might be reached.

Reports that a definite military program already had been decided upon were derided by one reliable source close to Eisenhower.

"Nothing is definite yet," he declared, referring to reports that Eisenhower favored enlarging the Korean War.

Hagerty made it clear to reporters aboard the Helena that the general may not disclose his plans until after he has taken office Jan. 20.

"We will make no statement on Korea," the press secretary declared. The conference that began today will continue until the Helena reaches Pearl Harbor Thursday. There, those aboard the cruiser will join military leaders and advisers for at least two more days of discussions. Hagerty said he could not say what the general's itinerary would be after he leaves Hawaii.

Those who came aboard at Wake Island: John Foster Dulles, secretary of state-designate; Gov. Douglas McKay of Oregon, who will be secretary of the Interior; George M. Humphrey of Cleveland, secretary of the Treasury-designate; Gen. Lucius Clay, close friend and adviser to Eisenhower; Joseph M. Dodge of Detroit, who may be the next director of the budget, and C. D. Jackson and Emmet Hughes, who will be on the general's White House staff.

Charles E. Wilson, defense secretary-designate; and Adm. Arthur Radford, commander in chief, Pacific, left the Helena at Wake and flew to Pearl Harbor. There they will confer with Gen. Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, on military problems in Korea.

Eisenhower lunched with those who remained aboard, including Herbert Brownell, attorney general-designate, and Wilton B. Persons, who will be a White House assistant.

Bloodmobile Here Dec. 15; Lions Sponsoring Visit To City... Recruiting Donors

Sponsoring the next visit of the Red Cross Bloodmobile to the city will be the Greenville Lions Club, whose members have already begun work on recruiting donors.

The bloodmobile will make its 12th visit to the county Monday, December 15. The center will be set up in Greenville at the Jarvis Memorial Methodist Church, with hours from 12 noon to 6 p.m.

At the December 1 meeting of the Lions Club, members voted unanimously to sponsor the bloodmobile's visit and accepted five donor cards.

He further stated that every member of the club made an excellent response to the idea that they sponsor this month's stand of the bloodmobile. "Everyone is 100 per cent for it," he said.

Lester Turnage, co-chairman of recruitment in the county, will have charge of recruiting donors outside of the Lions Club. Mrs. James Smith will be in charge of volunteer nurses and Mrs. Charles Gaskins will head the work of the Greenville Service League in its duties during the bloodmobile's stand.

The quota has been set at 150 pints. During the past year, the quota has been met six times, three times at East Carolina College. At five visits of the bloodmobile, recruitment has fallen below the quota.

Since inauguration of the blood program in the county last January, blood has been constantly sent from the blood center at Norfolk to Pitt Memorial Hospital where it has been given free of charge to patients except for administration costs.

With the county's participation in the blood program, every citizen of Pitt is entitled to blood when needed without charge. This applies also when the patient is in a hospital out of the county.

Rare Blood Was Rushed To Pitt

A highway patrol relay between Windsor and Greenville last Tuesday night, bringing a rare type of blood to Pitt Memorial Hospital, saved the life of a patient.

An emergency case was brought into the hospital last Tuesday night with the patient in need of a rare type of blood—O-RH Negative.

Because of its rarity the needed type of blood is not kept at the local hospital. A call was put through to the Red Cross emergency blood sub-station in Windsor and within a few hours the blood reached Pitt Memorial by Highway Patrol car.

The patient was "kept going" by plasma until the two pints of life-saving fluid arrived and was administered.

A Red Cross official said that through this case, Pitt County's participation in the blood program had paid off again.

Streetcar Tows Damaged Auto

DALLAS, Tex. (UP)—A motorist crossing the Trinity River thought he was driving on the Houston Street Viaduct. Instead he had driven onto a streetcar trestle, police said today.

Eight-tenths of a mile and four blocks later, the oil pan was dragged off the automobile. The motor overheated and froze and the driver fell asleep as the car stalled 60 feet over a street.

A streetcar finally towed the automobile to a levee where a wrecker with a derrick lifted it from the tracks.

each to be filled out and returned at the meeting tonight.

Jimmy Harris, in charge of the Lions Club's participation, said today he was sure the club would carry the 12th visit of the bloodmobile to success. "It is our civic duty to recruit donors and a necessity which we can't let down," stated Harris.

He further stated that every member of the club made an excellent response to the idea that they sponsor this month's stand of the bloodmobile. "Everyone is 100 per cent for it," he said.

Lester Turnage, co-chairman of recruitment in the county, will have charge of recruiting donors outside of the Lions Club. Civil Liberties Issue Held Not Raised In Case

WASHINGTON (UP)—The American Civil Liberties Union today rejected arguments that President Truman should commute the death sentences of convicted atomic spies Julius and Ethel Rosenberg on grounds of civil liberties.

The ACLU said the conviction of the Rosenbergs "raised no civil liberties issue." It added, however, "at the President should, 'in line with established practice' in other communication cases, 'consider' the fact that the Rosenbergs' children will be left orphans if they are executed.

The Rosenbergs have lost an appeal to the Supreme Court and are doomed to die by electrocution unless a new appeal is permitted or Mr. Truman eases the sentences.

Car Collision Injures Three Here Saturday

Three persons were injured when two cars collided on the Old Creek road near the Pactolus Highway, around noon Saturday.

Investigating officers, C. E. Whitfield and James Boykin, stated that a car driven by Herman E. Dupree, 51, Negro of Route 2 Fountain, ran through a "stop" sign and into the path of a car driven by Dr. Joseph C. Bateman, 1612 Sunset Ave., Greenville.

Three occupants of the Dupree car were taken to Pitt Memorial Hospital for treatment of injuries. Injured were: Willis Forman, 51, Route 2, Fountain, mouth and facial injuries and internal injuries; Annie Forman, 50, facial lacerations; Lillie Mercer, 22, of Route 2, Farmville, facial lacerations and back injury.

Dupree was charged with careless and reckless driving. His car was totally destroyed in the wreck, while damage estimated at over $500 resulted to the Bateman car.

Neither Bateman nor Dupree was injured.

Highway accidents over the past weekend numbered two, with one person killed and three others injured.

A 38-year-old Negro man was killed instantly Saturday morning when the truck which he was operating went out of control and threw him to the pavement.

Local Patrol officers investigated eight accidents on Thursday and Friday of last week but the fast accident pace tapered off with only the two accidents for the weekend, but a heavy toll.

The fatality Saturday brought to eleven the number of persons slain on Pitt's highways so far this year. Last year, ten persons lost their lives in highway accidents.

Women In The Church

By Mary Fowler

Friday, February 20, 1953 will be observed by millions of church women around the world as "World Day of Prayer." This will be its 66th annual observance. In the U.S.A. the call to prayer is made by the United Council of Church Women, and will be answered by prayer groups gathering in more than 18,000 U.S. communities. Women in some 114 other nations also will join in prayer.

Mrs. John M. Irvine, of Wexford, Pa., chairman of the Prayer Committee, says that participants in the observance will use a service prepared by the women of Africa on the theme, "Walk As Children of Light." Unusual features of the program include a call to worship accompanied by drums and a thanksgiving "Song of the Emancipated" chanted to the rhythmic clapping of hands; in the custom of native Africans, "The Day," she says, "is set apart for a globe-encircling demonstration of Christian unity, through prayer and meditation and through offerings used for mission projects.

On the edge of Beppu City, a hot springs resort in the Island of Kyushu, Japan, is a sium area. It is called "The Beggars' Village." The people living there are outcasts from good Japanese society. "They live in abject poverty and squalor, and their homes are made of packing boxes, oil tins, and other materials discarded by people of better stations in life," says Dr. T. T. Brumbaugh, Methodist missionary leader, who recently visited the community. "But these beggars love their homes, and they love their children, and want them to have better opportunities for life than their parents have enjoyed. So they were glad when Miss Catherine Stevens, missionary of the Woman's Society of Christian Service, asked them if they wanted a Sunday school and a church in their village. She said she would supply the lumber if they would build the little church. They agreed, and soon a structure ten by fourteen feet was taking form. Today "The Beggars' Church" is the center of life of that community. Proud parents accompany their children to the Sunday school and stand outside the windows and listen as the gospel is portrayed in song and prayer and simply phrased sermons. Children's kimonos are just a little cleaner and faces a little brighter since the church came to "Beggars' Village."

Belatedly Tell Of Big Flood

HONG KONG (AP)—The Chinese Communist news agency belatedly announced recently that a storm on Sept. 24 hit the Central Yangtze area, flooding 40,000 acres, collapsing 28 dams and affecting 100,000 persons.

The report raised speculation here because this is the vulnerable mid-Yangtze-Tungting Lake region where the Chinese Reds claimed they had eliminated flood danger by an elaborate system of dikes, dams and impounding basins.

When the Reds announced completion of the project last spring, engineers here said the type of flood-control job described would require up to five years to complete. The Reds said they did it in three months, using "improved Russian methods."

Stevenson admitted it was his whiskey and told officers he bought it after hearing rumors the price might go up for the holidays.

The Negro posted a $200 check with officers as bond for his appearance in County Court tomorrow on charges of illegal possession of non-tax-paid whiskey.

Officers participating in the raid were Ward, Dick King and "Chief" J.L. Taylor.

Bought Bootleg Early This Year

PACTOLUS. "The reason I bought so early this year was because I heard the price of liquor was going up for Christmas," Roy Stevenson told Pitt ABC officers Saturday.

And obviously the 40-year-old Negro who lives in Pactolus Township near Ward's Bridge held his "holiday toddy" in high regard, officers stated, because he had two gallons of bootleg whiskey hidden in bed under the covers.

J.M. Ward, one of the raiding officers, declared this morning when the force reached Stevenson's house that afternoon the occupant at first denied having any illegal whiskey.

After it was found in the bedroom well bundled up, Ward said,

Strength for the Day

REAL HEROES
A brave man challenging evil is always an inspiring sight. History gives us the account of Anthony, strolling into the streets of Antioch, to denounce its prefect, of Athanasius, seizing the bride of Emperor Constantine's horse and rebuking the emperor for his sins as he rode for the first time into Constantinople, of the monk Telemachus, rushing between two gladiators in the Roman arena, paying for his boldness with his life but bringing gladiatorial contest forever to an end.

Last week I sat in the assembly hall of a preparatory school and looked upon the portrait of a man who, deliberately and with full knowledge that it meant death, plunged his plane into a German plane in the First World War in order to save his friend whose plane was being attacked.

There always has been heroism in the world and there always will be. The greatest heroism, however, occurs in the mills, offices, kitchens, and farm houses of this and every other country. The great heroes are not only the ones who challenge evil in high places but those who patiently endure "the slings and arrows of an outrageous fortune."

"The eternal God is our refuge and underneath are the everlasting arms."

Justified Denial Of Responsibility

Greenville aldermen have denied the city has any financial responsibility in the elimination of two serious traffic hazards within the city limits.

In this case, The Reflector believes the city officials are justified in denying such financial responsibility.

The action came last week when the aldermen refused to agree to pay one-third the cost of raising the railroad overpass on Charles Street near the city limits, and one-third the cost of installing signal lights at the railroad crossing on South Evans Street.

Both matters have been hanging fire for many weeks since the aldermen requested the state highway department to take steps to remove the hazards. In view of the fact three agencies—the city, the highway department and the railroad—were involved in the proposed improvements, each seems to have been in hopes it would not have to shoulder the financial responsibility for the alterations.

As the negotiations have unraveled, it seems the matter has been left in the lap of the highway department.

The streets at both the railroad crossing and the overpass are part of the public highway system, and as such are maintained by the state highway department. The city should not be expected to step in at this particular moment and assume part of the financial responsibility for the improvements which are sorely needed at the two points.

Both the crossing and the low overpass are menaces to the safety of people who travel the streets. Time should not be wasted before the hazards are removed.

Indeed, we hope it does not take a tragedy at either the overpass or the crossing to get a definite commitment on improvements as it did in the case of the Trent River bridge at New Bern.

Russia Should Stand Trial For Treason

Russia should go on trial before the United Nations on the grounds of "treason" to that organization's intent to preserve world peace.

Russia has undermined United Nations attempts to preserve peace at every turn. Russia has thwarted every movement within the United Nations to establish world peace — except a peace predicated upon Russian domination of the world.

Should Russia not be brought to trial for its crimes perpetrated against the citizens of the world? Is not the United Nations, if it is to fulfill its purpose, sooner or later bound to assert its own place and test its collective strength against that of a powerful individual nation?

Certainly there are sufficient grounds upon which to press charges of treason against Russia in the United Nations. The organization has branded Communist China an aggressor for its activities in Korea; but until now no nation has seen fit to bring similar charges against Russia although most of the free world is confident it was Russia, not China, which was ultimately responsible for the Korean War.

The recent untimely death of the Indian peace proposal at the hands of Russia in the United Nations should make it clear to any remaining skeptics that peace through the United Nations will not be possible so long as Russia is allowed to sit in that body and continue its peace-smashing policies which have been characteristic since the inception of the U. N.

As long as the members of the United Nations sit on their hands and abide by their "kid glove" policies toward Russia, the Kremlin is going to continue to take advantage of the situation.

Were the justified charges brought against Russia before the United Nations, no one can say exactly what the outcome would be. Nevertheless, the United Nations would be just as strong — we believe stronger — following a trial of Russia and that nation's expulsion if the members saw fit, as it is with the world's most notorious traitor sitting in its midst.

Such charges against Russia do not hold pictures of immediate peace and security for the nations of the world. Yet, a continuation of the present situation offers no such prospects either.

The free nations of the world under the United Nations, if they are to remain free, must be firm and resolute in their policies toward Russia. A showdown must come either in the United Nations or on the battlefields before the crisis the world faces is passed.

It is better that it comes first in the United Nations and without indefinite delay.

National Whirligig

WASHINGTON—Several violently controversial issues may disappear from the American political scene within the next few years, as completely as the question of prohibition. They will disappear because recent studies show that they have more superficial than real importance, and partially because the public mood has shifted on these problems.

In the order of their impact on the politics of the last 20 years, they involve such matters as fair employment practices, labor-management relations and expansion of public versus private power. It is not accidental that Roosevelt-Truman concentration on these three issues contributed to the Democratic triumphs in five successive Presidential elections.

It was that Party's advocacy of FEPC, its opposition to the Taft-Hartley Act and its support of Government power which, until last November 4, won millions of votes among such elements as racial minorities, organized labor and so-called "liberal" believers in centralized, federal control. And it was these very voting groups which, again until November 4, rolled up decisive majorities for the Democrats in the great centers of population.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING—Ironically, it is an official report on military, industrial and civilian manpower by the National Security Resources Board which suggests that all the political excitement over FEPC has been much ado about nothing.

At the request of Senator Humphrey of Minnesota, a Civil Rights advocate, NSRB investigated to ascertain whether FEPC legislation contributed to all-out use of available manpower. That was the purpose of the inquiry.

The experts discovered that 11 states and 25 cities have fair employment statutes of one kind or another. Few have any coercive or police action features; they simply provide an agency to which alleged victims of discrimination for race, creed or color may submit their complaints. The officials then investigate the merits of the protest, and discuss them with the employers.

FEW DESISTING ORDERS—The survey showed that since 1945 there have been only 5,900 complaints of alleged discrimination in these 26 official agencies, city and state. In slightly more than half of these cases was any evidence of injustice found, and they were settled through negotiation and conciliation. In only six instances did desisting orders have to be issued. Nobody has been imprisoned for violation.

In New York City, which has been a hotbed of political oratory and excitement over this issue, the number of complaints by minority groups and individuals fell from 999 to a handful within a year after enactment of the law. The effect was similar in New Jersey, Connecticut and Massachusetts.

Employers have made no attempt to evade the law, finding that it increased their labor pool in times of shortages. They usually abandoned any offending practices by their hiring officers after the practice was called to their attention by conciliators.

Although NSRB drew no conclusions, the findings of the problem can be handled successfully on a local, state or federal level. Indeed, it might have vanished with the end of World War II had it not been for its vote-getting value.

BELIEVE IN IKE'S FAIRNESS—Although the big unions may go through the motions of opposing Taft-Hartley amendments, the leaders have become reconciled to changes designed to make it more workable and less lopsided. They believe that Eisenhower will be "fair" in seeking revision.

They are especially heartened by his opposition to any prohibition against industry-wide bargaining. In fact, it has been their fear of this threat which led them to demand outright repeal instead of reopening of the existing statute.

Martin P. Durkin, the new Secretary of Labor, has said that he favors the Eisenhower plan. And Durkin is a close friend and successor as plumbers union president to George Meany, the new AFL head.

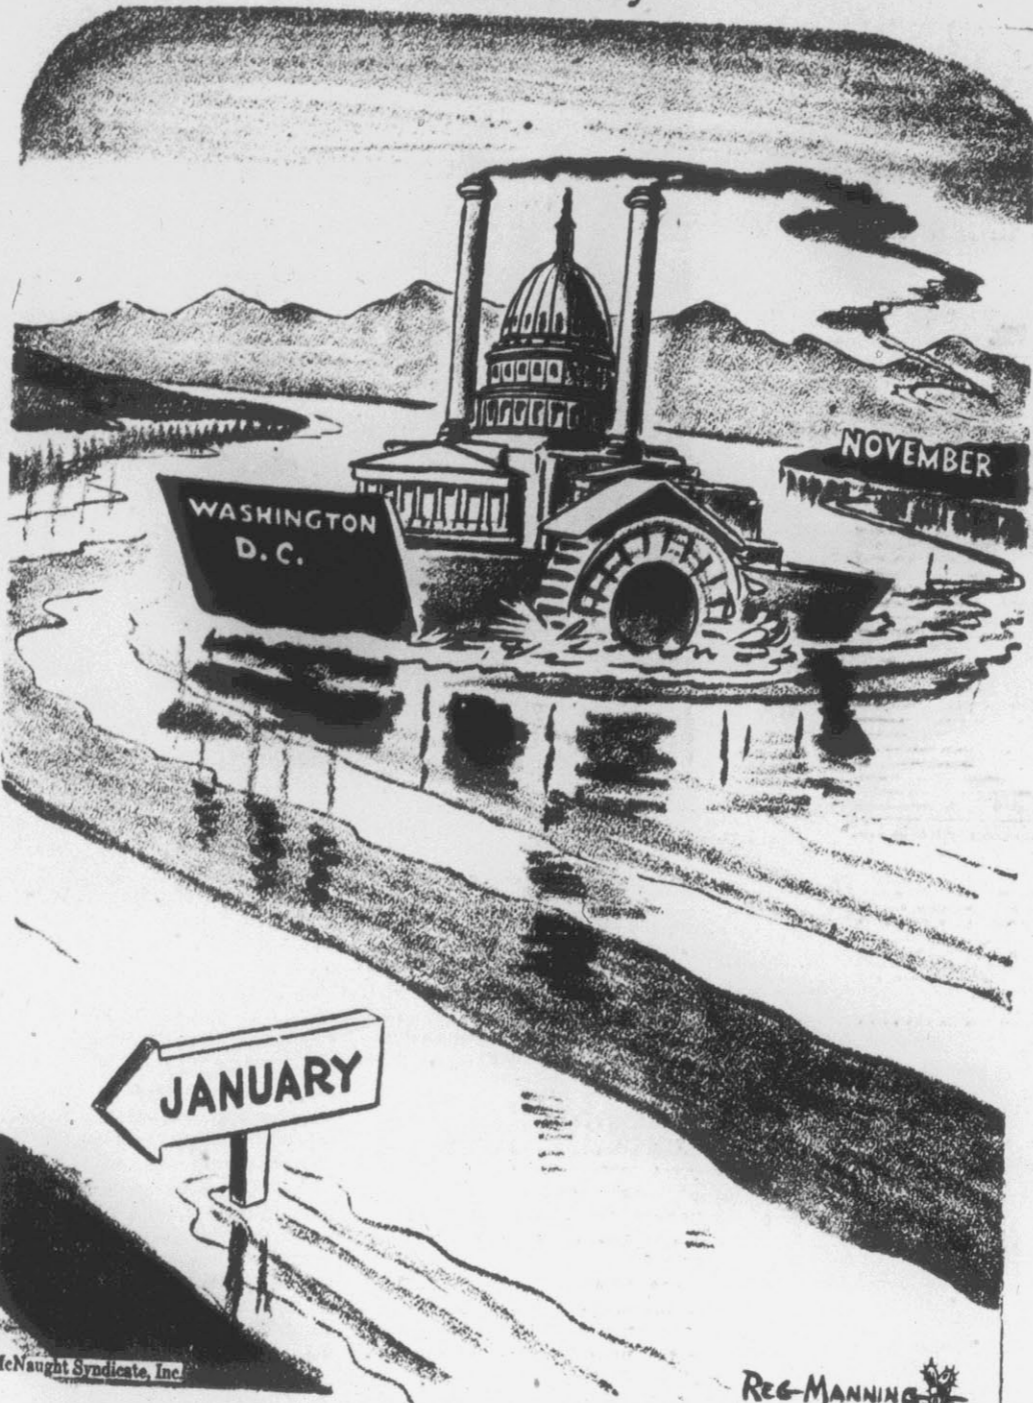

UNIONS FAVOR PRIVATE INDUSTRY—The issue of public versus private power seems to be losing its spell, politically and economically. The Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, CIO, has condemned government expansion in formal resolutions. The unions say they get a better deal from private industry than from Uncle Sam.

The farmers rebelled on this question in the First Kansas Congressional District on November 4. Because he voted for a public power dam that will overflow 55,000 acres of fine farming land, Representative Albert M. Cole, a four-termer, was defeated by Howard S. Miller, a political newcomer, by 4,600 votes. In other areas the farmers have protested against being flooded out by Uncle Sam.

Surveys by the private utilities indicate the growth of an anti-public power sentiment on a nationwide scale. People fear that the loss of taxes boosts their own contribution more than they gain through so-called "cheap power."

Since the cost per kilowatt hour has fallen only 07 cents (seven tenths of a penny), according to some surveys, from 1935 to 1952, the famous "yard-stick" theory for lowering prices, apparently has not operated as promised by Roosevelt, Ickes and their successors.

By LYNN NISBET

APPOINTMENTS — Appointments to be made by Governor Umstead early next year are not the only ones in which there is very keen interest. There is perhaps more interest among legislators and others who have dealings with the General Assembly in the committee assignments to be made by the presiding officers. That is especially true with respect to Senate committees, because Lieut. Governor Luther Hodges is still a political enigma. Eugene Bost, scheduled to be Speaker of the House, is a veteran of many sessions. His present and former colleagues have a pretty good idea of how his mind works on legislative issues, and can forecast the type of personnel he will name, if not the personnel.

UNCERTAIN — There is considerable uncertainty about even the type of men President Hodges will select for the top ranking assignments, and there is growing evidence of unrest among senators-elect because they cannot "get a line" on his thinking. Several of the old-timers who will be back in the 1953 Senate are openly critical of the attitude taken by the Lieutenant Governor in declining to discuss the matter. That was the proper attitude for last summer, they say, but with convening date of the General Assembly less than a month off definite plans should be taking shape.

FACTORS — Hodges has answered all questions about his probable committee structure with the statement that he intends to put the best men available on every committee. Old-timers know that often the ablest man is not the most suitable for a particular post, for any one of a dozen or so reasons. The senators not only have to work with each other but they must co-operate with the House of representatives in order to get bills enacted into law. It would be bad business, for example, to have both finance chairmen from the same county, or both appropriations chairmen committed to the same pet project. That requires, consequently, a balance between the presiding officers and with members who must be depended upon to carry on the routine work of the Assembly.

UNUSUAL — The situation is unusual this time, for that Hodges has had no legislative experience or contacts. Every previous Lieutenant Governor and Speaker has come to the office from the floor of the Assembly, either immediately or with short lapse after long tenure as a member. The new President of the Senate has been very successful in business, has attained distinction in civic club and other public service activities, and in the recent primary proved his prowess in politics. His approach to legislative details is different from that to which senators have been accustomed.

REVOLT — Up to now the criticism has been friendly and in most instances intended to be helpful. With the past few days some of the old-timers are getting restive and are beginning to show signs of open revolt. One man went so far as to suggest that the right of the presiding officer to appoint committees is based only upon Senate rules, made by the Senate itself and subject to original adoption by majority and change by two-thirds vote. (The two-thirds provision also is a rule that might be left out.) It is by no means likely, but it could happen, that the Senate might adopt a rule placing the authority for committee assignments somewhere else. That course was followed in the Congress some years ago.

DIPLOMACY — It begins to look like one of the first big jobs facing Frank Taylor, chosen last week to be Governor Umstead's liaison with the General Assembly, may be to eliminate the friction between President Hodges and certain leading members of the Senate. A smoothly working organization in each branch of the Legislature and cooperation between both is essential to efficient administration of State government. Some of the senators are not endowed with the qualities necessary to diplomacy, but Umstead, Hodges and Taylor have proven they do have them. So, the net result of the current goings-on may be to add interest without serious detriment to efficiency.

IMMEDIATE — Developments of the past few days indicate that some of the appointments which Governor Umstead had expected to defer until after adjournment of the General Assembly may have to be made earlier, because of resignations with request for immediate release. The Umstead problem could be alleviated in some instances, aggravated in some, by resignations before he assumes the office of Governor, giving to Governor Scott the right to fill the vacancies and imposing upon Governor Umstead the necessity for asking the resignation of a new appointee or carrying him or her along until expiration of the term.

Business Today

By ELMER ROESSNER

The department store of the future may be far different from those now jam-packed with Christmas shoppers. They will still be jammed, but the kind of merchandising will be a lot different.

Many of the counters will be gone and there will be fewer pert young ladies to ask what the customer wants. Whole reaches of the store of tomorrow will resemble supermarkets.

These are the opinions of the Merchandising Division of the National Retail Dry Goods Association. It concludes: "Retailing is currently entering a period of development characterized by pre-packaging."

Some sections, of course, can never get away from personalized selling. But a lot of them are moving toward self-service very fast. The Merchandising Division reports that the average large department store now carries approximately 30,000 pre-packaged items. And several of the largest department stores in the nation are now working on plans to convert more departments into self-service by the use of pre-packaging goods.

The merchandisers note that the big driving force is rising operating costs. Although most stores are doing handsomely in the splurge of Christmas buying, earlier this year a lot of margins were being squeezed dry of profits by rising costs. The N. R. D. G. A. division points out that self-selection requires less selling, less personal supervision, less selling time on the floor, less handling and repackaging, less breakage and fewer customer complaints.

"What is more," it adds, "it makes more sales because pre-packaged merchandise items are in themselves more attractive to customers."

Among the other advantages of pre-packaging, the division points to the fact that pre-packaging is required for certain toilet goods articles; it insures the cleanliness of many more. It increases sales by presenting combinations of goods as units and by presenting items already packaged as gifts, not only for Christmas but for other occasions. It also enhances the attractiveness of many items, including chinaware, glassware, lamps and even furniture.

Furthermore, pre-packaging saves money because the manufacturer, with automatic equipment, can package goods cheaper than stores can do it by hand; and carefully designed packaging can reduce the risk of pilferage. Many small items now come fastened to cards which makes the them harder to swipe; at the same time the cards carry advertising messages that help sales. Besides, pre-packaging is easier on the customer.

IRON CURTAIN COUNTRIES PROFIT ON CHRISTMAS
Iron Curtain countries that are anti-Santa Claus, as well as anti-almost everything else, are making a fine harvest of democratic dollars. The Glasnost Institute of America complains.

It estimates half of the 150,000 Christmas tree ornaments being used this year came from Poland, Czechoslovakia and East Germany. Government figures show imports of tree ornaments in 1936 were given a wholesale value of $23,458 and they had risen to $2,143,897 last year. This year, the Institute says, they may be double.

CHARLES ICKE'S EFFECT ON APPAREL TRADES
"Hope all of your readers in the apparel trade are alert to what the new administration will do for their business," remarked the Old Promoter, baring in wearing the Santa Claus suit he always puts on this time of the year. He says he gets a lot of free drinks in taverns that way.

"What Harry did for the sports shirt, Ike may do for the smart business suit," the O. P. went on. "In 1946, sports shirts were only 35 per cent of the total. So far this year, sports shirts have been 68 per cent of all shirts made."

"The next President is a smart dresser, in a conservative sort of way. Being a military man, he likes to have snappily dressed men around. Look at the new cabinet—Dulles, Humphrey, Wilson and Brownell are all good dressers, with a tendency toward tailor-mades. And do you think the Ambassador Aldrich will wear hand-me-downs?"

"Oveta Culp Hobby, the new Federal Security Administrator, is one of the best-dressed women in the country and the new President's assistant, Sherman Adams, is famous for his bow ties."

"As soon as I get rid of this beard, I think I'll get a bow tie myself and try for a government job."

SHOE SALES LAGGING BEHIND PRODUCTION

Officials of the Popular Price Shoe Show of America, in New York this week, were not bursting with optimism. Shoe sales have lagged behind production since August, they said, and unless there is a more than-expected buying surge during the holidays, production may have to be cut back during the coming spring.

Hal Boyle's Column

By HAL BOYLE

NEW YORK (AP)—Gen. Dwight Eisenhower's campaign bombshell promise to go to Korea if elected president—has been kept.

One of the most dramatic journeys of our generation is over. What will be the results?

The final fruits of his visit to the bitter Korean peninsula can be expected to mature slowly. The situation there is too complex to be solved by pulling a rabbit out of the hat, and Gen. Eisenhower has wisely warned he has no ready tricks up his sleeve to end the war.

The great danger of his voyage to see the facts at first-hand is public impatience, a letdown into disillusionment. The hopes of many rode with him, and the hopes of some were too high. There was even considerable hysteria in the minds of many mothers, who perhaps nursed a wild maternal dream that their sons might follow the general home on the next plane.

Gen. Eisenhower himself, of course, encouraged no such illusions. His own son is with a front line division, and he has seen too much service to promise an easy solution to a problem that has baffled some of the best military leaders who helped him force victory in Europe in the last war.

The present Eighth Army commander, Gen. James A. Van Fleet, has a son missing in combat in Korea. The U. S. Army itself—the career soldier—suffered a high rate of casualties, particularly in the first six months of the war.

The war has now dragged into its 30th month. What Gen. Ike wanted to do—and now has done—was to make a personal tour of the battle area, and get the picture of the stalemate there through his own eyes, unprejudiced by prior commitments to any single course of action.

It is unlikely that any possible decisive measures he feels should be taken will become apparent immediately. In war things don't usually go that way. It's rest time and planning to carry out any major decision.

Thus it seems highly probable that the war will go on for a while much as it has been for many months, barring the launching of a gigantic offensive by the million-man Chinese Red army. The Korean landscape is forbidding enough in summer. In winter its frozen hills form even more terrible obstacles to widespread offensive operations.

But while Eisenhower's journey may immediately disappoint those who built their hopes too high, it already has had two heartening effects:

1. It has given the troops in Korea a tremendous morale lift.
2. It has brought "the forgotten war" into the hearts and minds of millions of Americans in a memorable way. For too long it has been a matter of personal concern only to the men who fought there, and their families and loved ones at home.

politics. The first fruit of his journey should be unity. That has been sorely lacking in the Korean War. Now the American people have no choice except to line up solidly behind the hero who has always led them to victory before.

Washington Letter

By CARL HARTMAN
(For Jane Eads)

WASHINGTON—Peruvian Indians who were "communists" 700 years before Karl Marx was born are getting their first contact with capitalist American farm machinery through the "Point Four" program. Peru's anti-Communist government is co-operating.

These primitive descendants of the Incas live 11,600 feet up in the Huancayo Valley. They are only about 150 miles east of Lima as the crow flies, but it would be a bold crow that ventured over those Andean peaks.

Long before the Spaniards came they lived under a well-developed system of state socialism, with all production tools owned by the government, all labor kept to its jobs by law, and an army of officials holding everything tight. Their descendants still hold much of their land in common and dislike changing their old ways.

Change may come, though, with the help of the World Bank, which is owned by governments but has a marked preference for projects with a sound business basis. The bank has lent $1,300,000 to the Peruvian government, to be administered by the Co-operative Inter-American Food Production Service. The "servicio," as it is usually known in Peru, will use the funds to increase its stock of farm machinery.

Among a number of other and bigger projects, it will try to show two groups of 40 or 50 families how they can grow more potatoes, corn and barley with the help of steel plows and tractors. That should not be too hard, according to Juan Bazo, young Peruvian graduate of Louisiana State University who came to Washington recently to help with the final arrangements for the loan.

"For centuries they've used wooden plows that go only 3 or 4 inches down," he told this reporter. "With steel plows we'll turn up several inches of new soil. I've done it on my own farm and grown 25 tons of potatoes to my neighbors' five."

One problem, Bazo notes, will be the use of such things as the Indio has put the added income they earn. In the past their farms have been too poor to support them, and many of the men went to work in the mines a long way from home, leaving the women to farm and returning only for the harvest. During the war, when they made more money, their tendency was to work only enough to earn what they were accustomed to.

"On the other hand," he observed jocosely, "some of the boys go into town when they have a little money and get themselves girls who want silk dresses. That makes them want to earn still more."

What Other Papers Are Thinking

SERVING A GREAT NEED

(Washington Daily News)
Too often we fail to appreciate fully the greatness which is right at our fingertips.

Over 22 miles from Washington in Pitt county is a great educational institution, East Carolina college.

Because of its nearness to Beaufort county, we sometimes forget the real service which such an institution is performing. Have we stopped to consider how many boys and girls from our own area are having a chance to get a higher education because of the presence of ECC who would not have that chance if the college were 100 miles distant?

We don't know how many young men and women from our area are attending the college in Greenville. We dare say that there must be 50. And then we should think also of the vast number of students who have left the institution to go out into useful service in many communities.

There are many facts which we fail to realize and appreciate. We have a good supply of labor here in our area. But have we stopped to think that when this labor is finally utilized to the fullest, the people who will be leading the labor will come from the colleges in many cases and that better source of leadership can we find than that which we have right in our own midst?

We should not have to content ourselves with getting leadership, technicians, and teachers from far off areas when we grow them and educate them right here at home.

Yet, sometimes we fail to take into account the real picture because we are so familiar with ECC. It is a home product, and people sometimes have a tendency to feel that we must go away from home to get the type of leadership we need when in reality the boy or girl from our own area will do a better job if given the opportunity.

We don't know whether or not the people of Greenville appreciate the value of ECC. But let some other town come along and offer a lot of money or a glittering concession to ECC to come that way, and then you'd see the people of Greenville rise up as one man and meet any inducement offered elsewhere.

If Greenville should at any time lose ECC, then that town and that county would not be the sole losers. Beaufort county has a definite stake there, and we'd lose much too.

ECC is a fine institution and one in which we all should take more interest. We should make fuller use of the facilities and knowledge which linger there. We should acquaint ourselves with the possibilities of the school.

We should realize that whatever growth the college enjoys and advancement of Eastern North Carolina. And if our section of the state advances in industry and farming, then FCC will advance to keep step with the progress.

Yes, we do have a rich possession there. Its cultural wealth cannot be estimated. But let someone take it away and we'd all feel the impact. We are not implying that anyone is trying to take it away. We're merely saying that we do not appreciate fully the gem that we have so close to us.

It is a fine institution and one we all should be proud of.

so low that economists are having to revise their notions of what constitutes "rock-bottom" unemployment. Only in World War II, 1,000,000 have had a lower figure in modern economic times.

Present totals have to be measured, too, against the prospect that peak defense output will probably not be reached for another six to eight months, and we may have on top of that gain a small but steady rise in civilian production. In other words, the outlook is for even less unemployment. The year 1953 thus promises a continuation of the high economic levels we have enjoyed almost without a break since 1945. But, oddly, many business and industrial leaders appear to believe that a recession will get under way before the new year is ended.

This feeling is a phenomenon more curious than the fact that the experts are confounded by low unemployment rates. Why should industrialists faced with such bright signs envisage a downturn? The only answer seems to be that the memory of the Great Depression, fading but still real in the minds of millions of ordinary workers, is no less real to the managers of American business. History tells them that boom must end some time.

Certainly we have no reason to assume that we have abolished depressions. And we have not for a long time tested the strength of our basic economy in a time free of war or the preparations for war. Nevertheless, it is true as well that the economy today has many legal and other propensities which did not exist in depression days. Government whether Republican or Democratic, is pledged to throw its full resources quickly into use to prevent the disaster of another depression.

Kiwanians Raise ECC Loan Fund

Kiwanians in Greenville have added another $500 to the loan fund which they established in 1947 at East Carolina College. The decision to increase the fund was made at a meeting of the Board of Directors of the city Kiwanis Club last Thursday and has just been announced.

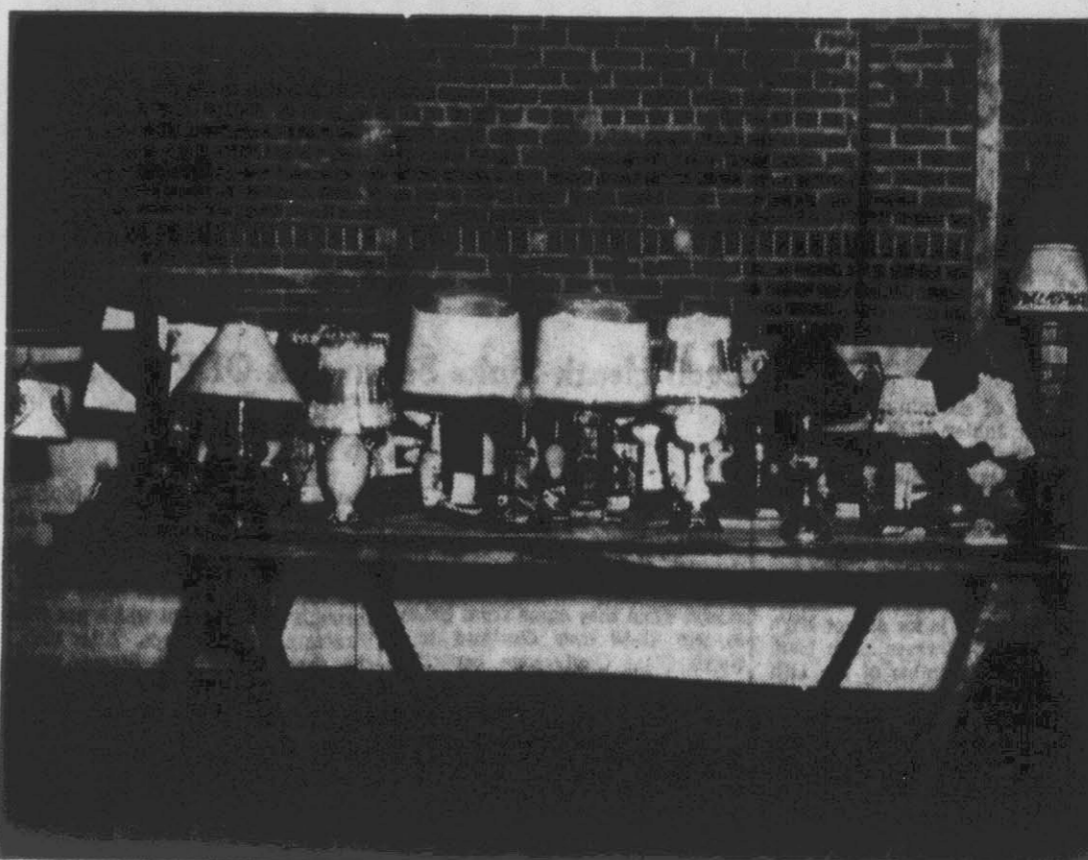

The Greenville Kiwanis Educational Loan Fund, established five years ago, now amounts to $4,300. Loans are made to deserving students in Greenville and other sections of Pitt County in order to enable them to secure an education at East Carolina College.

These loans, on which no interest charges are made, are used by students to pay tuition fees at the college. Recipients repay the amounts borrowed after they have completed their work at the college.

To date, twelve students have benefited from the fund. Five students now enrolled at East Carolina are using loans to help pay their educational expenses at the college.

Regular Orval L. Phillips of East Carolina heads a committee of members of the Greenville Kiwanis Club who will administer the loan fund in the future.

RALEIGH (AP) — Rockingham County has been adjudged winner of the $1,000 grand prize in the 1952 "County of the Year in Rural Progress" contest.

This was announced yesterday by the North Carolina board of farm organizations and agencies which decided the state winners. Rockingham County also won in the Middle District. Other district winners were Forsyth in the West and Edgecombe in the East, each of which will receive $500.

The grand prize was donated by the Progressive Farmer magazine.

Violent Demonstrators Shed Blood In N. Africa

CASABLANCA, French Morocco (UP) — Two Frenchmen and 20 Arab demonstrators were killed today as violence spread throughout French North Africa.

More than 60 Arabs also were wounded when some 3,000 white-robed demonstrators stormed a police station. Tough Berber Goum tribesmen rushed to the area and opened fire.

The two Frenchmen were found decapitated in the "Central Quarry" district near here where two native policemen were killed and two others kidnaped last night.

Violence spread to Morocco, site of important American air bases, and Algeria following the mysterious murder of a powerful Nationalist union leader in Tunisia Friday. The Arabs also were angered by the French boycott of the debate in the United Nations General Assembly on Tunisian demands for more self-rule.

Native Moroccan workers started a 24-hour general strike this morning to protest the Tunisian murder which Nationalists blamed on French residents. The strike following a three-day walkout in Tunisia was almost completely effective.

Police rounded up 70 union men and charged them with carrying concealed weapons, mostly butcher knives. Troops patrolled on foot and in armored cars.

French military authorities in Tunisia announced three terrorists were executed at dawn for the murder of a French policeman last January. The French said the trio were the first executions of condemned Nationalists since the Neo Destour (New Independence) reign of terror.

The news has not yet become widely known.

A first shock wave attacked the police station in Casablanca. The small detachment of defenders held off about 600 attackers.

Then a second wave of 2,000 charged. The Berber Goum tribesmen who were rushed in as reinforcements opened fire and charged on horseback and foot into the crowd.

The fierce Berber Goums are drawn from the mountain tribes and by tradition enemies of the Arabs in the towns.

Under a pre-arranged "emergency" plan, martial law was imposed and troops took over from police in key centers of the important Atlantic port and elsewhere in the protectorate. Casablanca, as a population of 700,000, nearly 260,000 of them "Europeans."

The incident—was in Morocco in several years—occurred as Gen. Augustin Guillaume, French resident general, addressed the opening session of the government council at nearby Rabat, center of the French administration.

He said his nation wanted "friendly cooperation" with Morocco but "France has a duty to maintain order."

More than 10,000 troops were put on a stand-by alert throughout the protectorate. Spahis and Goums dressed in white and blue turbans began patrolling the Casablanca clearing the streets of groups.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (UP) — The Rev. Raymond E. Spears, associate pastor of the Trinity Methodist Church, has great faith in his fellow man.

He said he reported both coats as "missing," not stolen.

ECC Professor Is Appointed To New Committee

Dr. Lucile Turner, director of the department of English at East Carolina College, accepted appointment as a member of a newly organized committee of the Conference on College Composition and Communication, which is affiliated with the National Council of Teachers of English. Dr. Turner was chosen for the assignment at the recent NCTE in Boston.

The COCC committee, which is headed by Professor Irwin Griggs of Temple University, will make a study of the status of the college teacher of composition and communication in this country. This study will serve as a preliminary to a proposed national survey. The preliminary study will be made to give the organization, states Chairman Griggs "an idea of the scope, value, and cost of the proposed full survey itself. On the basis of our report," he continues, "the national organization will decide whether or not it wishes to launch the main project."

ON THE HOUSE

By DAVID G. BAREUTHER, AP Real Estate Editor

"Good fences make good neighbors," the poet says. But good fences in bad places make lawsuits, the lawyer says.

Some general rules about fences are fairly popularly known. Much less known is the fact that none of these rules always holds true.

A reputable fence man recently told us "You can't put a fence right on the dividing line between your property and your neighbor's unless you both erect the fence together and share the costs of its construction and maintenance."

"Otherwise," he said, "build your fence on your side of the line, but right up to the line. Don't leave any strip of land to spare if you want to avoid serious trouble."

He was Frank Nichols, president of the Nichols Wire & Aluminum Co., of Davenport, Ia., one of the largest manufacturers of aluminum chain link fencing.

might erect an aluminum chain link fence in that manner—putting the posts on your side of the line and stretching the fencing right along the line so there wouldn't be any land to spare. But we got to thinking about the split rail fences, the Abe Lincoln style, erected throughout Indiana and Kentucky, and about the fieldstone walls you see all through Connecticut, and the natural hedges that grow almost any place in the country.

Where is your property line among the X supports of a rail fence, or among the green sprouts of a hedge?

So we asked Prof. Howard Williams, property law instructor at Columbia University Law School. "Laws regarding real estate," he said, "have many ramifications in many different localities. If I were buying a house, or had a boundary problem in regard to a fence, I myself would seek the guidance of the best real estate lawyer I could obtain."

He mentioned some of the hazards involved.

If you guess at your boundary and happen to build your fence on your neighbor's side of the line, it's his fence. It's on his land and he has a right to tear it down.

But can he tear it down without being liable for damages? Apparently that depends on when he tears it down.

If you build your fence too far over on your side of the line, so that a strip of a few inches or a few feet of your land extends along your neighbor's side of the fence, you run the risk of losing that strip of land.

But apparently that depends on what the strip is used for.

There is a law of "adverse possession." This means that whoever uses any land without objection over a period of years may claim ownership of that land. So if you put your fence inside your property line and your neighbor uses the spare land for his potato patch for a number of years, it may become his land.

If your fence leaves a path for public passage and this is undisturbed for a period of years, the path may become a public path. This is why Rockefeller Center closes a street in New York—Rockefeller Plaza—to all traffic one day a year. The plaza is private property, leased from Columbia University, and Rockefeller Center by closing this street prevents it from becoming public property.

The number of years that it takes for anyone to claim adverse possession depends on laws that vary among the states. The time varies from 15 to 40 years. To offset adverse possession, you must maintain your claim to spare land—close it to passage once a year, or plant grass, vines, etc.

However, to maintain your planing on a neighbor's side of a fence, you may have to get his permission to walk on his land. Otherwise your passage there may create an easement over his land and eventually you might claim the perpetual right to that passage.

Professor Williams suggests that the safest procedure in regard to any variation of boundaries is to have a written agreement. And like all written agreements, it is best to have this prepared by a lawyer. Hedges are notorious trouble makers in boundary disputes. Ordinarily what is on your property belongs to you. If the branches of a neighbor's apple tree hang over your yard, the apples on those branches are yours. So are the branches. You can cut them off if you don't like them. But still there can be extenuating circumstances.

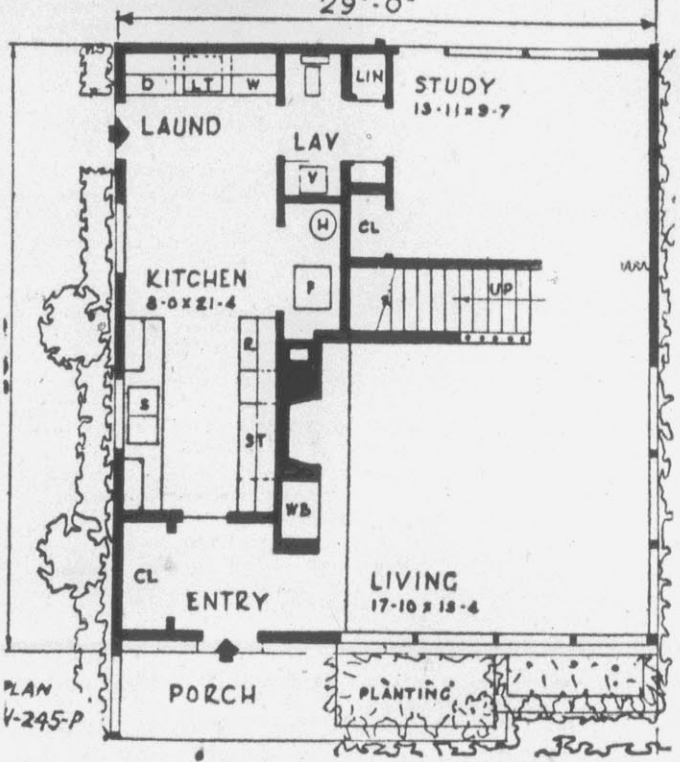

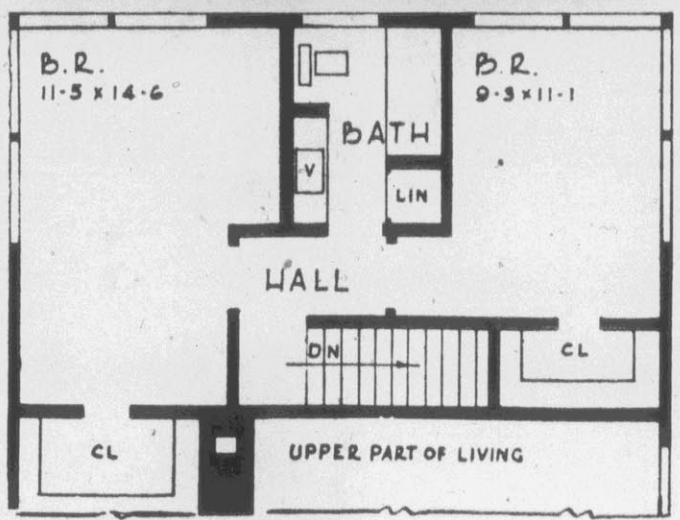

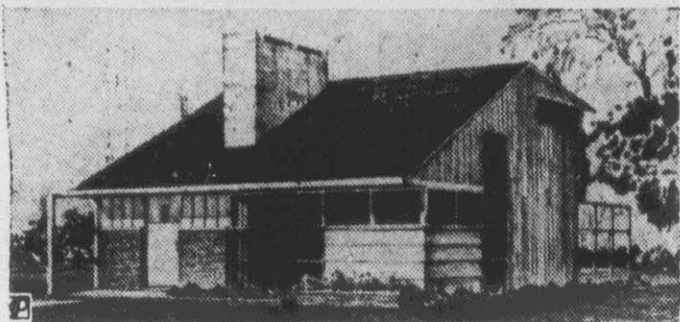

For example, one home owner planted a hedge in 1925. He told his gardener to plant it on the property line. Apparently the neighbor didn't mind as the hedge grew and its roots and branches encroached over the boundary.

Almost 25 years later the neighbor sold his house. The new owner had a survey made and found the hedge to be a foot inside his property line. He figured it was his hedge, being on his land, and he cut it down.

The man who planted the hedge brought suit. He argued that although the hedge turned out to be on his neighbor's land, that strip of land belonged to him since he had used it adversely for more than 15 years.

The judge did not agree. He held that the former neighbor had discussed the maintenance of the hedge with its planter, granting permission, and the fore possession of the one-foot strip was not adverse under the law. But the court called this an easement over the neighbor's property for the purpose of maintaining the hedge. And the judge awarded $400 damages for the destruction of the hedge.

The real trouble in overstepping boundaries arises when you or your heirs sell the property no matter how good neighbors are today, or how good your fence may be.

Drunken Official Carried Secrets?

WASHINGTON (UP)—The State Department investigated today the case of a high State Department official arrested on drunk charges while reportedly carrying an "important" government document.
Foy David Kohler, a member of the department's super-secret policy planning staff and former head of the "Voice of America," was arrested early Saturday morning after a auto accident in near-Arlington, Va.

Kohler forfeited $3,750 collateral on drunk charges. His wife, Phyllis, was charged with drunken driving and freed on $500 bond pending her appearance in Arlington County Court today.

The State Department stepped into the case after the Arlington police reported that Kohler said he had "one important document" in a briefcase with him at the time of the accident. Three State Department agents came immediately to the police station and took the brief case from Kohler.

A State Department spokesman said that one phase of the investigation was to determine the degree of secrecy of the papers in Kohler's possession. He refused to predict what action might be taken against Kohler pending completion of the department's investigation.

Kohler, 44, a foreign service officer since 1931, refused to comment on the case. He specifically declined to say whether the papers in his briefcase were classified or merely routine department material.

At the time of the arrest according to police, Kohler said he and his wife were driving home from a party when their car left the road and sheared off a telephone pole.

Man Shot By Rabbit Is One Of 1952's Oddities

CHICAGO (UP)—A rabbit shot a man, a 1,300-pound cow jumped on top of an automobile, and an Air Force flyer fell out of an airplane — only to land inside the same ship!

These were some of the odd accidents of 1952 reported today in an annual summary of the National Safety Council.

Julius Monroe of Baltimore, Md., was asleep when his pet rabbit accidentally hit the trigger of a .22-caliber rifle that happened to be pointed in Monroe's direction. The bullet wounded him in the right hand.

Mr. and Mrs. Milo R. Ewing of Denver were driving near a stockyard when a cow, which had escaped, leaped off an overpass to escape two pursuing cowboys. The cow was killed in the crash but the Ewings were unhurt.

Capt. Fred C. Seals of Dallas, Tex., was looking out the open door of a C-46 cargo ship a mile above the Korean battlefield when the plane lurched suddenly, pitching him out. As he struggled desperately to pull his parachute record, the plane dipped once more, neatly scooping him back aboard through the same door.

Staging Oratorio Here On Tuesday

Handel's "The Messiah," oratorio especially beloved at the Christmas season, will be sung Tuesday of this week by the East Carolina College Choir. The performance will be held at 8 p.m. in the Wright auditorium and will be open to the public.

Dr. Karl V. Gilbert of the faculty of the department of music will direct the group of approximately eighty men and women students in the program Tuesday evening.

Last year the College Choir presented "The Messiah" under Dr. Gilbert's direction before an audience which filled the Austin auditorium. This year the Choir will give the Christmas oratorio for the second time, and it is expected that the performance will bring a large audience to the Wright building. The performance will be sponsored by the college department of music.

Appearing as soloists with the College Choir Tuesday evening will be seven talented students of music at East Carolina. They are Carolyn Eisele of Statesville, Jeanine Ennis of Bunn, Ruth Little of Winterville, Catherine Stephenson of Willow Springs, Monteen Winstead of Tabor City, George Starling of Rocky Mount, and Leonard Starling of Rocky Mount.

George E. Perry of the college faculty will be organist for the program. Ellen Sprinkle of Asheville, student at the college, has assisted the Choir as accompanist during the period of preparation for the performance this week.

To Give Recital In Robersonville

George E. Perry, organist of the East Carolina faculty, will give a recital of Christmas music in Robersonville Wednesday, December 10, and not this evening as previously announced.

Mr. Perry will appear under the sponsorship of the McDowell Music Club of Robersonville and will play Wednesday at 8 p.m. in the Christian Church there. The public is invited.

PROVIDENCE, R. I. (AP) — Because Mary Ann Lippitt, who learned to fly eight years ago, didn't want to waste that ability, she is now the only woman operator of a charter plane service in the state.

She says women make good pilots. They learn slower in the beginning and are more timid than men, but they are exceedingly careful.

Chapter 26
His eyes blank with terror, the guard scrambled to his feet, scooped up his gun in a swift apologetic gesture, and stumbled through the door as if he had just escaped the claws of the devil himself. The door closed softly, carefully, and Morgan dropped his hand on the butt of the revolver and swung his great head around to face Clay.

"Well?"

Clay's hand sought the pocket of his jacket and hesitated just above it, as the gun came up of the desk and Morgan's finger tightened on the trigger.

"Oh, hell!" There was disgust and undisguised contempt in the harshness of Clay's voice. "Put your damned popgun down before you shoot yourself with it. Your men told you I wasn't armed—but I've got some papers in that pocket I want to show you. If we're going to go through a rigmarole like this every time I move, you're not the man I want to see."

The basilisk eyes studied Clay unblinkingly and the faint lips twisted into the faintest suggestion of a smile.

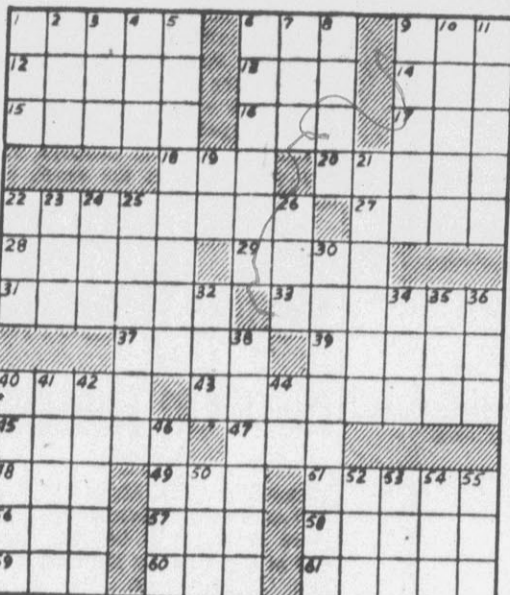

"All right." The gun sank slowly to the desk. "Get your papers—and be sure they're papers I want to see."

Clay nodded. "You'll find them of interest," he promised dryly. Unhurriedly he pulled out the forged letter from Santa Ana that he and Garcia had concocted, and the second sheet that proclaimed him unhesitatingly as Santa Ana's own particular and most confidential envoy. Carelessly he flipped them to the top of the desk.

His right hand still covering the gun, Morgan gathered up the papers with his left. With a dextrousness that was almost uncanny in such swiftness of motion, the fingers flipped the papers open and his eyes ran over them quickly. He laid them down and looked at Clay again, his eyes as un-winking as agate stones, the heavy face as inscrutable as an iron mask.

"From these, I judge that you are"—he glanced down at the paper to refresh his memory—"one Clay Logan, sent here by General Santa Ana to discuss some matter with me that is too confidential to be trusted to correspondence. That is correct?"

Clay nodded stiffly. "That is correct."

The massive right hand indicated a chair that stood beside the desk, a chair of solid oak, heavy and square and rugged as the man whose desk it faced.

"Be seated, Mr. Logan. Do you mind telling me how you reached Oak Island?"

Clay dropped into the chair and crossed one leg comfortably over the other. He was beginning to feel a surge of confidence, a warm tide that unraveled the taut nerves across his shoulders and smoothed the harsh line of strain out of his face.

"I came by schooner from Vera Cruz and we landed at Matagorda Bay three days ago. A horse was provided—and I rode here to meet you. Your guards stopped me four or five miles to the east and brought me in."

"And the schooner?"

"The schooner was returned to Vera Cruz."

Morgan nodded, his heavy fingers tapping lightly on the desk top as he considered the story.

"So," he said finally, "you appear out of nowhere and leave behind you no trace of your coming. Well, I suppose I must accept that—for a little while, at least. You are prepared to discuss this very important business with me now?"

Clay leaned tensely forward, his eyes fixed on Morgan's face to catch the slightest flicker of expression.

"Let me say this first: You know that up until mid-summer Santa Ana was in Cuba, a political exile from Mexico. During this time, negotiations were under way between Santa Ana and the government of the United States. Those negotiations ended in failure and Santa Ana returned to Mexico, where he was hailed as a liberator and is now in the field at the head of his troops to repel the American invasion. You are familiar with these things, Mr. Morgan?"

Morgan nodded slowly. "To some extent," he agreed. "Santa Ana wanted the United States to buy his friendship so that there would be no war when Texas is taken into the Union. Presumably, his price was too high."

"It was high," Clay nodded in agreement. "Perhaps it would have been cheaper than a war, perhaps not. In any event, his offer was rejected and General Taylor is leading American troops into Mexico today. The two nations are at war—and a war at this time does not suit Santa Ana's plans."

The shaggy eyebrows lifted a little in a grimace of surprise, "Indeed? But if he is, as you say, the new liberator—"

Clay's hand brushed the suggestion aside contemptuously.

"That is for the peons. That is how men rise to power in Mexico—by promising liberation and then liberating nothing except the gold that goes into their pockets. Now, this is the situation: General Santa Ana cannot resume negotiations directly with the United States. The break-down of the discussion this summer was too complete for that. Neither can he win the present war, even though he may be able to inflict a terrific amount of damage before it's over."

Morgan nodded, ponderously, his fingers still tapping out their own slow, cret rhythm upon the desk.

"And so—"

"And so—this! The General is willing enough to allow the United States to annex Texas without a war. He is willing enough to agree to new boundaries that will not be too unreasonable. But he is willing to do these things only if he is paid! If Washington will deliver two million dollars to the General's private accounts in Havana and in Paris, the war can end tomorrow, the boundaries can be fixed by treaty, and Texas can enter the Union without opposition from Mexico. Do I make myself clear?"

Symphony's Tour Opens In January

RALEIGH (AP)—The North Carolina Symphony's next tour will begin the middle of next month and continue through mid-May. The society's Executive Committee said last night the tour will go as far south as Selma, Ala., and as far north as Welch, Va. A number of concerts also will be given in South Carolina in addition to those given in this state.

Dr. Benjamin Swalin, director, said the exact dates of the tour will be announced shortly.

Kind Of Enjoys Holiday In Jail

DETROIT (UP)—Fred McClarity, 57, who has spent 330 days in jail so far this year, appeared before Judge Paul Krause on the same old charge—vagrancy.

"Would you like to be free for Christmas?" the judge asked.

"No," McClarity replied. "I kind of enjoy the Christmas meal at the jail but I would like to take a look at the Christmas decorations downtown."

Krause gave McClarity all day Friday to inspect the decorations before tacking a 30-day sentence today.

DEAF or just Hard of Hearing?

Do your friends call you "deaf" when you're only hard of hearing? Most persons with hearing problems aren't deaf and can be helped without great expense or personal sacrifice. You must take the first step: Ask for help. Now, a new invention, the Dahlberg Canal Earphone device, helps you hear and hides your deafness, too. It's so small it fits inside your ear. Try it in your own home. Write to The Dahlberg Company, 7731 Sixth Avenue North, Minneapolis 22, Minnesota, for details. No obligation at all. We'd like to help you. Won't you help yourself?

Capitol Square

Board, incumbent Robert W. Winston was re-appointed for a three year term running until April of 1956. He has said he expects to resign when the new Governor comes in. Rumors are current that he will resign before Christmas, giving Governor Scott rather than Governor Umstead the right to fill the post for the next two and a half years in absence of legislation changing the set-up.

BOARDS—Several other administrative officials have indicated they will do the new Governor the courtesy of tendering resignation, but some of them also express the hope that the resignations will not be accepted. Similar situation obtains among numerous administrative and advisory boards. Miss Ethel Parker, only woman member of the Board of Agriculture, resigned last week from a term that would have rounded out 12 years by next May under original six-year appointment by Governor Brroughton and re-appointment by Governor Cherry. Governor Scott immediately announced appointment of R. V. Knight Sr. of Edgecombe county to fill the unexpired term until next May. Incidentally, that action leaves the State Board of Agriculture without a woman member for the first time since Governor Clyde Hoey appointed Mrs. Vivien Stevens (Whitfield) in 1937.
