

Faubus And President Standing Pat; Impasse On Troop Question

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus said today he is "standing pat" on the wording he used to accept President Eisenhower's terms for withdrawing federal troops from Little Rock Central High school.

The President had rejected Faubus' wording of acceptance yesterday and said troops would remain until the assurance from Faubus coincided with the statement worked out by a committee of Southern governors.

"They write their statements up there," Faubus said. "I write my statements here."

This apparently left the efforts of the four Southern governors, acting as a committee for the Southern Governors' Conference, an impasse since Faubus refused to concede to their wording.

Faubus said he had agreed to two main points worked out by Eisenhower and the Southern governors:

1. That he would accept "full responsibility for maintaining law and order."
2. That "I would not obstruct orders of the court" for integration.

The hitch in what appeared yesterday to be a workable solution to removal of federal troops and agreement between Faubus and Eisenhower developed over Faubus' changing the exact wording which had been worked out.

He added "by me" to the prepared statement that there would be no further obstruction to the court's order for integration of Central High School. This left in doubt the question of whether someone else might obstruct the order.

The President rejected Faubus' change of the wording and said troops of the 101st Airborne Infantry Division, that protected nine Negro students at Central High last week, would remain in Little Rock.

The paratroopers have not been on guard during school hours for two days, their guarding chores taken over by the federalized Arkansas National Guard.

At his press conference today, Faubus was pressed hard for a statement on whether he would personally guarantee the safety of the Negro children if the federal troops were withdrawn.

He parried the question several times with the words, "I don't have to. That is the responsibility of the federal government."

Finally when asked if he would answer "yes" or "no" to the question of guaranteeing the safety of the nine Negroes, he turned to the reporter who asked it and said: "Have you stopped beating your wife? Answer that yes or no."

Faubus said the four governors who worked for a removal of the federal troops had been advised of what he was going to say before he issued the reply that the President rejected.

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Eisenhower held firmly today to a demand for a stronger stand by Arkansas' Gov. Orval Faubus as the price of withdrawing federal troops from Little Rock.

High hopes for settlement of the monthlong federal-state controversy over integration of Little Rock's Central High School collapsed last night in what might be a disagreement over words—or could be a dispute over intentions.

A settlement plan was worked out yesterday at a lengthy conference between Eisenhower and a four-man committee from the Southern Governors' Conference. It called for a declaration from Faubus that he would not obstruct orders of the federal courts which have ordered school integration, and would maintain law and order in Little Rock. The President in turn promised to return the federalized Arkansas National Guard to state control and to withdraw federal troops "as soon as practicable."

The governors' committee said Faubus had agreed to the plan, and the Arkansas governor later issued his own statement in Little Rock.

But hours later Eisenhower said Faubus' statement "does not constitute in my opinion the assurance that he intends to use his full powers as governor to prevent the obstruction of the orders of the United States District Court."

"Under the circumstances the President of the United States has no recourse at the present time except to maintain federal surveillance of the situation."

Hoffa Steamroller Sweeps On To Teamster Victory

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP)—Three opponents battled desperately today to steam a steamroller which appeared to be sweeping James R. Hoffa of Detroit toward the presidency of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters.

In a swirling, slambang battle for delegate votes, Hoffa picked up endorsements from the New England Conference, the Eastern Conference and the Los Angeles Joint Council of Teamsters in his campaign to succeed retiring President Dave Beck.

International Vice President Elmer Mohn, formerly of Los Angeles and now Beck's administrative assistant, made his first public move in the massive battle for power as he spearheaded the drive to win the Los Angeles delegates over to the Midwest Teamster boss.

General Secretary John F. English, a veteran and powerful Teamster figure, was prominent in the action of the New England Conference in Hoffa's favor.

But anti-Hoffa forces were still active, aggressive and asserting confidence. A spokesman said the Maryland and Washington, D.C., delegates declined to endorse Hoffa and that Virginia and Carolina delegates possibly would follow suit.

International Vice President William A. Lee of Chicago was given a note of confidence by the National Bakeries Drivers Conference—but not an endorsement.

Efforts to form a coalition of forces between Lee, Vice President Thomas L. Hickey of New York and Thomas J. Haggerty, Chicago milk truck drivers official, continued—still unsuccessfully.

Haggerty last night declared that the determination of the three Hoffa foes to "go down to the wire" means that their separate strength will be sufficient to prevent Hoffa's election.

But the scrapping Midwest Teamster boss, target of charges of racketeering and misuse of union funds, ridiculed his opponent's claims.

And he showed his strength by turning into a personal ovation a demonstration over the refusal by Chief Justice Earl Warren of the U.S. Supreme Court to halt Teamster elections.

Warren yesterday refused to disturb a Circuit Court of Appeals decree setting aside a temporary injunction by Dist. Judge F. Dickinson Letts which would have prevented the Teamsters from electing new officers at their convention here this week.

When Beck announced to the convention news of Warren's decision, delegates jumped to their feet shouting and hurling scraps of paper into the air.

Hoffa suddenly appeared on the rostrum and raised Beck's hand in the traditional prize ring signal of victory. At that point, the shouting rose to a frenzied roar of what appeared to be a personal ovation for Hoffa.

A few minutes later, M. W. Miller of Dallas, Southern Teamster boss, chairman of convention arrangements and ardent Hoffa supporter, jubilantly declared, "Did you see that out there—we just held the election."

The demonstration was the only highlight of an otherwise dull day on the convention floor.

As the session opened, Beck ordered the Credentials Committee to take another look at credentials of all delegates questioned by Senate committee investigating labor racketeering.

Sen. McClellan (D-Ark) wired Beck Monday that his committee had information that delegates from 68 Teamster locals were not legally selected.

Thus, with part of the convention's 1,900 delegates still not formally seated, Beck confined the day's business to adoption of non-controversial changes in the union's constitution.

Many of those were technical. Others restrict the wide authority of the general president and give more power to the executive board and the general secretary-treasurer, particularly over spending and investments.

Bloodmobile Exceeds Quota At College; 174 Pints Are Donated

The Red Cross Bloodmobile, under the sponsorship of the East Carolina College ROTC unit, exceeded its quota at yesterday's visit.

Dr. S. R. Bartlett Jr., chairman of the Pitt County blood program, reported this morning that 174 pints of blood were drawn, exceeding the appointed quota by 24 pints.

In making the announcement, Dr. Bartlett stated, "The good turnout yesterday is especially gratifying in view of the fact that Pitt County, during the past fiscal year, donated less than 80 percent of its allotted quota."

Lt. Robert W. Vining and Cadet William P. Speight were in charge of the visit.

Wooten Named Member Of Municipal Study Body

RALEIGH—Frank M. Wooten Jr. of Greenville has been appointed a member of the Municipal Government Study Commission authorized by the 1957 General Assembly to make detailed and comprehensive study of the problems of municipal government in North Carolina.

The resolution authorizing the commission provided that it should consist of three senators and six representatives, to be nominated by the presiding officers of the General Assembly, and that at least three of the members should come from counties containing cities of more than 50,000.

Pursuant to the resolution and within the limits prescribed Governor Hodges appointed Senators Calvin Graves of Forsyth, James W. Mason of Scotland and Benjamin H. Summer of Rutherford.

Reps. Ernest L. Hicks of Mecklenburg, Joseph M. Hunt Jr. of Guilford, H. P. Taylor Jr. of Anson, Joe Watkins of Granville, and Raynor Woodard of Northampton.

Graves, Hicks and Hunt represent the three largest cities in the state. Wooten hails from Greenville with 16,724 in 1950; Mason is from Laurinburg with 7,134; Watkins from Oxford with 6,785; Summer from Spindale and Taylor from Wadesboro represent towns of 3,408 and 3,891, and Woodard from Conway a small town of 618.

Although the General Assembly prescribed that the first meeting of this commission should be held prior to September 30, 1957, the members were not appointed until after that date. The first meeting has been set for the Governor's office at 3 p.m. next Tuesday.

Gov. Hodges Will Again Talk With Faubus On Terms

RALEIGH (AP)—Gov. Hodges said today he plans to confer with Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas by telephone later today in continuation of efforts to work out an agreement between Faubus and President Eisenhower under which federal troops would be removed from Little Rock, Ark.

Hodges, who arrived here by train early today after heading a committee of four Southern governors which conferred with the President yesterday, said he hoped to "have something one way or another" later in the day.

Hodges and his staff apparently were awaiting the results of a news conference which Faubus had scheduled this morning.

A settlement plan worked out by the governors and the President broke down last night after it had appeared to be on the brink of success.

The President said that the Arkansas governor had not given assurance that he intends to use his full powers as governor to prevent the obstruction of the orders of the United States District Court. The court ordered the admission of nine Negro pupils to Little Rock's Central High School.

Hodges said he hoped that the disagreement is "a matter of words" and that "basically we are in agreement."

The governor said that Faubus in a statement last night had added two words to a statement previously worked out that "somehow" negated the terms under which President Eisenhower had agreed to remove federal troops from Little Rock and restore the Arkansas National Guard to control of state authorities.

Hodges said that Faubus in a statement to the President said "The orders of the federal courts will not be obstructed by me." Hodges said the original statement had not carried the words "by me."

He said that in the opinion of the White House the two words "somehow qualified" Faubus' statement. Hodges said he agreed the words did qualify the statement and he hoped Gov. Faubus had added them "unwittingly."

Although he refused to accept Faubus' statement as full compliance with the settlement plan, Eisenhower, like the governors who met with him, expressed hope of early agreement. His statement said:

"I want to commend the governors representing the Southern Conference for their cooperative attitude at their meeting today. I hope that they will continue their efforts, as will the federal government, to bring about a basis for the withdrawal of federal forces in Little Rock and the orderly carrying out of the orders of the District Court."

A Little Man With A Big Belief In Himself

CHILDREN'S ENTERTAINER PINKY LEE ... Striding Back To Big Time.

By JIMMY ELLIS
Reflector Staff Writer

The roads from Television City in Hollywood and Radio City in New York to the Pitt County Fair Grounds are long roads.

The distances are especially far for an entertainer, an individual to whom Hollywood and New York represent the major leagues of the entertainment world. Some entertainers who are forced out of the big leagues into the bush leagues of entertainment never quite adjust to the change. Others take it in stride, confident they'll be back in the big time when the present managers are gone and forgotten.

Pinky Lee is one of the group that's striding along, a physically small man with a mentally huge belief that he'll be back in the big leagues of television.

Right now, Pinky's biding his time, playing county fairs—and waiting. Some of his waiting is being done this week at Greenville where he has three dates at the Pitt County Agricultural Fair. He'll finish his work here tomorrow night, and then move on for his next series of personal appearances.

Pinky's waiting involves at least two things: A swing by the major television networks away from what he calls his "current western cycle," and what he terms a new recognition of his abilities as a children's entertainer.

Both could turn into a long period of waiting, according to the television industry's present frame of mind.

Westerns are the big thing in television this year. The major networks have all involved themselves with a rash of sophisticated horse operas, which they believe are what can be sold to TV audiences this year.

The new recognition of Pinky, and other children's entertainers, depends to a large extent on the networks' continued attitude toward westerns.

"The reason I'm not doing my own show for children at the present moment is that the networks are against children's shows," Pinky claims. "If they could get away from them completely, they'd do it. They can't drop all of them because the FCC (Federal Communications Commission) requires a certain number of hours of children's entertainment."

One of the children's shows that is being shown now is Pinky's one chance of getting a finger in the big pie of network television.

Planning UNICEF Annual Trick, Treat

"Trick or Treat for UNICEF" to be held Halloween will be discussed at a planning session Friday at 8 p.m. in the Fellowship Hall of Jarvis Memorial Methodist Church.

Funds collected from this annual event will go to the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund.

Anyone interested in helping with the UNICEF Trick or Treat project should attend the planning session or contact Miss Elizabeth Wilson, Chairman Christian Social Relations, Woman's Society of Christian Service, Jarvis Memorial Methodist Church.

For All Children

In December 1946, the General Assembly established the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund—UNICEF.

The first task of UNICEF in the years immediately following the war was to bring help—food, clothing, medicines—to children who had suffered the privations of war. For the most part, aid then was given to children in the war-devastated parts of Europe.

In recent years, UNICEF's aid has been directed chiefly toward the economically underdeveloped countries outside Europe. With the shift to these parts of the world, a change took place in the kind of aid that was offered.

These newly assisted countries needed help in a basic task—extending the simplest kind of health and welfare services for their children and mothers.

Seventy-two countries are now receiving the fund's aid, and when the work now planned or underway is completed 60 million children will have been individually and concretely aided by one or more of the UNICEF assisted programs.

These efforts on behalf of children have been made possible through the voluntary contributions from governments and peoples of 97 countries and territories. Many countries receiving aid are at the same time contributing to UNICEF for its work elsewhere.

Contributions made to the Fund are used mainly to provide the necessary supplies and equipment to encourage countries in the development of their own programs of lasting benefit to their children.

Changing Attitude Toward Water

It is encouraging that recent years have brought increasing concern for the preservation and protection of North Carolina's vast water resources.

This changing outlook has come about with good reason. North Carolina is looking to industrial development as it has never done before in its history. Moreover, it has every reason to believe that in the next two decades industrialization in the state will expand by leaps and bounds.

Until recent years North Carolina had never been particularly concerned about its water resources. It had never done a great deal to develop them, and it had never done a great deal to conserve them. There were more than enough streams, rivers, lakes and waterways for every use. There has always been more than enough water to go around without paying too much attention to how much was wasted.

Then it began to dawn on some citizens of North Carolina that other states, which now have severe water problems, once were as carefree with their water supplies as North Carolina. Industrialization brought about the pollution of rivers and streams. Water sources, once usable for many things, became fit only for dumping grounds for waste. Leaders began to realize the same thing could happen in North Carolina, with its boundless water resources.

Efforts toward protecting this priceless natural resource began to make headway.

The state has taken major steps through its several boards and agencies charged with the responsibility for conserving the state's water resources. The state's Stream Sanitation program has begun to lay ground rules to prevent the pollution of many waterways. Cities, towns and counties have come to realize that their water resources are valuable assets in the industrial development which promises to bring their communities further economic development.

As a result of all this, the state's most abundant natural resource—water—is the one for which the greatest conservation effort is being made. Perhaps it sounds foolish; but experiences of other states shows conclusively that North Carolina is following a wise course. Indeed, experiences of other states would suggest that North Carolina might profit by further accelerating its efforts to protect its water resources in order to assure their being usable for generations to come.

Sen. Kerr Scott has proposed to the North Carolina League of Municipalities a 350 million dollar water development program for the state, asserting it will take that much money for the state to "catch up on its hauling in water conservation."

What the cost will be, we don't know; but we are sure that in spite of the progress already made in conserving the state's water resources, North Carolina has just begun to scratch the surface. There is still a great deal of work to be done before North Carolina can be sure its water resources will not suffer the same horrible fate as that in other states.

It's Time For Butler To Claim The Waters

Political repercussions within the Democratic party over the Little Rock situation suggest the most serious rift yet may be developing between Northern and Southern elements.

While this brewing dispute promises to open new wounds, it is sure to open old wounds of 1948 and 1952 which, superficially at least, had healed with the years.

It will be almost three years before national party conventions roll around again. That period could give time for the new dispute to settle down. Or it could afford time for further fermenting of the discontent which now exists between the two wings of the Democratic party. Events during this period will determine in a large measure whether the Democrats will be more nearly united or more widely divided come 1960.

A few weeks ago talk of a third party was generally discounted as only talk. Today the situation is altogether different.

At the moment we can draw only one conclusion: If the Democratic party is to remain united, National Chairman Butler had better turn his attention to smoothing the choppy waters rather than adding to the height of the storm which is already brewing.

Local Tax Rate Is Rising Faster

By ELMER ROESSNER

State and local taxes are climbing. They have been rising faster than personal income.

They are likely to rise even higher.

Total personal income in 1955 was $305.9 billion. In 1956, it was $326.9 billion. That's a rise of 6.9 per cent.

Total state and local expenditures in 1955 were $32.7 billion. In 1956 they were $35.5 billion. That's a rise of 8.6 per cent.

Governmental expenditures are not exactly equivalent to taxes. Some of the spending money comes from fees, license and other charges which may or may not be taxes; some comes from the sale of bonds, which represent future taxes. However, taxes usually rise in relationship to expenditures and it's a solid guess that state and local taxes were going up 8.6 per cent while income was rising only 6.9 per cent.

INCHING UP

The process of boosting state and local taxes has continued through this year.

Of the 32 states with sales taxes, three states — Arkansas, Maine and Rhode Island — increased rates this year. Three others — Connecticut, Illinois and Pennsylvania — made temporary rates permanent. North Dakota extended its temporary rate to July 1, 1959. An extension of a 2 1/2 per cent rate in Iowa was vetoed, dropping the rate back to 2 per cent, and Massachusetts defeated a sales tax.

Twenty-nine states also tax wage and salary incomes. Eleven of them use the withholding method of getting the dough. Indiana being the latest state to apply that method. Utah, California, Iowa and New York, in addition, withhold taxes on the salaries and wages of nonresidents.

EVERYBODY'S DOING IT

The Federation of Tax Administrators reports the spread of withholding tax legislation has been one of the "notable developments."

We do not begin to be religious until we have faith. We do not continue to be religious until we have obedience. Many of our religious customs are primarily exercises in obedience. By being obedient in certain of the holy customs which in themselves appear to have little spiritual value, we get ourselves into a habit of obedience which lies at the basis of true religion.

Church going, for instance, is a religious custom. It exists primarily for the purpose of bringing the worshiper and his God together. To be sure we can worship God any where, but experience proves that unless we have a definite time and place for the worship of God we usually fail to worship God as we should.

And going to church Sunday after Sunday gets us in the habit of spiritual obedience which manifests itself in things of much more consequence than merely attending a church service.

We must have a regular and disciplined religious life if it is to be effective, and the holy customs tend to make up more discipline in obedience to God and to his truth.

Religion continues and deepens for us when day by day in obedience we live up to the implications of that promise.

A Story In Clutterstuff

Company was coming, and as my contribution to order and whatnot, there was a desk to clean up. I got as far as one drawer, then became lost in a floodtide of memories.

Everyone has, I suppose memories of an occasion that seemed mighty important at the time it occurred; and then as the years roll by those souvenirs become only "clutterstuff" lying forgotten in drawers, trunks and chests.

This particular gem was an envelope of newspaper clippings about 316 prisoners of the Japanese in World War II. My association with them was something less than ten days, but I didn't want to forget it. . . . and nearly did, until two sheets from the New Queensland Register turned up again.

These evacuees from the Philippines included 53 Australians, 16 New Zealanders, 163 Britishers, 59 Dutch, 4 Americans and one Pole. There were men, women and children in the crowd. All had been inmates of Santo Tomas prison in Manila; most of them were in Japanese hands for over three years; all were civilians.

Our ship took them to Brisbane, where they were greeted, fêted and dispersed to individual destinations. They still bore the outward marks of prolonged hunger and dietary deficiencies, though they were all gaining weight rapidly. The children were all undersized for their ages.

One man, for example, weighed only 88 pounds when the prison camp was liberated in February, 1945. By the time he reached Brisbane in April of that year he had gained over 40 pounds; but it was not yet hardened into firm flesh. . . . and he was still weak.

You could understand it when the prisoners told of getting one pound of unhusked rice every two days, which they supplemented with banana corns and also banana stems and papaw roots. Some had gardens, but floods washed them out over and over again. Toward the end they were burying one a day from beri beri.

An Army field hospital had done wonders for the prisoners in restoring much of their health, and while they were aboard ship the crew spared no efforts in making the trip memorable with roasts, steaks, ice cream, fresh vegetables. . . . and even bowls of vitamin pills for each table.

Somewhere, probably in another drawer of that cluttered desk, there is an old "Liberation Day" edition of the Santo Tomas prison camp paper; turned out on a crippled-but-workable mimeograph machine they used. It includes a sketch of the prison compound and an outline of high-

"We are under a constitution, but the constitution is what the judges say it is."

A famous playwright, and Irishman, George Bernard Shaw, made an address in New York in 1933 and had this to say about the Constitution of the United States:

"When you come to examine the American Constitution, you found it was not really a constitution but a Charter of Anarchism."

Perhaps the most rash statement found in the quotation selections was one made by Cole L. Blaise, who at the time (1911) was Governor of South Carolina when he said, "Whenever the Constitution comes between men and the virtue of white women of South Carolina, I say — 'To hell with the Constitution.'"

Franklin Delano Roosevelt, just several years prior to being elected to the presidency, thought the Constitution to be in such a state that it could be made to do anything:

"The United States Constitution has proved itself the most marvelously elastic compilation of rules of government ever written."

Later, upon being elected President, he said in his first inaugural address:

"Our Constitution is so simple and practical that it is possible always to meet extraordinary needs by changes in emphasis."

That's what a few great men have said about our system of government.

While some of these statements run far afield, to be sure, there is still the thought expressed by some of the most eminent of our statesmen that our Constitution is not an ironclad structure that cannot be altered to fit the needs of the people it serves. Supreme Court interpretations bear this out.

GOP Caught Up In Political Trap

By RAY TUCKER

WASHINGTON — Although the Democratic Party possesses such noncongenial men as Harry S. Truman and Governor Orval Faubus, Senator Harry F. Byrd and Governor Averell Harriman, its leaders do not expect that it will split irrevocably or dangerously on the racial issue.

They look forward to a reunion for the 1960 presidential campaign. The spokesmen for the two factions, consciously or not, have shown uncommon political sense and shrewdness from the long-range viewpoint. The Truman-Stevenson-Harriman group, as was to be expected, have demanded firm implementation of the Civil Rights Bill. Aside from their sincere convictions on the question, they realize that they must retain the loyalty of the Negro electorate of the North. With a few exceptions, most Southern politicians of national stature have withheld approval of Governor Faubus' use of the Arkansas National Guard to bar colored children's admission to the Little Rock High School. Twelve Governors at the recent Sea-Island conference of State

Executives gave Governor LeRoy Collins of Florida a standing ovation when he pleaded for "reconciliation."

In urging the South not to "wrap itself in a Confederate flag and consume itself in a racial furor," he implied a criticism of Faubus' tactics.

POLITICAL TRAP It appears to be President Eisenhower and the Republican Party that have been placed in an exposed and confused position. His earlier delay and apparent indecision have been condemned by Northern Democrats, and he has been the object of vicious, personal abuse by prominent Negro figures of stage, screen, the prize ring and the diamond.

But his use of Federal troops at Little Rock has infuriated the South. Its Congressional experts maintain that their amendments to the 1957 Civil Rights Bill specifically bar such Federal intervention.

It would seem that the President, with the best of intentions, has permitted himself to be caught in a political trap, with considerable assistance from Attorney General Brownell.

DEMOCRATS LIKELY TO EMERGE UNSCATHED There are even more practical reasons for the prevailing belief that the Democratic Party will emerge unscathed from this crisis. It survived the internal struggle over prohibition, which also witnessed municipal disorders, mob protests, an outbreak of denational and sectional prejudice, and the burning of fiery crosses.

It reunited and went on to victory, despite the clash of such headstrong belligerents as Alfred E. Smith and William G. McAdoo, William Jennings Bryan and John J. Raskob. It survived a war between the du Ponts and the Smiths, Liberty League and the Roosevelt-Wallace-Tugwell "Bribe Trust."

THIRD PARTY TALK IN DIXIE NONSENSE Talk of formation of a Third Party or a massive political revolt in Dixie is regarded as nonsense. The South must realize that it has no place to go outside the Democratic Party. It would lose more than a score of valuable Congressional committee chairmanships, if it deserted by contributing to the election of a Republican Congress or President. It learned a sorry lesson when it switched to Ike, and enabled him to reshape the Supreme Court. Moreover, the Supreme Court does not always say the last word on grave national problems. It is subject to checks and restrictions by both the Congress and the President through their legislative and appointive powers. Having lost to the judicial branch of the Government, the South must rely all the more heavily on the other two arms.

DEM LEADERS WOULDN'T ALLOW BREACH Thus, for the South to become a severed and separate Party of protest would be to cut off its nose to spite its face. Leaders like Byrd of Virginia, Russell of Georgia, Collins of Florida, McCallahan of Arkansas and Johnson of Texas, to mention only a few, will never permit such a national and sectional tragedy.

Finally, the Democrats are never more dangerous than when they are fighting each other. In such matters they display a gay gallantry and almost boyish bravado which the staid and conservative GOP sadly lacks.

Stamp Hobby Value

By HAL BOYLE

NEW YORK (AP)—Anyone who thinks stamp collecting today is a kid's game is only kidding himself. It's a tremendous business, and a growing field of investment.

"Stamps have become a form of international currency," said Jack Taub, who at 26 is a dealer who does a half-million-dollar volume yearly here and in London.

"There are now 50 million collectors around the world, including 15 million in the United States."

"Stamps have become a tremendous hedge against inflation. That is why many Europeans, who are afraid of their own currency, are investing in stamps. If wisely chosen, they are an even better hedge than diamonds. "Even during the depression the value of stamps dropped only 15 to 20 per cent."

But as in every other form of investment, those who seek to build a fortune in postage stamps must know what kind to buy—and when to buy them. Right now—surprisingly — United Nations issues are pacing the field in the worldwide stamp collecting boom.

A number of canny investors have already made sizable fortunes from stamps put out by the big glass house on the East River.

"I know of one man, for example," said Taub, "who invested $200 in U.N. stamps and two years later sold them for $55,000."

The reason for the explosive rise in value of the early issues of U.N. stamps lies in their rarity — and a deepening interest in the United Nations itself.

"The U.N. printed six million of its first stamp in 1951," recalled Taub, "and there was so little interest in them that U.N. officials burned them by the hundreds of thousands."

"In subsequent printings of further U.N. stamps the number was lowered and lowered. Then, sometime after the Korean truce, collectors awoke to the fact that perhaps the U.N. was here to stay. Then the big scramble began."

"Now four to five million people are collecting U.N. stamps, and many of the scarcer issues have skyrocketed. A souvenir 15-cent sheet of stamps issued Oct. 24, 1955, today is worth $20 and they'll be worth more."

So much interest was stirred in the U.N. stamps that dealers set up the U. N. Philatelic Information Committee, with Taub as chairman, to serve as a worldwide clearing house for these issues.

But Taub warned that after Oct. 24, 1956, the U.N. began printing its stamps by the millions again, and the later issues are in plentiful supply and unlikely to increase greatly in value.

"The value of stamps is governed strictly by the law of supply and demand," he pointed out. "And no one can do good investments, by any means."

"The United States prints 140 million of its commemorative issues. Many people buy 10 sheets of every U.S. stamp and put them away. So many do this that even 10 years later they aren't worth even their face value to collectors."

"The Post Office won't take them back, so all you can do with them is to put them on letters. And who writes that many letters?"

On the other hand, Taub said, a portfolio of carefully chosen stamps will increase in value faster than a cross-section of industrial stocks or bonds.

Meanwhile, that desk remains sort of private prospector's delight for future treasure hunts; whether in quest of memories or money. (I wonder, for instance, what one could buy with a few scraps of Japanese occupation currency.)

Anyway, I did clean off the top and put a cover on the typewriter. That's about as far as anyone could have gone under the circumstances.

Tics Are Signs Of Tension

By DOROTHY V. WHIPPLE, M.D.
Tics are purposeless movements, repeated in exactly the same way but not in any regular rhythm. They are always done unconsciously; the child cannot control the movement. A tic can be a facial grimace, a writhing of the whole body or a movement with one arm or leg or shoulder. Sometimes a tic shows itself as eye blinking.

Tics are a sign of tension in the child's life. Tics are not a normal stage of development. However, that doesn't mean that every child who develops a tic is headed for serious trouble. But it does mean that a danger flag has been raised.

Ralph seemed all right when he went to school in the morning, but at dinner he constantly jerked his right shoulder. He spilled his milk, he had trouble cutting his meat. He couldn't help these jerks and he was worried.

Shoulder Jerking
"What's the matter with me, Mom, my shoulder keeps jerking?" Both Mom and Dad had of course noticed it. Their eyes had met with a "let's talk about this later" glance. But when Ralph mentioned it himself, Dad said in the most matter of fact tone:

"You have a tic, Ralph, and that means something must have upset you today. Would you like to tell us about it?"

"What's a tic?"
"It's that jerk in your shoulder. It's a movement that goes on without your control. It's nothing serious in itself but it suggests you're pretty nervous and jumpy about something."

Ralph didn't say anything, but his shoulder was getting worse. He got up from the table, said he was going in the other room. He turned on the television and sat down.

The dining room was in earshot of the living room. Ralph's parents finished their dinner in silence; then Dad sauntered into the living room, picked up the newspaper and sat down, not far from where Ralph was watching TV. As his dad approached, Ralph's shoulder, quiet for a few minutes, began twitching again.

Ralph was 10. He was a bright lad and a good student. He worshipped his dad. His dad was everything a man ought to be and Ralph struggled to be the son he felt his dad should have. Ralph had many doubts about himself. He knew he wasn't all his dad thought he was and he'd wake in the night with the terrible fear that his dad had found out how he really was. It was all he could do not to scream out.

Ralph thought he adored his father, and he did with the top of his mind but underneath was a deep resentment that he couldn't be just himself, that he had to live up to what he thought was his father's image of him.

Ralph's dad didn't know this either. Ralph's tic did not disappear with his kindly sym-thetic approach. So Ralph's parents realized they needed help in solving their boy's problems. The Child Guidance Clinic unraveled the conflicting feelings. Not only did Ralph's tic then disappear but he became a much more relaxed, happy youngster.

"ALL ABOARD!" Los Angeles Youngsters Frolic Around Old Locomotives

HERE IT COMES! The Oahu Railway number 85 is the only operating locomotive in Los Angeles' Griffith Park. Built in 1910, it was used on sugar plantations in Hawaii.

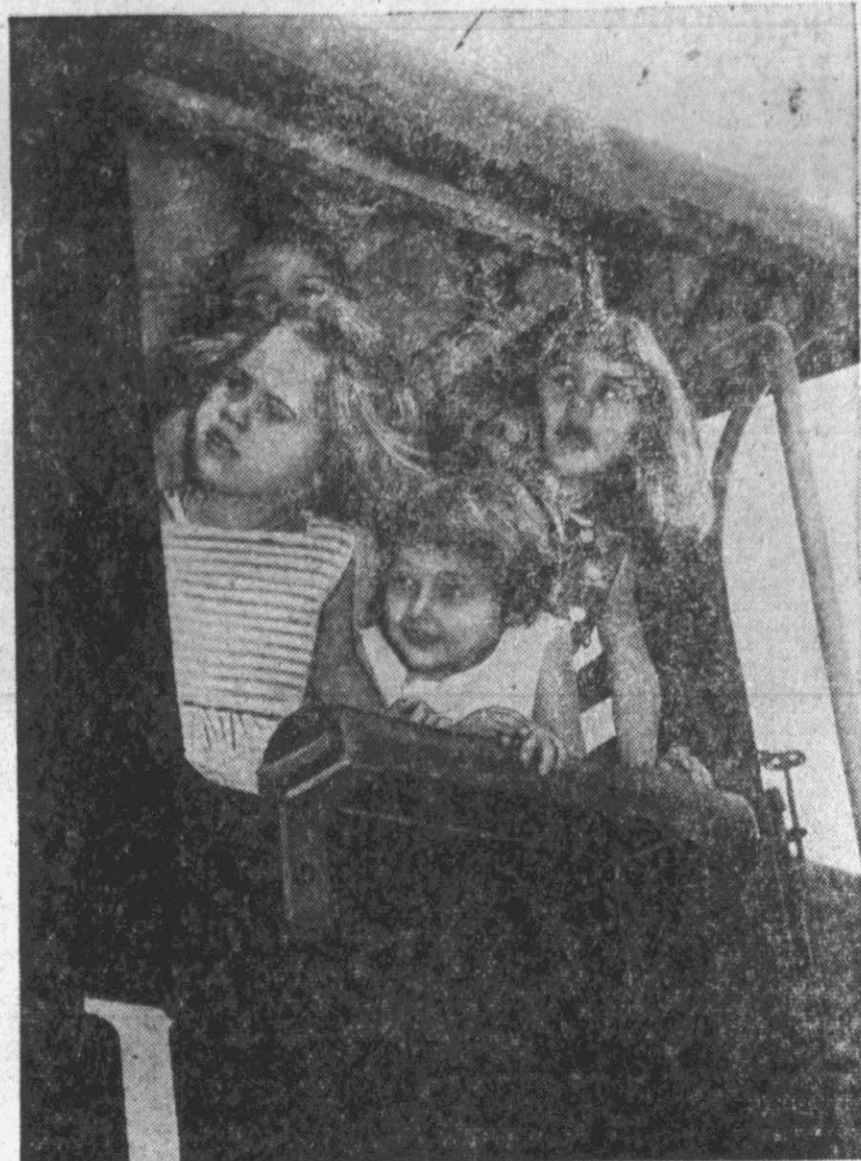

A municipally-owned railroad museum in Los Angeles is a dream come true for children who have always wanted to play among real engines and cars.

The museum, called Travel Town, covers nine acres of Los Angeles' Griffith Park. It has 15 retired locomotives, as well as a number of passenger cars, diners, cabooses, and other items of rolling stock. Admission is free but a small charge is made for rides on the only train that runs in the park—an engine, coal car and two coaches that were brought from Hawaii. It operates on a mile-long track with three-foot gauge. Last year it carried 103,000 passengers. The park has also a diner where children's birthday parties are held.

The museum is the brain child of Charley Atkins, an employe of the city's recreation and parks department, who thought that the ancient saddle tank engines might make fascinating, if king-sized, playthings for the city's youngsters. He went after various railroad executives and cajoled them into giving him not only their discarded locomotives but diners, passenger cars, cabooses, and even rails, spikes and ties.

That was five years ago. His project is still expanding. Already he has obtained numerous other vehicles, some bearing a relationship to railroading, others not. Among them: A San Francisco cable car, a 102-year-old circus wagon, a Missouri river keelboat, a double-decked New York City bus and a 60-year-old horse-drawn hook and ladder fire truck.

Girls too like to play in the locomotives. They are Jennifer Garbers, Sylvia Garbers, Lisa Hanawath and Janet Frick.

Little Joe Rinando, dressed in railroad overalls and cap, tries his hand at the controls of a locomotive.

Locomotives, coaches, diners and cabooses are scattered all over the 9-acre park.

This caboose, built in 1871, is a favorite among the boys who want to play railroading. It was used all over the west in the early days of railroading.

Dining car complete with tables, chairs and ranges is used for children's birthday parties.

Committees Fight For Our Right To Know

A CONTINUOUS RAPPING AT THE DOOR

(Editor's Note: You may be surprised to hear it, but even in a democracy like our own, facts to which the public is entitled are not always easy to come by. For as long as newspapers have been published, there have been efforts by officials to conceal information from the people. Here is a report on the present status of this never-ending battle for a press completely free, written by the chairman of the Freedom of Information Committee of the Associated Press Managing Editors Assn.)

By MASON WALSH
Managing Editor
The Dallas Times-Herald

In behalf of the American public, the press of the United States carries on a continuing fight for the people's right to know.

Increasing secrecy at all levels of government has limited access of the public to many official records and official meetings. Working sometimes independently, sometimes in state or regional groups, and frequently through three major national committees, the press has tried to eliminate barriers to news sources so that the public can be kept informed of the activities of their governmental officials.

The three national committees which work specifically for the people's right to know represent the three principal nationwide organizations of American newsmen. These organizations are the Associated Press Managing Editors Assn., the American Society of Newspaper Editors, and Sigma Delta Chi, professional journalism fraternity. In addition to the national freedom of information committees, there are active statewide committees of the APME and Sigma Delta Chi.

Right Executive Order

Major target of the press at the federal governmental level continues to be Presidential Executive Order 10501, which grants to appointive administrative heads the authority to withhold information from the public over a wide range of activities. The present executive order, issued in November, 1953, by President Eisenhower, replaced a similar order which had been issued by President Truman, and which also had met with strong but unsuccessful opposition from the press.

Newsmen were successful in 1957 in having a "press gap" clause removed from the controversial civil rights bill before its final passage by Congress. Under the original provision, newsmen, as well as governmental officials and others, would have been subject to a fine and imprisonment for use or disclosure of the proceedings before any executive (closed) session of the Civil Rights Commission which was to be created under the bill. Through the three national freedom of information committees, the American press registered a vigorous protest, and the provision as it applied to newsmen was eliminated.

State Statutes

At the state level, legislation in 15 states during 1957 put positive statutes on the books lessening the restrictions on the flow of information to the public. Most of the legislation opened meetings of local governmental bodies to the public. In most states this legislation had the strong support of newspapers individually and of state press organizations. The scope of the right-to-know statutes ranged from opening up of traffic accident reports in South Dakota to 66 specific bills in California opening up records and meetings.

POLICE PADLOCKED

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP)—Sheriff's deputies Clarence Merce and Richard Saunders radioed their office to send out a supermarket employee with a key to lock a door they found open. A half hour later Merce called again by phone to report, "Hey, that guy locked the store and he locked us in." A second trip by the store employee freed the deputies.

Large Number Of ECC Grads Now Teaching

East Carolina College, through its campus Placement Office, assisted 547 of its graduates to find employment in teaching and other fields during the period from Sept. 1, 1956, to the present. Approximately 74 per cent of this total now hold positions in the field of education, as school administrators, school supervisors, or teachers in public schools and colleges.

Dr. J. L. Oppelt, director of student teaching and placement at East Carolina, has just issued a report indicating employers' requests for personnel and positions accepted by East Carolina graduates.

During the year covered by the report, 2,464 requests were received in the Placement Office from the report states. Of these, 2,250 were for school personnel, and 214 for those in other fields. Around 900 of the calls received at the office were for teachers trained in primary and grammar-grade education.

A total of 412 East Carolina graduates, according to Dr. Oppelt, accepted positions as school administrators, supervisors, teachers in public schools and colleges, or in other types of educational work. Among these 187 now hold positions in elementary schools. Those teaching in grades one through four number 111; and those in grades five through eight, 76.

East Carolina graduates accepting employment in secondary schools, according to the report, number 201 men and women. Areas of instruction in which they are teaching include art, business education, English, foreign languages, home economics, industrial arts, mathematics, music, physical education, science, social studies, and special education.

Nine of those included in Dr. Oppelt's summary are now located in colleges. They are teaching in the fields of business education, foreign languages, geography, health and physical education, and science.

Others reporting employment in educational work are two supervisors of instruction, eleven school principals or assistant principals, one school librarian, and one director of religious education.

Graduates entering fields other than teaching number 135, the report indicates. Positions include a wide variety of occupations, among them those of accountant, auditor, director of church music, home economist in business, home demonstration agent, librarian, airline stewardess, cartographer, farmer, sanitarian, purchasing agent, and reporter.

Scandal Magazine Case Is Declared A Mistrial

By JACK LEFLER

LOS ANGELES (U)—Deadlocked after two weeks of unproductive wrangling, the jury in the Confidential magazine criminal libel conspiracy trial was discharged last night.

A juror disclosed that the jury stood 7-5 for conviction.

And the same juror said the jury heard a rumor Sunday that one of its members had been bribed. The report stemmed from a remark overheard by a juror as she walked through the lobby of the hotel where the jury was quartered.

Said Presiding Judge Herbert V. Walker: "Five to seven jury doesn't look like anyone was bought."

Declaration of a mistrial dropped the curtain on an inconclusive climax to a two-month legal battle over whether Confidential, its sister scandal magazine Whisper and other defendants conspired to libel celebrities and to publish lewd and obscene stories.

But this, said Dep. Dist. Atty. William L. Ritzel, was only the first act.

"The case will be retried," he said. Earlier he had promised that other defendants would be brought to trial on the same charges.

Foreman Fred L. McCulley told Superior Judge Herbert V. Walker that the jury was divided 7-5 and there was no hope of reaching a verdict.

McCulley did not disclose how the jurors were aligned but later Juror LaGuerra Drouet told newsmen the majority was for conviction. Drouet was among those favoring acquittal.

Drouet revealed that the jury-bribing rumor had come to the jurors' attention. Three other jurors said they heard no reports of a bribe offer. Another, Mrs. Martha Dupuy, said she heard it but regarded it as an "irresponsible rumor."

He told reporters that the deliberations, which began Sept. 17, developed into bitter wrangling.

He said there was "a lot of table-pounding" and some "big fights" over the testimony and evidence.

"Things became acrimonious," he said.

Drouet, a bristly mustached sign painter who directed many questions at attorneys and judge during the trial, was the only juror willing to discuss the deliberations last night. The other jurors went directly from the courtroom to their hotel to pick up their belongings and then headed for home. When Judge Walker called in the jury to check on its progress, Drouet carried his belongings in a big paper bag, obviously ready since morning for release.

Defendants Fred and Marjorie Meade heard the jury's report of failure to reach a verdict in calm disappointment.

"We had expected acquittal," Meade said.

But defense attorney Arthur J.

Crowley said: "I feel very good about it. After the prosecution tried everything in the book, they couldn't get a conviction."

Judge Walker ordered the prosecution and defense attorneys and the defendants to return Oct. 10 for setting of a retrial date.

Drouet told reporters that the first test vote was taken last Friday. He said the vote was 8-4 that a Confidential story about actress Maureen O'Hara purportedly engaging in a torrid necking party in a Hollywood theater was obscene. This story was the major issue of the trial.

No more votes were taken until yesterday, Drouet said. A series of ballots covering all six defendants on the charges of conspiracy, libel, obscenity and violating the state business and professional code resulted in 7-5 margins for conviction, he said.

Defendants in addition to Confidential, Whisper and the Meades were Hollywood Research, Inc., and Publisher's Distributing Corp. The Meades were alleged to have operated a "smut station" to funnel movieand scandal to the masses. Mrs. Meade is the niece of Robert Harrison, publisher of Confidential and Whisper. Harrison and other officials of the magazines were indicted but have avoided extradition from New York through a court fight.

Signs Of A Thaw Between Franco And Red Satellite

By THOMAS P. WHITNEY

AP Foreign News Analyst

Talk of trade is going on between the government of anti-Communist Generalissimo Franco of Spain and a Communist Soviet satellite.

Officials of the Spanish Ministry of Trade went to Prague at the invitation of the Czechoslovak Chamber of Commerce, an official organization. The group was headed by the general director of the ministry, Jorge Brosa. The Franco representatives established informal relations with the Czechoslovak officials the possible signing of an interbank agreement and re-establishment of normal commercial relations.

Brosa in an interview given to the Czechoslovak radio said Spain could export to Czechoslovakia agricultural produce, chemicals, ores, canned foods, wines, hides and other items. It could buy in Czechoslovakia machinery, metallurgical products, mail, hops, cellulose and other goods.

"The renewal of trade relations would be of benefit to both countries," he said.

This is a sign that the total coldness in relations between Franco Spain and Communist countries may be thawing.

There have been signs in recent years that the Communists on their side have softened their once fierce hostility to the Franco government. There seems no question that the Soviet Union would like to establish diplomatic relations with Spain.

The dispatch of the Spanish trade group to Czechoslovakia therefore was significant. Trade relations with other satellite states in Eastern Europe — and eventually with the Soviet Union itself — could develop. That might in turn lead to political relations. Eventually, the Communist countries may look for diplomatic relations with a number of Latin American countries, where they have none now.

Ports Boom

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP)—

Growing business at State Ports Authority docks here promises a "remarkable record" for the year.

The prediction was made yesterday by SPA Executive Director Richard Marr after the 100th ship of the year, the SS American Miller, docked for general cargo.

Marr pointed out that 98 ships called at the Wilmington port last year. "From now until the end of the year, we'll set a new record as each ship docks, and the way bookings look now, it will be a remarkable record," he said.

The 8,300-ton American Miller was the first of 24 ships due during October. Her cargo will include wood pulp and paper products, fabrics and heavy machinery consigned to Europe.

Disclose Change In Corn Program Price Supports

A recent national change makes price support available to corn producers, even though they do not plant within their acreage allotment. According to E. O. Ratcliff, Jr., Member of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation State Committee, the rate for North Carolina will amount to approximately $1.23 a bushel and this, he said, compares with the $1.49 support rate to producers in the same area who comply with their allotments. Both of these support levels are subject to review at the beginning of the marketing year on October 1 and they will be adjusted upward at that time if the combination of the supply situation and parity warrants an increase.

According to Ratcliff, this change which allows support to "non-compliers" in the counties where allotments are in effect also affect the rate in counties with no allotments. The rate in the non-commercial area has previously been announced at $1.12 a bushel. However, under Public Law 549 when support is made available to "non-compliers" in the commercial area, the rate in the non-commercial area must be set at 70 percent of parity. This will make mandatory a support level of at least $1.32 a bushel in the non-commercial area in 1957. Corn allotments are established in the "commercial" area which includes 32 counties in eastern North Carolina.

This action by the Secretary of Agriculture is making support available to "non-compliers" was taken to help stabilize the feed grain market now and the hog market in the future, Ratcliff explained. "It also recognized the fact that record supplies of feed grains are in prospect for the 1957-58 year."

The 1957 National corn crop has been estimated at 3.2 billion bushels; the indicated sorghum for grain production is 481 million bushels, almost two and one-half times the 1956 production; and it now appears that the 1957 barley crop is of record size.

According to the Secretary of Agriculture, the most serious implication in all this is the possible incentive for unwise expansion of hog and other livestock production. There were danger signals in the pig crop report which was issued last week. While it showed that farmers are holding the line pretty well on increases in sows to farrow this fall, with an increase of 4 percent from last year, the report for 10 leading corn belt States also showed a probable increase of seven percent in 1958 farrowings for the winter.

High Excitement Tuesday At White House Meeting

By ED CREAUGH

WASHINGTON, D. C. — The White House is no stranger to excitement, but it hasn't seen lately an episode like yesterday's.

The lobby was jammed with newsmen. They overflowed into the driveway in front of the executive offices. A sort of rear guard was posted at the side door, just in case the four Southern governors meeting with President Eisenhower on the Little Rock situation should come out that way.

Minutes, then hours dragged past. The noise level rose to a pitch just short of a shriek.

Then a door opened and the reporters and cameramen who brought you the story surged into the office of press secretary James C. Hagerty. Surged? They all but tumbled in. Once in, they stood, sat and perched on book-cases.

Hagerty stood behind his desk, arms folded, smiling the faint smile that signals to White House veterans: this is a big story, men. It was, too.

The Southern governors telegraphed it also. White-carnationed Luther Hodges of North Carolina fingered a copy of the joint statement by the White House and the governors. The mobile features of Maryland's Theodore R. McKeldin were in constant motion. Florida's prematurely gray Leroy Collins and Tennessee's equally handsome Frank Clement showed similar eagerness.

Hagerty had the privilege of announcing the news, as spokesman for President Eisenhower. It meant: if Arkansas Gov. Orval E. Faubus would pledge to maintain law and order and not to interfere with federal court orders, Eisenhower would pull U.S. troops out of Little Rock. The governors said Faubus was ready to make such a pledge.

It looked as if the gravest integration crisis to date might be peacefully resolved.

And then the bottom began to fall out.

First, Faubus' "assurance" came through from Little Rock. He said he never intended to obstruct the orders of the federal courts—although a U.S. court has accused him of doing just that. He said he was prepared "as I have always been" to maintain law and order—for all that Eisenhower has indirectly blamed him for stirring up mob violence.

"I now declare," said the governor, "that upon withdrawal of federal troops, I will again assume full responsibility . . . for the maintenance of law and order, and that the orders of the federal courts will not be obstructed by me."

There were more hours of waiting. Finally, as midnight approached, Eisenhower issued a statement which for all practical purposes told the governor of Arkansas: You didn't go far enough.

Eisenhower said Faubus' statement doesn't guarantee he will use his full powers to prevent obstruction of court orders. And so, said the President, there is nothing to do but keep the federal troops on duty and hope both sides will keep trying to work out a solution.

The throng of newsmen had dwindled by the time the President's final statement was issued. The pro-and-con pickets who had marched for a time outside the White House gates had long since gone away.

One thing seemed certain: nine Negro children would go to school in Little Rock today still under the protection of the U.S. Army. Beyond that, it wasn't safe to predict.

Boone Says ECC Team Is One Of Best He's Coached

By BILLY ARNOLD
Reflector Sports Editor

Coach Jack Boone, after reviewing pictures of the ECC-Devidson contest this past weekend, is "pleased with the spirit and hustle" his team showed against the Wildcats.

Though East Carolina lost 19-6, Boone was satisfied for the most part. "We felt that we were beating them, holding our own, for the first half of play. Then we made a couple of mistakes and that was the ball game."

The mistakes, an intercepted pass and blocked kick that Davidson turned into scores, "are things that can be worked on," Boone said. "It's the blocking and tackling that worries a coach if it isn't done right, and we think that our boys did well along those lines."

"There's no doubt about one thing," the amiable Pirate coach concluded, "there has been a vast improvement in our club over the past two weeks. Our pass defense is still off, but we feel that it is coming along."

Boone and his assistants were especially pleased with the showing of the younger ECC players. Several freshmen and sophomores were used against the Wildcats and turned in good performances.

One Of The Best
Still commenting on the team's hustle in the last contest, Boone went so far as to label this year's club "one of the best I've ever coached. These boys have a good attitude, they're willing to hustle and they want to win. There's no doubt about that."

After three straight Northeastern Conference games, Greenville high school griders will meet a non-conference foe this Friday night with pleasure.

Selma, which is classed as a AA-Condition team (which means too big for Class A and too small for AA), will play host to the G-Men at Selma.

Workouts for Coach Bud Phillips' Phantoms this week have been limited by the heavy rains. The team went outside Monday, and Phillips and his assistants Reece and Welborn worked on mistakes made in last Friday's 33-12 loss to Wednesday.

Yesterday, the rains forced the Phantoms to remain inside for a skullduggery session. Phillips reviewed plays, blocking and running assignments and other details which he felt needed clarification.

Squirrel, Bear, Deer
Season Opens Oct. 15

The squirrel, deer and bear season will open October 15 and continue through January 1, 1958. The squirrel daily bag limit has been reduced to six squirrels. Two fox squirrels may be included in the six. Pitt County Game and Fish Protector J. O. Teel stated.

The Pitt county deer season will open October 15 and close November 1. The bag limit is one a day, possession one, and two in the season.

The first open season for hunting doves which began September 7 will close October 5. The second open season on hunting doves will begin December 11 and close January 10.

"Doves are much more plentiful now and more hunters have been in the fields and getting more shots," Game and Fish Protector Teel stated today. "Some hunters get their bag limit of 10 in an hour and some hunters use up two boxes of shells and then don't get their bag limit," he added.

The Pitt county wildlife protector requests that if a person finds a dove that is banded that he should turn the band over to the local wildlife protector or mail it to the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Rain this week has not stopped the Pirates from working hard in preparation for the coming North State Conference tilt at Catawba. Monday, the club went outside and worked briefly on wet ground. Yesterday, the Bucs spent about 30 minutes in the gym, then went outside for an hour of hard work in the rain.

Catawba, one of the biggest teams physically in the nation, has played one game thus far this season. Against Davidson, they bowed to the tune of 26-7. Their second contest was rained out last week.

In drills, Ralph Zehring has been at quarterback and Tommy Nash and James Speight are manning the halfback positions. Boone had good words for their play against Davidson and has got them slated for probable starting duty against Catawba, Saturday. Bob Maynard and Bobby Lilley, who alternated at fullback, are expected to see plenty of duty, too, in the coming game.

Other backs who are expected to see some duty against Catawba and who have been playing their share during practice are Stu Holland, George Slaughter, Brownie Salmon, and Glenn Bass.

In the line, Boone said he was happy with the work of his interior linemen during recent weeks. Guards and co-captains Ken Burgess and Dickmonds have paced the forward wall on both offense and defense. Larry Howell and Charles Cook and James Faircloth have been running at tackles. Ends Pug Beale and Tommy Jones are

Phantoms Will Be Near Full Strength

Me stated today that "we know practically nothing about Selma. We haven't scouted them ourselves and have had no reports about their team."

For the first time this year, the Phantoms had no injuries following their last game. Coach Phillips said today that his team "should be near full strength for the Selma contest."

Norfleet Felton, a tackle who missed last Friday's tilt, will be back and Phillips plans to use him at a starting tackle slot. Others who are expected to start are Billy Cox and Steve Noble at ends; Kelly Barnhill at the other tackle; Godfrey Oakley and Wilbur Owens at guards; Albert Crawford at center; Mack Roebuck, Robert Howell, Charles Roberts and Robin Wilfong in the backfield.

Movement Started To Halt Scuffles

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Principals and coaches of city schools were formulating recommendations today on how to prevent some high school students from scuffling at football games.

Al Bechtold, chairman of the Atlantic Commission of the City School Board, called for the recommendations in view of last Friday night's fracas after the Myers Park-Harding game. Police brought 38 young men to headquarters for questioning, but did not bring charges.

Firemen Didn't Stay For Pig

CARBONDALE, Ill. (AP) — The firemen didn't stay for breakfast, although they were invited to an early-morning barbecue.

They answered an alarm to Henry Robinson's place and found the pig pen ablaze. All pigs escaped the fire except one who was done to a turn.

Ames Figures Everything Bad Is Behind Deacs

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Coach Paul Ames figures that about everything bad that could happen to his Wake Forest College football team this season already has happened.

"We made a full season's quota of mistakes in losing to Florida last week," he observed in a brief look back at the Deacons' 27-0 opening game loss while preparing for the home opener here against Virginia Saturday night.

Ames still shudders when he recalls how Wake Forest errors set up Gator touchdowns. Two came on blocked kicks, another followed a punt that traveled only three yards and a fumble led to the fourth Florida score.

Mistakes in connection with the punting game were "unbelievable," Ames commented. They were misplays a high school team shouldn't make, he declared, such as bad passes from center, fumbles and poor blocking on kicks.

The Deacs never got untracked in the wet, muddy going that saw the lights turned out in the second period. Only three times were they able to advance beyond the mid-field stripe.

But Ames did find solace in the fact that the team never seemed to get discouraged and played aggressively.

He plans to continue the two unit system he used against Florida.

"Our second unit did better than we had expected and the line played well overall," he added.

Two husky sophomore fullbacks accounted for 90 of the 134 rushing yards Wake Forest ground out. Pete Manning ripped off 46 yards in 12 carries with the No. 2 unit, quarterbacked by soph Charles Parker. The No. 1 unit, with Jim Dalrymple, converted halfback at quarter, was led by Neil MacLean's 44 yards in five rushes, including one of 24 yards.

But their efforts about summed up the Deacs' offensive.

Their Atlantic Coast Conference game in the finds both teams eager for victory in a season that may become increasingly rough for both clubs.

Virginia, after starting with a 6-6 tie against heavily favored West Virginia, opened ACC play last week by running into Duke and absorbing a 40-0 walloping.

Virginia Coach Ben Martin was unhappy over his team's poor tackling against Duke and conceded that the Cavaliers had been outplayed in every phase of the game.

Virginia managed only 66 yards rushing, 33 by fullback Jim Bakhtiar.

Virginia has won only one conference game in 12 starts over four seasons and that was over Wake Forest, 7-6, last season.

Princess Promised Royal Treatment

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Royal treatment was promised Great Britain's Princess Margaret if she accepts an invitation to attend the annual Tournament of Roses.

John Biggar, president of the New Year's Day pageant, yesterday announced the princess would be afforded a box seat at the flower-decked parade and Rose Bowl football game.

Council Returns Confiscated Bike

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Allan R. Pike got back his lost bicycle with the aid of the city council.

The bike had been sold at a police auction. Pike proved to the council the police had improperly confiscated it from in front of his University of Michigan dormitory.

This cost the city council $20 in reimbursement to the man who bought the bicycle at the auction.

Stalled Runner Finally Took Off

ZANESVILLE, Ohio (AP) — "Fast Runner" is a slow climber. He's a tiger tomcat — one of 16 belonging to the Lee Corder family here — and the other day he climbed a tall tree. Then he "froze" on a high branch.

After four days of coaxing, the family dispatched two men to climb the tree and lower "Fast Runner" in a burlap sack.

Only then did the cat live up to his name. Once on the ground, "Fast Runner" took off — fast.

Injured Mantle, Skowron Series Questionmarks

By JOE REICHLER

NEW YORK (AP) — The uncertain condition of Mickey Mantle's tender left leg and Bill Skowron's aching back belied the 8-5 odds on the New York Yankees today in the World Series opener against the Milwaukee Braves.

The crowd of some 70,000 expected to view the southpaw duel between New York's Willie Ford and Milwaukee's Warren Spahn probably will not see either Mantle or Skowron at their best, although both were listed as almost certain starters.

Unless the two sluggers, who between them hammered 51 home runs and drove in 181 runs during the regular season, get healthy quick—and this would be a real upset—the pick here is a seven-game series triumph for the fit and ready Braves.

The picture of a hobbling Mantle on a painful leg in the 1955 series against Brooklyn, the only series lost by the Yankees in nine October classics since 1942, is still clear in the writer's mind.

Mantle cannot run without pain. He even winces when he misses one of his powerhouse swings. Skowron says it doesn't hurt him to swing but it does hurt when he runs. It would come as no surprise if either or both were unable to do full-time duty in the series.

There is still even some doubt about Ford. The ace left-hander appears to be back in true stride after a sore shoulder aches, but there is a question whether he can undergo the strain of pitching twice or three times in one week, as the opening day pitcher usually is called upon to do in a long series.

Because the teams appear so evenly matched, the outlook is for a long series.

The Braves are in excellent physical shape, with the possible exception of Joe Adcock. The big first baseman's left leg, broken last July, still isn't completely back to normal.

Adcock, a long-ball-hitting right-handed batter, was slated to start against Ford today. However, Manager Fred Haney indicated he may shift to the left-handed-hitting Frank Torre, who filled in so capably for Big Joe during the summer, when the Yankees use a right-hander.

Stengel, who had expected to come back with another left-hander, Bobby Shantz, in the second game, appeared uncertain after yesterday's workout at Yankee Stadium.

"I'm not so sure left-handers are a better bet than right-handers

Comiskey Seeks Open Door To West For Nat'l Teams

By ED WILKS
The Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Vice President Chuck Comiskey of the Chicago White Sox said today the American League would grant the National League's return to New York in a swap for the right to enter Los Angeles and San Francisco when and if it chooses to do so.

"We're not going to let the National League take over in the two most lucrative West Coast cities and then return to New York too," said Comiskey, also an alternate on major league baseball's Executive Council.

"Let's face it," he said. "In 15 years there will be only three two-team towns—New York, Chicago and Los Angeles."

He said he had proposed the swap plan to the American League and that it had been supported.

Going into yesterday's separate league meetings, the American already had proposed an amendment to the major league constitution which would divide New York into two baseball territories after transfer of the National League's New York and Brooklyn franchises to San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Only Brooklyn would remain open territory, shutting the National League out of the Bronx, Manhattan, Queens and Staten Island. Under Comiskey's compromise, the American League would also place Queens in the open classification. Queens is the only New York area looked upon as a feasible stadium site by city officials.

The two leagues, meeting in joint session with Commissioner Ford Frick, later unanimously supported a National League request to shelve any action in the matter until their December meeting, "pending developments."

In a separate meeting, the National League owners:

1. Were advised the New York Giants had filed a formal letter of intent in their shift to San Francisco.

2. Gave the Brooklyn Dodgers a two-week extension, through Oct. 15, on the deadline for their final decision about moving to Los Angeles.

3. Changed their constitution to make only a three-fourths approval necessary for a franchise transfer, rather than the previous unanimous vote.

In Los Angeles, Harold McCall, appointed to negotiate with the Dodgers, said the City Council is expected to approve an acceptable contract for Dodger consideration next Monday.

Things appeared to be rolling much more smoothly for the Giants. President Horace Stoneham announced he had reached an agreement with Joe Cronin, general manager of the Boston Red Sox, for purchase of the San Francisco franchise in the Pacific Coast League.

All that remains for the actual shift of the Giants' National League franchise is an agreement with the Pacific Coast League concerning the amount of damages for invasion of its territory.

Notes On The 1957 Classic

By ED CORRIGAN
NEW YORK (AP) — Carl Hubbell, the old New York Giants' southpaw, picks pitcher Gene Conley as the potential star of the World Series, which opened in the Yankee Stadium today between the New York Yankees and the Milwaukee Braves.

"He is particularly effective against a club the first time they see him. With those long arms and legs you don't know where the pitch is coming from," he said.

Braves' Manager Fred Haney hasn't let the pressure dissipate his sense of humor. Told that Yankee pilot Casey Stengel was worried about the physical condition of Mickey Mantle and Moose Skowron, he laughed. "Tell Casey that I'll let him add two players if either of those guys is out."

Yanks ailing coach Bill Dickey is on hand and he received a royal welcome. . . . Charlie Silvera, ex-Yank catcher now laboring for the Chicago Cubs, also is on hand. . . . This is the first series in Stengel's eight that Silvera has not been a member of the team.

Milwaukee second baseman Red Schoendienst said his aging legs are all set to carry him through the series. "They're all taped up like a race horse," he laughed, "but I still can run."

Milwaukee's big first baseman, Joe Adcock, hinted there will be few home runs, that neither club has a decisive edge. He also reported his injured leg still is weak.

Yank infielder-outfielder Joe Collins usually wears tape around his right wrist. Asked what was wrong, he cracked: "Nothing. It just looks good." . . . Said Yank starter Whitey Ford when he was asked if he'd like to pitch three games: "I'd like it better if four Yankee pitchers have one start each and then we all go home."

Welterweight Title Vacated

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The National Boxing Assn. today vacated the welterweight title of Carmen Basilio, the new middleweight ruler, and then pronounced him "Boxer of the Month."

Fred J. Saddy, chairman of the NBA's rating committee, said it was customary for a champion moving up to a higher division, as Basilio has done, to surrender his old title.

But, in Basilio's case, "out of consideration for his past reputation as a boxer of integrity and courage," Saddy said the NBA gave him 10 days to make up his mind. The 10-day period expired today with no word from Basilio, Saddy said.

Basilio, 30-year-old former onion farmer from Syracuse, N.Y., won "Boxer of the Month" designation in the NBA's October ratings for his split decision victory over Sugar Ray Robinson in their middleweight title bout at New York Sept. 23. The defeat dropped the 37-year-old Robinson to the No. 1 contender's slot.

Bantam Champ In Non-Title Bout

BOSTON (AP) — North American bantamweight champion Henry (Pappy) Gault of Spartanburg, S.C., and young Jimmy Connors, undefeated New Bedford featherweight, will meet in an eight-round non-title bout next Tuesday at Mechanics Building.

BELK-TYLER'S OF GREENVILLE

The Lonely Man

By JAMES RONALD

© 1957, by James Ronald. Distributed by King Features Syndicate.

CHAPTER 33
The Monteiths and their guest went to bed early. After a last word on the landing with Joyce, Deborah entered her room, shut the door, and undressed. She did not take up the nightdress that lay on the bed. Instead, she put on a tailored suit of dark material, her one pair of woolen stockings, and a pair of rubber-soled shoes. She put a flashlight in her pocket.

While changing clothes with a minimum of sound and movement, she kept hearing the bland voice of Hector MacInch. "They're practically decided to prosecute Garvin... meeting in a day or two... a warrant will be issued..." If Enid Sinclair was right, and Hector was guilty, it would suit him admirably to have Andrew put on trial. Oh, yes, he would defend him without a fee. He would defend him right into prison.

Deborah put out the light and sat down to wait for the half hour to pass that would see the rest of the household soundly asleep.

Stealthily raising the window, she leaned out and touched a stout branch of an elm tree that stood near the house. As she had thought, it was near enough to be grasped. Before climbing through the window, she dropped out a knobby walking stick of Ewan's and heard it hit the ground.

The bark of the tree chafed her hands, but she swung nimbly from branch to branch and reached earth safely and silently. That afternoon she had taken her car to a nearby garage for a minor adjustment and asked the mechanic to leave it in the lane behind the place to be called for later. Picking up the stick, she stole down the drive. As soon as she was out of earshot of the house she started to walk briskly.

There was no moon. Her nerves were on edge. It was in this quiet street that she had been attacked the previous evening.

She parked her car in a disused cart track leading into the woods from a country lane some miles from the town. When she switched off the lights, darkness closed in. She stepped out, reached back for the stick, then changed her mind and left it on the driving seat.

With caution she made her way through the night-blackened fields and coppices toward Scobie's house. It was now about eleven but a light still showed in the shack. When she came within a hundred yards of it, the chained dog sensed her proximity and started whining. The door opened and Scobie's warped figure appeared on the threshold. He glowered out into the darkness, stood listening for a time, then cursed the dog and went back in.

Deborah crept nearer, pausing every few paces. Some instinct gave her warning. She chanced using her flashlight for an instant and saw that one more step would have toppled her into a ditch. Jumping down, she took cover in it.

One of her pockets contained a folded sheet of foolscap and a length of twine. Groping in the dirt with her fingers, she found a large stone and tied the paper securely to it. Standing up, she took careful aim.

The stone flew with a crash through one of Scobie's windows. In an instant the door was flung back on its hinges and the man ran out. Releasing the huge black dog, he shouted an angry order to it as it sped into the dark. Scobie withdrew into the shack and reappeared with a shotgun.

The dog found Deborah, without delay and jumped down into the ditch, whining with pleasure. She patted him and gripped his collar. "Good boy. Good Blackie-boy. Quiet boy."

She fondled his ears, fervently hoping that her attentions would keep him from barking and giving her away. Hearing his master's hoarse exhorting shouts, the dog whimpered and dithered, torn between duty and inclination.

Scobie was tramping through fields and thickets with the shotgun, too wrathful for caution or stealth. His harsh shouts were becoming querulous and bewildered. Deborah released the dog with a final pat. "Go, boy. Go."

When the dog came to him through the dark, Scobie greeted it with a kick. "Lost him, did ye? What good are ye?"

After a further period of fruitless searching, Scobie returned to his dwelling, leaving the dog free but admonishing it: "Stay there, dang you! Don't go wanderin' off." When the door closed on him Deborah risked stretching her painfully cramped muscles and sinews. Now came the really dangerous part of the venture. She was glad the flashlight was solid enough to make an effective weapon if she needed one in a hurry.

On tiptoe, hardly daring to breathe, she moved nearer to the shack. The black dog came silently to meet her, staring up at her in distressful uncertainty. A poor baffled creature, unsure of himself for the first time in his life.

Inside the shack, Scobie rummaged about until he found the stone. He had concluded that the smashing of his window had been a loutish prank and that the perpetrator, probably a young farm laborer, had made off on a bicycle. Otherwise, why hadn't the dog found him?

His mental processes were sluggish, and finding a paper tied to the stone disconcerted him. He glared at it mistrustfully, uncertain what to make of it. At last he cut the string and spread the paper on his table in the light cast by the dangle lamp.

An incredulous oath burst from his lips. He stared at the paper as much aghast as if it had fangs. Pasted on it were printed words clipped from a newspaper, in imitation of the blackmailing notes he himself had concocted. His lips moved, forming the words, as he read it:

"What one can hide another can find."

Puzzled and perturbed, he dashed outside again. He cursed the whimpering dog that cringed at his feet. He cast about him suspiciously, not expecting to find an intruder, since the dog had not found one, but reluctant to admit himself beaten. A few steps further in one direction and he could have touched Deborah by stretching out a hand. Finally he went into the shack, muttering and swearing.

Shifting the table aside, he levered up a floorboard, uncovering a rectangular space from which he took an object wrapped in sacking. He cast a furtive glance over his shoulder, half expecting to see a silent watcher in the far corner.

For a while he stood holding the rough parcel in brooding uncertainty. Going out, he hovered at his door, peering about him and cocking his head to catch any stray sound. At last he kicked the door shut and, skirting the hen-run, walked toward the woods.

Occasionally he halted to listen again. He moved among the trees like an animal, with scarcely a rustling to betray his presence. Reaching a tree with a trunk thicker than a man's chest, he stood still under it, eyes and ears alert. Hearing no sound, detecting no stirring, he raised himself on his toes and slipped the wrapped object into a hollow as high among the branches as his hands could reach.

"Deborah was running into a trap, Scobie let out a triumphant yell." Continue The Lonely Man as it speeds to an exciting conclusion.

Brush Salesman Has Wide Range For His Sales

By SAM DAWSON
NEW YORK (AP) — The brush salesman sticks his foot in the doors of factories too.

From tiny jewelers' brushes to the giant ones used to extract sludge in paper mills, there's an increasing market today for power-driven and other industrial brushes.

The latest Census Bureau tally of manufacturers shows annual shipments of industrial brushes at 11½ million dollars a year, a seven-year gain of three million dollars.

The American Brush Manufacturers Assn. estimates 400 million brushes are sold a year in America for personal, household and industrial use. While one of its members, the Fuller Brush Co. of Hartford, Conn., boasts its salesmen can show the housewife 77 different brushes, brooms and mops for use in the home, it turns out 700 different types for industry.

Association members tailor rotary power-driven brushes to specifications of bakeries, textile mills, metal workers, leather workers, electroplating and dairy bottling firms. There are different types for polishing apples, scrubbing railroad cars and cleaning off billiard balls.

It took years of experimenting with various brush sizes and speeds to develop a machine that would wash eggs thoroughly but gently. A Fuller machine now sprays and scrubs eggs against a thin, spiraled revolving brush, then dries them under a fluffier revolving brush in a vacuum chamber. The engineers say it is able to wash hatching eggs without damage.

Bakers found that removal of crust sticking to oven plates with each hot trip took a man the equivalent of two full days each month to remove. Engineers produced a special brush to clean the plates automatically.

Canners have problems. To cool heated food after canning, cold water is sprayed as the cans travel along a conveyor. To remove the one eighth of an inch of water remaining on the top of each can, brush engineers designed an open spiraled brush which flicks off all water and has a drying action, cutting labor costs and eliminating rusting.

One cannery wanting to rush apricots through immediately after the asparagus season without a stoppage for special cleaning ordered power brushes that give a very high shine to the apricots.

Other brushes remove fuzz from peaches, remove surplus sugar from sheet chewing gum and lint from paper on printing presses.

Old Cornerstone Will Be Opened

GREENSBORO (AP) — A cornerstone containing documents dating from 1908 will be opened at Woman's College Saturday during Founder's Day ceremonies.

The granite cornerstone of the condemned McIver Memorial Building, which is to be replaced within two years with a new structure, was sealed with papers on the college and its founder, Dr. Charles Duncan McIver.

Other Founder's Day events include a talk Friday evening by Dr. Oliver C. Carmichael Jr., president of Converse College.

Slamming twins travel, usually, on airlines and railroads on one ticket.

Lady Of Laughter Has Big Film - Making Job

By WILLIAM GLOVER

NEW YORK (AP)—One of television's busiest film-makers is an international lady of much laughter.

A chuckle, says Nicole Millair, can take care of everything from flatterers to censors — and helps keep a damsel feminine in a very masculine world.

Mrs. Millair, a voluble and vigorous Paris blonde who might pass as Doris Day's twin, is executive producer of movies for Sheldon Reynolds.

To such previous series as "Foreign Intrigue" and "Sherlock Holmes," the enterprise has now added its first situation comedy project, "Dick and the Duchess," on view Saturday evenings over CBS-TV.

"I never take myself too seriously," explains Nicole of her intensive TV career which had its odd beginning just seven years ago.

"I laugh most when they try flattery," she adds, expressing high skepticism of praise. "I cut that immediately." Mrs. Millair also responded with laughter to certain blue-pencilling suggested by the network. Someone didn't like it when in one episode Margaret Rutherford, elderly, English star, is called on to remark "I have been smooching since I was 12 years old."

Perhaps, it was suggested, that could be changed to 15?

"I laugh hysterically," reports Nicole. "No change was made."

In another place, however, a change was made—Miss Rutherford was described as widowed seven times instead of married seven times.

Since Nicole is acutely aware of the value of laughter, she even arranged that the dubbed-in sound track of merriment which has become an inevitable part of all TV comedy films, be recorded here.

The films were made in London. As executive producer, she handles everything from script selection, to locating shooting sites, deciding on lighting and planning future projects.

COMMANDER — John S. Gleason Jr., 42, Chicago banker and Army veteran of World War II, is the newly-elected national commander of the American Legion. He is the father of six sons yet to reach military age.

VACATION DETAIL

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — C. L. Taylor, assistant superintendent of a prison camp at Ahoskie, N.C., came here on vacation to get away from routine duties. NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market's rally from near the 1957 lows continued early this afternoon. Trading was moderate.

Key stocks advanced from fractions to around 2 points. Industrials bore the burden of the advance but the rail section also moved ahead although its gains were smaller. Utilities edged higher.

The rate of turnover was somewhat better than yesterday when 1,580,000 shares changed hands in the best rally of two weeks. The market today was higher from the start in a follow-through from yesterday's rise and trading was brisk. Trading quieted for a spell, then picked up to a moderate rate before quieting early in the afternoon.

News included reported prospects of higher government spending in the next fiscal year than previous anticipated and also a new boost in consumer installment debt.

Wall Street had reportedly built up some confidence as a result of yesterday's recovery but the opening of the World Series was expected to detract, as usual, from interest in the market.

As trading progressed, initial prices improved in various divisions of the list. Gains of around 2 points were made by Goodyear, Du Pont, Gulf Oil and Youngstown Sheet.

Lukens Steel, bolstered by its news of record sales and earnings, was up better than a point. Other gains of a point or more were made by Kennecott Copper, U.S. Steel, Johns-Manville and Allied Chemical.

Ahead around a point were Chrysler, U.S. Rubber, Douglas Aircraft, American Telephone, Commonwealth Edison, Anacosta, Union Carbide and International Paper.

U.S. Rubber was among the few leading issues to take a substantial loss, dropping close to a point. Santa Fe and American Cyanamid eased.

A Little Man . . .

vision. He's host on NBC's Saturday morning "Gumby Show," but he isn't happy with the situation.

His unhappiness, according to the way he talks, lies in Pinky's desire to have his own show again.

"Gumby" is a filmed series that has about a quarter of a million dollars invested in it. The owners don't want to lose the value of the name of it, and although I've asked them to either make it the "Pinky Lee Show" or let me go, they won't do it."

The Gumby series was Pinky's first chance to climb back into network TV, which he was forced out of by what even his most bitter critics term a "tough break."

Until June 9, 1956, Pinky was probably the TV industry's biggest name in children's entertainment. He had worked up a big following with his "Pinky Lee Show" and was riding high when he suffered a nervous collapse.

The collapse put him out of action for a year. When he was ready to go back to work, he found that he had lost his air time, primarily to the changing attitude of the industry toward children's entertainment.

Even with the "bad break" behind him and the long road back ahead of him, Pinky says he has nothing to complain about.

"I built a monster for myself, by becoming a children's entertainer. I can't go back to adult work because, frankly, adults won't accept me."

"But," and it's a big word to the little man, "I'm not bitter. I thank God for what I have, and I keep telling people to count their blessings instead of moaning about their troubles."

"Sure, I'd like to have continued the show for a couple of years, but the disappointment caused by the collapse was one of the things you have to face in life. I believe a person is never washed up if he has something to offer, and I think I've won over the hearts of many people."

"Look, this business is like a big wheel that keeps rolling. You can be on top one day and the next thing you know you're on the bottom looking up. I can't guarantee I'll be back, but my type of performer doesn't quit."

Pinky's refusal to quit has been one of the trademarks of a career that started when he was five-years-old. He started out, in his native St. Paul, Minnesota, as a child performer and gradually worked himself into vaudeville, musicals and night clubs.

The long grind, and its attendant search for the one thing that would make him different from other entertainers, caused him to turn to comedy.

"I could see a natural flair for comedy, and I came to know that that's where my success lies."

The turn to comedy for children was discovered not so much by hard work as it was by luck. He started in television in 1950, doing a Pinky Lee show pitched toward adult audiences. A later show proved to him that the fan mail he was getting from children was no accident, and when he had an offer to do a show for children he jumped at the chance.

Pinky's choice brought with it a lot of panning from critics. Critics, though, don't understand him, he says.

"Television critics are a pretty sophisticated bunch of people. They can't see me in a child's way, because to children I'm an illusion, a pixie. The checkered outfit looks stupid to the critics, and maybe it is, but to a child it's a means of identifying a friend."

"I believe that to children I'm like someone in the family to whom the children are devoted. I find evidences of it everywhere I travel, and I'm moved by it. I believe it is a great tribute to the work I do."

"That's one reason I love these personal appearances. They give me a chance to meet people and see their reactions. I can get close to the people I entertain, and find that they still enjoy the entertainment I offer to them."

"I'm satisfied, to a degree, because I can see the results of my work in the Rocky Mounts and the Greenview we visit on these personal appearances."

The satisfaction, however, won't be complete for the funny man in the checkered hat and suit until he's back in the big time with his own show. If his fans can get a full meaning out of the things he's saying now.

While he won't guarantee he'll be back on network TV with a Pinky Lee Show, Pinky does believe that he's still got a chance. "I'm not dead. People still love me, and children remember me. There's still a chance for a new show, maybe not with the original Pinky Lee idea, but with a format that will appeal to children."

His fans believe him, and believe in him. But the networks keep signing up westerns.

Lumber River Cotton Mill Workers Drop Union Ties

LUMBERTON, N.C. (AP) — For the first time in 20 years Lumber River Cotton Mills cranked up today without the sanction of the Textile Workers Union of America (AFL-CIO).

The contract with the union expired last midnight but a full shift reported for work this morning.

"It's just like any other day," general manager J. B. Powell said, "except that the only remarks I heard anybody make were about the World Series."

No international representative of the union could be located here for comment.

Most striking contrast to today's return to work was in 1954 when negotiations broke down and employees remained off the job for 12 weeks.

Today's uneventful continuation of operations without a written agreement followed a series of events which started early this year. Beginning in January there was a wave of resignations from the union and on March 1 a petition signed by a majority of the 250 employees asked the National Labor Relations Board to authorize an election to determine whether the union should continue to represent the employees.

The petitioners claimed that they represented 80 per cent of the payroll. This petition was denied by the board on the grounds that such a request was ill-timed since a contract was in effect.

TWU sent a series of representatives here but their efforts appeared to be in vain and in early April John Pate, president of Local 234 here for 17 years, resigned.

Pate said the union no longer represented the workers and that he could be more effective in their behalf outside the TWU.

Meanwhile, the union international asked for a Senate investigation of "coercion" of employees by management and the community seeking to destroy the union.

So far as is known no such investigation was made.

Lumber River Cotton Mills operates as a unit of Calvine Mills of Charlotte in the textile industry which Lumberton's textile industry originated before 1910 after unionization in 1937 the mills, then Mansfield Mills Inc., gradually passed into outside control.

In 1949 the plants were bought by Hesselein & Co. and operated as Caladonia Mills, Inc. Two years ago Calvine bought the property with the assistance of a community corporation which raised $150,000 to assist in the purchase of the property.

Two Virginians Injured In Auto Accident

DRIVER SAID HE DIDN'T SEE STOP SIGN . . . two injured in accident yesterday.

Two Virginia residents sustained personal injuries in a collision at the intersection of W. Fifth St. and Memorial Dr. yesterday afternoon.

Mrs. Gladys Espinoza of 4680 Washington Ave., Newport News received two broken ribs and a broken collar bone when the automobile in which she was riding crashed into a taxi. The drive for the vehicle, Wallace Lee Feltz of 217 35th St. Newport News, suffered lacerations of the head and arms.

The injured couple were taken to Pitt Memorial Hospital shortly after the mishap by the Greenville Rescue Squad for treatment. They were released later in the afternoon.

Pic. D. L. Minshew of the State Highway Patrol identified the driver of the second vehicle, a 1955 taxi as Peter Eliazah Rasberry of 833 Fleming St. Rasberry escaped without injury.

Feltz told the investigating officer that he did not see the stop sign and ran into the intersection before he could stop his vehicle. Minshew charged him with failure to stop for a stop sign.

Damage to both vehicles was estimated to be $800, $400 to each.
