Chinese Unleash Two Attacks On Allied Positions

UN Officers Suspect Hunt For Weak Spots; Aerial Activity Reported

SEOUL, Korea, (UP) — Chinese Communists today slammed two vicious attacks into South Korean positions on the western and central fronts in what Allied Commanders said might be a search for weak spots for the "general offensive" the Reds have promised to uncork Sunday.

In the air, 40 United Nations Sabre jets met 50 Communist MIG-15S in 16 separate air battles. Early reports said Allied jets damaged six of the Russian - built fighters.

The Chinese attacks erupted suddenly in an unusual daylight assault by 200 screaming Reds on ROK forces holding vital Pinpoint Hill — the dominating point of the battle-scarred Sniper - Ridge complex of hills north of Kumhwa on the central front.

Both attacks were blunted and finally turned back under a lethal curtain of machinegun, rifle and mortar fire laid down by the ROK defenders. ut the Reds continued hammering the positions for an hour and a half before they gave up.

The Red attempts to find a soft spot in the Allied lines were the only hint of any Communist intentions to make good on propaganda promises to hit the U. N. with a majr offensive on Jan. 4th.

American and other U. N. commanders are convinced the Reds were mouthing their threats over front line loudspeakers for propaganda and psychological effect only. They noted that the propaganda blasts were directed — like the Red ground assaults — primarily against the South Koreans. The warning of a "general offensive" was accompanied by appeals to the South Koreans to "save themselves" by surrendering.

Eighth Army headquarters, in a summary of December operations, said that U. N. ground forces killed, wounded or captured 9,429 Communists during the month. Of the total 5,763 were killed, 3,632 were wounded and 34 were taken prisoner, an official announcement said.

The 5th Air Force, in a weekly summary of operations, said Sabre jets encountered Communist MIGS in battle on only one day this week, shooting down two, probably destroying a third and damaging one.

Congress Convenes; Early Formalities Get Under Way

Three Men Die In Air Force C-47 Wreck Near Raleigh

One Survivor Staggered To Airline Office, Reporting Crash Of Courier Plane Which Tried Emergency Landing In Rain, Fog

RALEIGH, N. C. (UP) —An Air Force C-47 courier plane, trying for an emergency landing through rain and dense fog, crashed in Crabtree Creek state park near the Raleigh-Durham airport last night, killing three of four men aboard.

T-Sgt. Edward Matus of Cleveland, O., stationed at Donaldson AFB, S. C. the only enlisted man on the plane, "miraculously" survived as the plane crashed in thick woods 1,000 yards from the park picnic area.

He staggered, dazed and bleeding, into the Eastern Airlines office at Raleigh-Durham airport at 1 a.m., having followed the "sounds of airplanes taking off."

A 25-member search party found the twisted wreckage and the bodies of the pilot, co-pilot and navigator six hours later.

Two bodies, both badly mangled, were found in the crushed nose section. One was pinned in the wreckage and officers said it would have to be cut out with acetylene torches.

A third body was found in the broken midsection of the plane.

The wings were sheared off by trees and the tail section was broken off. The wreckage reeked of high-octane gasoline, but the pilot had cut off the power and there was no fire.

The landing gear was down.

Matus, from a hospital bed in Durham, said "we were coming in for a landing and everything seemed all right."

"We had been bucking a 30 miles headwind and decided to land at Raleigh-Durham after we couldn't get in at Pope Field." The plane was flying from Newburgh, N. Y., to Donaldson AFB, via Pope Field at Fayetteville, N. C.,

Pope AFB reported the last radio contact with the plane was at 10:41 p.m. when the plane reported "icing at 9,000 feet."

"Something struck me in the face," Matus said. "I spun around and fell on the floor."

He woke up later in the wreckage.

"I called out everybody's name, but there was no answer. I lay there for a while trying to shake it off. I finally crawled out.

"After a while I heard airplanes taking off and I followed the sounds."

Police, Civil Air Patrol officials and Air Force investigators used Matus' shoe to give bloodhounds the scent that led searchers to the crash scene, deep in the wooded park, just at dawn.

Bleeding profusely despite a crude tourniquet, Matus was pale with shock and dazed when he stumbled into the almost-deserted airline office. He was unable to tell from which direction he had come.

Because traffic was light, officials checked flight records to determine what planes Matus had heard taking off, and figured he had walked for about 45 minutes.

The searchers spread out in a semi-circle around the airport and were moving in a line through the woods, along shallow Crabtree Creek which winds through the center of the park, when the wreckage was discovered.

Chaplain S. H. Schmidt of Pope AFB was the first man to reach the scene.

Wreckage was scattered over a wide area. Small pieces were found before the fuselage was located.

Early reports had said Matthus parachuted, but officials said that he "miraculously" survived the crash. He was suffering from shock and was unable to give details about the location of the plane.

Giant Meteor

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)—A meteor flashed westward through the sky shortly after midnight.

Thousands of persons saw the fiery spectacle and its shock waves rocked homes on the San Francisco peninsula.

It was observed by residents within a 150 mile area.

Pilots of planes also observed the meteor.

Arlow Severans, on duty in the Civil Patrol tower at Oakland airport, described it as "the biggest and brightest" he had ever seen.

Severans declared it appeared the meteor had plunged into San Francisco Bay. But he said he checked the San Francisco Airport control tower and was told the meteor disappeared westward over the ocean.

The San Mateo sheriff's office, south of San Francisco, reported it received excited telephone calls for an hour after the sky scooter was sighted at 12:20 a.m. (PST).

Solons May Heed Truman Proposal On Ike's Salary

But Fast Congressional Action Required To Arrange Tax Consideration

WASHINGTON (UP)—Congress, it appeared today may follow President Truman's advice and give President-elect Eisenhower a day windfall.

But fast action will be necessary. The Constitution says that the President's "compensation" can't be increased during his term of office. Giving him special tax treatment would, in effect, amount to a pay raise.

Eisenhower will be inaugurated Jan. 20, which gives the new Congress just a little more than two weeks to act on Mr. Truman's proposal.

The President suggested Friday that the incoming President, Vice President Richard M. Nixon, and the new speaker of the House be given better tax treatment than they would get under present law.

While Republicans generally refused to commit themselves immediately, several said privately they thought something should be done.

Rep. Charles A. Halleck, new House Republican leader, told reporters he thought the president and vice president, as well as members of Congress, "ough. to be entitled to the same deductions as are accorded other individuals in private employment."

Sen. Walter F. George (D-Ga.), recipient of one of the letters, said he thought Mr. Truman's proposal "eminently fair and liberal and just."

Congress voted in 1951 to make the $50,000 expense allowance of the president, the $10,000 allowance of the speaker and the vice president, and the $2,500 allowance of members of Congress taxable as of this year.

Mr. Truman proposed that Congress allow the president and vice president the same $3,000 annual tax deduction it later permitted its members for Washington living expenses. He also suggested a "special living expense" deduction up to $50,000 a year.

Stolen Bales Of Cotton Turn Up

Two Unidentified Men Unable To Sell Loot, Dump Bales

CHICOD—It wasn't from spontaneous combustion, but two bales of cotton suddenly got "hot" on the hands of a pair of unidentified white men near here yesterday.

The cotton was "hot" because it was stolen, and Pitt County Sheriff Ruel W. Tyson said the two men dumped it over a fill into the woods because they had discovered it couldn't be sold.

The two cotton bales were found just off the highway that leads from Chicod School to Stokestown.

The sheriff stated this morning recent reports show the cotton was stolen at Mt. Olive Thursday night. The thieves transported their loot to Whittakers in Nash County and attempted to dispose of it there yesterday, but the buyer there would have none of it.

Because of suspicion that the cotton may have been stolen Sheriff Tyson declared, the buyer took the gin number from the bales and called Mt. Olive about the matter. It was then he discovered the cotton to have been stolen.

In the meantime, the two men had fled the town with the cotton.

The two bales in question have been stored in Greenville and the sheriff reported the owner is coming to Pitt County today to inspect and probably identify it as being his.

An investigation of the incident is being continued by the Pitt Sheriff's Department.

Brodie Infants 'Holding Own'

CHICAGO UP) —The separated Brodie Siamese twins held their own today—18 days after their history-making separation—and a hospital spokesman denied a rumor that the weaker of the two was fading fast.

"Roger always has been as close to death as you can get," the spokesman said, "but there has been no particular change that would indicate he'll die in the next few minutes.

"He may still be living in the next few months."

Joins Mother In Congress Today

WASHINGTON (UP) — Rep. Oliver P. Bolton joined his mother in Congress today and predicted there'll be some issues on which "she'll vote one way and I'll vote the other."

His mother is Rep. Frances P. Bolton. They are the first mother-and-son combination ever elected to Congress. Both are Ohio Republicans and, Bolton added, "we have the same general principles."

Defendants In Anti-Trust Suit Are Reduced

WASHINGTON UP) —The government has decided to drop anti-trust charges against 83 of 118 members of the DuPont family in its suit against the multi-billion dollar industrial empire.

Atty. Gen. James P. McGranery announced last night that the government Monday will ask Federal Judge Walter Labuy in Chicago to reduce the number of defendants.

McGranery said there is "insufficient evidence" to warrant prosecution of the 83, who include 48 minor children.

The government charges that members of the DuPont de Nemours and Co., General Motors Co., and the United States Rubber Co. in a conspiracy aimed at eliminating competition.

Hearing Set On T-H Law Changes

WASHINGTON (UP) —Rep. Samuel K. McConnell Jr. (R-Pa) said today the House Labor Committee will begin hearings next month to determine what changes should be made in the Taft-Hartley law.

McConnell, new chairman of the committee, said he would discuss the controversial law with President-elect Eisenhower before launching the hearings which will cover "the entire field of labor legislation."

Team Of Republicans And Southern Democrats Expected To Put Over First Legislative Program Of GOP President In 20 Years; Test Of Strength May Be In Offing

WASHINGTON (UP) — The 83rd Congress convened at noon today with Republicans and Southern Democrats teamed to put over legislative proposals of the GOP's first president in 20 years.

Retiring Vice President Alben W. Barkley called the Senate to order, and outgoing clerk Ralph R. Roberts called the roll of House members certified as elected.

After the prayer, the first order of business in the Senate was the swearing in of new and re-elected members.

In both houses, the Republicans were taking over with paper-thin majorities. But in view of the expected southern Democratic support their control was considered firm enough on most issues.

A series of traditional formalities were scheduled for the opening session with a chance for some initial tests of strength on demands of outnumbered "liberals" and New Dealers for rules changes.

A bipartisan bloc in the Senate was mapping plans to try to get a new rule making it easier to break filibusters. The move was considered doomed but a vote on it was possible today.

Another hopeless case, observers said, is a plan to curb the power of the House Rules Committee, considered by many to be a major legislative roadblock.

In today's preliminaries, 36 new senators and 433 new representatives — less possible absentees — will be sworn in.

There also will be the automatic election of Rep. Joseph W. Martin R-Mass.) as speaker of the House and Sen. Styles Bridges R-N.H.) as Senate president pro tempore, the presiding officer in the absence of the vice president.

Martin and Bridges were nominated for their respective jobs Friday by GOP caucuses.

Senate Republicans also unanimously elected Sen. Robert A. Taft of Ohio as majority floor leader. Taft thus became commander-in-chief in the Senate for the legislative program recommended by Eisenhower, who defeated him for the Republican presidential nomination.

In Friday's round of party caucuses, House Republicans chose Rep. Charles A. Halleck of Indiana as their party floor leader; Senate Democrats named Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson of Texas for floor leader, and House Democrats chose retiring Speaker Sam Rayburn of Texas.

The Senate GOP conference vetoed the controversial plan for tightening the anti-filibuster rule.

Nevertheless, 16 senators, including four Republicans, met later to work out strategy for trying to push it through anyway. They chose Sen. Clinton P. Anderson D-N.M.) to offer a motion calling on the Senate to adopt new rules.

This would challenge the heretofore accepted theory that the Senate is a "continuing body" and does not have to adopt new rules at the opening of each new Congress.

If the Anderson motion should carry, the plan calls for Sen. Irving M. Ives (R-N.Y.) to offer the old Senate rules as the new rules but with the anti-filibuster rule rewritten.

The proposed new rule would permit 49 senators — a majority of all elected — to cut off debate after 14 days. The present rule requires the votes of 64 senators to break a filibuster.

The plan was doomed in advance when Sen. Eugene D. Millikin of Colorado, chairman of the Republican Conference, announced that it was the "overwhelming sentiment" of the 48 GOP senators that the Senate is a "continuing body." This attitude was recorded by a voice vote.

The Republican decision sealed the fate of the anti-filibuster plan because it already was promised overwhelming opposition from southern Democrats. They want to protect their right to kill "civil rights" bills with endless debate.

JUST CAN'T WIN

VANCOUVER, B. C. (UP) — K. K Mamemura, 25, began a one-year jail term today for paying off $1,405 in gambling debts with forged checks.

McCarthy Defies Any Efforts Block Him From Senate

No Indications Of Challenge By Democrats; Elections Subcommittee Report Raps McCarthy Conduct; Question Ethics

WASHINGTON (UP)—Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy dared the Democrats today to try to block him from taking his Senate seat on the basis of a critical report by the Senate Elections subcommittee.

There were no indications, however, that any attempt would be made by the Democrats to challenge McCarthy when he takes the oath today for another six-year term.

The Wisconsin Republican told reporters that "I hope they'll raise the question" of his fitness for office. "In fact, I challenge them to do it," he said shortly after the subcommittee made public its 400-page report Friday night.

The elections group made no direct recommendations for action against McCarthy but said its record would be available to the Justice Department and the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Denouncing the report as a "new low in dishonesty and smear," McCarthy said "if what they say is true, they have a deep moral obligation" to challenge his seating.

However, McCarthy said, "If they're lying, they won't dare to raise the question."

The subcommittee report, filed with its parent Senate Rules Committee, said McCarthy refused to testify despite six invitations, charging that the group "was dishonest and doing the work of Communists."

Such conduct, the subcommittee said, "might appear to reflect a disdain and contempt for the rules and wishes of the entire Senate body."

The investigation arose from a move by Sen. William Benton (D-Conn.) last session to expel McCarthy from the Senate. McCarthy in turn demanded an investigation of Benton, and the Senate approved both moves.

Benton, who was defeated for reelection Nov. 4, said the subcommittee's "shocking evidence" on McCarthy bears out his claim the Wisconsin Republican is "not fit to serve in the United States Senate." He predicted that Justice Department and Internal Revenue Bureau action on the data will "compel" the Senate to unseat McCarthy.

The report on McCarthy made no accusations, but asked "obvious questions." One of the concerned how McCarthy could justify taking a $10,000 fee from the Lustron Corp. for a booklet on housing at a time when Lustron was financed entirely by the Reconstruction Finance Corp., a government agency under McCarthy's surveillance as a member of the Banking Committee.

"Are there other instances where Senator McCarthy received some consideration from persons or agencies that he was in a position to assist or hurt...?" the subcommittee asked.

Kiwanians Install Officers For '53

District Lt. Governor Officiates At Installation Rites

By CHESTER WALSH

Dr. Leo W. Jenkins was installed as president of the Greenville Kiwanis Club for 1953 at the weekly supper meeting last night.

Lieut. Governor Talmadge Narron of the Seventh Carolinas Kiwanis District officiated at the installation ceremony.

J. Bryan Brown is vice-president, David C. Moore, Jr., is secretary-treasurer. Retiring President Smith automatically becomes a director.

The club elects four new directors each year. They are: John A. Collins, Jr., Reynolds May, C.K. Beatty and J. Ed Waldrop. Hold-over directors are: Henry L. Andrews, Theo J. Ashworth, Jr., Dr. J. M. Barrett and J. C. Clifford, Jr.

The four retiring directors are: John T. Barnhill, Bill B. Drum, Dr. Davis L. Moore and Dr. John O. Reynolds.

Past Lieut. Gov. Ed E. Rawl presented the district official. Narron, who had already installed officers and directors at several Kiwanis clubs in East Carolina, complimented the Greenville Kiwanians on the "excellent showing of the club's reports for last year's administration under President Smith."

Dr. Leo W. Jenkins, dean of East Carolina College, in his brief inaugural address, reviewed some of the club's activities and stressed the point that he hopes to develop to a wider scope the spirit of fellowship among the Kiwanians.

Ed Rawl, a past president of the Greenville club and lieutenant-governor of the Carolinas Kiwanis Seventh District, presented honor certificates for 25 years of continuous membership in the club to Donald H. Conley, Herman H. Duncan, Marvin K. Blount and Joseph M. Taft.

He recalled that the Greenville Kiwanis Club was organized in the summer of 1921 with Rev. James

Registration For City Vote Drags

Registrars at the Pitt County Courthouse and city hall were merely "puttin' in time" today as registration for the approaching city manager referendum dragged into its third day.

At the courthouse Registrar John R. Barker reported that he has registered only seven new voters in three days the books have been open. He has issued four transfers to people who have moved into other wards.

Mrs. Rosa Brown, registrar at the city hall, said today she has registered only five new voters, but she theorized that interest is picking up slightly in her territory.

Several people have come by this morning to see if their names are on the books, Mrs. Brown stated. She also has issued four transfers to people who have moved out of her jurisdiction.

Registration books will remain open through next Saturday, and the election is slated to be held the following Monday

Economic-Opinion Survey Slated For Reserve Board

Interviewers will be knocking on the doors of residents in Greenville during January and February to find out how people feel about their own and the nation's economic situation and about people's spending and saving plans

This area is one of the 66 areas used by the Federal Reserve Board for its annual survey of consumer finances. Interviewing in this area will be conducted by local citizens for the Survey Research Center of the University of Michigan

The cities of Baltimore, Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, Los Angeles, New York, Washington, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, San Francisco, St. Louis, and Washington, and their suburban areas are all covered by the survey. Other points are scattered throughout the nation.

Respondents are selected by chance, according to addresses chosen by picking certain blocks at random and counting around the blocks to certain addresses. The information is used solely for statistical analysis of the changes in attitudes, plans, and financial situations of various groups of people in the country. All information is held in the strictest confidence and names will not be connected with any published material.

The survey will take account of income in 1952, financial position, major purchases during the year, intentions to buy cars, other durable goods and houses during 1953, and attitudes toward different forms of saving and investment. Also covered in the consumer's attitude toward his current financial situation and his outlook for 1953.

The information developed in the previous surveys has been of interest to many groups, including business and labor. The data have helped to clarify various aspects of consumer finances. Many families have also found it useful to find out how other families in similar circumstances are spending and saving their income. Particular attention is also paid to consumer purchases and intentions to purchase durable goods and houses because of the central position of these industries in the national economy.

Life Sentence Is Reduced To 22 Years By Plea

RALEIGH (AP)—Because a judge interceded in his behalf, the prison sentence of a 27-year-old Lexington man has been commuted from life to 22 years.

The state Paroles Commission reported yesterday Trial Judge Allen H. Gwyn of Reidsville had recommended that the sentence of Robert Brown be reduced to 22 years.

Brown, the father of three children, was brought to trial in Davidson Superior Court in May, 1949, charged with raping a 14-year-old Thomasville girl. He pleaded guilty to accessory before the fact and also to robbery, assault on a female and auto theft. The sentences on the lesser charges were made to run concurrently with his life sentence.

Letter Solves Disappearance Of Jap Athlete

TOKYO (UP)—A letter from Russia today solved the disappearance of a former Princeton University golf captain in August 1945 when Soviet forces overran Manchuria.

The latter, apparently mailed from a Siberian prisoner-of- war camp, was received here by the family of Fumatiki (Butch) Konoye, eldest son of Japan's prewar prime minister, the late Fuminaro Konoye.

Prince Konoye committed suicide in 1945 when he was sought for trial by Allied authorities on war crimes charges.

Leap Year Was 'Flop' In Big City

NEW YORK (UP) — The city clerk admitted today that Leap Year in New York was a big flop.

He reported that marriage licenses issued during 1952 totaled 73,259, a drop of 5,082 from 1951.

'Conservative' Is One Word Which Describes New Congress That Meets Today

WASHINGTON (UP) — The exact descriptive word for the Republican 83rd Congress which convened today is conservative.

The executive department team which will take office next Jan. 20 with President - elect Eisenhower also is basically conservative. The left wingers already are denouncing what they call a banker-minded, big-business cabinet.

The new conservative Congress and the incoming Eisenhower administration were put in power by a lopsided majority of popular and electoral votes as representing the will of the people expressed in last November's general election.

From this executive and legislative set-up, the people of the United States may expect the most meaningful show of conservatism in government spending and related policies. Taxes are much more likely to come down than to go up. Spending will go down.

Foreign aid will be trimmed. A great many thousands of Americans abroad who never had it so good most surely will lose their jobs.

This Congress will be against controls, but may not wholly abolish them. Business, however, can expect less rather than more interference from Washington This Congress will prefer the spending of private funds in some areas where it has been the policy for 20 years to push the spending of government money.

The traditional Republican policy of a protective tariff is a dead duck. The last protective tariff was the Hawley-Smoot Act of 1929. Now the Republicans are more likely to accept a modified and cautious New Deal reciprocal trade policy.

The noisy argument about ownership of offshore areas covering oil bearing sands will sink to a whisper in the 83rd Congress. The rich tidelands will belong to the states. The Democratic leadership in the 83rd Congress will not much oppose that.

When the change-over of national political control is accomplished on Jan. 20 with Eisenhower's inauguration, the New Deal-Fair Deal of FDR and Harry S. Truman will be represented in the national government only by the judges.

Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Truman saw to that during the 20 years in which they in sequence enjoyed the sole right to select the judges who interpret the law. The New Deal-Fair Deal hold on the courts is secure for some years. Only deaths and retirements accompanied by continued Republican possession of the White House can change that. Republicans who narrowly control the House and Senate showed their conservatism in selecting legislative leaders and policy making chiefs.

They are conservatives, however, most of whom have been considerably educated and impressed where it hurt since 1932 when the Republicans have managed to win only two general elections. Back in the Coolidge Congress they would not appear to be so conservative. This Republican leadership and the narrow margin by which the party controls the House and Senate would not be sufficient to make the 83rd Congress conservative in comparison to some recent congresses.

There are a few Republicans who will not follow conservative leadership. But the Republican leadership of the House and Senate often will be supported by a considerable group of Southern Democrats. These comprise the most conservative group in Congress, barring only the issue of foreign aid on which the Southerners uniformly followed FDR and Mr. Truman.

The new Republican leadership often will not be sufficiently conservative for many of the Southern Democratic bloc and for its notable leader, Sen. Harry F. Byrd of Virginia. The Southerners, themselves, have chosen moderately conservative leaders for the 83rd Congress. The left-wingers who made all of that noise at the Democratic national convention last July will not be found among them.

PROMISE OF DELIGHT

Chapter Fifteen

It was Tuesday afternoon, a week later, when the front door bell rang sharply. Anthea was working in the sitting-room, and both Joe and Mario were at a studio conference. The French windows were open, and she could see Bianca sitting in the sun at the far end of the garden, slicing beans for dinner. She called, "All right, Bianca, I'll go."

She went through the hall and opened the front door. For a brief moment she stood staring at the girl who stood there, fascinated, speechless, wordless, her mind saying over and over again, This is the girl. This is the girl Mario and Joe are looking for. This is Pierette.

At first she thought that the girl must have read somewhere about the part, and come to ask Mario to give it to her. It was as though magically, the girl who had been in Joe's mind when he wrote that strange and fascinating script had materialized suddenly into flesh and blood. This lithe tawny young creature with the light golden skinned beauty of northern Italy, who stood on the step staring at Anthea with vague surprise, seemed to have been conjured up out of the air to play the part.

Then she said, "Does Mr. Carlotti live here?"

Anthea came to life as though someone had shot a glass of cold water over her. The voice was so unexpected. She could not say quite what she had expected, the sonorous flow of Spanish perhaps, or the liquid bubble of Italian. Certainly not the flat Middle-West accent of Chicago. She said quickly, "Yes, Mr. Carlotti does live here, but he is not in at the moment. Can I help you? I'm his secretary."

The greeny hazel eyes with their long soft lashes regarded her with a curious, limpid kitten stare. Then she said, "I'm Gina. Gina Scarpi. Is my mothere here?"

"Bianca?"

"I guess so." She smiled like a naughty child. "She's not expecting me. It's going to be quite a shock to her."

"Oh," said Anthea, and opened the door wide. "Please come in Bianca is in the garden. I'll tell her?"

Gina picked up her large and rather shabby suitcase. With her lazy gypsy swagger she followed Anthea into the house.

"Will you come in here?" Anthea opened the sitting-room door. "I'll tell your mother—or would you like to go out and surprise her?"

"Surprise her?" Gina made a little grimace of dismay. "I guess she'd drop dead. You see, she thought I was going to be a nun."

Anthea could not control the little spurt of laughter that welled up inside her. Gina apparently shared her amusement, because she laughed appreciatively too. "Yeah I know," she said. "It was a rotten idea from the start." She gazed at Anthea with a captivating frankness that appeared to be quite guileless. "How is Joe?" she asked.

"He's fine," said Anthea. "He's up in town with his father."

Gina sighed. "He's swell. When I was a kid I thought the sun and moon and stars shone out of him. The one person who understood. Ma nagged and Mario roared. . . but Joe was always kind. I wonder if he's changed?"

Anthea shook her head quietly, and said, "I don't think so. He's still an awfully nice person."

"So?" The sleepy eyes looked at Anthea with sudden swift penetration. "So you're swee on him?" She shrugged tolerantly. "I don't blame you if he's as grand as he was ten—no, it must be more than ten—maybe twelve years ago. Well, every girl for herself!"

Gina cautiously peered over her shoulder at Bianca sitting in the garden, quite unconscious of her daughter's arrival, stringing and slicing the beans with quick, deft fingers, a cigarette jauntily in her mouth. She shook her head, and sighed. "Well, what d'you know? She hasn't changed. A bit greyer, that's all. She didn't want me to go out into the world. Can you imagine that? She sent the sisters money for me, and so long as she paid, they wouldn't let me go until she said so. I lit out a year ago. I went to Hollywood, thought maybe I'd get in the movies. But there's an awful lot of pretty girls there with the same idea."

"But didn't they tell your mother you'd gone?"

"No, she was in Hollywood then, but I didn't go to her. I wrote to the sisters, telling them I'd joined her there, and I wrote to her telling her not to send the money any more, as I was working at the convent, and they would take that as payment. Do you know I actually saw her one day, in a streetcar, but I hopped off at the next stop."

"But how did you live?" asked Anthea, fascinated.

"Oh, I got jobs. One of those coffee-and-gasoline outfits shop assistant, usherette . gee, all those jobs are hard on the feet."

"I see," said Anthea a little weakly.

Gina's naughty child's grin came back again. "You're thinking of my coat." She patted the soft grey fur appreciatively. "Well, I had birthdays, as often as possible, and I had a lot of boy friends, and they always remembered my birthday. Men are kind of nice to me."

Strength for the Day

CONSIDER A SWITCH

We used to hear a great deal of talk about empty churches. Last Sunday I had a very pleasant experience—I was unable to find a seat either downstairs or in the balcony in the church which I attended. I sat in the lobby during the service. Sixty per cent of the persons present were probably under forty years of age.

There is a profound significance in the fact that people are beginning to flock back again to the churches. Some years ago we were talking about combining congregations and selling many of our church properties. Possibly this is still being contemplated in some communities. By and large, however, the response of most people to religion today is extremely encouraging. They are sold on the idea that religion is necessary for individuals and for the nation. And this is at least a step in the right direction.

If you have been neglecting your church duties ever the years, I am delighted to be able to tell you—and with a little touch of malice—that you are in a group happily becoming a minority in our national life. And this happens to be one of the minorities which is decidedly on the wrong side of the fence as regards the enduring truth in which, through the ages, humanity has found its strength and life.

Where Are These New Greenville Citizens?

Greenville's registration books for the special election on the council-manager form of government have been open for six days now, and less than a dozen people have added their names to the list of eligible voters of Greenville.

There is a week of registration yet to go before the election on the new form of government January 12. The Reflector urges the new citizens of Greenville who have not registered on the city's books to get their names on the books within the coming week and begin to shoulder their share of the responsibility of local government.

Voting in an election is not the business of a handful of people. It is the business of all the people and the responsibility of all the people. Under the democratic system everybody's opinion counts the same at the polls. One man's vote carries as much weight as the next fellow's.

Greenville is spending the money of its tax-paying citizens to hold the registration books open in the period prior to the election to give the citizens who are not registered an opportunity to participate in the coming election. There, the power of the officials ends. They have no authority to coerce the citizens into taking advantage of the opportunity which is offered.

It would seem new citizens of Greenville would be eager to take a part in local government by participating in an election. But apparently they have little interest. To be sure there are hunderds of people in Greenville whose names are not on the registration books. Yet the extremely small number of citizens who have so far registered for the coming election does not indicate the large number of unregistered citizens.

During this week the time is at hand for registering. Those who are not registered by Saturday will have forfeited their right to participate in local government by helping their fellow citizens decide what form of government Greenville shall have in the future. Those unregistered people will not only have shunned an obligation to themselves, but they likewise will have neglected a responsibility to their fellow citizens.

Lehman Levels Second Big Gun At Southerners

Senator Herbert Lehman of New York has rolled out his second big gun in less than six months and leveled it at his fellow Democrats from the South.

Lehman has been jockeying for several days trying to get into a position to press through the Senate an anti-filibuster rule which will pave the way to possible civil rights legislation and other proposals which heretofore have found principal opposition among the Senators from south of the Mason - Dixon line.

In their right to filibuster, the Southern Senators have found one of their main weapons against undesirable legislation proposed by the liberal elements of their party.

Apparently the anti-filibuster move has been instigated by Lehman and other liberal northern Democrats who last July sought to read many Southern delegations out of the national Democratic convention. Lehman, Humphries, young Franklin Roosevelt and their cohorts failed in their attempt to read their Southern collegues out of the party last July. Now the indication is they will seek to take away from the Southern Senators one of their most powerful weapons in opposing legislation.

While some Northern Republicans are joining Lehman and the other Northern Democrats in the anti-filibuster battle, it seems to us the burden of battle will rest upon the Northern Democrats. Their Republican friends of similar sentiments will ride quietly in the back seat while the Democrats from the South and the Democrats from the North put on the show.

There can be little doubt that the Republican administration, at least during the next two years, is going to have to count heavily upon votes from conservative Southern Senators if the Republican program is to get by the Senate in which the GOP has only a slim margin. The Republican strategy, we believe, will be to befriend the Southern Democrats rather than make them bitter enemies at the outset of the 83rd Congress.

The Reflector seriously doubts Lehman and his group can muster the necessary strength to push an anti-filibuster rule through the Senate. And even in view of the misuse to which the unlimited debate of the Senate has been put on a few occasions, we favor the continuation of unlimited Senate debate.

The move by Lehman is a means to an end which the liberals in Congress have not been able to achieve. If the filibuster possibility is removed in the Senate, the liberals who sit with Lehman feel they will have a greater chance to push through Congress the civil rights legislation which has met defeat in previous attempts.

National Whirligig

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3—"In view of the fact that the Mutual Security Administration may be abolished or eliminated," asks J. P. C. of Gary, Ind., "how do you account for Eisenhower's appointment of Harold Stassen to this job? Doesn't he place a higher premium than that on the Minnesotan's contribution to his nomination and election?"

Answer: The appointment of the head of Pennsylvania University to what may become a "lame duck" or innocuous post testifies, in the general opinion here, to Ike's impetuosity in personal relations and to his generosity.

He selected Stassen before he had given any thought to possible reorganization of our foreign aid system, and before he had learned of the only half-hidden jealousies and controversies over this problem—namely, the struggle for power and prestige involving the diplomats, the militarists and the so-called expert economists who spend these funds.

Even an Administration Committee, the Sawyer group, recently condemned the present unwieldy and wasteful system, echoing criticism previously expressed by the recipients of American bounty.

John Foster Dulles, incoming Secretary of State, has been aware of the situation. But he was too occupied with other matters, principally Korea and the apparent futility of the United Nations as now organized and operated, to bring it to the attention of the President-elect.

I understand, however, that Dulles favors a new and more centralized organization than the MSA. Under his plan State would dole out economic aid, while Defense would supervise military spending. Then, almost all the third-wheel, MSA dilettantes could come home.

Finally, Eisenhower owes no obligation to Stassen. Ike would not have lost a single vote, in the belief of the politicians, if "Childe Harold" had supported Governor Stevenson. The Minnesotan's future is the least of the Republicans' problem.

"Are the Democrats showing any signs of getting together after their November crackup?" inquires D. R. of Bradford, Pa.

Answer: It is too early, of course, for the minority to have reached any decision about the identity of the new leaders. Many southern Democrats, including members of Congress and governors, show a disposition to look upon Stevenson as merely the nominal head of the party.

In any event, any real reunion, to be effective, must first manifest itself back home—in the countries, the cities and states. All disorganized parties must rebuild from the basement up, not from the roof down. Stevenson is now sitting high up on a gable, despite the great respect and admiration for him.

With respect to any local reconciliation and reorganization, there are sharp contrasts and different problems confronting the Democrats in various sections of the country.

In the North, where the Democrats believe that they will come back fairly soon with the support of labor, liberals and racial minorities, the cleavage is wider and the feeling is more bitter. As recently demonstrated in the election of a new state chairman in New York, the Truman-Stevenson-Harriman faction retains control. They defeated the candidate of James A. Farley but largely with votes from the noisy, metropolitan area.

Farley warned that the party would make a mistake, if it failed to recognize out-city Democrats, and continued to depend on the hodge-podge, one-hoss-shay kind of organization thrown together by Roosevelt and Truman. With characteristic shrewdness, "Jim" pointed out that this spirit of selfish and narrow parochialism was as dangerous in national as in state politics.

In other words, Northern Democrats still await another political Messiah in the image of Roosevelt or Truman.

There was not the same degree of ideological warfare among Democrats in the South. Those who bolted to Ike were not regarded as "deserters." Those supporting Stevenson did so only out of personal admiration and party loyalty, having no use for Truman policies. Unlike their northern compatriots, they have few unhappy ghosts to bury. Save for a few instances, they seem to be drawing together again.

Who Else?

Somebody Told Me

By I. J. (Jack) EDWARDS, JR.

When I saw a magazine article entitled "How to Get Your Hands on $500 Million" I immediately took a special interest. It's a fact: The federal and state governments have more than half a billion dollars that the right people can have just by proving they are the right people.

Back in January, 1949, the U. S. Treasury mailed a check for $538 to a man, which was a payment covering the first special dividend due him for a World War II veteran, on his GI life insurance.

This man was unable to be reached at his old address, so the check was returned to the government. To this day, nobody knows where this man is, and he is still due $538 from Uncle Sam.

Most people around Greenville have collected dividends from GI insurance, but there are no doubt many who have funds due them from income tax refunds, matured government bonds, war bonuses, compensation and pensions. Why anyone would let a tax refund go idle in the Treasury is beyond me. But there are nearly 1,500,000 Americans who have tax money due them.

Ever since the thirteen colonies broke away from England and established a free, independent nation, the U. S. has been borrowing money to pay expenses. This money has been borrowed through issuance of stocks, bonds, certificates, notes and other securities. As a rule, as soon as these securities mature; that is, stop bearing interest, they are turned into the Treasury and redeemed for cash.

But, believe it or not, there have been over $400 million in these securities that have not been collected and consequently have been turned back to the Government.

Remember the Liberty Bonds in World War I? These bonds matured long years ago, but there are $8 million still outstanding. These bonds may be turned in for cash. The same applies to bonds sold during World War II. This figure is over $138 million which have matured but have not been claimed.

And I thank Everybody's Digest.

Around Capitol Square

SALARIES — Constitutional elective officers of North Carolina are hopeful that somebody will obtain passage of a bill increasing their salaries before they are sworn in next Thursday. Eager as each of them seems to be to get the additional money, there is reluctance about taking the lead and openly pressing for it. Both the eagerness and the reluctance are understandable. There is common desire for more money on part of all State employees, workers in private business and professional men and women.

DELICATE — There are some delicate features in the present situation. The constitution prohibits increasing or reducing compensation of constitutional officers (except judges, who may have their compensation increased) during the term "for which they were elected." The Governor not take the oaths of office until were elected for terms beginning January 1. Even though they do not take the oths of office until a week later, there is question about validity of attempted increase in salaries after the constitution says the terms shall begin.

PERCENTAGE — Another factor is that the Council of State members get a 20 per cent raise in salary under terms of a 1949 act which set the salaries beginning this year at $9,000 instead of the $7,500 which they drew for the terms just ended. The $7,500 represented almost a 15 per cent increase of the $6,600 which applied from 1941 to 1949. The figure was raised from $6,000 to $6,600 on the first day of the 1941 session, under circumstances similar to those to be obtained now. That means that since 1940 the compensation of Council of State members has been increased 50 per cent—from $6,000 to $9,000.

DOUBLED — That is just about half the rate of increase in the overall average of State employees salaries. Figures compiled by the Budget Bureau show that the average increase has been more than 90 per cent. With the 10 per cent increase advocated by Governor-elect Umstead and which Governor Scott has said is in the budget recommendations, the average pay of State workers retroactive to last July 1 will be more than twice the amount received for the same jobs in 1938.

BLANKETED — Details of application of the proposed 10 per cent boost have not been made public. Prevailing opinion is that it will follow closely, but not exactly, a 10 per cent upping of every pay check. Some adjustments may be made with a few classifications getting slightly more and others a little bit less than the average increase. That has been the case in the "average" increases heretofore noted. Low bracket employees have generally been more than doubled, while brackets—$6,000 and up—have not received the average raises. In most instances the increase has been substantially more for appointive than for elective officals in the high brackets.

CLASSIFICATION — There has been some objection voiced to the policy of putting all members of the Council of State on equal basis, while appointive heads of departments are classified with respect to the duties and responsibilities inherent in the offices and their salaries arranged accordingly. There is just as wide variance in functions performed by the State Auditor and the Commissioner of Agriculture as between those of the Commissioner of Revenue and Director of the Department of Archives and History. Some legislators have expressed belief that before a blanket increase in salaries is authorized there should be an appraisal made of the duties performed and compensation based on results of such a study.

STANDARDIZED — The argument that members of the Council of State should be paid the same salary, regardless of duties performed, just because they are elected by the people loses force in view of the wide variance in salaries of other elective officials. The Governor gets $15,000 a year, the Lieutenant Governor gets $2,100, and the Attorney General has been drawing $8,400 which goes up to $10,500 for the upcoming term. Regardless of action on current increases, the 1953 General Assembly should provide for a thorough survey of the activities of elective officials comparable to that conducted by the Department of Personnel for appointed and employed State Workers.

SACROSANCT — Elective officials have traditionally considered themselves exempt from many phases of budget control. Outstanding examples of that attitude might be mentioned the bitter feud between State Auditor Baxter Durham and Assistant Director of the Budget Henry Burke some 20 years ago, and the frequent conflicts between Commissioner of Agriculture Kerr Scott and Budgeteer Bob Deyton a few years later. The rank and file of the citizenship makes little distinction between elective and appointive officers. The fact is that a lot more people have contact with the appointed Commissioner

What Other Papers Are Thinking

N. C. AND NEW INDUSTRY
(Greensboro Daily News)

North Carolina is doing quite well economically. Its business volume for the first nine months of 1952 is up 8 per cent over the same period for 1951, according to the Manufacturer's Record. This compares with a gain of 3 per cent for the nation, 4 for Virginia, 9 for South Carolina, 5 for Georgia, 5 for Tennessee, 6 for Alabama, 9 for Texas, and 5 for the South.

Yet North Carolina's gain in manufacturing was only 2 per cent compared with 4 per cent for the South. The gain for the nation was also 2 per cent. Florida had a gain of 14 per cent, Mississippi 7 per cent, Tennessee 3 per cent and Texas 9 per cent, in manufacturing.

Governor Scott notes that during his administration "North Carolina sites have been selected for 400 new industrial plants with a total investment of $264,000,000 to give employment to 41,000 additional workers with annual pay rolls of $100,000,000."

North Carolina has, we believe, been leading the South in acquisition of new industry and expansion of old.

Nevertheless this state has been falling behind in per capita income, slipping from 41st place in the list of states to 44th in the past few years.

Obviously North Carolina needs more diversified industries which pay higher wages.

One step in that direction might be the organization of a "State Development Foundation," as has been suggested by Bill Sharpe in State Magazine.

The Asheville Citizen, while commending the idea, seems to prefer a "State Planning Board," on the ground that such a planning board would be more likely to take a state-wide viewpoint whereas a private foundation might be more inclined to favor the Piedmont for the establishment of new industries.

We don't know about that—it might well work the other way. But we are satisfied that North Carolina could overhaul, expand and modernize its whole set-up for the attraction of new industry, with very considerable profit to itself.

Business Today

By ELMER ROESSNER

Fifty-three will be an excellent year for business. New high marks will be reached in most, if not all, fields.

However, any forecast of the coming year is at the mercy of three big imponderables. They are:

1. International relations.
2. Politics.

Patterns of boom or bust will be drafted not in Main Street but in Moscow, Washington and on the sun.

No matter what else happens, international affairs can shape the cash-register destiny of every business, from U.S. Steel to Marzano's corner grocery store. If Russia embarks on a real policy of conciliation, there may be a sharp cut-back in defense measures, leading to temporary unemployment and all the other aches and pains of a broad readjustment of the economy. There will be one brake on such a slide, Russia, anyhow. If Russia increases her hostility—a possibility much more credible — there will be an even harper rise in government spending, offset by the threat of an equally sharp rise in taxes.

WHAT WILL REPUBLICANS DO IN WASHINGTON?

Assuming that Russia is not yet ready for a global war and continues within present patterns of aggression, the economic pattern will devolve largely upon Washington. We are going to have a new kind of administration: a Republican kind. But nobody knows exactly what that is any more — not even the Republicans. It has been two decades since the GOP has been in office. Certainly it is not going to give us another Hoover administration. Conditions —and even the vehicles — Hoover — have changed mightily since then.

Furthermore, there is a great difference between what the GOP wants to do and what it can do. It is a changing world. It may sound fantastic today, but it is truly possible that four years hence the Democrats will be applying that dirty word, "socialistic" to the Republicans.

Assume further that the Russians will continue to be the kind of Russians they are now and that the Republicans can be the kind of administrators they have professed to be, there is still the weather to reckon with. A year of high productivity can give the nation an embarrassment of riches in food; storms and droughts (we had a sample of what they can do this year) can confront the country with even more painful shortages. We may be an industrial nation but industry's most important fuel is food.

RETAIL, WHOESALE..... ..... IN PRICES VARY

The recent divergence between wholesale and retail price indices presents interesting questions. As you may have noted, various commodity indexes, like Moody's, are down a good 20 per cent from their 1951 peaks. But the Bureau of Labor Statistics index of consumer prices is still 2 per cent higher than a year ago. Of course, one reason is that the retail index includes rents which have been under control longer than other services and commodities, and recently have been creeping upward while other living costs have leveled off or come down a bit. But the divergence may signal other events, too.

It could indicate a new rise in wholesale prices in the offing, or a drop in retail prices, or perhaps just that an increased distribution cost has been frozen into the spread between wholesale commodity and retail prices. Or maybe, quite possibly, all three.

Hal Boyle's Column

By HAL BOYLE

NEW YORK—(AP)—I had a horrible dream the other night. I dreamt that every person in America actually kept the New Year's resolutions he had made on Jan. 1.

Here was the result four months later:

The nation was completely upset. The sudden wave of overwhelming virtue had dislocated normal life in school, home and industry.

The country faced the greatest depression in history.

Every saloon was closed, every tobacco shop had shuttered its doors, and liquor store proprietors were peddling candy.

Bartenders stood in breadlines. Racehorses were applying for jobs pulling milk wagons. All racetracks advertised: "Reopening soon as America's biggest outdoor roller skating rink."

Cobwebs hung in the windows of finance companies as no one was taking out a loan. Banks bulged so with money that depositors were paying them interest just to keep it.

Automobile salesmen wrung their hands in dismay in showrooms stocked with new models but there were no new prospects as everyone had pledged to "make the old car last another year."

Hopalong Cassidy had gone into the garage business because children had quit watching the television screen. Teachers were threatening to quit. "The kids study so hard now they know more than we do," ran the complaint. "We can't keep up with them."

In offices and factories no one had run downstairs to get morning coffee or missed work because of "one-day pneumonia." So most employers had cut their staffs in half, finding that was all the employes they really needed to get the job done.

Department stores were empty. No one was buying on the installment plan.

Night club owners had turned their joints into Chinese restaurants—and were taking in each other's laundry to cut down expenses. All the top dance orchestras had become wandering street bands.

Darkness reigned in every movie theater, silence in every bowling alley. People were sternly living up to their resolution to "stay home more often."

Husbands, mindful of their wives' old wail, "You never talk to me any more," were talking so much that their wives were saying, "Oh, shut up for a change." In fact every husband came home at night so regularly that every wife was doubly suspicious that he was carrying on a daytime romance with his stenographer.

Wives were dutifully carrying out their promise to get up every morning to fix their husband's breakfast. But husbands were begging, "For Pete's sake, stay in bed, won't you? You've got me so fat now I can't hardly waddle."

Everyone was so courteous they all stood on the buses. Nobody wanted to take the other person's seat. Old ladies were afraid to venture out, as Boy Scouts no longer were content merely to help them across the street. They wanted to carry them across.

No pedestrian jaywalked. No taxi driver tried to run the red lights. Traffic cops were going to psyciatrists and moaning, "I feel so unnecessary in this civilization, Doc. There's no reason to bawl anybody out." There weren't even any Sunday drivers — they were all driving on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

Some 512 veteran Internal Revenue Bureau agents had dropped dead of shock after checking 24 million income tax returns without finding a single error by a taxpayer in favor of himself.

No one had gossiped, said an unkind word or taken advantage of another human being. Professional reformers, comedians, pundit columnists and judges were in deepest melancholy. For there was nothing to criticize, ridicule or sit in judgment on.

Everyone had gone to see his doctor at least once and everyone had either had his teeth fixed or arranged to visit his dentist. The appointments ran into 1959.

The nation had never been healthier, most people had never been individually wealthier or better behaved. But the stock market had plummeted to a record low, the backed-up savings had created financial chaos, and everyone was worried and fearful, saying:

"If people change their habits this fast, there is no telling what you can put money in as a long term investment and feel safe. They might even start cobbling their own shoes."

I woke from this dream in a cold sweat of terror. And the moral, I guess is:

"Don't worry too much about those New Year's resolutions. If everybody kept them, they'd ruin the country."

Washington Letter

By JANE EADS

WASHINGTON—Mrs. G. Gordon Moore, Mamie Eisenhower's sister, better known as "Mike," is energetic and good-natured, but she doesn't like the limelight and wishes people would stop plaguing her with personal family questions.

"Everybody under the sun was calling her about one thing or another — what kind of perfume Mamie likes, what size dress does she wear, what does Ike like to eat and so on," a friend told me. "She finally had to get a private, unlisted phone in self-defense."

The wife of a retired Army colonel, Mrs. Moore lives in a spacious beautifully furnished home here and is the mother of four children, Richard Gill Jr. 20, a cadet at West Point; Michael Dowd Gill, 17; Ellen Dowd Gill, 11, and Mamie Eisenhower Gill, 10, all attending public school in Washington. Taking care of house and family is a full-time job in itself, Mike says.

She has agreed to take on one project in connection with the inauguration ceremonies, however, because she feels so strongly about its importance. As chairman of the Hospitality Subcommittee of the Eisenhower-Nixon Inaugural Committee, she intends to see that Mr. and Mrs. Average American receive a special welcome.

"It is our hope that when Mr. and Mrs. Average American and their children go back home they will take with them a happy feeling they have been truly welcome in their nation's Capital," she says. "Washington belongs to all of the people. We just live here and try to take care of it."

Mrs. Moore's committee, which will be staffed by some 500 volunteers, plans to set up information booths in hotel lobbies and other points throughout the city to supply information on sightseeing and general data of interest. Trailers manned by volunteers, on major highways leading into the city, will also furnish visitors with information. In addition, they will supply suggestions on housing, restaurants, churches, transportation, tickets and shopping services.

"Distinguished visitors, of course will be welcome," said Mrs. Moore, "but our committee, as representative of the entire Inaugural Committee and the people in Washington and Gen. Eisenhower himself, for that matter—will give special attention to the thousands of hometown folks who will will come to see our new President inaugurated. We feel that welcoming and helping the average visitor will be our principal job. The men, women and children the newspapers don't notice are going to be the Hospitality Subcommittee's very special VIP's."

Worn-Out '52 Left Quite A Record Of Events In Pitt

CONFESSED MURDERERS. Marines Sgt. Frederick L. Porcelli (left), and Cpl. Herman J. Socie, Jr., get life! In one of the longest Pitt County criminal trials in recent years, which necessitated night sessions and extension of the term into another week, two young marines were sentenced to life imprisonment for the murder of Jesse Mills, Greenville policeman. The state accepted pleas of guilty to accessory fefore the fact of murder on the part of each, a plea that carries with it a mandatory life sentence.

KU KLUX KLAN "RIDES." Four threatening letters and a crude cross, all attributed to the Ku Klux Klan, aroused fears in Pitt County that terrorism might be revived in the county. Swift action by the sheriff's department disclosed all were sent as a "prank," and the KKK was really dead in Pitt. Three arrests were made in one instance, and suspended sentences put and end to the joke. No future activity is anticipated in that regard locally.

Sudden Death, Disputes, Progress Noted In Old Year

By The Daily Reflector Staff
(Compiled From The Files)

The proverbial rosy-cheeked infant, endowed with innocence by destiny, who ushered 1952 into being a year ago retired Wednesday, decrepit with care and disillusioned by the workings of a selfish humanity.

On January 1, 1952, that untarnished child of time succeeded a long annual list of predecessors; some illustrious, others notorious. Doubtless he will be followed by an infinite line of similar nature and variety.

Into Oblivion

But he who vanished into the shadows of oblivion left without regret amid the bedlam of horns and bells calculated to welcome his successor, 1953. No "thanks" for coming" was accorded the white-beared gent whose lot it was to record upon the pages of time the events that marked 1952 A.D.

However, whether lauded or ridiculed, the patriarch who retired into seclusion three days ago made impressions of such significance on the people of Greenville and Pitt County that they will be eradicated only by death.

A great many news events of prominence and importance occured throughout the city and county during the past 12 months of 1952. Activities in many instances were constructive in nature; at the same time others were marked by tragedy.

Murder Big Story

Unfortunately, the leading story of the year from the standpoint of news — to this and many neighboring communities — was the ambush slaying of Greenville Policer Jesse E. Mills.

While on a midnight tour of his city beat that took him into a pitch-black alley, the veteran policeman was brutally shot to death by a youthful hoodlum. He was felled by two bullets in the chest.

Mills was murdered by Marine Sgt. Fredrick I. Porcelli, 20, after the officer surprised Porcelli and a 19-year-old confederate, Marine Cpl. Herman J. Socie, Jr., as they were attempting to break into and rob a local cleaning establishment.

Point Blank Range

A special agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation swore later that one of the bullets which killed Mills was fired at a distance of less than one inch from the officer's chest. He said the second shot was fired at a distance of less than six inches.

In an abortive trial that consumed nearly a week and required the drawing of four special venires to obtain a 13-man jury, the two killers received sentences of life imprisonment. The state accepted pleas of guilty to accessory before the fact of murder on the part of both defendants.

And thus, the case was ended. A Greenville policeman was slaughtered in cold blood while engaged in the conduct of his duty, a responsibility which consisted primarily of protecting the lives and private property of the city's citizens.

Ku Klux Klan

In addition to other news stories of much import to local citizens, a pseudo Ku Klux Klan cross was burned in Pitt County. Coming at the same time as the state's vigorous cleanup of the bona fide KKK at Whiteville in Columbus County, the local incidents shocked Pitt County residents to the core.

A number of letters in the name of the Klan were circulated, and the entire farce was climaxed with the burning of a cross near Greenville and subsequent arrest of three persons.

It was learned that the whole matter was simply a "scare" and bore no connection with the KKK. All three people involved were given suspended road terms and ordered to be at home from sundown to sunup each night for a period of six months.

The community then settled back to normality.

One-Way Streets

In 1952 the highly controversial and revolutionary one-way street system went into effect in Greenville. It came after exhaustive study and advice from professional traffic authorities.

The wails from the populace were many but accidents were few, and much of the traffic congestion experienced previously was eliminated.

However, petitons signed by 460 people were presented before the board of aldermen asking city officials to abolish the one-way street system. After an opposition vote of five to one, the matter was postponed for 90 days.

At any rate, the 90 days and more are up, one-way streets are still in effect, and it looks as if they are here to stay.

School Controversy

Later in the year the epidemic of rifts between parents of school children and local boards of education spread to Pitt County, when a group of parents filed a suit against the Bethel School Board.

Signed by 13 parents, the complaint protested a ruling of the local board that children would not be allowed either to go home for lunch or to eat their lunch uptown. When the issue came into Pitt Superior Court, however, many of the parents who signed the complaint had backed down.

Judge W.C. Harris, jurist presiding over that term of court, upheld the ruling of the school board and decreed that students at Bethel High School could not leave the school grounds during the lunch hour.

The settled that, and all was soon harmony.

Heated Exchange

But 1952 did not pass out of existence without the not infrequent exchange of heated words between city officials. In mid-summer, Greenville Mayor Lester D. Page censured Tom Rivers, city engineer, for "exceeding his authority" in that capacity.

The mayor's blast at Rivers stemmed from the city engineer's alleged action in giving the "go ahead" on paving in Village Grove sub-division. Mayor page called the area the poorest developed property he had ever seen.

Rivers said in a reply to the mayor that he was amazed at the criticism and had always tried to abide by city policy. But if Rivers was amazed the citizens of Village Grove were irate, and they wrote heated letters to the mayor in protest of his criticism.

Mayor Page clamly put the situation right by explaining the misunderstanding. He said no criticism was directed or intended toward the residents of Village Grove, but only at the haphazard way in which the property was developed.

The controversy soon died down.

Hoodlum Activities

Then while arguments relative to various and sundry subjects were being exchanged openly in many parts of Pitt County, an unknown gunman drove calmly up to the stoplight in Grimesland one night and delivered a lethal charge of buckshot into that offensive suspension.

It was put out of commission immediately, and the chief of police there said the car sped gangster-like away from the scene toward Black Jack. A $25 reward was offered for information leading to the arrest of the culprit, but the lure was not lucrative enough and the "suspect" is still at large.

In the Spring Gov. W. Kerr Scott delivered the graduation address to 249 graduates of East Carolina College. Of the total, 234 were from North Carolina. At about the same time Greenville High School awarded diplomas to 96 graduates, and C.M. Eppes sent 35 graduates out into the business world.

Unfortunate Year

A year of infamy was 1952 for Autry Lee Haddock, convicted Pitt County bootlegger. Out on parole for a liquor law violation only two months, Haddock was again arrested for transporting illegal whiskey and sent back to a Federal prison.

On the farm scene, prospects for the largest crop ever grown in Pitt County loomed on the horizon as frequent rains made tobacco planting very effective. Stands were good all over the county and very little replanting was necessary.

Later, however, drought set in and scorching rays of a merciless sun withered tobacco in the fields. The county sweltered under the hottest Summer in many years, while dozens of its citizens collapsed in the fields from heat exhaustion. A few deaths were attributed to the intense heat.

Fatalities High

The year 1952 was the sixth worst year for highway accidents and fatalities in Pitt County in the past 15 years. During the year, 12 persons met death in highway accidents and hundreds were injured.

Although the number of persons killed in 1952 was not as high as the record of 18, reached in 1938 and 1950, the figure slain last year was tragically high. Property damage from accidents soared into the hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Greenville Recorder's Court tried a total of 2,142 cases throughout the year. From fines, the sum of $15,000 was paid to the county; $15,000 paid to the city; $4,284 paid to the State Law Enforcement Benefit Fund; and $2,142 to the Pitt County Peace Officers Fund.

Costly Fire

The most costly fire in the city, and the one with the greatest potential for damage, was the destruction of St. Raphael's parochial school by flames. More than 100 small children escaped without mishap, but the threat to life and limb was enormous.

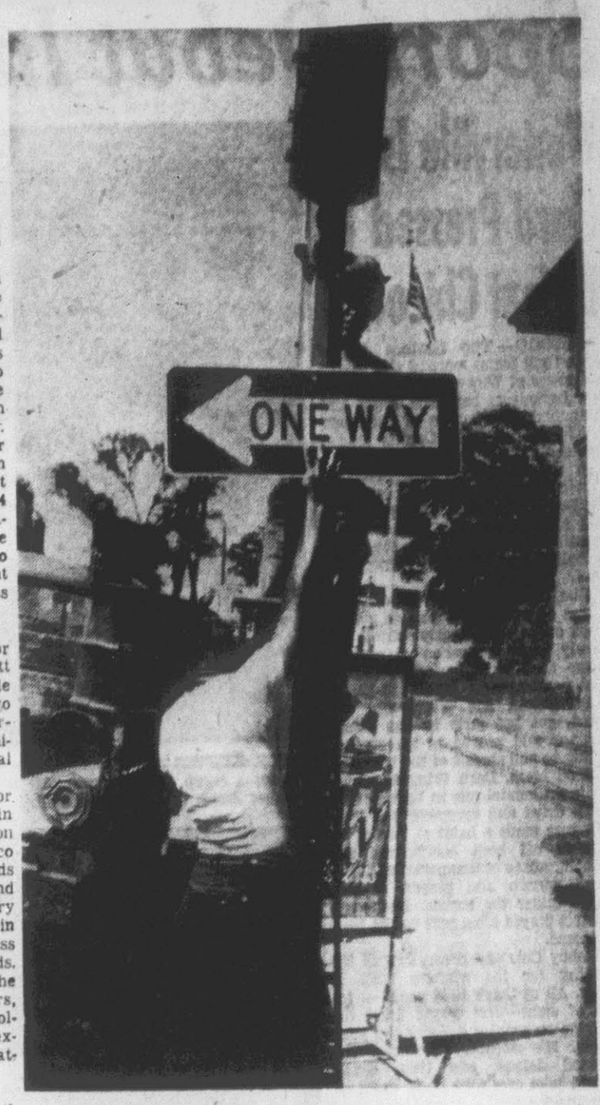

In sports East Carolina's football Pirates sank conference foes with abandon and almost looted the North State Conference title. The 1952 East Carolina football team became the first in the college's history to play in a post-season bowl. The Pirates were defeated in the Lions Bowl by Clarion State Teachers College of Pennsylvania.

Political Scene

On the political scene in that election year of 1952, William B. Umstead defeated by a narrow margin Hubert E. Olive to win the Democratic nomination for the governorship. He went on to win the office in the Fall.

Concerning national candidates, Pitt County remained firmly entrenched in the ranks of the Democrat Party by giving Adlai Stevenson a six-to-one majority over Dwight Eisenhower. The Republican former general was defeated in North Carolina but swept the nation to win over Stevenson and gain the presidency.

And now the year is ended, but the war in Korea still goes on. When will it end?

"IT'LL NEVER WORK." That was the widespread comment heard all over Greenville in 1952, when the present system of one-way streets was suggested. The system gave birth to much sidewalk conversation, pro and con, and eventually petitions protesting one-way traffic sprang into existance. But it all came to naught, and citizens have come to endure — some even to appreciate — the system as it existed at the end of the year.

TRAGEDY MIRACULOUSLY AVERTED. A group of Negro school children narrowly escaped death or serious injury in 1952, when the bus in which they were riding rammed a bridge on the Black Jack highway. All students, traveling to Pitt County Training School at Grimesland, escaped safely, but the bus was impaled on the iron span that crossed a creek.

A FOUR-WHEELED CASKET. A total of 12 persons met violent deaths on Pitt County highways during 1952. Dozens of others were injured, many seriously, and property damage ran into hundreds of thousands of dollars. The record for highway deaths in the county is 18, set in 1938 and equalled in 1950. Deaths on the highways throughout the United States far exceed casualties on battlefields.

SCHOOL FIRE THREATENS LIFE. Late in 1952 a fire broke out in the basement of St. Raphael's parochial school in Greenville and threatened the lives of more than 100 small children. Orderly movement from the building prevented personal injury but the school building, although it did not burn to the ground, was declared a total loss.

THE PHANTOM

Basketball Features 1953 Sport Debut In Pitt County

Winterville Is Hard Pressed To Defeat Chicod

CHICOD—Two bantam Chicod basketball teams scorned the vaunted power of Winterville's high ranking basketeers here last night and launched an offensive of their own that forced the Pitt County leaders to go all out to gain victories.

A scrappy Chicod five paced by David Tripp, Walter Smith and Bobby Burroughs began hitting the basket almost with the sound of the opening buzzer and after three and a half minutes of play Chicod led 14-4.

The Winterville boys showing the stripe of veterans refused to get excited over Chicod's early splurge and slowly began a methodical rebound game that by end of first quarter had narrowed the gap to 18-12.

Ed Evans, ace Winterville forward, got hot early in the second quarter and poured in six straight points to pull abreast of the underdog Chicod team. Dean Wingate played an instrumental role in halting Chicod's drive and reversing the tide. Wingate made a habit of taking rebounds off both backboards and passing off to contemporaries. Charlie Robinson also played a good game under the boards. Backboard control played a big part in the final outcome.

Bobby Cole and Evans topped the scoring for the winners with 17 each. All of Cole's field goals—a total of eight—were scored from the outside on arching one-handed push shots. His accuracy loosened the Chicod defense and then Evans would take over with hook shots on the inside.

David Tripp pushed in 15 points to top Chicod's scoring.

Girls' Game

Quest of victory No. 13 almost proved unlucky for Winterville's undefeated girls' team. Winterville's lassies got their biggest scare of the season as Chicod forwards Clara Wilson, Patsy Mills, and Jessie Kennedy matched Jean Liverman, Betty Jean Little, and Joan Averette, goal for goal.

The third quarter found the game deadlocked at 52-all.

Liverman sank two layups and Winterville fans began to breathe easier but Mills sank one for Chicod and Kennedy followed with two goals and the game Chicod sextet went into the lead again.

Wilson gave Chicod a four point lead at 60-56 with a layup, but Liverman once more rose to the occasion and dunked a pair of field goals to lock the score.

Averette put Winterville ahead with a goal out Kennedy quickly made it 62-all. Little hit a set shot but Mills dropped two field goals in rapid succession to put Chicod ahead 66-64 with a minute and 15 seconds left to play. Kennedy hit a foul shot and Liverman came back with a field goal.

With exactly 10 seconds left to play Averette looped a push shot from the side that hit and preserved the Winterville undefeated skein.

Grifton Triumphs Over Maury In Cage Double-Bill

GRIFTON—Grifton's Bulldogs got back into the thick of the cage wars last night by defeating Maury in both ends of a doubleheader. Grifton's girls started the evening's action by mauling their visitors 45-22 and the Bulldog boys finished up what the girls started by coming out on the long end of a 59-56 score in the second game.

Boys Game

Ace forward J. R. Hooten showed, rather convincingly, that the long Christmas layoff didn't hamper his shooting a bit as he pumped in 30 points for the Bulldogs. Hooten got 25 of his points in the second half when the Bulldogs came from behind to take their eleventh victory of the season.

Hooten was aided in the scoring by John Lewis, who came through with 18 points, but the real value of Lewis was in controlling rebounds. The shorter (5-10) Hooten was forced out of much of the rebound action but Lewis, 6-2, handled the job well.

Maury, mostly on the strength of Robert Moye's 23 points, matched Grifton point-for-point until the final minutes of the last quarter. Both teams had a slow first half but they roared back with all stops pulled in the second portion of the non-conference game.

Girls Game

In the girls game, Grifton's starters ran up a quick and big lead and then retired so that Coach Albert Tyson's reserves could get some experience.

Colleen Braxton led the scoring for the girls with 21 points but she had to share honors with the Buck girls, Peggy and Hilda. Peggy was runner-up in the scoring with 12 points while Hilda turned in an excellent floor game.

Francis May led Maury's scoring for 11 points but she, as well as the other Maury forwards, were seriously hampered in their scoring efforts by Grifton's trio of guards, Louise Corey, Joyce Koon, and Gertrude Garris.

Grifton travels to Belvoir Tuesday for a Pitt County Conference game.

Mississippi Gov. Blasts Officials

JACKSON, Miss. (UP) — Gov. Hugh White of Mississippi has appealed to Southeastern Conference officials over what he termed "the worst officiating I have ever seen" at Thursday's Mississippi-Georgia Tech Sugar Bowl game.

"In my judgment I witnessed the worst officiating that I have ever seen... at the Sugar Bowl game," White telegraphed to Bernie Moore, commissioner of the Southeastern Conference. "I am surprised that the Southeastern Conference tolerates such officiating."

The governor sent a similar telegram to George Gardner, head of conference officials.

White rebuked a fair catch decision, in which Mississippi was penalized for hitting a Tech player who made a fair catch signal, and also pointed out a first period play in which officials ruled that Wilson Dillard had been stopped on Tech's four-inch line.

"If we are going to have clean sports," White said, "the colleges are going to have to wake up to what's going on."

Boxing Feature Will Be Scramble For Middle Title

Olson, Turpin Top Contenders

NEW YORK (UP)—Harry Markson, managing director of the International Boxing Club, said today the scramble for the vacant middleweight crown unquestionably will be a feature of boxing this year.

He pointed out that the middleweight class "now has a greater number of high caliber fighters than any other division." The 160-pound class is the livest of all.

Sugar Ray Robinson "really started something" when he gave up the title and retired from the ring on Dec. 18 so that he could concentrate on nightclub work, Markson added.

Lew Burston, head of the IBC's Foreign Department, will return next week from Europe, where he has been negotiating with Randy Turpin of England and Charles Humez of France.

Burston has been trying to convince ex-champion Turpin and Humez that it would be to their advantage financially if they came to the United States and participated here in the tournament to determine a successor to Robinson.

Turpin, the No. 1 contender, and Humez, the No. 3, had previously indicated they preferred to fight it out in Europe for the right to a shot at the final surviving American contender.

At any rate, Markson and promoter Jim Norris of the IBC plan that the new champion will emerge from a big outdoor bout in June, probably at New York. It is expected that either Turpin or Humez will be one of the principals.

Because of the large number of American contenders, Markson said the U. S. semifinals and final may be slated for 15 rounds to leave no uncertainty about the ultimate American survivor.

Right now, Carl (Bobo) Olson of Hawaii would be favored to win the American tourney. He is rated second among the world's middleweight, just beneath Turpin.

Olson, incidentally, had been matched to fight ex-champion Jake LaMotta at San Francisco on Jan. 26; but that show was cancelled after LaMotta's kayo by Danny Nardico at Miami Wednesday night. The IBC would like to use Olson in New York soon.

Meanwhile, the IBC will start the eliminations rolling next Friday night when Ralph (Tiger) Jones of Yonkers, N. Y., and Rocky Castellani of Luzerne, Pa., meet in a television 10-rounder at Madison Square Garden.

Markson and matchmaker Billy Brown are trying to pair Bobby Jones of Oakland, Calif., and Willie Troy of Washington for St. Nicholas Arena Jan. 23. Jones recently lost a disputed, split 10-round decision to Olson.

Carolina Loses Promising Cagers

CHAPEL HILL (UP) — Highly-touted sophomore Paul Anisko has been dropped from the University of North Carolina basketball squad for "violating discriplinary rules," university athletic officials said today.

Forward Jack Powell, a freshman from High Point, was dropped from the squad for "academic deficiencies," and is leaving school, officials added.

Anisko, a 20-year-old transfer from Villanova, became eligible over the Christmas holidays. He saw brief action at guard for the Tar Heels in the Dixie Classic this week.

Anisko, a promising guard, will remain at the university, although his case may be considered by the student council. The nature of his "disciplinary violations" was not disclosed.

ECC Will Dedicate New Gym In Tuesday Night Ceremony

Dedication plans for East Carolina College's new Health and Physical Education Building were completed today by college officials. The brief ceremonies are scheduled for 8 p.m. Tuesday night, immediately preceding a basketball game between East Carolina and the University of North Carolina.

Dr. John D. Messick, president of East Carolina, will preside at the ceremonies and will present distinguished guests. The principal speaker will be Dr. Oliver K. Cornwell, professor of physical education and director of physical education for men at UNC.

The program will include music by the East Carolina College band under the direction of Herbert L. Carter; vocal selections by the Varsity Men's Glee Club, conducted by Dr. Kenneth Cuthbert; and the invocation by Dr. Robert L. Holt, director of religious activities at the college. Mrs. James L. White of the college music faculty will sing the National Anthem to conclude the ceremonies.

The new gym is being dedicated to the memory of John B. Christenbury, East Carolina College coach on leave to the armed forces at the time of his death in World War II, and to alumni of the college who gave their lives while in the service of their country. Dr N. M. Jorgenson is head of the physical education department and director of activities in the building.

The new gymnasium was opened in July 1952 with an informal reception and aquatic show. Classes were held during the second term of summer school but the facilities were not completely brought into use until the fall term of the current school year.

Construction of the building was begun in the summer of 1951. The modern brick structure faces East Tenth Street and is located on the East campus, adjacent to the college stadium. It is connected to the remainder of the campus by recently completed drives.

There are seating accommodations for 2,397 spectators in the gymnasium. These include 525 permanent seats in the balcony, 1,008 stationary folding seats, and 864 removable folding seats which can be reversed in position to accommodate spectators at aquatic events.

The swimming pool—the first ever at the college — adjoins the main gymnasium and is separated from it by metal sliding doors. The pool measures 35 feet by 75 feet and is tiled in a design of white, green, and black. Skylights admit natural light but there is additional underwater lighting.

Equipment in the building is of the most modern and up-to-date design. There are facilities for all standard physical education courses.

Formerly, the Wright Building served the health and physical education department but crowded conditions and inadequate equipment hampered the work of both instructors and students.

College Cagers In Action

NEW YORK (UP) — College basketball activity steps up tonight after the New Year's interlude as 12 of the country's top 20 quintets see action.

The top game of the night sends 15th-ranked DePaul against 20th-ranked St. Louis with the winner certain to acquire national prestige. DePaul's Blue Devils "practiced" for the big meeting Friday night with a 83-69 victory over Taylor of Upland, Ind., as guard Ron Feiereisel scored 22 points.

First-ranked Illinois is idle but second-ranked La Salle, apparently back on the beam after its brief slump, opposes Wake Forest, a 22-point victor over 10th-ranked Holy Cross in the Dixie Classic.

In the Big Ten, powerful Minnesota takes on Northwestern and Ohio State meets Michigan State while Purdue faces Illinois. Other games involving top fives are: Brigham Young vs. Utah State, UCLA vs. California, North Carolina State vs. Cincinnati, Fordham vs. Dayton, Washington vs. Oregon, St. Bonaventure vs. Western Kentucky and Seton Hall vs. Lemoyne.

Fordham, fresh from a four-point victory over Duquesne, is striving to build a national reputation despite the fact that it is one of the New York colleges which does not participate in Madison Square Garden games. The Rams were lightly regarded when the season began but have reeled off eight straight victories and last week were ranked 19th in the country by the United Press Board of Coaches.

An impressive victory over Dayton could give the Rams a national reputation for the first time in almost a decade.

Friday night St. Francis of New York rode roughshod over Amherst, 68-36; Tampa upset Georgia Tech, 64-58; Mississippi beat Arizona, 75-70; Clemson topped William and Mary, 81-71; John Carroll defeated Valparaiso, 70-69 and Utah whipped Colorado State, 77-52.

On the Pacific Coast, California sprang a 72-68 upset on 11th-ranked UCLA and fourth-ranked Washington defeated Oregon, 79-73. The same teams meet again tonight.

North-South Seniors Meet Today

CHARLEY MALOY
. . . North Quarterback . . .

JACK LEWIS
. . . Wake Forest End . . .

MOBILE, Ala. (UP)—Jack Scarbath, Maryland's All-America quarterback, today took the unfamiliar role of an underdog as he led a Rebel squad against a slightly favored North team in the fifth annual Senior Bowl.

Scarbath piloted Maryland's talented team to 22 straight wins before being knocked off the undefeated perch and although the Terps were twice defeated this season, they were always favored.

Scarbath again will be working with plenty of talent, including halfback Ed Mioduszewski of William and Mary, Buddy Sutton of Arkansas and fullback Leroy Labat of Louisiana State.

The tricky split T operator will also have fine targets for his passes in teammate Lloyd Colteryahn, Vanderbilt's Ben Roderick and Jack Lewis of Wake Forest.

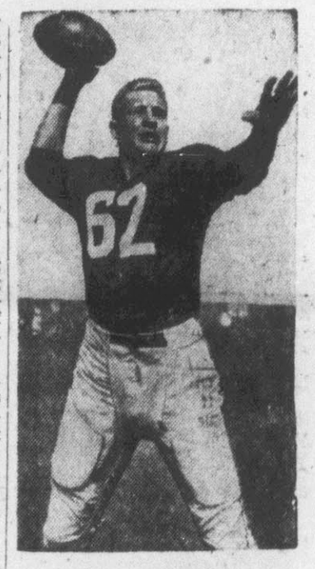

However, the North team, coached by Paul Brown, figures to beat Coach Steve Owen's Rebel charges according to the oddsmakers.

The North can also fill the air with some well-aimed passes since both Harry Agganis of Boston University and Holy Cross' Charley Maloy are ready for action.

However, the North's greatest strength could be on the ground with halfbacks Don McAuliffe of Michigan State, and Fred Bruney of Ohio State, forrming a dangerous running game. Indiana's Gene Gedman will handle the line plunging duties for the Yankees.

Coach Brown figures on making it two in a row for the North. The Yankees won, 20-7, last year, but before that the Rebels had taken three in a row.

Scarbath will be working with two other teammates besides Colteryahn. Coach Owen said that center Tom Cosgrove and tackle Dick Modzelewski, both of Maryland, will be in his starting offensive line.

FIRST CENTER TO WIN

DURHAM—When Capt. Lou Tepe of Duke won the Jacobs Blocking Trophy as the Southern Conference's best blocker this past football season, he became the first center in the history of the trophy to win it.

Bucs Scout UNC For Tuesday Game

East Carolina College's basketball Pirates went through a two-hour workout this afternoon and then took off for Chapel Hill where they will be spectators at tonight's Southern Conference clash between the University of North Carolina and the University of Maryland. The Pirates will play host to Carolina on Tuesday night when they dedicate their new gymnasium.

The Bucs have been working out at least once a day every day this week in an effort to retain the touch which brought them convincing victories in three pre-Christmas outings. Their last actual game was against Catawba on December 16 and resulted in an 80-65 win for the Pirates.

No line-up changes are expected to be made by Coach Howard Porter of the Pirates but the Tar Heels Frank McGuire has already been forced into a couple and there is a possibility of even further change before the twice-defeated Tar Heels get here Tuesday night. Forward Jack Wallace has been counted out of action for the Tar Heels because of an appendectomy. He was replaced by 6-9 Paul Likens. Fuzzy Lifson moved in at guard over the holidays after sitting out an academic suspension and turned in 47 points in three games in the Dixie Classic. Lifson, co-captain Vince Grimaldi, and freshman forward Jerry Vayda lead the Carolina scoring with Grimaldi sitting on top of the heap with 117 points in seven games.

The Pirates will counter the Carolina high scorers with a trio of their own. Forward Sonny Russell has scored 71 points in three games. Center Bobby Hodges has 47 in two contests and forward Charlie Huffman has 40 in three. In addition, all three are top defensive men with Hodges the club leader in rebounds even though he has played in only two of the three East Carolina games.

There are a few tickets remaining for the first basketball meeting of the two schools. They are on sale in the athletic office at East Carolina.

Aussies Enroute To Los Angeles For Tennis Debut

SYDNEY, Australia (UP) — Australian tennis stars Frank Sedgman and Ken McGregor left by plane early today for Los Angeles, where they will make their professional debuts next Tuesday.

The Aussies, who agreed to turn pro after leading their team to victory over the U. S. in the Davis Cup challenge round, are scheduled to arrive in California on Sunday and will start practicing immediately for a year's tour of six countries.

Sedgman, serving as spokesman on their departure, said he and McGregor are in top form for the tour.

Floyd P. Harris
With LUTZ & SCHRAMM

For the past thirteen years I have been growing cucumbers for several different companies. It has been my pleasure to work with Demain Foods of Ayden, N. C. for the past four years. Now that they have sold to Lutz & Schramm, which is one of the larger companies, I feel that we have the best opportunity that has ever been offered to the cucumber growers of Eastern Carolina. Do not be misled about your seed. Pickling companies are not seed companies. We get our seed from the associated seed growers; the Model Variety which is a very nice green cucumber that is earlier than many other varities. The following stations operating for Lutz & Schramm will be glad to contract and buy your cucumbers.

HOUSTON, Tex. UP — Detectives at first thought the $350 burglary at the office of the Boilermakers' Union resulted in a net profit of only $100 to the thieves because they left behind a $250 set of tools. They changed their minds when the Houston Trailer & Truck Body Service Co., reported the tools had been stolen there the same night.

The Taj Mahal is said to have cost 15 million dollars.

Subway Nap Has Legal Go-Ahead

1 1 UP18 Jan. 3 V450a

NEW YORK UP) — This city's army of "strap-hangers," otherwise known as subway riders, had good news today. They can take a snooze in a subway train without being arrested now.

Magistrate J Irwin Shapiro dismissed charges Friday against two middle-aged men arrested at 5 a.m. by a transit policeman for sleeping in a subway train. It seems there's no law against it.

"If the transit police think it is an offense to sleep in a subway car they should have the legislature so declare before they start making arrests on that ground," Sharpiro said.

Capitol Square

of Revenue than with the elected Auditor and Treasurer—and in many ways the revenue man has a harder job.

COMPARATIVE — Casual study of North Carolina's State Government structure indicates there are three appointive officials who have more actual power than any elective officers except the Governor—and possibly the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. They are the Chairman of the Highway and Public Works Commission, the Commissioner of Revenue and the Assistant Director of the Budget. The appointed Controller of the State Board of Education outranks the elected Superintendent of Public Instruction in real authority over the school system. It is doubted that any elective officer other than the Governor and members of the Supreme Court have as much control over the daily activities of North Carolina citizens as does the appointed Utilities Commission.

STUDY — These and numerous other factors should be carefully studied by a competent group as the basis for adjusting compensation in line with duties, responsibilities and performances of the men who have been chosen, in one way or another, to direct the State goverment.
