Ayden Swears In New City Manager Today

AYDEN—William Formyduval is to be sworn in this afternoon as Ayden's new city manager.

Formyduval, formerly assistant city manager of Chapel Hill, was one of the youngest city managers in the country when at Lenoir.

Formyduval attended the University of North Carolina where he majored in Municipal Administration.

His wife, the former Nina Moore of Ivenho, graduated from ECC in 1956.

In addition to his city manager experience, he was manager of a consulting firm which catered to city and county governments.

D. T. House Jr., Clerk of Superior Court, will swear Formyduval in, at ceremonies to be held at the Ayden City Hall at 4 o'clock this afternoon.

Formyduval plans a gradual change-over from the old type administration to the new city manager form of government.

Strike Scene Is Quieter Following Violent Outburst

HENDERSON, N. C. (AP) — Quiet returned to the Hamlet-Henderson Cotton Mills strike scene today, following a new flareup of violence.

In contrast to Wednesday afternoon's barrage of rocks and bottles, police reported relative calm at the start of work this morning. A small crowd of strikers jeered at workers entering mill gates, but there was no violence.

Three state highway patrolmen were injured Wednesday afternoon. One of the troopers was bitten on the hand by a woman arrested as a result of the disorder.

Officers arrested three persons on an assortment of charges and Gov. Luther Hodges, who had negotiated unsuccessfully to end the five-month-old strike, warned: "Such violence will not be tolerated."

Hodges reiterated that "union leaders and union members, and sympathizers . . . have a great responsibility for any violence and I urge that they assume proper leadership in maintaining law and order."

Members of the striking Textile Workers Union of America will hold a big meeting today to decide their next move.

The company has announced it plans to begin a second shift, from 3 p.m. to 11 p.m., next Monday. Since Feb. 16, only one shift has been operating, from 7 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Two patrolmen, W. R. McClure and C. O. Moore, suffered arm injuries. McClure also received a minor head wound.

Pic. J. F. Cardwell reported he was bitten on the right hand by Miss Barbara Lassiter, 24, a non-striker, when she was arrested. The patrol said she was kicking the sides of automobiles when the trouble arose. She was charged with damaging personal property, disorderly conduct, resisting arrest and assault on an officer in the performance of duty.

Others arrested were identified as Charles Thomas Duke and Mrs. Myrtle Peoples. Duke was charged with assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill and carrying a concealed weapon, a razor. Mrs. Peoples was charged with damaging personal property and resisting arrest.

Eisenhower And Dulles Confer On Selecting New Sec. Of State

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — President Eisenhower today conferred with hospitalized John Foster Dulles regarding selection of a new secretary of state.

Dulles, who resigned from the top State Department job Wednesday because of cancer, also talked by telephone with Eisenhower that night about a successor.

The President continued to defer announcement of a successor, but Undersecretary of State Christian A. Herter was reported after the Eisenhower-Dulles talks to still have the inside track.

In Washington, a Republican official predicted that Herter would be named this weekend.

Dulles talked to Eisenhower from his room at Walter Reed Army Hospital in Washington. Eisenhower was at his vacation cottage at the Augusta National Golf Club.

After today's talk, the White House announced Eisenhower's formal acceptance of Dulles' resignation. It made public an exchange of letters between the President and the retiring secretary.

Eisenhower reiterated his warm affection for the 71-year-old Dulles.

"You have been a staunch bulwark of our nation against the machinations of imperialistic communism. You have won to the side of the free world countless people, and inspired in them renewed courage and determination to fight for freedom and principle," Eisenhower wrote.

"As a statesman of word stature you have set a record in the stewardship of our foreign relations that stands clear and strong for all to see."

At the same time, Eisenhower formally requested Dulles "to serve in the future, to whatever extent your health will permit, as a consultant to me and the State Department in international affairs."

In his formal letter of resignation, Dulles wrote Eisenhower: "It is apparent to me that I shall not be well enough soon enough to continue to serve as secretary of state."

Dulles wrote further that he was brought up in the belief that this nation was founded with a mission "to help build where liberty and justice would prevail." He added: "Today that concept faces a formidable and ruthless challenge from international communism. This has made it manifestly difficult to adhere steadfastly to our national idealism and national mission, and at the same time avoid the awful catastrophe of war."

Dulles, in a letter dated Wednesday, also told the President: "If I can, in a more limited capacity, continue to serve, I shall be happy to do so."

James C. Hagerty, White House press secretary, reported today that Eisenhower also discussed the matter of a Dulles successor with staff aides.

With the President at the breakfast session were Hagerty, Gordon Gray, a special assistant on national security matters, and Brig. Gen. Andrew J. Goodpaster, White House staff secretary.

Hagerty also indicated that Vice President Nixon had been sounded out on Eisenhower's behalf regarding a successor to Dulles.

Asked if the President had talked to Nixon on that subject, Hagerty replied: "No—not directly."

Hagerty declined to shed any new light on when Eisenhower will announce his choice. Herter, who has been acting secretary since Dulles became ill early in February, still was given the inside track for the top job in most speculation.

But none of the sources was claiming to have any definite word. They all noted that Eisenhower himself — while carefully avoiding any ruling out of Herter — had given himself a broader selection field.

At a news conference where he announced Dulles' resignation, the President said there are several persons in government — "or at least a few"—with particular talent for the No. 1 State Department post.

He made that statement when a reporter remarked it had been taken pretty much for granted he would tap Herter, 64-year-old former member of the House of Representatives and one-time governor of Massachusetts.

Eisenhower said he didn't want to imply approval or rejection of any individual. He added he wanted to consult first with Dulles regarding a successor.

James C. Hagerty, White House press secretary, said later that the President undoubtedly would consult with Herter and Vice President Nixon—and quite likely others.

The predictions are that those conferences may not be completed for a few days. And it is likely that Dulles' formal letter of resignation and Eisenhower's reply will be made public by the White House in advance of an announcement of a new secretary.

Aides said one reason Eisenhower didn't couple his own disclosure of the resignation with an immediate nomination of a successor was that he wanted no diversion of public attention from his warm tribute to the cancer-stricken official.

The President praised Dulles, 71, as a man of tremendous character, courage and wisdom. Eisenhower had a real struggle with his emotions in speaking of his regret that grave illness had incapacitated his close personal friend.

At one point the President remarked "there are all kinds of considerations to be studied" in choosing a successor. There was some thought he may have had in mind, for example, the grueling physical challenge of the job—and perhaps the fact that Herter suffers with arthritis and walks with canes to ease his discomfort.

Herter two days ago was designated to represent the United States at a Paris meeting of Western foreign ministers starting April 29. And Eisenhower said Herter also will be this country's man—regardless of whether he becomes secretary of state—when that group goes to Geneva May 11 for conferences with the Soviet foreign minister.

House OKs Minimum Wage Bill

RALEIGH (AP) — A crippled but struggling minimum wage bill faces Senate action following its passage by the House Wednesday after a long, stormy session.

During the 4 1/2-hour debate, the House approved five amendments, two of them technical, before voting 60-39 to pass the measure calling for a 75 cents hourly minimum wage. The House had given the bill second reading approval last Thursday, 62-48.

If the Senate approves, North Carolina will become the first state south of Pennsylvania to have a minimum wage law. A similar measure was passed by the Senate in 1957 but was defeated in a House committee.

Before amendments were tacked onto the bill Wednesday, it would have assured at least 75 cents an hour to about 60,000 workers in North Carolina. The Labor Department was unable to give an estimate of the number after the new amendments were added.

A successful amendment by Rep. Fred W. Bynum Jr. of Richmond would delay the effective date of the bill from July 1 of this year to next Jan. 1.

Amendments to exempt most theatre workers and persons 65 years of age or older were approved.

Rep. John Kerr of Warren termed minimum wage "the most tyrannical form of class legislation."

Rep. R. Frank Everett of Martin declared, "We were the first state to integrate our schools; let not be the first Southern state to have a minimum wage."

CD Signal Will Be Heard Friday

Greenville Civil Defense warning signal—33—will be sounded tomorrow morning at 11:30 to mark the beginning of a nationwide Civil Defense alert practice.

Pitt County CD Director J. H. Rose said today the warning signal will be sounded to notify county Civil Defense staff members to assemble at the Greenville City Hall for the half hour alert period. While the alert practice is in progress, a mobile emergency radio network in the county will be tested, Rose said.

Assembly of CD staff members and testing of the radio network will be principal features of local participation in the alert. In addition, however, radio station WGTC and television station WNCT will be off the air while the alert is in progress.

Civil Defense radio messages will be carried on 640 and 1240 frequencies which have been designated as Conrad radio frequencies for CD exercises.

Arab Petroleum Parley Is Begun

CAIRO (AP) — The first Arab petroleum conference opened today on a keynote everyone knew in advance — the Arabs want a bigger share of the income from their richest resource.

The conference secretary general, Mohamed Salman, who heads the Arab League's Petco in Beirut, said the Arabs feel no enmity toward the foreign companies that operate their oil industry. But he called on the companies to revise their contracts and "purify the texts from all of which emanates the stench of exploitation."

The Middle East oil industry is operated by American, British, French and Dutch capital in various combinations.

Cuban Airliner Seized In Flight By 4 Gunmen; Force Miami Landing

MIAMI, Fla. (AP)—Four gunmen—three of them fugitives from the firing squads of the Cuban revolutionary government — captured a Cuban airliner in flight today and forced the pilot at gunpoint to fly to Miami.

Nineteen startled but unharmed American and Cuban passengers were aboard the 4-engine airliner when it landed. U.S. border patrolmen immediately surrounded the plane and took the three hijackers into custody.

Three gunmen said they were members of the hated secret police force of the fallen Cuban dictator, Fulgencio Batista. The other was a former Batista air force mechanic.

Fidel Castro's rebels overthrew Batista last Jan. 1 after a 25-month war and forced him to take refuge in the Dominican Republic.

The border patrol said the gunmen would be held for a special investigation by the U.S. Immigration Service.

Capt. Candelario Delgado, 40, the plane's pilot from Havana, said one of the men placed a pistol against his neck and ordered him to fly to the Dominican Republic. The plane was en route from Havana to the Isle of Pines, 100 miles south of Havana.

"I told them, 'we do not have enough gas for such a trip.'" Delgado said. "Then they told me, 'Fly to Miami!'"

Guns also were held at the heads of the copilot, Fausto Valdez, 35, and the steward, Jose Leon, 37, throughout the 225-mile hop to Miami.

The passengers said no one was hurt or roughly treated after the gunmen took over.

Peter Kissel, 32, a Far Hills, N.J., stock broker, told reporters four men in civilian clothes took stations in the front and rear of the plane and one pointed a pistol at the head of the pilot.

A Castro soldier on vacation, Arajo Consuegro, 18, grappled with the gunmen but was disarmed.

Three of the hijackers were brothers. They identified themselves as Alfredo Mason y Sanchez, 51, former secret police sergeant; Roland, 28, also of the old secret police; and Jesus, 26, a former air force mechanic.

Their companion was Leonardo Serrate, 54, a former secret police corporal.

Tobacco Plants Go Into A Pitt Field

Tobacco was being transplanted on the Harold Liles farm, Rt. 6, Greenville yesterday afternoon.

It was the first tobacco transplanting reported in Pitt County for this year.

Jesse Peaden, operator of the farm, said he began working around 1:30 p.m. He decided to start transplanting because the "plants are getting too big," he said.

Peaden said he would probably be able to transplant two acres of tobacco before the end of the day. There is a 13 acre tobacco allotment on the farm.

He is setting out 187-Hicks variety and this is the earliest he has ever begun transplanting.

Did he think it would get too cold for the young plants?

"I hope not," Peaden declared. The farm is located about a half mile west of Belvoir.

Assistant Farm Agent Sam Weeks said tobacco transplanting will begin in earnest probably next week. The fragile tobacco plants are usually taken from the beds and set out in the fields during the April 20-Mar 20 period, Weeks said.

The big week is generally the first week in May, he noted. Weeks said he didn't think there would be any serious damage to plants in the field due to cold from now on.

YOUNG PLANTS IN FIELD . . . most transplanting will be done in next month.

People everywhere are seeking to enrich the meaning and purpose in their lives through the treasures found in libraries everywhere. Many outstanding books were made available to the public during the past year, and the library has paid tribute to them through a display of "Notable Books for 1956." Included in the library's collection are: "Epitaph for Dixie," Ashmore; "The Americans," Boorstin; "Rivers, Man and Myths," Brittain; "Breakfast at Tiffany's," Capote; "Great Democracies," Churchill; "Writers at Work," Cowley; "95 Poems," Cummings; "Death of a Nation," Dowdy; "Private World of Pablo Picasso," Duncan; "Bitter Lemons," Durrell; "Darwin's Century," Eiseley; "Arctic Year," Freuchen; "Affluent Society," Galbraith; "Roots of Heaven," Gary; "War and Peace in the Space Age," Gavin; "Only In America," Golden; "Inside Russia Today," Gunther; "From Ape to Angel," Hays; "My Brother's Keeper," Joyce; "Undiscovered Self," Jung; "J. Hostesses were Miss Louise Galphin, Miss Alice Strawn, Mrs. F. A. Jordan, and Miss Haskett. Miss Powell, wearing a navy blue sheath dress, was presented a white carnation corsage upon arrival.

Guests were greeted at the door by Miss Haskett and presented to Miss Powell, her mother, Mrs. Vance Powell of Winston-Salem, and Mrs. F. F. Hendrix. Mrs. Jordan presided over the guest register and Miss Strawn invited the guests into the dining room. The dining table was covered with a white organdy cloth over green and centered with an arrangement of pink and white azaleas in a crystal epergne. Miss Galphin poured coffee and the guests served themselves chicken salad puffs, sandwiches, cakes, nuts and mints.

Floral arrangements in other parts of the home were dogwood, white iris, narcissus, and azaleas.

The hostesses presented Miss Powell with a hand-painted cake plate and eight individual dessert plates to match as an honor gift.

Approximately 35 guests called during the morning.

Dr. Bradner Speaks On Religious Books

Mrs. Agnes Barrett was hostess to the Clio Club at her home on Tuesday. Other guests included Mrs. Sam Underwood and Dr. C. J. Bradner of E.C.C.

Mrs. W. S. Bost, president, presided over a short business meeting and also made Standing Committee appointments to serve for the coming year.

Mrs. Barrett introduced Dr. C. J. Bradner, Director of Religious Education at E.C.C., who gave an informal talk on "Picking Books to Read on Religion and Philosophy." He pointed out that due to fear, restlessness and unsatisfied spiritual needs people in the past several years have returned to Religion and are constantly looking for religious literature to read.

In selecting literature to read he warned of the thousands of books which are written which can be purchased very cheaply and which promise to quickly solve religious problems of any nature.

"Religion has no bargain counters," he said. "Religious literature worth reading is not cheap—neither is it easy reading. The Bible is the best source to read from, preferably the New Revised Edition; the next best source is from the Classics and then there are many scholars today who write great religious literature."

Assisted by Mrs. Herbert Carter, Mrs. Barrett served a salad course with coffee and an assortment of sweets.

Floorshow Of Journalism Dance--Big Hit

DANCER GAYLE CLAPP

SOLOIST . . . Patsy Jones

By CATHERINE MOORE

With masters of ceremonies Bryce Cummings and Louis Arthur tossing in jokes between acts, high school and college students presented eight numbers during the floorshow of the Journalism Dance Friday night at the high school.

A singing group—Billy Cox, Billy Brown, Robert Taft, Joe Moyer and Aubrey Harrison—started the show with clowning and singing to the twangs of Aubrey's guitar and Billy Cox's uke.

Gayle Clapp, East Carolina student and Greenville High graduate, followed with a tap dance to "Tea For Two," after which Patsy Jones sang "Lover, Come Back To Me." Ann Fodrie accompanied Patsy.

Linda Harris and Julie Dodson performed a soft shoe tap to "Dance of the Vagabonds," and Ann Green, dressed in an oversized mock uniform, gave her World War I Old Soldiers Skit.

Patsy Jones then returned with "Young and Foolish," and Gayle Clapp reappeared for a modern jazz performance to "Johnny B. Good."

The singing five who began the program also ended it with "Squaw Along the Yukon."

During the dance, the "Green Lights" staff sold homemade cake, fudge, and sandwiches, as well as drinks. They also raffled two

The Junius H. Rose High School Dance Band furnished the dance rhythms.

An Injustice To Eastern Carolina

Rep. Frank Everett's opinion that the proposed state minimum wage bill will "kill Eastern North Carolina" concerns us very little.

The philosophy behind the statement, and the impression of Eastern North Carolina it may give other people, is a matter which concerns us considerably.

In this day and time the only kind of area which would be harmed generally by the 75-cents-an-hour minimum wage proposal would be a stagnant, behind-the-times, back-woods area which could not stand the economic pressure of higher wages for workers at the bottom of the economic ladder.

Certainly that situation does not apply to vigorous Eastern North Carolina where significant strides are being made both in agricultural and industrial development.

We must realize, of course, that Eastern North Carolina for decades has enjoyed the dubious reputation of being an area of complacency—if not downright laziness—indifferent to its own economic advancement and its own progress. Perhaps at some time in the past the reputation was justified. But if that has been the case in the past, certainly there is no justification for it now.

This area of the state has set about to pull itself up by its own bootstraps, expanding and improving its vigorous agriculture, producing home-grown industries, and inducing new outside industries to locate within its borders. Its people generally are anxious for economic development of the area and are working actively toward that goal. They are by no means sitting on their traditional agricultural hands, waiting for the promised land to come to them.

Every section of this or any other area has its prophets of doom who see nothing but chaos and calamity as the result of every new, progressive suggestion. They serve a useful purpose by providing a balance between a stagnating status quo and radicalism which would go off the deep end. Even so, at times they may convey to outsiders an erroneous impression of the attitude of the people of the area as a whole.

Such, we feel, is the case with the statement made by Rep. Everett of Martin.

The proposed state minimum wage will not kill Eastern North Carolina by any means. Generally the people of the area do not feel it will kill the area's economy any more than stop lights installed years ago prevented country towns from growing into small cities, or one-way streets prevented small cities from growing into larger cities. It will no more kill Eastern North Carolina than the decline of King Cotton's reign over the area which led the establishment of tobacco as king.

And if the statement conveys to others the impression that Eastern North Carolina is still a backward area, indifferent to its own progress and that of the rest of the state, then it does the area a grave injustice.

For Awhile, No More Tobacco Tax Worries

Pitt and other tobacco producing counties of North Carolina can breathe a bit easier now, virtually assured that no special state tax will be levied on tobacco products by the 1959 General Assembly.

Whatever support there might have been for the proposal appeared to fade completely at the hearing this week in which farmers and other representatives of the tobacco industry pointed out the disastrous effects such a tax would have on one of the state's principal industries.

The only future for the bill which would have put a state tax on tobacco products now seems to be to gather dust in committee.

The proposed tax, which proponents said would swell state revenues by some $14 million, probably would have cost the state many more millions by further depressing the future of tobacco which engages some 160,000 farmers and another 40,000 industrial employes in North Carolina. It would have encouraged other states and the federal government to increase their tobacco taxes, and thus would have restricted the sale of tobacco products.

For two more years, at least, farmers and tobacco manufacturers will not have to worry about a special North Carolina tax on their products. And it might be after the way support for the bill faded completely in this legislative session, the matter will not come up again for several sessions.

Could Be Moved To Bully West

By WILLIAM L. RYAN
The Soviet has buzzed another U. S. plane in what looks like a deliberate attempt to spread panic among the Western Allies in advance of the summit meeting. The incident calls for serious and honest thinking in the West.

Are these incidents part of a Khrushchev plan to bully the West into attitudes of what the British choose to call flexibility? That seems the case. If the attempts succeed, the West may be courting disaster.

Khrushchev may be trying to get across the idea that unless at least some of his demands are met, there is grave danger of world war. The initiative for war obviously is not in the hands of the democracies, which seem to have resigned themselves to the idea that if war comes, the other side must attack first.

Chief interest is in the area of courts below the Supreme Court level. Rumors are current that sponsors of the bills are willing to make concessions from their original rigid program, but that many legislators are adopting the attitude of a "plague on all your house." If it develops that full consideration of the court reform amendments might prolong the session, most members will agree just to do nothing at all about it at this session.

If there is to be no recourse to war, then defense must begin at the political level. Are the Western statesmen approaching the summit with the deck stacked against them? Khrushchev can win, because any concession to him at any point will be a Khrushchev victory. He can hardly emerge from the summit with anything less than a standoff, preserving things as they are now in Germany and waiting for yet another chance to probe for West's softer spots. But he can do much better than that.

Already Khrushchev has the satisfaction of seeing the Western Allies divided in their summit approach. He has managed to divide the division simply add up to more confusion.

This would seem to be a moment in history when frankness—or to be blunt, honesty—might be advisable in informing the Western world of its position.

The British, for example, might use plain English. Prime Minister Macmillan's right-hand man, Home Secretary R. A. Butler, declared Tuesday there were no real differences between Britain and Germany on dealing with Khrushchev except on matters of emphasis and tactics. But there surely are differences, and even if these are tactical they are gravely important.

Chancellor Adenauer—and many Americans agree with him—suggests the British are using the wrong words. Flexibility indicates concession, backing down at some point along the line. In a word, then, it means surrender, and surrender on any point at issue in Germany is bound to be dangerous.

The British themselves learned in 1939 they could not buy off a man bent on conquest. Hitler clearly announced his plans in advance. Just as clearly the Communists have made their intentions plain. The Communists, said Lenin, intend to "move step by step, maintaining a state which is neither war nor peace; proceed by alternating offensives and retreats, but always work through Communist conspiracy."

Two steps forward, one step back, Lenin preached, but never give up what you grab.

The West surely is aware that Khrushchev at the summit will be Khrushchev the international Communist who has boasted many times of his devotion to Lenin's notions of world revolution. Whatever he wins not only will strengthen his hand at home but will be another step in the Communist program for piecemeal conquest of its enemies.

Strength For Today

By EARL L. DOUGLASS
GOOD RULE

A few days ago I heard a man in public address say: "When I am in doubt, I do the first good thing that comes into my mind." Just as we heard things which go into our ears, through our minds, and then apparently out into the air again, so we encounter good impulses every day which we recognize, assent to, but never put into practice. We are always encountering good suggestions as we go through life. Helpful ideas cross our pathway. Kindly suggestions can be tugging at our coat sleeves trying to get our attention. There are many evil, tempting situations lining the pathway of life and beckoning us to evil. But for every tempting situation there are a dozen good impulses that would like to come into our hearts, establish themselves, and lead us on to good and kindly actions. But we have too much to do. Or we have previous commitments. Or we have desires so much greater than these helpful impulses that we find it almost impossible to thrust aside the evil and do the good, the kindly. Just remember when in doubt that a good rule is to do the next kindly, generous thing that suggests itself to your mind. You can never go wrong doing that.

Poor Tool For Mountain Climbing

By JIMMY ELLIS

Picking Up Loose Ends

Bills and pieces: Farnville's Episcopalians are chucking this week over the sequel to a double baptism last Sunday.

According to the story, a small boy and his smaller sister were principals in the ceremony. They were duly accepted for membership in the church, and joined their parents afterwards to accept congratulations from well-wishers.

The boy, who we have been led to understand, went through the ceremony with some reluctance, was swept up by the occasion. The pride built to fever proportions and he could contain himself only a short time. "You know what?" he asked one older friend. "What?"

Actually, North Carolina mothers-in-law are getting short-changed in the deal, because no Tar Heel Governor has ever proclaimed the third Sunday in April as official Mother-in-Law Day.

The states in which it has been proclaimed include Ohio, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Nebraska, Kentucky, Kansas, Indiana, Georgia, Arkansas, Missouri and Louisiana.

Those who wish to conduct unofficial ceremonies are welcome to do so, we presume. The way we figure it, the chief qualification for observance is to solemnly promise not to cuss the spouse's mama — and then live up to that promise for at least 24 hours.

Of course, all the people I know don't cuss their mothers-in-law anyhow. They're scared to.

One last word about asaleas and I am through with them for a year: Brother Don Schlenz, the Luther Burbank of Coghil, carried on at some length in his column yesterday about the beauty of Lakewood Pines section's spring flowers. I don't argue with him a bit, but I, too, know a beauty spot.

My Fair Gwen's father has been dabbling in flowers for about ten years and he has his backyard up to a new station this year. His flowers are really out of this world (and I say all this with a clean conscience because he'll probably never read this).

Of course, to see the Richardson Gardens, a spectator has to do a little riding. He lives in Washington (N.C.), at 707 East Fourth Street.

He's just enough of an extrovert to be tickled silly by someone who wants to see his flowers. And the flowers are well worth the ride.

Other Editors Saying . . . Voting Machines

(Washington Daily News) A special committee of the North Carolina General assembly has been named to study the question of whether or not the legislature shall adopt a plan to encourage the use of voting machines in North Carolina.

Members of this committee are Senators Stator, Williams of Stanley county and William Copeland of Hertford county, and Representatives Marcellus Buchanan of Jackson county, Ralph Strayhorn of Durham county, and L. Snead High of Cumberland county.

This committee will hold hearings and make its recommendations to the General assembly. There is much to be said in behalf of voting machines. Just how much more it could cost the individual counties in primaries and elections, we are not now prepared to say. Some ballot printing bills can be eliminated, we suspect, but other than this cost, we don't know what other expenses can be eliminated. We'd still have to have elections officials, and we'd have to have people at the polls to explain the machine voting process to the voters. We suspect that the costs might go up with machines.

Then the cost of the machines or the rental of them would be a factor. We understand that the machines represent a fairly heavy cost. One reason advanced by proponents of voting machines is that the ballot counting will be made so much easier, so much faster, and there would be less chance of errors being made. We can well understand the need of voting machines in sparsely populated areas. Some dividing line must be drawn somewhere. In the smaller counties and counties where population is not heavy, the counting is not what slows the election returns so much. What slows matters so much is communication.

We would think that any county with a population of 100,000 or more citizens would be wise to install voting machines. If that figure could be accepted as the base, then in North Carolina today there would be only seven and possibly eight counties affected. They would be Buncombe, Durham, Forsythe, Guilford, Mecklenburg, and Wake counties, each of which has a population in excess of 100,000. Then Cumberland county in the 1960 census will probably pass the 100,000 mark.

In such counties as Beaufort and Hyde we see little practical value of installing voting machines. We believe the cost or rental of them might make use of them impractical. After all, we have no great slowness in counting our ballots. The slowness comes in getting them reported. And even with voting speed up the matter of reporting returns to any great degree.

It is well that this committee is making the study. We feel sure that much more can be said for and against voting machines. The line should be drawn somewhere, and in strictly rural areas, we doubt the wisdom of using these machines.

Choose The Pen At Lewisburg

By ELMER ROESSNER

If you made a mistake in your income tax return yesterday, remember this: an old con says the Federal Penitentiary at Lewisburg, Pa., is the best. The guards aren't bad, the food is passable and the clientele is high class. Atlanta and Leavenworth are hot in the summer and cells aren't air conditioned. Terre Haute and McNeil Island are passable, but the food is greasy and the radio reception is poor. Alcatraz stinks. So make no errors. The Internal Revenue Service says you might. Last year, almost 2,000,000 taxpayers—one in every 30—made mistakes. And 65 per cent of those mistakes were in favor of the taxpayers. Among those who erred in their own favor, an average penalty of $83 was imposed. Among those whose mistakes resulted in overpayments, the average refund was $72.

WE DON'T CHEAT OURSELVES While these figures are interesting data on taxes, they are even more significant commentaries on human behavior.

When the percentages of mistakes are adjusted for dollar amounts, we find that percentage of error in favor of the government is only 30.5 per cent, and the percentage in favor of the taxpayer is 69.5 per cent. It could be said that our national honesty quotient is 30.5 per cent. However, it should be noted that 96.7 per cent of those making returns do not err—or were not found out.

On the other hand, Americans may not be even 30.5 per cent honest in tax reporting. I recall an old friend—the statute of limitations is in effect—who once checked off an outrageously high amount for business expenses. THOSE KNOWING AGENTS

In due time he was ordered to appear with a record of his expenses. He bought a cheap diary and with watered ink filled in items totalling almost as much as he had claimed on his tax form.

Then he gave a party and his friends threw the diary back and forth across the room and everybody jumped on it. They imparted a year's wear to the book between 10 P.M. and 3 A.M. My friend offered the book in evidence. The Revenue agent was a female, not a chick who might be impressed by my friend's patent-leather charms, but a sweet matron. So he played it like a son.

She took his book and added the figures on a machine. When she returned, she said, "I know this is an honest record. Your figure on your return is slightly off. You have deducted too much. But that's an honest, natural mistake. If you had deducted less

A Year Full Of Idleness

By HAL BOYLE

NEW YORK (AP) — Would you like a year in which every day seemed like Saturday?

Would you like a 365-day paid vacation from work?

The idea of a year off from your job to rest or study has been seriously advanced by Arthur Carstens, a University of California labor expert.

Carstens believes such year-long holidays, to be financed jointly by employers and the state, would benefit workers. They would, he said, "cut down the toll of pressure that makes widows of half of the nation's women."

He doesn't take into consideration the other half of the picture: If wives had their husbands underfoot for a 12-month stretch, half the men would wind up widowers.

But progress always has its price, and this is a risk most thoughtful men would be willing to take.

As we see it, Carstens' proposal for a sabbatical year is of value only if the year away from office and factory were wisely spent.

Some showoffs, naturally, would try to impress the boss by enrolling for the year at Harvard, which only would mix them up. It takes four years of Harvard to remove the confusion from a man. Even then the diploma carries no guarantee.

What really is needed is a soundly planned program which will enable the individual, at the end of his year of enforced leisure, to return to the job a happier, more-rounded man.

We have drawn up such a daily program for yourself—in the unlikely event our boss gives us a year off—and suggest you might find it useful too.

Here is our day: 7:00 — Wake up and laugh at silent alarm clock, which has been turned off the night before.

7:00-7:01 — Brisk calisthenics while lying in bed. 7:01-9 — Go back to sleep. 9:30-10 — Decide whether to shower. Decide not to.

9:30-10 — Read newspaper and breakfast — bourbon, toast, bacon, eggs, coffee. 10-11 — Give wife orders of the day, and point out her errors of the day before.

11-11:15 — Coffee and bourbon break, spent resting on sofa. 11:15-12:15 — Front porch rocking chair session. Make plans on how to spend tomorrow in constructive way. 12:15-12:30 — Highball with next door neighbor.

12:30-1:30 — Lunch: Beer, beef sandwich, apple pie and cheese. 1:30-1:35 — Read good book to improve mind. 1:35-3 — Nap on sofa. 3-3:15 — Coffee and bourbon break.

3:15-4:45 — Back porch rocking chair session to get benefit of afternoon sun. Review morning's plans for tomorrow, decide tomorrow is a bad day to start any new projects. 4:45-5 — Inspect vegetable garden, point out to wife areas where she should do more hoing.

5-8:30 — Cocktail hour. 8:30-9:30 — Dinner: Wine, sirloin steak, salad, mashed potatoes and gravy, ice cream. 9:30-10:30 — Discuss with wife what world is going to hell, lay out her work schedule for next day. 11:59-12:00 — Write postcard to boss saying how much you miss the old office gang, and how you're champing at the bit to get back.

12-12:01 — Go to bed with second good book of day to improve mind. 12:01 — Throw book out window and fall asleep.

Of course, no program is ideal for everybody and you may be able to improve on this one. But if you follow it rigorously one thing is sure.

At the end of your sabbatical year you'll be eager to return to your job — so you can start playing on your pension, when you'll be able to live this way the rest of your life.

NEW 8MM PROJECTOR, a self-contained home movie workshop, was unveiled at the recent Philadelphia trade show. With a built-in six-inch preview screen and a compartment containing a dry splicer, the Keystone K-110 Projector can edit and splice home movies as well as project them with push button controls.

By IRVING DESFOR
AP Newsfeatures

An international array of new cameras and equipment went on display for the nation's camera store dealers recently in Philadelphia at the annual convention and trade show of the industry. As I walked around Convention Hall's two packed floors, it was almost like a pre-Christmas dream. Here were mouth-watering photo items that you could inspect or look at but couldn't have — not just yet. Some are hand-made prototypes or pre-production models on public display for the first time. Others will be available shortly or in a few months as the production lines start rolling.

There was great interest in Kodak's newest high speed color film. Called High Speed Ektachrome, with an ASA index of 160 for daylight and a type B for artificial light with an index of 100, it will be available only in 35mm roll film form around June.

Not long ago, General Electric announced the world's smallest flash bulb, the AG 1, which is about the size of a jelly bean. At the Philadelphia show the first automatic flash gun unit for that flash bulb was shown by Revere. Called the Flashmatic, it stores a clip of six of these tiny flash-lamps, fires each one as needed. A lever ejects the used bulb into a compartment as it places a new bulb into position.

A couple of unusual cameras from Germany were the Tele-Rolleiflex and the Brooks-Plaubel Vier-tube 100. A matched pair of 135-mm f-4 Zeiss Sonnar lenses have been built into the familiar Rolleiflex camera frame with the regular automatic features to make the Tele-Rolleiflex. It should be of great interest to portrait specialists. The second camera was designed by Frank Rizzatti of Burleigh Brooks more than seven years ago but couldn't be built until the Schneider Super-Angulon lenses became a reality. It incorporates a 47mm f-8 lens which covers a 100 degree view in a camera body wrapped around the film. It uses 120 roll film to make seven pictures each 2 1/4 by 3 3/4 inches. These cameras are slated for June delivery.

Over in the Leitz booth, crowds gathered to watch the unusual gimmick of the Pradovitz automatic slide projector. Along with the push-button remote control slide changer, it had a remote control focusing button. Then it went a few steps further into the ultrasonic atmosphere. By attaching a pickup unit into the projector, slides could be changed or refocused from a distance without cords or wires. The operator or lecturer in a large hall merely presses one of two different rubber bulbs several times. This emits an ultra-sonic sound wave too high for human audibility but transmits the power to make the changes.

From Japan, greatest interest seemed centered on the new Nikon 35mm Automatic Reflex, and a Japanese version of the Swedish Hasselblad, the Bronica, an automatic single-lens 2 1/4 x 2 1/4 reflex camera with interchangeable lenses and magazine backs. Both cameras featured a depth-of-field preview button. When pressed, the lens diaphragm closed down to the f-stop at which the picture was set to be shot; when released it opened wide for viewing. Both had instant return mirrors after shooting, eliminating the image blackout which most single-lens reflex cameras have had heretofore. A large variety of auxiliary lenses from extreme wide angle to telephoto were available for each camera. An added feature of the new Nikon Reflex is a motor drive accessory which permits rapid-fire shooting with through-the-taking-lens vision. Sequences of two, three or more or a continuous run at the rate of four-a-second can be shot directly from the camera or remotely by a button on the battery case.

ORGAN MARATHON
SAN PEDRO, Calif. (AP)—Bill Coffman, 32, a night club entertainer, claims a new record—135 hours—for playing the organ with 15-minute hourly breaks. He said the previous record was 133 hours, set by a pianist, Mrs. Marie Ashton of Slough, England, April 4.

By BUNNY HARRIS
Reflector Raleigh Bureau
RALEIGH—The public hearing Wednesday on Pitt Rep. Walter Jones' bill to reorganize the State Highway Commission was a highly cursory affair cut short by Chairman Brantley Womble.

Presiding over the House roads committee, Womble allowed Jones approximately 10 minutes discussion on the bill before asking him: "Are you through—we can't spend all morning discussing one side. We have to devote some time to the opposition."

Jones, already interrupted by Womble a couple of times during the 10 minutes he had the floor, apologized "for taking so much time."

Womble then called for the opposition to speak. There was none and the committee moved on to other matters.

The roads chairman later expressed surprise that there were no opponents to the bill presented, particularly "some representative from the Highway Department."

He said the public hearing was announced two weeks ago and "duly advertised." All the members of the committee questioned said they knew the committee would take up the bill on Wednesday but were unaware of a public hearing being held until Tuesday. The incident later brought an apology from Womble who told Jones: "I didn't mean to cut you off this morning but I knew there wasn't any opposition there."

In his comments before the committee Jones said his bill was "as much misunderstood" as any piece of legislation before the General Assembly this session.

Basically the bill calls for 14 highway commissioners (rather than the present seven), each appointed from a specific geographic area to give "uniform representation." Each commissioner would be required to set a time and place each month for hearing matters presented to him by local governing bodies and individuals.

"The whole motive of the bill was to place the commissioners in a geographical position where the people could get to them and discuss their problems and come away a little better satisfied," he said.

Rep. John McLaughlin of Iredell, one of the signers of the bill, asked Jones in the manner he often has of getting a point across through questioning: "And the bill will bring the Highway Department back to the people—is that what you're trying to do?" Jones conceded that indeed it was. He said later he has heard no opposition to the bill except from "some state officials and some legislators."

Authors Article On The Clarinet

Herbert L. Carter, director of bands at East Carolina College, is the author of a recent article "Let's Improve the Chalumeau Register," appearing in "The Bandsman," a nationally circulated publication dedicated to the advancement of wind instrument playing.

Basing his remarks on his observations as a clinician at high school band contest-festivals, Mr. Carter points out weak points in the performances of clarinet sections and suggests practical methods of improving tone quality among instrumentalists.

Mr. Carter has been director of the East Carolina Concert and Marching Bands since 1946. As a clarinetist, he has appeared in recitals both on the campus and in various towns and cities in North Carolina.

In January, 1911, the volcano Taal in the Philippines erupted killing 3,000 persons.

A NEW MYSTERY The COUNT of 9 by A. A. FAIR (Erle Stanley Gardner)

CHAPTER 8

As I opened the door marked Lionel Palmer — Photographer — Entrance, a bell on the door sounded in back somewhere. An electric sign flashed on which read, "Photographer is busy in darkroom. Will join you in a moment. Please sit down and wait."

I looked around.

There was a desk, a swivel chair, a couple of straight-backed chairs, a studio camera, some stock backgrounds and a shelf of portable hand cameras.

There were some framed camera portraits and quite a few enlargements of hunting scenes, in each of which Dean Crockett the Second was very much in evidence. It took about two minutes for Palmer to come out. His eyes were blinking in the light. "I'm sorry I kept you waiting," he said. "I was in the darkroom loading some plateholders, and... well, well, well, it's the detective."

"That's right."

I got up and shook hands.

"What are you doing here, Lam? I mean, is there something I can do for you?"

"I'm leading a double life," I told him.

"That's nothing," he said. "Double lives are simple. It's triple and quadruple lives that give you the excitement. What do you want?"

"Pictures."

"What of?"

"The shindig last night."

"I'm making some of them now," he said.

"I want to study the pictures," I said.

He frowned for a moment, then said, "Okay, I'll treat you as one of the family. Come on in."

The darkroom had been constructed so that by means of an S-shaped labyrinth the outer light was kept from the darkroom. It was a big darkroom. An orange light showed the pinup pictures.

"Quite a collection," I said, looking around and whistling.

"I get around," Palmer admitted.

"I want prints of your shindig pictures," I told him.

"What for?"

"So I can study the faces of the people who were there."

"You're working for Crockett, Lam?"

"That's right."

"You think these pictures will help you recover the stolen articles?"

"They may."

"That would be nice for you?"

"In what way?"

"You'd get a reward?"

"No one's said so — not yet. My partner makes the financial arrangements."

"I'd be helping you cut yourself a piece of cake?"

"I wouldn't know."

"If I help you, perhaps you could help me."

"Perhaps."

"It happens to be awfully short of cash right now," he said. "Hang it! I can't ever seem to keep money ahead. I want to take a babe to dinner tonight."

"Have you been making passes at that file clerk in the office?" I asked.

"What office?"

"Ours."

"Oh, that babe." He took a book out of his pocket, switched on a brighter light, ran through the book and said, "Let's see, what was her name? Oh, yes, Ennis. Eva Ennis. Here's her telephone number."

"That book looks well filled," I said.

"Any I can look at now?"

"No extra prints yet," he said, "but you can look. That's what I've been doing today, developing the negatives and pulling some eight-by-ten enlargements on glossy. They're just coming out of the dryer now. Want to look?"

"Sure."

He manipulated a big drum covered with canvas. I heard prints dropping, then the canvas slid back and I saw a big heated, stainless-steel drum, polished to a mirror finish.

Palmer opened a drawer and the prints came out; some three dozen of them.

"That's nice work," I told him. "I do nice work."

"They feel nice."

"Double weight paper," he said, "and I soaked it in a glycerin bath after I've washed the hypo out of them and before I put them in the drum dryer."

I started looking through the prints. "Some nice-looking babes here," I said.

"Uh-huh."

"You know their names?"

"I could find out their names. Each one of these pictures is numbered. I number the plate when I take a picture, and then I get names in a book reading from left to right."

"Addresses?"

"That depends. Some of them want prints; some of them don't care."

"Crockett gives them the prints?"

"I do. Crockett wants the pictures. I tell them they have to make arrangements with me."

He opened another drawer, took out the usual eight-by-ten professional portraits, then some full-length shots with legs and bathing suit.

"How do you like that number?" "Class," I said.

"Lots of them are like that. I won't monkey with them unless they're real class."

"Wow!" I said, in awe, "do you know women?"

"Do I know women," he admitted. "Say, I don't know why I got started on this. I've got some work to do. You can sit out in the office and go through the stuff."

He fixed me up at the desk, gave me a bunch of scrapbooks and said, "I'm going in and load some more plateholders, then I've got some stuff in the hypo I want to take out and wash. Just come in after you look at these scrapbooks. These photos are all first-class babes."

I thanked him and sat down at the desk.

After he'd gone back to the darkroom, I started exploring the office. I looked at the array of cameras on the shelf and picked out the press camera he'd been using in the agency office. It was a Speed Graphic. I opened the back. There was nothing in the camera. I looked in the backs of a couple of other cameras and figured I'd drawn a blank.

Then I saw another Speed Graphic with a wide-angle lens. I swung that around and opened the back.

It was in there; a carved jade Buddha about four inches high, all wrapped in cotton.

I put it in my pocket and walked out.

Soon Will Test 'Flying Saucer'

WASHINGTON (AP)—Army researchers plan to begin testing soon a new aircraft reportedly patterned after flying saucers.

Word of approaching tests of a radical type craft was given the House Space Committee today.

But Army officials said they could not tell details about the craft except behind closed doors.

Other sources said the new craft is of flying saucer design that could revolutionize military reconnaissance in wartime.

Brig. Gen. Frank H. Britton, director of developments for Army research, said the new craft is the result of a joint Army - Air Force program carried out by AVRO Aircraft Ltd. of Canada.

Like other radically designed craft now being studied by the military services, the AVRO vehicle will make use of what is known as the ground cushion phenomena, Britton said.

This involves release of air under extremely high pressure from jets around the side or under the vehicle—thus boosting the craft off the ground on an air cushion.

Earlier, Navy scientists had reported that research is under way looking toward development of somewhat similar machines for use as amphibious transports or assault boats capable of skimming over both water and ground.

Rear Adm. Rawson Bennett, chief of naval research, said another possibility is a radio controlled flying platform equipped to search out and destroy enemy submarines.

TOKYO (AP)—Red China today claimed that its revolutionary commune system now embraces 99 per cent of its peasant families.

A communique from the State Statistical Bureau said 120 million households had been organized into 25,000 communes. They were formed from more than 700,000 agricultural cooperatives, Peiping radio said.

Under the commune system the peasants farm according to a centralized plan and under central direction. THEY OUGHTA BE A LAW!

Whimsical Legislation Bound To Pop Up When Lawmakers Gather

By ART SRB Associated Press Staff Writer

If some legislators had their way: Blind persons could get hunting licenses. Nudism would be outlawed. Cigarette packages would bear skull and crossbones inscriptions. Downtown Chicago would be a sand dune.

Bills calling for such laws were introduced in state legislatures year. Some of the odd or whimsical measures even managed to become law. A tipsy water skier will find the sport even riskier if he performs on Iowa rivers and lakes.

Why? Legislators in the Hawkeye State decided some water skiers were flying too high and passed a law making it a misdemeanor to ride skis while under the influence.

Nudism came under scrutiny in Vermont and Missouri, the Show-Me State. But Missourians were having a tough time deciding which committee should handle the bill to ban nudism. The Appropriations Committee argued it deserved the measure because it deals with figures.

Some 40 sunlovers in Vermont's nudist colony can continue basking in the altogether, thanks to the defeat of an anti-nudist bill. Wyoming considered, then defeated, a bill which would have permitted issuance of hunting licenses to blind persons. It would have required the actual shooting be done by another licensed hunter, with the game animal going to the blind person. South Dakota's Senate thought all cigarette packs should bear a skull and crossbones stamp. The House considered the bill — then killed it. A similar measure died in the Utah Legislature.

Exasperated with attempts by Chicagoans to prevent industry from building on Indiana's Lake Michigan sand dunes, a Hoosier legislator proposed that Chicago's business district be converted into a sand dune.

The bill, which even provided for empty beer cans to give the proposed Chicago beach the proper picnic look, died in committee, almost before Chicagoans got wind of the matter.

Maine tried to straighten out the somewhat fuzzy provisions of its liquor law forbidding cocktail lounge patrons to stand and tavern customers to sit. Bills were drawn up to allow lounge patrons to arise and those in taverns to be seated.

Three Colorado legislators, who have a total of 25 grandchildren among them, agreed that teacher should be allowed to whack Johnny on the posterior when necessary. They introduced such a bill.

New Mexico kiddies were spared such classroom embarrassment by their governor's veto. But unruly pupils in South Dakota, whose Legislature and governor like the idea, will have to take their licks in stride.

The younger set found a friend in Wisconsin, where a bill says a child could sue mom and dad. The parents weren't left without recourse, however. They could sue right back. Yankee beekeepers, who transport their charges south in the winter to keep the little stingers from freezing, apparently didn't always confine the bees securely. Stings, and angry rebel yells, prompted legislation in South Carolina calling for better hives. A bill in the Wisconsin Legislature would require taverns to post a blacklist of all alcoholics. It failed, however, to state whether wives would have a voice in nominating candidates.

Wisconsin legislators, aware of the tavern owner's plight, passed a law which classifies bartenders under the "hazardous occupation" provision of the workmen's compensation law.

Lawmakers also were concerned with fisticuffs.

Los Angeles Is Planting Trees

LOS ANGELES, Calif. (AP)—Los Angeles is beginning to lose that bleak and sterile look.

So says Frederic A. Chase, executive director of Los Angeles Beautiful. He pointed out that the 10,500 permits to plant trees on downtown streets last year represented a 90 per cent increase over 1955.

The result, he says, is that "the city is beginning to resemble a habitat of human beings rather than a bleak and sterile mosaic of asphalt, concrete and steel."

Elizabeth Taylor Is Recuperating

HOLLYWOOD, Calif. (AP)—Elizabeth Taylor was recuperating today after having her tonsils removed at Cedars of Lebanon Hospital.

Singer Eddie Fisher, the actress' fiancé, was at her side before and after surgery Wednesday. Then he flew back to Las Vegas, Nev., for a night club engagement and to protect his legal residence status under which he expects to get a Nevada divorce from Debbie Reynolds May 11.

Miss Taylor was expected to remain in the hospital three or four days for treatment of a chronic throat infection.

18-Year-Old Has Plenty Troubles

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. (AP)—Eighteen-year-old Johnny Odom of Massey Hill was picked up a few weeks ago for auto theft.

In jail he met 28-year-old Charles Thomas Bradford, who was awaiting trial for a Ft. Bragg bank robbery and slaying. Together, they plotted and carried out a jail break.

Three days later, April 6, with bullets filling the air, Odom hopped from a getaway car, and stood with his hands up. His new-found companion died in the police trap.

Wednesday, Odom pleaded guilty of escape. He was sentenced in County Recorder's Court to two years in prison. He appealed.

Within four hours, Odom's appeal was called in Cumberland County Superior Court. He again pleaded guilty of escape and pleaded guilty of stealing a truck owned by his brother-in-law, the case for which he was originally jailed.

Judge Raymond Mallard postponed sentencing until today, until the outcome of another auto theft charge against Odom, the theft of jailer E. V. McLaurin's automobile the night of the escape.

Of the first 21 presidents of the United States, seven were from Virginia.

The Killer 'Just A Scared Girl'

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. (AP)—A chubby, 18-year-old blonde who said she fired 18 bullets into a young father because of an urge to kill is "just a scared girl" to a psychiatrist.

Dr. Walter Rappaport, chief of a state mental hospital, talked with pony-tailed Rosemarie Bjorkland Wednesday, a few hours after she told Sheriff Earl B. Whitmore she killed August Norry, 28, on Feb. 1 as he dumped grass cuttings.

"I wanted to see if I could commit a murder and not have it on my conscience," Miss Bjorkland, a clerk-typist, was quoted by Whitmore. "I've felt better ever since I killed him."

Norry, married and expecting to become a father, was only a casual acquaintance who happened along when she was target practicing in the hills near her Daly City home, just south of San Francisco, she said. An urge to kill that had obsessed her for at least two years became impossible to control when Norry happened to be in the target practice area, she related.

Farmville Group Elects Officers

FARMVILLE — W. C. (Bill) Monk has been named president of Farmville Industries, Inc., an organization set up to construct a building for a qualified industrial prospect.

Monk and other officers were elected by directors of the group at an organizational meeting this week. Other officers include Vice-President Dawson Jefferson and Secretary-Treasurer Joe Joyner.

They will also serve as directors with W. A. Allen, Dr. Paul E. Jones, Howard M. (Pete) Allen, John N. Fountain, J. Irvin Morgan, R. E. Davenport, Jr., Eli Joyner and Harry J. Byres.

The corporation, which includes approximately 45 stockholders, has raised an estimated $60,000 and plans to borrow an equal amount to finance construction of a building for an industrial prospect who would employ 200 white women in a sewing and cutting operation. Under present plans, the arrangement will be secured by a long-term lease, if the corporation and prospect are able to negotiate terms suitable to both parties.

A charter for operations of the corporation was issued Monday by Secretary of State Thad Eure.

Collect Relics Of Pioneer Nun

MONTREAL (AP)—Members of the Order of the Grey Nuns have collected mementoes of Venerable Marguerite D'Youville, whom the Roman Catholic Church may one day rank as the first woman saint native to North America.

The relics concern the childhood, married life and religious career of the nun who founded the Sisters of Charity, known around the world as the Grey Nuns. She died in 1771.

At special ceremonies in Rome in June, she will be beatified as Blessed Mother D'Youville, one step away from canonization.

Stores Are Guarded At Night By Pistol-Packing Grandmother

NEWTON, Kan. (AP) — Mrs. Irene Cullinan doesn't scare easily. And in her business that's good. The 64-year-old grandmother has been a merchant policeman for 25 years. Clad in slacks with a visored cap over her gray hair, she keeps watch at night over 40 Newton business places, carrying a ring of keys, a flashlight and a .32 Colt pistol.

She's never had to use the gun and hopes she never has to, but she says, "when I find one of my places open, I don't walk in empty-handed."

"If they think I'm afraid to use the weapon, they have another thing coming. My father taught me how to use a gun when I was just a little girl. And I don't scare."

Mrs. Cullinan checks doors to see if they are locked, turns off store lights, and looks for anything unusual. Her day begins at 6 p.m. She starts out walking but from midnight to 5 a.m., she patrols in her car. She figures she walks about 500 miles a month and drives another 1,000.

Mrs. Cullinan became a merchant policeman in 1933 with her husband, John, who was Newton's night chief of police in the late 1920s. She took over his downtown beat during a five-year illness that preceded his death in 1955.

How long does she intend to pound the beat?

"As long as I am able," she says.

A United Berlin Plan Rejected

BERLIN (AP) — East German Premier Otto Grotewohl today rejected American suggestions that all Berlin be put under international control.

The Communist Premier also rejected again any discussion of German reunification at the foreign ministers' conference opening in Geneva May 11.

"The question of reunification is an internal German affair and will not be a matter of debate at Geneva," Grotewohl told the East German Parliament.

The Premier's statement almost certainly reflected the line the Soviet Union will take at the parley on Berlin and Germany.

Young TV Performer Is Devoted To More Study

By CHARLES MERCER
NEW YORK (AP) — Not every successful young performer in television and the theater has heard of the eight-hour day.

Carol Lawrence was discussing this before her appearance tonight in "Too Bad About Sheila Troy" over NBC-TV on "Oldsmobile Theater" (8:30 p.m., EST).

Miss Lawrence, who stars in "West Side Story" on Broadway, plays a temperamental actress who formerly was a child movie star in tonight's live production.

While Miss Lawrence had been singing, dancing and acting in "West Side Story" she has been maintaining a rigorous weekly schedule of study. Her subjects: singing, dancing and acting.

"You never should stop studying," he said. "Both the theater and television are changing rapidly. The theater is a different place than it was 20 years ago. And television is different than it was even two years ago. Increasingly drama displays deeper psychological insight.

"It's no longer enough to be either an actor or singer or dancer. If possible you should be able to do all three. All are related. The old days of the theater are past when you could get one role and play it for the rest of your life. Both the theater and television demand a greater diversity from a performer."

Comely, dark-haired Miss Lawrence was given time off from "West Side Story" to appear in the TV drama. Her schedule should give pause to many an office worker who feels he is burdened by the 40-hour week.

Her husband, Cosmo F. Allegretti, is a puppeteer on "Captain Kangaroo," the early morning CBS-TV program. That means he rises at 5:30 a.m. As a dutiful wife, she feels that she must too.

She studies her triumvirate of talents in the mornings. Normally she has two matinees and six nightly performances in her physically exhausting role in "West Side Story." Then her husband calls for her at the theater and takes her home. "Since I get up in the morning, he insists on staying up at night."

In addition, she frequently appears in television shows. "It's a wonderful way of life," she said. "I wouldn't change it." End advance for pms Thursday, April 16

Ayden JC Is State Vice President

MARVIN BALDREE WITH COUNTY JAYCEE PRESIDENTS . . . John Hardy, Greenville president; Dr. Jack Carson, Gritton president; Baldree, new district vice president; Bill McLawhorn, Ayden president; Dr. Larry Alexander, Ayden immediate past president.

GOLDSBORO—Marvin Baldree of Ayden was elected Junior Chamber of Commerce state vice-president for the 11th district here last night.

Baldree defeated Mack A. Moore, this year's Goldsboro Club president.

"Thank you for the honor you have bestowed upon me tonight," Baldree told the Jaycees following his election. "Go home and make this the best year the 11th District has ever known."

Baldree is a past president of the Ayden Junior Chamber of Commerce. He is a past State Director for the club and a Distinguished Service Award winner.

Roland Grady of the Wilson Jaycee club nominated Baldree for vice president at last night's meeting. The nomination was seconded by John Hardy, president of the Greenville club.

Baldree will replace Fred Poore of Washington as the 11th district vice president.

Approximately 200 Jaycees attended the fourth quarter district meeting in Goldsboro. Included were 21 from Greenville, 22 from Ayden and 11 from Gritton.

Ayden won the trophy for having the highest percentage of its membership present.

The invocation was said by Lewis E. Bryan. Delegates were welcomed by Ralph Edwards, state director of the Goldsboro Junior Chamber of Commerce.

The Jaycees heard reports from each of the club presidents and also heard from several candidates for State offices. The state election will be held at the state convention in Asheville next month.

Clubs composing the 11th district include: Wilson, Greenville, Ayden, Gritton, Washington, Goldsboro, LaGrange, Mt. Olive and Smithfield.

Private Hunting Preserves Prove To Be Solution

By BOB MCHUGH

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP)—As factories continue to spring up throughout rural America in an era of industrial expansion, the hunter without private lands of his own finds fewer and fewer places to stalk game.

One answer has been created in the private shooting preserve where you put your money on the line for the privilege of busting a bird under conditions virtually duplicating the natural element.

Thirty-eight states, including South Carolina, now legalize this type of private enterprise.

Since the South Carolina Legislature acted last year, one preserve in Union County opened for business and another will this year in Pickens.

The Union layout consists of 200 acres, planted in corn, lespedeza and a variety of sorghums to provide cover and a final condemned bird's meal for pen-raised pheasants, chukars and quail.

The birds are brought up in long high enclosures and are exercised daily so that they will fly as well as their unfettered cousins in the wilds. The hunting area is stocked from the pens before each hunt.

Dogs are provided, and a gunner with half an eye can be pretty sure he'll get to shoot about as many birds as he can pay for.

The price may be out of reach of some bankrolls—a $15.00 minimum with pheasants going at $4.50 each, quail at $2.50, and chukars at $3.50 each. Flights of mallards are also brought into a small lake at $4.50 a duck.

While the expense may be a drawback, preserve shooting has these obvious advantages.

1. A hunter can be certain that he won't return home after walking for miles without seeing game.

2. A busy man can get in about as much shooting on a preserve in two hours as he is likely to see all day in the wilds.

3. Hunters have the opportunity of shooting game that is not native to their areas.

Herter's Arthritis Could Be Factor In Choice Ahead

By JOHN SCALI

WASHINGTON (AP)—Christian A. Herter's arthritis may be a factor in whether he succeeds John Foster Dulles as secretary of state.

President Eisenhower, it is believed, would consider whether the affliction would interfere with Herter's being an active foreign policy chief. Herter is now acting secretary of state.

Herter's personal physician Dr. Theodore B. Bayles provided his own answer to this question Wednesday night. The 64-year-old New Englander, he said, is "perfectly capable" of carrying the full burden of secretary of state.

Herter suffers from arthritis of the hips. It causes him to bend his 6-foot-5 frame forward when he walks.

It's a disease he has put up with for the past 10 to 15 years. Dr. Bayles said the condition has "progressed very little" in the past eight years.

"He doesn't have a crippling kind of arthritis," the doctor reported in an interview. "Mr. Herter suffers some discomfort when he walks or stands for any length of time."

"But he has absolutely no discomfort when sitting at a conference table, for example, or resting in bed at night."

Ever since he became undersecretary of state two years ago, Herter has relied on light-weight metal arm crutches to move about. They relieve the pressure on his hip joints.

Herter's name has led all the rest in the guessing game that got under way after Eisenhower announced Dulles' resignation Wednesday.

Others still mentioned in speculation, however, included Undersecretary C. Douglas Dillon; Central Intelligence Agency Director Allen W. Dulles, the secretary's brother; John J. McCloy, New York investment banker and a former high commissioner to Germany; U.N. Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge; former Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York; Robert D. Murphy, a career diplomat and State Department trouble shooter; and retired Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther, now president of the American Red Cross.

Dulles was reported to be in good spirits despite the cancer which forced him to resign. A State Department spokesman said he was up and about his hospital suite. No change was reported in his physical condition.

Drop Price Hike For Haircuts

PHILADELPHIA (AP)—Chapter 740 of the Associated Master Barbers of America has decided that "conditions do not warrant" an increase in the price of men's haircuts.

It was good news for Philadelphians. Only last week they got word from another barbering group, the Pennsylvania League of Master Barbers, that conditions do warrant an increase — from $1.50 to $2 a head by August.

Rubber Workers Expand Strikes

AKRON, Ohio (AP)—The United Rubber Workers struck two more big rubber companies today, leaving only one of the industry's Big Four—the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.—still operating.

More than 80,000 workers are affected by the strike.

The union called out its workers at B. F. Goodrich Co. and Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. plants after negotiations failed to reach agreement on a new contract. Negotiations meeting at Cleveland and Canton talked past the 12:01 a.m. strike deadline without resolving several major issues blocking settlement.

Wages are not at issue. Pensions, insurance and supplemental unemployment benefits are among the items discussed.

A Goodyear spokesman said so much progress was made in talks Wednesday night at Cleveland that the company and union agreed to keep plants open while further talks are held.

Firestone spokesman said a statement accusing the union of taking strike action against Firestone "after the union tentatively accepted from another company substantially the same terms we had offered."

A union spokesman said the Firestone charge "just is not so," but declined to elaborate.

The fourth big rubber firm is the U.S. Rubber Co., whose contract expired last Thursday night. The URW, representing some 26,000 employees of U.S. Rubber, struck that company, but further talks are being conducted in New York.

No new talks were set immediately with Firestone and Goodrich negotiators.

To Die, Unless Hodges Objects

RALEIGH (AP)—Unless Gov. Hodges intervenes, a 22-year-old Negro convicted of raping a white woman will die in the Central Prison gas chamber May 1.

The State Supreme Court affirmed Wednesday the death sentence of David Lee Hicks, convicted along with six others in a mass rape in Goldsboro last Aug. 24.

The victim was Mrs. Leslie Gerald Strickland.

The other defendants received life sentences. Four of them, Raymond Bryant, Bennie Lee Ford, William Allen Atkinson and William Edward Wilson, appealed but the high court affirmed their sentences. The other two, Elyse Ford and Henry Williams, pleaded guilty and did not appeal.

According to testimony, the woman was seized from behind by Hicks while she walked down an alley. While he was in the act of raping her, the other youths arrived.

In another case, the court had good news for a convict, William Fain, convicted in Gato Superior Court in 1957 of receiving stolen goods and sentenced to 12-15 years.

Under the law, the maximum sentence for the offense is 10 years. So Fain's case was remanded to Gaston for a proper sentence.

Delay Vote On Mrs. Luce For Ambassadorship

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Senate Foreign Relations Committee has delayed until next week a vote on whether to recommend approval of Clare Boothe Luce as ambassador to Brazil.

Delay on the vote which had been expected Wednesday was ordered so committee members not present could read a record of the hearing. The committee may meet again Tuesday.

Mrs. Luce was questioned Wednesday about a political attack she made on the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt. She said her language was "very intemperate."

She was charged in a 1944 speech that Roosevelt "led us into war," but said she still thinks Roosevelt should have told the nation it was "marching toward war" with the Nazis.

Dynamite Death In Hotel Room Ruled 'Suicide'

MONTREAL (AP)—A man carrying 20 sticks of dynamite in an overnight bag registered at the downtown Queen's Hotel Wednesday night. Less than two hours later a blast shook the building, taking his life and injuring two persons.

Detectives said it was suicide and that the man was Guy Charbonneau, about 40, from the farming community of St. Lin, Que., 35 miles north of Montreal.

Police had no immediate clues to his motive, and no note was found.

His fourth floor room and one adjoining were demolished. But there was no damage to a room three doors away in which a U.S. space expert, Dr. John P. Hagen, was registered. Dr. Hagen, chief of the U.S. Vanguard satellite project, was addressing a chemical meeting at the time.

The blast punched a four-foot hole through the ceiling of the room below Charbonneau's, slightly cutting its two occupants.

Rose High Host To Kinston Tomorrow

An old rivalry will be renewed tomorrow afternoon when Kinston and Greenville hook up in an important Northeastern AA clash at Greenville.

The Red Devils are defending champs in the loop and once again boast plenty of power. Kinston has dominated the Northeastern AA baseball for the past four or five years but they may find Greenville a little tougher to handle this year.

The Greenies battled Kinston open to the line last season before folding in their final two games to give the Red Devils the title. Greenville is one of the few teams still undefeated in the loop and Coach Bo Farley will send Merrill Bynum to the mound tomorrow, hoping to retain his clean record.

Bynum is also the clubs leading batter, averaging a .540 clip. His battery mate, Aubrey Harrison, is right behind with a .400 mark. The two have carried the club's offensive power up to date.

Farley has come up with a strong club despite the heavy graduation toll. The team has four freshmen in the starting lineup which labels the club as "a young and inexperienced outfit."

Second base was a problem early in the season as Ronnie Bass, a veteran, was unable to play with the club. Bass is expected to return to the team next week.

Billy James, a freshman, has filled in for Bass and according to Farley "has done a very good job, offensively."

Harrison, Alan McArthur, third baseman, and outfielder Tommy Riley have been the other freshmen in the lineup. Riley just moved to Greenville from Grifton but has quickly worked into a starting position.

Ronnie Finch will also be ready for action tomorrow. The southpaw was expected to pitch, but due to a hand trip scheduled for today, Farley threw the nod to Bynum. Finch will be given a chance to rest up before his next assignment.

Coach Farley stated last night that he knew very little about Kinston but that they had been strong in the past and would probably be the same this year. Greenville split their two game series with Kinston last season, losing their last game to deprive them of the title and give Kinston first place.

Sports Scope by Johnny Hudson

Greenville baseball fans have to recall the pre-war era in speaking of a baseball championship by the local club. The 1959 diamond season is just half way over but the spirit is high at Rose High and the Phantoms have a good chance of going all the way.

Heading down the final stretch in first place is nothing new for the Phantoms. Last year, Coach Bo Farley's club held the lead in the loop until the final games.

Boasting a 12-0 record, the Phants entered the final two games needing only one win. Roanoke Rapids and Kinston became the spoilers as both took wins and Greenville finished the season second behind Kinston.

This year the Greenie fans are hoping for a reversal of form and the club is determined to do just that. Tomorrow they get their first chance at the defending champs and it could be a big stumbling block in their bid for the crown.

Bynum Has Big Future Coach Bo Farley ranks his undefeated club on par with the 1958 team. "We have the same pitchers and they have more experience. Our outfield is weaker as we lost everybody last season," cites Farley.

The baseball tutor points to pitching and sound defense as the key to the recent win spurt. "We have been getting real good pitching and have played good defensive ball. We had a few lapses in the opening game but since then we have looked real good defensively," states Farley.

Merrill Bynum has been one of the top men on the club. The 180 pounder has been making quite a name for himself as a pitcher and as an outfielder. A senior, Bynum is considered an outstanding college prospect by his coach.

The hard-throwing right-hander has combined with Ronnie Finch to give Rose High a strong mound staff and his .450 batting average also leads the club. Bynum bats in the clean-up spot and chases flies when not on the mound.

Trophy Would Be Climax A baseball championship would bring to a climax a highly successful year for Coach Bo Farley. The easy-going mentor guided the basketbblers to a tie for the regular season title before opening the diamond sport.

Farley, a former pro star in the St. Louis Cardinals organization, came to Greenville in 1935 and has become an outstanding figure in the prep athletic scene.

Farley, a Danville, Va. native, came to Greenville in 1935 while playing semi-pro ball. He had previously coached in Danville before coming to the eastern section of North Carolina.

East Carolina College also got a little of Farley's knowledge as he served as coach in all three sports before moving over to the high school system.

Farley is also active with the Greenville golf and football teams. He coaches the golf club and is coach of the football junior varsity along with assisting the varsity.

Farley has been out of coaching summer baseball for several years but can be found at the local Country Club as he shoots a pretty good game of golf.

City Championship At Stake Si Moye, tournament chairman, feels that this years city golf championship will boost one of the strongest fields in tournament play.

Ereel Wells is the defending champion but will have plenty of competition from past winners such as Don Conley Jr. and W. L. Allen.

Conley, a member of the East Carolina College golf team, has been playing his best golf of recent weeks. The Greenville native shot a 73 to tie for medalist honors in the qualifying rounds.

Familiar 'Inevitable' Is Shaping Up In AL Chase

By ED WILKS Associated Press Sports Writer The inevitable is getting a bit closer in the American League pennant chase. The world champion New York Yankees are crowding in on first place — and they might be there now except for Woody Held, a kid Manager Casey Stengel reluctantly traded away.

Held, now 27, was wrapped up in that June 1957 swap that also sent Billy Martin to Kansas City for Harry Simpson (and incidentally, Ryne Duren). Although not much of a percentage hitter, Held was an infielder-outfielder, a guy ready made for Casey's multiple defense schemes, and showed promise of power.

ON THE HOUSE

Sees A Future Of More Labors

By ANDREW C. LANG
AP Newsfeatures

What will the house of 20 years from now — 1979 — look like? That's the question I asked of a group of architects, all prominent members of the American Institute of Architects. Here are the more interesting parts of their answers, taking the architects in alphabetical order:

George A. Biech — "Prefabrication will play an important but different role. The parts, not the house itself, will be prefabricated. But the nation had better start doing something about restrictive practices of all kinds in the construction field or we won't be able to use our technological advances. Both heating and cooling may be done by atomic power. Factories will get their power and homes their 'weather' from a central plant."

Giorgio Cavaglieri — "Today people are forced to live near the city because of traffic congestion. With helicopter transportation, they will be able to get really far out. In that way, we'll see a regimentation and conformity and as a result will call on architects to provide custom-built homes, designed to their individual family needs. As a result of prefabrication, walls, both inside and out, will be movable, flexible and interchangeable. Screen areas, glass areas and panels of plastic or wood will be easily erected around and within a roofed space."

of the house 20 years from now will be prefabricated, but that will not mean a stark, strictly engineering type of design. Even the cave men felt the need to decorate his dwelling. That's an age-old need here on out is no less than terrifying."

Rudolph A. Matern — "By 1979 we will begin to witness the introduction of atomic energy within the house. I can imagine open porches summer and winter, air-heated similar to some of the entrances of super-markets and, a large bank, which is open from inside to outside, without any doors between, having a column of air control controlling the temperature at that point. Planning will continue to get more elaborate. The building will be of primarily component parts made of sheet materials which, combined with the air-cleaning gadgets such as the present-day air-cleaning units, eliminate any cleaning necessities."

FROM TEACHER
SOSSAU, Germany (AP) — Tuberculosis struck 40 German schoolchildren—aged 7 to 14—in the same crowded classroom of a village school here. Authorities said they caught the disease from their teacher. Seventeen of the children had to be sent to a TB sanitarium.

The Lumberton man was principal speaker as some 350 persons turned out for the ceremony on the shores of a 70-acre lake, being built as the center of the campus. # Lab Is An Emerald 'Mine'

By ALAN CLINE
 SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Chemist Carroll F. Chatham has turned a tiny laboratory on 14th Street into an emerald "mine."
 Chatham turns out about 60,000 carats in rough emerald crystals a year using a top secret crystallization process which he says he'll sell for two million dollars.
 Chatham contends he is the only person in the world growing emeralds, and that his product "is as close to a natural emerald in all chemical and physical properties as the cultured pearl is to the real pearl."
 "The average person could never tell the difference and even the expert needs special equipment," he claims.
 Gem experts take issue with the last statement and also with the "culture" tag Chatham has placed on his gems.

 They contend Chatham's emeralds are man-made and therefore — "Synthetic". Chatham argues that they are grown in a way similar to the manner nature grows its stones and therefore "culture" is the correct term.
 You can buy Chatham emeralds, but not from Chatham. He sells the rough crystals to a New York City firm which cuts, polishes and distributes the finished stones.
 "I don't sell anything direct," says the 44-year-old chemist, who has been growing emeralds for 20 years. "In fact, I never see my stones in a ring."
 The emerald crystals take a year to mature. Only a "very tiny percentage comes out top grade." But even the low grade are useable for carvings, beads or pendants. "Don't be critical of apparent imperfections because you won't find a perfect stone except in a minute size," Chatham advises. "Look for brilliance and pleasing color, clearness, no spots."

 A top grade, one carat Chatham stone sells for about $200. The same size and quality natural stone retails at $1,200. Chatham figures an eight carat natural emerald would cost about $40,000, where his would retail for $3,000.
 "A real emerald is difficult to duplicate as to richness in color," says Eugene Chaput, a wholesale jeweler, who handles both the Chatham and real emeralds.
 He describes the Chatham stone as containing "a little more blue green color." Although most are foggy, Chaput says a few Chathams are clear.
 Chatham has improved his process during 20 years, especially in growing bigger crystals. Some now approach 300 carats.
 But he insists he isn't hurting the natural emerald market.
 "People with money who want the natural stone will still buy it. That's an historical fact," he says.

PITTSBURG, Kan. (AP) — The marshal of the Pittsburg city court, Joe McIlwraith, apparently has a knack for spotting potential trouble-makers. When McIlwraith saw three boys purchasing BB shot, he

Woodpecker Is Using Antenna

RYEN, N.Y. (AP) — Ten days ago a staccato knocking and banging awakened the Richard Spath household at 5 a.m.
 "Good heavens," said Mrs. Spath, "whatever can that be?"
 "Must be the plumbing," said her husband.
 No, it wasn't the plumbing, said the plumber.
 Second day: same time, same noise. Spath called in a heating engineer. Not the heating, said the engineer.
 Third day: ditto time and racket. Gas man called in. No defeat, the man said.
 Fourth day: same old time and tribulation. Spath donned a robe and hurried outside. There, in the dawning, he saw the culprit: a downy woodpecker hammering like mad on the television aerial.
 "Go home," "shoot!" and rocks and hand-clapping failed to scare away the bird.
 Wednesday, Spath consulted the National Audubon Society. Advised the society: Turn the garden hose on him; or get a toy pop gun and frighten it; or get a fireworks permit and shoot some roman candles at it.
 Spath has decided to use the hose treatment first. He'll probably get help from his wife and their two youngsters, Greg, 6, and John, 3.
 That downy woodpecker isn't just a mean old cuss, said the Audubon Society. He's merely using the TV antenna as a sort of sounding board to issue a spring love call.
 At any event, the spokesman continued, the hammering won't go beyond the next few weeks or so. By that time, the bird either will have found a mate or will give up. And what's more important to the Spaths, it will go away.

Cars Ambushed By Small Folk

LOCKPORT, N.Y. (AP) — Answering a motorist's report of someone shooting at passing cars, Deputy Sheriff Clyde Doty spotted two armed figures on telephone poles near the road.
 At closer examination, Doty found them to be two youngsters who had merely taken strategic positions to fire at passing "tanks" with their toy guns.

Mutual Secrets Backfired For Married Couple

DENVER, Colo. (AP) — Can a man keep a secret from his wife? Leonard H. Wilson says no.
 And what about a woman's chance of keeping a secret from her husband?

 Mrs. Wilson says there isn't a chance.
 They ought to know.
 Wilson received a traffic ticket for a moving violation. He didn't want his wife to know. Three days later, Mr. Wilson got a traffic ticket for a moving violation. She didn't want hubby to find out about it.
 Came court day. Wilson told his wife there was a mistake in their water bill. He'd go down to City Hall and straighten it out. Mrs. Wilson countered that she was going downtown anyway. She'd handle the water bill. Now, you've guessed it. The Wilsons both went downtown. Same day, same time, same court, same fines ($18 suspended). Each pledged there would be no more secrets.

Firm Is Using 4 Plans In Overseas Business

By SAM DAWSON

NEW YORK (AP) — "There is more than one way for an American firm to operate abroad—we use four. But there's just one reason we are thinking about further expansion overseas — we aren't going to be pushed out of any of our world markets."

That's how Gifford V. Leece, president of Gardner - Denver, Quincy, Ill., maker of tools and machinery, reacts to all the talk today about whether Americans are being priced out of world markets.

Operating costs have been rising in the United States faster than in other lands. Many American firms have been able in the past to surmount this because of technical advances here that put them out in front of their foreign competitors.

But in the last few years Europe and Japan particularly have been catching up fast both in technique and designs. Americans feel they haven't the advantage they once had — and the rising costs here are beginning to hurt.

American exports have been falling off. Now many American firms are recouping because of increasing sales of their foreign plants.

The start of the Common Market in Europe has given some American manufacturers still more to worry about. The fear that in time the six nations—West Germany, France, Holland, Belgium, Luxembourg and Italy—will build a tariff wall that gives unbeatable protection to plants operating inside the area. That is causing more Americans to think about producing in their own plants there.

Since Gardner - Denver has plants within the Common Market area, Leece feels that the new departure may be a help in building up his sales there. He says the relaxing of controls on currency should help, too.

The four plans that his firm uses overseas are:

1. A wholly owned plant in Rio de Janeiro, where factory and tools are its own and its product is made for distribution in Brazil, and maybe later in other countries. It was built to offset local competition that was cutting into the firm's market.

2. A leased plant in South Africa was built to Gardner-Denver specifications and the company installed its own tools. It makes and distributes its own products. It moved in to protect its existing markets in Africa.

3. In Belgium the firm contracted with a local company that already had factories and tools to make the American items to its specifications and deliver them to warehouses. Its own sales force handles them.

4. Gardner-Denver bought a controlling interest in a German company. The Americans furnish the specifications and the techniques and the German firm makes the products. The American sales force takes over from there.

Leece says that in no case does his company allow others to sell its goods.

The Quincy company is constantly studying opportunities for more expansion abroad. "We are keenly alert to growing foreign competition at home and abroad," Leece says. "We intend to hold onto our markets, whether we make the goods here or abroad."

Predict Traffic Control In Space

By CLAYTON HICKERSON

DALLAS, Tex. (AP) — Space traffic cops and flights to other planets, say the experts, are possibly just a decade away.

These were the major predictions today at the Space Forum of the Southwest got underway with some of the nation's top space scientists participating.

Dr. Hubertus Strughold predicted interplanetary flights within a decade "if the Einstein-based theory of time-curvature holds true."

Dr. Andrew G. Haley said space traffic cops would be necessary in the age of interplanetary travel and are becoming increasingly needed each day.

Strughold, advisor for research at the School of Aviation Medicine, Randolph Air Force Base, San Antonio, Tex., said that if time actually stands still in the long journey to the stars we may be on the threshold of space travel.

Dr. Haley, president of the International Astronautical Federation and a Washington, D.C., attorney, said traffic cops of space even are needed now.

Haley and Strughold made their statements in separate press conferences Monday as a prelude to the Space Age Forum, sponsored by the University of Texas. Haley said lawyers already are worrying over who owns space. He said it is an immediate problem between nations throwing missiles and satellites into the heavens.

"Earth-orbiting missiles," he said, "do not atomize and they could drop chunks of steel onto Dallas or Buckingham Palace—big chunks of steel."

The United Nations, he said, should set up a traffic control system now to control the path of such missiles.

"Furthermore," he said, "radio-television channels, which control the path of the missiles and satellites, need international allocating."

He said the Soviet Union recently had used television channel 8 to control missile and satellite flights. "This already is a case of trespass on United States TV stations," he said.

Strughold was asked, "If the theory that time stands still in space is correct, will it be possible for man to make interplanetary flights within 10 years?"

He answered, "Ja," in his native German. But, he added, not just anybody can make even an

Morning Glory Seed Sale Will Be Outlawed

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — The State of Arizona, finding all varieties of morning glories to be noxious weeds, is going to prohibit sale of any morning glory seed.

The Agriculture and Horticulture Commission adopted the regulation Wednesday at a public hearing at which morning glory defenders displayed cards reading:

"Help stamp out cotton growers. Support the morning glory. It grows without a government subsidy."

But representatives of the Farm Bureau and the Arizona Cotton Growers Assn. stuck to their guns.

The morning glory, they contended, is a nuisance almost impossible to exterminate once it gets started in a field.

They described the vine as a serious menace not only to cotton but also to hay, grain sorghums and other crops.

Training and the proper amount of stability, emotional and mental, is necessary, he said.

Strughold said the United States could have men ready for orbital flights with a few weeks, for moon flights within a few months, and for interplanetary travel within 10 years.

Odd-Ball Menagerie Is Developed In Research

By FRANK CAREY

Associated Press Science Writer ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — "Thirstless dogs" — was reported from Fort Knox, Ky., today.

They were part of an odd-ball menagerie described in various reports to the 43rd annual meeting of the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology.

Also listed were thirsty monkeys trained to get orange juice by pressing levers and puppies and pigs with hardening of the arteries.

The pigs exemplified an ironic switch. Healthy enough while eating their regular garbage of animal food, they developed atherosclerosis after some scientists fed them a human diet for six months.

Three researchers of the Army's Medical Research Laboratory at Fort Knox reported they had achieved "selective and permanent elimination of water drinking" in a group of dogs by surgically removing an area of their brains.

They termed this a significant breakthrough in the quest for the detailed mechanics of "how the urge to drink water" is engendered in animals and men.

The Army team offered no views on how this knowledge might be applied to man's benefit. Presumably the finding might stimulate further research to determine if some nonsurgical means might be used to check the thirst urge temporarily in castaways at sea or in men lost in desert areas.

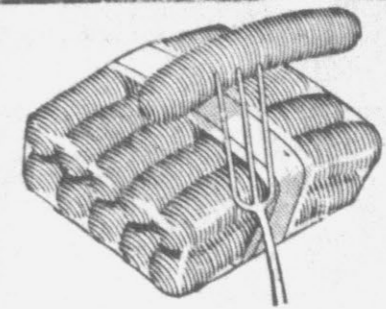

The scientists said the brain area removed is called the perichiasmal area—a mothball-sized structure located at the base of the brain and lying directly back of the eyes.

"Subsequent to the surgical removal of the area," they said, "dogs never again show any interest in water. Yet they remain fully oriented mentally and eat solid and liquid food normally."

While unoperated dogs gulo water nearby, the operated dog sits on his haunches and watches the other one drink, never taking a lap of water himself."

Between test periods, the thirstless dogs are maintained in the desired state of hydration by bathing with milk or meat juice the amount of water the scientists wish the animal to have.

Editors Urged Help Mold U. S. Policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's editors were urged today to help mold a nonpartisan foreign policy aimed at protecting 20th century revolutions from "the Communist scavengers."

Sen. J. W. Fulbright (D-Ark.), chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, made the appeal in an address to the American Society of Newspaper Editors on the first day of its annual meeting here.

Fulbright told the editors this country's interests require that it do what it can "to protect the 20th century revolution in non-Communist Asia, in Africa, and in Latin America from the Communist scavengers. Our interests require that this revolution be given a chance to develop along constructive lines."

To match Communist states which can fix and execute policy by simple decree, Fulbright said, millions of Americans will have to reach "some national decisions as to priorities" — to sacrifice some luxuries for long-range growth, to export more capital and import more goods.

"We might even bring ourselves to put less steel into automobiles and more into school construction," he said.

"Until we revise our sense of values, we will never think we can afford to do the things which, in my judgment, we must do if we are to survive as a nation of free people."

"The gravest crisis confronting the western world today is not in Berlin; it is within ourselves."

The nearly 400 editors attending the three-day meeting will hear an address Friday by Fidel Castro, youthful prime minister of Cuba's revolutionary government.

Fear Effects Of Work Hours

BUENOS AIRES (AP)—Argentine government employees contend that an eight-hour work day—with only half an hour for lunch—is going to ruin their health.

Beginning May 1, the government work day is to run from 9:30 a. m. to 5:30 p. m. with a 30-minute lunch break. It now is from noon to 6 with no lunch time.

The civil personnel union claimed that with only half an hour off, the workers would have to eat canned foods and that would be unhealthy. President Arturo Frondizi reportedly ordered the change in hopes many employees would quit the crowded government payrolls.

PLANS RESUME WORK

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Veteran actor Edmund Lowe was discharged from Doctors Hospital Wednesday after a month's treatment for a chronic virus infection and vascular complications. The 67-year-old actor plans to resume a movie role in about three weeks of additional rest.

The United States Department of Justice was created in 1789.

Proposed Help For Taxpayers Seems Doomed

RALEIGH (AP) — Unless legislative thinking of past years has changed, a proposal aimed at helping state income taxpayers appears doomed.

Rep. Thomas Turner of Guilford dropped in a bill Thursday—on the deadline day for filing state income taxes — to amend the income tax law.

Turner's measure would allow citizens to deduct the amount they pay in federal income taxes, up to a maximum of $500, in computing their state income taxes.

Past Legislatures have defeated similar proposals on the grounds the loss in state revenue would be too great. Turner said he had no estimate of the revenue loss if his proposal were enacted.

He contended, "If we can give the corporations a six million dollar break, why can't we give the little man a break?" He was referring to a change in the corporate income tax laws adopted by the 1957 Legislature.

Other legislative highlights included:

Sens. Lunsford Crew of Halifax and S. Bunn Prink of Brunswick introduced a bill to lighten the penalty for conviction of a first offense of drunken driving.

The Senate killed a bill which would have authorized law enforcement officers to make arrests in certain cases without a warrant.

Victor S. Bryant of Durham, chairman of the Constitutional Study Commission, explained to a joint committee the proposed new constitution.

Navy's Research Director Wants Single Program

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Navy's research director wants the nation's space program put under a single agency—but not during this session of Congress.

Vice Adm. John T. Hayward, head of the Navy's research and development programs fired some strong criticism at the present set-up of separate civilian and military space agencies when he testified Wednesday before a congressional committee.

But he later said, "I certainly wouldn't change the law this session of Congress."

Hayward made his recommendations to a Senate Space subcommittee headed by Sen. Stuart Symington (D-Mo.).

Hayward urged a space administration similar to that of the Atomic Energy Commission, which has handled both the military and peacetime uses of atomic energy.

To be eligible for the U.S. Senate, a person must be at least 30 years of age, a citizen of the United States for at least nine years, and a resident of the state from which he is chosen.

Reigning Duck Decoy Expert Is An Enthusiast In Fooling Birds

By HUGH MULLIGAN

STONY BROOK, N.Y. (AP) — "Lovely night for ducks," said a man in a Sherlock Holmes hat, as he parked his dripping umbrella and soggy trenchcoat in the corner.

"Yes, isn't it?" laughed the man with the basket of wooden ducks on his arm.

"Ohhh, look," giggled a horse-set matron, "he's got a box of quackers!"

The man with the wooden ducks smiled woodenly and proceeded to the lecture platform.

On this stormy night on Long Island, the reigning expert on American duck decoys had driven 100 miles from his home in Belford, N.J. to carry on the lecture tradition.

A tweedy, leather-elbowed crowd of sportsmen, decoy aficionados and lecture bugs had gathered at the new Suffolk County Museum to hear him.

William J. Mackey Jr., by day a wax company executive, by night a lecturer and on weekends in season a duck hunter, has been hunting, collecting and identifying duck decoys since he was old enough to peek over the edge of a blind.

"To me," said Mackey, "a well made decoy is the work of a loving craftsman."

Basically, decoys are of two kinds: floating and standup. The former bobs about on the tide like a live duck, while the latter is impaled on a stick and stuck in the mud along the shore. A third breed, the flying decoy, is quite rare and no longer in use. Mackey showed one model designed to be sent flying along a guy wire from the top of a tree to a log imbedded in the water.

"The idea," said Mackey, "was to release a couple of these just as a flight was turning overhead, thus giving the birds the idea that someone was beating them to the food. The only drawback was that nobody ever figured out how to fold up the decoy's wings once it hit the water."

In the heyday of American waterfowl shooting just after the Civil War, when birds were hunted commercially for food and feathers, several factories existed for the sole purpose of turning out decoys by the thousands. The most famous was the Stevens Co., located appropriately enough, at Weedsport, N.Y., and run by two brothers who did all the work by hand. Another early firm, the Mason Co. of Detroit, received so many congratulations on its durably painted decoys it later went into the paint business.

Mackey drew appreciative gurgles when he produced his Stevens and Mason decoys, both real collectors' items. His basket also included historical items, such as decoys that had floated in formation before the presidential blinds of Ulysses S. Grant and Grover Cleveland, both avid duck hunters.

His largest decoy was a two-foot-long swan. His smallest a two-inch-high sandpiper that "belonged to an elderly gentleman who got in some illegal shooting on Sunday by stuffing a couple of these in his pocket and sneaking off to a nearby marsh where he had some old guns hidden in the salt grass."

His favorite, and to him the most beautiful, was the work of fellow Jerseyite Harry Shordes, a whittler of legendary speed who could "climb into a barber chair for a shave with a block of wood in his hand and turn out a first class decoy by the time the towel was removed."

May Advertise For Adoption

TORONTO (AP) — The Ontario government is considering running newspaper ads in an effort to get parents for 12,000 children available in the province for adoption.

The children are aged 4 to 16. There is no trouble finding homes for younger ones.

"There may be some initial criticism that we are merchandising children, but this is not the case," said Deputy Welfare Minister James S. Band. "All we are attempting to merchandise is a child's happiness."

Arctic Duty Is Different To The Army Wife

CHURCHILL, Man. (AP) — The colonel's lady clutched the teacup firmly in her hand.

"Here comes the thundering herd," she said.

Mrs. Max Cochrane, wife of the commander of the U.S. Army's 1st Arctic Training Center, was describing the daily homeward trek from school at this base on the shore of Hudson Bay.

Mrs. Cochrane, a native of San Jose, Calif., has lived in many military camps but none was quite like this sub-Arctic post 610 miles north of Winnipeg.

To protect the Canadian and American servicemen, their families and civilian employes from the full blast of winter, many of the buildings are connected by closed corridors.

The Cochranes share a four-apartment building with three other families.

In the winter, children dash from the school to the nearest corridor entrance. Then the "thundering herd" makes its way towards the far end where the Cochranes live.

The Cochranes have three children: Nicholas, 11; Shelley, 9, and Laurel, 7. They have three bedrooms, bath, living room, dining room and kitchen. All married quarters are the same size and have the same interior decoration with few exceptions.

Mrs. Cochrane says the main center of chat and neighborhood meetings is the commissary, which she must go outdoors to reach.

One of the main social activities is curling. She and her husband form what they laughingly call "The International Goodwill Rink" with Lt. Col. L. H. Young of the Canadian Army and his wife.

Mrs. Cochrane says there is a great deal more social life at Churchill than there was in Falls Church, Va., where the family lived while her husband was stationed at the Pentagon in Washington.

The Cochranes had hardly arrived last summer when visitors ranging up to generals started climbing off the planes. All had to be entertained. In addition, families hold buffets, dinners for up to 45 persons, and go to bingo parties.

One means of holding dinners in cramped quarters is for several women to pitch in with food. The main course is served in one apartment, dessert in another and coffee in another. In some cases, furniture is moved out into the always-available corridor to leave room for large "stand-up" parties.

On a typical day, Mrs. Cochrane had her housework done and had made a cup of tea for a visitor before Nicky, first home from school, came booming down the hall.

While her husky seventh grade student was changing to his hockey uniform — a new sport and a new garb for him — his 9-year-old sister, Shelley, complete with pistols, arrived with plans for the afternoon. Then it was 7-year-old Laurel, with a blue dress over her red slacks.

Really bad weather keeps the children mostly inside in the winter. However, giant boulders line the shore of Hudson Bay about a block away.

"In summer they play for hours down in those gorgeous rocks," said Mrs. Cochrane. "It's just a heavenly place for children to play."

TOO MUCH FOR HIM

BALDWIN PARK, Calif. (AP) — Robert Wren, 50, a truck driver, worked all night on his income tax return. Then he slashed his wrist, temple and ankle with a bread knife, police reported. His wife Wilma found him bleeding on his bed and summoned police. He was reported in serious condition at a hospital.

AGAINST ALL ODDS

Students at the San Francisco State College say the gamest man on the campus is Prof. Robert Stewart.

Left speechless and helpless by poliomyelitis in 1952, Dr. Stewart regained his voice after three long, hard years, and now delivers lectures from a contour chair in the class room. He is 48 years old and a professor of psychology and education.

Promptly each Tuesday and Thursday he arrives at the Education building in his chauffeured automobile. He is carried to his office where his assistant, John Layser, and attendant, Howard Laws, strap a respirator on his chest.

After a few deep breaths he lights a cigarette and begins preparations for his forthcoming class. Dr. Stewart has nothing but praise for his helpers and students. The students are enthusiastic in their praise of his work and fortitude. The lectures are well attended.

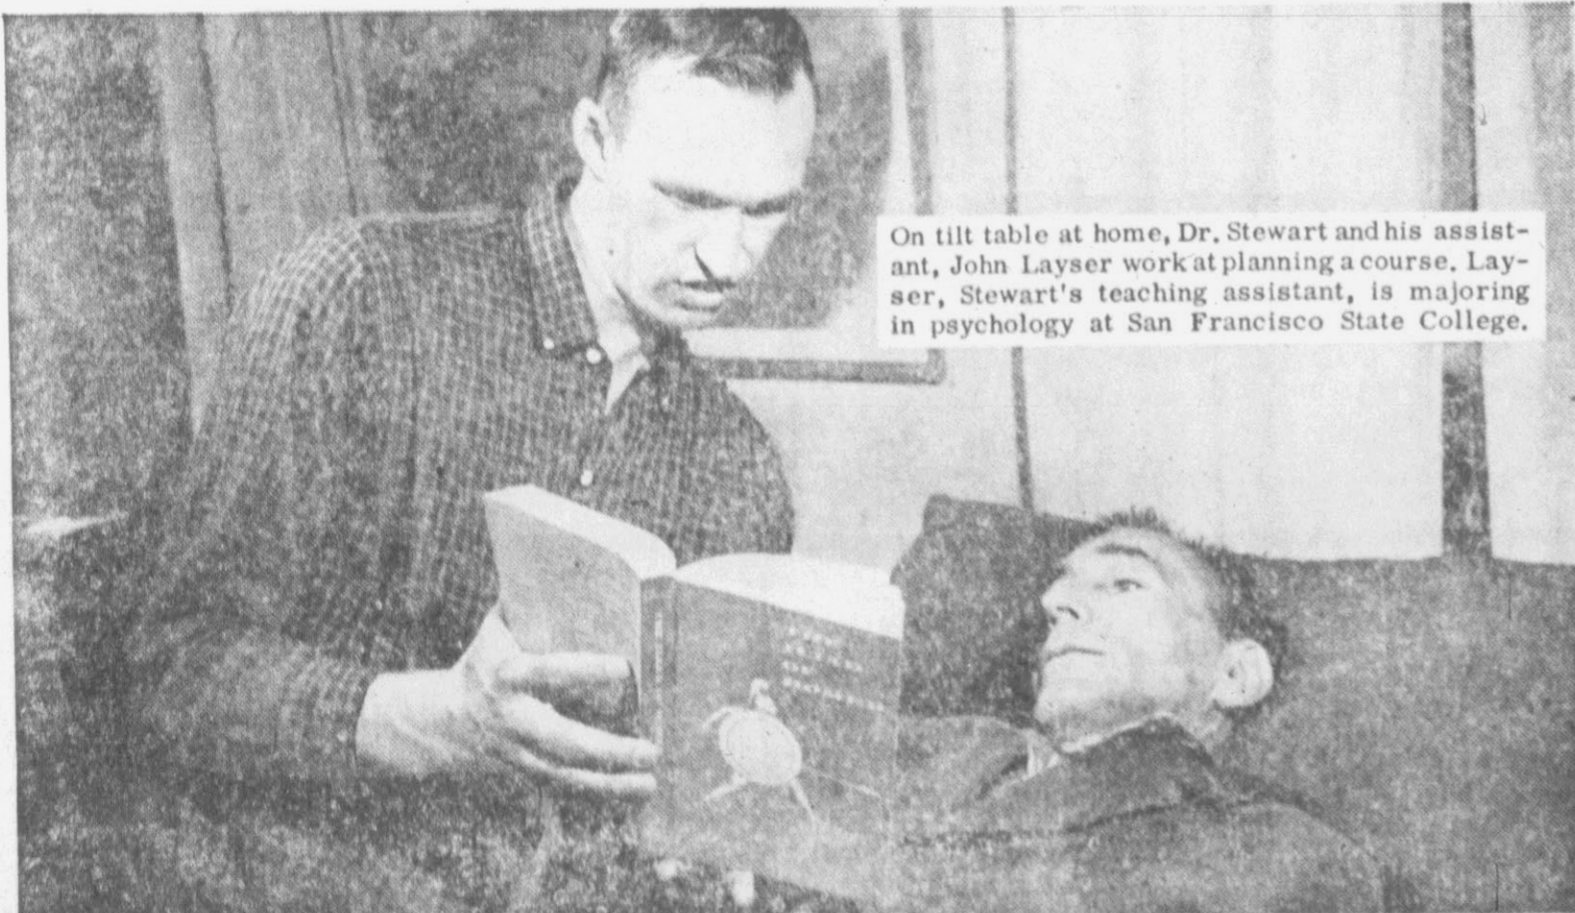

Dr. Stewart's wife works at a hospital. His daughter, Julie, 19, is a student at the college. His son, Duncan, 15, is a student in a private school, across the bay from San Francisco.

Dr. Stewart in iron lung at his home in Oakland corrects student paper being read by his assistant, John Layser. Dr. Stewart spends his nights in the iron lung.

Dr. Stewart settles in front seat of car for 23-mile trip from home to college. If breathing becomes difficult enroute, attendant Howard Laws, in back, gives assistance by applying pressure to his chest.

On tilt table at home, Dr. Stewart and his assistant, John Layser work at planning a course. Layser, Stewart's teaching assistant, is majoring in psychology at San Francisco State College.

At college office, John Layser puts chest respirator in position on Dr. Stewart's chest. Every two hours he takes time out of the respirator as he seeks to breathe without it as much as possible.

Sec. Dulles To Be Missed In Critical Weeks Ahead

Editor's Note—The effects of Secretary of State John Foster Dulles' career on international events will be discussed and argued for a long time. This is the first of a two-part series assessing those effects in the light of Dulles' resignation Wednesday. It is the work of John M. Hightower, whose coverage of foreign affairs for AP spans Dulles' official career.

By JOHN M. HIGHTOWER
WASHINGTON (AP) — John Foster Dulles has been both violently denounced and extravagantly praised for his work in foreign affairs.

Few men in his position have been more controversial and historians will be slow to adopt President Eisenhower's estimate that he was the country's greatest secretary of state.

But there can be no doubt that in the critical weeks ahead he will be sorely missed.

His successor faces a tough task in picking up the direction of foreign policy where Dulles, stricken by cancer, has put it down. In the six years he was in office, the lawyer-diplomat achieved great stature not only as a figure in American government but also as a leader of the free world in its struggle against expansive Chinese communism.

He demonstrated a rugged capacify for work—days, nights and weekends — which probably few other men can equal. He knew other leaders of the free world from close personal contacts and he traveled, with apparent relish, 560,000 miles on trips which took him to 46 countries.

This would be true even for a man in the position of Under Secretary of State Christian Herter, who has worked with Dulles for two years.

But the times now allow no easy period of settling in. The man who takes over Dulles' desk has his work already cut out.

On April 29, he must meet in Paris with the foreign ministers of Britain, France and West Germany to make final preparations for negotiations with the Soviets on delicate and dangerous questions of the future of Berlin and Germany. On May 11, with his British and French colleagues, he must sit opposite Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko in a Big Four conference that is likely to stretch into a grueling month of frustrating argument.

Very likely in late July or August there will be a Big Four summit conference in which the new secretary will play a key role as the chief adviser to the President in further exchanges with the Soviets.

For such negotiations as these, Dulles was prepared by long experience and a love of the game of diplomacy born of a lifelong interest in foreign affairs. His ambition to take over the job went back to his boyhood association with two other secretaries of state, his grandfather, John Watson Foster, and his uncle, Robert Lansing. Dulles achieved that ambition Jan. 21, 1953.

Dulles ran the State Department with complete confidence in his own abilities and the know-how accumulated over the years. From the time he took over, he was the dominant figure. One of the most frequent criticisms was that he operated out of his vest pocket.

Few even of his closest advisers knew precisely what he would do in a given situation. Even high officials in his own organization looked to his news conferences many times for fresh light on his policy, thinking about critical problems.

Some weeks ago while Dulles was undergoing cancer treatment at Walter Reed Army Hospital this reporter asked a State Department official who was really running U.S. foreign policy.

"Dulles," he replied. "When there is a meeting on some problem, everyone tries to figure out what the secretary would decide if he were there. It's a tricky business. Because when Dulles was there he didn't always think exactly as other people guessed he would."

This period of administering foreign affairs under the shadow of Dulles is now coming to an end. The abrupt end to his career upset Dulles' hope of serving as secretary throughout Eisenhower's two terms. Until illness forced his hand, he had never seriously considered withdrawing. Achievement of the post in the first place came as the result of long years of effort and preparation.

He served as a member of the bipartisan U.S. delegation to the U.N. Charter conference at San Francisco and then participated with successive Democratic secretaries of state in postwar peace negotiations with the Soviets.

In 1949, Dulles was appointed to fill a U.S. Senate vacancy from New York. While in the Senate he helped to put through approval of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization which he had earlier helped to draft.

He was defeated for re-election to the Senate, but President Truman made him a consultant to Secretary of State Dean Acheson. In that capacity he drafted and successfully negotiated a peace treaty with Japan. He made it a treaty free of punishment for Japan's role in World War II and was proud to call it, as he often did a "peace of reconciliation."

He was never again able to put across such a clear-cut and definitive solution to such a highly complex problem. The great peacemaking issue which he inherited from his predecessors concerned the future of divided Germany, and that, problem after many frustrations he has now had to pass on to his successor.

Radio And TV In National Drill

WASHINGTON (AP) — All television and radio stations in the United States will go off the air for half an hour Friday morning signaling the start of the annual national civil defense drill.

The Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization said today the unusual silence will begin at 11:30 a.m., EST.

About 1,200 radio stations will resume broadcasting immediately on the two "Conelrad" civil defense frequencies — 640 and 1240 on the radio dial.

The name is an abbreviation of control of electromagnetic radiation. The system, under which various stations alternate on the frequencies, was designed to prevent enemy bombers from using radio beams to find their targets.

All this will be part of Operation Alert 1959, designed to test the nation's readiness to cope with a mock nuclear attack by planes and missiles.

Operation Alert will continue through the summer in various stages. On Friday and Saturday, the public will take part as warning signals sound across the country. In many communities, citizens will evacuate or take cover depending on local plans.

Probe Results In No Indictments

FRANKLIN, N.C. (AP) — A grand jury has investigated, but returned no indictments in the case of a union organizer who claimed he was set upon and beaten by a group of unidentified men here.

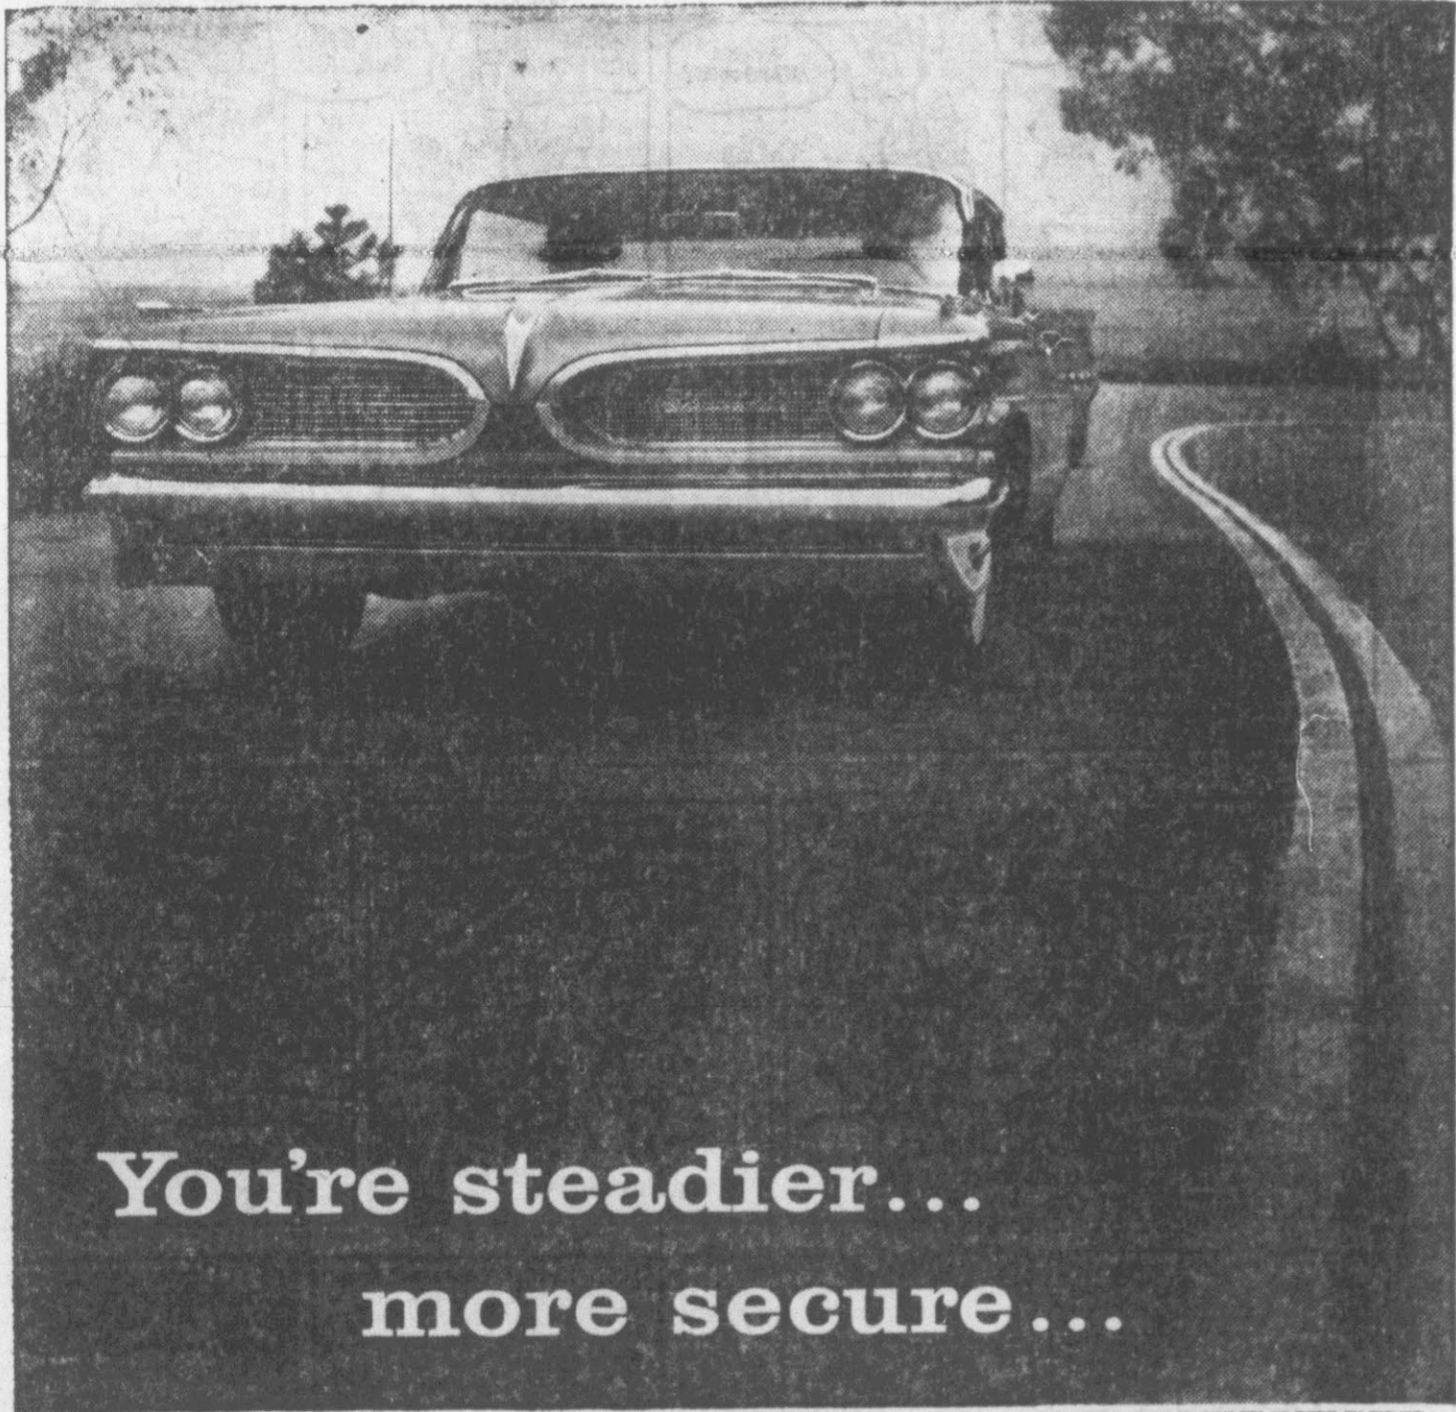

"As far as I know, this ends the matter as far as any violation of state law is concerned," said Solicitor Glenn Brown after the Macon County grand jury ended its probe yesterday.

The jury heard 16 witnesses. Among them was Robert D. Beame of Greensboro, a representative of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, which is currently involved in a dispute with the Franklin Hosiery Co.

...in a road-hugging Wide-Track Pontiac!

Take all its beauty, balance it gracefully on a wider, steadier wheel design and you have a car the likes of which you've never owned. The wheels are five inches farther apart. This widens the stance, but not the car. You're secure at the controls, more comfortable from head to toe. There's a noticeable lack of lean and sway. Narrow track cars fall far short by comparison. Wouldn't this be a good day for you to drive this sweet automobile? The keys are waiting.

THE ONLY CAR WITH WIDE-TRACK WHEELS

Dotted lines show conventional wheel positions. Pontiac's wheels are five inches farther apart. This widens only the stance, not the car itself. Pontiac takes a better grip on the road, hugs tighter on curves and corners. Sway and lean are considerably reduced, ride is smoother, balanced, steadier.

Deactivation Of Unit Cancelled

NORFOLK. — The scheduled deactivation of Marine Air Reserve Squadron VMA-233, Norfolk, Va., Naval Air Station has been cancelled. The deactivation was to have been effected by June 30.

Lt. Col. Bruce J. Matheson, USMC, Commanding Officer of the Norfolk Marine Air Reserve Training Detachment, was notified of the deactivation cancellation by Marine Air Reserve Headquarters, Glenview, Illinois this week.

At the same time, Col. Matheson was advised that the unit would receive twin-engine P2H "Banchees" jet aircraft to replace the AD5 propeller type planes with which the squadron is presently equipped. Brig. Gen. Frank C. Croft, Commander, Marine Air Reserve Training, had indicated that the decision to deactivate the Norfolk unit was due to a shortage of suitable aircraft to satisfactorily carry out the unit's training syllabus.

In commenting on the receipt of the twin jet aircraft, Col. Matheson stated that "the P2H jet is particularly suited to the reservists operations from the Norfolk field. The 12-year old squadron had used jets in their training prior to switching to the propeller driven planes now being used. Matheson said that receipt of 10 or 12 of the jets is anticipated by June 1.

Deactivation of the Norfolk unit would have meant the disbanding of 187 squadron officers and enlisted men and the transfer of 61 Detachment men to other regular Marine Corps units.

Connie Nicholas Found Guilty Of Voluntary Manslaughter In Death

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (AP) — Connie Nicholas was convicted today of voluntary manslaughter in the killing in the heat of passion in the love slaying of her rich, married lover.

The conviction calls for a mandatory 2-to-21-year prison term. Mrs. Nicholas, 45, clad in black, stood erect and showed no emotion when the verdict was read. She will be sentenced later today. She will be eligible for parole in 21 months.

Defense lawyers said any appeal of the sentence would have to be initiated by Mrs. Nicholas. The tiny prisoner—5 feet 1 and weighing 105 pounds—declined to discuss the verdict.

"I have no comment at all to make," was all she would say. This was a complete about-face from her demeanor during the trial, which started exactly a month ago today. Then, she talked freely and at one time was admonished by her attorneys to keep quiet.

Even while the jury deliberated last night, Mrs. Nicholas told reporters she still loved her 54-year-old playboy paramour, Forrest Teel, 54, a drug firm executive.

She quoted a prayer: "God grant me the serenity to accept the things I cannot change; the courage to change the things I can, and the wisdom to know the difference."

The jury debated approximately nine hours, with an hour and a half out for dinner, before agreeing on a verdict. Russell Cole, jury foreman, said, "There were more than 10 ballots before we reached the verdict."

He added that at first there were votes ranging from acquittal to first-degree murder, but at no time did any of the jurors mention sending the perit Mrs. Nicholas to the electric chair.

The prosecution, which did not ask the death penalty in its summation, termed the manslaughter verdict "fair and just."

About 75 spectators crowded the small courtroom to hear the verdict and see Mrs. Nicholas led away in handcuffs to return to her cell in Marion County jail.

Mrs. Nicholas found Teel's white Cadillac parked near the apartment of Auburn-haired Laura Mowrer, the drug executive's beautiful new girl friend.

She waited three hours until Teel came out of Miss Mowrer's apartment shortly after midnight. Then in an argument that followed, said Mrs. Nicholas, Teel grabbed her arm and her small pearl-handled revolver went off. She said she took the gun out of her purse to threaten suicide and scare him.

The state contended that the shooting, which occurred in the front seat of the car, was done with premeditation. "I didn't know Mr. Teel had been hit," the defendant testified. "I would not have left him."

She then drove in her own car to a secluded creek bank where she was found 20 hours later slumped in the car, near death from swallowing 75 sleeping pills in pineapple juice.

During her four days on the witness stand, Mrs. Nicholas broke down and wept several times. Mrs. Nicholas told the jury her love affair with Teel began in 1943, two years after she went to work for Eli Lilly and Co. Teel later became executive vice president in charge of marketing at Lilly.

Their first date was a chance meeting downtown one evening. After that, she said, there were many more dates—"in my apartment or in a hotel or in a motel, or it could have been in his home."

Mrs. Nicholas' affair with the handsome playboy lasted through her two marriages. The first, to Air Force Sgt. Ray Kiefer, broke up in 1947 after five years. In 1952 she was remarried to Curtis Nicholas. They were divorced less than two months before the fatal shooting.

LOWER DRAFT AGE

Police Task Force Plan Is Aimed At Roving Hoods

By P. D. ELDRED
SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — There's nothing the San Francisco cops detest more than out-of-town hoodlums, so they're mulling over a scheme to get to know them much better.

The idea: a novel intercity task force of police.

Veteran officers who developed the plan believe it would hit the floating criminal and syndicated crime in the most vulnerable spot—the cash they risk.

As they envision it, cities with small police forces, where every member is well known and easily recognized by underworld elements, could benefit immeasurably by using a trained task force borrowed from another city.

"Such a task force would keep the criminal off balance," says Inspector Thomas F. Fitzpatrick, in charge of San Francisco's police intelligence unit.

"The police task force would be especially effective in discouraging the individual hoodlum or the crime syndicate from putting money into an uncertain racket—gambling, narcotics, prostitution or extortion—at the risk of having it knocked over promptly by strange investigators."

Fitzpatrick envisions using as many as 15 or 20 undercover officers in these cooperative efforts.

The task force idea would have to be worked out by the attorney general or even in the governor's office, Fitzpatrick says.

He is convinced, however, that the concept, would be highly valuable within a state. With broader development, such task forces could even be sent from one state to another.

"All that would be necessary in the other state would be to deputize the visiting task force officers," Fitzpatrick says.

Police intelligence units and San Francisco's hard-hitting "Operation S" have hit local crime where it lives.

"Operation S," which means selective saturation of districts where criminal activities are prevalent, has brought about a sharp reduction of armed robberies, assaults, purse snatchings, prostitution and other types of crime here.

Without warning, as many as 50 plainclothes police in unmarked cars descend after dark on any area where normal patrols find the situation difficult.

Police Chief Thomas T. Cahill is sold on it. Department records show an over-all reduction of 9.2 per cent in crimes of violence. Automobile thefts are negligible now and some specific crimes such as burglary and robbery have been cut as much as 25 per cent, Fitzpatrick reports.

The all-out campaign on crime in San Francisco dates back to 1956, when the city's full support was put behind the interstate police intelligence system.

Now, by tight surveillance of every known local underworld character and particular attention to the roving hoodlum who may be in Kansas City one month, Miami the next and show up in Las Vegas next, police departments all over the country are kept in touch with their activities and whereabouts.

Local intelligence units feed pictures and detailed reports to the state Identification and Investigation Division at Sacramento. From there it is teletyped and otherwise distributed nationwide. Nearly all big cities are in on it. New York City recently joined.

"The entire intelligence organization is the most progressive step that has been made in many years to combat nationwide and local crime," Fitzpatrick says. "It is doing a real job on the floating hoodlum."

The first atomic bomb dropped on Japan, at Hiroshima, on Aug. 6, 1945, killed 78,150 and injured 37,425 of a population of 343,969.

Safety Awards To Plant, Lab

KINSTON — Du Pont's Kinston Plant and its "Dacron" Research Laboratory have received awards from the National Safety Council for outstanding safety performance in 1958. Plant Manager W. E. Gladding and Laboratory Director G. F. Lanzl announced today.

The Kinston Plant received the Award of Honor, highest award given by the National Safety Council, recognizing the accumulation of more than 3,000,000 man-hours during a year without disabling injuries. The Plant actually operated the entire year, accumulating a total of 3,443,618 man-hours worked, with no disabling injury.

The "Dacron" Research Laboratory was presented the Council's Award of Merit, which is the highest award possible for the Laboratory based on the number of personnel employed in that unit. This award recognizes the accumulation of between 1,000,000 and 3,000,000 man-hours in one year with no disabling injury.

The Du Pont Company as a whole also received the Award of Honor for the fourteenth time in the 17 years it has been awarded. This is more times than any other Company has received it.

CHAPLIN'S BIRTHDAY

Five Guardsmen Killed In Crash

BALTIMORE, Md. (AP) — An Air National Guard plane faltered shortly after takeoff Wednesday night and crashed with a violent explosion in the harbor.

The mutilated bodies of five men on the training flight were recovered by skin divers. A sixth guardsman was still missing.

The twin engine aircraft, a Grumman SA16 Albatross, passed dangerously near a grain elevator and a score of freighters lined up in the harbor.

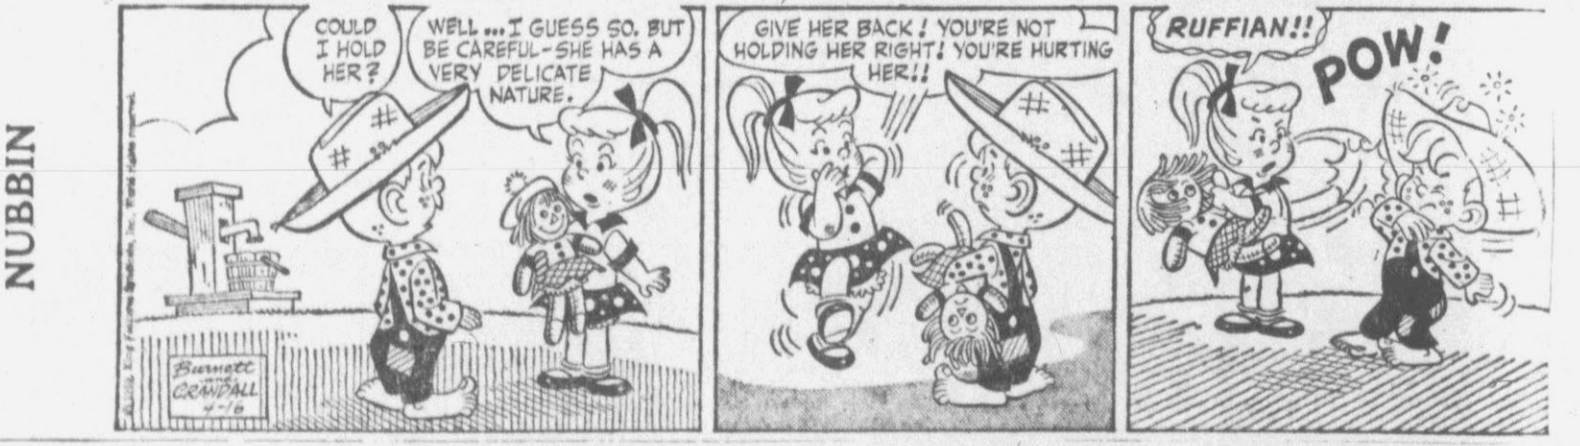

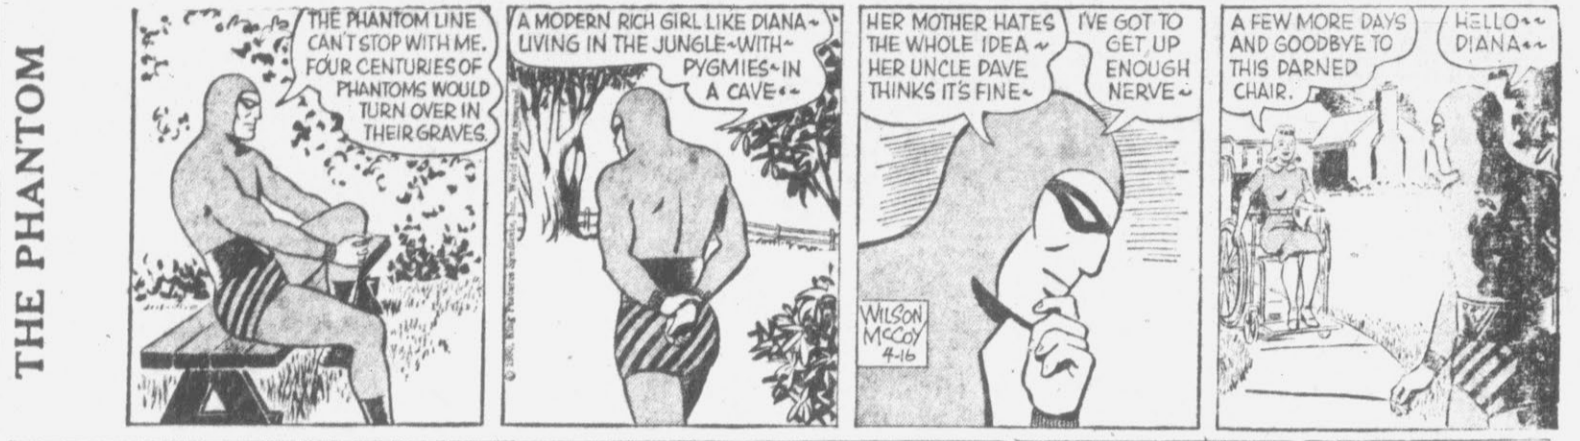

The Air Guard said it could not determine immediately what caused the crash. The amphibious plane was the third of three planes starting off on a training mission.

After 5 Months, Pro-Communist

TOKYO (AP) — Fifty-one Japanese fishermen returned from five months' detention in Communist China today in fishing boats plastered with pro-Communist signs and slogans.

The fishermen were cool to their welcoming families, and all praised the Peiping government. Signs on their four boats said: "Foster friendship between Japan and Communist China! Abrogate the Japan-United States security treaty! Down with the Kishi cabinet! Protect Peace!"

Chinese patrol boats captured the crew off the Sakhalin Peninsula last November. Mexico has a population of about 20 million.

Potential Industrial Sites In County To Be Surveyed

Potential industrial sites in Pitt County will be surveyed next week by a team of engineers from Virginia Electric Power Co. and the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad.

Information obtained from the survey will be included in a county development brochure to be compiled by L. A. Weston, economic consultant for the Pitt County Development Commission. Weston will accompany the survey team on its inspection of potential industrial sites.

Weston reported to the commission last night that preliminary information regarding the survey has been forwarded to mayors of each of the county's towns and cities, as well as to other interested persons. He added that requests have been made for residents of each area the survey team will accompany the team on its rounds.

The report on the survey was included in other reports presented to the commission at its regular monthly meeting last night. Chairman Leonard P. Bixam presided.

Commission approval was granted to two requests presented by Bixam and Weston. One of the requests called for increasing the commission's budget appropriation for secretarial assistance from $2,400 to $3,200. It was passed, as was a request for permission to remodel the commission's office space in the Edwards Building.

The remodeling work, which will involve removal of a partition between two small rooms, will be performed by county employees, if they are available.

Weston's activity report for the past month showed that he assisted in formation of Greenville's Committee of 100 and similar

Cullowhee Woman Chosen N. C. 'Mother Of Year'

RALEIGH (AP) — Mrs. Edith Moore Hall of Cullowhee, mother of the state's newest congressman, today was named North Carolina Mother of the Year for 1959.

She was cited for helping her son, U.S. Rep. David M. Hall Jr. of the 12th District, overcome a crippling bone disease to get an education in law and launch a career in public service.

Selection of Mrs. Hall, 61-year-old widow of the late David McKee Hall of Sylva, was announced at an executive mansion coffee hour given by Mrs. Luther H. Hodges, wife of the governor, for women nominated for the honor.

The State Mothers Committee, headed by Mrs. J. Wilbur Bunn of Raleigh, chose Mrs. Hall from among 14 other nominees. She will represent North Carolina in the selection for the American Mother of the Year.

Mrs. Hall has four living children. In addition to Congressman Hall, they are Margaret, wife of the late Charles Norman Dowdle of Franklin; Robert, with the Bank of Asheville, Asheville; and Lela Moore Hall, Lillington, Harriet county welfare superintendent.

The new state mother is the daughter of a superior court judge and the sister of another. Her father was Judge Fred Moore and her brother, Judge Dan Moore.

Since 1944, Mrs. Hall has been assistant dean of women and dormitory hostess and counselor in Moore Dormitory at Western Carolina College in Cullowhee.

Dave Hall, elected Democratic representative from the 12th District last fall, gives credit for his victory over osteomyelitis to his mother. He was stricken with the bone disease soon before his 13th birthday.

The congressman says his mother gave him much of his high school education at home, while

Lauds Work Of Local Teachers

Mrs. Inez White Tanner, a consultant in elementary education for a publishing firm, yesterday praised reading and classroom control techniques of Greenville teachers after completing three days of demonstration classes in eight elementary schools.

Mrs. Tanner, who conducted reading classes in six city schools, told local school officials, "I have not been into any school system in eight Southeastern states where children read any better than they do in Greenville. The fact that these children read as well as they do indicates that the quality of their reading instruction is superior."

I was also highly impressed with classroom control exercised by teachers."

Classes taught by Mrs. Tanner during her three-day visit were in Dahl-Coates, Third Street, Agnes Fullilove, Elmhurst, Fleming Street and South Greenville schools. Her demonstration lessons were held in grades two, four and six at each of the schools.

Soviet Protests High Altitude Berlin Flights

BONN, Germany (AP)—The Soviet Union has protested against the high-altitude flight to Berlin Wednesday by an American Air Force cargo plane, an informed Allied source reported.

The source said the Soviet representative at the four-power air safety center in Berlin made the protest verbally. This group controls flights between Berlin and the West.

The C130 turboprop flew into and out of Berlin at between 20,000 and 25,000 feet. It was the third American trip to Berlin in nearly three weeks at altitudes above the 10,000-foot level the Soviets contend is the maximum for Allied planes. The Western Allies maintain that they can fly at any level in the corridors to Berlin.

U.S. officials said Wednesday that two Soviet jet fighters shadowed the latest American plane closely but did not buzz it as Soviet MIGs did two previous flights. But today, American sources said later information from Berlin showed "dangerous harassment, or buzzing as it is popularly called, did occur."

As British papers accused the U.S. Air Force of endangering the prospects of East-West negotiations by the flights, a British Embassy spokesman in Bonn said the British had been informed beforehand of the flight but were not "consulted."

LONDON (AP) — Britain announced today it has taken up with the Eisenhower administration the issue of U.S. high-altitude flights in the Berlin air corridors—but has made no formal protest.

A Foreign Office spokesman said Viscount Hood, British minister in Washington, raised the question at a meeting in the State Department.

Prime Minister Harold Macmillan's government believes the risk of a Soviet-American incident in the Western air corridors cannot be justified at a time when the big powers are preparing high-level negotiations on the future of Berlin and Germany.

The spokesman told a news conference Britain agrees the air corridors have no ceilings—in other words, that the Americans are within their rights to fly as high as they like.

Privately, other informants disclosed British planes made a number of high-altitude flights some time ago—but abandoned the practice to avoid the risk of incidents.

Two Civil Suits Settled In Court

Two civil suits which resulted from an accident at Greenville's Elm Street Park nearly two years ago were settled yesterday in Pitt County Superior Court for a total of $11,000.

The suits were brought by Dr. and Mrs. Aaron Baxter, 105 N. Elm St., against Roy G. Smith, 1603 E. Fourth St. Mrs. Baxter's suit was entered by her as next friend of Deborah Elizabeth Baxter, her daughter, whom the complainants charged was seriously injured when she was struck by Smith's automobile on August 2, 1957.

Dr. Baxter had sought $5,000 and the consent settlement awarded him $4,500, while Mrs. Baxter had sought $30,000 and the settlement awarded her $6,500. In addition to payment of the settlements, Smith was ordered to pay all court costs and fees for expert witnesses.

The settlements were approved by Judge J. B. Craven Jr., presiding judge at the one-week civil term of court which was adjourned yesterday. Judge Craven also approved two other judgments, one of which was appealed to the State Supreme Court.

Notice of appeal was given by Paul H. Manning after the court approved a divorce from him for Deanie H. Manning on grounds of a crime against nature. Judge Craven set Manning's appeal bond at $100.

The other judgment approved by the court was a jury verdict that A. J. Garris, trading as Home and Auto Supply Co., was entitled to nothing in a suit against Ralf Harris. Garris was ordered to pay costs in the case.
