Flames Never Got Out Of Hand

Fire Threatens Local Residence

Fire for a time threatened a dwelling at E. Tenth and Charles St. yesterday afternoon but the flames were extinguished before they got out of hand.

The fire was discovered at the home of Mrs. J. J. White at 321 E. Tenth St. shortly after 2 o'clock.

Mrs. White was out and no one was at home at the time the fire broke out. Smoke was sighted coming from the rear of the house by a neighbor. He sounded the alarm.

Three fire trucks answered the call and booster lines from two high pressure trucks were used to extinguish the blaze.

Vanguard Crew Sweating It Out

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Launching crews for the Vanguard rocket "sweated out" today the wind and cloud conditions that might determine how soon they would try again to fire their temperamental satellite vehicle.

The forecast was not the best they could have hoped for, but it could have been worse: winds ranging from 12 to 17 m.p.h. on the ground to about 140 m.p.h. at 42,000 feet and, for late today, light showers.

There was no assurance that the rocket would be launched today or tomorrow — only that it would be touched off as soon as conditions permit.

The Vanguard, 72 feet tall and weighing 11 tons, is subject to toppling if gusts on the ground exceed 20 m.p.h.

Altogether the vehicle has attained a part of its amazing speed much higher winds can be endured.

If each of the three Vanguard stages should fire off with perfect timing, force and direction, the vehicle not only would be tested in flight for the first time but the small satellite in its nose then very probably would find itself in orbit in company with the Army's Explorer I and Soviet Russia's Sputnik II.

Both previous attempts to fire the full three-stage rocket failed.

New Street Lamps Are Turned On For First Time Last Night

West End Circle's new mercury vapor lamps flooded the area with brilliant lighting for the first time last night.

City Manager Leonard Bloxam reported to the Utilities Commission that the new lamps had been installed and were used for the first time last night.

The bright new lighting was planned following improvements in the West End Circle area when the N. C. 11-U.S. 13 four-lane bypass was brought through that business section.

The mercury vapor lamps hang from poles mounted in the center islands separating the lanes.

They replace older type street lighting in the West End Circle section.

The commissioners welcomed a new member to the Utilities Commission last night. He is Charles O.H. Horne, local electrical contractor, who was named to the commission last week by the City Council. Horne succeeds Reynolds May, whose term expired March

Governor To Speak At Conference

Earlier in the day at 12:35 p.m. a call came from a dwelling at 618 S. Pitt St. when a stove over-heated. There was no damage.

Fire Department records show the house is owned by John W. Hamilton and occupied by Addie Elks.

Last night around 7:30 a truck was dispatched to the North Greene St. area when an Explorer Scout bus emergency brake caught fire. Only the bus brakes were damaged.

Firemen said the fire apparently originated from a short in electrical wiring between the kitchen and a bathroom of the two-story home. The flames burned inside the walls but were extinguished before they broke out.

However, the fire generated considerable smoke which filled the entire house.

The U.S. spokesman said that President Eisenhower is expected to answer Soviet Premier Bulganin's latest summit conference letter within 10 days.

Dulles, Lloyd and Pineu were reported to have discussed a French proposal for an anti-Communist defense alliance of Mediterranean countries. The nations mentioned as possible members are Britain, France, Spain, Italy, Tunisia, Morocco, Libya and the United States.

The spokesman described this as an interesting proposal.

Before the Big Three foreign ministers met, Dulles declared that the United States would welcome a summit meeting that would not be a "mere spectacle" and that offered prospects of progress toward peace.

The commission's annual gas survey is now underway. Bloxam told the commission. An outside consultant is checking the city's lines to detect leaks which might have developed. Leaks discovered in the survey will be repaired by commission crews.

The annual survey is conducted at a cost of about $500, according to Bloxam. He said he "feels the survey pays off." The superintendent cited the case of another city which had had three recent gas explosions. That city had not had such a survey made in the last 10 years.

Stress 'Need' Of Summit Talk

MANILA — The Western Big Three foreign ministers agreed today to continue to push for an East-West summit meeting but again underscored the need for adequate preparations beforehand.

A spokesman for the U.S. delegation at the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization conference said Secretary of State Dulles, British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd and French Foreign Minister Christian Pineu were in general agreement about what preparatory steps are necessary.

The U.S. spokesman said that President Eisenhower is expected to answer Soviet Premier Bulganin's latest summit conference letter within 10 days.

A-Bomb Accidentally Falls Into City; No Nuclear Blast Follows

FLORENCE, S.C. — An atomic bomb dropped accidentally near Florence yesterday from a B-47 but without the deadly warhead that could have laid waste this city of 30,000.

The bomb exploded from the force of the TNT within it, completely shattering all parts of the bomb. There was a terrific explosion, but without the warhead there was no nuclear blast.

Nobody was killed. Six were hurt.

The Air Force, which allowed newsmen and photographers into the area today for the first time, again dispelled any fear of radiation which may have occurred.

A spokesman said the area was checked last night and again this morning. The checks showed no radiation and no contamination.

Maj. Jack Will, radiological officer at Hunter Air Force Base, Savannah, Ga., where the B-47 is stationed, said hundreds of tiny bomb fragments were recovered in an all-night search of the mile-square blast area five miles east of here in a thinly settled Mars Bluff community.

The six persons were injured, none seriously, when the bomb landed 100 yards from the residence of Walter Bill Gregg. The Gregg home was shattered and six other houses and a church were damaged. The blast left a crater 30 feet wide and 20 feet deep and scores of shorn pine trees.

The Air Force said several large pieces of the highly secret bomb were carried off yesterday by curiosity seekers before the area was roped off. The Air Force issued a plea that these pieces be returned.

Maj. Gen. Charles B. Dougher, commander of the 38th Air Division at Hunter AFB, toured the area today and said guards around it will be removed after the official investigation is completed in a few days.

The Air Force officially described the bomb as an "unarmed nuclear device." It said the device was released accidentally because of "malfunction of the plane's bomb lock system."

Gregg, his wife, three children and a niece were treated at a hospital for minor injuries. The niece, 9-year-old Ella Davies, was held at the hospital for further treatment of scalp wounds.

The child was thoroughly scrubbed by hospital attaches as a precaution against possible radiation.

The Air Force said, however, there was little or no danger of radiation. It said the remote danger of contamination could arise only from scattered nuclear materials.

Nevertheless, an area of approximately two square miles was roped off by air police. A team of Air Force experts flew here from Hunter Air Force Base at Savannah, Ga., where the B-47 was based, and set out to find the bomb fragments.

The Air Force began its appeal for bomb fragments with a radio broadcast last night. An Air Force spokesman told newsmen bomb fragments would not be harmful to anyone handling them. He said the service was "very anxious" to collect as many bomb pieces as possible.

The Air Force said probably the only human danger could occur if atomic dust were taken internally, by inhaling it or through a skin cut. This was termed remote.

Gregg was in the garage in his back yard when the device exploded. Mrs. Gregg was in the house sewing.

"I was sitting there sewing and the next thing I knew I was crawling out from under boards and plaster," Mrs. Gregg said.

Gregg, stunned momentarily, said: "I looked around and my whole living room was gone. It was falling to pieces. The garage started to fall apart too. I got out of there."

An Air Force spokesman, speaking unofficially, said the bomb fragments, hurled as far as quarter of a mile, probably would not be harmful to anyone handling them. He said the Air Force is very anxious to collect as many pieces of the device as possible.

An unarmed atomic bomb, such as the one dropped here, is one in which the complicated mechanisms required to set off a nuclear chain reaction have not been connected and therefore cannot produce a nuclear explosion.

The Air Force said, however, that the bomb which fell here contained all of the elements that would be used in an actual military attack except the complete triggering device.

The Air Force announced last night that there is no threat now of a nuclear explosion or of radiation contamination. Florence residents remained calm, many of them never realizing until today that an atomic bomb dropped close enough to blast this east-coast South Carolina city off the map.

The bomb drop was blamed by the Air Force on a malfunction in the jet's bomb-lock mechanism. The B-47 was on a routine training flight when the deadly nuclear bomb broke away and fell to earth about 4:15 p.m. (EST).

Windows and plaster in five other homes—besides the Greggs—and at nearby Mizpah Baptist Church were blasted away.

President And Economic Advisers Holding Huddle

WASHINGTON — President Eisenhower called his economic advisers into conference today amid signs the administration is hesitating on the choice between tax cuts and spending to bolster the economy.

With Democrats driving ahead in efforts to pump more federal money into job-giving projects, Eisenhower was reported preparing to send to Congress another in a series of recommendations to carry out the step he outlined last week in spending on public works projects now under way.

It calls for an additional $6 million dollars of federal spending now on reclamation and flood control projects. Administration proposals for expanding the highway building program were given to a Senate committee yesterday.

But there was no indication Eisenhower had arrived at any final decision on whether to recommend an even greater increase in such spending — if the economy does not respond to current production — or whether to turn to the tax reductions favored by Vice President Nixon and others. That could hinge on the amount of added spending considered necessary.

Secretary of Commerce Weeks said in Buffalo, N.Y., that "the next 60 days will be the acid test" of whether production and employment will rise under the impetus of programs already started by the administration. But he said "additional steps will be taken whenever necessary."

In Chicago, Secretary of Labor Mitchell predicted the February unemployment total of 5,173,000 "will be the peak," and that an "upturn in employment in late May" can be expected.

Whatever steps are taken, congressional Republicans and Democrats have arrived at an unspoken agreement that, in the interest of creating jobs, budget balancing is out of the window. What one GOP leader described privately as a "tremendous" deficit seemed in prospect.

Senate Democrats, under the leadership of Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson of Texas, pushed ahead with a well-defined schedule calling for passage before an April 3 Easter recess of a series of anti-recession bills boosting housing, highway and farm spending.

The housing bill, consisting largely of $1,850,000,000 of federal funds to make more credit available, comes up for Senate action today.

Sen. Chavez (D-NM) offered, without any immediate signs of leadership support, a bill to authorize a five-year, 14-billion-dollar public works program. It would authorize $2,788,000,000 in outlays in the year beginning July 1.

In the House, Democrats got Republican help in a voting through 321-81 a Senate-passed bill authorizing 1½ billion dollars worth of future water projects. The measure goes to a Senate-House conference committee to iron out differences.

Democrats also laid the groundwork for early House action on a bill to provide emergency unemployment compensation for 16 weeks after regular benefits for the jobless are exhausted.

Sheriff Testifies In Trial Of Cole

LUMBERTON, N.C. — Sheriff Malcolm McLeod testified today that immediately after a Lumberton Indian raid which had broken up a Ku Klux Klan meeting with guns he announced to the crowd:

"Hurry on home, boys. You still have time to see Gunsmoke." (He was referring to the television Western.)

The sheriff resumed the witness stand in the trial of Klan Grand Wizard James W. Cole and Klansman James Garland Martin for inciting a riot at that rally near Maxton last Jan. 18. Both pleaded innocent.

Winding up his testimony today, the sheriff quoted Martin as saying he received a letter from the Klan's Charlotte headquarters telling him to carry guns to all rallies "to give them more authority."

The sheriff said Martin, arrested and subsequently convicted of drunkenness and carrying a concealed weapon at the rally, identified himself as the Klan's titan, in charge of examining applicants for membership.

The prosecution called State Highway Patrol Capt. C. R. Williams as its second witness.

McLeod was the first state witness yesterday as the trial opened in Superior Court. Cole, 33-year-old preacher and former carnival barker, and the 37-year-old Martin of Reidsville, N.C., face a two-year maximum prison term if convicted on the general misdemeanor charge.

McLeod testified Cole told a fellow Klansman he planned the rally to shake up "about 30,000 half-breeds in Robeson County."

McLeod said that growing anti-Klan feeling prompted him to drive to Cole's home in Marion, S.C., to urge against the rally.

"I told Cole that his life would be in danger," the sheriff said.

In his narration of the Jan. 18 meeting, McLeod said he arrived at the site, was escorted by some of the 25 or 30 Klansmen to Cole and said:

"Preacher Cole, you can't call this a lawful assembly with your men standing here armed. If I had 150 deputies breast-to-breast I couldn't guarantee you protection."

McLeod said that by the time he radioed from a patrol car for deputies and highway patrolmen, the shooting began.

No one was seriously injured.

Not Pressured—But 'Bothered', Declares Mack

WASHINGTON — Former FCC Commissioner Richard A. Mack said today nobody put any pressure on him in a contested Miami television channel case—"they bothered me."

Mack, telling reporters he felt not too good, returned for questioning before a House subcommittee investigating alleged pressures and influences on the Federal Communications Commission.

Mack broke off his previous testimony two weeks ago and resigned from the FCC 10 days ago.

Mack testified several people contacted him concerning the contest over TV Channel 10 in Miami.

"Nobody put any pressure on me," he said. "They talked to me, and I don't react to pressure."

Then Mack said: "Let me put it this way—they bothered me."

Asked what he meant by "bothered," Mack said he had lived in Florida all his life, he had known some of the people involved in the Channel 10 case for years and they contacted him.

When he used the term, "bothered," Mack said—"It's pretty hard to slam the door on a friend." He told the questioner, Rep. Harris (D-Ark.), committee chairman, he thought Harris had had the same experience in legislation.

Several committee members commended Mack for what they said was, in their opinion, his attempt to answer all questions.

Life Terms

CHARLESTON, S. C. (AP)—Two men accused in the slaying of a North Charleston liquor dealer were sentenced Tuesday to life imprisonment.

The defendants, Alfred Thomas Douglas of Newport News, Va., and Wayne Harris, formerly of Faeolins, N. C., were accused in the Dec. 6 slaying of E. H. Harrison, 65, while they attempted to hold up his liquor store.

After pleading innocent and after certain recommendations and motions by lawyers for defense and the state, a jury returned a verdict of guilty with a recommendation of mercy.

Presiding Judge Thomas B. Greener then meted out the sentence in General Sessions Court.

Board Of Health Meeting Tonight

The Pitt County Board of Health will meet tonight at 7:30 in the Commissioners Room in the Court House.

Chief topic of discussion for the meeting is expected to be the board's search for a new health director. The Health Department's top post has been vacant since last August when Dr. Walter C. Humbert died.

Members of the board are Chairman Woodrow Wooten, S. Eugene West, D. H. Conley, Dr. Charles Fitzgerald, Dr. W. M. Aldridge, Snodie Edwards and Vance Bunting.

Reinstated Girl At Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — School officials last night announced the reinstatement of a 16-year-old white girl they had expelled from integrated Central High School.

Sammie Dean Parker, who figured in several racial incidents at the strife-torn school, won another chance after she promised to behave.

Shortly before the announcement by the school board, her attorney withdrew a state court suit which sought to make officials readmit her.

The petite blonde was expelled Feb. 26 for the rest of the term. The school board said she was ousted in connection with an attack on a woman school official.

Earlier the board had suspended Sammie Dean after cards appeared at the school reading "One down, eight to go." This was a reference to the expulsion of Minnie Jean Brown, one of nine Negro students who entered the school last fall under the protection of federal troops.

Distribute Surplus Food Here Friday

Pitt County is expected to receive 25,623 pounds of surplus food for distribution Friday in a special emergency relief program. County Auditor H. Reginald Gray said this morning.

The food will be picked up today at North Carolina Department of Agriculture storage facilities at Camp Butler and brought to Greenville. It will be broken down into family-unit lots tomorrow and distributed Friday.

Distribution will take place between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. at Polard's Supermarket on North Greene Street in Meadowbrook. County employees will direct the distributions and also handle clerical procedures, Gray said.

The food will be distributed to 317 Pitt County families certified under the emergency relief program. A total of 1,540 persons are included in the certified family units and will be eligible to receive quantities of cheese, dried milk, flour, meal and rice. Distribution will be based on the number of persons in each family unit.

According to Gray's tabulations this morning, he said the county should receive 3,077½ pounds of cheese, 2,830½ pounds of dried milk, 9,940 pounds of flour, 7,550 pounds of meal and 2,265 pounds of rice. The figures are not official, he said, since MCDA officials will control actual amounts to be turned over to the county, but he added that they are based on the N C D A commodity distribution guides.

The Friday distribution will be the first under the emergency relief program which grew out of special action taken by Greenville's City Council and the Pitt County Board of Commissioners during extremely cold weather in February. The county was declared eligible for the surplus food by the State Department of Agriculture and certification of individual families was completed last Friday by the Pitt County Department of Public Welfare.

College Gals Dazzle Dads

By DOROTHY ROE
AP Women's Editor

College girls are smarter today than they were in my campus days. They have learned how to handle fathers.

I have just been a secret and uninvited observer at a modern phenomenon known as Happy Pappy Weekend at Skidmore College, Saratoga Springs, N.Y. This is an annual event to which all fathers of students are invited, and at which mothers are strictly out of place.

Last weekend 700 Happy Pappies showed up at Skidmore, straining the capacities of local hotels, motels and boarding houses. With a student body of 1,100 girls, this meant that every father within a day's traveling distance managed by hook or crook to get there.

They were all slightly dazed by the idea that their daughters would conceal all dates for the weekend just to entertain dear old Dad.

Dormitories around the campus bore streamers lettered variously: "Welcome, Happy Pappies!" "Yes sir, he's my Pappy!" and "Daddy, can you spare a dime?"

By instruction, the converging fathers brought along any relics of their own college days still wearable. Some sported moth-eaten raccoon coats, some wore freshman caps of vintage 1925, some even had retrieved from the attic bell-bottom trousers and fraternity blazers.

From the moment of arrival, the dazzled dads were given the full treatment usually accorded only to be favored boy friends. They were allowed to take their daughters out to dinner, were taken on conducted tours of the campus, were introduced to the faculty and house mothers and urged to dance the Charleston.

If, sometime during the festivities, the girls point out delicately that they need new furniture for the dormitory or insulation for the horse barn, fathers are in such a mellow glow that check-writing is relatively painless.

Restaurant and hotel owners report that Happy Pappy Weekend nets the biggest business of the year.

Daughters say that it's more fun even than their winter carnival.

And fathers say, "Don't forget to invite us back next year!"

Foreign Study Scholarship Will Be Awarded

Woman's Club Speaker's Topic 'Wills, Trust Funds'

J. T. Marston Jr., president of the State Bank and Trust Company, was guest speaker at the Woman's Club meeting held Friday afternoon.

Marston spoke on "Wills and Trust Funds," telling the members that every husband and wife should have a will. He discussed various methods that are used in making wills.

Afterwards, Marston gave a list of suggestions to consider when planning to make a will.

A discussion period followed the speaker's talk.

Mrs. Jasper Tripp, chairman of the Home Department, introduced the speaker.

Mrs. J. C. Galloway Jr., president, presided during the business session.

Mrs. J. R. Jackson, chairman of Health and Welfare Committee, informed the group that the Cancer Drive was scheduled in April. She also asked for donations of old linens and cottons for a deserving patient.

The International Relations Committee chairman, Mrs. Michael Luskin, reminded the group of the World Affairs Institute program at East Carolina College on March 13. She encouraged all members to plan to attend the five events.

She said that the principal speakers will be Vice Admiral Charles B. Momen, U.S.N., retired, and Ernest K. Lindley, noted journalist. John C. Metcalfe, Washington news analyst and commentator, will preside.

All members were requested to give some of their flowering shrubs to Mrs. Harvey Tripp, chairman of Green Springs Park, so her committee could plant them in the park.

Prior to the business meeting, a social hour was held. The hostesses, Mrs. W. E. Roseveare, chairman, Mrs. N. C. Brooks, Mrs. J. L. Evans, Mrs. N. L. Garrison, Miss Lelia Higgs, Mrs. H. R. Rogers, and Mrs. J. L. Fleming, served coffee, cakes, mints and nuts.

An arrangement of white carnations centered the dining room table. A St. Patrick's motif was carried out in decorations.

ROBERSONVILLE—Mrs. Charlie Gray pointed out to the Book Lovers Club that West Virginia has long been a leading state in natural gas and coal, and forests cover much of its area.

"The Capitol of the state, in Charleston, is considered one of the most beautiful in the United States, and it has a dome which bears a resemblance to the one in Washington, D. C.," said Mrs. Gray.

The speaker also noted that West Virginia has many large farms where fruit and cattle are raised. Mrs. Gray concluded her talk by describing the Methodist Church where the first Mother's Day service was held and the famous apple tree that is 15 feet tall and 168 years old.

"The first free rural mail delivery was tried on an experimental basis in West Virginia," added Mrs. Gray.

Mrs. Claude Greene Sr. presided over the meeting held at the home of Mrs. Sherwood L. Roberson. Following the program the hostess served homemade cake and jello topped with whipped cream to the members and two guests, Mrs. Forrest E. Boone and Mrs. Gray.

30 Years Ago Today

March 12, 1928

A reference to our Looking Backward Column today revealed the fact that just 30 years ago freight traffic on Tar River was so heavy that the steamers were forced to make Sunday trips in order to catch up. This was just 30 years ago, and while our town and section have progressed rapidly along other lines during this little more than a quarter of a century, we are worse off, from the standpoint of water transportation than we were then. It was just 29 years ago that a second railroad was built into Greenville and this road purchased the river boat lines and leased the operation of the same. Since that time we have been faced with continual raising of freight rates until the stage has been reached when we cannot compete with the places that enjoy the favorable rates made possible by water transportation.

Home Improvement In A Big Way
Patricia Fitzgerald, 4-H Club member and daughter of B. R. Fitzgerald of Pelham, is going about her Home Improvement project in a big way.

According to Caswell County Assistant Home Agent Lillie Ellen Wise, plans have been made and are underway for re-finishing furniture, purchasing a new rug, making draperies or curtains, and painting the walls and ceiling in the living room.

Perhaps this sounds like a tall order for one 4-H Club girl, but Patricia's parents have agreed on the plans. Besides, it's to be a long-range project to be undertaken as the money and time become available.

Records Helped Prove It
Will a sewing machine pay for itself? Several years ago, Mrs. Raymond Morris, of Columbia, R. I., was in desperate need of a new sewing machine. While shopping around, Mr. Morris thought they were rather expensive, but Mrs. Morris had in mind stacks of feed bags she had at home and how they could be used for clothes and linens for her family. But she needed a new machine to make good use of these bags.

In the end, she convinced her husband that she could make the machine "pay for itself," at least to the extent that she got her machine. Then the fun began!

Ann E. Davenport, Tyrrell home agent, says that Mrs. Morris kept a strict record of all her feed bag sewing. She reported recently to Mrs. Davenport, "It took me five years, but I paid for it by using the feed bags in sewing. Every time I made an article, I took off 25 cents for each bag since I could have sold the bags for that. When I added the price a similar article would have cost ready-made, I know now that my machine did pay for itself in the five years."

When asked if she still kept these records, Mrs. Morris laughed and said, "No, I've already proved my point."

Extending Citizenship Ideas
One of the 1957 Home Demonstration leadership award winners, Mrs. Theta Barnard, Clay County, has done an outstanding job of extending citizenship ideals and ideas in her county over a period of years. Her work in promoting citizenship in her community and county helped her receive the recognition in the leadership awards program.

As county chairman of the home demonstration Citizenship Committee, Mrs. Barnard recently organized local committees from home demonstration clubs to visit the five 8th grades in four county schools to explain to the youngsters about a new citizenship contest being sponsored by the home demonstration clubs.

According to Velma B. Moore, home agent, the contest provides that 8th grade students are eligible to submit an essay on one of six subjects to be due when the contest closes March 31st. Also the entrants will be judged on their personal development, their personality traits, and their participation in activities that show good citizenship.

Recession Cure? Let's Just Wait

We have a sneaking suspicion some amongst the nation's political leadership are making artificial "headlines" in talking anti-recession measures.

Now there's no doubt some areas are pinched economically these days; just as unquestionably there are vast areas of these United States which are feeling no pain from the recession. Still, one of the dizziest contrasting conditions we can visualize is with us, in the form of growing inflation and this "recession." It doesn't make good sense.

All these proposed spending programs and contemplated tax-cutting actions might be a crutch to fall back on if the business picture got entirely out of hand.

Even so, suppose Washington did cut taxes in April; did add to federal spending by two or three billions of dollars... the stimuli would not be generally felt until many months later. Possibly it would not be until the pre-Christmas season, which is a "boom time" for just about everybody any way.

One of the more weird impressions we gain these days is that people seem to expect no end to the upward rush of prosperity; the thought of any leveling off, of the national economy sort of "catching up on itself" seems foreign. There seems no room left for the very reasonable thought that even business might need to catch its second wind.

Sure, business is "off"; we knew it was coming... some of the best observers of business trends predicted today's sag months ago. They said then that March would probably see the beginnings of an upturn. Half of the forecast was right, the other half hasn't been proven wrong.

And despite the slowdown, consumers are still consuming... clearing the way for further production in a reasonable future. Nor has there been any slackening in the vast federal spending, an inflationary and artificial prosperity-making machine which only recently required raising the limit on our national debt. If federal spending alone would cure the recession-blues, there seems no reason for them to have even started.

Would more such spending do any better? Too, all the words of concern emitting from Washington could well be construed as alarm and uncertainty... spreading and cultivating fear and doubt in the public mind. Living and breathing in such an atmosphere conceivably could induce such a psychological depression as does not exist.

Let the record be read straight and true: There is not now a depression, there is no sound and valid reason why the current business slowdown should not cure itself, talk of remedial action now would not be felt for a long time to come. Money is being spent these days at a rate which makes Rooseveltian remedies pale by comparison.

The more sensational aspects of relief measures always make the big headlines in newspapers, the big pictures in news telecasts, the most words in radio-reporting. The common, everyday comforts and prosperity of the majority are simply ignored.

The outlook is anything but dark.

Aggressiveness In Republicans

By LYNN NISBET

REPUBLICANS — Under leadership of its youthful new chairman, William E. Cobb of Morriston, the Republican party in North Carolina is aggressive and optimistic at state level. Even the enthusiasm of the younger group which took over the organization at the state convention last Saturday could not counteract the apologetic and defensive attitude with respect to national affairs. Cobb was elected chairman without opposition and immediately issued a challenge for Republicans to put full local tickets in every county and district, and to get out a maximum vote in the general election. He roundly condemned Democratic dictatorship and inefficiency in government administration. He was frequently interrupted by applause.

By way of contrast, Rep. Charles R. Jonas of the tenth district, North Carolina's only Republican in congress, during his keynote address never once mentioned Eisenhower (except in reading a newspaper clipping); nor did he mention the farm program or reciprocal trade. He had many complimentary remarks about the national administration deserving A-plus for maintaining peace and reducing taxes, and commended Dulles by name.

Later when Lee Potter, assistant to the national chairman, referred to Eisenhower the reference drew no applause from the audience. Both Jonas and Potter emphasized that unemployment was no worse now than it was under Democratic regimes in 1939 and 1951. Jonas said there is plenty in the record of the present national administration to occasion pride and confidence, and which "you can defend or proclaim," depending how you look at it. At state level every indication is there will be aggressive "proclaiming" and no defending for the next couple years.

ORGANIZATION — The Republicans, like the Democrats, had a hassle over amending the Plan of Organization. The younger element led by Cobb wanted to give a bonus on the state executive committee to counties which put full local tickets in the field, or penalize the counties which put full local tickets in the field, or penalize the counties which did not. They failed to get that, but did get two additional women and two more Young Republicans, as well as all Republican members of the General Assembly made ex-officio members of the committee.

Suggestion to give the State committee or convention power to override or veto procedure of local and county groups failed. A similar proposal was recently voted down by the Democratic organization.

After adopting several changes tending to bring the party closer to the people through expanded representation on the central committee and keeping big precincts from smothering small units, the Republicans did an about face and wrote into the Plan of Organization that hereafter meetings of the state executive committee shall be "executive sessions." There was closer division in the vote on this point than any others, and some observers doubted that many delegates realized what they were doing. One delegate who did not like the idea quipped that "it looks like the Republicans are joining the Ku Klux underground."

EASTWARD — Evidence accumulated the Republican leaders have their eyes set on the Piedmont and Eastern counties. The spokesman for the national committee pointed to the ninth district as a definite and attainable goal. The new vice chairman and treasurer of the party come from Moore county, replacing officials from Alexander and Iredell. And in his response to the address of welcome Clyde Roberts of Madison predicted that Forsyth county and Winston-Salem would soon be the heart of Republican strength in the state, a distinction now held by Mecklenburg.

APATHETIC — Despite the partially successful of Chairman Cobb to put some fire into the spirits of the delegates, the convention was generally apathetic. It got off to a start about one hour late, and that behind time schedule was maintained throughout the day. Although the more than 1,000 delegates exceeded advance estimates, they were almost lost in the spacious new coliseum at Winston-Salem with seating capacity of more than ten thousand. Early arrivals picked up the standards designating where their county should be seated and placed them at will. Result was the first district and 12th district delegations were situated side by side.

There was not a single rollcall vote, consequently no occasion to accredit the correct number of votes on each question. Little counties with big delegations could easily outvote big counties with meagre attendance. The single contest over seating the Orange county group was for that reason entirely unimportant. On the one vote taken by standing count even Democrats could have been counted without question.

With no statewide campaign for Governor or U.S. Senator, and it being a non-presidential year, the party leaders decided to let the platform adopted two years ago ride for another biennium. For the statewide elective positions on the Superior and Supreme Courts the convention made no nominations, leaving it up to individuals to file for the primary if they desire.

Word had gone out that there would be no real contests at this convention, and many party leaders expected only 500 to 600 delegates. Double that number showed up. While there was little enthusiasm manifested at this year's convention there was in the wind a feeling that two years from a re-organized Republican party will be aggressive and militant.

Greenville Group Has Tcken A Positive Step

Greenville's Chamber of Commerce has taken a positive step by asserting its interest in the development of the phosphate mining and processing in prospect for Beaufort County.

The Chamber of Commerce board of directors, in our opinion, has taken wise action in adopting a resolution urging the Council not to split up the underwater lands of the Pamlico and Pungo Rivers in phosphate leases to several companies.

A capital outlay of many millions of dollars will be required to provide machinery and equipment for the mining and processing operations proposed in our neighboring county. It stands to reason that no company is going to make such a capital outlay unless it is sure of sufficient area to assure it a reasonable return on its investment. It is unlikely any phosphate development takes place in Beaufort County if the state splits up the leases on its lands in the area as has been proposed.

Why is the Greenville Chamber of Commerce interested in proposed phosphate mining and processing operations in Beaufort County?

Obviously the location in any adjacent county of an industry which will provide jobs for several thousand people will directly benefit Pitt County. Indeed, if a major phosphate industry can be developed in Beaufort County, it will bring major benefits to all of the counties of this area.

By its resolution, the Greenville Chamber of Commerce has shown it recognizes the vast economic significance of the development of a major phosphate industry in Eastern North Carolina. We trust the Council of State, which blocked the lease of the river bottoms of the Pamlico and Pungo Rivers to one company, will reconsider its position. We trust the Council of State will not make itself a stumbling block in the way of what might well be one of the major economic opportunities Eastern North Carolina has had in a generation.

Jottings From The Notebook

By ELMER ROESSNER

Here is an elaboration of a few jottings in a reporter's notebook:

Losses. More than an average number of big corporations have been announcing heavy losses for the last quarter of last year. Some of these losses run into hundreds of millions of dollars. Readers have asked where the companies get the money to keep going after such losses. Do they have it saved up? Do they borrow it from banks? Or do they just "run short" for a while?

None of these, in most cases, they take in enough to pay wages, salaries and bills. But they don't lay away their depreciation reserve.

Let's take the imaginary X Corp., the one that makes all those Brand X products you keep hearing about on television. It has a $100,000,000 plant, which depreciates by $5,000,000 a year. In normal years it puts aside that much for replacement of facilities.

In the last twelve months it took in $496,000,000. Total costs, including depreciation, were $50,000,000. That's a loss of $4,000,000. Nobody had to make it up. The company put only one, instead of five, million dollars in its replacement fund.

UNEMPLOYMENT: GENERAL AND LEGAL. Statistical. Unemployment figures are slightly worse than they seem. Take Joe and Mamie Doakes. Joe works, Mamie, who was a sten before they were married, keeps house. If the Doakes home in one of the thousands chosen for the government's unemployment sampling, when the government man calls and asks if anyone is unemployed and actively seeking work, the answer is no. Unemployment score: 0.

But if Joe is laid off, Mamie will start looking for a job to tide them over. And if a government surveyor calls and asked how many in the household are unemployed and looking for work, the unemployment score is: 2.

This does not mean that the unemployment figure is twice what it should be. Sometimes when a man is laid off he will go on a vacation, or take a few weeks to fix up the summer cottage, and he won't be counted at all. But some government workers think the unemployment total is slightly exaggerated.

Fair trade. When fair trade died in the small appliance field—as it did when General Electric, Sunbeam, Schick and others gave up trying to fix retail prices—it threw a lot of people out of work. Enforcing fixed prices kept hundreds of attorneys, investigators, process servers and others employed. Price-fixing companies spent millions of dollars a year litigating with price cutters; the latter spent half as much in defending themselves.

NO LONGER A DIRTY WORD. Discounters. From this corner, it looks as if Max Hess was right when the Allentown merchant told the Stroudsburg (Pa.) Business Men's Association that discount houses would be a thing of the past. However, he may be wrong when he said they would disappear.

The fly-by-nighters will, of course. But the big discount houses will gradually become department stores, just as the department stores are gradually becoming discount houses. And some aren't being gradual about it.

This will take some of the fun out of discount shopping. It won't be like the early days when a bargain hunter had to walk up two flights and whisper, "Sid Margolius sent me," before he was admitted and allowed to buy a $7.50 fountain pen for $4.95.

By name, a rose. "Human Events" recently published an article by your reporter on the fantastic and wasteful flow of government publications. Several friends in government resented the article. One said "Most of these government publications are very good."

When A Dam Burst

By JACK LEFLER

SANTA PAULA, Calif. (AP)—The green valley of the Santa Clara, curving gracefully from the mountains to the sea, sleeps peacefully.

In towns down the sloping southern California valley, only a few lights gleam.

It is near midnight March 12, 1928.

Among the thousands who dwell along the usually dry, sandy channel of the Santa Clara River below St. Francis Dam, only a handful are aware that the concrete dam above them is leaking. They are nervous but not quite believing.

Chester Smith, a rancher, dozes fitfully four miles away. He can't forget his trip to the dam the day before. He saw water seeping from where the western side of the dam anchors into the San Francisco Canyon wall.

A thunderous roar and the sound of snapping trees springs Chester Smith from his blanket. "The dam has broke! The dam has broke!" he shouts to his family.

They reach the hilltop as a wall of water surges by with the roar of a thousand locomotives, sweeping everything before it.

Behind the thundering flood, St. Francis Dam—185 feet high, 600 feet long—lies in ruins, split asunder by the power of 12 billion gallons of water stored for the people of Los Angeles, 35 miles southeast.

The wave of water is 75 feet high as it sweeps by the towns of Sausalito and Newhall, edging the winding valley some eight miles below.

In the chill night, George McIntyre of Newhall hears a roar. The water hits the house as George and his father dart outside. Within a moment they are swimming side by side in the torrent. George grabs at a tree and pulls himself into the upper branches. His father disappears. His two brothers never got out of their beds.

The onrushing water scoops up 400 houses in the 16-mile gorge between the damsite and the village of Piru, and 450 persons perish.

The old watchman, Ed Locke, is up and about at the Southern California Edison Co. work camp at Piru. A terrifying roar sends him scrambling through the bunkhouses to awaken 200 men. Forty escape. The others, among them Ed Locke, are carried away.

The watery avalanche, holding its crest at 30 feet as the valley fans out, plunges on through Fillmore and Santa Paula, rolling houses with it. Hundreds quickly grab belongings and head for the hills. Many are too slow, too late.

Mrs. Sisto Lunas drags a mattress from her home and hurls her three children and herself upon it. They float to safety. Bill Spring swims two miles with a child clinging to his neck.

As the sun rises, the flood has passed and left itself in the Pacific. Behind lie 45 miles of desolation and terror.

Rescue workers search the muddy, waterlogged valley. Bodies are piled in makeshift morgues. Rancher Henry Keninger cries, "I've lost seven. And I haven't found a one."

This was the St. Francis Dam disaster.

Investigation brought out that the dam was anchored in an unsuitable geological formation that weakened and gave way under tremendous pressure of the lake it impounded.

On the 30th anniversary of one of the nation's greatest disasters, the valley and its people still bear the scars of tragedy.

At the damsite two hillocks of shattered concrete stand as grim monuments. A tiny steam cascade between the mounds. Squirrels play in the ruins.

Down in the valley there are people who lost their families and who, themselves, felt the clutches of the rushing waters. For most, the memories are so terrible that even now they do not want to talk about the night the St. Francis Dam burst.

Notes Right Off A Cuff

My brother Carlton, swears up and down that the following story is true. He says he stood by and heard it word-for-word.

This teen-ager walked into a local record store. "Do you have 'La Dee Dah'?" she asked the clerk. "Yes, ma'm," replied the clerk as he began thumping through the 45 rpm's.

"Here it is," he said taking a record from the pile. The sweet young thing took the record with a bright smile. Then her face fell.

"Oh, no," she protested. "This is 'De De Dinah'. I wanted 'La Dee Dah'."

The clerk assured her they had sold out of that particular record but that it was on order.

Oh, well, "Blessa my soul."

Spring is trying its dead level best to break through the cold weather which has gripped the nation this winter. And I, for one, will welcome it this year.

Last Friday and Saturday were warm days locally and one sure sign of Spring activity showed up. Property owners began burning off their lots.

Greenville firemen stood by while nine lots were burned off on those two days. That's a service that the local department offers, by the way.

The overwhelming number of communities in America, where school bond elections are held, vote in favor of raising funds to build new schools.—The School Executive.

Property owners who wish to burn off lots can call the department as a precaution.

The fire laddies won't actually burn off the lots but they will stand by with a truck while the owners fire the lots to make sure the flames don't get out of hand.

What with that sign of a beautiful Spring Saturday, what happened Sunday? Why it rained all day, of course.

Public Forum

To The Editor:

It has been something of a shock to have read in your paper the account of the murder of the Reverend Leonard J. Boyett, Pastor of the Grandview Baptist Church at or near Los Cruces, New Mexico, at the hand of his own 14-year-old son.

That was a cruel blow which the wife of the murdered man dealt him in the court room the other day after his lips had been silenced and could not be present to defend himself of such slanderous insinuations. I cannot resist the urge that boils up within me to rise up in defense of this murdered victim who was as truly a martyr to the cause of right as any servant of God who was ever burned at the stake; and such a cruel and wicked blow as his wife dealt him should not be allowed to go unchallenged. It is evident that he was a man of God, who was trying to practice what he preached, and that he was trying to bring up his own sons in the way they should go. It was a tragedy great indeed for him to have been shot down in cold blood by the son he loved, and cowardly shot in the back at that; but the greatest tragedy that ever happened in the life of the Reverend Leonard J. Boyett was when he became infatuated by and bound in the bonds of wedlock to the woman who would not cooperate with him in the rearing of their children as they should have been reared.

The sons of men simply do not rise up and kill their fathers in cold blood like that when the mothers have cooperated with the fathers in their efforts to bring up their children in the paths of righteousness. But the Reverend Boyett was not the only minister of the Gospel of Christ, who, in his weaker moments has allowed himself to be taken in by the woman who has made shipwreck of his life; for that seems to have been one of the greatest weaknesses of many a man of God.

This woman held her murdered husband up before the court as being a tyrant and a brute because he was opposed to his boys attending school dances, moving picture shows and such other places of questionable amusement. But she would have done well to have remembered that the great Prophet Moses and the great Apostle Paul laid a terribly low rating on the dance. It was when Moses came down from the mountain and hearing the camp of Israel beheld the calf and the dancing that the anger of Moses burned hot within him, so that he threw down the tables of stone which he had held in his hands, and broke them at the foot of the mountain as a visible expression of the fact that those idolatrous, dancing Israelites had broken the covenant upon which their only hopes depended. And centuries later the Apostle Paul, in referring to this incident sandwiched the dancing of those Israelites slap in between their idolatry and their immorality, and went right on to tell how God smote twenty-three thousand of them in one day for having engaged in such abominations. In my opinion there are few things that have contributed more to the fact that so many of the girls of high school age have been giving birth to babies out of wedlock in our land than the influence of sex exciting dances, moving pictures and television shows.

man's greatest adventure—space. What can we definitely expect? 1. A hypersonic manned bomber launched like a missile which will be boosted to an initial speed of 18,000 miles per hour at an altitude of several hundred thousand feet. The bomber could circumnavigate the globe and glide back to earth.

2. A counter-missile for ICBM's and satellite interceptors.

3. Man will orbit around the Earth in a recoverable satellite. Unmanned satellites will keep the globe under surveillance in an orbiting reconnaissance—space police station.

4. A permanent small-space station.

5. A vehicle for lunar landing parties and eventual interplanetary reconnaissance.

These are well within the technical grasp of the aircraft industry. Only two key points of space flight remain unresolved: Making the decision and then backing that decision with the necessary funds.

Mostly A Matter Of 'When?'

(From the Aircraft Industries Association publication 'Planes') Preparations for man's assault on the infinity of space have reached a state-of-the-art point where manned flight to the Moon and back to Earth and unmanned reconnaissance of Venus and Mars are completely realistic goals. Much of the necessary hardware is being constructed by the aircraft and missile industry. Many of the technical problems have been solved through enterprising, carefully calculated research and development programs jointly carried out by industry and government.

Less than five months ago, this statement of space possibilities would have been largely greeted with skepticism. Today, the same skeptics might claim the statement is too conservative. The Explorer and Spunkis I and II are mainly responsible for this overwhelming switch in opinions.

The essential fact is that our space capabilities did not suddenly materialize in the last five months. The aircraft and missile industry, supported by elements of the military services and other government agencies, has had its sights firmly on space for several years. There was never a question if we could fly far beyond the Earth's atmosphere. The only question was when we wanted to do it—when we could afford it.

The scientists and engineers directing the ICBM and IRBM programs estimate that 90 percent of the knowledge acquired in the research and development effort involved in these programs can be applied to space flight. The inertial and celestial guidance systems, the nose cones to resist thermal heating, the exotic fuels, the manufacturing techniques, the highly skilled scientific and engineering teams, and the expert industrial management involved in the military missile programs are all of immediate, direct use in manned and unmanned space flight.

The aircraft industry has made heavy investments totalling more than $1-billion in the past ten years for facilities and research and development programs, and is now engaged in spending at least another $1 billion within five more years. The first fruits of these investments are apparent in the successful test flights of ICBM's and IRBM's; the series of supersonic Air Force and Navy fighters and fighter-bombers; in supersonic bombers; in intercontinental bombers capable of launching missiles; in a new "chemical" bomber now under development which will be capable of Mach 3 speeds, and performances altitudes that brush at the fringes of space; in plans for nuclear-powered aircraft; in a manned aircraft under construction that is aimed at flight into space and return to Earth. And, of course, the Explorer, which will soon be joined by its brothers and sisters.

All of these accomplishments, and the present more advanced research and development programs of the aircraft and missile industry are propelling us into man's greatest adventure—space. What can we definitely expect? 1. A hypersonic manned bomber launched like a missile which will be boosted to an initial speed of 18,000 miles per hour at an altitude of several hundred thousand feet. The bomber could circumnavigate the globe and glide back to earth.

2. A counter-missile for ICBM's and satellite interceptors.

3. Man will orbit around the Earth in a recoverable satellite. Unmanned satellites will keep the globe under surveillance in an orbiting reconnaissance—space police station.

4. A permanent small-space station.

5. A vehicle for lunar landing parties and eventual interplanetary reconnaissance.

Most Dressmakers Go Back To Jobs Today

NEW YORK (AP) — The International Ladies Garment Workers Union has given orders to about a quarter of 165,000 striking dress workers to return to work today.

Return of the remaining workers awaits ratification of a settlement by two of the five employer associations that were involved in the six-day strike.

The three groups that accepted contract terms yesterday represent dress jobbers, who prepare material for dressmaking and handle distribution of the finished product. Their acceptance returns 25,000 to 30,000 employees to work.

The jobber groups are the National Dress Manufacturers Assn., the Affiliated Dress Manufacturers, Inc., and the Popular Priced Dress Manufacturers Group.

The two other groups represent contractors — employers who actually make the dresses.

One, the United Better Dress Manufacturers Assn., voted last night to put off until today a vote on whether to accept the contract.

Association President Jack Rosen told a reporter: "The whole thing could blow up again." No reason for the hitch was given.

Nat Bor'skin, executive director of the United Popular Dress Manufacturers Assn., said he thought his group would ratify the agreement today.

The returning dress workers go back under a three-year pact which provides an average 11.14 per cent package increase, including an 8 per cent hike in wages that averaged $2.10 an hour in New York City and 50 to 75 cents an hour less elsewhere.

Steps were taken to curb contract violations, union-sanctioned special privileges and nonunion penetration.

David Gingold, ILGWU vice president and director of the union's Northeast Department, said in Scranton: "The strike is not settled in Pennsylvania. We are keeping our pickets in front of Pennsylvania Garment Manufacturers Assn. shops."

Adding Machine Might Be Handy

GRANTSVILLE, Utah (AP) — Tootle County Assessor William F. Judd is a pretty good man with figures, but this time of year he could use an adding machine at home. He raises a few sheep as a hobby.

On a morning check at the corral, he found one ewe with a newborn lamb. A couple of hours later, another ewe produced twins, and a few minutes later a third came forth with triplets.

Judd dutifully made his evening check and found a fourth ewe had given birth to quadruplets.

Surgeons Buck 5-1 Odds For Little Girl

CLEVELAND (AP) — Eleven-year-old Susan Kurtz was in St. Luke's Hospital today awaiting the final outcome of delicate heart surgery performed in an effort to keep her alive.

Dr. Frederick S. Cross, who headed a team of surgeons and technicians performing the operation, said the surgery consisted of three main repairs: closing of a hole between the chambers of the heart, enlargement of a main artery to the lungs and closure of other arteries and adhesions from a former operation.

Dr. Cross said Susan lived for 55 minutes during the operation with the aid of a machine which took over the functions of her heart and lungs.

Sixteen pints of blood were used in the operation. It was donated by friends and neighbors of the Kurtz family.

Susan's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Kurtz, were allowed a brief visit with her last night in a special recovery room at the hospital.

Surgeons bucked 5-1 odds in an operation yesterday to repair the heart of the dark-haired girl from Onsted, Mich. A doctor had given her only six months to live without the operation.

A hospital spokesman pronounced the girl's condition as satisfactory last night, several hours after the operation, which took 5 hours and 55 minutes, he explained, however, that it would be 48 hours before a "critical period" passed and that the ultimate success of the surgery could not be determined before that time.

Won't Back Down In Her Garbage Service Battle

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Mrs. Mae Laverton Ross, 74, still had a point today in her quiet battle with the Police Department over garbage service.

Last Thursday, police knocked at her door to ask why she hadn't subscribed to the mandatory service at $1.50 a month.

Mrs. Ross wouldn't answer the door. The police decided to wait her out. They waited and waited.

"I have enough to take care of myself but I don't have enough to spare for things I don't need," Mrs. Ross said later. "I'm a widow woman and I've been here 43 years. I've got along all that time without garbage service and I'm not of a mind to start now."

She said what little garbage she has goes into her compost pile.

The police on Monday asked her to explain the city ordinance to her.

"I'll try," said Glen Ross. "Mother's sort of independent."

Some of the widow's friends approached the police and offered to take care of the garbage thing if the police would withdraw the ultimatum. The police agreed.

But Mrs. Ross had the last word.

"I haven't bought no garbage can," she said.

Abbott, Costello In Court Dispute

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Instead of Abbott and Costello, it's Abbott versus Costello—in a lawsuit.

William A. (Bud) Abbott sued his former partner in comedy Lou Costello for some $222,000 yesterday in a dispute over a filmed television series they made five years ago.

The suit said Abbott has received $167,534 but his total compensation should be at least $390,000. He asks an accounting.

The comedy team, one of the movies' biggest box-office successes, split up 15 months ago.

18,000-Mile Cab Ride Equals Jail

BOSTON (AP) — How much does it cost to take an 18,000-mile ride in a taxi cab?

Two years in jail, said Federal Judge William T. McCarthy.

He imposed that sentence on Robert L. Smith, 31, Cleveland, Tenn.

Smith was accused of stealing his employer's taxi and taking it on a three-month joy ride, logging 18,000 miles.

Judge McCarthy remarked Smith needs a long rest after such an arduous trip.

Patton Uncertain Over His Resignation Date

RALEIGH (AP) — A decision as to when Atty. Gen. George B. Patton will resign will not be made until after March 21, the deadline for candidates to file for the March 31 Democratic primary.

Patton announced last Saturday he would be a candidate for resident superior court judge in his home judicial district. He made it official yesterday by filing with the State Board of Elections.

Patton indicated at a news conference yesterday the date of his resignation will depend on whether he has opposition in the primary. Last night, however, Solicitor Thad D. Bryson Jr. of Bryson City said he had mailed his $120 filing fee in a check to the State Board of Elections to be a candidate for the judgeship.

Judge Dan K. Moore of Sylva announced Saturday he would not be a candidate for re-election. Bryson said he had been a candidate for the 30th district judge's post ever since Judge Moore sent him word Friday afternoon that he would not be a candidate to succeed himself.

After learning that Bryson had

'Goofed' In Their Publicity Claim

DENVER (AP) — Sunday Continental Air Lines claimed a record for commercial aircraft when one of its new jet-prop transports flew from Denver to Washington in 4 hours 45 minutes.

United Air Lines heard about the claim and hastened to point out it has a regular Denver-to-Washington flight that takes 4 hours 25 minutes.

Moreover, a UAL official said, one of its DC7 transports once flew the route in 3 hours 25 minutes.

Said a Continental public relations man: "We goofed."

Operation Could Change A Person

By RALPH DIGHTON

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Someday you may wake up after a minor operation and find yourself the kind of person you've always wanted to be.

"We are, to a large extent, what our endocrine glands make us," Dr. Francisco Grana said. "Surgical stimulation of the endocrine glands, correction of certain imbalances that exist in all of us, may someday lead the human race to perfection."

Dr. Grana is professor of surgery at San Marcos University in Lima, Peru, the oldest medical school in the Western Hemisphere. He is here to address the 11th biennial Congress of the International College of Surgeons.

"There is hope even today that surgical modification of endocrine glands may lead to the cure of cancer," he told an interviewer.

"We know that there is some connection between the endocrine system and cancer. It does little good in most cases to simply remove the cancerous organ. The real answer, we believe now, lies in the chemistry of the human body. A healthy body does not have cancer. If we restore the endocrine glands to proper functioning, it may be that we will end cancer forever."

Negro Voter Registration Drive Still Lags

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Negro voter registration continues to lag in the South despite Lincoln Day rallies last month that triggered a drive aimed at doubling their strength in Dixie elections by 1960.

In a few of the 21 cities where Feb. 12 kickoff rallies were held, Negro registrations were below normal, an Associated Press survey indicated today.

The Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), headed by the Rev. Martin Luther King of Montgomery, Ala., began its campaign with mass meetings in 11 Southern states. To achieve its goal, the SCLC must persuade more than a million Negroes to qualify as voters. In the first month of the drive only a handful responded.

At Montgomery, where King gained national attention as leader of a Negro boycott of buses in 1956, the chairman of the County Board of Registrars reported a drop in Negro voter applicants below normal. And at Birmingham, Chairman W. D. Gwin of the Jefferson County board said Negro registrations "have been less since the Lincoln Day rallies than before."

Elsewhere, the story from county and state officials was much the same: if no dropoff occurred, no increase resulted.

The SCLC drive covers North Carolina, South Carolina, Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

Negro voter registration in the 11 states totaled roughly 1,200,000 in 1956—less than 20 per cent of the total registration—but the estimate is very rough. Many counties do not classify voters by race and many that do make no separate totals but merely mark each registration card "W" or "N". For instance, Mississippi has no law providing for a breakdown by color.

Some Negro leaders said the drive hasn't really begun. Generally, SCLC spokesmen declined to comment on their progress.

"Preparations are being made to increase Negro registration considerably," said Z. Alexander Looby, president of the Nashville, Tenn., branch of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People and a city councilman. But the drive "hasn't started," he added.

Lethargy among Negroes is a stumbling block, said Dr. George W. C. Brown of Norfolk, president of the Virginia Voters League, Inc.

"Our big problem is to find out how to awaken the Negroes," the Negro leader declared. "We will just have to meet and work out some methods and techniques of overcoming the apathy, indifference, complacency and unconcern among Negroes on this whole matter of registration and voting."

Here is the picture by states:

NORTH CAROLINA—Only four counties have continuous registration. Of these, three reported no increase in Negro registrations since Feb. 12. Guilford (Greensboro) had an increase, partly due to better facilities. Figures for other counties not available until May. Kelly Alexander of Charlotte, state NAACP president, says about 135,000 Negroes now registered. Goal is 250,000 more by 1960. Drive, not yet begun, will be aimed at nine Eastern counties called "black belt."

SOUTH CAROLINA—No upsurge in Charleston, Spartanburg or Florence, but increase reported at Columbia where books reopened March 3 after being closed 30 days for city election. Negroes appeared in equal numbers with white persons on first day after reopening.

ALABAMA—No registration upsurge in Mobile, a slight dropoff at Birmingham and Montgomery. Estimated 53,000 Negro registration, 750,000 white. Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Texas and Virginia have a poll tax. The other states do not.

ARKANSAS—No date or firm guesses available on whether Negro applicants up or down since Lincoln Day. State auditor says 64,923 eligible Negro voters or state's 543,978 total. No Negroes registered in 14 of state's 75 counties. Negroes lag most in Eastern Arkansas where their population is heaviest.

FLORIDA—Little Negro registration since Feb. 12, only 22 new applicants in Duval County (Jacksonville). SCLC spokesman at Tallahassee said campaign "not really under way yet."

GEORGIA—About one million white registered voters and 150,000 Negroes, no upsurge since Feb. 12. A new law aimed at Negro applicants poses tougher questions for voter qualification.

LOUISIANA—No statewide registration figures available. Only 20 Negroes qualified at Baton Rouge since Feb. 12 compared with 163 white persons. New Orleans official noted no change at all in the flow of registrants, white or Negro. No comment from Negro leaders.

MISSISSIPPI—Only about 22,000 of state's 900,000 Negroes vote. Regional Council of Negro Leadership is sponsoring classes teaching state constitution in effort to boost voter enrollment to 100,000. Prospective voters must answer questions about constitution to qualify.

TENNESSEE—Some increase at Memphis, none at Nashville or Chattanooga. Qualified Negro voters comprise about one-third of Memphis voting population. No separate figures kept at Chattanooga or Nashville.

TEXAS—Has no registration; poll tax receipts qualify. NAACP drive, active in some places, halfhearted in others, had as goal 300,000 qualified voters. Has made no claims since deadline passed. Estimated 1956 eligibles ranged from 170,000 to 214,000. NAACP made no estimate. Dallas and Houston Negro leaders say increase in Negroes paying poll tax this year but won't estimate whether big or small.

VIRGINIA—No statewide registration figures available. Moderate increase in Negro registration at Warwick, but running about same for white and Negro applicants at Richmond, Norfolk, Newport News, Roanoke. None registered at Danville since Feb. 12.

One Dog Sled Is Carrying Mails

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Post Office Department says it is down to its last Alaskan dog sled mail route, a rugged operation which was once common in the northern territory.

In an area where air and other transportation has largely taken over mail delivery, the surviving sled route is being operated on remote St. Lawrence Island, in the Bering Sea.

Postmaster General Summerfield says the operation "still symbolizes the (mailman's) spirit of dedication to duty in the face of adverse conditions."

Chester Noonwook, 22, of Savoonga, an Eskimo village on the island, handles the service as a contract carrier between his home village and Gambell, 50 miles northwest. He makes the 100-mile round trip about twice a week, and has been at it since 1956.

Between June and October, Noonwook handles his route by skin boat directly over the open sea, but in the frozen months he relies on his 10 huskies. His pay is $40 a round trip.

The Savoonga-Gambell sled trip usually takes a day, unless Noonwook runs into one of the frequent howling storms or has trouble on a "soft" trail. The return trip takes twice as long, because the mail load in that direction is always heavier.

Admires Little Lady's Technique

LOS ANGELES (AP)—The little old lady went up to S. J. Jelalian, threw her arms around him and cried:

"You're the spitting image of my long lost son!"

When they were finally disentangled yesterday, she told him she hadn't seen her boy in 20 years. She said Jelalian's amazing resemblance made her lost control. She apologized and hurried away.

Jelalian later discovered his billfold containing $22 was missing, he told police.

Far from being embittered, he philosophized: "I'm not angry. I'd like to shake hands with that little old lady. Everybody else waits around for the government to take care of them in their old age and here she is employing a real technical skill to take care of herself."

Fire Rang Bell, Sounded Alarm

BALDWIN PARK, Calif. (AP)—A ringing doorbell awakened Jesse A. C. Niemela, 39, vice principal of Baldwin Park High School, his wife and 10-year-old daughter.

It got them up in time to flee from their burning house.

Firemen said an attic fire from an overheated furnace short-circuited the doorbell.

There are more than 3,740 acres of parks in Kansas City, Mo.

Show Automatic Factory In Action

LOS ANGELES (AP)—The automatic factory has arrived, and the things it makes may include headsets for both labor and management.

Push-outon production on a small scale was demonstrated here yesterday by an aircraft company. Perforated tapes and electronics replace the human element in this system, designed to save labor.

How much labor saving the nation's economy can withstand is a question on which both company and union officials are understandably cagey. But both concede that automation is developing far more rapidly than most people realize.

A group of newsmen saw what Hughes Aircraft Co. calls "one of the most jealously guarded industrial secrets of the West." This is a bank of machine tools designed jointly by Hughes and Kearney & Trecker Corp. of Milwaukee. The machines make parts for armament control systems.

Three machine tools—for milling, drilling and boring—operate simultaneously and automatically through an electric control panel.

In the manner of old-fashioned player piano rolls, punched tapes feed specifications into computers. The computers feed the data into the machine tools.

One man, without previous machinist's training, can control the machines.

Manpower figures were conspicuously lacking, but a company spokesman said this system will save three to five times the labor and time heretofore required to produce a part or component for an aircraft or a missile.

William Brainard, chief engineer for Kearney & Trecker, said five machines in a production line could save from $150,000 to $600,000 a year, depending on the number of parts produced.

Judge Tells Them It Is Marijuana

BOSTON (AP)—Three men who rented a farm in Westport last summer said they weren't sure what they grew there.

Eliado Rivera, 67, and his brother Victor, 63, both of Hartford, Conn., said they thought the crop was corn.

Alphonse Amarello, 42, of Fall River, contended he didn't know the seeds "were loaded."

A federal court judge told them the crop was marijuana.

He sentenced the elder Rivera to three years and the other two men to two years each for growing marijuana.

Paid His Taxes In Funny Money

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP)—The Internal Revenue Service says Robert Fallon of Norwalk paid income tax this year with phoney money. It's okay, though.

Robert, who is 4½, sent in 35 cents in play money "to be sure the President will have enough money to run the country."

Another Dacron Plant Scheduled

KINSTON — A second Du Pont plant for manufacture of "Dacron" polyester fiber will be erected at Old Hickory, Tennessee, W. E. Gladding, Manager of the local Du Pont plant, disclosed today.

Gladding said the move by the Company reflects its confidence that the market for "Dacron" will continue to grow, even though in the current textile industry recession it has been necessary to curtail production, resulting in some layoffs here.

Gladding pointed out that the local plant is in a position similar to the first plant which the Company built for nylon in 1939. "In this case," he explained, "the growth of the product dictated that another plant be added when production reached its maximum efficiency for one production facility." Today the Company operates four nylon plants at as many locations throughout the country.

Hodges Supports Hub-Cap Drive

RALEIGH (AP)—Gov. Hodges has put his endorsement on the statewide program of North Carolina's Junior Chamber of Commerce aimed at curbing hub cap thefts.

Saturday has been designated as the "kickoff" day for the drive by a proclamation of the governor.

Hodges endorsed the program by having the hub caps on the executive car serialized.

Under the Jaycee program, motorists may have their license numbers etched on their hub caps and other auto accessories. The vibro-engraver service will be set up by the Jaycees in service stations in cities throughout the state. The service will be free to all motorists.

Rioting Convicts Satisfied With Agreement, Ready Return To Work

PETROS, Tenn. (AP)—Rioting prisoners at Brushy Mountain State Prison—their disturbances ended by gunfire and tear gas—told newsmen they were ready to return to work.

A spokesman for the convicts, peering through the shattered glass of a window in his riot-wrecked cell block, said the men were satisfied with the agreement made with Keith Hampton, commissioner of corrections.

Kenneth Ray Lawson, the rioters' spokesman, said "They gave us everything we asked for except two things—they wouldn't give us a five-day work week in the mines and they wouldn't agree to stop using the strap."

The prison has one of the state's largest mining operations and coal from the pits is used exclusively for the state's institutions. None is sold commercially.

Lawson's reference to the "strap" was used in connection with the use of a leather strap on prisoners for infraction of prison rules.

The men began demonstrating Monday night. Among other things they complained of what they called cruelty of guards and unequal treatment of prisoners.

About 300 prisoners, mostly hite, were involved in the rioting.

Gunfire halted their second night of demonstrations.

Later, Hampton met with the rioters.

This morning the men began an orderly procession from their cell blocks to the prison mess hall. "It looks like the trouble is over," Hampton said.

After the men had returned to their cells, newsmen in the prison yard called for a convict spokesman.

Lawson came to a window and said the men had decided to return to work.

Men around him were red-eyed from tear gas and lack of sleep. They nodded assent.

Pointing to debris in the cell block and prison yard, Lawson said, "We are going to start to clean up."

Prison officials had made it clear that the men would have to be ready for work before their grievances would be considered.

One prisoner, Fred Roberts of Knoxville, was wounded in the cheek by a guard's shotgun during a mass attempt last night to break out of the prison, isolated in the rugged Cumberland Mountains about 50 miles west of Knoxville. As he was carried out to a hospital at nearby Oak Ridge—where his condition later was reported not serious—the other prisoners became ominously silent. They returned to their cell wing.

Soon thereafter, State Commissioner of Institutions Keith Hampton arrived from Nashville, the state capital, and met with two spokesmen for the white prisoners.

Afterwards, he told a news conference: "I cannot tell what will be the outcome of this meeting, but I hope the riot will be ended."

Hampton said he and Warden Frank Llewellyn told the spokesmen their grievances were "very small" and said the prisoners agreed.

The second night of rioting erupted when four prisoners managed to break out of their cell. This gave access to the master lever opening the other cells, and they freed 300 convicts.

Dodging gunfire, they went to the prison hospital and visitors' gallery, wrecking the foyer as they had wrecked their cell wing a night earlier. But when Roberts was wounded, they ceased the disturbance, and agreed to send their spokesmen to meet with Hampton.

Grievances included the cruelty and unequal treatment charges, complaints that prisoners weren't told what outgoing mail would pass censors, and what they called lack of recreation facilities.

Prison officials contended that the convicts had no valid complaints.

Checks Turn Up, So Does A Theft

HAMLET, N.C. (AP)—The Hamlet Gin & Supply Co. has gotten back $3,300 in checks and Police Chief J. O. Bracey says he's got a case of theft on his hands.

The company missed the checks nearly a month ago, thought them misplaced and did not inform officers. The checks turned up in a thicket being cleared by farmer Pat Coppedge and his son near Peachland last Saturday. They passed them on to the Highway Patrol.

Two women's wallets also were found in the thicket. They were identified as property of Mildred Ponder Spurrier of Gastonia and Elizabeth Jean Littlejohn, granddaughter of Charlotte Police Chief Frank N. Littlejohn.

DRIVER IMPALED—Cecil T. Miller (facing camera), 39, cafe owner of Augusta, Ga., sits in his automobile with an iron pipe driven through his shoulder and pinning him to the side of the car. An unidentified mechanic (left) saws the pipe in two to free him. Miller's car skidded into an iron fence separating a four-lane highway and the pipe from the fence came through car window. Later the injured man was reported in fair condition at a hospital. (AP Wirephoto)

Pacing 1958 East Carolina Baseballers

VETERANS—Jerry Stewart (left) and Bucky Reep, three-year veterans of ECC baseball, will be acting co-captains for the 1958 edition of the Bucs. Both are seniors and All-Conference choices. Ben Baker (right) was last year's top Pirate hurler with a 5-0 record and is rated by Coach Jim Mallory as the probably No. 1 moundman for the coming year. (Reflector Sports Photos).

ECC Baseballers Preparing For Roughest Season Yet

By BILLY ARNOLD
On March 26, East Carolina College opens its 1958 baseball season here against Wake Forest and then moves on into the roughest schedule ever drawn up by the school. The 22-game card includes games with Duke, North Carolina, South Carolina, Delaware, The Citadel, the Parris Island Marines, and members of the North State Conference. And how will East Carolina stack up against this kind of competition? "We don't know," says Coach Jim Mallory, whose 26-man squad has been working out for two weeks. "We lost a lot of good boys from last year's club—our four leading hitters, in fact—but we have a lot of good ones back. Most of them are young, however, and you just can't predict anything until you start playing." Gone from last year's 10-4 edition of the Pirates will be Berman Stevens, Goy Long, Dean Robbins, and Gary Treon, the four leading hitters on the team. These four led the club in homers, runs scored, runs-batted-in, and batting averages. "And the thing that hurts us here," Mallory says, "is that Long and Robbins were only freshmen." They were wined away, along with Treon, by major league contracts. Gone, too, are Mack Cherry and Mac McPherson from the pitching staff and veteran catcher Tink Bowen. Returnees But all isn't black for the Bucs. Returning from last year's team will be shortstop Jerry Stewart and third baseman Bucky Reep, outfielders Tommy Land and Tommy Nance, and catcher Dough Watts. Stewart and Reep, seniors who have played three years of baseball for the Bucs as first-stringers, are the 1958 co-captains. "The real key of our ball club this year," says Mallory, "the hard core of our ball club, will be our pitching staff. We've got five good pitchers back from last year and four new boys who've been looking good so far in practice. If they come through for us, I think we'll have a good team before the season is over." Mallory's list of hurlers includes some of the most impressive ball players in the state. There is Charlie Russell, a senior right-hander who has never been defeated in college play. Russell's 10-0 record wasn't mussed last year, for he was bothered with arm trouble and pitched only four innings. There is Ben Baker, a junior left-hander. "He should be our No. 1 boy on the mound this year," Mallory says. "If he comes through," Baker compiled a 5-0 record last year including a win over N. C. State. There is George Williams, a much-improved right-hander. Williams is a sophomore with a fast ball. Junior Leonard Lilley and senior Bruce Shelley round out the mound staff of returnees. Both saw action last year and are slated for starting action in the coming season. The New Four Mitchell Moon, a tall curveballer from Lynchburg, Va., has been tabbed by Mallory as "one of the best new boys we have." Moon is a right-hander, a much-sought-after pre-school hurler. Alan Gardner of Kinston and Earl Boykin of Rock Ridge, a fair of freshmen, are both right-handers. Both compiled good high school records before coming to ECC and are slated for starting duty. Tom Salter, a lefty from Southport, rounds out the newcomers and is expected to be used primarily as a relief man. Left-handers One of the brightest spots in Coach Mallory's outlook at present is the appearance of a whole host of left-handed hitters. "This is the first year since I've been coaching that I've ever had any good left-handed hitters. At least,

Manager Smith Is Worried About Roberts

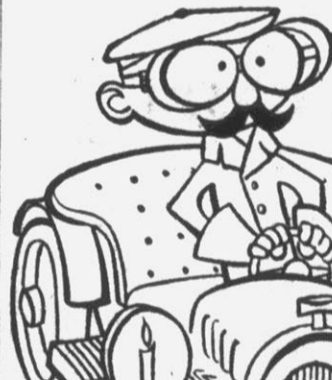

By JOHN CHANDLER
The Philadelphia Phillies, in winning three of their first four Grapefruit League exhibitions, are coming up with some big innings, but Manager Mayo Smith is more concerned today about Robin Roberts. Perhaps the 31-year-old Roberts, who had his worst record (10-22) in 10 years in the major leagues last year, will snap back and become the 20-game winner of old. Roberts made his first appearance of the year against the Detroit Tigers yesterday at Clearwater, Fla. In the second inning, the Tigers scored three times on four hits, a base on balls and a sacrifice fly. The Phillies kept even by getting a trio of runs off Paul Foytack, and Roberts finished his three-inning stint with the score knotted at 3-3. The Phils finally won it 10-9 after scoring five runs in the seventh. The Pittsburgh Pirates rapped Washington pitching for 15 hits in a 7-3 decision at Fort Myers, Fla. Three senior errors accounted for four unearned runs. Bennie Daniels, Eddie O'Brien and Don Gross held Washington to seven hits. The Cincinnati Redlegs jumped on New York starter Tom Sturdivant for three runs in the first inning at Tampa, Fla., but the Yankees rallied for a 5-3 victory. Mark Freeman, up from Denver, and Al Cioetti each pitched three scoreless innings for New York, each permitting only one safety. Joe Cunningham slapped a grand-slam homer to put the St. Louis Cardinals ahead 8-7 in the seventh inning against the Kansas City Athletics at St. Petersburg, Fla. But the A's shoved seven runs over the plate in the ninth and took a 14-8 decision. With one away in the ninth inning, successive singles by Haywood Sullivan, Gene Stephens and Billy Conso brought in the run which gave the Boston Red Sox a 4-3 victory over the Chicago White Sox at Sarasota, Fla. It was the third straight exhibition score for Boston.

Case Enjoyed A Satisfying Year

RALEIGH (AP) — The 1957-58 basketball season will be remembered by Everett Case as one of his most satisfying. The veteran of 12 years coaching at North Carolina State College won no championships and had no All-America candidates. He's had his share in the past. But he has been named ACC coach of the year by members of the Atlantic Coast Sports Writers Assn. covering the ACC tournament her, last weekend. Case received 24 of 58 votes in a tight contest that saw Harold Bradley of Duke win 23 votes. Ten went to Bud Millikan of Maryland whose team won the title, and one to Frank McGuire of North Carolina, coach of the year last season. But along the way, the Wolfpack twice won from Maryland, the champion, got to the tournament semifinals after finishing only one game behind Duke the season leader, and was in the top 20 nationally most of the last half of the season.

ECC Swimmers Enter NAIA Title Meet

MUNCIE, Ind. (AP) — East Carolina College's defending champions and 12 other teams have entered the second swimming championships of the National Assn. of Intercollegiate Athletics, to be held Saturday in the Ball State Pool. Because of the small field the schedule was cut down from two days to one. Trials will be at 1 p. m. and finals at 8 p. m. Events will be 400-yard medley relay, 50, 100, 200 and 400 freestyle; 200 butterfly, backstroke and breaststroke; 400 freestyle relay, and diving.

NCAA Play Still Going; W. Virginia Is Out Of It

Rookie Hobbie Looking Good For The Cubs

MESA, Ariz. (AP) — The tall, blond rookie took his place on the mound against Willie Mays and the San Francisco Giants, retired seven straight batters, walked the eighth and got the next two out with no trouble. Such was the 1958 debut of the 21-year-old right-hander, Glen Hobbie of the Chicago Cubs. It appeared that the $50,000 paid for the youngster was a sound investment. Manager Bob Scheffing noted that Hobbie has a fast ball that is even faster than the one he let loose against the Giants. Admittedly the Giants' lineup was heavily stocked with youngsters. But Andre Rogers, the skillful shortstop who previously had accounted for a wind-blown home run, couldn't get the ball out of the infield against Hobbie. The best Mays could do was a high fly to center field. "I think we've got something," said Scheffing. "His fast ball? Well, it goes like this..." And Scheffing indicated with his hands a streak of lightning. Hobbie, who stands 6 feet 3 and weighs 198, who almost won the Southern Assn. pennant for Memphis last year. He posted a delectable 15-1 record but appeared in 53 games as a "stopper." Hobbie, a graduate of American Legion and semipro ball, broke in with Superior, Minn., in 1955, and subsequently played with Charleston, Duluth and Duquesne before Memphis. In yesterday's game, the Cubs scored four runs in the fifth inning on two singles, Jerry Kindall's double and two errors by Orlando Cepeda, Giants first baseman. They won it 4-2 when the game was called in the sixth on account of rain.

Manhattan Played Like Hell--Schaus

By DON WEISS
The Associated Press
The far-flung NCAA basketball tournament takes another step tonight toward lining up its 16-team field for four class-packed regionals this weekend while the biggest of them all, top-ranked West Virginia, lies flat on its back. Even a team rated best in the nation by the experts voting in the final Associated Press poll couldn't help West Virginia overcome the baffling jinx that says WVU just doesn't win in the NCAA tournament. Four straight years they've tried in their Southern Conference reign under Coach Fred's Schaus, and four times they've been bounced to the sidelines in their first game. Last night, it was the most baffling of all as the Mountaineers, thrown far off balance in the first half, fell before an inspired Manhattan College 89-84 in the feature of a tournament tripeheader at Madison Square Garden. "Manhattan hustled like hell, drove like hell and rebounded like hell," said Schaus. "That's the story." "Weren't the kids great?" asked Manhattan Coach Kenny Norton, who was nearly mauled by his team and delirious spectators after the upset. It's on to the NCAA Eastern Regional at Charlotte, N.C., Friday night for Manhattan, in which they'll meet Dartmouth's Ivy League champions, who won the Garden opener from Connecticut 75-64. Maryland's Atlantic Coast Conference champions will play streaking Temple, which drew a first round bye, in the other game at Charlotte. The Tera crushed Boston College 86-63 in the Garden windup. Notre Dame routed Tennessee Tech 94-61, Miami of Ohio surprised Pitt 82-77, and Oklahoma State used freethrow accuracy to beat Loyola of New Orleans 59-42 in other NCAA first round games last night. Arkansas joined the tournament field by capping Southern Methodist in a playoff for the Southwest Conference championship, 61-55. Tonight at Berkeley, Calif., Wyoming of the Skyline Conference meets Seattle and Rocky Mountain champ Idaho State plays Border champ Arizona State of Tempe, with the winners advancing to the Far West NCAA regional at San Francisco. Here's the regional setup for March 14-15 as it stands now: EASTERN at Charlotte, N.C.—Maryland vs. Temple, Manhattan vs. Dartmouth. MIDEAST at Lexington, Ky.—Kentucky vs. Miami (Ohio), Notre Dame vs. Indiana. MIDWEST at Lawrence, Kan.—Oklahoma State vs. Arkansas, Kansas State vs. Cincinnati. FAR WEST at San Francisco—Wyoming-Seattle winner vs. San Francisco, Idaho State-Arizona State winner vs. California. To keep the ball bouncing until then, the NAIA tournament moves into the second round at Kansas City today and the NCAA small college tournament goes into the quarterfinal stage at Evansville, Ind. The National Invitation Tournament, with a 12-team field, opens at Madison Square Garden on Thursday.

Ayden Playing

SOUTHERN FINES—Tonight, Ayden High School joins in the first round battles of the North Carolina Class A high school championship tournament here. Champions from eight high school districts will converge for the four-day event which will decide the North Carolina Class A championship for 1957-58. Pairings have put Ayden vs. Allen Jay (Greensboro) in the opening contest of the tournament tonight, at 7:30. At 9:30, the highly-touted Zeb Vance High School team will battle Rock Springs. On Thursday, Biscoe will tangle with Valley Spring at 7:30, and Swansboro will play Beulah at 9:30. Winners of the two first round games will meet in two Friday night games, with finals scheduled for Saturday night.

Charlotte Off To A Good Start

CHARLOTTE (AP) — The Charlotte Clippers are off to a flying start toward the Eastern Hockey League championship. They beat the New Haven Blades 3-0 last night in a first-round playoff match. The Clippers, who ended atop the league's regular season standings, left for a three-contest stand at New Haven that begins tonight and continues the best-of-seven series. In another playoff series, Johnston won 6-3 over Washington last night. The survivors of each series will meet for the championship later.

Cold Winter Curbed Florida's Red Tide

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP)—Florida's severest winter of the century has brought big troubles to farming and the tourist business but it did one good thing — it halted the fish killing Red Tide.

The Red Tide burst into one of its lethal stages last September, and during the fall struck terror along 200 miles of Florida Gulf coast from Tarpon Springs to south of Cape Romano. Although commercial varieties were generally unaffected, other types were hard hit.

Then came the first drastic freeze of the winter season. The effects of that December cold spell were not too noticeable at once, but Dr. Robert F. Hutton, biologist of the state conservation department, reports that succeeding cold waves caused big changes in the density of the Red Tide.

"The cold seems to have done the job for us," said Dr. Hutton who is in charge of the state forces trying to control the scourge. Since the first of the year no Red Tide organisms have been found in the northern sector of the infested belt and only a few have been detected in the southern end. Dr. Hutton won't predict what this mysterious fish killer will do in the future.

Red Tide actually is a tiny marine organism, Gymnodinium Brevis (GB), which multiplies rapidly under certain conditions. When the GB count reaches 300-350,000 to a quart of water it's a fish killer. The organisms throw off a neurotoxin which kills fish by paralyzing their bodily functions.

The plague gets its name because the rapid growth of these tiny bugs turns sea water reddish brown.

Scientists still are working to learn the specific cause of these outbreaks and how to control them. However, temperature and the presence of nutrient materials washed into the Gulf of Mexico by rain-swelled streams are known to be important.

The poison released by these rampaging organisms is carried by droplets of water and can become irritating to humans. Beach residents may be bothered with coughing or sore throats.

For the first time last fall copper sulphate was used with success to kill big patches of Red Tide. Patrol boats and spray planes scattered copper spray. Ev. en bags of the chemical were tied at passes to treat infested tidal waters. But the Gulf is a big place and to spray all the blighted area would take lots of money. Further, copper sulphate has no lasting effect and repeated sprayings are necessary.

Indonesian Rebels Capture North Celebes Port City

By K. R. RAMANATH

JAKARTA, Indonesia (U)—A central government military commander conceded today that Indonesian rebels in the North Celebes have captured the port city of Gorontalo, the newspaper Suluh Indonesia said.

The usually reliable paper quoted Lt. Col. Jonosewojo, chief of staff of the East Indonesian military command, as saying reinforcements arrived too late from Jakarta to hold Gorontalo.

The trading center of more than 15,000 persons was captured by forces of Lt. Col. D. J. Somba, who supports the rebel government in Central Sumatra. Central government troops commanded by Nani Waribone fled into the jungle and are organizing guerrilla warfare against the rebels, Jonosewojo said.

The government had claimed Feb. 26 that Gorontalo was seized by Jakarta troops in the first ground action of the rebellion.

Jonosewojo said Somba had moved his headquarters from Manado, capital of the North Celebes, about 140 miles northeast of Gorontalo, to the nearby town of Tomohon. Tomohon was once a Dutch army training center.

The U.S. Embassy in Manila said there are 28 Americans — missionaries and their families — in the Tomohon area. They were advised by radio that a British ship would evacuate all of them who want to leave, possibly by Friday. British and Dutch in the area also were advised to take the ship.

There were no reports of fighting on Sumatra after the capture by central government troops of two islands off the east coast and the adjacent mainland oil terminal of Pakning. A rebel government spokesman in Padang said the landing by the Jakarta forces apparently blocked the mouth of the Siak River, main artery for shipment of oil from the U.S.-operated Caltex fields 50 miles inland at Pekanbaru.

At Jakarta's suggestion, Caltex suspended operations in Central Sumatra after the central government offensive opened last Friday. The company has evacuated 31 women and children to Singapore but about 600 Americans, including some 120 women and children, are still on Sumatra.

Canada's Premier Steps Up His Election Campaign

By ALAN DONNELLY
Canadian Press Staff Writer

OTTAWA (U)—With his election campaign at the halfway point, Prime Minister John Diefenbaker appears to be moving into high gear for a closing drive to the March 31 voting day.

The 62-year-old Progressive Conservative leader, who kept up a whirlwind tempo throughout his campaign last year, set an easier pace during the first three weeks of this one.

In travels that took him from Manitoba to Newfoundland and back, he repeatedly set forth his stand on unemployment, trade, national development, agriculture and social security. He defended the government's record since it took office last June 21.

But in his attacks on the Liberals — the other parties have been pretty well ignored so far — Diefenbaker has shown flashes of last year's fighting form with which he led Conservatives back to power after 22 years, with a minority 113 of the 265 seats in the House of Commons.

Those close to the Prime Minister say he deliberately kept his early electioneering under wraps. Midway through last week, however, he seemed to drop these tactics during a three-day swing through southern Ontario.

So far his audiences have been generally larger, under comparable circumstances, than those of last year's campaign. Party officials claimed the turnout of nearly 5,000 for his Winnipeg opening speech Feb. 12 was the largest political meeting ever held on the Prairies.

His biggest audience reaction comes when he deals with the Liberal pledge of 400 million dollars in tax cuts, and with the motion presented in Parliament Jan. 20 by Liberal Leader Lester B. Pearson proposing a turnover of government without an election.

On tax cuts he reiterates that the former Liberal government, in which Pearson was foreign secretary, rejected Conservative demands a year ago for reduced taxation. He mocks Pearson's motion, depicting it as a plea to "give us back our jobs but please let's not have an election." He accepts unemployment as a major election issue but says Canadians won't swallow attempts to pin blame on the government. The main promise of his campaign is to undertake a major national development program, with roads and railways to open Northern resources, federal aid to self-liquidating provincial projects, and encouragement to greater processing in Canada of raw materials.

Sinatra - Bacall Wedding Prospects Are Growing

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (U)—Prospects grew today that Frank Sinatra and Lauren Bacall are heading for a wedding, perhaps around Oscar time, March 26.

Miss Bacall was told of persistent marriage reports about her and the skinny crooner at the Huntington Hartford Theater, where she attended the opening of Noel Coward in "Nude with Violin." Her reply was not in the Coward drawing-room tradition: "I don't know nothing. Call Miami."

Sinatra is in Miami for a single ing date at the Hotel Fontainebleau. The hotel said he was refusing to accept calls.

The fact that Miss Bacall did not deny the rumors nor decline comment added fuel to the well-lit fire.

Further evidence was offered in the disclosure that both Sinatra and Miss Bacall have pulled out of the Academy Award telecast March 26. Producer Jerry Wald said he has been unable to get an explanation from the singer why he has decided not to deliver the nominated song, "All the Way." The actress said she cannot appear because "I'll be out of town."

She didn't say where she would be, but conclusion jumpers might suggest Las Vegas. It has been known to feature celebrity weddings, and Sinatra is a part owner of a hotel there.

Sinatra, who was one of the best friends of the actress' late husband, Humphrey Bogart, has been linked with her in recent months. They were a steady date for some weeks, but then appeared to have drifted apart. Recently she went on a personal appearance tour. Absence apparently made Frank's heart grow fonder, because they were again a steady duo on her return.

Club Liquor Locker System Is 'Illegal' Where Beer Is Sold

RALEIGH (AP) — If beer is sold on the premises, it is against the law for a private club in a county in which ABC stores are located to operate a locker system in which members keep their whisky.

The state ABC Board pointed this out yesterday in a statement issued to clarify its position regarding the sale of beer and the consumption of whisky on beer-licensed premises.

State ABC Board Chairman William S. Hunt said he was "not familiar enough" with the law to define "premises" as to whether it includes only the room where beer is sold in a private club or whether it includes the whole club building.

"That is something that would have to be taken up with the attorney general's office," he commented.

He said he had no plans at this time to discuss the matter with the attorney general.

"Because of the complexity of the issues involved in this statement, it is requested that the press use this statement," the board said. "Only if it can be carried in its entirety."

The statement follows:

"The present statute of this state are expressly clear in saying that the holder of a beer permit shall not allow the consumption of alcoholic liquors on the beer-licensed premises. This express prohibition is found in section 18-78.1 of the general statutes. This board has on many occasions in the past been commented to suspend or revoke beer permits upon violation of this law.

"There has been no change in this particular statute. It is the policy of this board to endeavor to enforce the law fairly and impartially, as it is written. This law applies to restaurants, drive-ins, private clubs, and all other establishments which have a permit to sell beer. Therefore, it should be clearly understood that if sufficient evidence is placed before this board to the effect that the holder of a beer permit has knowingly allowed the consumption of alcoholic liquors on the beer-licensed premises, the board will act to suspend or revoke the permit in question.

"The question of the use of alcoholic liquors on the premises of a private club has been raised. Section 18-15 of the North Carolina statutes provides that no person or group of persons shall keep or maintain a club room where intoxicating liquors are received or stored for barter, sale exchange distribution of division among the members of the club or other persons. This board is advised that lower courts throughout the state have in several instances held that the ABC system, where the user has furnished his own supply of alcoholic liquors. Thus, this section does not prohibit the so-called private locker arrangement in such cases. We are also advised by the attorney general that such is his interpretation.

"It is emphasized, however, that the private locker arrangement cannot, under present statutes, be maintained on beer-licensed premises. This is because of the express statutory prohibition relating to beer permits, contained in section 18-78.1 and referred to above.

"A newspaper item recently reported that the chairman of the board had written a letter to someone warning against serving ice and soft drinks inasmuch as these items could be used as so-called "set-ups" in preparing drinks which include whisky.

"This report was completely erroneous.

"Obviously, the sale or use of ice and soft drinks is not unlawful."

Huge Missile Is Marked 'Fragile'

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP) — The Atlas missile is a delicate monster.

"It has 'Fragile' printed in red letters up and down its shiny, stainless sides. The least little thing can throw its complicated electronics nervous system out of order.

These details were observed by and described to newsmen yesterday when, for the first time, they were allowed close enough to the missile to touch it. It was wet and cold, because of rain.

But it was impressive — a silver column with a rounded nose and red fins, standing on a launching platform. It was nearly as high as the 100-foot steel service tower around it.

Col. Otto Glasser, U.S. Air Force deputy commander for weapons systems, told newsmen that "inevitably, it will be the Air Force's first operational intercontinental missile."

That means it will be the first to soar across oceans with the capability of carrying a nuclear warhead.

The Atlas, which was on display at a test firing stand in Sycamore Canyon, 20 miles inland from here, is one of an undisclosed number that have been turned out by Convair-Astronautics, a subdivision of General Dynamics Corp.

Several of the two-million-dollar missiles have been test-fired out over the Atlantic from Cape Canaveral, Fla.

They have also been test-fired 14 times at Sycamore, but there they are anchored to launching platforms.

Boys Attended Shooting Contest

Robert C. Forney of Greenville, instructor for the Carolina Gun Club which meets at the East Carolina College Range, accompanied seven boys at the weekend to the Southeastern Regional Meeting of the National Rifle Association, Junior Division, at Newport News, Va. The meeting was held Sunday.

Two of the boys competed in the junior division shoot. They are Jon Luskin, son of Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Luskin, and Billy Ray Taylor, son of Mrs. Lillie Taylor. Results of the contest will be announced later.

Other boys who attended the shoot were Dallas Pierce, son of Mr. and Mrs. N. C. Pierce; Charles Wilkerson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles V. Wilkerson; Jay Walters, son of Dr. and Mrs. J. L. Walters; Tom Duncan, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Duncan, and Ray Corbett, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Corbett.

Does His Part In Recession 'Cure'

DETROIT (AP) — The way to beat the business recession, says Samuel Schiff, is to put more money into circulation. So he is giving his employees the money to do it with.

Schiff, publisher of Industrial Machinery News in Detroit, gave each of his 14 employees a $5 bill this week.

The only requirement was that it must be spent on something extra, something outside the range of the usual living expense.

Schiff says he plans to slip 14 fms a week into the nation's economy for at least three weeks.

Expense Account Ruling Relaxed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Most taxpayers can relax and quit worrying about keeping detailed records of their expense accounts for their 1958 tax returns.

The Internal Revenue Service gave out the news in the form of a proposed change in its regulations.

An employee who accounts to his employer for his business expenses will not be required to report such expenses on his return, either itemized or in total amount. He simply will have to state that expense funds received by him from his employer didn't exceed ordinary and necessary business expenses.

But the employee who does not account to his employer must report on his return the total of his expenses for such things as travel, transportation and entertainment. He also must report the number of days away from home on business, and the amount of his expenses broken down in broad categories.

Technically, the changes are still in the nature of a proposed regulation. This is customary procedure, to give interested persons 30 days in which to file written comments, pro and con. Formal adoption comes later.

Detailed records of expense receipts and expenditures were supposed to be included in 1967 tax returns, but the revenue service said people with small expense accounts could forget it.

All In All, Pair Had A Bad Day

They were picked up for questioning about an hour after Theodore Kubaska was robbed in his liquor store of $100.

He said that during the robbery one of the men remarked: "I lost $66 at the track today." The other replied: "I lost $88."

The pair was not charged immediately.

CHILD SAVED, TRAIN KILLS MOTHER—Four-year-old Michael Vitucci clutches a lollipop in the arms of track foreman Arnold Perazzo in New York after he was pulled to safety from tracks under an elevated train which killed his mother. Mrs. Marie Vitucci, with her son in her arms, plunged to death in the path of the train. Although two cars passed over the boy, he was not injured seriously. He had slipped between the cross-ties and hung by a leg, head down, 60 feet above the street for five minutes before he was rescued. (AP Wirephoto)

ABC Men Lost Some Sleep, But Netted 'Profit'

Pitt County ABC officers lost a night's sleep Monday night, not an unusual thing, and "profited" by their loss.

With the assistance from other agencies, their profit consisted of two arrests, a pickup truck and a sizable still. The law enforcement officers were up "early enough" to catch three men in the act of moving their still to a new location.

At the time of the early morning raid, the men reportedly had their 1951 three-quarter ton pickup truck loaded down with distillery equipment and were preparing to drive away from the site. Although caught by complete surprise, one of the men who was not identified managed to escape on foot through the underbrush.

Arrested, after a short chase, were: Bennett Tripp of the Pitch Kettle section of Craven County and Matthew Wiggins, Negro, of Kinston. Both were charged with possession of an unregistered still and possession of mash and distilling equipment.

According to Chief ABC officer J.M. Ward, the distillery was located in the Clay Root section near the Pitt-Craven line, in a heavily-wooded area.

Ward reported destroying the 240-gallon, complete. In addition, a 200-gallon boiler, eight 400-gallon mash boxes, containing 300 gallons of spent mash, a 200-gallon presser box with a copper heater and a 300-gallon cooler box with a radiator condenser. A total of 15 cases of half-gallon fruit jars was also uncovered.

One officer stated the equipment was new and appeared to have been operated one time. No illicit whiskey was found at the still.

Participating in the raid were: Ward, H.B. Liley, J.L. Ross, ATU Agents Bill Queen and Tom Goodson of New Bern, Craven ABC officer Albert Russell and Lenoir County ABC officer Clarence Bland.

Dana Andrews Is Sued By Studio

LOS ANGELES (AP)—A $150,000 damage suit has been brought against actor Dana Andrews by a studio that claims he frequently was too intoxicated to work during the filming of a picture.

Advised of the action, the 47-year-old actor said: "I deny all the charges. It's ridiculous and childish. This is a conflict of personalities."

The suit was filed in Superior Court by Waverly Productions, Inc., which claimed it had to interrupt the shooting of the picture at least 20 times at locations in Mexico because Andrews couldn't work. The company said he left Mexico before finishing his work.

It asked to be freed from a contract under which it was to pay the actor $100,000 for 10 weeks of work.

'Harassed' For A Quick Divorce

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP)—Actress Agnes Moorehead, 48, has divorced actor Robert Gist, 36, as she said he had "harassed" her to do.

She testified yesterday that 17 months after their marriage she asked her to obtain a quick Mexican divorce so he could remarry.

"He harassed me for the next two years with as many as three telephone calls a day, and in the past two years various women have called to urge me to get a divorce," the red-haired actress told Superior Judge Allen T. Lynch.

Under a property settlement she retains a Beverly Hills home and Gist gets a chicken ranch. He will pay $1 monthly token alimony.

PUSHED INTO WATER, DROWNS—A fireman carries the nude body of 8-year-old Felipe Hernandez from a water-filled gravel pit in which he was drowned at Dallas, Tex. Police say two boys, aged 10 and 14, admitted they tossed Felipe over a 6-foot cliff into the pit. Officers said other boys reported Felipe was first shoved into shallow water but scrambled out. Then the older boys stripped his clothes off and threw him over the cliff. (AP Wirephoto)

A Night Owl Might See Sinatra Work

By BOB THOMAS
HOLLYWOOD (AP)—You've got to be a night owl to hear Frank Sinatra record. He starts at 9:30 in the evening and winds up after midnight.

"The voice is more loosened up at night," he explains. "One night's session usually results in four numbers. But not always."

Sinatra, currently top man in the record album field, has been known to junk the entire results of a three-hour session as not up to his standards. "Once you get a record go, there's no getting it back," he reasons. "It's gotta be right."

He does his work at the Capitol Records Building, that tower near Hollywood and Vine that looks like a stack of hot cakes. The studio is in the basement, well guarded by Pinkerton men.

When I arrived the other night, Sinatra had finished a couple of numbers with Keely Smith, his first duets in several years. The studio was lined with hangers-on and friends, including the Kirk Douglasses. Round-shaped Billy May stood before the expert group of swing musicians.

"Didn't think I'd make it tonight," Sinatra said. "I got caught in that storm the other night and got a head cold. I took some anti-histamine and it cleared right up. A little whisky helped too."

His next number was a torch tune called "The Same Old Song and Dance," written by the Sinatra standbys Sammy Cahn and Jimmy Van Heusen. Frank ran through the song once with the band, Cahn standing nearby and singing along with him.

"I can't read music but I can follow it," said the crooner, adding with a grin. "Of course, I don't always go the same way."

After another run-through, he said, "Okay, let's try it."

Sinatra sang facing a screen that sheltered his voice from the brass of the orchestra. Even so, it was scarcely audible to the on-lookers. He studied the sheet music before him, maintaining a beat with his left leg. He wore a hat at all times, like another crooner with thinning locks, Bing Crosby.

Two minutes and 55 seconds later, he finished and said, "That ain't it, but let's hear it." The record was played back, and we could hear Sinatra punching across the lyrics in his usual style. It sounded great, but Sinatra wasn't satisfied and he kept doing the song until he got what he wanted. That's how hits are born.

School Annex Is Lost To Flames

GREENSBORO (AP)—A fire that virtually wrote off Central school annex building here was under investigation today.

The blaze of undetermined origin was discovered after a PTA meeting but firemen could not bring it under control. The fire concentrated in the second floor, but other parts of the building suffered such extensive water and heat damage that the entire structure of 16 classrooms was believed a total loss.

Senators Debate Hike GI Mortgage Interest Rates

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Senate, debating a $1,550,000,000 housing bill, faces a sharp fight today over whether the interest rate on GI mortgages should be raised.

The bill is a part of the anti-recession package being pushed by Democratic strategists at the Capitol. Sen. Sparkman (D-Ala.) estimates it could bring construction of 200,000 more homes in 1958 than are now contemplated. He said this would mean up to 600,000 new jobs.

The biggest dispute centers on a provision inserted by the Banking Committee which would permit the President to raise the interest rate on GI home loans from 4 1/2 to 4% per cent.

Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson (D-Tex.), Senate majority leader, said he believed the Senate would delete this provision and hold the line on the interest rate.

The Eisenhower administration had asked for a 5 per cent maximum, contending that private lending funds were not available at the 4 1/2 per cent figure and that the GI loan program thus was about dead.

Sen. Monroney (D-Okla.) promised a floor battle to retain the present rate. His amendment was cosponsored by 19 other Democrats and two Republicans.

Monroney said it would be a serious mistake for Congress to vote higher rates on VA mortgages when all other interest rates are starting to move down.

Tossed Match In Gasoline Tanker

COVINGTON, Ky. (AP)—The children who tossed a match into a tanker filled with gasoline are lucky to be alive. Fire Chief August Rassech said the only reason there wasn't an explosion was because the tanker was full, leaving no room for fumes to develop. The children scattered when the gasoline caught fire. None were injured.

Thinks TV Sponsors And Agencies Making Error

By CHARLES MERCER
NEW YORK (AP)—"Television sponsors and agencies these days are not keen on a script that has no threat, no murder, violence, sex or guns," says Sumner Locke Elliott. "They think that these things are paying off now."
Elliott, who has written about 50 hour-length television dramas, believes that such sponsors and agencies are wrong.
"They're putting themselves up a blind alley," he said the other day. "They've fallen for the self-created myth that they know what the public wants. Actually, what the public wants is good plays."

Like many well-known television writers, Elliott prefers to live in New York instead of following the exodus of TV drama shows to Hollywood. He writes here and files to the West Coast only to see a drama through production.
"I don't like the pink air of southern California," he said, "and I don't know how to drive a car. Since I don't drive, my getting anywhere in the Greater Los Angeles area becomes a major Wells Fargo operation. I am the despair of my friends."
Elliott believes that the "star system" characterizing West Coast TV productions, with a "big name" sought for even a small part, "is defeating its own purpose because shows can't afford the most expensive stars any more."

A NEW SUSPENSE NOVEL BY WILLIAM FULLER

CHAPTER 26

"Suppose, I thought, I could somehow get over the side of the boat without anybody knowing about it!

The splash, if I dove or jumped the splash would have everybody within hearing distance coming on the run.

Suppose I went over the stern. Lowered myself. There probably wasn't much more than six feet of freeboard at the stern of the boat. I could hang onto the lower railing of the cockpit close to the transom and lower myself into the water without being heard.

My head was heavy. I knew I couldn't keep my eyes open much longer. I was on the ragged edge of either going to sleep or losing consciousness because of the lack of oxygen in the air or because of the heating I'd taken.

I remember crawling across the deck on my hands and knees, groping with my hands. When I'd first realized where I was I'd stumbled over coils of line and buckets and loose objects that I hadn't been able to identify. And then my groping hands closed on the cold steel butt of a Stillson wrench. I hefted it. It must have weighed two pounds. I yanked out my shirttails, cradled the wrench against my belly beneath the shirt, lay curled in such a way that it could not be immediately seen, and lost consciousness.

I don't know how much later it was when I awakened. Whatever it was that had awakened me had awakened me all at once. My mind was racing, my body tensed for action. I listened. The muffled sounds that found their way to my airless cubicle were the same: the groan of tightening lines, the slap of waves against the hull. There was little vision, no smell other than that of paint and tar and bilge. I strained my ears.

And then I heard it—the scrape of leather against steel. Footsteps. Inside the boat, below decks. Sounds barely perceptible at first but growing stronger now. The footsteps, I was sure, of one person.

I lay there, waiting.

The footsteps grew heavier. And then, just outside the door in the bulkhead that closed off my cubicle, they stopped.

"My right hand tightened on the handle of the wrench.

The man outside the door fumbled a key into a padlock.

I braced myself.

The door swung slowly open. A man bent over me. He peered at my face. I didn't move. He straightened, cursing. He aimed a kick, not hard, at my ribs. "Hey, you!" he said. "Dolan! On your feet! The general's waiting!"

I mumbled inaudibly and sat up. "On your feet, man. Wake up! We'll stop in the galley for coffee."

It wasn't until then that I recognized the man. Alfredo, the fat man's pal.

I sat there mumbering. He reached over, grabbed a handful of shirt between my neck and my left shoulder and yanked upwards. As he pulled I got a leg beneath me and helped him. But not too much. I wanted him careless.

I had to have him the first time out. And I had to have him quietly. The sound of a scuffle, a shout, a scream—and I'd be finished. I had to do it right.

He released me. I stood there swaying. He bent his head slightly to brush imaginary dirt from his trousers. I swung the wrench.

It made a dull, snapping sound as it hit the side of his head. He went down without a sound other than the dull thud his torso made as it hit the deck.

I hoped I hadn't killed him. But I wasn't going to stand there worrying about it. If I were alive myself five minutes from now I'd be lucky.

I went to the door, cracked it, and peered out. The next compartment was, as I had guessed, crew's quarters. Empty.

Leading forward from the crew's quarters was a dimly lighted passageway. There were compartments opening onto this passageway from either side. The salley, I guessed. And the crew's mess.

I left the door and bent over Alfredo. He was still breathing, but out cold. I frished him quickly for a gun. He was clean. I hung onto the wrench. It had worked for me once and I'd use it again if I had a chance.

I slipped quickly through the door and locked it, and crossed the crew's quarters. I went down the passageway, clinging to the port bulkhead. There were no sounds. I slipped through the opening closest to me. It was the galley. A pot of coffee steamed on the range. I had an almost uncontrollable urge to stop, pour a cupful and drink it. I'd had no dinner.

At the head of the galley was the companionway that connected the bulkhead and the deckhouse. I forced the thought of coffee from my mind and went to the companionway.

I took two cautious steps upward, stopped and listened. I heard Ramez' voice. And then, in a moment, the fat man's. I waited and listened for Maria's. Ramez spoke again. Then the fat man probably wait no longer. Maria was probably below, asleep.

I left the galley, went into the passageway and headed aft. I had to get on deck, preferably onto the cockpit, where the view from the deckhouse would be obstructed by the wheelhouse. And where I could lower myself into the water without being heard. I didn't know where the guard on deck might be. I'd worry about that when the time came.

I followed the passageway to the engine room. The engine room was dark. I felt my way through it, stumbling. If my luck held there would be a companionway from the engine room to the wheelhouse.

I was at the bulkhead at the far end, the aft end, of the engine room now. I could still see nothing. I felt along the bulkhead. I felt the cold, treaded steel of a step. My breath came quick. The companionway before me could lead nowhere but to the wheelhouse!

I took the steps slowly, curbing my impatience, waiting on each step, listening. When I was sure no one was above me I moved quickly upward.

I moved my head so that my eyes were level with the bottom of the window on the shoreward side. There was a dim light at the far end of the wharf—the end closest to the bow of the Teresa. The two guards stood there, smoking, talking.

I shifted my body and looked through the windshield. The deck guard sat on the anchor winch, almost directly above the cubicle where I'd been, where Alfredo now lay, still sleeping. I hoped. The guard's rifle lay across his knees.

The wheelhouse was enclosed. The decks on either side led aft to the cockpit. I went to the port deck—the one away from the wharf—and headed aft. As I stepped past the wheelhouse and onto the cockpit I pulled up short. My body tensed.

A girl, her profile toward me, sat in a deck chair. She was dressed in white. I couldn't see her features but I could see the long legs, the dark mass of hair, and I knew it was Maria.

I crossed quickly and quietly to her.

As she turned and saw me I reached forward and clapped a hand to her mouth to stifle a scream.

"... Maria collapsed beside me. We could go no farther." Brad Dolan faces his toughest decision as his story continues tomorrow.

Student Artist's Work Exhibited

David E. Wheeler of Scotland Neck, senior at East Carolina, is currently exhibiting his work as a student artist in the Austin building at the college. The show, sponsored by the department of art, will be on display throughout this week.

The exhibition is made up of landscapes, still life painting, and portraits and figure paintings done in oil.

A portrait of Wheeler's wife, formerly India Wright, who is an alumna of East Carolina, is included in the show. Mrs. Wheeler now teaches home economics in the Scotland Neck schools.

Several of the paintings are based on Korean themes. Among these are "Poppa-San," a portrait, and a group study of five Koreans in council. The story-telling painting "Plutocrat" pictures a well-dressed little girl displaying her finery to a shabby child.

Wheeler, who is now doing student teaching in Rocky Mount, plans to continue his career in education after his graduation this year. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. G. D. Wheeler of Halifax.

Says Geography Broke Marriage

HOLLYWOOD (AP)—Songbird Jaye P. Morgan blames geography for the breakup of her marriage with actor Mike Bianco.

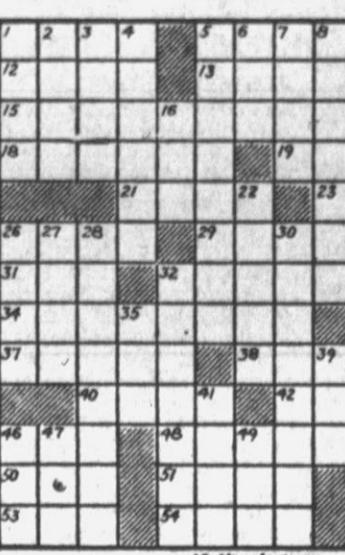

Miss Morgan, 26, said she soon would fly to Juarez, Mexico, for a divorce, adding:

"Mike and I parted friends. I am not asking alimony. Our trouble was that I work principally in or out of New York and his career keeps him in Hollywood."

They were married in 1954 and separated in August, 1955. They have no children.

It will be the singers third marriage. Her previous husbands were a radio network executive Hubbell Robinson and music arranger Lou Busch, by whom she had a daughter, Deborah, now 7.

This will be the first marriage for Moore, 32, executive vice president of Panavision, a wide-screen film process firm.

NEW YORK (W) — Profit taking after eight sessions without a loss sent the stock market moderately lower early this afternoon. Turnover was active for the most part but dealings were quiet after the first couple of hours. The ticker tape was a minute late for a period of three minutes in the opening rush.

Losses were kept generally within a point. The retreat affected most major divisions. A few key stocks bucked the trend. Steels, motors, chemicals, rails and nonferrous metals, rubbers and airlines showed losses. Aircrafts and radio-televisions were mixed. Recent favorites such as Lukens Steel, Lorillard and Polaroid were clipped for losses. Lorillard was down around a point while Lukens and Polaroid dropped fractions.

Goodrich, International Nickel and Youngstown Sheet lost about a point each. Chance Vought was ahead about 2 points for a while following a published estimate that its first quarter earnings will about double last year's for the like period. Phelps Dodge was ahead around a point. United Aircraft and Zenith added fractions. General Motors was about unchanged. Chrysler eased. Ford declined a major fraction. Amerasia dropped about a point while Gulf Oil and Royal Dutch were off fractions.

Among leading rails, Illinois Central managed a slight up-side edge. Southern Pacific and Chesapeake & Ohio were among fractional losers. New York Central was steady. Santa Fe eased. Other fractional losers included Johns-Manville, Boeing, Goodyear, Westinghouse Electric, Anaconda and Kennecott.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks at noon was down 60 cents to $163.60 with the industrials down $1.00, the rails down 30 cents and the utilities down 20 cents.

Carried Away By Drama, Woman Got Into The Act

NEW YORK (W) — A young woman got into the third act of the Broadway play "Look Back in Anger" last night by climbing from the audience to the stage and slapping Kenneth Haigh, the male star, across the face. Haigh was seated and reading a newspaper. At this point in John Osborne's play about domestic conflict, Haigh has settled down to live with a woman not his wife. On stage with him were Vivian Drummond and Alan Bates. Miss Drummond called for the curtain and Bates and Haigh carried the interloper off stage. Haigh said the woman murmured, "He left me, he left me," as she approached him.

Packing Firm's Swine Specialist To Attend

Swift and Company's top swine specialist today accepted an invitation to participate in WNCT's eight-hour "Farm-A-Thon," scheduled to begin Saturday at 6 a.m. on Channel 9. W. C. Haase of the Chicago firm will appear as a member of one of ten panels scheduled for the program, first of its type in the South. Sixty-six other specialists will be panel members or participants in other discussions. Haase is one of several nationally known agricultural specialists who will participate in the program. The others will take part in discussions of forestry, feed crops, oil crops, tobacco, meat animals, fruits and vegetables, agricultural engineering, banking and poultry. There will also be a special service panel which will include specialists in marketing, entomology, pathology and farm management, in addition to a representative from the Agricultural Stabilization Corporation (ASC).

Station officials announced today that Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson had declined an invitation to participate in the program because of a heavy schedule for this month. A letter from Benson's executive assistant, Miller E. Shurtleff, said, "The secretary's schedule for March is extremely heavy and it has been necessary to limit his out-of-town commitments to a bare minimum. He fully recognizes the importance of such a program for farmers in your area, but regrets he will be unable to be with you."
