New Year Holiday Traffic Deaths Are Slowly Rising

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS The nation's motorists wheeled cautiously into 1957 today bearing another new record for holiday traffic deaths. Despite a "gratifying" safety showing so far in the current holiday, the combined Christmas-New Year toll hit an all-time high and was still climbing.

The new combined record was largely due to the all time high Christmas toll of 706. Traffic deaths over the long New Year holiday were lagging far behind that rate, prompting safety officials to express gratification over the safer showing.

Christmas weekend. An Associated Press tally made for comparative purposes showed 500 persons died in traffic accidents during a nonholiday four-day weekend period from Friday, Dec. 14 through midnight Tuesday, Dec. 18.

N. C. Road Toll Down Last Year

Moderate Reversal Of National Trend; More Injured Than During 1955

RALEIGH (AP)—There were fewer deaths on North Carolina's highways last year than in 1955. As the new year rolled in at midnight last night, figure of the State Highway Patrol showed a total of 1,096 deaths for 1956.

Even with the reduction, the 1956 highway death toll was more than 100 higher than the 1954 figure of 991. Col. J. R. Smith, patrol commander, was pleased at the reduction, but was "disappointed it was not greater."

President Lays Middle East Plan Before Congressional Leaders Today

WASHINGTON (AP)— President Eisenhower lays his new Middle East plan for blocking Red expansion before congressional leaders today amid signs he intends to press for swift action.

With some opposition already developing, three influential Senate Democrats proposed United Nations police action as an alternative to Eisenhower's Middle East plan.

Secretary of State Dulles was understood to have prepared an hour-long explanation of the reasons the administration now considers the double-barreled plan.

Dulles explained to U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold in New York yesterday that the American plan was aimed at reinforcing United Nations efforts to re-open the Suez Canal and end Arab-Israeli rivalry.

Col. Smith pointed out that the death reduction last year of about 6 per cent was achieved in the face of 10 per cent boost in travel, a 5 per cent increase in motor vehicles and a 3 per cent increase in the number of drivers registered in the state.

N. C. Strikes Snag On Interstate Highways

RALEIGH (AP)— The interstate highway program in North Carolina has hit a snag because of difficulties over control of access.

Highway Chairman A. H. Graham said yesterday that North Carolina was moving along with its interstate highway program at a very good pace until the U.S. Bureau of Public Roads applied the brakes.

During 1956 99 dwellings, 11 apartments and one boys dormitory were authorized by the building inspector. Permits were issued for 25 commercial buildings.

For the past fifteen months he has been commanding officer of Jet Fighter Squadron One Ninety-Four which has just completed an extensive tour of duty in the Far East aboard the attack carrier USS Oriskany.

His next assignment is that of United States Naval Attache and United States Naval Attache for Air to the Republic of Korea. The couple will be at home in Seoul after January 1.

Reception At Officers' Club
The reception was held immediately after the ceremony at the Alameda Officers' Club where decorations featured a Christmas motif.

The wedding cake, center of interest on the bride's table, was four-tiered, the base of which was white carnations.

Topping the cake was a bridal pair in identical dress to Commander and Mrs. Streep, the bride doll's gown being made in Hong Kong at the same time as her own wedding gown.

Tall baskets of white flowers and white burning tapers decorated the reception room.

Pre-Nuptial Events
On December 18, prior to the rehearsal, Commander Streep entertained his attendants at a stag dinner held at the Alameda Officers' Club. They were presented pearl tie tacks by their host.

The maid of honor entertained the bride and bridesmaids at dinner on the same night at the Treasure Island Officers' Club. The bride presented each of her attendants the string of pearls worn in her wedding.

Cmdr. and Mrs. Harold Preston Streep, USN

The 8 p.m. ceremony was performed by Chaplain James Paul, USN, at the Naval Air Station Chapel, Alameda, Calif.

Following the ceremony, the ushers formed the traditional military arch of swords under which Commander and Mrs. Streep left the chapel for the reception at the Alameda Officers' Club.

In the absence of the bride's father, she was given in marriage by Capt. Charles L. Westhofen, USN, the bridegroom's first squadron commander and more recently commanding officer of the attack carrier Oriskany on which he has just completed assignment.

The bride's gown was made by Mohans of Hong Kong of heavy Chinese satin, covered by French chantilly lace. Designed with long torso with full flare from the knee to floor, it featured a scalloped neckline, long pointed sleeves and chapel train.

Her headpiece was of matching material made by Kobrau of Japan and from fell a veil of imported French illusion.

Carrying out the theme of her birth month, she wore a string of pearls, gift of the bridegroom, and carried long stemmed red happiness roses in an arm bouquet symbol of purity and love.

Miss Nina Belle Redditt, sister of the bride, was maid of honor.

She wore a gown of white Chinese silk with a bandeau of matching material made by Kobrau of Japan. Wearing wrist length white gloves and a string of pearls given by the bride, she carried a hand corsage of red roses.

The bridesmaids were gowned like the honor attendant with identical accessories, carrying out the red and white color note. All based in San Francisco with Pan American Airways, they were Miss Dorothy Olsen, Miss Mary Gutierrez and Miss Pat Guibransen.

AP Newsfeatures
It's 1957 and you should feel a year older even if your birthday was in December. It's "psychological," say the 19-year-olds; "practical" claim the 16-year-olds who want to feel older.

If you've been on the fence about resolutions, not trusting yourself to keep them, because perhaps they're too strict for poor little-you, here's a set—suggested by one who has tried—that can't help but intrigue you into a course of action. After all . . .

1. You want to be popular . . . so observe all the ethics involved in social antics. Avoid gossiping about your best friend or trying to snatch her beau.

2. Stress the chic look . . . dress to your age, let the other girl wear the plunging front or back neckline.

3. Emphasize the ladylike appearance . . . speak in a low voice, tone down your makeup.

4. Be agreeable . . . try to be kind to your roommate at school, Els at home or perhaps a friend you live with. Avoid the terse reply, snappy rebuttal or argumentative sequence that causes real tiffs.

5. Be unselfish . . . give your family more of your time if they want it. Don't be so overwhelmed with outside duties and chores that you never see your parents except at mealtime.

6. Be helpful . . . lend a hand to others less likely to succeed mentally, physically, morally, financially. It'll make you feel better if you can learn to be kind to others.

7. Be a "Faithful Date" . . . this one is suggested by a young man who says he's dated many a girl who has spent the evenings with another guy. Stay at your own table, dance with your own partner, unless you pre-arrange your dances with him, avoid ogling the other girl's date. Make your date feel you are enjoying the evening.

8. Learn to say thank you . . . It doesn't come easy to young moderns, but thank the boy (not gushily) for that delightful time you had with him, thank Dad or Mom for their efforts in your behalf, and learn to write thank-you notes for gifts.

9. Be beauty conscious . . . no matter how the party season presses you, make sure you get enough sleep, eat three solid meals every day, avoiding excess starches, sweets and other foods that may

Insurance Rates Go Up On Extended Coverage

RALEIGH (AP)—It will cost more for extended coverage insurance in North Carolina, effective today.

A rate increase averaging 11.9 per cent and amounting to a total of $788,000 a year in premium value has been approved by Insurance Commissioner Charles F. Gold. The increase, requested by the North Carolina Fire Insurance Rating Bureau, resulted from hurricane damage in 1954 and 1955.

Gold announced yesterday he also had granted the bureau's request for a $50 deductible on windstorm losses. The policyholder will pay the first $50 of any major damage and any small losses under $50.

Gold also approved the bureau's request for a new rating zone in the state and to exclude the radio-tv antenna coverage from the extended coverage form. Antenna coverage will cost $5 in the 16-county coastal zone, $4 in the central zone and $3 in the western zone.

In the past, there have been only two rating zones, the coastal and the inland territory. The latter has been divided. The counties of Caswell, Almanac, Chatham, Moore and Scotland form the dividing line. Those counties and the ones eastward to the coastal zone are in the central zone, with the counties to the westward in the western zone.

The extended coverage rate on dwellings will increase from 14 to 20 cents per $100 in the coastal zone. The rate on farm barns increases from 27 cents to 40 cents. The dwelling rate in the central zone goes up from eight to 11 cents and the barn rate from 23 to 32 cents. The dwelling rate will remain unchanged at eight cents in the western zone and the barn rate at 23 cents.

Over A Score Of Churches Burned This Past Year

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
More than a score of the nation's churches were destroyed or damaged by fire during 1956. The loss ran into millions of dollars. Arson was blamed in several cases.

Destruction by fire yesterday of Hartford's historic St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Cathedral, largest in Connecticut, wound up the year of mysterious church fires. There was a suspicion that the Hartford fire, second there in Roman Catholic churches in 31 hours, may have been set deliberately.

"They have to be more than coincidence," said Hartford Fire Chief Henry G. Thomas of the fire at St. Joseph's and a blaze Sunday that destroyed St. Patrick's Church about a mile away. The damage to St. Joseph's Cathedral was estimated at five million dollars. Damage to St. Patrick's was placed at $250,000. Hartford police held one man for questioning.

Trenton, N.J., was hardest hit by church fires during the year. Elber C. Lucas pleaded guilty Dec. 19 to setting five fires, including a $3 million dollar blaze that killed three persons at St. Mary's Cathedral.

He also was accused of setting a $200,000 fire in the First Methodist Church of Trenton plus smaller fires in three other churches. Theodore Pravda, a second Trenton arsonist, pleaded guilty Dec. 22 to starting fires in a synagogue, a Roman Catholic church and a Ukrainian Orthodox church on Dec. 20.

Church fires from unknown causes also occurred during the month of December in three other sections of the country. At Cambridge, Mass., flames engulfed St. John the Evangelist Roman Catholic church Dec. 8. The loss was placed at a million dollars.

In Springfield, Ill., a fire in the Sunday school house of the First Methodist Church led police to suspect arson. An earlier fire there did $250,000 damage to the First Congregational Church. Again, the cause of the fire was unknown.

An arsonist set fire to altar clothes in St. Victor's Roman Catholic Church in Monroe, Wis., but escaped. Damage was slight.

Failed Heed Road Block, Wounded

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP)—Four persons returning from a New Year's church service were wounded by gunfire today when their auto ran into a road block set up to trap Irish Republican Army (IRA) extremists.

Police said the driver failed to heed warning signals on an "unapproved" road near Caledon on the border between Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic.

Two Dead And 15 Hurt In Accident

KENEDY, Tex. (AP)—A trailer tank truck hauling bottled gas swerved to avoid a collision, crashed into a ditch, caught fire and blew up yesterday, killing two persons and injuring 15 others.

Police officer R. B. Schuster said the driver of the auto the truck tried to avoid left the scene and was being sought.

M. M. Comargo of San Antonio, Tex., the truck driver, was trapped in the flaming cab and burned to death. Mrs. Robert Blomsted, 22, an expectant mother, was killed by a jagged piece of the truck blown more than 2,000 yards.

Four firemen and 11 spectators were burned by the explosion. Five were hospitalized overnight. Schuster said a car came out of a cross street and the truck driver swerved, hit a traffic island and crashed into a ditch. A fire broke out in the cab.

Firemen arrived and spectators gathered, but were unable to rescue Comargo. About 10 minutes after the crash the truck exploded. "Bright red flames shot 300 feet into the air and blackened an acre of ground around the scene," Schuster said.

Claim He Duped Scores By Pose As Future Heir

DENVER (AP)—FBI agents jailed Adolph Hecker, 57, and accused him yesterday of posing as an heir to the Coors Brewery Co. fortune in a fraudulent scheme that netted him $150,000 in the past 20 years.

The FBI also arrested and charged Charles A. Bowles, 73, of Denver, and Neita J. Sharp, 65, of Elgin, Neb., with aiding Hecker. Both claimed they were innocent dupes and thought themselves that Hecker was the heir.

Webb Burke, head of the Denver office of the FBI, said Hecker used the name of Adolph Coors Hecker. He said Hecker, a native of Longmont, Colo., was arrested at Cheyenne, Wyo., and released on $20,000 property bond.

Burke said Hecker duped scores of victims in Colorado and Wyoming by promising liberal rewards for financial contributions in his efforts to settle a fictitious family estate. Burke said Hecker had no connection with the Coors family.

The Days Of '57 Offer Opportunity

At the outset of this new year it is proper for Eastern North Carolina to give itself a gift which will enable the section to maintain its rightful place in North Carolina's economy.

All of Eastern North Carolina can join together in a concentrated effort to develop industrial potential, natural and water resources, and its place between the industrial Northeast and the fast-developing Southwest. It can make itself into something other than an agricultural province, dependent upon tobacco, and an economic liability with its vast numbers of tenant farmers and drifting workers.

In 1957 all of Eastern North Carolina would do well to forget community and county differences which have plagued it for decades, and pledge to work together for the common good. Some progress has already been made in the Mid-East Airport Authority situation and in the formation of an area industrial development group. Progress also is being made by individual counties and cities in creating industrial development programs of their own.

There is still room for much closer cooperation, however. Communities and counties must lay aside petty jealousies if they are to catch the vision of the benefits which an area airport will bring to all of Eastern North Carolina and thereby bring each individual community greater benefits than purely selfish effort can produce. Communities, counties and individuals who are half-hearted in their backing of industrial development of the area would do well to realize that Eastern North Carolina has reached the point where it can no longer ignore the truth that the welfare of an individual is the welfare of the entire section.

The days of 1957 offer Eastern North Carolina a rare opportunity to a higher, more stable economy which will benefit all its people. The section must choose to accept or reject the opportunity which presents itself. Its choice will determine the future of the area.

Magazines Might, Newspapers Aren't

By LYNN NISBET

NEWSPAPERS — With national magazines folding up and going out of business at the rate of one or two a month, it is interesting to note that the daily newspaper publishing business continues to grow. It is a five billion dollar industry.

It is true that some newspapers have folded, but in nearly every instance it was because of consolidation. In other cases the result was increased circulation for established papers.

U. S. Census figures for 1954, latest year for which they are available, showed 8,646 concerns publishing newspapers and employing 281,799 persons with aggregate payrolls of $1,262,793,000. Gross business that year passed the three billion dollar mark for the first time. Since then many hundreds of millions have been invested in improved plants and equipment, with consequent increase in employment and payrolls. Revenue for 1956 is estimated at more than $5 billion.

The Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Association and the Advertising Agency Magazine have compiled some interesting information in the form of questions and answers.

This tabulation shows last year 56 million copies of newspapers were sold daily in the United States. That was more than packs of cigarettes or loaves of bread. For these papers the people paid $3,195,000 a day, $25,300,000 a week for a total of $1,315,642,000 for the year.

Surveys over a period of three years prove that newspaper reading is as popular in the summer as the winter. The Continuing Study of Newspaper Reading, a cooperative project, shows that median readership of the average newspaper page with news and advertising is 64 per cent by men, 73 per cent by women. Women rank advertising first in interest, men rank it third, just ahead of sports.

Daily newspapers have maintained supremacy in the news disseminating and advertising fields against competition from magazines, radio and television and all other media. A study by Cunningham & Walsh, one of the biggest advertising agencies, shows that newspapers alone of all major media were unaffected by the advent of TV in the American home. McCann-Erickson, another giant in the advertising agency field, reports that in 1955 newspaper advertising amounted to more than three billion dollars — exceeding combined receipts of TV, radio, magazines and outdoor media.

More of this revenue has been "plowed back" into improved services and more modern buildings and equipment. More than $700 million was added to capital investment in newspaper plants during the past four years. A substantial part of this amount went to provide facilities for color printing.

TARIHELEIA — North Carolina publishers have kept abreast, or a little ahead, of the rest of the country in modernizing newspaper equipment. Nearly every paper has improved facilities. Complete listing has not been attempted, but some of the major projects include: for 1956:

An ultra-modern million dollar building for the News and Observer and Raleigh Times; new printing and press for the Greenville Reflector; same for the Washington Daily News and the Statesville Record & Landmark; a building annex and new press for the Morganton News-Herald, which entered the daily field.

A bit older but still new are the modern plants with adequate press facilities of the Lexington Dispatch and the Sanford Herald. Within a five year period the Concord Tribune, Goldsboro News-Argus, Wilson Times and other papers have expanded and modernized their plants.

NON-DAILIES — All of the foregoing data deals with daily newspapers. While it is true that North Carolina is credited with more daily newspapers than any other state when factors of area and population are considered, it is also true that here, to greater degree than in most states, the weekly and semi-weekly newspapers exert tremendous influence.

The 1956 directory of the N.C. Press Association lists 154 non-daily newspapers. Many of them plant equipment and circulation comparable to some of the dailies. They have been as alert to the needs of the times as have any of the big papers.

Where Is Sheila Sawyer?

If Sheila Sawyer who lives somewhere in Pitt County can be contacted before 8:30 a.m. next Sunday she'll have a chance to talk to her family in Wilkshire, England by short wave radio.

That's the word from Jack Edwards, local "ham" operator. Edwards said he recently received a card from a "ham" operator in Shelby, N. C. notifying him that GAHD in Wilkshire, England wanted to talk to him last Sunday morning.

"I met him on schedule and he said he is a good friend of the Hillman family in Wilkshire," Edwards says. "They have a daughter in Greenville who married a Sawyer."

Edwards said the family wants to talk to their daughter via short wave but, says Edwards, "I can't locate her."

The local "ham" operator says he has checked the telephone directory and called all the Sawyers but so far he hasn't been able to locate the English girl.

"I would like to find out if anybody knows her whereabouts," Edwards said.

"Ham" operator Edwards doesn't feel that the England group has the wrong Greenville, as often happens here.

He explains that the Sawyer woman was in England last summer and at that time she told the English "ham" that she could be reached through a Jack Edwards in Greenville.

At any rate Edwards is asking the help of Pitt County people in locating the Sawyer woman. He has an appointment with the Wilkshire "ham" for next Sunday morning at 8:30 and arrangements can be made for the members of the family to talk then.

If she is not located by then, Edwards stated, the English "ham" will make attempts to obtain her address and Edwards then try to find her.

Anyone knowing the whereabouts of the Sawyer woman can call Edwards at 4889 or they can notify the Reflector.

Notebook On Life

Water---Is It Good, Or Bad?

By HAL BOYLE
NEW YORK (AP) — On New Year's morning after the night before many ailing Americans have a sudden personal interest in one of the world's oldest and most common drugs.

It is called water. Some wish to quaff it, hoping to bank an interior fire. Some want to rub in on their wrists, some to douse it on their hair and temples. A few want to crawl under a cool shower and lie there.

Some elders wish merely to sit in a room in which water has been turned to steam as they sweat and ponder the follies of the year past — and their hopes for the year ahead.

Just what is this magic substance, water, which so many people get interested in for a single day? Why do they want to surround it — or it to surround them?

Is water good or bad for the human race? Scientists and bartenders regard it as an essential to normal life. But poets and philosophers disagree as to the importance it should have in a well-run civilization.

A thirsty sufferer might be interested in these varying views: "Water is the best of all things," Pindar, 475 B.C.

"The natural, temperate and necessary beverage for the thirsty is water," Clement of Alexandria.

"The greatest necessity of the soldier is water," Napoleon Bonaparte.

"Water is the only drink for the wise man," H. D. Thoreau.

"Drinking water neither makes a man sick, nor in debt, nor his wife a widow," H. G. Donn, 1855, who apparently never heard of typhoid fever.

Yet the ancient Chinese did. They have a proverb that goes, "What is feared less than fire, yet fewer suffer by fire than by water."

Here are a few other observations by critics of water, who perhaps didn't write them while enjoying a New Year's mal de tete:

"The people of England drink no water save at certain times for penance," John Fortescue, 1462.

"What is a cruel god servant, but it is a cruel master," John Bullein, 1562.

"Water doth very greatly deject the appetite, destroy the natural heat, and overthrow the strength of the stomach, and consequently it is the cause of crudities, fluctuations and windiness in the body," Tobia Venner, 1620.

The quotations in anthologies ranging from those of H. L. Mencken to Burton Stevenson deal with win twice as often as they do with water.

Briefly, to summarize the situation for the thirsty, here are some basic facts about water:

It is a chemical combination of hydrogen and oxygen.

It is essential to life.

It is the most abundant substance on earth.

It is the most common solvent.

It is the most common preservative.

It is the most common nutrient.

It is the most common preservative.

It is the most common nutrient.

It is the most common preservative.

It is the most common nutrient.

Security? SAC Is Rugged

AP Newsteatures
Are you planning to break into one of the U.S. Air Force Strategic Air Command bases?

Take a little advice: Don't try it.

Any attempt to sabotage a SAC base, home of the atom and hydrogen bombers, faces million to one odds of failure. At the very least, you will wind up stark naked with a rifle butt in your teeth five minutes after you try to slip in. And if the guards don't get you, vicious sentry dogs will.

They're ready for you. Really ready. For SAC is at war already and they trust no man — not even their own.

Security is more than a word with the Strategic Air Command — it's a way of life. It's a daily program.

Practice alerts at all hours of the day and night are commonplace — and the men alerted by pyramidal phone calls never know if it is a practice affair or the real thing.

Phones ring at 4 a.m. Doors slam. Tires squeal as colonels, majors, sergeants and airmen race to wake others in a pyramiding alert, then dash for the base to stand by on duty for five, ten or more hours, as planes take off on mysterious missions.

But that isn't the whole story — it's only part of it. Gen Curtis E. LeMay's Strategic Air Command goes to fantastic lengths to be sure their bases are safe from infiltration and sabotage. The stories of their daily exercises in security read like a cloak and dagger thriller — yet they are true.

SAC bases this very minute live under the security restrictions of war-time Officers and men wear I.D. cards on their shirts and blouses. Areas to which a man may be admitted are defined. If someone thoughtlessly crosses a line to a zone where he doesn't belong he's arrested instantly — and not-always pleasantly.

"I stepped over a line once," a sergeant said. "I didn't belong there. I just wasn't thinking. Before I knew what had happened two air policemen grabbed me by each arm and hustled me off to an interrogation room."

"They stripped me naked; broke my pencil and pen in two (searching for tiny but patent thermite bombs), and stood me against a wall — those guys don't care who you are if they catch you in an area where you don't belong."

An Air Force man in charge of a security patrol in a very hush-hush zone said he had specific orders to do that.

"One of my men caught an officer in the area. The man wasn't cleared for the zone and had no business being there. The officer started to pull rank — give my airman a bad time. He got a rifle butt slammed into him and we hauled him away. Orders are orders and we're playing for keeps."

The officer tried to prefer charges against the guard for assaulting a superior. The charges were dropped and the airman got a commendation.

Intelligence agents from Washington keep base security forces on their toes by sending teams around the country to try to sneak into SAC bases. They go to fantastic lengths in their spy-practice.

At one base they bought an old laundry truck from a firm that had been using it for pickup and delivery on the base. They got in to the base and planted rolled-up sheets of paper on a half-dozen B47 jet atom bombers.

Next day the team returned — officially — and took the base commander and the base provost marshal on a tour and showed them the "bombs" they'd planted.

The provost marshal, so the story goes, was transferred in 24 hours.

Infiltration exercises by intelligence agents have gotten SAC base security men to a high peak of efficiency. They no longer even trust their own mothers.

And it has now become a game — a deadly game — between intelligence men and SAC guards.

"We don't take any chances," a security man said. "If there is anything funny about a guy, he's in for trouble."

He grinned. "And if we think he's an American intelligence agent trying to sneak in, he's in even worse trouble."

It Can't Happen Here? Well, Let's Be Sure

People across the nation who have viewed the disastrous Malibu brush fire with an attitude of "it can't happen here" had better take stock of their own situation and their own community.

Ten days ago people in the scorched Malibu area would have phoo-phooed any suggestion that a raging brush fire would sweep over almost 50,000 acres and destroy almost a 100 homes and buildings in its path. They would have scorned suggestions that they would be forced to flee their homes in the face of a blaze which could rage out of control for almost a week.

Now they know it can happen to them. How many other communities from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic could be faced with a similar disaster almost any moment?

North Carolina has suffered devastation of thousands of acres of valuable timber land annually. Now and then a home is threatened or destroyed by forest fires. Fortunately, however, this state has not been faced with the same situation which threatened residents of Malibu Township.

But it could happen here. And it might happen here.

Not many weeks ago several thousand North Carolinians gathered in Raleigh at the request of Gov. Hodges to consider the seriousness of forest fires in this state. Put before these representatives from every community was a program designed to bring about greater public efforts to prevent such disastrous blazes.

Unless the people of North Carolina intensify their efforts to prevent forest fires in their own communities, we might find the Malibu Township disaster repeated not once but several times in our own state. It is worth a great deal of effort to make sure "it can't happen here".

Around And Around We Go...Getting Nowhere

Tentative U. S. proposals to "fill the vacuum" of power in the Middle East, as thus far revealed, sound dreamlike and at odds with the hard, cold facts of existing conditions.

We are given to understand the President wants Congress to give him discretionary powers in the use of troops to oppose Soviet aggression in the Mid-East.

In reality, the prospects of direct Soviet aggression comprise little or no threat in that area. Russia can, and is applying an indirect approach toward gaining either control of the Middle East or, at least depriving the West of its main resources. In general, the Arab states are already aligned against the West; leaving the Communists only the task of currying favor and fanning the flames of unrest.

We are given to understand that some 400 million dollars would be doled out, to countries from Gibraltar to the Arabian Sea. Or, to put it another way, we would be trying to buy up $400,000,000 worth of Arab friendship by outbidding Russia. Who can buy "friends"?

To be coldblooded, it isn't Middle East friendships the West needs. It's free passage of the Suez Canal and reasonable access to the oil in that area.

The carefully prepared news releases of the proposed "Eisenhower Doctrine" do not yet offer solutions to the real issues.

Other Editors Are Saying... Guilty Can Judge Themselves

(The Charlotte News)

The well-helmeted head of big-time athletics in North Carolina is bloody but unbowed.

A stinging rebuke by the National Collegiate Athletic Association and swift punishment by the Atlantic Coast Conference have failed to evoke even the most elementary manifestations of guilt or shame among the current caretakers of North Carolina's basketball and football dynasties.

North Carolina State College has been publicly spanked by the NCAA and fined by the ACC because of the Jackie Moreland case. The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill has been compelled to forfeit nine football games because of the Vince Olenik case (of the nine it had won two, tied one).

Seldom, however, has individual virtue been so loudly proclaimed.

"It is not we who are bad," athletic officials seem to be saying. "It is 'the system.'"

Thus, there are no guilty ones. There are only victims of "the contagion of the times."

This is, of course, nonsense of the most outrageous and illusory sort.

Colleges who engage in dishonorable practices in recruiting athletes are victims of nothing more than their own bad deeds. Moral lapses cannot be excused merely because immorality is currently popular or particularly profitable.

Nor can some mystic moral climate called "the system" be recipient of all collective blame for the deeds of individual institutions.

After all, the individual institutions create "the system."

To maintain that there is no guilt is to maintain that there have been no misdeeds, that there have been no under-the-table deals, that young athletes have not lied and cheated to receive certain benefits, that coaches and alumni groups have not applied improper pressures.

To maintain that "the system" is to blame is to maintain that individual institutions are powerless to plot their own destinies, that they share in the dubious benefits of "the system" but none of the responsibilities.

Of course, "the system" is not going to be reformed until the colleges who create it reform. It will require individual initiative and a sense of individual responsibility on the part of the guilty institutions.

The NCAA and the ACC by periphrastic finger-waving and wrist-slapping, cannot perform this miracle. Only the culprits can do that. They can start by admitting that they were wrong, that the situation is bad and that something is going to be done to remedy it.

Then "the system" will take care of itself.

BACK THE ATTACK on Traffic Accidents

By ELMER RESSNER
On the other hand — That's the counterpart of most business forecasts for 1957. You can bet it will be the counterpart of this one.

There are so many variables and imponderables in the future that only a genius or a fool can make an unequivocal prediction for the new year. Being neither, your correspondent will have frequent recourse to those four cherished words of all business writers: "On the other hand."

However, there are a few things that seem fairly certain. Let's proceed from the known to the unknown in this fashion: There will be considerably more inflation in 1957.

LONG AND SHORT TERM
We have long-term inflation built into our economy. Money has no real anchor to gold or any other tangible. It is worth what the money-managers say it is worth. Most of the time they will try to make it worth as much tomorrow as it is today. Sometimes they will be tempted to make it worth less; rarely will they be persuaded to make it worth more, because that's unpopular with so many groups who have so many votes.

The rate of inflation has been slower under the Eisenhower Administration than it was between 1933 and his inauguration. However, the trend, though weakened, was still there. Now the Eisenhower Administration has even less control over Congress and since measures conducive to inflation — more aid for farmer, cheaper mortgages for veterans, more cradle-to-grave care of voters — are popular with the loyal opposition, the probabilities of cheapening the dollar more and more are high.

There are probabilities of more inflation in the short-term situation, too. The Federal Reserve Board's action in boosting interest rates may have slowed down the immediate inflationary trend but it does not seem to have stopped it. Furthermore, at the first faint sign of deflation, the Board is likely to reverse itself and lower rates again.

Meanwhile, certain developments of an inflationary nature are sure. More workers than ever before will receive automatic wage increases under contracts already signed. That's a Department of Labor report, not a columnist's guess. It calculates about 5,000,000 workers will get automatic pay rises in 1957. We can assume that millions of others will thereupon demand comparable increases.

Meanwhile, prices of many products are certain to go up to catch up with 1956 rises in raw materials. Many companies have already announced coming price increases. So many were scheduled for the first business day of the year that January 2 might well become known as Up Price Day. Higher freight rates are also having an effect.

TAXES ON THE MOVE, TOO
There's another safe prediction for 1957: Taxes will be higher.

Nobody can tell you for sure whether that will be inflationary or not. In one way, taxes are deflationary, since they take away consumers' power to bid up the price of goods. In another way, they are inflationary, since manufacturers increase the price of their goods, and workers increase the price of their labors, to meet higher tax bills.

But — or de, taxes are sure to go up. Hope-for cuts in Federal taxes will not come — or cuts will be outweighed by increases in other levies.

The Federal government will have to collect more revenue, not only for higher salaries and new ventures in welfare, but to pay for the rising costs of military equipment. As a general rule, a missile that will go twice as far or twice as fast as another will cost four times as much. In general, the cost of weapons has moved and will move up more steadily than almost any other product. Booms are affected by each rise in price of raw materials; the demand is stable, even ceaseless, and constantly rising.

Since the Federal government will require more money, our only hope is that the increase in the number of taxpayers and the rise in personal and corporate incomes will satiate the demand for taxes without a rise in rates.

LOCAL LEVIES, TOO
The enormous demand for more schools, highways, parking facilities, hospitals, housing, welfare payments and, yea, salaries make it a certainty that state and local taxes will go up. Indeed, 1957 may go down in history as the year in which all of us could quit work earlier in the day, because of advances in technology, but had to get up earlier in the morning to earn more for taxes.

The shortage of talented young

Holidays Bring Old Grads Home Again

One of the nicest things about the Christmas holidays is having the former students of Ayden High School return to their hometown. Many college students have taken part in church and social activities during their vacation.

Milton and Melvin Worthington of Columbia Bible College, Columbia, S. C., were home and had as their guests R. J. Kennedy of Columbia S. C. and Greenville, N. C., and Howard Whitaker of Augusta, Ga., also students at Columbia Bible College. Jerry Ballard visited friends here. Students at East Carolina home for the holidays were: Steve Farish, Barbara Griffin, Carolyn Cobbett, Mary Alice Hart, Connie Lou Dunn, Betty Jo Sumrell, Jo Anne Williams and Faye Bowen. Millie Tripp, a student at Duke University; Riley Tripp of State College; Jodi Jolly of Wake Forest; Carol Lynn Johnson, a student at Meredith College; Randall Harrington of Duke University; Kay Braxton, W. C.; Wilbur Jackson and Robert Harris of High Point College; Kemp Edwards of Asbury College, Asbury, Ky.; and Dianne Moseley of Mary Washington, Fredericksburg, Va., were all home for the holidays.

After mid-term exams the students and teachers at Ayden High School have had a much needed vacation.

The following students were tapped into the Beta Club at Ayden High just before school closed for the Christmas holidays: Joyce Jolly, Barry Moore, Liddle Anderson, Jessie McLawhorn, Francine Cannon, Barbara Harris, Barbara Gagnon, Freddie Skinner, Peggy Wood, Jessie Hardee and Susan Ross.

To become a member of the Beta Club a student must be a sophomore and have an average on all subjects of 90 or above.

Conduct and other character traits must be good, also.

After the annual Christmas Concert by the Ayden High School Chorus, Mesdames Curry, Wilbur Worthington, Bob Booth, Clay Stroud, Carl Rouse and Bob Gagnon helped to entertain the members of the chorus and their dates, and their director, Mrs. Rosa J. Little, at a delightful party in the school cafeteria. From a decorated table, Christmas punch, cookies, nuts, mints, and candy were served. Candle light and other traditional Christmas decorations gave the cafeteria a festive air for the occasion.

The Ayden-Winterville Band, under the direction of Mr. Boyd Elliott, marched in the Greenville, Winterville and Ayden Christmas parades, and also gave a Christmas concert in the Winterville High School auditorium before the holidays.

The regular monthly meeting of the Ayden Parent-Teachers Association was held December 13 in the high school auditorium. Mr. Harvey Gwynn, president, presided; Mr. W. L. May, secretary, read the minutes; and Mrs. John Perkins, treasurer, made the treasurer's report. Mr. E. F. Johnson, principal of the Ayden High School, made several announcements and counted the parents present. Five classes had over 100 per cent present. Miss Dixon's seventh grade won the $10-attendance prize.

Mrs. Rosa J. Little, director, presented the Junior Chorus, made up of seventh and eighth graders, in a program of Christmas songs.

One of the outstanding social events of the school year was the Mother-Daughter Banquet given by the Ayden Chapter of the Future Homemakers of America on December 19 in the school cafeteria. The chapter sponsor is Mrs. Jo Ross.

The decorations of evergreens, red berries, pine cones, candles, and arrangements on the tables and on the piano made the setting for the three-course turkey dinner. Each guest was presented a Christmas corsage.

The guests were welcomed and shown to their places by Sandra McLawhorn, chapter vice-president, Mr. E. F. Johnson, principal, gave the invocation. Jessie McLawhorn, chapter reporter, welcomed the guests, and Mrs. Wilbur Harrington, president of the chapter, presided and recognized the following special guests: Mr. D. H. Conley, superintendent of the Pitt County schools, and Mrs. Conley; Mr. E. F. Johnson, principal of Ayden High School, and Mrs. Johnson; Mrs. O. C. Stroud Sr., speaker for the occasion; Mrs. Wilbur Worthington, chairman of the Ayden School Committee, and Mr. Worthington; Mr. W. O. Jolly and Mr. Darrell Jackson, members of the local school committee, and Mrs. Jolly and Mrs. Jackson; Jeannette Worthington, president of the North Carolina Association of the Future Homemakers of America; and Miss Helen Lewis, North Carolina Historian of the Future Homemakers of America, from Red Springs.

Bonnie Rutledge, song leader, sang "What Child Is This?" and led the group in singing Christmas carols. Henrietta Taylor was pianist.

Brownie entertained the group with a humorous Christmas reading, and Jeannette told of some of her experiences as State President.

Annette Dail introduced Mrs. O. C. Stroud Sr. who spoke on the subject "Weaving a Life."

After the banquet many of the girls and their mothers went to the basketball game played on Ayden's home court.

Waitresses for the banquet were: Jackie Harrington, Sue Fort, Carolyn Joyner, Sandra Bullock, Linda Worthington, Daisy Griffith, Janice Wadkins and Judy Smith.

Herb Little, Bob Gagnon and Sonny Harrington have been notified that they are in the running for the Merit Scholarship. They will take the final test in January.

Carolyn Sumrell, a popular member of the Junior Class, was chosen the outstanding citizen at Ayden High School for the month of December. Carolyn is a member of the Tri-Hi-Y, high school chorus, Beta Club, and is also a member of the Tornado girls' basketball team.

Freed On Bond After Charge Of Cross-Burning

HILLSBORO, N. C. (AP) — A 25-year-old man was free on bond today after police charged him with burning a cross in the yard of a home here where United Nations Mediator Frank P. Graham was visiting.

Orange County Sheriff Odell Clayton said William Polk Cheshire admitted burning the cross early Friday in the yard of Mrs. J. C. Webb, Graham's sister-in-law. The sheriff said Cheshire told him he did it as a "prank." Cheshire, who lives nearby, was released under $100 bond. He is expected to face trial in county recorder's court Jan. 7.

Graham is a former president of the University of North Carolina and a former U.S. senator from North Carolina. He is a staunch civil rights advocate. A 1953 General Assembly law makes it unlawful to place a burning or flaming cross on the property of another person without obtaining written permission of the owner or occupier of the premises.

workers will worsen in the coming year. Newcomers in the labor market will be from the low birth-rate years before the war, and the situation will be worsened by the fact that better pension plans will encourage more oldsters to retire.

While some of the pensioners will return to the labor market after they find out how small their pensions are in relation to inflated prices, in general the shortage of qualified workers will persist until the 1960's. This shortage will strengthen unions' demands for higher wages.

Labor scarcities, higher taxes, higher prices and more inflation seem certain during the next 12 months. Now for some on-the-other-hand predictions: The momentum of the current boom will carry over into the first part of 1957. Contracts signed and monies appropriated insure a high rate of construction and spending for new facilities for some months. Income tax cuts, however, will cause a setback in total employment, will continue higher. Retailers' orders generally provide for a high rate of employment in consumer-goods industries, and that insures an amount of prosperity as long as the retailers are able to sell the products, which will be as long as wages and employment holds up.

The Federal Reserve will probably sustain present high interest rates until there is a sign of a downturn. The rates have not yet checked inflationary forces, even if they have slowed them. However, sooner or later the higher rates will take hold. Corporations will begin to postpone expansion plants until money gets cheaper. This will be largely offset, for a while, by state and federal governments which will persist in borrowing money at high rates long after business funds each section un-derstandably, the high rates can slow down public as well as private works; corporations will slough off unprofitable sidelines; a few more people will have difficulty in finding just the jobs they want (although the shortage of young talent will persist), and some families will buy less.

COMES THE DAWN
Somewhere around that time, the Federal Reserve will reverse itself and cheapen money and, unless things have slid too far, business will perk up again.

Meanwhile, we will have recurring problems: demands of our allies for more success, the first demands of World War II veterans for a plus pension system, new threats of war, risks of new Korea, flareups of racial troubles, changes in the Cabinet, new spy plots, more spending for advertising, rising levels of retail sales for a while yet, some worrisome dips in the fall—

On the other hand, I could be wrong. But right or wrong, 1957 will be an exciting, surprising, interesting year. Stick around, folks.

Greenville's Phantoms journey to New Bern tomorrow night for their opening Northeastern Conference basketball game of the 1956-57 season.

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — It was a gloomy day and the prospects were anything but bright for an Oregon State football team that was the best of a rather mediocre lot in the Pacific Coast Conference.

The date was Jan. 3, 1942, 15 years ago and the Beavers of OSC were playing a great Duke University team, one of the finest in the land, in a Rose Bowl game transplanted hurriedly by the World War II crisis to Durham, N.C.

Vance Taylor and Willard White, at forward, have maintained a steady scoring ability that has given Bethel a powerful one-two punch in close, Charles Ward, center, is another high scorer, who is equally important as a rebound man.

Working Combination The key to the strength of the Bethel club lies in the fine coaching of Latham and an assortment of some of the most talented basketesters in the eastern half of the state.

Grifton is next in line with a 4-2 conference mark. Following down the line, the rest of the clubs have played fewer games and won fewer. The post-Christmas loop action will be very important to the reentering clubs, seeking to make things tough for Bethel.

Plenty of Stars Pitt County basketball offers plenty of stars on the girls side of the ledger. For Grifton, a host of returnees from last year's team has given them depth and experience and is responsible for their success thus far.

CHAPTER 15

A man's fist hammered on the door. Stiner rose and, opening it, motioned for the bartender to come in with the tray of assorted liquors and a pitcher of water.

Stiner filled three glasses and pushed two across the table. "When you came down the river, had anything been done on the army post?"

"They were starting to put up a stockade," Jean said.

"Where is it?"

"About eight miles by river below Fort Blaine. Ain't more'n three goin' straight across."

Stiner nodded. "I suppose they'll have time to finish the fort before winter. All right, now I'll talk. We might as well face the fact that our business won't last much longer. More mines being opened up in Montana. More business. Stock raising before long. Farms, maybe."

Stiner leaned forward. "Boys, we might as well take a look at what's ahead. I'm thinking that the army post up there will raise hob with the trading this winter. Soldiers will make hostiles out of the friends every-time."

Jean nodded.

"You boys know the Sioux as well as any two men alive. You've bought a lot of pelts from me from them. It won't be hard to stir them up. Cut Lip, anyway."

"Stir 'em up!" Rene banged his glass down. "You think we want to lose our hair?"

"You won't. If the new post is wiped out this winter, the army will withdraw until they have enough men to handle things. I'll give you five more years, maybe ten. Tell Cut Lip I'm pulling out of the country because the soldiers are driving the tribes west. There's only seventy men up there. Cut Lip could do the job himself just by cutting off hunting parties and getting anybody that tries to reach Blaine."

Jean scowled. He said, "I figure you're finin' to fill your pockets while me and Rene do the work."

Stiner smiled. "Gentlemen, it's work I can't do, so I'm prepared to pay any reasonable amount to get it done. How does five hundred apiece sound?"

The twins stared at him, their dark, high-boned faces very serious, then they had another drink. Jean said, "Double it."

"It's a deal," Stiner said.

August. A brassy and sullen sun unchanged day after day. But fall was at hand and there was still much to be done. This thought was in the mind of every man of the Fifteenth Infantry.

Chad and his crew were done with the hay-cutting; the hay was hauled and stacked beside the stock corral. Randall immediately gave them another job. Wood must be chopped and piled up to dry inside the fort.

"I'm not concerned about the Sioux," Colonel Randall told Chad. "It's the winter we've got to get ready for."

Zack snorted derisively when Chad told him what Randall had said. "So the Cunnel ain't frettin' none about the Sioux. Mebbe we was sent up here to fight the weather, seein' as he's gittin' ready for winter."

Chad grinned as he recalled the remark, then frowned as he glanced down at himself. His rough boots were worn, his blue fatigue uniform showed signs of hard work and dirt, and his sweat-stained campaign hat was battered and shapeless.

Very un-lieutenantlike, Chad thought, but no on was worrying about appearance. Time was running out. The stockade, with its two impressive-looking block-houses, gave the fort a finished look from the outside, but inside there was little that resembled a completed fort.

Colonel Randall's quarters were finished, and a cabin had been thrown together for the laundresses, but Chad's quarters were still unfinished, and progress on the barracks and mess hall seemed very slow.

Chad rested his head against the wall and looked at the azure sky beyond the stockade. He was beginning to like the magnificent distances of this country, its bigness and grandeur. Maybe he was thinking like an Indian, or perhaps he had talked too much to Zack.

"Can't stand being cooped up in this darned corral," Zack admitted to Chad, and there were times when the same feeling hit Chad himself. If he felt that way now, what would it be like by spring?

"Ste-e-eam boat!"

It was the guard in the block-house on the river side of the fort. The cry created no excitement among the men; some of them did not even look up. A number of boats had passed during the summer, but none had stopped since the Miner.

When the guard shouted, "Ste-e-eamboat a-stoppin'," Chad shoved through the stockade gate. A few steps outside, he met Colonel Randall, who was coming up the slope from the mill.

"Looks like we're going to have company, sir," Chad said.

"Seems so, Lieutenant," Randall said. "Take a detail and go down and see what they want."

Chad saluted and went to find his men. A few minutes later, when he reached the bank of the Missouri with his detail, he saw that the boat was the Last Chance, and that several civilians were waiting on shore near the ganplank.

One of the men stepped forward and extended his hand. "I'm Samuel Arbutnot," he said.

"Lieutenant Endicott, sir," Chad said. "Fifteenth Infantry."

Arbutnot was an imposing-looking man, with his sweeping mustache and imperial. Like the other men, he was wearing black broadcloth, a heavy gold watch-chain hanging across his chest, from which dangled an elk-tooth charm.

"Glad to know you, Lieutenant," Arbutnot said. Turning to his companions, he added, "I want you to meet Mr. Wilkins, Mr. Eberly and Mr. Jacobson."

Chad shook hands with them, finding their palms soft and moist. He instinctively disliked them.

"Are you in command of the post, Lieutenant?" Arbutnot asked.

"No," Chad said. "Colonel Randall is my commanding officer. He's at the fort. Do you want to see him?"

"That's why we're here," Arbutnot answered, sounding a little impatient now. "I'll escort you to his quarters," Chad said.

Will Randall welcome the civilians? Don't miss tomorrow's exciting installment of Silent River.

Mob Of Iowans In California

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — You probably could have paved a path from Pasadena to Sioux City with all the Iowans who attended that state's 57th annual picnic.

The crowd sang fight songs of the University of Iowa, today's opponent of Oregon State in the Rose Bowl, and official greetings were extended by Iowa's Gov. Leo A. Hoegh.

New Years Honor List Recognizes Atomic Experts

LONDON (AP) — The traditional New Year's honor list announced today by Queen Elizabeth III gives top recognition to two atomic scientists. Sir John Cockcroft, who is credited with being the first man to split the atom by mechanical means, was awarded the Order of Merit. Britain's most treasured distinction, the order, is limited to 24 living members. Cockcroft is director of Britain's Harwell atomic energy project. Sir Christopher Hinton, key figure in Britain's expanding atomic power program, was made a Knight Commander of the British Empire. He is managing director of the atomic energy authority's industrial division. Nearly 2,000 men and women from all walks of life were named in the honor list.

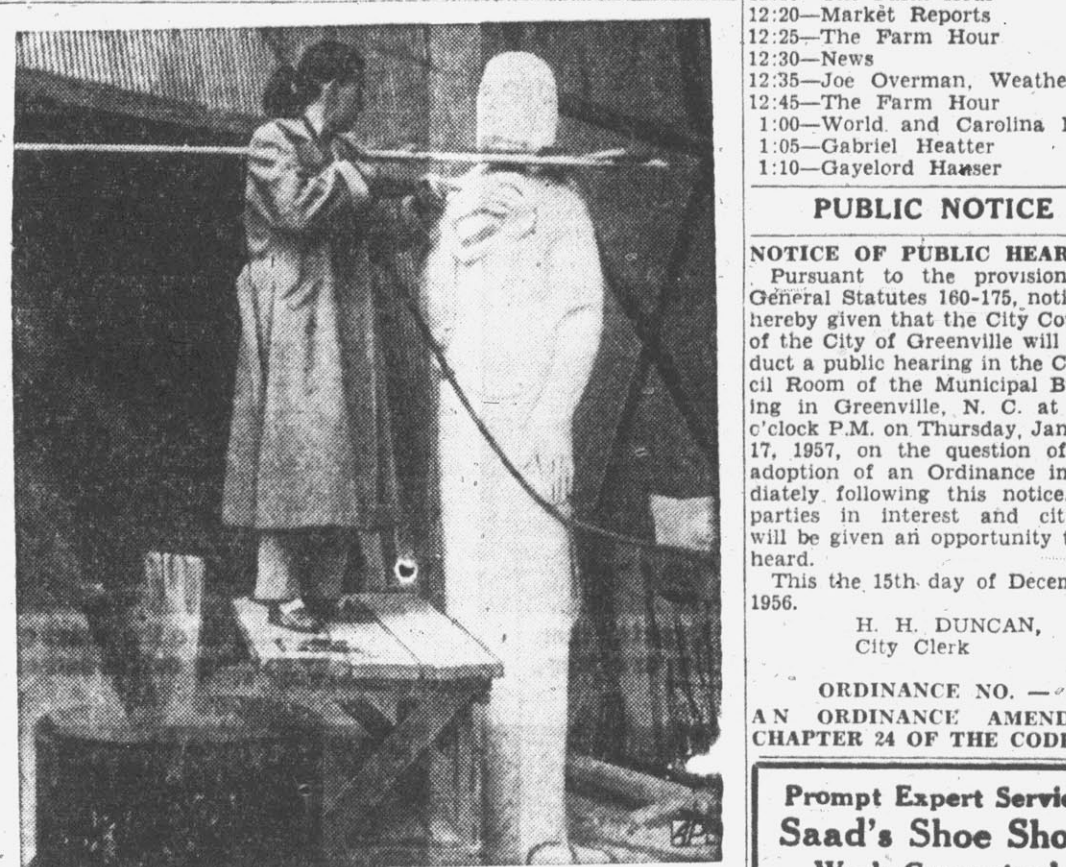

THERE OUGHTA BE A LAW! By FAGALY and SHORTEN

NEW YORK (AP) — "It's not going to be like Milton Berle," said "Omni-bus" executive producer Robert Saudek with a slow smile. "But it will be done in as understandable a way as possible." He was speaking of Sophocles' great Greek tragedy, "Oedipus the King," which "Omni-bus" (ABC-TV) will present next Sunday at 9 p.m. EST with the Broadway star, Christopher Plummer, in the leading role. Refusing to offer either a modernized, corned-up version or one of those tedious college interpretations of Greek tragedy, "Omni-bus" will present the drama in early Greek style. The television adaptation is by Walter Kerr from the Fittzgerald translation. How to handle a Greek chorus is a problem still largely unresolved by the modern theater. But "Omni-bus" has settled on a unstylish manner of groups of townspeople speaking. "Greek tragedy has lasted so long not because of its forms but because of the universality of its characters," Saudek said. "They are interesting people because they had human problems. 'Oedipus' is essentially a detective story and Sophocles goes directly into his drama without fooling around. It gives one, oddly, the feeling of being contemporaneous." Let's look at the play, which Aristotle regarded as the masterpiece of the Greek theater. You immediately see what Saudek means and you realize that television, in one of its rare moments, is offering something to make you think. The Theban people are desper-

Love Is Exciting At 84, He Says

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — "Love is just as exhilarating at 84 as it is in younger days," said Thomas A. Edgerton. He and Miss Mary Bardwell, also 84, were married yesterday at the Methodist Home for Aged. They once were schoolmates but hadn't seen each other in 30 years until Edgerton entered the home last spring. Edgerton has been married twice previously. In fact, it was Miss Bardwell who introduced him to his first wife.

THE CASE OF THE GOLDEN KNEES

Armed with axe, Gaskins wades the Fisheating Creek swamp in his search for cypress knees.

Those grotesque, golden-colored pieces of wood you sometimes see on the shelves of interior decorators are cypress knees. They grow widely in southern states, from Florida to Virginia and as far west as Texas. But how they got into the shops is a story in itself.

The man who started the cypress knee industry, according to his own best knowledge and belief, is Tom Gaskins, a Floridian. He lives in the heart of the cypress tree country, on the banks of the Fisheating river, in the central part of the state. For years he has been wading the swamps to harvest the knees.

The key to his art is the processing of the wood. When cut, the knees have an outer bark which has to be removed before the glossy interior surface can be seen. This is done by boiling.

After the bark is loose, Gaskins uses dental tools to remove its fragments from nooks and crevices. Dried in the sun then, the knees gradually turn golden.

Standing in the water, Gaskins surveys a cypress knee for his collection.

The bark is first loosened by steaming it. Gaskins then strips it, using dental tools to get into the minute crevices.

Getting into the heart of it, Gaskins processes a cypress knee by drilling out the center to speed up and assure uniform drying.

He checks the drying of a newly peeled group of knees as they rest on his home-made drying rack.

"Whatcha Know, Joe?" is the title given this pair of cypress knees in Gaskins' huge collection he has built up during the years.

A dog a penguin are the shapes taken by two of Gaskins' cypress knees.

Gaskins stands alongside one of his prized knees. He calls it "Mrs. Hippo with a Carmen Miranda hat".

Egypt Restive Over 'Slow Pull Back' By Israel

CAIRO, EGYPT (AP)—Egypt was reported today to be growing increasingly restive over what it terms the "unjustifiably slow" pull back of Israeli invasion forces to their own borders.

Reliable informants said Egypt may again take the whole withdrawal question to the United Nations.

U. N. officials here and in New York were reported to be pressing Israel to agree to a specific timetable for pulling out its troops, not only from the Sinai Desert but also from the Gaza Coastal Strip.

In compliance with U. N. General Assembly resolutions, Israeli forces that drove to the banks of the Suez Canal in a lightning invasion in October had by today pulled back 53 miles across the Sinai. U. N. troops are advancing across the 130-mile wide peninsula in the wake of the Israeli move.

Israel has said she will pull her troops out of the Sinai in a phased withdrawal over a period of weeks but has not agreed to give up the Gaza strip. The coastal area, packed with Arab refugees, is historically a part of Palestine. It was held by Egypt from the 1949 Palestine Armistice until Israel occupied it during the recent invasion.

Egyptian officials say they are counting on the U. N. to implement the Israeli withdrawal behind the old armistice line. Informants said unless some specific withdrawal timetable is announced within the next two weeks, U. N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjöld will be urged to refer the question to the general assembly. They emphasized that previous resolutions from the assembly demanded unconditional withdrawal, and if Israel seeks to impose conditions, the issue will have to go back to that body.

Some quarters here said it appeared Israel was delaying its complete withdrawal in the hope of fixing conditions, including guarantees against reoccupation of the Gaza area by the Egyptian army, Israel has charged that the Gaza sector and other border areas have been used as a base for Arab Fedayeen (commando) raids into Israeli territory.

The informants also said Maj. Gen. E. L. M. Burns, commander of the U. N. Emergency Force in Egypt, will meet with Israeli Chief of Staff Gen. Moshe Dayan to discuss a schedule for the final pull out.

During earlier negotiations with U. N. officials on the clearance of the blocked canal Egyptian officials said they would not allow work to begin until the Israeli units had completed their withdrawal. But after talks with U. N. negotiators here and in New York Egypt agreed to treat the canal operation as a separate issue.

Work on clearing the southern end of the canal got started Saturday. Two Egyptian launches yesterday began sweeping mines and underwater obstructions from the northern end of the waterway. The work by the launches delayed the start of heavier duty by the U. N. salvage fleet now busily at both ends of the canal. Two big German salvage vessels and their tugs were waiting to move down the channel to the Ferdan Bridge, 51 miles south of Port Said, when the sweeping operation permitted.

In Cairo, meanwhile, the newspaper Al-Messara reported that the body of a British army lieutenant who was kidnapped by Egyptian commandos in Fort Said Dec. 11, had been found and turned over to Egyptian authorities.

The officer, Lt. Anthony Moorhouse, had led a British raid on an apartment which resulted in the arrest of seven commandos shortly before he disappeared.

Daphne Little was hostess at a slumber party Wednesday night. After going to the movies, she and her guests listened to the radio, caught up on their talking, and ate until the wee hours of the morning. The guests included Barbara Evans, Faye Stocks, Rachel Stox, LeAnn Newby, Betty Hardy, Dorothy Evans, Margaret Case and Sandra Hunsucker.

Among the WHS graduates home for the holidays from various colleges were Doris Cole from Mars Hill, Maggie Castello from WCU, Jo Ann McLawhorn from Duke, Ruby Lee McArthur from Meredith, Dan McLawhorn from Campbell, Burt Worthington from State and Jean Ann Liverman from the Medical College of Virginia.

Reedy Branch Church held a "High School and College Night" Sunday. The theme was carried out by students representing their schools by standing and singing their school songs.

Mary Ann Worthington, Betty Ann Hardy, Rachel Stox, Connie Bowen and George Jackson were among the high school students who gathered at Reedy Branch Church Tuesday night. The group went caroling and returned to the church where they played games, exchanged gifts and were served refreshments.

Former WHS students Leon Forlines and Ralph Davenport spent the holidays with their parents. Leon is a student at Edwards Military Institute and Ralph attends Fork Union Military Academy.

Among the WHS students who were away during the holidays were Alice Waters, Peggy Craft, and Doris Crawley. Alice spent Wednesday through Sunday of last week in Farmville, visiting Sue Dida. Peggy spent last Tuesday through Friday in Richmond, Va., with relatives and Doris spent the holidays with relatives in Roanoke Rapids.

Daphne Little, Margaret Case, Jimmy Mills and Lou Ellen Mills were among the group which attended a Christmas party Friday night. Guests at the party played games and were served refreshments.

Operating on a better-safe-than-sorry theory, police checked out all the threats. Only one proved legitimate. That led to discovery of a real bomb early Friday in the Paramount Theater on Times Square.

That missile, and the one at the library, were found unexploded. The "Bomber" has been sought since 1940. Police say he has planted at least 34 bombs in public places. Twenty-two have exploded, injuring 15 persons. No fatalities have resulted.

Four bomb threats calls were recorded today. Police Commissioner Stephen P. Kennedy warned that hoaxers, if caught, would be liable to imprisonment for up to three years.

The "Bomber" craze has not been confined to the New York area alone. Homemade explosives or false bomb alarms have been reported in Dallas, Tex., Kansas City, Mo., Wichita, Kan., Haverhill, Mass., Hartford, Conn., Philadelphia, Newark and Rahway, N.J., among others.

For realising Greenville Police Officer J. Gus Stokes when he arrested him, the court gave Greene 12 months on the roads. The 30-day sentence is to be served currently. Judge Whedbee stated and lectured the defendant for interfering with an officer of the law in the performance of his duty.

William E. Galloway, Jackson, N. C., failure to stop at a red traffic light, prayer for judgment continued on payment of $10, and he is to make adequate restitution for property damage.

Don C. Williams, Rt. 2, city, paid court costs for speeding.

James W. Carter, Negro, Cherry Point, no operator's license, prayer for judgment continued on payment of costs.

Jack Stokes, 225 East Dickinson avenue, drunk, 30 days in jail, suspended on payment of $10.

Hydrogen and Oxygen.
It ranks with alcohol as one of the greatest solvents discovered by man, but mixed together the two often don't solve anything.

Absolutely pure water is not to be found in nature. Nor for that matter, is man.

Two final things to remember: A gallon of water weighs 8.33 pounds; and if anyone really feels like going overboard for water the best place might be the Marianas Trench in the Pacific where the water - it's salty - is 35-640 feet deep.

There is reported actually to be a single case in medical annals of a person who, while on dry land, drank so much water he drowned.

But isn't there always, in every situation, one guy who doesn't know when to quit?

Police Seek Halt False Reports

NEW YORK (AP)—Police today sought to stamp out a wave of false bomb threats they say are hampering the hunt for New York's elusive "Mad Bomber."

Since last Monday when an explosive attributed to the "Bomber" was found in New York's Public Library, police have been deluged with 41 calls.

Operating on a better-safe-than-sorry theory, police checked out all the threats. Only one proved legitimate. That led to discovery of a real bomb early Friday in the Paramount Theater on Times Square.

Eisenhower's Next Four Years Could Be Rougher

BY JAMES MARLOW
Associated Press News Analyst
WASHINGTON (AP)—When President Eisenhower arose today and looked out at the world in which he will soon begin his second term, he may have wondered: "Will these next four years be as nice as the first?"

It would be almost too much to expect. True, he had some personal misfortune these past four years: A heart attack and an intestinal operation. And he had some mean problems to handle.

He had to end the war in Korea; he had to act fast to get the British and French out of Egypt and avoid a bigger war; he had to spar with the Russians; he saw half of Indochina lost to Communism.

And from time to time he had some trouble with Congress, especially with members of his own party, like Sen. McCarthy of Wisconsin, or like Sen. Knowland of California who didn't hesitate to express views not always the same as Eisenhower's.

But all in all he made out wonderfully well under the constitutional limitation on the presidency, must be his last.

That means that the race for the presidency in 1960 is wide open, although right now Vice President Nixon would seem to have the inside track for the Republican nomination.

Each Republican presidential hopeful will have to decide whether his best chance of becoming the party's nominee lies (A) in being a quiet yes-man for Eisenhower for four years or (B) in throwing his weight around to get national attention.

And the Democrats, so mild and cooperative with Eisenhower, since 1952 that they sometimes rescued him from his own Republicans, know that they failed to build in the public mind any big difference between themselves and Republicans.

The congressional Democrats apparently struck the public fancy by their antics in the past four years — they were restored to control of Congress while their presidential candidate lost — but they can hardly remain docile eight years.

For politicians that would be most unnatural. So Eisenhower should have a far rougher time in the years coming up right here at home.

Very uncertain although probably not more so than when he first took office. Then his problems lay in Asia. Now they're in the Middle East.

While things are fairly quiet there now, there's no assurance they will remain so. And Russia, unpredictable when he first took office, is just as much so.

Eisenhower seems to have a lot of self-confidence. He'll probably need all of it before he finishes his White House job.

Real Armageddon Near, Assembly Is Warned
"Armageddon will be the greatest catastrophe ever to hit the earth, but God's New World to follow will be the best thing ever to come to distressed mankind and it will never pass away." So declared Linley Rockwell, Watchtower official from Brooklyn, N. Y., speaking before a capacity crowd of 600 at the National Guard Armory in Wilmington. Rockwell's subject was "What Will Armageddon Mean for You?"

The discourse climaxed a three-day assembly of Jehovah's Witnesses attended by delegates from Eastern North Carolina with 75 attending from Greenville, according to Willis Manning, presiding minister of the local congregation.

Texan, With Oil, Host At $125,000 Blowout

HOLLYWOOD (AP)—A Texas oil millionaire last night spent $125,000 on a party to prove that Texans can be genteel.

However as champagne flowed like oil the party proved only that one can have as much fun in a ruffled shirt as in cowboy boots.

David (Tex) Feldman, reported the wealthiest independent oil operator in the world, was the host of the blowout, the fanciest in Hollywood memory.

Feldman, whose income is estimated at 7 million dollars a year, said he tossed the party primarily for his wife, Jane, but admitted:

"I wanted to show the world that Texans can compete with the best in gentility."

Feldman took over Romanoff's Crown Room and Tom Douglas, noted architectural and interior designer, spent two days and $75,000 converting it into a Delmonico's of the early 1900's.

The party brought out some of the biggest names in the industrial, oil, movie and department store fields.

Among the guests, all of whom came attired in turn-of-the-century costumes, was Conrad Hilton, the hotel tycoon, who even wore mutton chop sideburns. Clark Gable came as the one and only Rhett Butler.

As the festivities progressed, Bing Crosby, at 52, demonstrated a mean jitterbug with 22-year-old Nancy Eiland, a Delta Airlines stewardess from Drew, Miss.

The headline act was Edith Piaf, the French singer who got $7,500 for singing three songs.

Perhaps the happiest of all couples on the dance floor was Jeanne Crain and Paul Brinkman celebrating a public reconciliation of their marriage, the breakup of which earlier in the year had made sensational headlines.

"No one is happier than Jeanne and I and our four children about tonight," Brinkman said.

One of the honored guests was Jack L. Warner, head of Warner Bros. studio, who had first shown the movie "Giant" to Feldman. The wealthy Texan objected to a scene in the movie which showed millionaire Texans as boisterous fun lovers.

By 2 a.m. of Jan. 1, 1957, when the party started dwindling, the movie looked pretty authentic.

Inauguration Is Due Today, But Two Candidates

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP)—Little Rhode Island is scheduled to inaugurate its Governor today. But the big question is who will it be—Democratic incumbent Dennis J. Roberts or Republican Christopher Del Sesto?

The state Supreme Court will decide the issue before the inauguration.

The question went before the court after Del Sesto, a former Democrat, overtook Roberts' Nov. 6 election day lead of 207 voting machine votes and defeated him by 472 votes, after all absentee ballots had been counted.

Roberts protested the counting of civilian absentee and shut-in ballots on the grounds most of them were cast before election day. Servicemen's absentee ballots were not challenged.

The counting of absentee ballots, like all moves and other maneuvers have carried the issue right down to Inauguration Day.

After a lengthy session yesterday, Chief Justice Edmund W. Flynn said he is "hopeful" that a decision may be reached before inauguration time.

In the event the issue is not decided Roberts would continue as hold-over governor until a decision is reached.

Gov. Roberts' brother, Associate Justice Thomas H. Roberts, is a member of the state Supreme Court, but he has removed himself from the bench during the controversy and will have no part in settling the issue.

Some political observers have noted that more than the governorship may hinge on the court decision as ultimate control of the U. S. Senate might be involved.

Rhode Island's Democratic senator is Theodore Green, who is 89 years old. His term has four more years to run. If his seat became vacant, it would be filled by the governor.

A Republican governor would be expected to name a Republican. This would divide the present Senate with 48 for each party and leave Vice President Nixon casting tie-breaking votes.

The governor said last night that he has alerted his staff to assist Del Sesto immediately in the event the court decision favors the former Democratic state and federal office holder who switched his party allegiance in 1947.
