Tobacco Industry To Seek Supports Based On Costs

RALEIGH (AP) — The tobacco industry formed a united front today in an attempt to influence Congress to pass legislation basing leaf price supports on farmers' cost of production.

A group of 29 tobacco men representing all segments of the industry were unanimous in their approval of legislative recommendations of the American Farm Bureau Federation.

The committee, which included members from the flue-cured and burley tobacco states, adopted a two-point program which would:

- 1. Maintain a continuing price support program in tobacco. 2. Make this year's support level the same as that of 1959, and in future years, adjust the support from the 1959 level in direct proportion to changes in prices paid by farmers for commodities purchased, using the three-year moving average as a base.

year in Richmond, Va., and agreed on a support program. Congress approved its recommendations, but President Eisenhower vetoed them.

New Hampshire's Republicans Put Nixon In Primary

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — New Hampshire Republicans—who four years ago gave Vice President Richard M. Nixon a stunning write-in tribute—celebrated his 47th birthday today by entering his name in the nation's first presidential primary of 1960.

Led by Gov. Wesley Powell, leaders of the Nixon-for-President Committee filed nomination petitions to place the vice president's name in the preference poll section of the March 8 New Hampshire ballot.

Whether Nixon would let it stay was the big question. He has 10 days in which to withdraw. Otherwise his name will go on the ballot.

Ohio's former Republican Sen. John W. Bricker announced Friday he is abandoning the plan to run as his state's favorite son and will head a slate of Nixon delegates on the Republican ballot in the Ohio May 3 primary.

Seek Early Meet Of UN Space Committee

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) — The United States is reported pressing for an early meeting of the new U.N. space committee in an apparent move to test Soviet intentions on international cooperation in outer space.

The United States is understood to be anxious to get the new committee to work while the spirit of Soviet-American cooperation exists.

The United States has consulted the Soviets and other U.N. delegations about the chance of convening the 24-nation space committee before the end of January.

The Soviet tests, however, are expected to lend new urgency to American demands for an early meeting.

Teachers Ordered Tell 'Truth' On Hitler

BERLIN (AP) — West Berlin school officials threatened today to crack down on teachers who refuse to tell their pupils the truth about Hitler and the Nazi era.

Half the teachers in West Berlin are over 45 and Evers said most of them were members of the Nazi party. Under a West German law, party members who had no serious charge against them are entitled to get back jobs they lost right after World War II.

Despite a crackdown on racists, there was no letup in the flare-ups of anti-Semitic incidents that spread through West Germany and other parts of the world following the desecration of a synagogue in Cologne Christmas Eve.

More swastika daubing cropped up in other countries Friday. In Brooklyn, N.Y., a swastika and the words "Hell Hitler" were scrawled on the front door of the Congregation Beth Israel.

Meet Mrs. Jenkins

By PATRICIA MOORE
Reflector Woman's Writer
Meet Lillian Jenkins, the wife of newly-elected East Carolina College president, L. W. Jenkins, and the mother of six children—all varied ages.

MRS. LEO W. JENKINS . . . is shown working with a plant, one of her favorite hobbies, which a friend gave her.

Lillian Jenkins was born in Lavallette, N. J., "a delightful spot" located on the beach, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Jacobsen. She had two brothers. One, Dr. Randolph Jacobsen, is now supervising principal in a Springfield, N. J. high school. Her other brother is deceased.

She attended Trenton State Teachers College, where she obtained her B. S. degree in Education.

It was during her seven-year teaching career that she met Leo Jenkins, while he was teaching in Somerville, N. J., where she lived. She commuted a short distance away to her teaching job. In 1942 they were married, and about the same time Jenkins went into military service. While he was stationed in California, their first baby was born, in 1944. Then, when her husband was called to overseas duty, Mrs. Jenkins returned to New Jersey to live with her mother.

After the war, the Jenkins resided in Montclair, N. J., where he was an instructor at a state teacher college. Later he became Assistant Director of Higher Education for the State of New Jersey.

Then came the move South, when Jenkins accepted a position as Dean of East Carolina College. Here several of the Jenkins children were born, and all have Southern accents now.

The accents are special to Mrs. Jenkins, who has a little New Jersey accent. She loves to hear the children talk, and she likes the Southern accent. This is home to her, she says.

The children, three boys and three girls, are Jimmy, who will be 16 next week; Jeff, 11; Suzanne, nine; Patty, seven; Sallie, five; and Jack, three.

Mrs. Jenkins is a great believer in her family's coming first. She enjoys spending the winter nights helping her children with their homework, watching television when they finish, or just "sitting around talking."

But she says she thinks the family "just lives for the summers." In summertime, the Jenkins swim a great deal—Mrs. Jenkins has taught her children how to swim, and uses the college pool during winter. It is one of her favorite sports. The Jenkins use their own backyard pool in summer.

They enjoy summer picnics, too, and so far, she says, all the family has wanted to go on them. For instance, last summer, the Jenkins family spent almost every Sunday (after attending Sunday school) at Atlantic Beach, where they took their family picnic.

Along the line of vacations, Mrs. Jenkins loves the family vacation—when everyone boards the station wagon. Last summer they toured scenic spots in Florida. Her favorite place is the ocean.

They attend most of the Little League ball games here, since the two older boys have played. Once the family built a miniature golf course in their backyard—but the grass overcame that. And they've had the typical basketball goals, volley ball sets, and swings. A park has been nearby for other recreational facilities.

Mrs. Jenkins' personal interests are working with flowers—she prefers gardenias—and she loves to read.

She was president of the Brookgreen Garden Club the second year of its operation. She said she had a greenhouse in the yard, until one cold winter froze everything.

She particularly likes to do her own rooting and cutting. The reason Mrs. Jenkins likes the gardenias so much is that it is a sturdy flower and its leaves are good to work with.

Her kitchen is filled with her plants. In other parts of the home are plants neighbors and friends have given her.

Mrs. Jenkins is a member of the Arles Book Club, in which she has held almost every office. She has a charter member.

The whole family belongs to St. James Methodist Church. No child old enough to attend has missed a Sunday in Sunday school since the church was built.

Along the cooking line, she likes to do her own cooking, and Norwegian foods are her specialty—she is of Norwegian descent.

In about a month, possibly more or less, the Jenkins family will move from their brown home on Rutledge Road to the big stone home in front of East Carolina College. For the first time, the State of North Carolina will furnish part of the home, with the Jenkins doing the rest.

Giving the child some choices in clothing color helps promote feelings of independence and self confidence important in developing the child's personality.

Eggs scrambled in a double boiler with a little butter are much tastier.

From Rose High Students Hear Geoffrey O'Hara

GEORGEY O'HARA . . . famous composer, lecturer and writer, performed for Rose High students here Tuesday.

By CRAIG WORTHINGTON
Rose High students and faculty assembled in the gymnasium Tuesday morning for a program sponsored by the high school music department. Dr. Paul Hjortsvang, music instructor at East Carolina College, introduced the guest speaker, Mr. Geoffrey O'Hara, famous composer, lecturer, and writer.

Mr. O'Hara's talk centered around the art of writing music. He showed the audience how he took words of the English language and set them to music, making a song through the use of repetition of the main theme and through the use of different "tails" after each recurrence of the main tune.

By the way of showing students how many famous songs had been written in this manner, Mr. O'Hara analyzed Stephen C. Foster's immortal "Way Down Upon the Swanee River," pointing out the use of repetition.

Mr. O'Hara played for the group one of his most famous songs, "K-K-K-Katy." Then, using this song, he played three variations, first as it would be played on a child's music box, how a steam calliope at the circus would play it, and then how it would be played at a Chinese wedding.

Mr. O'Hara was born in Chatham, Ontario, Canada. He attended Chatham Collegiate Institute. In 1904 he came to the United States and became a naturalized citizen in 1919.

He "began" his career as a clerk in the Canadian Bank of Commerce. At one time he served as an instructor in native music and was a pioneer Army song leader. He once taught community music and song writing. He has written many famous operettas and songs.

Mr. O'Hara's first success came in 1913 when Curcio sang his "Your Eyes Have Told Me" and Al Jolson simultaneously featured "Tennessee." He is also noted for having written "Give a Man a Horse He an Ride" and "I Walked Today Where Jesus Walked," as well as some 200 other songs.

Mr. O'Hara now makes his home at Quaker Hill in Pawling, N. Y. After enjoying a Dutch supper at a local restaurant, the Rose High chapter of the Future Teachers Club met at the home of Jayne Willis Monday night for their monthly meeting. Grace Ann Starford read the devotional.

Following the business session, Lois Tunnell introduced the guest speaker, Mrs. Phoebe Emmons, state FTA Consultant.

Mrs. Emmons spoke on the importance of teachers in training the young. She further stated "There is a very special act to being a teacher. Some people will never step into a classroom and its probably a good thing. The more you girls know about teaching and schools and problems of schools, the better it will be for all of us."

Mrs. Kemp H. Baldwin, mathematics instructor, serves as adviser for this club.

Goal Is To Avoid Future Mistakes

Decision of Greenville's City Council to employ a planning consultant firm to assist the city in long range planning for its growth and development is a move which should prove of immense value to Greenville over a period of years.

Like most towns and small cities in this section of North Carolina, Greenville has given little attention to planning its growth until recent years. In the past decade, however, there has been an increasing awareness of the necessity for long range planning in community development. Many of the problems faced by Greenville and other cities and towns today would not have come about had sufficient attention been given to long range planning years ago.

Other problems, probably even more serious than those faced by the city today, will be encountered in future years unless more long range planning is done on a consistent basis to provide for the orderly growth and development of Greenville.

Greenville's traffic problem today is immediately recognized as one of the major problems of the city. Particularly in the older sections of the city—including the primary business area—narrow streets laid off adequately in the horse and buggy days are now inadequate to handle the heavy flow of automotive traffic. Cross-town streets and thoroughfares that seemed adequate years ago today are incapable of handling without congestion the increased volume of traffic.

As the city continues to grow, both in population and area, the shortcomings of today's traffic patterns will become more acute unless more modern facilities are provided to meet future needs.

Considerations such as the future use of land in various sections of the city and many other factors must be studied in order to adequately plan for the future orderly growth of Greenville.

Employment of a consultant firm to assist in the long range planning will not provide all the answers to problems Greenville may face in the future. It must be realized, however, that the work done in this direction will help to avoid in the future some of the mistakes made in the past. And only through long range planning can the city hope to provide itself with a more orderly development in the future.

The City Council, we believe, has taken a wise step in deciding to employ the assistance of a consultant firm to help with the long-range planning for Greenville. It may be several years before local citizens see tangible results of the benefits of such work, but there is no doubt that a careful job of long range planning will be of tremendous benefit to Greenville in the years to come.

Not Much Offered To American Farmers

The farm program outlined in general terms by President Eisenhower Thursday didn't seem to offer much for the farmer.

There was mention of putting the farmer in a better position to compete economically, increasing farm income and profit; but the other part about curtailing farm production, further revamping support prices and so on, seemed to indicate a further downturn in agriculture rather than an upswing.

How can farmers expect to increase their income when they have to reduce their production? How can they expect to compete more successfully with other segments of the economy if they are not afforded a program which will aid them in doing so?

The applause which came from members of Congress as the President commented on his farm program must have come from the big-city representatives rather than the representatives of agricultural regions. While later details on the President's farm program for 1960 may show otherwise, from his state of the union message we can only conclude that the administration will offer more of the same menu that has been offered before. So far it has proved to be a reducing diet for the nation's agriculture rather than a diet that produced a healthier, more vital farm economy.

At the outset of this new session of Congress, it appears that the Democrats will have to write their own farm program is one which is of benefit to agriculture is to be written.

The farm program offered by the President may be the kind some segments of the population would like to see adopted, but it is a far cry from the kind of farm program the farmers want and need.

No Specifics In The Address

By JAMES MARLOW
WASHINGTON (AP)—It was a quiet statement, without sparks. Read President Eisenhower's State of the Union Message to Congress Thursday and you'll find no indication he expects an angry or even unusual year. On the contrary.

Peace and prosperity were central points in what he said. They are expected to provide the Republicans' political theme song for 1960 and their main selling point to the voters in the presidential election.

There will, of course, be some struggles in Congress between Democrats and Republicans, between Southern Democrats and Northern Democrats, between conservative Republicans and liberal Republicans.

And there will probably be some tiffs between Eisenhower and the Democrats, but mild. All this would be par for the course in any year. But nothing more than that is indicated by congressional reaction to the message.

With some exceptions, it was a sort of "yes, indeed, it's a very nice message" reaction. There was more criticism of what it didn't say than of what it did.

Eisenhower spoke pretty much in generalities. He touched on a number of issues but the key question is how far he intends to go on any of them, to push them, to fight for them. That won't be answered until and unless he follows up with specific proposals.

One of those proposals called for federal officials to register voters in cases where local registrars discriminated against them. This week word came from the administration that it does not intend to support this

Strength For Today

By EARL L. DOUGLASS
IN THAT SPLIT SECOND
Think of what a brief span life is noway. Recently I inquired about an elderly friend of mine and found that she was about to celebrate her 101st birthday. Yet one hundred years takes us back only to a few years before the Civil War. A thousand years, which are but as yesterday in God's sight, takes us back minus a hundred years or so to the Norman invasion. A thousand years before that takes us back to the days of Christ. Go back another thousand and we stand in the court of King David. Four or five hundred years more and we march with Moses and the Israelites across the divided

Sea. Five hundred years more and we sit with the patriarch Abraham looking up into the skies.

Yet all this is only just the beginning. How many ages extend back beyond Abraham and Egypt? Your life and mine, even if we pass the century mark, will only be a split second on the clock of time.

But the beyond! That is different. We have a few years here on earth to get ourselves ready for eternity. Time as we understand it here on earth probably does not exist in the eternity of God. There is immeasurable vastness. You and I have a split second to get ready for it.

As A Gesture Of Peace—

By DON SCHLIENZ

Quitting Is Not Simple

Just a few days ago a smoker "took the pledge."

Not only did he make a compact with himself, but he signed a piece of paper. His confidence was sublime. For a little while, that is.

The other day he had a cigarette in his hand and was asking for a match. Sure . . . I let him down. Gave him a book of incendiaries with my blessings.

He protested "I've had only three"; but I know about quitting tobacco. You don't taper off you quit cold, and suffer.

One "swearing off" isn't enough . . . it's good only for the first day. On the second day a smoker may have to renew his silent pledge six or ten times. On the third day, it calls for new resolutions every twenty minutes . . . by the twenty-minute of the hour every hour of the day.

How do I know?

I've been through the mill. Three times, in fact. But my goals weren't permanent abstinence. It was mostly to prove to myself I could outlast the period of compulsive smoking . . . for real addicts, anywhere from six weeks to two months.

For every time I claimed success there were at least four times when my will power (ha!) failed me. That kind of ratio wins no pennants or trophies; but it's a reminder that habitual smokers just don't realize what they're up against when talking of quitting.

I've enjoyed tobacco for twenty years. Quitting right now would cost four weeks of misery

. . . nerves on edge, all five senses suddenly sharpened to an unbelievable pitch, and family life strained to the almost-talking stage. (My partner "tilt-death-do-us-part" relishes no part of the struggle.)

Experience would indicate there's more than "habit" to tobacco. There is a very real craving. And for the habitual smoker, self-denial results in painfully sharpened senses. It's as though the day is more dazzling bright; sounds are more piercing; there are new flavors in accustomed food and drink; the sense of smell becomes more acute; and the "victim" can almost feel those ingrained threads in paper money.

More than that, his whole being has at times a sort of "stretching" feeling . . . as though straining for a missing essence.

Well, that has been my experience. And in the light of it, my own conclusion is that tobacco has a narcotic-like effect on the habitual user. Benign, panion—but also demanding.

So when someone says "I've decided to quit smoking," you can bet that if he (or she) is a long-time smoker there is anguish in store; and the odds are on tobacco.

Looking back, I can count on the fingers of one hand (and have fingers left over) the number of personal acquaintances who quit smoking for keeps.

Have you tried lately?

"Governor Hodges has called a conference on the needs and problems of aging citizens. And, it is to be hoped that one of the things to be discussed is how the needy aged can get along on the smaller welfare grants favored by the Hodges administration." — Raleigh Times.

While the bowl setup might appear to be a case of the rich continuing to get richer, this is not necessarily so. Teams belonging to a conference must turn over a portion of their bowl money to the other schools in the conference, meaning that most of the bowl money is actually spread among a good number of institutions.

It's a big business, indeed, and every indication points to a continued growth.

Other Editors Saying . . . Bowls Are Big Business

(Rocky Mount Telegram)
That collegiate football is strictly a big business operation was never more clearly brought into focus than when financial returns from the seven major post-season bowl games were announced. The bowl game operation itself has become a multi-million dollar business, and will no doubt continue to grow in financial scope.

The seven bowl games that come under the heading of major attractions — the Cotton, Sugar, Rose, Orange, Gator, Liberty and Bluebonnet—drew almost 500,000 fans who paid almost two and a half million dollars for a couple hours of spectator enjoyment. There was a smattering of other small bowl games which probably zoomed that total up to three million dollars or more.

With so much loot available at the end of the football season, it is no wonder that college football —through the year as well as during the post-season attractions—has become big business. The bowl bids go to the teams with the most glittering records against major competition, and everybody would like to get a share of the bowl gold. The way to a bowl game is through a high-powered winning program, and that costs money—a lot of it. The result is that most of the nation's larger colleges and universities are operating their football programs on a grand scale, with a possible bowl bid one of the major aims.

Actually, the desire for a piece of the bowl melon has become not only a means to an end, but is both the means and the end to some extent.

A big chunk of the prosperity the country is enjoying now is borrowed from last year.

"Business is booming now with spending and employment that might have been on the books for 1959 if it were not for the steel strike and other factors.

It's been said that consumer income and spending "held up" during the steel strike, despite the fact that the strike threw more than a million people out of work. That includes people in industries supplying the steel industry or dependent on steel.

That meant total payrolls were down more than $100,000,000 a week during the strike. If there had been no strike, consumer income and spending would have been higher by almost that amount.

Some, but not all, of this loss is being made up by steel and other industries at the moment. There are more four-weeks, more over time, fewer layoffs and less absenteeism.

There are thousands of auto sales being made this year that could have been made in 1959. Manufacturers stockpiled steel, but not enough, and the industry ran out of cars to supply the late 1959 demand. Wages, commissions and profits that could have been earned last year were passed on into this.

The amount of construction pushed ahead into this year is enormous, perhaps as much as $5 billion.

Some jobs were suspended. When steel ran out, everybody was laid off. But a bigger postponement arose from the fact that many projects about to be started were pulled back. Companies planning new plants, office buildings and other structures put plans back in the files. They did not know when steel would be available. They did not want half-finished structures

Trained To Head Buzzer

SEATTLE (AP)—The science of electronics has scored another break-through: Push-button dogs.

Does your dog bite the mailman? Push a button. Does he go when you say come? Push a button. Does he flush a covey of quail when he should be pointing? He'll get the point when you push the button.

Stan Aeck, trainer and handler of hunting dogs, has had a hand in the development of the idea, but he warns that the push-button trainer could be dangerous for the dog in the hands of an amateur.

It consists of a specially built dog collar and a sending set that looks like a cigar box with an antenna. And, of course, a button. With it, says Aeck, he can control a dog at a distance of a quarter-mile.

The collar carries a small box of tiny batteries and has two short, dull prongs which contact the dog's neck and carry the "message" — a weak but meaningful shock. The shock is accompanied by a buzzing noise similar to the insistent hum of a doorbuzzer.

"I think the buzzer startles the dog as much as the little shock," Aeck says.

Into the training field back of his kennels, Aeck brought a German shorthair pointer named Sandray Hohen Fann. She's one of the best of her breed, a finalist in the 1958 national German pointer trials.

Fast, and trembling eagerly, she worked the field flawlessly, finding and pointing the pigeons Aeck had hidden in clumps of grass. Under voice control alone her work seemed perfect. Yet when Aeck dressed her in the electronic collar, which she remembered from early training, there was a noticeable sharpening in her response.

Aeck did not invent the device — he purchased the one he now uses. But he was one of the developers, getting the idea from stories of the training of German war dogs.

About six years ago, he began seeking a way to control dogs at a distance. His first effort was an ironing cord connected to a shocking device in the collar. The length of the cord — about 20 feet — was his limit of control.

With the aid of electronics experts he was able to eliminate the cord and get the message to the dog via radio wave.

No, it's not a dot-dash code. The buzz and slight shock merely act as a memory-jogger reminding the dog that its trainer is giving instructions.

weathering and requiring watchmen's wages and insurance premiums while they waited the end of the strike. They would not tell what steel prices would be.

STOCKPILING SWELLS BOOM
Inventory build-up is another great factor in the 1960 boom. During the strike, industries cut heavily into their stockpiles; some exhausted them. Now these industries are buying both for present and future use. This is increasing industrial sales by billions and is generating wages and profits.

Similar difficulties have beset thousands of other businesses. Lacking steel, or components made of steel, they slowed down production, postponed sales campaigns, laid off workers. With activities resumed, many chunks of last year's expected business are supporting this year's prosperity.

Still another factor was the general public's attitude. The mass of Americans were not frightened by the strike. The fact that retail sales held up shows that. But still there must have been hundreds of thousands who were a bit uneasy, and postponed purchases.

In fact, some of them still may be postponing commitments until the danger of recurrence passes. Thus steel peace can be a further stimulant for our borrowed boom.

1959 HOUSING STARTS CLOSE TO RECORD
When final figures are compiled for 1959, they will be no less than the third highest annual total, probably the second highest, and possibly the highest.

Starts through November totaled 1,294,200 units (the "living space for one family"). If the December total is as high as the November total, or as high as December, 1958, then the total for the year will exceed 1,385,000. The record set in 1950 was 1,396,000, and the second highest year was 1955, with 1,329,000.

First Place At Stake As Deacs Meet Tar Heels

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A battle between Wake Forest and North Carolina with first place at stake steals the spotlight in Atlantic Coast Conference basketball wars.

Duke, the third team tied for first, risks its 2-0 record against North Carolina State.

Up and coming Virginia faced South Carolina at Charlottesville in the weekly afternoon regional television game.

The Wake Forest-North Carolina tilt will be played on a neutral court, Greensboro's new Coliseum. The game also is expected to produce fireworks.

The Deacons whipped North Carolina 53-50 in the finals of the Dixie Classic and the victory helped boost them into the eighth spot of the Associated Press poll.

North Carolina is 19th.

In the classic finals, Wake Forest Coach Horace (Bones) McKinney had his team play possession ball, despite the fact the Deacons can run with the best. McKinney explained later he employed the possession style to keep his big men, 6-6 Dave Budd and 6-8 Len Chappell, from fouling during the early stages of the game.

North Carolina, like Wake Forest, can play possession ball successfully and can also run wild. Neither Tar Heel Coach Frank McGuire nor McKinney have tipped their hands as to their tactics tonight.

Wake Forest is 4-0 in the ACC and 8-2 overall. North Carolina is 1-0 in the conference and 7-3 overall.

Duke, 2-0 and 6-3, is the other ACC leader going into tonight's games. The Blue Devils play host to North Carolina State, off on the poorest start of any Everett Case-coached team. The Wolfpack is buried in last place, 0-3 and 3-8.

The game also is the classic pupil teacher clash. Vic Bubas came to Duke this year as head coach after playing under Case at State and then serving as his assistant.

Maryland's 85-52 victory over South Carolina in last night's only ACC game was the third straight win for the Terps and the third straight defeat for the Gamecocks.

Paul Jesus led Maryland with 19 points, followed by Jerry Beechie with 18. Art Whisman was held to 13 points for South Carolina. The victory strengthened Maryland's hold on fourth place in the ACC at 2-1 and 6-8 overall.

NCAA Winds Up Eventful Week

NEW YORK (AP)—The 54th annual NCAA convention, subtitled "Oklahoma," today ended a week-long run on Broadway.

But the final session promised to be only a curtain call for the 18-man Council, the powerful ruling body that earlier slapped the University of Oklahoma with indefinite probation.

The Council, which also hit Tulsa with a light one-year probation, still had 11 other investigations into NCAA-member schools hanging but it was doubtful any disciplinary action would be taken.

Oklahoma, barred from postseason football games and all NCAA-controlled TV programs, theoretically could get off the hook today with a last-minute disclosure of the records of an athletic recruiting fund.

But the university, which has cooperated fully with the NCAA, does not have the records. The NCAA says they are in the possession of Arthur L. Wood of Oklahoma City, an athletic booster who has no official connection with the Sooners.

He says the NCAA isn't going to see them. Hence, the impasse until at least the next meeting of the Council sometime in April.

Miami Beach, Fla., now takes over the collegiate spotlight. The NCAA Football Rules Committee meets there next week to weigh two contradictory recommendations:

1. That it adopt unlimited substitution for the 1960 season as proposed by the American Football Coaches Assn.

2. That it make no substantial change in the football substitution rules, as proposed by the National Collegiate Athletic Assn. itself.

The NCAA recommendation came in a surprise move on the convention floor Friday after the football coaches had backed unlimited substitution on Tuesday.

The Rev. W.H. Crowley, faculty representative at Santa Clara, proposed the recommendation and it was approved by the convention with a 90-46 vote. Father Crowley said his main concern was that unlimited substitution, and the two-platoon game that it permits, leads to excessive and improper recruiting.

The NCAA Football Rules Committee is in no way required to accept either recommendation, but it is believed that the majority of members of the NCAA committee are opposed to unlimited substitution.

It was learned that the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference, meeting in caucus, voted 6-0 to request its four members on the committee to vote against free substitution. The Big Ten is leading the opposition fight.

Best guess is that a mild compromise will result in Miami Beach with the present rules on substitute maximums being relaxed slightly.

Griffon Bulldogs Take Win Over Stokes-Pactolus

GRIFTON—Griffon's Bulldogs continued their winning ways by hammering hapless Stokes-Pactolus to submission by a score of 66-38 here last night.

High scoring honors for the winners were shared by Mahler and Riley who each had 12 points for the night's play.

For the losing Bluejays from Stokes-Pactolus it was Donald Hardison leading the way with 23 points.

In the female encounter, Stokes-Pactolus' defending conference champions possibly injured a repeat for the title by squeezing out a 52-50 win over Griffon's girls, in a thrilling contest.

High scorer for the winners was Bullock with 26 points, while Mewborn paced the losers with 18 points for the night's action.

Hildebrand Once Before Head Man

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP)—The Wake Forest College job Billy Hildebrand has undertaken is his first assignment as head football coach at a major school, but not his first venture as No. 1 man.

Back in 1951, less than a year after he was stricken with polio, the 35-year-old Memphis, Tenn.,

three-year contract Friday as successor to Paul Amen who resigned to enter the banking field, Hildebrand looked back on his Whitworth experience.

"I took that job as a test, sort of a proving ground, to see whether I could stand up physically to the task after my polio attack," he recalled.

Billy had graduated from Mississippi State where he had been end and captain in 1945 and gone on to assistant jobs at his alma mater and Purdue. In 1950 he moved to Tennessee and early in September polio struck.

His legs were paralyzed and he said for months afterwards he was exceptionally weak.

Some six months after he was stricken he began to hobble about, but still had little strength and tired quickly.

Later he went to a Colorado summer religious camp where, with additional treatment and exercise, he began to regain his health. Then the Whitworth opportunity came.

Under him the Presbyterian school posted a 3-5 record and after the season he was on his way. He took the freshman job at Mississippi State in 1952, went to Minnesota in 1954 as line coach and two years later joined Amen at Wake Forest.

Ortega Won, Is Facing Rematch

NEW YORK (AP)—On the time worn theory that one good fight deserves another, Mexico's Gaspar Ortega and Honolulu's Stan Harrington will do it all over again in late February or early March.

Ortega won Friday night's 10-round welterweight bout at Madison Square Garden because he had enough left to pull out the last round of a spirited battle. Although the decision by the three officials was unanimous it appeared to have minority support from the crowd of 2,500 who saw the nationally televised contest.

Spectators crowded around the ring and boomed when Ortega's handlers lifted their man on their shoulders in midring. It was so close that it could have been called a draw without hurting anybody.

The tide of battle swung sharply from Harrington to Ortega as the fight progressed. At the end of four rounds, Harrington appeared a sure winner. But Ortega won five of the last six rounds on all the cards. In fact, the best Harrington got from Referee Harry Ebbets down the stretch was an even fifth round while voting the last five to Ortega. Judge Tony Castellano scored them all for Ortega from the fifth on, except the ninth. Judge Nick Gamboli had it the same way but gave Harrington the eighth. The voting was: Ebbets 5-3-2, Castellano 5-4-1, Gamboli 6-4. The AP card also was 6-4 for the Mexican. A poll of 16 writers had it all even 7-7 with two calling it a draw.

Heyman Denies Leaving Duke U.

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Duke's freshman basketball ace Art Heyman says there is no truth to published reports he is considering leaving Duke.

Heyman, 6-4, 200-pound backcourt ace from Rockville Centre, N.Y., currently is averaging 30 points a game for the Duke freshmen.

The report was that Heyman was not happy and was planning to leave Duke after the current semester is over later this month.

"I'm not going to any other school. Actually, nobody is after me to switch schools.

"How could I leave a place like Duke?" said Heyman.

Appalachian, making a strong bid for honors in the North State Conference, faces a stiff test tonight when the Mountaineers invade Lenoir Rhyne.

The game is one of four North State contests. High Point is at Catawba, Atlantic Christian at Western Carolina, and Elon is at East Carolina in the others.

Other games involving North Carolina small college basketball teams have the Norfolk Division of William and Mary at Guilford, College of Charleston at Pembroke, and Belmont Abbey vs Hampden Sydney at Danville, Va. High Point and Appalachian lead the North State. High Point has a 4-0 conference record and 6-0 overall. Appalachian is 3-0 and 6-1.

Woman Bowler Has 300-Game

OMAHA (AP) — For a change it was the women who supplied all the histrionics in the All-Star Bowling Championships Friday.

Sylvia Wene, the Philadelphia mite, who won this classic in 1955, blasted the first 300 game in the 18-year annals of the tournament in the distaff division.

Despite her dramatic accomplishment, Sylvia stood only 10th in the 96-woman field at the end of two days of qualifying.

Mena Deyzman, a 37-year-old secretary from Chicago, roared to the top of the women's standings on the basis of a record eight-game total of 1,686, an average of nearly 211.

The old record for eight games of preliminary action was held by Miss Wene, who felled 1,626 pins along the same route in 1951.

TV Fight Fans Face Loss Of Friday's Bouts

By MURRAY ROSE

NEW YORK (AP)—Not too long ago there were five boxing shows a week on network television. By September there may be only one, the Wednesday night program.

The Friday night fights, the granddaddy of them all, will be dropped by NBC.

The Gillette Safety Razor Co., which has sponsored the Friday night fights over TV for 15 years, said "We were informally advised by NBC Thursday that they did not want to carry the Friday night fights on their network after next September. We have not had time to give adequate consideration to our future course of action."

Vincent C. Ziegler, president of Gillette, said "We would be most reluctant to see the end of this program."

NBC officials declined comment. The Friday night fight show costs five million dollars a year.

The sponsor might shift to another network, Columbia Broadcasting System dropped boxing several years ago. American Broadcasting Co. carries the Wednesday night fights.

Madison Square Garden, promoter of the Friday night fights, deals with Gillette which in turn buys the time from NBC. The Garden collects about $25,000 a week from the sponsor.

Gillette also has to pay another $75,000 or more weekly for the time charges and other expenses.

Nick Irish, president of the Garden, doesn't seem disturbed.

"I don't anticipate a great change in our boxing schedule, and I do not think it will affect us financially," said Irish. "The people may come back to the arena. That is my thinking now. We intend to continue in the boxing business."

What prompted NBC's decision? The network wouldn't say. Some observers point to continuing investigations of boxing which has cast mud on the game, and secondly a desire by some NBC executives to make fuller use of the time.

Four Carolinians On Honor Squad

NEW YORK (AP)—Four Carolinians, including tackle Milton Cunningham of Greenwood, S.C., and halfback Ed Kesler of Salisbury, N.C., have made a high school All America football squad.

Also on the list announced Friday by Scholastic magazine are quarterback Jack McCathern of Columbia, S.C., and halfback George Corbin of Florence, S.C.

Pre-Game Odds Favor South

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — The 11th annual Senior Bowl football game today found the heavier South team slightly favored over a speedier North squad.

The forecast was for fair and mild weather for the game, in which the 50 players made their pro debut. Each member of the winning squad will receive $600, the losers $500.

The South's offense was built around the passing of quarterback Charley Britt of Georgia and the running of Bill Mathis of Clemson. Tom Moore of Vanderbilt and Don Klochak of North Carolina.

Jack Lee of Cincinnati and Olen Treadway of Iowa, the North signal callers, directed a ground game paced by Ed Kovac of Cincinnati, Gerhard Schwedes of Syracuse and Bob Jarus of Purdue.

The kickoff was timed at 2 p.m. (CST) for the nationally televised (NBC) game.

CHAPTER 26

Rutledge said at dinner how was our daughter Tilghman and why was her baby on our bed?

I said Tilghman got all worn out walking the baby, and she and Pete were sleeping like the dead.

Rutledge said what was I going to do this afternoon?

I didn't see any need to go in to how we were shopping for a new dress for Brantley and sixty dollars, so I said, oh things.

Which, for some strange reason, always seemed to satisfy Rutledge.

At Thelma Allen's, Brantley chose a sophisticated blue that made her look much too old, I thought, and far too lovely. I persuaded Maggie to get one too—a charming white—and when she turned in front of the mirrors there was a sudden lovely bloom about her that almost took my breath.

"But why me?" Maggie said. "I don't need a dress."

I said every young girl always needed a lovely party dress, because you never knew when something might come along like a wedding, or a banquet.

Old Beck had promised to stay and look after Baby Colhoun until we got back.

"Has she cried?" I said.

Old Beck said she had been a little angel.

Brantley said did all babies cry all night like Colhoun?

I said, well they weren't little very long, and she would be in kindergarten before we knew it.

Maggie said she guessed she'd go lie down, as she didn't feel very well.

Oh dear! I thought. If Maggie gets sick now on top of Colhoun and Tilghman and Pete, I spread a quilt over Maggie and said did she hurt anywhere? And she said just her head, so I gave her two aspirin.

I wondered what could have happened at school to upset her, but there was no way of finding out, and Maggie apparently wanted to fight it out alone.

Pete came down finally and took Colhoun back to Tilghman's room. I asked him if they had something warm they could cover her with so she wouldn't get colic again.

Pete said Dr. Wingate didn't want her covered.

I said out loud to myself, the way Old Beck does, "Dr. Wingate has never had a baby."

Any doctor's wife will tell you if you don't cover a baby's feet if you have colic. But Pete was already gone.

Rutledge said Dr. Wingate was in to see him today.

I said in alarm was something wrong with Tilghman or the baby?

Rutledge said of course not, that it was strictly business. Dr. Wingate wanted Rutledge to settle an estate for him—his aunt's in Darlington County.

We went upstairs and visited with Tilghman awhile. Tilghman was letting out seams on her "before" dresses. "I must have gained dozens of pounds!" she said. And she added that she was going on a diet and lose them if she ever got time.

Rutledge said why did you have to have time to go on a diet?

I said of course you did, and it was something only a woman could understand, and not to worry about it.

Maggie and Brantley modeled their new dresses for us, and Maggie said again she certainly didn't need a dress, did she?

Brantley said unkindly she certainly didn't.

Tilghman said of course she needed a dress, every young girl did—for dances.

Brantley said, "ha," and Rutledge said Maggie could write rings around that Cozzens fellow, and Pete said ass the fellows in this high school must be blind.

I thought so too, but I merely said they want me to keep Colhoun tonight, and Pete said firmly they will manage.

A during the night, it seemed, I heard Pete going up and down the stairs, and Colhoun crying, and people walking the floor.

When I got up at six and went down to make coffee Pete was asleep at the kitchen table with his head on a bottle. It was a milk bottle, though, I saw with relief, not quite sure what I expected.

When the coffee was ready I shook Pete gently. "Here," I said. "The coffee will help."

Pete swallowed the coffee gratefully.

I said, "It was a pretty bad night, wasn't it?"

Pete's eyes filled with tears of fatigue. "Awful!" he said, and staggered back upstairs, muttering bitterly to himself about babies, and bottles, and womens.

Without even stopping to wonder if I was making a dreadful mistake, I went up and tapped on Tilghman's door.

Her eyes were red from weeping and her lip trembled. And Colhoun took that unlikely moment to wake and start crying.

"Here," I said, gathering up Colhoun and a handful of diapers. "You two are all worn out."

Nobody said a word as I went out and closed the door. Colhoun opened her big blue eyes at me and signed in a jerky sort of way, as though to say, "Well, it's about time!" Her small feet were like ice cubes so I wrapped her warmly in Great-grandmother's afghan and eased her down gently on our bed in the warm curve of my tummy.

Rutledge opened one eye and said what was I doing up in the middle of the night? Then he saw Colhoun and when she smiled at him he said, "Good Lord!" reverently.

At breakfast I told Pete why didn't he run over to Sumter in the station wagon and spend the day with his mother, that I would look after Colhoun, and Tilghman could get a good rest too.

Pete brightened and said he would see what Tilghman thought.

Pete, Tilghman had said, had been saving up his leaves so he would have plenty of time to be here with her and the baby, and I didn't know how she was going to feel about his running over to Sumter.

I left Pete and Rutledge finishing up the batter cakes and syrup, and went up with Tilghman's tray. This was probably not the time, I thought, but I could try. I said didn't she think that Qete had been looking dreadfully beat since the baby came?

Tilghman opened her eyes in genuine surprise. "He does?" she said.

I could see she had been spending so much time feeling sorry for herself that she had not given Pete a thought.

I said didn't she think that Pete get off for a day somewhere away from the baby and all the bottles and diapers and everything, it might do him a world of good.

Tilghman said, "I know! He could run over to Sumter and spend the day with his mother and father."

I said, why, that was a wonderful idea, and I was so glad she had thought of it.

When Pete came upstairs Tilghman said she had a perfectly wonderful idea and she wouldn't take no. I picked up the tray and closed the door behind me and I didn't hear a single word, but Pete came down later looking very happy and said he was going to Sumter, and would I please take good care of Tilghman while he was gone, and the baby of course, and he started telling me how to sterilize the bottles and do the diapers until I pushed him out the front door.

Christian Science

The great example of love and sacrifice given by Christ Jesus and the good which results from following this example in daily life will be emphasized Sunday at Christian Science services.

Readings from the Bible in the Lesson-Sermon entitled "Sacrament" will include the account in Matthew of the healing by Jesus of the lad who was "lunatic, and sore vexed."

Selections from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy will include the following (4:3-9):

"What we most need is the prayer of fervent desire for growth in grace, expressed in patience, meekness, love, and good deeds. To keep the commandments of our Master and follow his example, is our proper debt to him and the only worthy evidence of our gratitude for all that he has done."

The Golden Text is from John (6:33): "The bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world."

'Feast Of Lights' Service Will Be Presented By The Young Churchmen

The Manifestation of Christ to the Gentiles is the theme of the Feast of Lights. The beautiful service will be presented Sunday at 7 p.m. by the Young Churchmen of St. Paul's Episcopal Church. This is a highlight of the year for the Young Churchmen.

The Crucifer, Jake Gaskins, leads the choir and readers into the chancel with the singing of the processional hymn. The figures of Mary, Joseph will be played by Mary Harrington and David Mosier; they will be seen with the crèches before the Christ candle. Surrounding them will be the shepherds played by Trent Tetterton and Keith Holmes. Lois Tunnell, president of the Young Churchmen, will read the opening sentences and responsive reading from the Psalms. Gigi Guice will lead the prayers. The third reader is Donna Day Blissett; during this time the acolyte will light the Christ candle. The fourth reader is Ann Hunt; at this point the Wise Men approach and kneel before the crèche. Mac Mackenzie, Geoffrey Diket, and Chris Heller are cast in these roles.

The fifth reader is Judy Tucker. Beverly Powell is the sixth and she announces the 12 Apostles: Simon Peter, Pete Anthony; Andrew, Buddy Bass; James, Eric Duff; John, Phil Coleman; Philip, Tom Duncan; Bartholomew, Peter Hunt; Thomas, Robbie Powell; Matthew, Phillip Savage; James the less, Bill Wade; Lebbeaus, Drew Perry; Simon, Joe Waldrop; Judas, George White; to be replaced by Matthias with John McGee.

Duncan, followed by Barbara Brooks, who announces the coming of Saul and his conversion to become Paul. Skip Wright plays the Apostle. He in turn gives the light to the Bishop, Priest and Deacon who come from the congregation. Jamie Poindexter is the Bishop; Fred Baker the priest; and Tommy Webb the deacon. These clergy give the light to the choir as all receive the light from the Christ candle. Anna White is the ninth reader.

The benediction and recessional symbolically show the light carried into the world.

Crucified, To A Tree, Died

UDINE, Italy (AP)—The naked body of a 45-year-old woman, mother of eight children, was found today crucified with barbed wire to a tree just outside nearby Masaroli di Torreano, a hamlet near the Italian-Yugoslav frontier.

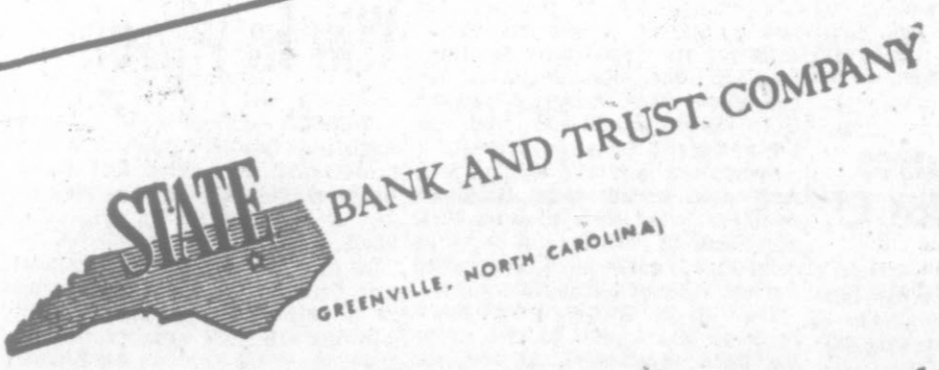

Police said that the woman, Pierina Cassina Cencigh, had died of exposure. Police said that the woman possibly was the victim of a vendetta or a sadist.

'Air Age' Still Waits To Begin

CIVIL AIR PATROL . . . uses this quonset hut, built by the Navy during the second world war, as meeting headquarters. There are other buildings being used by both individuals and groups at the airfield. Some, of course, pay a rental fee.

TAXISTRIP . . . with private aircraft tied down is picturesque on a sunny Sunday afternoon. About 10 individuals and organizations keep planes based at the Greenville-Pitt County Airport. These taxistrips are paved 50 feet wide

Reflector Staff Writer

Citizens of Greenville and Pitt County aren't using their 700-acre airfield to its best advantage—they don't even appear too interested in it, spokesmen of the Greenville - Pitt County Airport Commission say.

Yet the town of Greenville has at its doorstep an airfield with three 5,000-foot runways paved 150 feet wide. Corresponding taxiways are 50-foot wide, also paved.

There is a lighting system for the runways, installed underground.

There is a beacon, a sewerage system, and a drainage system to take off excess water. Both the latter are connected with the city water and sewage systems.

One large hangar is available for storage.

And there are two nose hangar frames, which now look like something left undone, but which once were covered with canvas on four sides. The Navy, during the war, built them for use as working space on engines.

The airport was once just a rural field of 325 acres. Far-seeing city fathers began buying the land before the second world war, and continued to buy surrounding land until they had a total of the present 700 acres.

The far-seeing city fathers, working with experts who predicted a "boom" in the aviation industry following the war, were representing the interests of the city and county. But the boom didn't come, as anticipated.

This factor may be one reason why the airport isn't developing to fullest advantage, and why there is not a lot of interest.

However, members of the Airport Commission have continued to work for expansion, in the way of airline service for this area, according to C. W. Harvey and Willard T. Kyzer. Harvey is chairman of the commission, and Kyzer is secretary-treasurer.

Piedmont Area hearings have been held on the issue. Airlines included in the hearings are Piedmont, Eastern, Capitol, National, Delta—all serve the Eastern seaboard, which covers several states stretching from Georgia to North Carolina and including parts of Kentucky and Tennessee.

Harvey said, "We are not fighting just for service for Greenville. We contend that there is enough traffic in this area to justify many airlines coming in." He defined "this area" as consisting of Kinston, Goldsboro, Farmville, Rocky Mount, Washington and Wilson, as well as Greenville.

The effort for service was begun seven years ago, Harvey said, with renewed efforts two years ago. Harvey said the commission had hoped to hear a decision on the matter before now.

There Is A Need

Though these members said little interest on the public's behalf has been shown, there is definite need for an airfield in this county as an attraction to industry.

Further, though there is bus service almost everywhere, train service served only Rocky Mount, Wilson and Goldsboro in a passenger capacity. That is the extent of public transportation in this area. The airlines would serve a need, Harvey contends.

Background

About half of the present airport property, or 325 acres, was acquired just before World War II, Kyzer said. He has been secretary-treasurer of the commission and member-at-large since 1946, when the commission was formed.

On this amount of land, a small airfield was built, with dirt runways in about the same position as they are now.

During the second world war, the Navy wanted to locate an auxiliary field in Greenville for Marine pilots. The government paved and improved the runways. In addition, they put in the complete drainage system and the sewer system. Other equipment included the quonset huts, barracks to house Marine personnel stationed there, a transformer vault for runway lighting, a beacon and the nose hangar frames.

After the war, the Navy released the field back to the city and county, deeding certain equipment that the city would need. Kyzer defined the equipment as the beacon, lighting system, sewerage, water systems and the nose hangar frames. Plus the improved runways. Fire, gasoline and lighting trucks went to the city, which sold them later.

Airport Commission

The airport affairs are handled by a commission created by joint resolution of the Board of Aldermen (now City Council) and the Board of Commissioners of Pitt County on March 7, 1946.

Kyzer said when "We sell things out there, we do it under the strict understanding that all money goes into airport development or maintenance." But nothing is sold without the permission of the city and county.

Present members of the commission are Vance Perkins and Alton Gardner, representing the County Commissioners; W. S. Stafford and C. W. Harvey (chairman), representing the City of Greenville; and Willard T. Kyzer as member-at-large.

Present Use Of Field

The Greenville - Pitt County Airport is leased by L. P. Broadfield of the Rocky Mount Air Service Inc., Rocky Mount, who also leases other fields in the state. His company has a contract to train R. O. T. C. students at East Carolina College to fly.

He bases a few light planes here, and arranges for flying lessons, as well as "passenger hopping." There is no maintenance shop here; Broadfield has that work done in Rocky Mount unless it is of a major nature.

However, Kyzer said "We would build a shop if necessary."

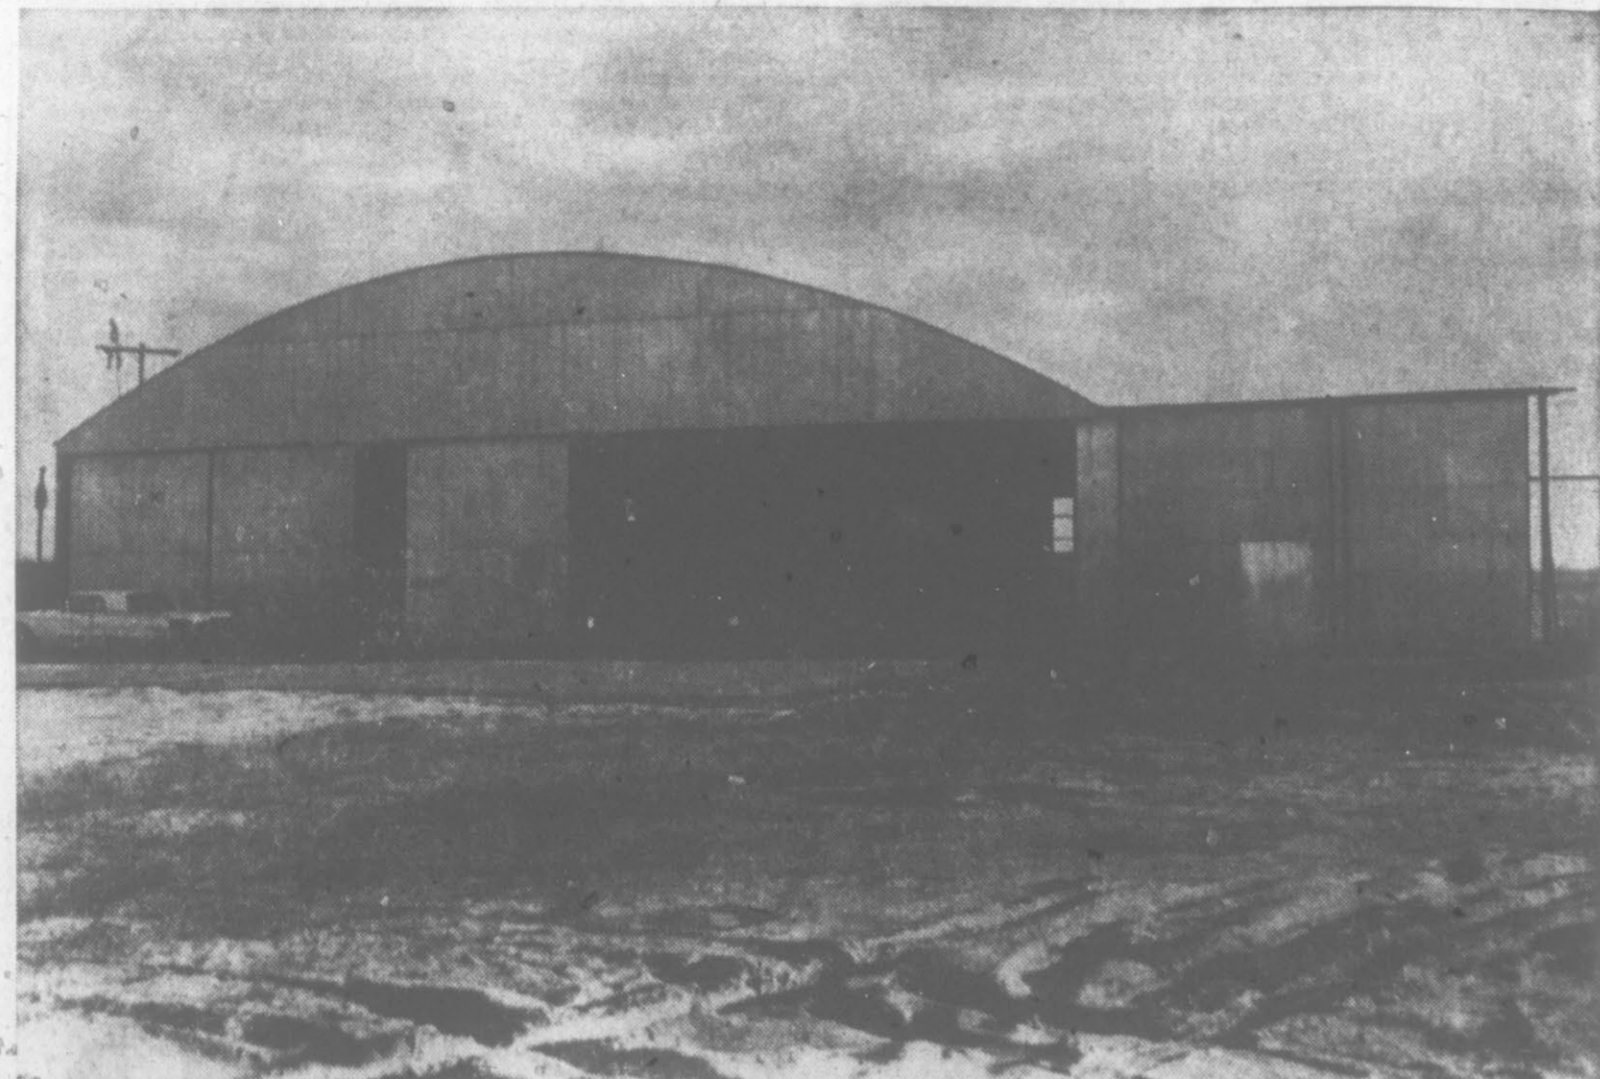

Some of the buildings built by the Navy are being used to good advantage by various individuals and organizations. The Army Reserve pays a small rent for their armory, which they built themselves on the airport property.

The Civil Air Patrol uses one of the quonset huts as their operating unit. The old mess hall built by the Navy, a wooden building, is leased as a recreation center and restaurant by a private individual.

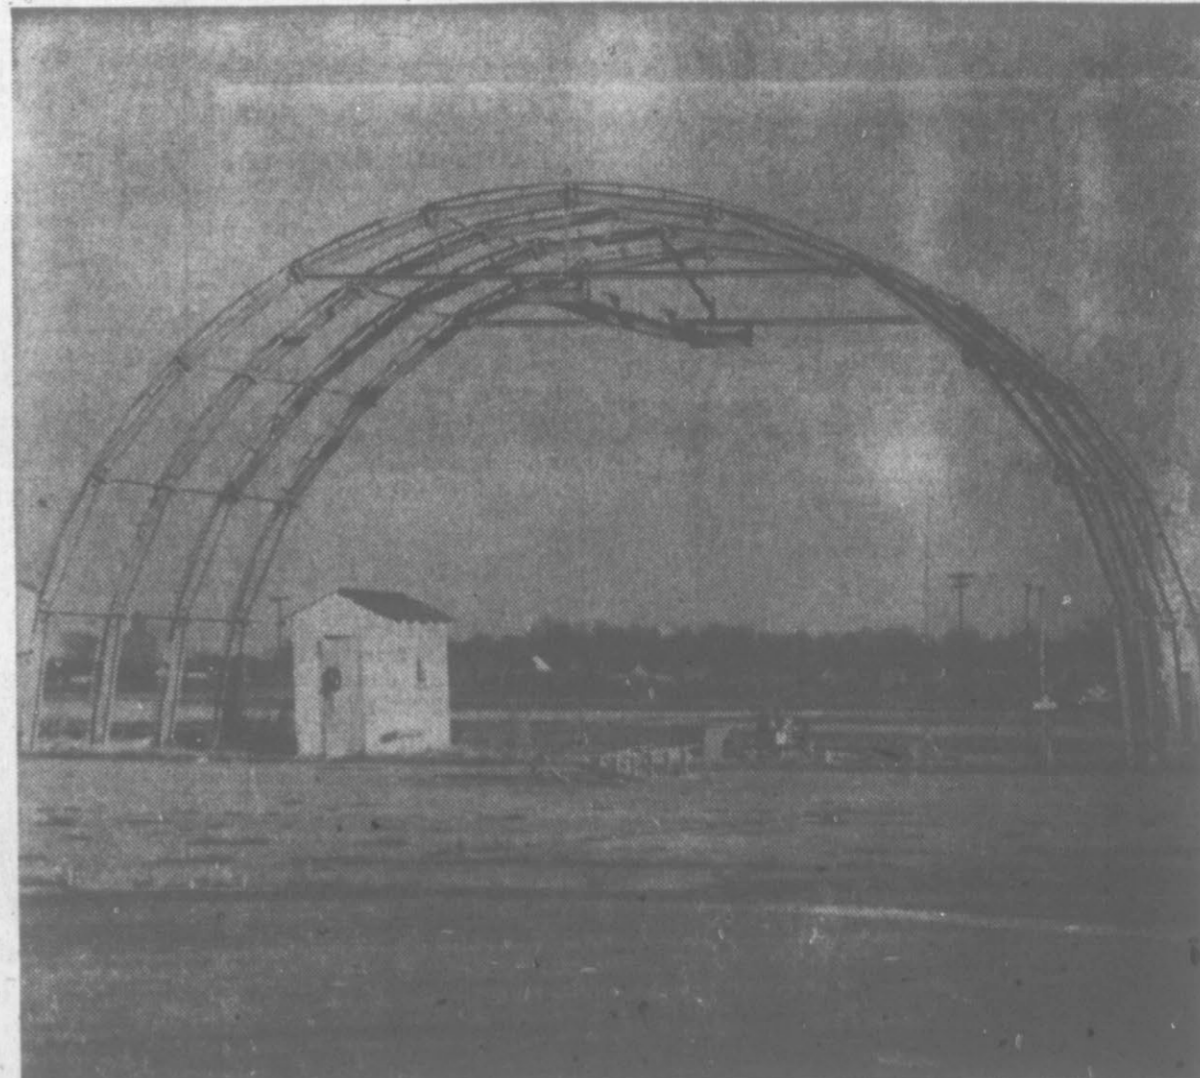

There are about 10 private planes belonging to residents of the county which are kept at the airfield. These owners include Judson H. Blount Jr., John Howard, Willie T. Baker of Farmville, Henry Flake, Vance S. Harrington, Neil Olsen, the Rev. Shelton F. Kossey, A. Hartwell Campbell, and the Rocky Mount Air Service and the Greenville Flying Club. This list was compiled several months ago, Kyzer said.

ON THE TAKEOFF . . . This Piper tri-pacer is cranked-up and taxiing from the ramp onto the runway, ready for a take-off.

BIG HANGAR . . . is shown here. Inside, barely visible, is a Steerman used for crop dusting in the Greenville-Pitt County area.

NOSE HANGAR FRAME . . . looks like a giant "something left undone." The Navy built two of these structures for use as a place to work on airplane engines.

Bad Boy Of British Politics Now Finds He's Beloved

Former General Is Now Serving As A Rector

By DICK MEISTER

RED BLUFF, Calif. (AP)—Leslie J. Maitland, who 34 years ago made the first trans-Pacific flight to Hawaii, has become a different sort of sky pilot.

Once Brig. Gen. Maitland, he's now the Rev. Mr. Maitland, rector of St. Peter's Episcopal Church in this northern Sacramento Valley lumbering and livestock town.

"I used to speculate as I flew over the mountains and the great oceans on the insignificance of man's work and the greatness of God," says the much-decorated aviator.

"This feeling was always there, says Maitland, a vigorous 60, and lifelong member of the Episcopal Church.

"It was a long process," he recalls. "I continued feeling that this is what I'm going to do."

The feeling kept getting stronger and stronger until I finally decided to join the ministry."

That was in 1954. He began studying under the Rev. George Selway at St. Paul's in Lansing, Mich., where he was serving as aeronautics commissioner and civil defense director for the state.

He took the positions after retirement from the Army Air Corps in 1945.

A period of seminary study followed Maitland's initial work in Lansing, a term of apprenticeship. Then, two years ago, he came with his wife to take over at St. Peter's.

Maitland's main goal now is to enlarge his 350-member congregation and to build a mission in this community of about 6,000 people.

Before he donned his clerical garb, Maitland's career spanned nearly the entire history of aviation and brought him many honors including two Distinguished Flying Crosses in World War II.

It was a career that began as it ended, in Army war service. In 1917, Maitland left his home in Milwaukee, Wis., at 18 to start out as a test pilot in the fledgling Air Service.

When he retired, he left a bombing squadron that for two years had regularly hit targets in Nazi-held Europe with Maitland flying "every mission until they made me quit."

How does a general turned minister feel about his war-making role? "The bombing was an essential job at the time," Maitland explains. "That's what I was trained for. We all have to reconcile ourselves to this sort of thing."

As for the future, he feels strongly that aviation will help mankind reach peace by shrinking the world and making it easier to get from one place to another.

Ultimately, Maitland believes, this will lead to world government. "Communication and transportation go together," he points out. "We have little trouble with Mexico and Canada because we're close together and can talk to each other, understand each other."

"With air travel, we can do this on a worldwide basis and see that people all over the world are human just as we are. We can get their viewpoints and they can get ours."

"As long as we're talking, we won't be fighting. In the past, we weren't able to do this and we had wars."

"Aviation has to help mankind reach peace. If it doesn't, it will destroy the world."

Maitland played a significant role in aviation's development, serving as an aide to famed Gen. Billy Mitchell and once, in 1923, snapping the world's speed record: 244 miles an hour.

Today, that speed may seem outrageously slow, like the 25 hours and 49 minutes it took Maitland and aviator Albert Hegenberger to make it from Oakland, Calif., to Hawaii on that record 1926 flight.

Although the speeds may not have been exciting by jet standards, the dangers were undoubtedly greater in the early days of aviation.

"We flew planes with one wing, with two wings, with eight wings. And there were no parachutes. I recall at first we thought they were sissy," Maitland says.

"I was in so many crashes I can't remember them. I'd like to feel that I was saved to do the job I have started."

In a dozen years, the Pakistan seaport of Karachi has increased in population from 300,000 to 1 1/2 million people.

LONDON (AP)—Aneurin Bevan, the Peck's bad boy of British politics, has learned in illness that most everyone loves him after all. The 62-year-old fighting Socialist, with his keen sense of irony, must find some humor in the situation as he stares at the ceiling in his room at London's Royal Free Hospital. He underwent a major stomach operation Dec. 29.

In the hidebound London clubs where the mere mention of his name touched off apoplectic rages there are references now to "Good old Nye."

Ge-well notes keep pouring in on him from Conservatives as well as Laborites. Men who have clashed with Bevan for years in the House of Commons openly express relief as the medical bulletins indicate he is recovering.

Queen Elizabeth II and Prime Minister Harold Macmillan sent messages of encouragement and asked to be kept informed of his progress.

The fiery Welshman's absence from the public arena—even temporarily—brought home to political friends and foes alike how much color and drama he lent to the scene all these years. Only Sir Winston Churchill can be compared with Bevan in that respect, and Churchill at 85 now takes no part in debates in the House of Commons.

Bevan is still a full blown Socialist. His beliefs still stir up controversy even within the ranks of his own Labor party. But he is not regarded as a party rebel any more.

The left wingers Bevan once led have launched a new attack on moderate Hugh Gaitskell's leadership of the party.

Bevan has not committed himself to this movement. On the contrary, as deputy leader of the party he protected Gaitskell at the Laborites' convention last November by making a crafty speech which headed off a split on doctrine.

Bevan has been the bogey man of British Conservatives and many American officials for so long it is hard to visualize him as a sort of senior statesman.

The U.S. State Department professed complete neutrality in the British national election last autumn. And yet, even 3,000 miles away, it was almost possible to hear the sighs of relief in Washington when Macmillan's Conservatives won.

A Labor victory would have put Bevan in as foreign secretary, brought about a complete reappraisal of the intimate relationship between London and Washington and possibly added new strains to the NATO alliance.

Bevan is a patient under the nationalized health service which he fathered as a member of the old postwar Labor government. His doctors have not defined the exact nature of his operation. But Gaitskell, on a lecture tour in the United States, emphasized that Bevan is not suffering from a cancer.

A Labor victory would have put Bevan in as foreign secretary, brought about a complete reappraisal of the intimate relationship between London and Washington and possibly added new strains to the NATO alliance.

Bevan is a patient under the nationalized health service which he fathered as a member of the old postwar Labor government. His doctors have not defined the exact nature of his operation. But Gaitskell, on a lecture tour in the United States, emphasized that Bevan is not suffering from a cancer.

Bevan is still a full blown Socialist. His beliefs still stir up controversy even within the ranks of his own Labor party. But he is not regarded as a party rebel any more.

Russians Said Testing Dynasoar-Type Vehicle

WASHINGTON (AP)—Missiles and Rockets magazine said today the Soviet Union has a semiballistic space bomber. It added that this could mean they are seven to eight years ahead of the United States in development of a Dynasoar type manned boost-glide space vehicle.

The magazine quoted European military sources as saying that the vehicle, called the T4A, is in the advanced testing stage but is not yet operational.

"Presumably it will be manned," the magazine added. The vehicle was described as similar in design to a manned missile proposed during World War II by Dr. Eugene Saenger, German rocket pioneer. The magazine said it has these features:

Maximum range, almost 10,000 miles; maximum speed, 13,910 miles an hour; over-all length, 121 feet, including a main stage engine 60 feet long and 6.88 feet in diameter.

The magazine said the T4A is launched from a catapult propelled along a steel track by a booster of 300,000 to 360,000 pounds of thrust.

It said the vehicle is designed to level off at an altitude of 186 miles and to follow a semiballistic course, at 11,178 miles an hour for almost 5,000 miles.

Boeing Airplane Co., Seattle, Wash., heads a manufacturing team developing the Dynasoar boost-glide vehicle, and the Martin Co., Baltimore, Md., is developing the modified Titan booster rockets for the craft.

Evacuating Base On Island Of Ice

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (AP)—It was nine rescued and 18 to go today as the Air Force continued an orderly, long-planned evacuation of Station Charley, a floating scientific station in the Arctic Ocean.

Two men were taken off the huge ice floe on which the station is located Thursday. Seven more men were airlifted from the floe Friday night by ski-equipped C130 transport planes from Stewart Air Force Base, Tenn.

The evacuation, planned many months ago in case of just such an eventuality, was touched off when a large piece of the floe broke off. The floe, drifting 400 miles northwest of Barrow, Alaska, originally was four miles wide and seven miles long.

With the seven men flown out Friday night came many pounds of equipment used by the station's scientists in their arctic observations, involving several fields.

At no time since the evacuation started has there been any emergency or any danger, the Air Force emphasized.

Brought out Friday night were: Robert J. Walker, Memphis, Tenn.; and Warner E. Chapman, St. Petersburg, Fla., both of the U.S. weather service.

Roy E. Willis, Bethesda, Md.; Thomas J. Herron, Marquette, Mich.; and Charles T. Chance, New Mulford, N.J., all of the Laramie Geological Observatory, Palisades, N.Y.

Dale Hale, Knoxville, Tenn.; and Don A. Makela, Seattle, Wash., both of the University of Washington.

Over $300,000 Loss To Fires

Fire losses for the calendar year of 1959 in Greenville totaled $302,622.40 according to a report by Fire Chief George Gardner.

Over two-thirds of the total loss resulted from two fires, the Brown Furniture Store fire and the Rose's Dime Store blaze. The total loss for these two blazes amounted to $255,673.38, Gardner pointed out.

The remainder of the loss for all other fires amounted to $46,949.02. During the month of December, 48 calls were answered by the department, including eight box, 24 telephone and three false alarms; eight rescue calls; and five toys burned off. Volunteer payroll for December was $359, a total of $1,603 for the fiscal year.

The department worked every day of December repairing toys for the Salvation Army for needy children, Gardner noted. He expressed thanks to Globe Hardware Company, Western Auto Associate Store, Cozarts Auto Supply, White's repair Service and Cox Armature Works for their assistance, both in time and materials, during the project.

Gardner also praised Captain Lyman Nethercutt, Fire Inspection Officer of Greenville, for his part in helping prevent fires in public buildings during the Christmas rush.

Both fire and rescue personnel are continuing their regular practices, drills and meetings, he concluded.

Castro 'Acquires' Big Car Agency

HAVANA (AP)—Fidel Castro's government has taken over control of Cuba's biggest automobile agency.

The Labor Ministry put the Ambar Motor Corp., distributors of Cadillac, Oldsmobile, Chevrolet and Opel, under a government overseer.

The order said the firm was beset by labor problems, but company informants said the only problem was its refusal to give Christmas bonuses because of increased costs and decreased sales owing to new import restrictions.

The company is owned by Amadeo Barletta. His son, Amadeo Jr., is president. Friends said the father holds Italian citizenship while the son is a U.S. citizen by birth.

Tighten Rules On Airline Drinking

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Federal Aviation Agency today tightened the rules for drinking aboard airlines; a passenger can still bring his own bottle, but the stewardess must have control of pouring the drinks.

The idea is to prevent passengers getting excessively drunk by belting a bottle at will.

Big airlines usually serve drinks from an airborne bar as part of the service. Smaller airlines often have no bars, but will serve set-ups to passengers who bring their own liquor.

Under the new rule, such passengers would be required to turn in their bottles as they board to the stewardess, who would then pour the drinks from it.

The airlines also are ordered not to serve liquor to anyone who appears intoxicated.

The FAA rule also provides that anyone who carries his own bottle and drinks from it in flight could be fined up to $1,000.

Scout Council To Stress First Aid Study With Series Of Contests

The first First Aid-o-ree to be held in the East Carolina Council is scheduled to begin next week with Troop First Aid-o-ree contests.

The first aid contests are designed to stir interest in first aid and other phases of scouting. The events will also train boys in the use of the type of first aid equipment normally carried on camping trips or the equipment which could be improvised in the home.

The Troop contests are to be held January 10-16 with first aid knowledge based on the second class requirements with the specific date set by the unit. During the week of January 24-30 neighborhood contests are scheduled with skills based on the first class requirements.

Patrols which successfully complete the first two events will meet February 3 for instruction in merit badge first aid and in advanced first aid. The final contest, the District First Aid-o-ree will be held February 13. This contest will be based on Merit Badge First Aid.

Scout officials also feel that, through training in an event such as this, scouts will be better qualified to help in the event of a national or local emergency when trained first aiders are needed.

Teams will be judged according to the first aid practices taught in the latest editions of the Handbook for Boys, and Merit Badge Pamphlets in First Aid, Lifesaving and Safety.

For additional information or aid in conducting the contests contact Rudy Alexander, Box 368, Greenville.

The clerk reported expenditures through the first half of fiscal 1959-60 have exhausted 45 per cent of the total budget of $421,000 for this year.

Alred reported tax collections have been up to expectations. Some 55 per cent of the total amount anticipated has already been collected.
