Unusual Silence From Moscow On Mission, Fate Of Big Sputnik

Official Silence Is In Contrast To Previous Launchings; Something Wrong?

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union maintained an enigmatic and unusual silence today on the mission and fate of its massive new Sputnik. Western tracking stations picked up no trace of the satellite.

A Soviet scientist, Prof. Yevgeny Leonovich Klinov, hinted the seven-ton satellite, whose launching was announced Friday, was unmanned. He said it was designed to study the earth and its environment.

Moscow's official silence was in direct contrast to previous satellite launchings, when Soviet scientists routinely announced how equipment was functioning and the schedule of cities to be passed over.

Western experts speculated that either something went wrong with the new satellite or the Soviets were keeping some spectacular development a secret until its success was assured.

Western scientists especially noted the Soviets seemed in no hurry to answer speculation that the Sputnik might be carrying a man through space. The satellite is large enough to carry an astronaut and perhaps two.

Italy's Communist party newspaper L'Unita reported in a Moscow dispatch that the Sputnik "almost certainly" was unmanned.

Britain's leading satellite-tracking expert, Prof. Bernard Lovell, director of the Jodrell Bank Tracking Station, said, "there is certainly something rather odd about the long Russian silence on the satellite's progress."

He suggested the Sputnik's radio may have broken down or the Soviets might be transmitting on frequencies not used before.

"It may be, of course, that there is some living thing on board—not necessarily a man—and the Russians are saying nothing until they get the satellite safely back to earth," he said.

"If the silence continues, I shall be inclined to believe that something went wrong shortly after the launching," Lovell said.

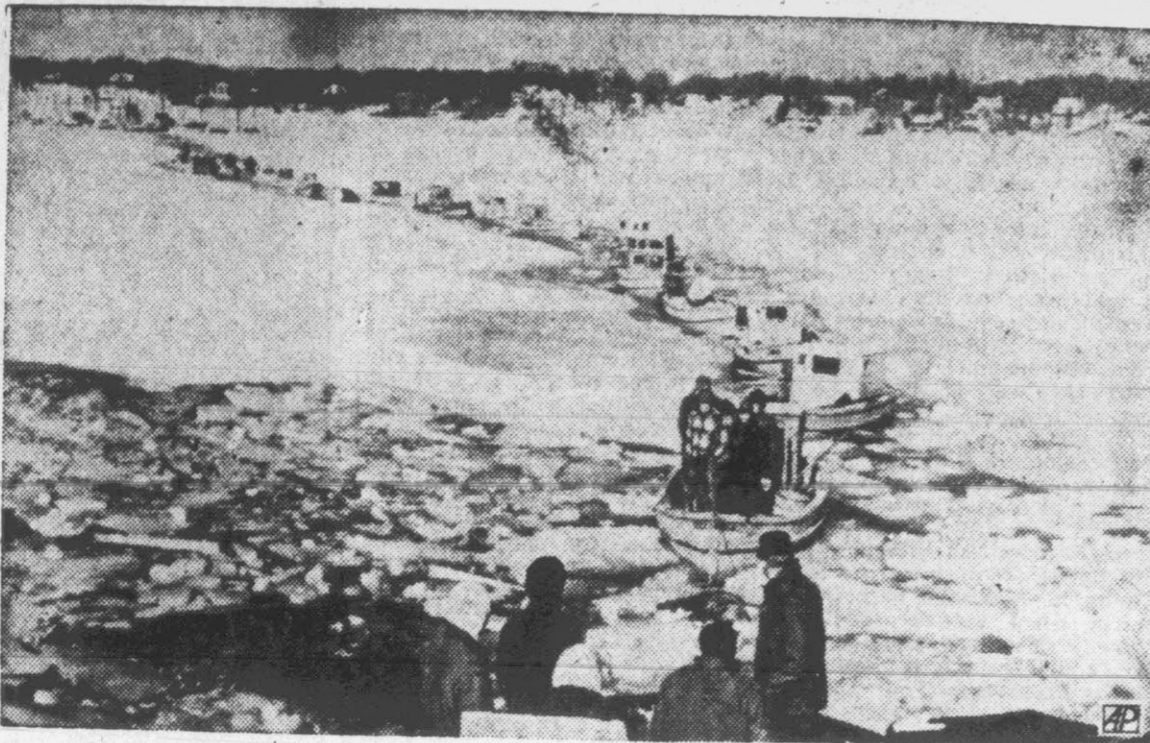

Japanese scientists said they picked up signals being transmitted on frequencies normally used by Soviet satellites but said the signals seemed to be coming from a fixed station and not an orbiting object.

The Soviet press continued to give the Sputnik big propaganda treatment, reporting Soviet and foreign reaction to the launching. But no details of the satellite's progress were given.

Prof. Klinov was quoted by Moscow radio as saying the satellite was designed "to study the earth as a planet and to make a study of its nearest environment, including that of meteoritic dangers," and was in a different category than earlier Soviet Sputniks that took dogs and other animals into space.

A Soviet physicist, Prof. V. Fedynsky, said the Sputnik was shot into an orbit that carried it 203 miles from the earth at its highest point and 138.5 at its lowest. He said it would circle the earth every 89.8 minutes and yield new data on top layers of the earth's atmosphere.

Grimesland Mayor Reveals Long-Brewing Differences

GRIMESLAND — Grimesland Mayor W. Leslie Elks yesterday told the Daily Reflector the circumstances leading to Saturday's firing of Police Chief Jessie Mack Bunting had been "boiling for the last 60 to 90 days."

Other reasons... The mayor said the board had "several other reasons" for Bunting's dismissal but "does not wish to discuss them at this time."

Routine Reports Given To County's Commissioners

Pitt County's Commissioners today were accepting routine reports in an uneventful morning session of the board's February meeting.

Sanford Will Ask N.C. Voters Pass Bond Issue

RALEIGH (AP)—Gov. Sanford told the State Ports Authority today he will ask the General Assembly and the people to approve a $13.5 million bond issue for expansion of state port facilities at Wilmington and Morehead City.

Sanford said he wanted the bonds issued "the best possible way" and that if it will save money to have "the state endorse your note" then "I think you ought to do it that way."

Sanford also urged the ports authority to help in development of Fayetteville as an inland port.

The governor pointed out that a big volume of traffic already is moving up the Cape Fear River to Fayetteville. He noted that the Cumberland County commissioners recently had voted to raise money to acquire land for ports development.

"It's something I hope you will give your determined consideration to," the governor added. He said he had been thinking for years that navigation on the Cape Fear was "a neglected resource."

Sanford, whose home town is Fayetteville, said he hoped to see facilities developed for handling of dry cargo on the river. Most of the traffic that now moves is petroleum products.

Gavin Named For Ambassadorship

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Kennedy has chosen James M. Gavin as U.S. ambassador to Paris, reliable sources report.

Official nomination of the 53-year-old retired Army lieutenant general apparently awaits only the formality of clearance by the French government.

Gavin earned a reputation as a "jumping general" when he made combat jumps into Sicily, Normandy and Holland during World War II as commander of the 82nd Airborne Division.

He was deputy chief of staff for research and development when he retired in March, 1958, after a dispute with top Pentagon officials over the Army's role in the development of missiles.

Six Finalists Discloses NLRB Chairman Choice

WASHINGTON (AP) — Frank W. McCulloch, administrative assistant to Sen. Paul H. Douglas, D-Ill., has been chosen by President Kennedy to be chairman of the National Labor Relations Board.

"It's a terrific challenge and a great honor," McCulloch said when his nomination was announced Saturday night.

McCulloch replaces Boyd Leedom as chairman of the NLRB. Leedom, an Eisenhower appointee, will remain on the board. The appointment by Eisenhower of Arthur Kimball to a place on the board was withdrawn to make room for McCulloch. The chairmanship pays $20,500 a year.

Claim Arson In Mars Hill Fires

MARS HILL, N.C. (AP)—Fires broke out almost simultaneously in three buildings at Mars Hill College Sunday night. Authorities said someone set them deliberately.

A former student was being held today for investigation. Officials estimated the damage to the three structures at $75,000.

Madison County Sheriff E. Y. Ponder said the fires which destroyed the old college auditorium and did minor damage to a men's dormitory and another building were unquestionably the work of an arsonist.

The first broke out in a corner of the 57-year-old brick and wooden auditorium, and left only portions of the outside brick walls remaining. The auditorium loss was estimated at between $35,000 and $50,000.

While 40 firemen from four towns were struggling with this blaze, fires started in the basement of nearby Spillman men's dormitory, a wooden structure, and in the Owen Building. Firemen said these two apparently had been intentionally set in piles of rags. Both were quickly put out and damage was small.

Later authorities said all three had been set.

The old auditorium was scheduled to be replaced by the Robert Lee Moore Memorial Auditorium now under construction at the Baptist junior college.

Six Finalists

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP)—Six District I finalists for Morehead scholarships awards have been named by the University of North Carolina's Morehead Foundation.

The six were picked Jan. 26 from 24 candidates representing 21 eastern counties.

They will appear with 36 others already chosen when the Central Scholarship Committee meets Feb. 24-25 at Chapel Hill. Those picked by the committee will be interviewed by foundation trustees March 6-7 for final awards.

The six are John Hugh Bryan of La Grange, Alan Philip Gaudin of Plymouth, Charles Robertson Hassell Jr. of Beaufort, Charles David Johnston III of Elizabeth City, Jimmy Arlyn Rogerson of Edenton and William Wirt Walker Jr. of Fountain.

Gold-Saving Proposals Of President Given Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Kennedy today asked Congress to sharply reduce the amount of foreign goods which American tourists can bring back to the United States without paying customs duties.

Kennedy proposed that the present $500 maximum be slashed to $100 in order to discourage tourists from buying costly souvenirs with dollars which foreigners could use to purchase American goods.

This was the most dramatic recommendation made by Kennedy in a 4,500-word special message on the gold problem which Kennedy said "justifies concern but not panic or alarm." While the President had been expected to make a request of this sort, some were surprised by the extent of the proposed cut in the customs exemption.

The move was certain to cause concern in some countries, particularly Canada which entertains more American tourists than any other nation but which normally doesn't buy U.S. gold.

Most other major proposals represented attempts to place new emphasis on policies adopted earlier by the Eisenhower administration. For example, Kennedy promised new efforts to expand exports, attract foreign tourists, limit military spending abroad and channel foreign-aid dollars to American businessmen.

One new idea: that Congress permit banks to pay foreign governments and central banks a higher rate of interest than Americans receive on savings accounts. The maximum rate now is three per cent.

Kennedy said action along this line "would enable American banks to make a maximum competitive effort to attract and hold dollar balances which might otherwise be converted into gold."

The effect could be significant since the foreign deposits involved total about $3 billion. Kennedy also said the United States will seek an international review of the free world's monetary system, with the aim of ironing out some kinks. He hinted at possible tax law changes later to discourage some kinds of private American investment in Europe.

Kennedy said there is time to deal with the gold drain "calmly and deliberately" and declared it can be stemmed without erecting trade barriers or hamstringing military and foreign aid programs. He said the first requirement "is to take all possible steps to insure the effective performance of our own economic system."

He described the proposals outlined in his message as supplementary to that aim but said: "They are not for that reason any less important or less urgent."

He promised vigorous action where he has power to act and urged "early consideration and approval" of those measures which are subject to the will of Congress.

The President noted that the gold dollar stems largely from the fact that foreigners collect more than this country collects from them — $3.8 billion more in 1960.

This represents the deficit in the U.S. balance of international payments and means foreigners are receiving extra dollars which they may use to buy U.S. gold.

Their gold purchases have exceeded $2 billion in the past six months and the U.S. bullion supply, at $17.4 billion, is at the lowest level since 1939.

"This loss of gold is naturally important to us," Kennedy said, "but it also concerns the whole free world. For we are the principal banker of the free world and any potential weakness in our dollar spells trouble, not only for us but also for our friends and allies who rely on the dollar to finance a substantial portion of their trade."

The President pledged anew that the price of gold will remain $35 an ounce and said all American gold will be available to meet foreign demand, even though $11.5 billion legally is set aside as backing for part of the domestic money supply.

Officials said Kennedy will not ask Congress to reduce or eliminate this gold reserve requirement. They said he will rely instead on the Federal Reserve Board's present authority to suspend the requirement if it sees fit.

These same officials said a Customs Bureau survey indicates that American tourists bring home each year $200 million to $300 million of foreign goods free of duty. Some of the goods would remain duty free under the $100 exemption Kennedy is proposing.

Duties vary on different items having the same price tags.

At present, the tourist who is gone 12 days can bring back $500 in goods without paying duty. The limit is $200 for those who are gone more than 48 hours but less than 12 days.

Kennedy would impose the $100 limit on all tourists. This was the ceiling before 1948, when it was increased to encourage tourist spending abroad at a time when the rest of the world was short of dollars.

Board OKs Adding To School Land Property Will Provide For Possible Future Needs Of Ayden High School

By PATRICIA MOORE Reflector Staff Writer

Approval of acquisition of additional land for the Ayden High School was given today by the Pitt County Board of Education.

The board was notified by H. W. Gooding that the Ayden school committee recommended acquisition of the George Prescott property, located on Lee Street and adjoining the high school property. The land is available to the school board at $7,500.

The property would provide for any possible expansion in the future, Gooding said in a letter to the county board. The motion stipulated that details are to be worked out.

In another action, which affected the Grifton High School, board members approved a request for $15,000 to complete additions to the school, including two new classrooms and toilet and fountain fixtures.

Originally, the board had agreed that $12,000 would cover costs of the construction work. Sam Nelson, chairman of the Grifton board, notified Pitt County Board of Education members that the two completed classrooms at Grifton High School were satisfactory.

Nelson said the toilets, to be re-located at the end of the new four rooms, probably would be adequate for the remainder of the building when it is needed.

Arthur District

Early in the meeting, the board reviewed a request from the Winterville School Board that it look into the possibility of legislation which would annex the Arthur district between Winterville and Farmville. The Arthur school building is at present unoccupied, and its former students attend Farmville and Winterville schools.

Lengthy discussion ensued on the three days of school time lost on Jan. 26, Jan. 27 and Feb. 3, due to weather conditions. In view of the fact that more bad weather could cause further loss of time, the board said time could be made up during good weather, at the discretion of Superintendent D. H. Conley. Otherwise, the board decided to postpone action until after March 15 and conduct a check with principals and faculty on their ideas regarding the lost time, which must be made up.

The board went on record as commending those who have participated in the Pitt County bookmobile drive.

In other business, the board decided to let home economics teachers who attend a summer camp for one week in June report for work one week late in August, and certify that they attended the camp. The matter arose when the board was told that the teachers report for camp one week after school closes, while their contract expires May 31. Since the contracts begin August 1, they would be allowed to report to school August 7 if attending the camp under required conditions.

The board gave its approval to a claim of John T. Jones of Box 406, Grifton, for $100.43 damages resulting from a school bus accident. The accident occurred January 20 when the bus driver, passing Jones' parked car along Road No. 1910, misjudged slightly and sand caused the bus to slip a few inches, brushing lightly the left side of the parked car, according to the claim.

Members signed a certificate of merit for Joseph R. Cox, school bookroom manager, in appreciation for his services through the years to the schools of Pitt County.

The board also reviewed a breakdown of costs of the Pitt County Garage and valuations and amounts of insurance policies of Pitt County school units. Some of the property in the county system was recently raised in value, at no additional cost.

An insurance program which broadened coverage of school buildings and lowered the rate of cost was approved by the board at its December meeting.

Hold Woman On Murder Charges

FARMVILLE — A Portsmouth, Va. woman is being held in Pitt County jail on a charge of murdering her husband while the two were visiting here this weekend.

Sheriff Ruel W. Tyson identified the woman as Mrs. Mary Lee Thompkins, 32, Negro, of Rt. 3, Box 748, Portsmouth. Dead as a result of the Saturday night shooting is Amos Thompkins, 33-year-old Negro of the same address.

The shooting occurred at Skip Prizzelle's place just north of Farmville on the Bruce Highway, Sheriff Tyson reported.

Thompkins, shot with a 22 calibre pistol, was brought to Pitt Memorial Hospital but was pronounced dead on arrival.

Coroner Withers Harvey reported the Thompkins was shot twice in the upper abdomen and apparently died from internal bleeding.

A preliminary hearing for Mrs. Thompkins is scheduled before Magistrate Luther Moore this afternoon. Coroner Harvey said probably no inquest will be held.

Sheriff Tyson said investigation showed the Thompkins couple had come to Farmville to bring Jessie Williams, a Farmville native now living in Portsmouth, for a visit. Traveling with them were Mrs. Ruby Johnson, 23-year-old Negro of Rt. 3, Portsmouth, and her brother, John Taylor, 21-year-old Negro of Rt. 3, Box 749, Portsmouth.

Williams, Taylor and Mrs. Johnson were put under $200 bond as material witnesses in the case since they live in another state.

There was evidence that the Thompkins couple had been drinking since they left Portsmouth and it was also reported that they had been arguing during the trip, the sheriff said.

Witnesses said Mrs. Thompkins went outside to the car between 12:30 and 1. The two argued and tussled and Thompkins was shot, investigation showed.

Sheriff Tyson said Mrs. Thompkins admitted the shooting. The pistol was carried by Mrs. Thompkins in an oversized handbag, he reported.

Thompkins was a truck driver for a construction firm. It was the couple's first trip to Farmville, investigators said.

Investigating the shooting along with the Sheriff's Department was the Farmville Police Department.

Four Persons Injured As Two Cars Crash Head-On Saturday

Four persons were injured and heavy damage resulted in the head-on collision of two cars on the U.S. 264 by-pass near the intersection of Evans St. extension Saturday night.

Officers estimated about $1,000 damage was done to each of the two vehicles. Drivers of the cars were identified by P.I. R. E. Tayloe of Grifton, as Thomas Earl Haddock, 18, Route 2, Ayden, and Louis Stuart Picklen, 16, of Route 2, Ayden Highway, Greenville.

The Haddock car was stopped across the east-bound traffic lane, the patrolman said, blocking the south side of the highway.

According to officers, Haddock received a fractured left leg and multiple cuts, from the collision, while the Picklen vehicle was headed west on the by-pass. The officer noted the collision occurred about 400 feet west of the Evans St. intersection, and said the Picklen vehicle traveled 67 feet from the point of impact, coming to rest on the right-hand shoulder of the road, headed east.

A passenger in the Picklen car, Alice Mae Cannon, 18, of 107 Parkis Ave., received cuts and bruises and possible chest injuries, officials said.

Wardrobe Refreshed With Nip & Tuck Here & There

By JEAN SPRAIN WILSON
AP Fashion Writer

No news is good news in the fashion forecast for spring.

That loose, relaxed fit, those bare arms and collarless necks, suit and coat costumes, skirt-pants . . . those style trends which were set in '60 are just beginning to jell now.

Thus America's husbands can thank their lucky pocketbooks. For, with a bit of nipping and tucking here and there a woman can keep last year's wardrobe from showing its age.

A survey of New York couture houses indicate these style trends for spring. Check them off with your own attire and see how you fare.

THE SHAPE . . . You figure subtly in what the designers call a bottle-shape. The line in dresses and short-jacketed suits dips gently at the waistline, becomes fuller at the hips and tapers at the knee length hem.

Nothing clings. The drape of fabric takes shape on you. Waistlines are either a little higher or a bit lower than your natural spot. Skirts tuck softly at the waist in front. Blouses fit with ease or puff a bit at bellines. Backs are straight. Jacket and coat backs may dip a little.

SEASON FOR BREEZES . . . Dresses, and coats, too, are detailed with aereated sleeves and necklines. Wide sleeves, set in, or rone at all, collar-bone showing collarless necklines are a part of '61 detailing too. Bare compromise are ring or draw-string necklines.

SIDE DETAILING . . . Button at the shoulder, marching down the side, side piping, side pleats, or tucks are decorative touches on this and next spring's fashions.

THE CUT . . . The way patterns are laid on the material determines design in many instances. Plaids and stripes work together at the yoke and sleeve insets for interesting effects. Bias cut skirts, capes and jackets with figure draping interest are other couture tricks for spring.

BELTS . . . Draw strings, leather shoestring ties, or soft-wide lap-over sashes are a part of the easy-look fashion.

YOUNG IN HEART . . . Designers who do depart occasionally from collarlessness, such as Norman Norell, embrace the peter pan collar in varying widths, or those midly necklines. These with crisp, pleated or slightly flared, gored skirt are a part of '61's so-called Little Girl look.

COLOR . . . The shape may be the same in '61 (nearly) but the hue will be different. Purple bows out to pink, any kind of pink from deep raspberry to delicate baby tints.

Big prints in the boldest color combinations ever will be everywhere there's a fashionable woman . . . on overblouses, with slim plain skirts . . . as cocktail dresses, with florals outlined with sequines . . . and in coat and dresses.

Auxiliary To Present Program At Caswell Training School

In cooperation with the recreation commission of Caswell Training School, the Ladies Auxiliary to the Veterans of Foreign Wars will give a dance for a group of the boys and girls there on Feb. 22.

Mrs. J. A. Joyner, Jr. heads the committee which is developing the plans for the affair. Tentative arrangements were presented to the members of the auxiliary Thursday evening at its meeting held in the home of Mrs. Malcolm C. Williams.

As a yearly project, the members favored the adoption of a girl at Caswell. In this project, the group will remember the child on special occasions, visit her, and provide needed supplies. After years in an institution, the group was reminded that family connections often lessens. Through the adoption plan, it is hoped that groups can aid in giving each child a feeling that he has not been forgotten.

Mrs. Woodrow Boyd, chairman of the senior citizens committee, presented the plans for a visit to the Pitt County Home on Feb. 12. Carrying out the Valentine Motif, the members will serve refreshments to the inmates.

Several notes were read from the children in the North Carolina cottage at the VFW National Home expressing their appreciation for gifts received at Christmas time. The children are also remembered on their birthdays and other occasions. A box of homemade cookies and candies for the children was authorized. Mrs. E. L. Bullock serves as chairman of the VFW National Home committee.

The annual supper honoring the Gold Star mothers and fathers of Pitt County has been scheduled for March, according to Mrs. Ruth Garner, chairman of the Gold Star committee.

Since the last meeting of the auxiliary, Mrs. Kenneth Brown, Americanism committee chairman, reported that several street and classroom flags have been sold. The group voted to give three classroom flags to the Greenville Educable Mentally Retarded School.

Mrs. Ralph Bailey reported on the VFW Second District meeting held in Washington recently. In addition to Mrs. Bailey, others attending the meeting were Mesdames Kenneth Brown, J. A. Joyner, Jr., C. B. West, Jr., H. L. Vincent.

In cooperation with the recent overseas relief drive, Mrs. C. B. West, Jr., president and presiding officer, stated that many articles of clothing were contributed by the auxiliary. Mrs. West also read the official communications from the Department of North Carolina.

Mrs. L. E. Meeks won the attendance prize.

During the social hour, refreshments were served by Mrs. Williams and Mrs. Garner, hostesses of the evening.

Launder Petticoat

One good way to launder a crinoline petticoat is to dip it up and down in warm soap or detergent suds in the bathtub, and then rinse it under the shower. Without wringing, hang it by the waistband to dry using a skirt hanger or spring-type clothespins—or drape it over an open umbrella in the tub.

If you like a stiff, bouffant effect, apply full strength plastic starch to the petticoat when dry.

Housewives Among Large Calory-Spenders In Nation

By ALTON BLAKESLEE
AP Science Writer

Housewives are among the nation's biggest spenders — of calories.

Her daily tasks can cost her 4 to 7 calories per minute.

Meanwhile her desk-job husband is spending 1.5 to 2, the steel worker 3 to 4.

All this can have great bearing on a woman's calorie savings bank, and her figure.

For calories are like money. Put too much in the bank, and the account swells. Spend more — even a little more every day — and the savings dwindle.

Just how much total energy or calories housewives spend varies far more than that of factory workers performing the same job in the factory, says Dr. Herman K. Hellerstein, an authority in measuring the energy costs of various jobs, cited these "house-keeping" spending figures:

- Stripping and changing bed linen — 5.5 calories per minute.
- Simply tidying beds — about 4.
- Cleaning windows — 3.5 to 4.
- Scrubbing floors on hands and knees — 7.
- Putting washing through a mangle — up to 7.
- Carrying out and hanging up wash — 4.5 to 5.
- and more if the wash is carried up steps. Washing lingerie by hand — 3. Ironing — 4.2 per minute.

Automatic machines cut the cost sharply.

Gardening — up to 5 or 6, particularly with digging and spading. Sitting and sewing — 1.5 to 2.

Walking up and down stairs — 4 to 6 with 1 or 2 more added in carrying a 20 to 30 pound child.

Walking to and from the shopping area costs 2.5 to 4, at a walking speed of 2 to 3 miles per hour. Lugging 15 to 20 pounds of groceries adds another calorie per minute.

Dressing and undressing costs 2.5 calories per minute, showering about 4.2, and vigorous showering, with more bending and movement, send it up to 5 or 6.

Energy Costs

"At the Work Classification Clinic of the Cleveland Area Heart Society, this awareness of the high energy cost of housework has influenced the vocational counseling of the woman with heart trouble," Dr. Hellerstein says.

"At times it has been easier for the cardiac woman to obtain a secretarial job to obtain sufficient funds to pay for someone else to fulfill the household chores.

"Many husbands convalescing from a heart attack have recognized the high energy cost of house work, particularly when they perform some of the household chores while their wives are enjoying the less energy consuming duties of clerk or secretary. Small wonder the husbands are happy to return to work, for this (and other) reasons!"

Lazy Life?

The picture of hard work of housework "does not apply to all housewives," Dr. Hellerstein stresses.

"The childless housewife who dwells in a small apartment with elevator, who does not do her own house cleaning, laundry or shopping, may expend her maximum energy walking to and from the refrigerator, telephone or television set, where she so often will accumulate rather than dissipate calories — of course to her own detriment."

Much needs to be done to simplify and take the drudgery out of housework, he adds, so housewives then can have more leisure time to spend as many or more calories in recreation.

VA Takes Prompt Steps To Pay NSLI Dividends

WINSTON-SALEM—In response to instructions by the President, the Veterans Administration said today it is taking immediate steps to speed payments of more than a quarter billion dollars in insurance dividends to veterans.

A total of $258,500,000 will be distributed to some 4,800,000 World War II veterans holding National Service Life Insurance (NSLI) and to about 260,000 World War I veterans who have U.S. Government Life Insurance (USGLI) policies. Of the total $240,000,000 will be paid on NSLI policies and $18,500,000 on USGLI policies.

The VA said the agency would use every resource in an all-out effort to place as many of the dividend checks as possible in the hands before the end of winter.

Since many veterans hold more than one policy, although the aggregate may not exceed $10,000 of insurance in force, dividends will be paid on nearly 5,560,000 separate policies.

Setting June 30, 1961, as an outside limit for having all the policy dividends paid, VA officials said even this date would cut the payment timetable prevailing in other years by exactly one-half. They expressed the hope however, that concentrated effort would result in total payment well in advance of the June 30 date. Normally, yearly dividends are paid over a full 12-month period.

The VA explained that dividends such as will be paid on World War I and World War II policies are primarily a refund to the veteran policyholders of part of their premium payments. The refunds are made possible principally because the death rate among GI policyholders continues to be lower than the rate upon which the premiums were established by law.

Veterans who currently have in force either term or permanent plan participating NSLI and USGLI policies will receive dividends.

J. D. DeRamus, VA Regional Office Manager, Winston-Salem, N. C. said that an estimated 106-232 North Carolina veterans who hold participating GI life insurance will receive $5,406,200 of the regular national 1961 dividend totaling $258,500,000.

DeRamus emphasized that veterans could aid in the speed-up of payments by not making advance individual inquiries about dividends. The answering of inquiries, it is explained, would divert personnel from processing the dividends, and thus create a delay in payments.

Avers Alleged Attack In N.Y. Never Happened

ROCK HILL, S.C. (AP)—A Rock Hill automobile dealer wanted in New York City in connection with an alleged attack last Friday on a Negro minister, said Sunday, "It (the attack) did not happen."

Harvey W. Maners admitted he was at the scene of the alleged attack on the Rev. Walter M. Cavers, but denied attacking the minister.

The incident occurred outside Queens County Courthouse where extradition proceedings had been conducted for Cavers. The minister was involved in a fatal automobile accident in South Carolina in 1958, and jumped bond to avoid imprisonment after his appeal was turned down.

The bond of $5,000 was posted by Maners. The minister was testifying a car from Maners' lot at the time of the accident.

After the court session, Cavers said two white men attacked him outside the courthouse and threatened to lynch him. As a crowd gathered, the two men fled, police said.

Cavers, 51, quoted one of the men as saying, "If you be quiet, we won't kill you here. We're going to lynch you."

Later, police issued an alarm for the arrest of Maners in connection with the alleged attack. Authorities said Maners owned a station wagon identified by Cavers.

Queens Ass't. Dist. Atty. William Kerwick said Sunday night that New York City Police have asked Rock Hill police to locate and hold Maners for them.

"What we've done is asked them to hold Maners in connection with a charge of kidnapping and with an attempt to assault," said Kerwick.

Maners, reached by telephone at his home here Sunday night, said he was in Atlanta last Thursday and drove all night to New York.

Maners said that after the hearing, Cavers called to him outside the courthouse. Maners said that as he walked up to Cavers' car, the minister and his wife started screaming.

"To me it looked like a pre-arranged thing because it happened just as I walked up," Maners said.

Cavers said earlier he recognized one of the men who attacked him as a neighbor of the 83-year-old white man who was killed in the highway accident three years ago.

Cavers and his attorney, J. Sandifer, were to meet with Kerwick to go over the minister's charges.

The attorney declined comment on Maners' statement, "I was not an eyewitness," Sandifer said. But he added, "I understand there were eyewitnesses."

Cavers went to court Friday to seek further delay pending a decision by Gov. Nelson Rockefeller on the extradition. The minister was continued free in $3,500 bail. The case was postponed to Feb. 23.

"I try to get them to look deeply into themselves and to feel like thinking and saying and doing what they themselves recognize as right and wise," Masters says.

Report Four Killed And Seven People Hurt In Angola Rioting

LISBON, Portugal (AP)—Four persons were reported killed and seven wounded Sunday during rioting in Luanda, capital of Portugal's West African territory of Angola.

The Portuguese news agency Lusitania reported shooting broke out during a funeral procession for seven policemen and soldiers killed in a clash Friday between a mob and police armed with machine guns. Nine civilians also were killed in the battle.

Gov.-Gen. Alvaro da Silva Tavares of Angola said all Sunday's victims were rioters. Da Silva was in the funeral procession but there was no indication that the firing was directed at him.

Da Silva claimed he has evidence the rioters were "partisans of a Communist-inspired movement" which is preparing "to implant sovietism on the Iberian Peninsula."

Spokesmen for Premier Antonio de Oliveira Salazar's regime said modern Czechoslovak weapons were seized by police in Friday's clash.

An official of Portugal's international police denied the rioters Friday were marching on the police station or staging an uprising against Salazar's dictatorship. He declined to give details. A Canadian eyewitness to the shooting said it developed from a police crackdown on a crowd of drunken revelers at 4 a.m.

Da Silva, however, said Saturday the police had crushed an armed uprising supposedly timed with the ill-fated seizure of the Portuguese liner Santa Maria by rebels opposing Salazar. He said Luanda's police headquarters and civil and military prisons were attacked by rioters trying to free prisoners.

The tourist from Toronto, Harry Jurgensen, said he saw the fighting, in a squalid suburb reserved for Africans and poor whites.

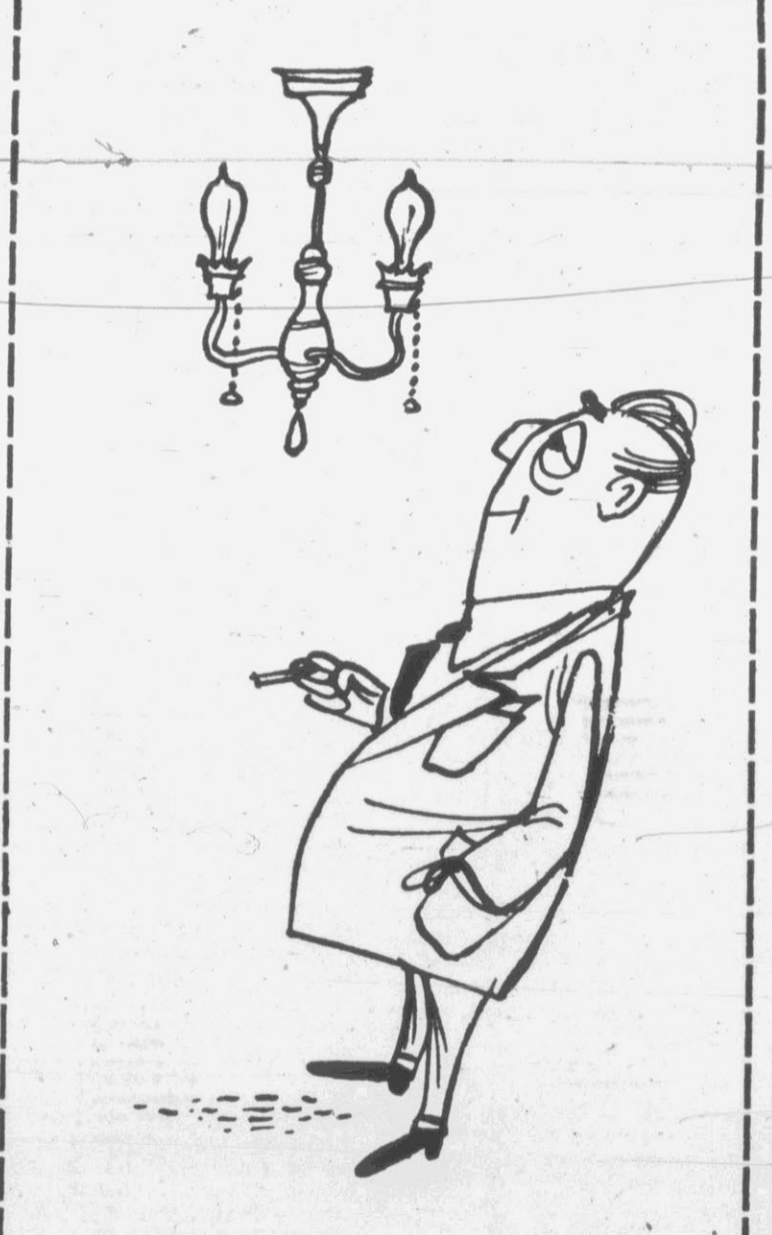

"It was sickening and horrible," he said. "The place looked like a slaughterhouse."

Jurgensen said he was touring the city when he heard noises that sounded like merrymaking and dancing on a side street at 4 a.m. "I saw a dozen men fighting among themselves and hundreds of others standing around drinking, singing and applauding the men who were fighting," he said. "There were quite a number of drunken women around, too."

"Also, there were quite a few whites, Portuguese peasants, there. Everyone looked pretty well loaded."

Jurgensen said police arrived and arrested a few persons. This set off new fighting, he said, and the police left. They returned a few minutes later and opened fire.

The governor general toured some districts of Luanda in an open, unguarded car Sunday night and then broadcast congratulations to the citizens for their "complete confidence and calmness." He promised severe punishment for the rioters.

when was the last time your home was re-wired?

You and your neighbors have been adding new uses of electricity—TV sets, work-saving appliances, more lighting. But in most homes here, folks haven't added the wiring to take care of these electrical servants.

It's shocking but true: 4 out of 5 homes here have out-of-date wiring! And electric appliances must have good wiring to operate at their best.

So remember: when you add an appliance, add-a-wire, too. Up-to-date electrical living calls for up-to-date electrical wiring!

Report Picasso Painting Stolen

PITTSBURGH (AP)—An original painting by famed artist Pablo Picasso has been stolen from the University of Pittsburgh, police reported Sunday night.

The stolen painting, an abstract entitled "1918," had been borrowed by the university from the Guggenheim Foundation of New York City, officers said.

It was taken from a lounge at Pitt's Student Union building where it had been on display for five months.

Dr. Walter Hovey, head of the fine arts department at Pitt, said the price tag on the "1918" might go as high as $10,000.

Students Delay Rocket-Launch

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP)—The launching of an eight-foot rocket containing a live mouse was postponed Sunday because of bad weather.

Terry Babb, 17, said he plans to ask the Federal Aviation Agency for permission to try again Feb. 12 or 19.

Four Seaman High School boys had permission to send the fouse 1,000 feet into the air in the homemade rocket if the cloud ceiling was at least 1,500 feet. It wasn't—because of a snow storm.

The boys plan to return the mouse via parachute.

Dentists Host To 10,000 Children

CHICAGO (AP)—Nearly 10,000 youngsters went to a party given Sunday by their dentists.

The children jammed the exhibition hall of McCormick place and the thousands more were turned away when the Federal Prevention Bureau ordered the doors closed. A special detail of seven policemen kept traffic moving in the washrooms.

The children enjoyed a program of circus acts, dancing and singing while they ate ice cream and drank milk and sugarless beverages—with a few hints on how to keep their teeth clean.

The Chicago Dental Society sponsored the party to celebrate Children's Dental Health Day.

THEY GREW HAIR

Hair Specialists Here Tomorrow; Will Show How To Stop Falling Hair and Stimulate Hair Growth

ANY AREA OF HAIR FOLLICLE THAT CAUSES HAIR GROWTH, SHOWN BELOW, NOT FUNCTIONING PROPERLY CAN CAUSE SERIOUS HAIR PROBLEMS.

Tomorrow only, Staff Director C. N. Thomas, representing the Hilton Hair and Scalp Specialists, will personally examine hair worried men and women between 1:00 and 8:30 P.M. Mr. Thomas will then explain the proper and most effective method for stimulating new hair growth for your particular condition. Remarkable results have already been obtained by hundreds of people in this area, using this method of personal examination, followed by simple and pleasant to use individual treatments. They can easily be carried out in the privacy of anyone's own home.

WHAT CAUSES HAIR LOSS? There are many scalp disorders that can cause hair loss and baldness. Dandruff, Itching Scalp, Dryness, Over-Oiliness, and Hair Loss are definitely warning signs. Only a close examination can accurately determine the cause and best treatment for your individual problems. These problems will progress until you are completely bald, unless positive action is taken to correct these scalp disorders, NOW, before it's too late.

DOUBTERS ASK Why then, if you can stimulate hair growth, do we see so many bald-headed men (and women)? "Because," says the Hilton Specialists, "those people are skeptical," or some "old sayings" has kept them from seeking help in time.

We would like to point out right here, that to obtain proper results we must have a client who at least, has some fuzz or undermourished hair left to work with. If you are completely BALD we can NOT help you, and we know of no treatment that is effective for "male pattern baldness." We will tell you frankly and sincerely if we cannot help you, and we will continue our STRICT policy of accepting only those cases that will respond to our methods. So, if you still have fuzz and your scalp is still creating hair, plan now to see Mr. Thomas. Even if baldness may seem to "run in the family," this is certainly no proof that you can't be helped. Some conditions, such as spot baldness usually have complete coverage if caught in time. If you have just a little hair the Hilton popular method may help you, but you must act NOW, before it's too LATE.

RESULTS GUARANTEED We don't ask you to take our word. You are given a written guarantee, if you are accepted for treatment, that you must be satisfied, within guaranteed period or money will be refunded.

ACT NOW See Mr. C. N. Thomas at the Proctor Hotel between 1:00 and 8:30 p.m. Tuesday, February 7, only! Examinations are free, given in private, with no obligation to you. Ask the desk clerk for Mr. Thomas' room number or call him.

"Why did my knit sweater stretch?"

MISS R. B.

Dear Miss R.B.: Your timely question will interest many readers. It is safe to say that your sweater was not wool, cashmere or angora. You are accustomed to these and they wear and clean well. If a wool sweater shrinks or stretches in cleaning or washing, it usually can be re-blocked to size. These natural fibers are old friends, easy to understand and care for.

That is not true, however, of many new synthetic fibers from which sweaters are made today. Most in vogue are the bulky knits. They are made of yarns treated, chemically or physically, to give greater bulk. Unfortunately, many of these yarns stretch easily. Some synthetic yarns when hung on a hanger, dripping wet, will stretch out of shape simply from the wet weight of the sweater. Such a sweater also will stretch if it is tugged or pulled while moist or even when warm with steam. Once stretched in this manner, the synthetic sweater cannot be re-blocked to shape. Synthetic sweaters will shrink, too. The Technical Analysis Laboratory of the National Institute of Drycleaning has tested acrylic fiber that shrunk as much as three or four inches and could not be stretched back to the original size.

Sweaters of synthetic fibers are beautiful and serviceable, but when cleaning them, be careful! Look for the label if you are not certain of the fiber.

A warning about those bright white sweaters may be useful, too. Sunlight can break down fluorescent white dye and the sweater will turn yellow excepting under the armpits and places where the sun doesn't get at the dye.

Awaiting Opinions Of The People

The 170 men and women who gather in Raleigh Wednesday for the 1961 General Assembly will be charged with the responsibility for charting the course North Carolina will follow during the next two years.

By the decisions they make, the legislation they enact, the proposals they reject, these 170 elected representatives will determine largely whether North Carolina in the next two years continues its upward road of progress or falters at some of the key intersections that lie before the state.

To a great extent, these elected representatives will be guided to their decisions by how the citizens in their respective communities feel toward proposals which are made. For the most part the legislators want to follow the will of the people who elected them. They will, therefore, be influenced by local reaction throughout the state to what is proposed in Raleigh.

The people of Pitt County have an important stake in the future progress of North Carolina just as citizens of every other county. The three Pitt County representatives in the 1961 General Assembly will have a voice in the final decisions along with the other members of the House and Senate.

In this important legislative session, it is important that the people at home as well as the members of the legislature follow closely what goes on. At some point during the session a choice will have to be made between providing in education and many other fields for the present and future needs of the state, or holding the line against more spending that will also necessitate higher state taxes.

The people of North Carolina, we believe, are anxious not to have any greater tax burden than necessary imposed upon them. At the same time, they are anxious that the needs of the state be met in order that the momentum of progress already built up in North Carolina may be continued. If a choice must be made between continuing the progress of the state with additional tax revenues, and holding the status quo both in state services and in taxes, we believe the people of the state will choose the former.

It is important for the continued progress of the state that throughout the session the people of the state raise their individual voices on issues which arise. Only if the people speak out on the issues can they expect the legislators to know full public sentiment on the many important issues which must be resolved before the 1961 legislature adjourns.

Idealism Faces Practical Side

By LYNN NISBET

NOT ENOUGH — There is an ancient maxim that no general ever had enough soldiers to win a battle. So he just had to win it with what he did have. It has been said further that the degree of the ability of a general is determined by the number of battles he can win without adequate men and materiel.

Every survey made in recent years of availability of class rooms, pupil-teacher load, and other resources of the public school system—including teacher salaries — has indicated that there isn't enough of anything to permit operation of a successful program.

Governor Sanford somewhat wistfully observed the other day that the established needs of the public schools are far beyond the maximum capacity of North Carolina to meet them. He added that while the need should be appreciated, the fact that it cannot be fully met also must be recognized — and accepted as a challenge to school folks to do the best they can with that they have.

If Francis Marion and George Washington, Stonewall Jackson and Robert E. Lee had had more men and equipment than their opponents, their military tactics would not have been used as texts in officers' training schools for more than a century.

If Charles B. Aycock and James Y. Joyner, Edwin Alderman and Duncan McIver and Billy Carmichael, had been given all the money they needed they would deserve no credit for having built a magnificent educational system. If there was enough money now to provide all the things desired, the State of North Carolina would not need Dallas Herring or Charlie Carroll or Bill Friday.

IDEALS — Fixed goals can be reached, although often they are not. There is question whether an ideal can ever be attained. The English poet Robert Browning expressed it this way: "A man's reach should exceed his grasp, or what's heaven for?" And about the same time the American poet Henry W. Longfellow was expressing the same thought when he wrote that "in even savage bosoms, there are longings, yearnings, strivings, for the good they comprehend not."

PRACTICALITIES — There is aged-old conflict between idealism and practicality. Paradoxically, this conflict of interest has been, and is, the basis for all progress. If the ideal were obtained there would be no reason for further effort. If the practical people all quit when they realized they could not attain desired perfection, very little would be accomplished. The soundness of North Carolina government rests upon the fact that all through the years majority of the idealists and the practical folks have recognized their limitations. This continuing fight with respect to education, public health and welfare and other segments of "social progress", and the certain compromise finally to be reached, will make the upcoming General Assembly one of the most interesting in history. Almost the same thing can be said for the National Congress, where similar opposing forces are at work.

There isn't remote prospect that enough tax money can be collected to meet the needs of government services. So government officials must render the service with what they have. There isn't a chance that there will be enough "tax relief" to permit business to survive with ease and without a struggle. So business men have got to survive — and prosper — under the tax bills enacted. Neither group can afford to be lax or indolent. That means progress.

PERSONAL TRIBUTE — Late, but none the less sincerely, your reporter wants to add his words to the tributes paid the late BILLY CARMICHAEL, vice president and finance officer of the Consolidated University of North Carolina, who died last week. The time of his service in that capacity coincides almost exactly with that of my service as manager of the Raleigh bureau of the N. C. Association of Afternoon Dailies. This embraces ten regular sessions of the General Assembly, ten biennial appropriation periods, with appearances before the Advisory Budget Commission and legislative committees. It included association with three University presidents — Frank Graham, Gordon Gray and William C. Friday — and tenure as acting president between Graham and Gray.

The biggest compliment I can pay Billy Carmichael is that in connection with his responsibilities to the University and the State which he loved, he was a chamelon. He fitted his activities to the needs of the hour. He preferred to stay in the background, with remarkable lack of concern about who got credit for doing the job. But when occasion required he did not hesitate to project himself prominently into the limelight when he deemed it necessary to get the big job done. He neither sought credit, nor shirked responsibility.

An appropriate epitaph for Billy Carmichael would be that written by my father many years ago for one of his sisters-in-law and chiseled into a headstone in Old Union ARP church burying ground in Chester county, South Carolina: "Vain words on tombs are idly spent; her own good deeds are her best monument."

This Time, Refugees Come Direct To U.S.

Refugees from island neighbors near our shores have an obvious special claim upon American concern. When at least one percent of Cuba's six million population has already taken refuge with us and again as many were clamoring for visas before the exits were slammed shut, the problem is one of major significance.

Unlike the Hungarian situation after Soviet military power was reasserted, the stability of the Cuban dictatorship is certainly precarious. Refugees are convinced the days of the Castro regime are numbered. It is one thing to back a puppet regime with Soviet tanks having land support across the border; it is quite another to prop up a ruling group, engulfed in economic chaos and growing disillusionment, from across the seas.

The Cuban exiles have now become so numerous, and their plight in this country so desperate, that the United States has stepped in with a broad scale program to feed, clothe and help find jobs and educational opportunities for them. Four million dollars has been designated for the emergency action; non-governmental relief agencies are also sharing the burden, among them the International Rescue Committee which contributed greatly to the relocation and relief of Hungarian refugees who came to us in their time of trial.

It should be remembered too, that the number of Cubans now in this country will increase despite the closing of legal avenues of escape from the island prison. Desperate people will find a way. So the problem of caring for refugees can be expected to grow. At least, everyone concerned, has grounds for hope a change will come that will enable the exiles to return home.

What the American people and their government do about the new refugee issue in our hemisphere may well influence the future of freedom. Each wave of refugees from dictatorship to democracy offers a fresh opportunity to revitalize free life and tougher resistance to tyrants. This is especially true when the refugees are close neighbors.

Always before, other countries in Europe and Asia bore the brunt of the many migrations. Out of the Caribbean, new waves of refugees are rolling directly upon our shores. Only a minority of these refugees are taking shelter so far in sister republics to the South.

It's our problem.

Appointees In The Vital Roles

By RALPH ROBEY

All of President Kennedy's major appointments are important from the viewpoint of appraising the business trend; but two are outstanding in this regard. These are: C. Douglas Dillon as Secretary of the Treasury, and Robert V. Roosa as Under-Secretary of the Treasury for Monetary Affairs — which means he will be responsible for handling the public debt.

Both of these gentlemen, like all of the Kennedy appointees, had an easy time before the appropriate Senate committee and in being confirmed. But that is neither surprising nor unusual. We have a long tradition in this nation that a President should be permitted to select his own staff and advisors, and there have been only a few exceptions made to this over the years.

Mr. Dillon's appointment, however, has caused much comment. This is not because any one questions his ability. It arises from the fact that he has been a high Republican office holder since 1953. First he was our Ambassador to France; and since 1957 he has been Under-Secretary of State for economic policies and programs. To switch parties in this manner was bound to cause a certain amount of doubt as to his Republican loyalty, and it makes rebuilding of the party more difficult. The other Republican in the Cabinet, Mr. Robert S. McNamara as Secretary of Defense, has led to no such questioning because he worked actively for Kennedy during the campaign and he has never been a government official.

Not too much is known of Secretary Dillon's economic philosophy. He is a conservative, but not as conservative as Senator Goldwater. He will protect the dollar, but he is a strong believer in international aid and this means that we shall continue this policy which contributes so much to our international deficit. He has given no indication that he thinks basic tax rate reform is either desirable or necessary and no immediate help is to be expected from him on this serious problem. He will not attempt to undermine the independence of the Federal Reserve Board of Governors, or force still lower rates of interest through Federal Reserve action.

Under-Secretary Roosa is well and favorably known by financial and business economists. He has been a vice president of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York and associate economist of the Federal Open Market Committee, which is the group which buys and sells government securities for the Reserve System. He was not selected for his political affiliation—it is not known whether he is a Republican or a Democrat—but for his unquestioned knowledge and ability.

Mr. Roosa is a defender of Federal Reserve policy, but does not think that the System should necessarily limit its open market operations to short term treasury bills. He also believes that the present statutory limitation of 4 per cent on treasury bonds should be removed, and of course it should be in order to make it easier to manager our public debt. But there is no reason for assuming that this interest rate ceiling will be eliminated in the near future.

With a federal debt of $290 billion it is an enormous task that is falling on the shoulders of Mr. Roosa. Too much of it is short term, and the treasury has to enter the money market much more often than desirable. But Mr. Roosa will do as good a job of managing the debt as anyone could and a better selection could not have been made for this particular assignment. Another significant appointment is Walter Heller as chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors. In due time we shall devote a column to his thinking and prognosis.

Drama Behind The Cold

NEW YORK (AP) — The chances are better than even that if you live in a city and work in an office, you have had a cold this winter—and perhaps have one right now.

There are two types of cold: The common cold. This is the kind everyone else gets. The uncommon cold. This is the kind you get.

Few hospitals, however, can match in pure human drama the antics of the creatures in the office zoo when the sneezing season gets under way. Here are a few familiar victims you can probably spot in your own firm:

The panic button pusher — At the first sign of a sniffle, he screams. "It's probably another flu epidemic like the one in 1918. I think the Russians are spreading it secretly." He tries to get everyone to sign a petition demanding that the whole place be disinfectied.

Camille at the typewriter—The pretty secretary figures that if she can make her cough sound properly hollow and racking, the boss will give her the day off—which will give her a chance to see an afternoon movie, or catch up on her shopping.

The braggart—"You got a little cold?" he says. "What are you complaining about? I've got sinus trouble, grippe, bronchitis and swollen tonsils—to say nothing about my ulcers. They're kicking up again, too."

The hypochondriac—Whenever any one in the office comes in with a new cold, he gets a new one, too.

The indignant moralist — "If half the money this country spends on tobacco was spent on scientific research, they could lick the problem of the common cold in a year," he yelps, then adds as an after thought, "By the way, could you lend me a cigarette? I'm fresh out."

The fatalist—"What's the use of buying medicine?" he growls. He makes out his will — and waits to see if he'll die or get better.

The glutton—"Feed a cold and starve a fever" is his motto. The hairy-chested chirper — "It's all in the imagination," he growls. "I never had a cold in my life." Then word spreads that he must be a virus carrier, and behind his back everyone calls him "Typhoid Harry."

The boss—The thoughtful company physician taps him on the chest and says, "Chief, it might be just a simple cold, but it could turn into a case of walking pneumonia. I think you'd better take a month off in Florida — and maybe I'd better go along to check you. We wouldn't want this to get any worse, would we?"

That's the kind of common cold to get—if you can afford it.

In making up the key personnel list of the new Department of Agriculture (new in the sense that its directions will be different under the Democratic administration) President Kennedy has seen fit to draw on two schools of opinion in connection with farm legislation and farm problems. In this decision, he perhaps has been wise.

The most striking thing about the new farm front is the Tar Heel flavor. There is, of course, Rep. Harold Cooley, still heading the House Agriculture Committee. And in the Agriculture Department a whole slew of North Carolinians has been installed. In commenting on this situation, the Baltimore Sun had a few interesting observations to make recently.

Said the Sun: "What do these appointments suggest in doctrinal and pragmatic terms? Consider Mr. Cooley, one of the key farm congressmen—which is what the administration may have been doing. His North Carolina compatriots in and out of Washington know him as a successful tobacco culturist down home, who has found that high price supports and rigid production controls go well together. "But Mr. Cooley has never seemed doctrinaire, a man with a one-track mind. When rigid controls in many other crops were proposed in the so-called Poage bill in several preceding Congresses, Mr. Cooley refused to go along."

In the Agriculture Department appointments announced recently, Charles F. Murray of this state was selected as Under Secretary. Harry Caldwell, also a Tar Heel, will be chairman of Agriculture Advisory Commission, in charge of the Commodity Stabilization Service will be Horace Godfrey, also a Tar Heel. One other important appointment did not go to a North Carolina native, but a Georgian did get it, and that is John Duncan, to be Assistant Secretary for marketing and foreign agriculture, an important post.

In addition, from Kentucky comes Dr. Frank Welch who was named Assistant Secretary for federal-state relations. The one outsider who could be considered at variance with farm views of the above-named is a man who comes from California. He is John A. Baker, new head of the Agriculture Credit Services.

Says the Baltimore Sun: "Mr. Baker's outfit (he was Washington representative of the National Farmers Union) is left-wing by farm standards. But in Georgia Mr. Duncan headed the state affiliate of the conservative American Farm Bureau Federation. About all that can be said now is that the new administration has drawn on more than one school of farm opinion."

It is certainly gratifying to Southerners to know that the administration has not packed the Agriculture Department with visionaries who usually wind up making a bigger bundle of things than they already are. Most of the men mentioned, with Baker's exception, are long-experienced in farm problems. They should do much to see that the Kennedy administration maintains a sober attitude toward the American farmer and his problems.

"Everybody is for really good schools. Not everybody will be willing to stand and be counted for raising the money needed. Those who are for education must also let it be known they are willing to pay for it." — Raleigh Times.

"Doing a common thing uncommonly well often brings success." — Anderson (S.C.) Independent.

The Eisenhower Administration has generally taken advantage of its Executive Prerogative to suppress such information as it did not desire Congress or the people to have. Some such information may be of so delicate a nature as to warrant temporary suppression but there can be no reason why the Tehran papers have not yet been published. Parts of the Yalta and Malta documentation have been made available in a volume which is difficult to read and analyze, but Tehran, which precedes Yalta, has been kept under cover, perhaps in the hope that it will be forgotten.

In the historic quarrel between President Eisenhower and Senator Joseph McCarthy, Executive Prerogative loomed large. McCarthy could have managed to overcome presidential opposition had he agreed to the proposition that all sessions of his committee be executive, which means sub-rosa, and that he then submit the transcript of the record to the White House for review and decision. The question was discussed at great length and I was present at some of the discussions. The central argument against the proposition was that Congress could not turn over to the President its authority to investigate.

President Kennedy, in his State of the Union Message apparently repudiates the Eisenhower policy of secrecy. He said:

"For my part, I shall withhold from neither the Congress nor the people any fact or report, past, present or future, which is necessary for a free and informed judgment of our conduct and hazards. I shall neither shift the burden of executive decisions to the Congress, nor void responsibility for the outcome of those decisions."

From this language it is to be accepted that the Tehran papers will be made available, so that it is possible to understand exactly what happened in Eastern Europe at the end of the war and why the termination of World War II, now 15 years delayed, has become so complicated. It is at Tehran that the great decisions were made.

Currently, the Eastland Committee investigation concerning Cuba, which has been going on for some weeks, mostly in executive session, will undoubtedly proceed full force until the facts are available and Congress will have sufficient data to act intelligently on such decisions as it may make. The possibility of the reorganization of the procedures in the State Department may result from the Cuban situation if it is established, as it may be, that decisions are made at too low a level which may be costly to the country.

It is true that not everything between governments can be made public because each side has the right to decide what it wishes to do about questions in which it is involved. Furthermore, as long as we are in the Cold War, which is war by other than usual means, it may be necessary to keep strategic data and certainly tactical data secret. But such matters should be based upon policy laid down at a level, not by every bureaucrat Tom, Dick and Harry whose rubber stamp reads "Secret."

If this interpretation of President Kennedy's purpose is correct, Congressional committees will no longer fail in the possession of the Executive. Of course, the FBI and the CIA have to be excluded from this generalization as it is impossible for such organizations to function at all if their green files are available to untrained eyes. On the other hand, the Kefauver Committee which is often accused of having been noisy and futile at times lacked the data which could have made its sessions significant.

The right to know, however, is not limited to Congressional committees. In recent years, the press has suffered from bureaucratic suppression of the news. Often what has been suppressed has been rumors and anonymous leaks. Such reporting is undignified and should be unnecessary. The press is representative of (Continued on page five)

Most Of Opposition Is Hidden

By ELMER ROESSNER

Opposition to the Kennedy program for national salvation is like an iceberg; six-sevenths of it is under the surface. Nevertheless, despite this opposition, it now looks as if these three planks will get Congressional approval:

1. Adding medical care to Social Security.
2. Increasing the minimum wage.
3. Spreading the wage minimums to more retail establishments.

There will be no "hundred days" for the Kennedy Administration as there was for the Roosevelt II Administration, when White House proposals were banged through Congress. The Kennedy program will move much slower. Congress is likely to add an itchy-bitsy of medical care, leaving it to later Congresses to round out the program. It is likely to increase the minimum wage to around $1.10, leaving it to later sessions to bring the minimum to the proposed $1.25. And minimum wages will be expanded only to retailers with clerical interstate business, leaving the tying-up to later dates.

COUNT UNHATCHED CHICKENS

Any business relying on the coalition of Southern conservatives and Northern Republicans to block the Kennedy program is taking a grave business risk. The coalition will slow things, but analysis of current weights and balances indicates that it cannot stop it.

And here are other prognostications in the business field, based on analyses of developing trends:

Shopping center slowdown: The conviction that America is slightly overbuilt in shopping centers is spreading. There is also evidence that supermarkets are somewhat in excess supply.

Consequently, fewer new shopping centers and/or supers will be launched this year. But where there are new housing developments, centers and supers will appear and flourish.

Inventory turn-up: A basic cause of the current recession has been business loss for inventory, using stocks on hand for current production. But inventories are now low and new orders will be necessary. A strong trend in rebuilding inventories can do more for the economy than three speeches, two pump primings and one interest cut.

DARIEN GAP CAMPAIGN:

Pan-American Highway push: Both the auto and travel industries are getting behind the new campaign to complete the Pan-American Highway. While there are many soggy stretches, the big gap is between Panama and Colombia, called the Darien Gap. Action in this sector will help fulfill promises to expand aid to Latin America, and to help American industry by providing more highways for auto buyers.

Pushing U.S. bottoms: Administration promises to ship more surplus food abroad in alerting American ship owners campaign to get a larger share of this business. Under present laws, the U.S. Department of Agriculture does not pay freight on goods sent in foreign bottoms. When receiver abroad pays the freight, they do not add to the drain on American dollars. However, if they had to use American ships to take away their gifts, their transportation payments would reverse the dollar flow. Hence count on U.S. shipowners to use that fact to bolster demands for a change in the laws.

WHAT'S KIPLINGER GOT THAT KENNEDY HASN'T?

The Old Promoter was in a philosophic mood when he dropped in for his weekly visit today. "I have a hard idea. It echoes something you wrote a few weeks ago. My idea is that any businessman who does not read every word John F. Kennedy says publicly is leaving his cash drawer open, his front door unlocked. "You know I am not a Democrat. (The Old One is six and a half miles to the right of Barry Goldwater.) But I believe the soundest clues to what will happen can be found in the utterances of the new President, whom we at the club call Jack F. K." That surely echoes opinions stated here.

Climax Is At Hand For Huge Anti-Trust Case

PHILADELPHIA (AP)—A huge electrical antitrust case, tagged one of the biggest in American history by federal attorneys, reaches a climax today and Tuesday in U. S. District Court with fines and possible jail terms. Chief Judge J. Cullen Ganey will sentence 29 of the nation's largest electrical equipment manufacturers and 45 of their employees. There was a total of 72 pleas of guilty and 89 of nolo contendere (no defense) to 20 indictments for fixing prices and rigging bids at secret meetings all over the United States. The nation's biggest electrical makers—Westinghouse and General Electric—were named in 19 indictments each. Westinghouse pleaded guilty to seven; GE guilty to seven; nolo in the rest. Of the defendants, 57 were up for sentencing today. They included 21 corporations. Corporations are liable to a maximum $50,000 fine on each indictment. Individuals, besides the $50,000 fine, can be sent to prison for a year. If the maximum fines are imposed the total would be $8,050,000. The government charged the conspiracy suited competition in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act of 1890. All the defendants vigorously denied this at first, then later switched their innocent pleas as the government pressed for trial. Following the sentencing, the next legal step, if any, could be civil lawsuits by governmental and private industry customers to recover damages for alleged overcharges for equipment used to generate, transmit and distribute electricity to almost every home in America. Four separate grand juries returned 20 indictments. Those named in the first six were to be sentenced today. Defendants in the remaining 14 indictments, including many of those also named in the first six, are scheduled for sentencing Tuesday. Judge Ganey separated the group because of expected lengthy appeals for clemency from defense attorneys. The court hopes to complete all the sentencing by late Tuesday. But as a precaution, Judge Ganey set aside Wednesday, too, to dispose of any cases not reached then. Nineteen firms pleaded guilty to one or more charges and 12 of these also entered nolo pleas. Ten companies pleaded no defense only.

William L. Maher, chief of the Justice Department's antitrust office here which handled the successful prosecution, said he was "hopeful for very substantial sentences." Maher said the disclosures, dating back to 1956 in a business bound to have a significant deterrent effect upon all other major American industries where this type of illegal antitrust activity may have gone on or have been contemplated. He disclosed that testimony by grand jury witnesses, all of whom were granted immunity from prosecution, showed the conspiracy stretched back to the early 1930s. Judge Ganey, at various arrangements where defendants entered their pleas, said management of GE, Westinghouse and other firms must have known about the pricing hanky-panky. This the big companies denied, alleging the indicted employees acted solely on their own. Besides GE and Westinghouse, the following firms entered one or more guilty pleas: I-T-E Circuit Breaker Co., Philadelphia; Allis-Chalmers, West

Allis, Wis.; Federal Pacific Electric Co., Newark, N.J.; Clark Container Co., Cleveland; Cutler Hammer Inc., Milwaukee; Square D, Detroit; Ingersoll-Rand, Easton, Pa.; Foster Wheeler Corp., New York; C. H. Wheeler Manufacturing Co., Philadelphia; Worthington Corp., Harrison, N.J.; McGraw-Edison Co., Elgin, Ill.; Southern States Equipment Corp., Hampton, Ga.; H. K. Porter Co., Pittsburgh; Allen-Bradley, Milwaukee; Wagner Electric Co., St. Louis; Schwaiger-Wood Corp., Portland, Ore.; and Maloney Electric Co., St. Louis. All except Schwager-Wood, Allen-Bradley, Clark Container, Ingersoll-Rand, C. H. Wheeler, Worthington and Foster-Wheeler also pleaded no contest.

Considering the fantastic rate at which new apartment buildings are going up in the nation's big cities, you may be surprised to learn that more than 60 per cent of all American families own their own homes. Those who have purchased these homes recently are presumably standing pat on their acquisitions. They have selected houses which fit their individual needs and tastes. But millions of other home owners have found that their present living quarters are unsatisfactory in one way or another. Not so unsatisfactory that they want to sell. In fact, most of them have many good reasons why they want to hang on to their homes. The discontented are those who need more room because of changes in the size of their families, those whose houses are in a state of general disrepair and those who merely want the old homesteads to have up-to-date appearances. This trend toward home modernization, definitely discernible in 1959 and 1960, is expected to move at full speed this year. One authoritative prediction is that Americans will spend more money for home modernization in the next 12 months than for home construction.

Typical of this trend is the word from the Women's Housing Congress that its meeting in Washington, D. C., in April will concern itself largely with home modernization. The four previous Congresses concentrated on the subject of new home building, specifically with the object of determining what thoughts prospective home owners have on home design and the quality of building products. The first three sessions sought out the opinions of women only. Last year the Congress asked men and youngsters their ideas on what should be considered important in new homes. This time, the delegates will explore the problems encountered by home owners in attempting to modernize and improve their homes. Other signs of the times in this direction are the establishment of a Home Improvement Committee by the National Assn. of Home Builders and the popularity of a new organization which trains and franchises home improvement contractors throughout the country.

Sacrifice Historic Church To March Of N.C. Progress

MORGANTON, N.C. (AP)—The ivy-covered First Presbyterian Church of Morganton, founded between the end of the French and Indian War, 1763 and 1797, is being sacrificed to progress. The Presbyterian congregation moved to a new edifice last year, and recently the old hand-made brick church, the oldest preserved structure in Morganton, was sold to the Burke County Savings and Loan Association. The association will have the old edifice torn down and erect a headquarters building on the historic site at the corner of North Sterling and Collett streets and directly across from the Post Office. Regrets are being felt by some older members of the Presbyterian congregation—and by other history-loving residents. What has happened and is happening to the old church property is causing bitter protests. Crowding the walls of the domed church building are tombstones of the First Church's founding fathers. The graves will be moved, much to the horror of some—many perhaps—concerned. One of the ancient graves is marked by a kneeling figure in marble. The face is uplifted, the hands clasped in silent prayer. There is a simple inscription: "Here lies Maggie." The first four elders of the church are buried beside the antiquated edifice—Samuel Alexander, David Vance, John Duckworth, and Robert Penland, all soldiers in the American Revolution. Also buried there are two members of the Confederate Congress—Waightstill Avery and Col. B. S. Gaither. "It is doubtful," someone once said, "if any such thing exists as any other church in the South." Although early records of the church have been lost or destroyed, the fact is on record that this old Presbyterian church was the only house of religious worship in Morganton for approximately 20 years, during which time it was used by Baptists, Methodists, Episcopalians, and perhaps other denominations. It is also on record that in the early days of the church's existence, its doors were thrown open for various public assemblies, including political gatherings. The Burke County Courthouse, which still stands, was completed about 1835. When the courthouse was completed First Presbyterian Church knew no more of politicians, except, of course, among its own members, one of whom is, at present, U.S. Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr.

to 1797. The quaint brick building with its "bustle" entrance has withstood the ravages of time and the destructive hand of man until now. Across the Catawba River from Morganton was an even older Presbyterian congregation—Quaker Meadows. The original church has been replaced many times, however. First Presbyterian Church was an outgrowth of Quaker Meadows, one of the first two Presbyterian churches erected between Rowan County and Tennessee. All indications are that Quaker Meadows Church antedated June 1, 1777—the day on which Burke County was created from the Western section of Rowan. Establishment of the First Presbyterian Church in Morganton resulted from still another factor—difficulty in fording Catawba River during freshets to attend services at Quaker Meadows Presbyterian Church several miles north of Morganton. Among the known early supporters of First Presbyterian Church of Morganton, or the Town of Morgan, according to some historians, were folk bearing the surnames of Alexander, Avery, Bouchelle, Bowman, Branch, Dickson, Duckworth, Ervin, Forney, Fox, Grady, Greenlee, Harbison, Henson, Hilliard, McDowell, McElrath, McEntire, McGimpsey, McNeely, Moore, Morrison, Neill, O'Neill, Patton, Pearson, Penland, Perkins, Presnell, Ross, Scott, Spainhour, Stevie, Tate, Vance, Walton, Whisenant, and Wilson. All of these people were Scotch-Irish, except the Spainhours and Whisenants, who were Germans and the Bouchelles, Forneys, Steveliers, and Tates, who were French-Huguenots. Practically all of these names are to be found on the marble tombstones in the cemetery in the yard of Morganton's old First Presbyterian Church. And their descendants are among those who have protested without avail to the erasing of this oldest of landmarks in Morganton. Many felt that when the congregation of First Presbyterian Church moved to a new and modern edifice, the old building should be preserved as a museum.

Avalanches Take Big Toll In Alps

ROME (AP)—Sunny, springlike weather coming after snowstorms has brought great masses of snow tumbling down from the high peaks in the Alps. Highways and railroads are blocked, mountain villages isolated and at least 37 persons were killed. Two giant avalanches 60 miles apart killed eight persons Sunday in Italy's northern mountains. Many tons of snow smashed down upon the tiny village of Rochemolles, 6,100 feet up on Mt. Mellisse on the Italian-French border. Rescuers dug out seven injured persons from houses shattered by the snow. Bodies of two men and two women were found. Eighteen of the hamlet's 30 homes were destroyed. The toll in the village of 250 people might have been higher but most of the younger people had left home for the winter to work at nearby ski resorts. Sixty miles to the east, an estimated 10 million cubic feet of snow roared down the side of Great San Bernard Mountain. The avalanche crushed two wooden barracks for laborers on the tunnel being drilled through the mountain to provide an all-weather highway between Italy and Switzerland. Three men and a woman, employed as caretakers while work is suspended for the winter, were killed. Snowslides Sunday blocked a highway in the Italian Aosta Valley, imprisoned eight big trucks at the Austrian-Swiss frontier, covered the Rome-Paris rail line near the village of Lapraz, France and buried a skier on a cross-country trek near Guillestre, France. Small and large avalanches have been reported all over the Alps for several days. Most of them occurred in the high ranges, away from roads and villages, and caused little damage. Avalanches have killed eight other persons in Italy, 12 in Switzerland and 8 in Austria.

Kennedy May Ask 5-Year Program Of Foreign Aid

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Kennedy may ask Congress soon to authorize a five-year foreign aid program aimed at inducing other free nations to share more of the burden, Sen. Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., said today. Mansfield, the Senate's Democratic leader, said he expects Kennedy to reshape the entire program. He will be surprised, the senator said in an interview, if Kennedy increases the $4-billion budget request of former President Dwight D. Eisenhower in this field. Mansfield said that as he understands it, the long-range program would be based primarily on development loans and technical assistance for countries which recently have gained their independence. He said he expects a cutback in military aid. "Under this program there would be more sharing of the burden by the Western European nations and by Japan," Mansfield said. "These countries are amply able now to contribute to the development of their less fortunate world neighbors." The State Department reported six months ago that the United States and 14 other industrialized countries of the free world had poured $18 billion worth of economic aid into underdeveloped nations during the previous six years. The American total was over $12 billion.

with Polish representatives but still are in the exploratory stage. Congressional authorization for a long-range program would eliminate some of the double jeopardy to which the foreign aid program is subjected when it is submitted yearly to Congress. As it stands, the program has to be authorized by vote of both houses. After this action has been taken, the actual funds then must supply the actual funds. This gives opponents of the program two cuts at it. As a senator, Kennedy supported a proposal two years ago to authorize the Development Loan Fund to borrow from the Treasury up to $1 billion a year for five years. Eisenhower objected to this "back-door financing." In the end, Senate Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen of Illinois and then Senate Democratic Leader Lyndon B. Johnson of Texas worked out a compromise for a two-year congressional authorization of $2 billion. That authorization ends this year.

Family Chilled By Long Stay In Fallout Shelter

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—John L. Esser Jr. and his family emerged from their new fallout shelter Sunday after 45 1/2 hours underground, and immediately kindled a fireplace fire to get warm. With no heat in the 10x20-foot shelter, the seven Essers quickly learned they hadn't taken enough clothing and blankets along. Mrs. Esser, 33, wore leotards, blue jeans, army coveralls and a sweater, and wished for more. Esser, 39, a computer operator, had plans for improving the shelter—more shelves, larger cooking area, more blanket storage. The family intends to try the shelter again in warm weather. "I think this is the only way to find out what you will need and what problems you have when you stay in a shelter," Esser said. "It was fun," Peggy, 4, declared. "I didn't like it," declared Glenn, 6. "It was cold."

Call it fate, black magic or what-have-you, but Greenville's basketball team can't seem to get away from a certain habit they've acquired by chance of their schedule.

The Northeastern Conference, currently dominated by Kinston, has seen the lower teams tied for berths on numerous occasions. Greenville has been presented the opportunity to break the knot and move upwards twice.

But to make the story sad, the Phants have lost both times, seeing ground in the battle for second place. To make this story complete, such is the case for tomorrow night's game when Coach Bo Farley's five tries to put the skids to Greenville in a home contest.

Both teams are tied with 3-4 records. A victory would send the winner into at least fifth place and possibly higher.

Greenville must be ready to iron out several glaring kinks before visualizing too much altitude in the league.

Spanked in their two outings by Kinston and Washington, the Phants were guilty of a bushel and a peck of mistakes. Many were fundamental flaws.

A shake-up took place last week when Farley dipped into his junior varsity ranks and came up with Jack Foley, Rodney Knowles, and Kenny Allen—a trio of promising youngsters.

Farley can't quibble over the development of John Bynum, a reserve of last season. But the rest of the club has been slow in rounding into a consistent threat in the league.

Nudging into a higher position and honing the attack for the conference tournament will be the goal of Farley in these final weeks of the season.

Greenville had one of their better nights against the Cards in their first meeting, winning a 53-49 tongue-twister.

THE FERGUSON AFFAIR

CHAPTER 20

The building was long and low, almost hidden from the street by discreet plantings. It had pastel pink walls and lavender on a kind of veranda. Michael Speare's name was tastefully printed on one of the doors in lower-case letters, like a line from a modern poem.

It was one of those so-called studio offices, meant to suggest that doing an aesthetic experience. The girl at the front desk underlined the suggestion. She had Matisse lines, and a voice like violins at a nuptial feast. She used to tell me that Mr. Speare wasn't back from his afternoon calls. Would I please wait?

I did.

A few minutes later a man in a blue Italian suit and a confidential came in breathing dramatically. When I stood up, I was tall enough to look down at the bald spot on top of his sleek dark head.

"Mr. Speare?"

"Yeah. You must be Gunnarson. Sorry I'm late. Come in, will you?"

I followed him along a skylit corridor to his office. The wall beside his desk was covered with photographs of faces, the bold, shy, wistful, arrogant, hungry faces, but didn't see Holly May's among them. Most of them were actors who hadn't been heard of for years.

"How is Holly?" he said, reading my mind. "I took her picture down, in a moment of childish pique. But I still keep it in my desk drawer. Tell her that."

"I will if I see her."

"I thought you were her lawyer."

"I'm her husband's lawyer."

A kind of gray sickness touched his face for an instant. "What does he want? The rest of my blood? Tell him I'm all out of blood, he can go to a blood bank."

"Did he treat you so badly?"

"Did he? He fixed me good. Three years of work, building her up, talking her into parts, keeping her out of trouble, all gone to hell. Just when she was really getting hot, she had to marry him. He's a rough man. As you doubtless know if you work for him."

"I don't work for him. I give him legal advice."

"Does he take it?"

"I'm hoping he will."

"Then advise him to take a running jump in the Pacific Ocean. I know a nice deep place, complete with sharks."

"I'll be frank with you, or less on my own, for information."

"What about?"

"Mrs. Ferguson."

He considered this, and drew the conclusion I wanted him to. "How is the marriage working out?"

"It isn't. You'll keep this to yourself, of course."

"Of course," he said, struggling to suppress his glee. "I knew it couldn't last. A doll like Holly, a girl with her future, tying herself to a dodo. Who's divorcing who?"

"It's too early to talk in those terms. Put it this way. Colonel Ferguson married a woman he knew nothing about. Six or seven months later he decided that perhaps he ought to look into her background. I thought perhaps you could help."

"I wouldn't want to do that to a client, not even an ex-client. Besides," he said with a lopsided smile and a pass as the top of his head, "what do I get out of it?"

He had a fishy look. I felt no compunction in saying him like a fish. "She's under contract to you, isn't she? If she works?"

"Why should she go back to work, with the kind of settlement, he can make on her?"

"There won't be any settlement, if he divorces her. Or gets an annulment."

His secret glee flared up again. He thought that we were having a meeting of minds. "I see. What did you say your name was? Bill?"

"Bill."

"Call me Mike, Bill." He went around his desk and slumped in the swivel chair behind it. "What kind of dope do you need?"

"Everything you have. Her background, her conversations, character, personal habits, men in her life."

"Hell," he said. "I can't do that for her. I'm loyal to my clients. On the other hand, she'd be better off working. It isn't healthy for a kid like her to retire. Hell, I'd be doing her a favor. Doing the industry a favor. Only what if she finds out?"

"She won't. Not even Ferguson will hear what you tell me. It's strictly for background use."

"I'd hope so. Bill. I like the little doll. I wouldn't want anything to come between us. You understand that?"

"Very well. Very well, Mike."

"Okay. We understand each other. Anything I say, you quote me, I'll deny it." But the things he wanted to say were bubbling on his lips. "For divorce purposes, I guess you're mainly interested in the men in her life."

"It isn't the only consideration. You said you had to keep her out of trouble."

"Yeah, sure. It's one of my services to my clients. I try to be like a father to them, Bill."

"What kind of trouble did you keep her out of?"

"She wasn't good at handling money, and she only drew four-oh-oh per week. Big ideas on a small salary can play hell with your credit. She had a lot of credit trouble."

"You mean debts?"

He nodded.

"What was her original name?"

"Let me think." He screwed up his face in a chimpanzee expression. "It was an unusual name, completely impossible for any serious purposes. I dreamed up the Holly May name to suit the personality I tailored for her. Holly May—Holly Day—Holiday. Get the connection? Holiday. A girl you could have fun with." He fell silent.

"Dotty," he said then. "Döttery. Dec-oh-tee-ee-are-ay." He saw the change in my face. "Is there something there?"

"Could be," I said suavely. "Döttery" was one of the names in the old newspaper article in Gaines's wallet. "Not, what about the men in her life?"

"I'd see her with young escorts on the Strip from time to time, but mostly she preferred older men. The boy she was very much interested in, for a while."

"When was this?"

"I used to see them last year, last spring and summer, in the clubs."

"What was his name?"

"I don't remember. I didn't pay him much attention."

"Does the name Larry Gaines mean anything? Or Harry Haines?"

"Maybe I can't say for sure." He was being careful.

I brought out my picture of Larry Gaines, got up, and laid it on his desk. "Do you recognize this man?"

Speare studied the picture. "It's him."

I found Dr. Simeon in the cold room. He was laying out cutting tools on a stainless-steel table. Light from a ceiling lamp splashed on his clean white smock like luminous paint. The chrome instruments, knives and saws, gleamed under his rubber-gloved fingers. Almost hidden by his shadow, a body lay under a sheet on a second table against the back wall.

"Come in," he said hospitably. "I promised to get in touch with you after I'd done a thorough job on Broadman. I finished him up this afternoon, but you're a hard man to reach."

"I had to leave town. I appreciate your going to all this trouble."

"No trouble. In fact, I owe you something. You saved me from making a mistake. I don't say I wouldn't have caught it in the normal course, but I've established that Broadman died of asphyxia."

It just happened by chance that Sergeant Granada found another corpse—or did it? Continue the story tomorrow.

Stone Image Of An Indian God Found In Desert

By EDWARD S. KITCH

CHICAGO (AP)—Although it resembles a baker's gingerbread boy, to the ancient southwestern Pueblo Indians it was the holiest of holies—the creator of all things.

The "boy" is a stone image uncovered recently in a desert dig near the Little Colorado River.

It was found during an expedition by the Chicago Natural History Museum and the National Science Foundation.

Despite the mystery that surrounds it, it may enable archaeologists to shine new light on the cultural and religious history of the early southwestern Indian.

Dr. Paul S. Martin, chief curator of anthropology of the Chicago museum, says the effigy is one of the most important discoveries he has unearthed in 32 years of searching the deserts for Indian lore.

Digging in the ancient ruins of a great kiva—a primitive church, the scientists uncovered the eight-inch stone image stored in a crypt for six centuries.

The specialists believe it was a god or a goddess, but its power was short-lived because the Pueblo Indians lived in this particular area only 75 years after settling there in A.D. They probably left because of flash floods.

Why they left their god securely hidden when they moved away is one of the questions the scientists are seeking to answer.

Discovery of the image was accidental. It happened while Dr. Martin and his men were scraping the kiva floor for traces of pollen from vegetation that thrived during the "good" years the Indians lived there.

Scientists are able to identify the pollen so as to date the change from one crop to another through the years.

The unique effigy was used in religious ceremonies. The fact that a ring-slab entry resembled hatchways on the roofs of smaller ceremonial chambers also is significant.

The Pueblo Indians believed—and still believe today—that their ancestors emerged into the world through just such a passage from their place of origin in the underworld.

Thus every time the god was removed from the crypt for a ceremonial occasion, it may have been a symbolic of the Indians' ancestral emergence from the underworld.

French Town Seeks To Retain GI Basketballer

By DAVID MASON

PONT L'ÉVEQUE, France (AP)—This little Normandy town has adopted an American GI and has appealed to President Kennedy to let him stay in France to complete his education.

The GI, incidentally, happens to be a mainstay on the local basketball team. He is SP4 John H. Givens, 24, of Milwaukee, Wis.

Givens, stationed with the Army Aerial Support Center at nearby St. Andre, warmed up to his French surroundings almost from the moment he arrived in December 1959. It was through his basketball skill that he became acquainted in Pont l'Éveque.

Givens had played on YMCA and high school basketball teams in Milwaukee and found a spot as a forward on the local Army squad. He soon was hooping baskets in Pont l'Éveque and in early 1960 got taken on as center or forward.

Local families set aside a room for him on game nights and he eats at the family table. His French developed to the point where conversation flows easily.

Everything was going well until Givens announced he was booked to return to the States next June. The local citizenry, unknown to Givens, got together and Bernard Chauvière, president of the Pont l'Éveque Sports Union, drafted a letter to President and Mrs. Kennedy.

"Mr. Givens epitomizes the friendship of France and the United States," Chauvière wrote, and then he added two requests:

1. That Givens be given a grant so he can study at the nearby University of Caen after he completes his military service in France.
2. That Mrs. Kennedy become the sponsor of the Pont l'Éveque basketball team.

The letter was sent to the American embassy in Paris and was forwarded to the State Department for the White House.

"This all came as a big surprise to me," Givens told a reporter. "I don't know what to say."

Issue Warnings To Hay Buyers

RALEIGH — Warnings to hay buyers were issued today by the grain section of the North Carolina Department of Agriculture's markets division.

"Much hay of inferior quality is coming into the state," William E. Lane, grain section head, said. The short hay crop this year has caused the import influx, Lane said, and "much of it coming in is ungraded and of poor quality."

Lane had these suggestions for hay buyers: (1) Buy quality hay based on U.S. Grades. (2) If the grade of hay received is questionable, call for inspection by a specialist from the NCDA grain section. (3) When buying hay from out-of-state sources request this statement from the shipper: "The hay in this shipment has not been treated with a hydrocarbon insecticide and is free of harmful residue."

North Carolina as long been a hay-deficit state, Lane said, and other states often export only their lesser quality hay. Too, he said, many states "do not have as strict enforcement of regulations as North Carolina concerning the use of pesticides which may leave harmful residues on the crop."

Plenty Of Grain Storage Space Is Needed; Here's How It Was Found

Plenty of storage space—that's what Provert Lassiter feels he needs, and he has found a way to go about getting it.

On his farm north of Greenville he has five metal bins that provide a storage capacity of approximately 15,000 bushels.

How did Lassiter go about getting the bins?

His first step was to arrange for financing the cost of the bins. In the fall of 1959, Lassiter felt he must have at least three metal bins in order to begin to solve his storage problem.

He contacted a local firm who sold bins and discovered the total unerecited cost of the bins. Then he went to the Pitt County Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation office and made application for a loan to erect three 3,100-bushel bins.

The local ASC County Committee—composed of J. Lyman Edwards, chairman; William F. Tyson, vice chairman; and A. Poe Worthington, regular member—considered Lassiter's needs for storage and made a loan commitment for 80 per cent of the unerecited cost of these bins.

The loan was to be repaid in four equal annual installments with an interest rate of four per cent on the unpaid balance. The first installment came due on the anniversary date of the loan.

Lassiter was notified of the loan commitment immediately. His next steps were to notify the dealer that the loan commitment had been made, and to arrange to have the bins erected.

He did this. Then he paid the dealer 20 per cent of the unerecited cost of the bins as a downpayment, and furnished the county ASC office with a statement to this effect.

A representative of the county ASC committee inspected the bins and found them to be properly erected and securely anchored. Lassiter then visited the county ASC office and executed a chattel mortgage and promissory note.

The mortgage was recorded in the county register of deeds office and the amount of the loan commitment was disbursed to the firm who had erected the bins. Securing these bins "helped a great deal," Lassiter says, but did not solve the storage problem completely.

In 1960, Lassiter went through the same procedure and installed two additional bins to boost his storage capacity to around 15,000 bushels. The last two bins have a heater and blower attachment, also financed by an ASC loan. This blower can be used at any time with either of the two bins to keep the stored grain in condition.

Lassiter is quick to point out that the bins have been "a mighty valuable asset" to his farming operations.

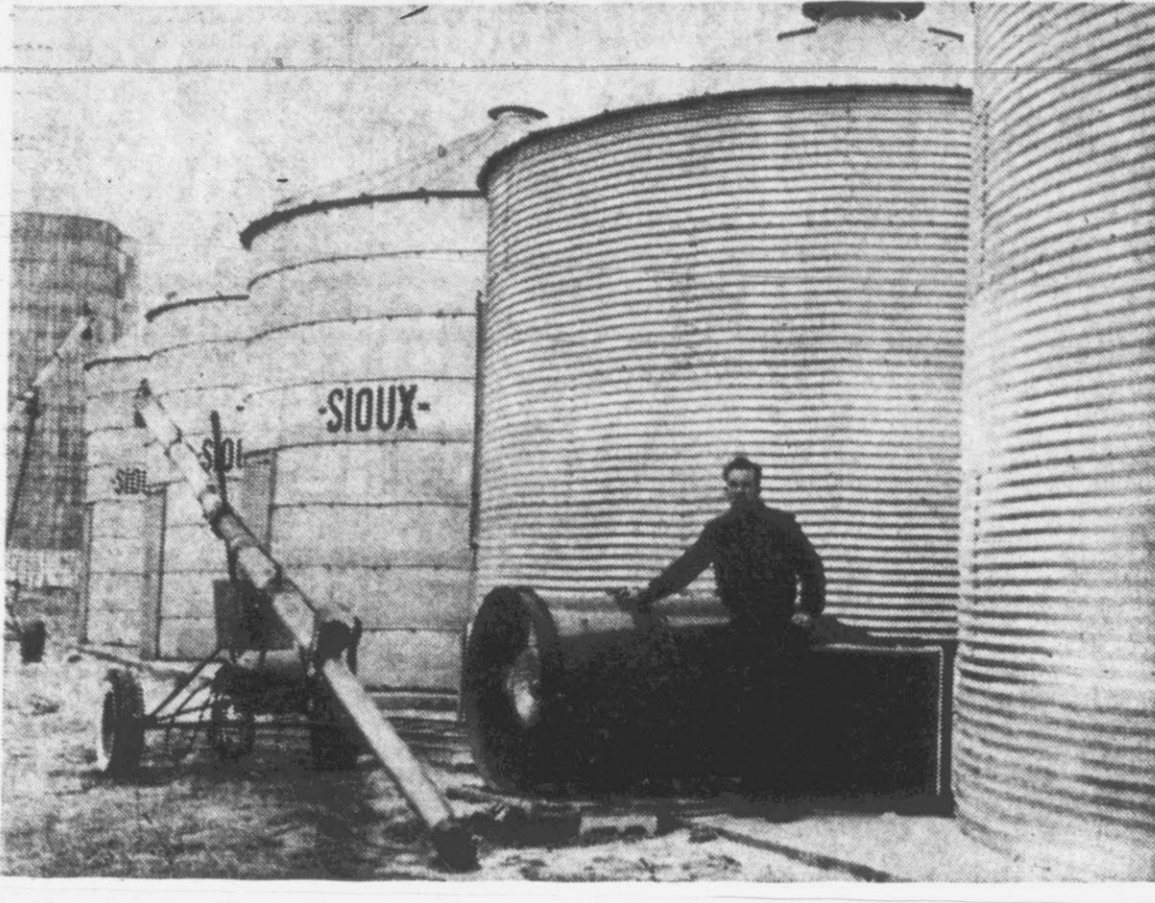

At present, all five bins are filled with corn. The corn is under loan to CCC at the rate of $1.15 per bushel. Lassiter plans to redeem the corn at a later date by paying the $1.15 per bushel plus interest of 3½ per cent per year on the loan.

He can make good use of the corn since he keeps approximately 200 brood sows and farrows, around 4,000 pigs, each year. Lassiter points out, that without adequate storage he would be forced to sell his corn "at harvest time when the market is low, and buy it back when the market prices are 40 to 50 cent higher."

ASC officials say:

"We believe any farmer who has a question as to whether or not adequate storage pays, could easily be convinced that it certainly does by talking with Mr. Lassiter."

"Many other farmers in Pitt County could profit from the example set by Mr. Lassiter. If you need additional storage why not contact the ASC office for more complete details?"

Twenty Trained Reporters On Job Premeasuring Crop Acreage

Twenty trained reporters today began premeasurement operations conducted by the Pitt County Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation program.

Trained Friday and Saturday by Pitt County personnel, the 20 reporters began the task of measuring a total of 8,744 acres of tobacco, corn and peanut cropland on 523 Pitt County farms.

The acreage to be premeasured accounts to about 20 per cent of the total 40,554 acres of allotted crops in the county, according to ASC figures.

Premeasurement is a service furnished by the ASC program but paid for by the farmers requesting their allotted-crop fields to be measured before planting season.

Each reporter was given specialized classroom training as well as field training before receiving work assignments. The acreage on each of the first 15 farms completed by each reporter is computed in the county office as a doublecheck for accuracy. In addition, the work in the field and office is spotchecked continuously to eliminate any error which may be recurring in the reporters' work.

Farms that have their allotted acres measured will have the fields designated for specific commodities marked with red and white flags. If the commodity is planted within the staked area, the farm is considered by ASC to be planted within its 1961 allotment.

The charge for the service is $1 per acre plus $3 for each farm premeasured. ASC officials report "this is the actual cost to our office for doing the work."

Feb. 15 is the deadline for making applications for premeasurement. ASC officials have urged farmers desiring the service to visit the ASC office in Greenville as soon as possible.

PREMEASUREMENT MECHANICS . . . were demonstrated for 20 reporters last week by Kenneth Allen (left) and M. M. Teel of the ASC office.

Tobacco

Tips

By S. J. WELLS
Pitt County Tobacco Agent

At this season of the year many farmers are taking soil samples from different fields on their farms so that soil tests can be made for fertilizer and lime recommendations. Lime is applied to neutralize soil acidity and furnish calcium and magnesium.

In 1959 approximately 35 per cent of the fields tested for fertilizer and lime recommendations for tobacco production needed 1,000 or more pounds of lime per acre. All fields with a pH (soil acidity index) below 5.2 need 1,000 pounds of lime per acre for best tobacco production.

Additional lime is also needed on tobacco fields that have a low amount of calcium present. For these fields lime is recommended even when the pH is in the desirable range of 5.2 to 6.3.

In addition to correcting the pH, calcium and magnesium content of the soil, the use of lime improves the soil in other ways. It improves the bacterial activity which aids in decomposing organic matter and releasing nitrogen. Applications of limestone also increase the availability of phosphorus and other elements in the soil.

Another beneficial effect of raising the soil pH by liming is to reduce the solubility of aluminum and iron. Under extremely acid conditions the concentration of these elements in soluble form may be great enough to cause reduced plant growth.

Dolomitic limestone is recommended when lime is needed. In addition to calcium, dolomitic limestone supplies magnesium which is essential to plant growth. Calcitic limestone and marl supply only calcium.

If you have not already had your soil tested, plan to do so soon — so that you can know the complete nutrient requirements for producing a good crop this year.

North Carolina growers of late spring onions report intentions to plant 300 acres in 1961, compared to 400 in 1960. This includes only those to be sold as dry onions—not the acreage for fresh green onions.
