The Soviets to release the nine, but so far had no reply. Eight men and one woman were aboard the craft when it came down near the Baltic coast town of Kletz, about 15 miles east of the border and East Germany police reported Friday night they had them in custody.

Wythe Ave., Richmond, Va. A U.S. spokesman in Berlin issued this statement: "When it was learned that a U.S. Air Force C47 on a routine flight from Copenhagen to Hamburg, was missing, Gen. East Carolina College Will Confer Degrees On 951 At Commencement Sunday

East Carolina's Fifty-first Commencement exercises Sunday will have as central event the conferring of degrees upon seniors and graduate students who have completed their work at the college during the 1959-1960 term. Candidates for degrees number 951.

Answering the question "What about the liberal arts?" Dr. Jenkins said, "The liberal arts will be stressed at East Carolina as vigorously as vocationalism." It is just as important, he explained, to know how to live as to know how to make a living.

Dr. Jenkins, as principal speaker at the luncheon, made his first appearance before the East Carolina Alumni Association since he officially assumed office.

Speaking before an audience in the New South Dining Hall, he reviewed his first four months as president of the college and gave answers to the questions which he said had been most frequently asked him about his administrative policies at East Carolina.

"No limit will be placed on enrollment," he stated. We are, he said, in the midst of a population explosion and must make every effort to provide educational opportunity for larger and larger numbers of young people.

The American idea, he stated demands an educated citizenry. Many uninvolved social, political, and economic problems, he said, call for trained leadership for their solution.

STYLE YOUR ROOMS FOR ATMOSPHERE

There's practically no limit to the amount of foreign intrigue you can achieve in a room that's furnished with simple lines. For instance, you can get a sophisticated Italian feeling in an entrance hall with a console chest. Or you can try a Mexican theme with furniture sporting pewter hardware. Reds and yellows in the fabrics. French provincial feeling to a bedroom by decorating with soft pastel colors. To get the Danish feeling use fine homespun fabrics and rugs in vivid colors with ceramic accessories.

Population Gain Wasn't Uniform

North Carolina's population growth of almost a half million people during the past decade shows progress for the state, but a close examination of the census figures affords cause for concern.

In spite of the fact that population of North Carolina grew by half million, the growth rate of the state from 1950 to 1960 was only 11.5 per cent, the second lowest of any decade in the last 90 years.

In spite of the fact that the state as a whole gained population, thirty-nine of the 100 counties of North Carolina experienced a population decline during the decade. Most of the population increase came in the industrial Piedmont part of the state while most of the counties which lost population were located in the agricultural areas of the Coastal Plain and Mountains.

Percentage-wise, the state-wide picture means that North Carolina decreased rather than increased its rate of growth during the decade in spite of the tremendous efforts which have been made to develop the state. It also means that while Tar Heels are generally proud of the progress the state has made, our development program must still be intensified if our state is to keep pace with others.

In the counties of the Coastal Plain and Mountain areas, the decline of population in many counties must be attributed to economic conditions and the lack of sufficient economic opportunities to hold the people they had, and to attract others. The growth of the Piedmont section must be attributed to economic conditions which offer opportunities not only to the people who already lived there, but also to people who chose to move into the Piedmont from other sections of the state.

It boils down to the point that while North Carolina has grown in population during the past decade, its growth has not been uniform. Sixty-one of the counties increased in population sufficiently to off-set the population loss of the other 39, and still increase the total population of the state by half million.

North Carolina as a whole needs to consider carefully the conditions reflected by these census figures. It needs to evaluate its economic conditions more carefully and formulate positive plans to halt the population decline in specific areas. Such plans should include specific programs to help those counties where economic conditions precipitated the population decline in the past decade.

It is in the interest of the state as a whole that all its counties grow from the economic standpoint as well as from the population standpoint. The state will not be able to realize its potential until it can show uniform growth from the mountains to the coast.

Soviet Policy Switch Is Part Of Strategy

The masterful "quick shift" in Soviet policy toward the West has succeeded in keeping the Allies off balance in the recent international developments. The West is on the defensive and apparently with little hope of gaining the cold war offensive in the immediate future.

It is a situation that must be reversed, but to achieve that the West must come forth with moves that will snatch from the Soviets the advantageous position they have gained in the cold war in recent weeks.

After the U2 incident and collapse of the summit conference in Paris, Premier Khrushchev rushed off to East Berlin uttering implied threats that he was going to sign a separate peace treaty with East Germany, thus placing the West in a position where it might have to either give up West Berlin or fight for its rights in that divided city.

On arrival in East Berlin, however, Khrushchev told his audience the status quo on Germany must be retained at least for a period of months until a new summit conference could be arranged. Implied in this statement is the fact that Khrushchev will not seek to materialize a major Berlin crisis in the immediate future. This is just the opposite of what appeared to be the Soviet strategy earlier in the week.

At any moment the Soviets may switch back to the separate treaty pitch, thus setting the stage for rapid development of a major crisis.

Such quick shifts in policy has been a part of the Soviet strategy for years. The West has had to face the problem for years, but it has never quite been able to cope with it. The sooner the West learns to cope with this Soviet maneuver, the sooner we may expect to regain and hold the offensive in the international war of words.

Real Switch In Russians' Move

WASHINGTON (AP)—The 1960 summit fiasco—before and after—gets dizzier by the minute. If you listen, you can hear an old record being replayed. Take the American U2 spy plane which was downed over Soviet Union. President Eisenhower told Premier Nikita Khrushchev there will be no more spy plane flights over Soviet territory.

But Thursday The Associated Press reported this country is so far along with the development of spy satellites that the first of a planned network of them should be circling the earth in four months.

The AP reported: Experts say it will do a far more effective job than the U2 could—and will be much harder to knock down." The AP added:

These satellites, whirling around the earth's poles with photographic and TV equipment, will be able to scan every square mile of the earth's surface and relay to Allied ground stations the location of Soviet missile sites and any unusual concentration of troops or war materials.

The Soviets have appealed to the United Nations Security Council to hear their charges of aggression by the U2 plane flights. The council meets Monday.

Eisenhower will propose later that the U.N. supervise international aerial surveillance aimed at guarding the world against surprise attacks.

But it's a real switch for the Soviets to go to the Security Council to handle a problem which couldn't be solved at the summit because Khrushchev broke up the summit meeting as soon as it began.

Just two years ago Khrushchev agreed to hold a summit meeting in the Security Council itself. He wanted the augmented council to hear another of his charges of American aggression but stopped the meeting before it began. He said the council was loaded in America's favor.

The United States proposed that the meeting be held in the Security Council itself, with the heads of government from the United States, Britain, France and the Soviet Union sitting on the council.

But a week before the council was scheduled to meet Khrushchev said: Nothing doing. He said the 11-nation council was weighted on America's side. So there was no summit meeting.

Now he wants to go to the council on the spy plane case even though a majority of the 11 nations on it are favorable to this country. This is the lineup:

United States, Britain, France, the Nationalist Chinese, Argentina, Ecuador, Italy, Soviet Union, Ceylon, Poland and Tunisia. This country should be able to count on a minimum of six, including itself, perhaps more.

Khrushchev had actually started calling for a summit meeting in 1957 but Eisenhower put him off in a string of correspondence which included for a time Premier Bulganin and earned all three the name of pen-pals.

But Khrushchev got very demanding when the Marines went into Lebanon. That led to the planned Security Council summit meeting which Khrushchev sidestepped.

This is a sample of the correspondence, pulled together from their letters:

Khrushchev accused this country of aggression, said the commander of the Sixth Fleet was a criminal or insane, and practically said America's stated reason for going into Lebanon—to defend it—was a phony by an irresponsible leader. This year he likened Eisenhower to a thief.

Eisenhower in turn denounced Khrushchev's choice of language. He accused the Soviet Union of indirect aggression by supporting aggressive forces, and of undermining the U.S. by first wanting a summit meeting outside it. Eisenhower wound up charging Khrushchev with enslaving the satellites in Europe.

Opinions In Brief

"A history lesson: In seven hundred and seventy-six . . . A group of American mariners . . . Renounced the yoke of tyranny . . . The tax on stamps the tax on tea . . . Our fathers felt that we were fit to admit—We have been very good at it."—The Nashville Banner.

"Most adults who need a bit more humility can acquire it with the greatest of ease by visiting a student science fair. Hearing an 11-year-old discuss planetary motion or the techniques of microphotography is not an experience likely to bolster the average adult ego, but it is mighty good for the soul."—The Henderson Gleaner and Journal.

Notes Caught On The Fly

Finally our under-the-table Summit meeting correspondent has come through with the real inside dope on the Paris conference.

This report is hot stuff. So hot that it gives a complete new picture of the goings-on in Paris. It was smuggled out of the ultra secret meetings by our boy and he didn't have to use the suicide needle once.

Actually Khrushchev wasn't really so angry with Ike as it might have appeared. He was more hurt than anything else, so our correspondent reports.

"I like Ike as much as anybody," Nikita told the president of the United States. "And I know that espionage is carried on by both your country and mine."

"I knew that these plane flights were being made," the Soviet leader continued. "And I realized that high government officials must know of them."

Then Khrushchev gestured sadly. "But, Mr. President, I didn't know that these deeds involved even U-2."

Please no letters of commendation for our Paris correspondent who finally came up with what was going on down under. Any good newspaperman would have done the same.

Besides too much praise might go to his head.

Trash receptacles along the business streets are sporting new signs these days.

The signs tell citizens: "Don't Be a Litter Bug. Keep Our Community Clean."

In the middle is an honest-to-goodness litter bug complete with all kinds of trash.

Here's hoping the signs will call attention to the receptacles. The condition of local streets at times shows the need for a little more careful disposition of trash by pedestrians and motorists.

Once again East Carolina College is closing down at the end of a school year.

For a couple of weeks there will be practically no college students in town.

It is during this time of year that local citizens come to realize just how much a part of the community life the college is.

The downtown streets won't seem quite as bright without the students and the campus itself becomes a ghost town for a short time.

There will be a hearty welcome for the college when it re-opens for the summer session.

Other Editors Saying Education Is Costly

(Washington Daily News) Today in North Carolina we have a campaign in full swing for the Democratic nomination for governor of this state. Each of the candidates has had much to say about education.

And by now we are in general agreement that it costs a great deal of money to offer education to our young people. Today we are woefully short in North Carolina of facilities. We have a shortage of teachers, and the salaries of teachers are so low that many of those we might expect to teach in our state are going to other states because of higher salaries.

If we are to keep pace with the needs, then the people of North Carolina must pay more money. We cannot afford to sit idly and let nature take its course. There are boys and girls in ever increasing numbers seeking admittance to our secondary schools and to our institutions of higher learning.

If we in North Carolina do not have the facilities and the teachers, the problem of offering adequate education becomes much more difficult if not bordering on the impossible. We just cannot do a good job unless we have the needs, then the people of which to do that job.

Fifty years ago we dare say that less than 10 percent of our adult population had high school education. Less than five percent of our adult population had any college training. Today that picture has changed considerably, and in a land where education is open to everyone, regardless of race or economic conditions, the responsibility increases each year.

The biggest single item in the North Carolina budget today is for education. And the taxpayers are footing the bill. And some people are saying that taxes are too high, and that we can't afford to increase the quality of the learning we are now giving.

We wonder if people in general have stopped to consider the high cost of ignorance. Education is costly, but ignorance is more costly. For many millions of Americans, and for thousands of North Carolinians, mothers and fathers will leave their children very little in the way of worldly goods. But if they can give them adequate education, have they will have a life?

The better education we give our children, the lower will be the crime rate. The better education we give our children, the better standard of living they will have. The better education we give our children, the higher moral values they will have. Better education means better leadership, better personality, better character, and better living.

In America, we educate the masses, and it is a costly enterprise. But look at the countries where ignorance is rampant and compare that country with America.

North Carolina could cut down on its tax burden considerably by cutting down on the quality of education. But it would be a costly cut, and it would be one we'd be trying to pay off the longest day we live.

Education does cost money; ignorance costs more.

Strength For Today

By EARL L. DOUGLASS AND WITHOUT DELAY Is the Bible a reliable guide for life? It certainly is. Without the Bible we would not know which way to turn. Life would be surrounded with such impenetrable darkness that living would be a continual agony.

To say this is not to intimate that the Bible is a magical kind of book which gives us all the answers to life's problems. Yes, the answers are there, but we have to search them out and dig them out. The spiritual immensity of the Bible is such that no one could ever grasp its full meaning as the result of a single reading. All our lives we have to keep reading little portions of it, turning them over in our minds, praying about them, trying to apply the truths we discover to the experiences we encounter.

We describe the Bible best when we call it a mine, and the characteristic thing about any mine is that there has to be a lot of digging by somebody before anything of value is uncovered. The coal is there, but it has to be dug out. The iron ore, the gold, the uranium—they are all there, but they have to be mined. It is only in fairy tales that things just happen. This is not life. This is fantasy.

The treasures which make life worthwhile are hidden away by God and we are invited to dig for them. Achievement is costly.

Atomic Spies' Story

By GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY Copyright, 1960, King Features Syndicate, Inc.

A key figure in the theft of the atomic bomb was Dr. Klaus Fuchs, British physicist, who had fled from Germany to England in 1933 after Hitler had risen to power in the Reich. Fuchs had been one of a group of British scientists who came to the United States in December, 1943, to work in nuclear research on the development of the atomic bomb.

British Intelligence was notified and in January, 1950, Fuchs admitted to the British that he had given the Russians atomic secrets from 1942 to 1949. He stated that while in the United States working on the atomic project, he had passed atomic information to the Russians through a contact known only to him as "Raymond." Fuchs received the maximum sentence of 14 years imprisonment. He is now in East Germany.

As a result of the information furnished by Fuchs, the FBI began the seemingly impossible task of identifying "Raymond." Fuchs' sister, Mrs. Kristel Heineman, Cambridge, Massachusetts, recalled that in January, 1945, a stranger came to their home and asked for Fuchs, who was not there. He left a telephone number in New York for Fuchs to call, and returned the following month. Fuchs seemed to know him and they talked for quite a while. The description of the stranger matched the description of "Raymond" as furnished by Fuchs.

Finally, in May, 1950, the search narrowed to one man, Harry Gold, a chemist at the Philadelphia General Hospital. Gold said he had never been west of the Mississippi River. He gave the FBI agents written permission to search his home in Philadelphia. Behind a bookcase in Gold's home, a map of "Santa Fe, the Capital City" was found. Harry Gold stared at the map, then admitted he was the one to whom Fuchs had given his information.

Gold related for the FBI the paths he had followed during 14 years as a Soviet agent. One of those paths led to David Greenglass, ex-Army sergeant from New York City. Photographs of Greenglass were obtained and shown to Gold, who identified him as the man he contacted at Albuquerque, New Mexico, in June 1945. Gold related that Greenglass gave him information about his work at Los Alamos and Gold turned over the information to his Soviet espionage superior.

Greenglass' sordid part in the espionage plot was arranged by his sister, Ethel Rosenberg, and her husband, Julius, of New York City. Greenglass initially passed information about his work to the Rosenbergs through his wife, Ruth Greenglass. Two months later, Greenglass returned to New York on leave and at Rosenberg's request, he made a number of sketches of a flat-type lens mold being used in atomic experiments. Greenglass was arranged for Ruth Greenglass to go to Albuquerque to live and told her not to worry about expenses as the money would be a gift from the Russians. Rosenberg conceived a simple recognition device whereby Greenglass would be able to identify any stranger who contacted him for information. He cut the side of an empty Jello box into two notched pieces, retaining one and giving the other to Greenglass.

About this time, Soviet Vice Consul Anatoli Yakovlev contacted Harry Gold in New York and ordered him to go to Albuquerque on an extremely important mission after contacting Fuchs in Santa Fe. Yakovlev furnished Gold with the Albuquerque address of Greenglass and gave him a piece of cardboard cut from a Jello box, his identification, and an envelope containing $500 to be given to Greenglass.

How The U.S. Does Export Jobs

By ELMER ROESSNER "What is all this talk 'exporting jobs'?" demands a reader. "We can export wheat and autos, but how can we export jobs?"

"Exporting jobs" is a popular term for the process of having something made abroad instead of by labor in this country.

American companies asked the Tariff Commission to impose tariffs to restrict the imports. The commission refused.

So Philip Zerner, president of Royal McBeck Corp., one of the largest American manufacturers, said: "While we recognize our responsibility to our American workers, and will make every attempt to fulfill this responsibility in view of the decision of the Tariff Commission we must now give consideration to greater use of our already extensive European manufacturing facilities."

Another HAZARD Meanwhile, Smith-Corona Marchant, Inc., another large maker of business machines, has announced that it will concentrate the production of one of its portables in England.

Victor G. Severin, vice president of the international division of the company, said 60 per cent of the machines would be exported to the United States, and 30 per cent to other nations, leaving 10 per cent for the British market.

These statements, of course, do not mean that the typewriter industry will immediately export most of its jobs. It will appeal the Tariff Commission decision and, if that fails, ask Congress to act. But it has gone on record with its threat to move production abroad.

What is happening to the typewriter industry is happening, in various degrees, to the electronics, the machinery, the automotive and many other industries. Tasks that could have been made jobs for American workers are now increasingly being performed by low-paid workmen abroad.

BRIGHT, BRIEF BUSINESS BULLETINS A new system of restaurants will soon start appearing along the Eastern highways. The fact that there is 106.7 square feet of display space on the sides is being used to promote the sale of an imported panel truck. Tests show good newsprint can be made from the Everglades' saw grass. Du Pont has trademarked the name "Orlon Sayelle" for its acrylic fiber introduced last year as Orlon 21. By the 70's, between 25 and 30 per cent of home-building materials will be synthetics, glass fibers, etc., predicts Doris Stewart, president of the Producers Council.

About 85 per cent of television viewers favor some kind of censorship, according to a survey by Communication & Media Research Services.

Big Klu Hammered Out Yankee Defeat

By ED WILKS
Associated Press Sports Writer

No matter how you spell it, Ted Kluszewski or Kluszewski, he's still Big Klu.

The guy whose arms and bat look like tree trunks walloped home four runs for a 5-3 victory over the New York Yankees Friday night as the Chicago White Sox remained unbeaten at home and took a 1 1/2-game lead in the American League race.

Cleveland moved into second place by defeating Boston 2-0 on the three-hit pitching of Mudcat Grant and relief ace Dick Stigman. Baltimore slipped to third, blowing a 3-1 lead in the ninth for a 4-2 loss at Detroit. Washington's game at Kansas City was rained out.

In the National League, Pittsburgh gained a 1 1/2-game edge over San Francisco, beating the Giants 1-4 in a two-run 12th inning capped by Bob Clemente's two-out single. St. Louis defeated Cincinnati 6-1, and Philadelphia whopped Los Angeles 6-3. Milwaukee's game with the Chicago Cubs was postponed because of fog.

Kluszewski brought the White Sox from behind with his first home run of the season, a two-run shot off loser Whitey Ford (1-2) in the third inning. Then he clinched their ninth straight success at Comiskey Park with a bases loaded single in a three-run eighth off reliever Ryne Duren.

The Yankees, out-hitting Chicago 10-6, chased winner Early Wynn (2-1) in the ninth, when Mickey Mantle hit a two-run homer. Reliever Turk Lown finally nailed Wynn's 273rd career victory by fanning Bill Skowron with two men on base.

The Indians broke through against Bill Monbouquette (3-3) after being shut out on one hit for six innings. Jimmy Piersall's two-run single did it in the seventh, after a single by Harvey Kuenn, a double by Tito Francona and an intentional walk to Vic Power loaded the bases. Power loaded the bases, Stigman saved it by striking out Don Buddin and pinch-hitter Ray Boone and getting Frank Malzone on a fly with the bases loaded in the eighth. The southpaw rookie then struck out two in the ninth as the Red Sox went down to their sixth straight loss.

The Tigers, held to four hits, got their three in the ninth after singles by Norm Cash and Frank Bolling chased reliever Hoyt Wilhelm. Then Milt Pappas (2-4) lost 4 without allowing a hit. Two walks, pinch-hitter Charlie Maxson's sacrifice fly and an error by Walt Droppa did it. Tom Morgan (3-0) was the winner in relief of Don Mossi.

Coach Hickey Speaks Here

Carolina Alumni Told Of Outlook

University of North Carolina football coach Jim Hickey came to Greenville last night, and spoke to a group of Carolina alumni in a dinner meeting.

Hickey, successor to the late Jim Tatum as the head grid mgn-tor at the University, told his assembled audience of university alumni that "We think there are many things happening in other schools, but everything that has happened at North Carolina has been good."

In speaking of the prospects for his team's success in the coming season, Hickey said, "There isn't any sign of great football team at North Carolina — but nobody else in the conference will have one either."

Hickey said that as far as returns for the next year's squad was concerned, the Tar Heels were in good shape. The UNC head mentor indicated that his team was in particularly good shape in the tackle position, and at ends.

Hickey further commenting on his prospects for the coming season, and this time talking about the backfield situation, told his audience that the reason the Carolina football team would not be great is "because there is no great back—and no sign of one."

"However," continued Hickey, "we do have six tough kinds in the backfield, but none of them will go for the long run."

In summing up, Hickey told the meeting, "If the team is as tough as we hope it will be, it will be a winning team."

Following the talk by Hickey, the group was shown movies of the 1959 Duke-Carolina game, in which the Tar Heels emerged as the winner, 50-0.

Welborn Named Assistant Football Coach At ECC

Odell Welborn has been named assistant football coach at East Carolina College joining the staff of Head Coach Jack Boone as a replacement for George Tucker who moves to Elon College as head football coach.

The announcement of Welborn's appointment came from Dr. N. M. Jorgensen, director of athletics at East Carolina.

Welborn, a 1956 graduate of Elon with the A. B. degree, played college football at Elon, interrupted his college career to play and coach football at Lackland (Texas) Air Force Base from 1950 to 1955, and then returned to Elon where he coached freshman football squads in 1956 and 1957. He received the M. A. degree in Physical Education from the University of North Carolina in 1958.

Welborn came to Greenville serving as assistant to Football Coach Bud Phillips of the Junius H. Rose high school teams for the past three years. He has been coach the Rose High School track and wrestling teams, also.

His wife is the former Miss Rachel Poole of Thomasville.

Dr. Jorgensen said he felt that East Carolina was fortunate to have a man of the experience and ability to become an addition to the football coaching staff.

Tucker, ECC alumnus and football luminary during his playing days here, earlier this week accepted the head coaching position at Elon. His coaching experience includes a high school position at Lancaster, S. C., Wingate Junior College where his teams were known for their performance in junior college athletics, and at Davidson College where he was assistant to Head Coach Bill Dole and freshman football coach.

Elliott May Have To Run 4-Minute Mile

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Herb Elliott figures he's about ready to run another four-minute mile, and he might have to do it to win his next race.

The scrawny Australian—a runaway winner in the 1,500 meters at the Coliseum relays Friday night—meets America's dashing Dyrrol Burleson for the first time next Saturday in the California relays at Modesto. Burleson, an Oregon sophomore, ran a 3:58.6 mile, the fastest ever by an American, on April 23.

Elliott, who holds the world record of 3:36.0 in the 1,500, won with a 3:45.4 Friday night after overtaking Laszlo Tabori in the final lap. Tabori, the Hungarian refugee, finished second in 3:46.5.

Dallas Long of USC took the shot put with a throw of 63 feet, 5 1/2 inches. This surpassed Parry O'Brien's recognized world record of 63.4, but was more than a foot off Long's best effort and well below Bill Nieder's pending world record of 65-7.

O'Brien dropped out of the event earlier this week because of sinusitis and the ailing Nieder stepped out before the event. Dave Davis of the Los Angeles Striders turned up missing not only from the relays but from town. Word reached the Coliseum during the meet that Davis was in Omaha, Neb., en route to visit an uncle in York, Pa. His father said Dave would continue his training there.

Elliott had said he wasn't going to kill himself here and he didn't change his mind. Whereas he customarily takes command after the second lap or so, he let Tabori set up the pace until nearly two-thirds of the way through the final lap, then took over with ease.

"I had nothing left at the finish," Elliott said. Despite this admission that he hasn't yet achieved his best form, Elliott said he is improving and "should be ready for a four-minute mile soon."

"My muscles are in shape," he said. "It's the heart and lungs that get out of shape and leave you short on wind."

The crowd of 31,566 saw no records broken but there were some surprises.

Lee Calhoun scored an upset in the 110-meter high hurdles with a hair-breadth victory over Hayes Jones. Both were timed in 14.1.

New Mexico's Dick Howard pressed Glenn Davis in the 400-meter hurdles but Davis won in 51 flat, beating Howard by a tenth of a second.

Bobby Morrow, a gold medal winner in both the 100 and 200-meter events in the last Olympics, and pulled a muscle before the 100 and did not compete. Dave Sime, Morrow's most formidable rival four years ago, took the event in 10.4 on a slow grass track.

Marr Is Looking Back At Snead — With Concern

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va. (AP)—Dave Marr of Houston led the field today halfway through the Sam Snead Golf Festival. But he was worried about the tournament's namesake, five strokes back.

"You have to figure Snead is going to come up with one of those hot rounds of his," said the 26-year-old Marr. "You know he isn't shooting his golf with scores of 70 and 69."

Last year, Snead played the last two rounds in 59 and 63 for his fifth victory in the dozen tournaments at his home base.

His 139 total going into today's third round put him 11th. Marr leads with 134 on two straight 67s.

Marr has a two-stroke edge over Gary Nixon, the resident pro, and Babe Lichardus of Grossinger, N.Y.

Nixon has had rounds of 67-69. Lichardus shot 66 and 70.

Gardner Dickinson, the first round leader with 65, fell into a three-way tie for fourth place by slipping to a 72.

Pepsis Win By 19-2 Margin

In Little League play yesterday afternoon, Pepsi-Cola emerged as the victors over Greenville Tobacco Company by a score of 19-2.

Johnson, Pepsi second baseman, had four hits out of five trips to the plate to lead his team with the stick.

The big man for the losing Greenville Tobacco Company team was Richardson who slapped a booming double in the fifth inning.

Mrs. Brown said the school took part in a city-wide grouping study, which was recently presented to the city teachers, administration and guests from the college. During her talk she reviewed the schedule and curriculum for the younger group, illustrating her explanation with "All About Us," a book used at the school. Arts and crafts made by the children were also displayed.

A Close Association With Armed Forces

By ALVIN TAYLOR
Reflector City Editor

If an industry with an annual payroll in excess of $400,000 were established in Greenville it would be considered a major catch in the city's industrial hunt.

Yet persons connected with the armed forces living in and near Greenville receive at least that much—and probably considerably more—each year.

This is true in a county without a single army, air force, navy or marine base.

Actually $399,000 is paid out annually in salaries and subsistence to personnel of the Air-ROTC unit at East Carolina College, the local National Guard units and the Army Reserve units, figures furnished by the three organizations show.

Thus on this Armed Forces Day, Pitt County finds that service personnel are very much a part of the local scene.

The figure for those three units lacks a lot of showing the full amount of money which the armed forces puts in circulation in this county.

Three career guidance counselors representing the army and the air force, make their homes in Greenville and draw full service pay. There is an active naval reserve and other such units in the city. And there is another National Guard unit in Farmville.

So the amount paid to military personnel in Pitt County should run well over $400,000.

ROTC Unit

At East Carolina College, Air-ROTC officials estimate that the payroll of full time personnel and the advanced cadets runs $6,000 monthly or $72,000 yearly.

There are four air force officers and four airmen assigned to the local unit. One hundred and twenty-five students are now members of the unit.

Lt. Col. Norman F. Merritt, Jr., Capt. Vance M. Lockamy, Jr., and Capt. Robert W. Vining serve as professors of air science and tactics.

Batteries A and B of the National Guard's 4th Howitzer Bn., 113th Field Artillery are authorized two administrative supply technicians. One is actually assigned at present. He is M-Sgt. Mayo Allen of Battery A.

Sgt. Allen said the two batteries now have 168 members and he estimated the annual payroll of the two at $90,000 per year.

The XII U.S. Army Corps Reserve Area Command is located in its new building at the airport. Officials there reported the payroll for full-time military personnel is approximately $45,600 annually. Payroll for full-time civilian employees is estimated at $29,000. Pay for reservists is estimated at $163,000 annually.

Major Frank E. Strider is sub-sector commander assigned to the local headquarters.

There are three armed forces career counselors who live in Greenville and work out of the local post office. Representing the army are M-Sgt. John C. Holler and Sgt. Arthur Hyatt.

The air force representative here is Sgt. Jimmy Skipper.

Armed Forces Day Proclaimed

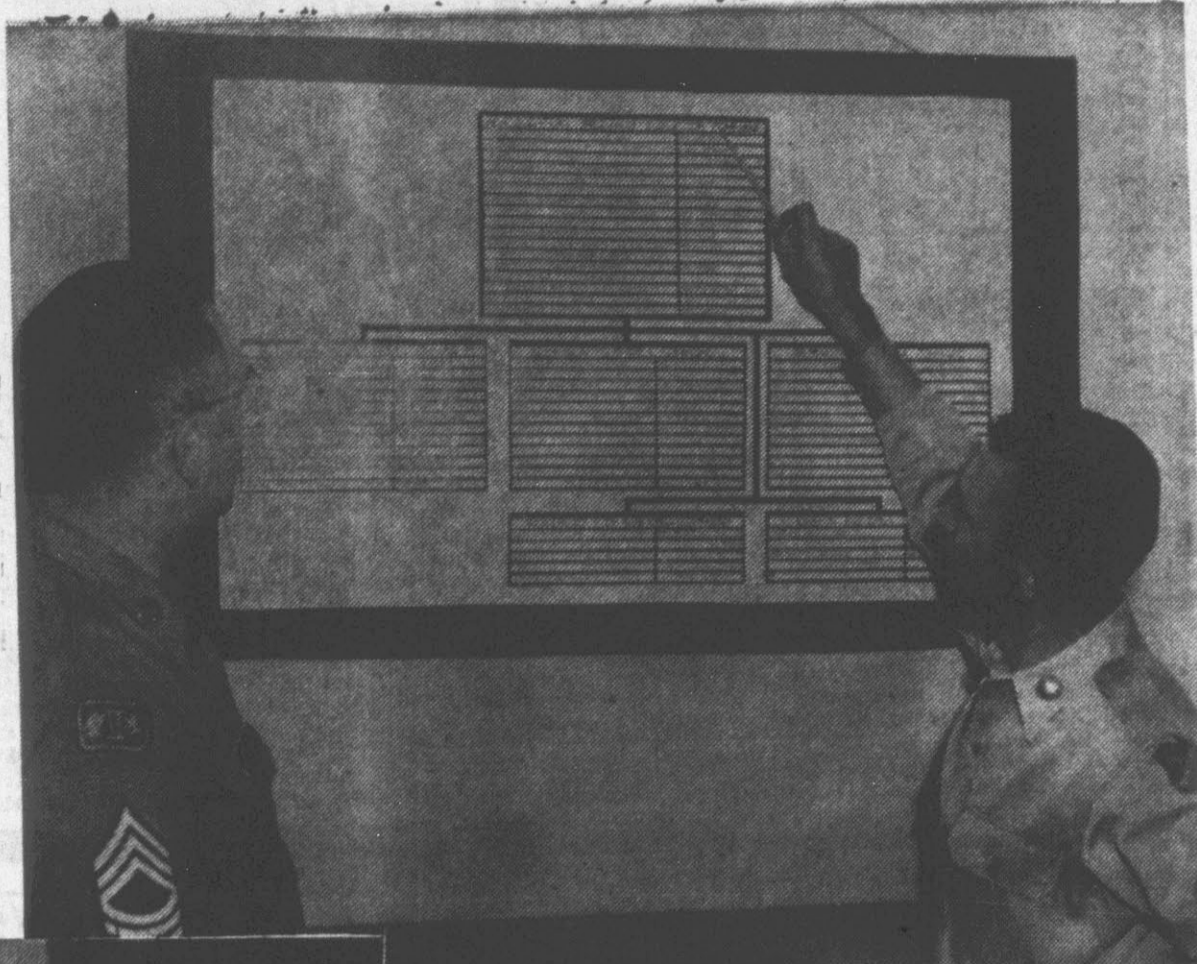

And so Pitt Countians have a personal interest as they observe Armed Forces Day which was officially proclaimed by Gov. Luther H. Hodges for today.

The governor's proclamation says the slogan for the day is "Power for Peace".

"America's armed forces are engaged in the monumental undertakings which exemplify our free way of life and our sincere desire to foster peace and understanding among all the peoples of the world," the governor said.

"One of our greatest weapons in this world-wide struggle is the dedication of the members of our armed forces to the fundamental principles which form the basis of our great American heritage. The effectiveness of this weapon, however, depends to a large extent upon the degree of support derived from the American people. For this reason, it is vitally important that our people endeavor to bring about a closer association between themselves and the armed forces."

That close association is a part of the local way of life.

Books & Stuff

By DR. ED HIRSHBERG

Three weeks ago we wrote in The Column a review of Ovid Pierce's new novel, ON A LONESOME PORCH. To our knowledge it was the first review to be published, since publication date everywhere else except Greenville was May 13. Here, in our reviewer, official date of its coming out was April 30, to coincide with "Ovid Pierce Day" and the big Women's Club launching luncheon.

Our review was extremely favorable—we told you we thought it "a lovely book," and went into some detail as to why we felt that way. Now, we're glad to say, our opinion has been substantiated in many other reviews throughout the land. In last week's papers, immediately following the official publication date, glowing comments were written in a practically universal acknowledgment that ON A LONESOME PORCH is a beautiful novel of interest and importance.

These reviews appeared in such widely-scattered cities as Houston, Tex., Bridgeport, Conn., and Raleigh, N. C., as well as Norfolk, Va. We imagine they will continue to be written—even the Book-of-the-Month Club News had a high recommendation for it, though Mr. Pierce's book is not one of its choices—and we think the Club could have done a lot worse. Again, congratulations and felicitations to the author of ON A LONESOME PORCH for the national recognition his book is now receiving—and you can still buy a copy of it at any local book emporium, including the college bookstore and even a drugstore or two.

Reading List
We suggest for immediate and thorough study at the Summit Conference now going on—or breaking up, as the case may be—the following reading matter: ON THE BEACH, by Nevil Shute, which recently came out as a movie—about what happens after the last H-bomb has fallen to the few people who are left; FALL-OUT, edited by John Fowler, a new book about the actual facts of the dangers of super-bombs, strontium 90 and the like; and "What Do We Do When We Are Wrong?" an editorial by Norman Cousins in the May 21 Saturday

Review, concerning the fateful gangsters into which recent American ineptitude in military and diplomatic matters is leading us.

On a Professor
Just published in a new book about a former Harvard English professor, COPE OF HARVARD, by J. Donald Adams. It's an anthology of impressions of Charles Townsend Copeland by many of the famous men who took his courses, written as an intimate biography. Such later authors look English Composition from him as T. S. Eliot, J. P. Marquand, John Dos Passos and Van Wyck Brooks, to mention just a sampling. One of his customs was to read Dickens' "The Christmas Carol" to a group of freshmen on the last night before the start of the Xmas holidays. We were lucky enough to be among those freshmen, and even though Charles Copeland had already retired by the time we got to hear him, we were so impressed that his reading of "The Carol" still remains as one of the memorable impressions of our undergraduate years.

Today's Review
A newcomer to The Column—another Faculty Wife—gives us her impressions of a new book about an old subject. . . .

THE BIGAMOUS DUCHESS, by Muriel Elwood. Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Company, Inc. 1960.
This is a romantic biography of Elizabeth Chudleigh, Duchess of Kingston, who lived during the 18th century in London, with its lavish and intriguing court life. It is a story of a young English girl, who uses her poise, beauty, and wit to gain the favor of important people of the English nobility. She becomes one of the most talked-about women of the day, when one of her past misdeeds causes her to become involved in a scandal that threatens her complete ruin.

Although Elizabeth Chudleigh should be condemned for the way she fulfills her ambition, the reader will find himself in sympathy with the vigorous Duchess. The author has managed to keep the reader in suspense as to her fate, and this was the only thing that prevented this reviewer from throwing the book down in disgust. Apparently, it is supposed to be a historical novel. However, if one would like to make a comparison between a rich, home-made cake representing a really good historical novel, and a cake mix representing a watered-down historical novel, then this reviewer would say THE BIGAMOUS DUCHESS would fall in the category of the cake-mix.

The author manages to scatter a few historical facts hither and yon throughout the book, and fills the rest of the pages with a hodge-podge of bedroom scenes. The book might be satisfactory to some, for quick, light reading, but if a person cherishes the time spent in reading, using it to its best advantage, then I would consider THE BIGAMOUS DUCHESS a waste of time.

VAN WYCK MASON'S newest thriller Secret Mission to Bangkok

WHAT HAPPENED
"All we need now to make this plane trip complete," Hugh North told himself, "are the four Marx Brothers chasing the stewardess up and down the aisle."
But the business on which Hugh North was traveling to Bangkok under the name of "Charles Boyden" did not allow his mind to dwell on comedy for a minute. As a top agent of the U.S. Army's Intelligence Division, G-2, he had been detailed to guard the life and identity of another

CHAPTER 2

When Hugh North had taken over his current assignment in Manila he had hoped to strike up a conversation (with luck an acquaintance) with Dr. Bracht before the plane reached Hong Kong.

In this he had failed miserably; his few attempts to start even the most casual fellow-traveler chat had been brusquely rejected by the space scientist.

Then, after the brief stop-over at Hong Kong, any chance he might have had to break down Bracht's cold reserve had gone glimmering. That was when the Tiger, Tiger! Company had come bustling, chatting, laughing, shrieking, aboard the Thai Airlines plane.

The Tiger, Tiger! company, all who understood English were immediately informed as to the supercilious to end all supercilious to be filmed under the direction of the great Anton Carrs himself.

The company had been marooned for several days in Hong Kong by a quirk of Carrs's renowned temperament; the director for reasons known only to himself had refused to move on to Siam on schedule. But now the dark mood was broken, the Tiger, Tiger! company was on its way, and move over, everybody—make way for the gods and goddesses of the silver screen!

If Hans Bracht had been in a shell before that, he was down in that shell's cyclone cellar now.

The G-2 colonel traveling as "Charles Boyden" had barely gotten his wits about him when the aisle past him came a man in a wrinkled linen suit, the man identified by the passenger list as Georges Marchet of Cholon, South Vietnam.

North had marked Marchet well, as he had marked all the people boarding the plane at Hong Kong. He was the obvious French planter, rice or rubber, with the indochina planter's gaunt, the malaria-yellowed complexion, the too-bright eyes that bespoke a resort to drugs.

When North had first scanned Marchet he had been struck by the thought that the man was perhaps a bit too obviously the French planter in Indochina, on the face of it. It was almost as though he had dressed for the part and acted a role down to the finest nuance, the dirty-nailed, frayed-collared look of a man who had succumbed to dope in the heat and the loneliness.

And if he was acting—ahh, North had sighed, any of the passengers might be acting. Any of them could be a Red agent, a Commie killer.

As Marchet walked past him on his way forward, North moved imperceptibly. When the Frenchman stopped beside Bracht's seat the G-2 colonel's hand was on the snub-nosed '38 he wore at his armpit.

It would be unusual for a Red agent to walk up and murder a man so deliberately and amateurishly, but one could never be sure in this business. Let Marchet make one move toward any of his pockets and the '38 would be out and ready to speak.

Georges Marchet did not reach for a weapon. Instead, he put a hand on the back of the scientist's seat and leaned down toward the missile expert.

"Your pardon, monsieur," the Frenchman said—seemed to bellow—in heavily accented English, "but do I not recognize you as one I knew well in Indochina during the war?"

"Oh-oh," Hugh said inwardly. He saw Bracht jerk erect in his seat as he swung his face about to meet Marchet's stare.

The physicist's face was the color of putty, his jaw sagged, and fear stared out of his dark eyes behind the spectacles. Still, he made an awkward effort to cling to his incognito once the shock of Marchet's greeting faded.

"You must be mistaken," he managed. "I don't know you, sir. My names Barrows—Henry Barrows."

The planter shook his head, his brilliant eyes pinned on the man in the seat. "I did not know you by that name," he said. "But you used many names, did you not? It has been a long time and my memory is not what it once was, but let me think what you told me your name was, mon ami."

The man in the wrinkles, white suit brushed a long hand down the side of his face uncertainly. "Let me think—ah yes, I remember now. You told me you were—"

Hugh North was out of his seat by that time and across the aisle, moving around Marchet and getting halfway between the Frenchman and the scientist as the planter bent closer, recognition lighting his face. At Hugh's interruption, Marchet drew back, his dawning smile fading to be replaced by a frown.

"What is the meaning of this, monsieur?" he demanded with a grasp at dignity that was almost ludicrous in a man so shopworn. "I am conversing with my friend, the good Doctor—"

"This gentleman has told you that you've mistaken him for someone else," North said in low-pitched, penetrating French. "You'll have the kindness to return to your seat quietly, monsieur, and avoid unpleasantness."

Marchet took a backward step, drawing himself up to his full angular height. "What do you mean?" he cried in his native tongue. "Is it a crime to address an old friend, one with whom I have shared wartime adventures? Who are you to interfere here, monsieur?" With which, inconspicuously, the Frenchman put a hand to his face to sneeze.

Hugh North was sure now that Marchet was a drug addict. The planter bore all the signs, the dilated pupils, the sniffs that punctuated his speech, the uncertain facial muscles, and most of all, that sneeze, the almost inevitable telltale sign of a drug addict under stress.

The intelligence colonel had been well taught by experience to work fast with tools at hand. He leaned closer to Marchet, lowered his voice another notch.

"Come, come, Monsieur Marchet," he barely muttered, still in French, "we have been very lenient with you, we of the Intelligence Department. Do not force us to deal with you as a disorderly addict who must be hospitalized, his drugs cut off. Return to your seat at once, sir, and stop annoying this gentleman. Quickly!"

It worked, as North had been almost sure it would. Hugh had no idea what "International Department" would be interested in a seedy, down-at-the-heels planter who was on the smoke or the needle, but he had banked on Marchet's fear of any authority that might threaten his precious drug dreams.

The official air in which the G-2 colonel had couched his warning was enough; Marchet did not tarry to find out just which "International Department" North represented or to offer any denial that he was an addict. The Frenchman gaped at Hugh, his quivering jaw sagging, then turned and blindly scurried down the aisle to his seat near the tail of the plane.

Hugh started across the aisle when there was the touch of a hand at his wrist.

"Sit down," said the greatest ballistics missile genius the world had ever known. "Sit down beside me."

And, as North slid down into the seat, Bracht added in a voice barely above a whisper: "I suppose you're from Security and I told them—but I may need you, after all."

South Carolina Census Reveals Record Growth

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP)—South Carolina's 1960 preliminary census showed 2,364,483 persons, a rise of 11.6 per cent over the 2,117,027 counted in 1950. The increase was the most for any 10-year period since the 1910 count.

Joseph R. Norwood, head of the Census Bureau's regional office, covering the Carolinas and Virginia, emphasized that the figures were preliminary and subject to change, although he said in 99 per cent of the cases they would hold up.

The population in South Carolina's 46 counties rose nearly a quarter of a million persons—247,456. The losses and gains by county reflected a nationwide trend, that of population shifts from rural to industrial areas.
