Dear sweet Blanche:

My heart is still aglow with the bright memories of yesterday. To love and be loved brings a greater degree of happiness than financial gains or achievements of other kinds. I have not long to live but I shall die happier for yesterday and the knowledge that the remnant of whatever attachment you may have had for me could revive and brighten my last days.

And that meal you gave us before leaving was delicious and all that could be desired. Walter Raleigh grew very fond of Ralph in the few hours they were together. He looks forward to having you in his home at 208 N. Allen Ave. whenever either or both of you come to Richmond. W.R. admires my taste in women and even before he saw you, the two telephone conversations gave you a high place in his esteem. I am not as strong as I was yesterday, so shall not write much. But this short letter will serve to express my thanks for your delightful hospitality and to Ralph and to convey to you again the assurance of my undying devotion and admiration ^{for all} that you are and have been to me.

Devotedly,

Llewellyn

W.R. is in his office, otherwise he would join me in love. He admires you & Ralph greatly.
