slow resolution. Edwards complained that procedure in naming four at-large state convention delegates and alternates was being handled improperly. The four delegates were elected at-large, contrary to the Pitt custom of assigning one delegate to each precinct and then prorating the remaining (17 in this case) convention votes among the larger-voting precincts, when Chicod 3, Falkland, Greenville 2 and Grimesland 2 failed to answer the roll call. Belvoir was also unrepresented but had assigned its delegate to Greenville 7.

The Pitt County Medical and Dental Society took the action Thursday at their regular meeting. This means the oral vaccine probably will not be available here this summer. Bulletin

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Kennedy was reported today to have ordered units of the U.S. 7th Fleet into the Southeast Asian area because of military advances of Communist-supported forces in Laos.

Official reports there was great reluctance to have American troops involved in the fighting. Although that possibility was reviewed by Kennedy, he is said to have preferred other alternatives at least for the moment. Priority importance was indicated on measures to show U.S. power in the region of Southeast Asia and to use it in such a way to bolster the defenses of the area where possible.

Pitt's 42 delegates and the same number of alternate delegates to next Thursday's State Democratic Convention in Raleigh. Elected by the convention, attended by about 160 representatives of the county's 25 voting precincts' Democratic organizations, to serve on the committee for two years were: State Executive Committee — Mrs. Emma Sumerell of Ayden, an incumbent, and J. B. Spilman of Greenville.

Election of Pitt's Democratic representatives followed unanimous adoption of a resolution introduced by Hugh Winslow of Greenville calling for the change. The convention also elected Clifton W. Everett of Bethel and W. H. Watson of Greenville. Solicitor District Committee — David E. Reid Jr. of Greenville and M. K. Porter, an incumbent.

All nine committee members were elected unanimously. State Sen. Robert L. Humber in seconding a motion to adopt the resolution, said he found in the resolution "recognition of the principle the Democratic Party has stood for."

Humber's seconding address drew the heartiest applause during the one-hour-plus convention. A 15-minute interlude during which Jack R. Edwards of Greenville objected to Democratic Chairman J. Henry Harrell's parliamentary procedure separate first business of the convention, nomination of state convention delegates by precinct caucus, and the introduction and adoption of the Winslow resolution.

Goldberg announced the resignation had been accepted and said: "It is regrettable that this has happened. Under the circumstances, Mr. Holleman has taken the proper course of action."

Measure To Fall By Own Weight

The unsuccessful effort to end Senate debate on the proposed federal voter qualification legislation increases speculation that the measure will fall of its own weight rather than being enacted into law.

It must be recognized, however, that the overwhelming defeat of the cloture move does not mean that an equal number of Senators are against enactment of the proposed legislation. Only rarely has the Senate invoked its debate-limiting provision on any issue and on no occasion has this rule been effectively employed to end a debate on a matter which carried the civil rights label.

It is also significant that the motion to table the measure, and effect kill it, was also rejected overwhelmingly by the Senate. This reflects sentiment in favor of the legislation itself even though the Senate was unwilling to cut off debate in an effort to force its enactment.

The Senate leadership has announced it will make another attempt to shut off debate on the matter, but being short of the required two-thirds majority by 21 votes, it is highly doubtful that enough votes will be switched in the meantime to force a vote on the issue.

Big Promise In Food Industry

By DR. W.M. ROBERTS
Head Department of Food Science and Processing
N. C. State College
Guest Writer

North Carolina stands at one of those rare and often fleeting moments in history when a culmination of forces suddenly offer an opportunity for monumental progress.

If we act with promptness, wisdom and determination, we can develop a food industry in this state that will be a worthy companion to our famous tobacco, textile and wood products industries.

I am enthusiastic about expanding our food industry for one primary reason: it will benefit more than others; but here is one opportunity that truly offers "something for everyone."

Let me show you what I mean: FARMERS — Food processing will mean more income for our farmers, and more stable and larger market for their products.

Agricultural income in North Carolina has been rising steadily in recent years, often at a faster rate than the national average. We are proud of this progress. But at the same time we know that our farm people need more income. They simply have not been sharing equitably in our national prosperity.

While fresh markets will continue to be a major part of our food industry, we know that these markets are limited and are often characterized by instability.

When I was on the farm, my father tried to increase our family income by growing fresh market vegetables. We would ship the vegetables to market not knowing if we would get a check or a freight bill.

Sweet potatoes are an example of the larger market offered by a processing industry. In every crop of sweet potatoes, there are jumbos and canners which have little or no value on the fresh market. Without a processing industry, these potatoes must either be thrown away or fed to stock.

PROCESSORS — Expansion of our food industry will naturally mean more business for our processors. Often the value added to our foods by processing exceeds their original farm value.

In 1961, for example, the farm value of our milk was about $65 million. But by the time it had been processed or made into by-products it has a sales value of $160 million.

Processing increased the $8 million value of our seafood crop by an additional $9 million; the $170 million farm value of our poultry by $35 million. As our standard of living rises and homemakers demand even more convenience foods, we can expect the processing share of the food dollar to rise even higher.

EMPLOYEES — Our dairy industry, which was almost nonexistent 20 years ago, now provides a livelihood for 100,000 North Carolinians.

Expansion of other phases of our food processing industry will create comparable job opportunities. Some farmers can expect to find entirely new jobs by specializing in the production of commodities for processing. The industry itself will need skills ranging from those of laborer to bacteriologist. With the disturbing out-of-state migration of so many of our finest young people, is there any doubt that we need the jobs that this industry will create?

SERVICE INDUSTRIES — Food processing plants require an almost endless string of services: water, power, financing, transportation, construction, communications. Then, top, the farmer who produced the raw product must also have services and supplies. In 1961, North Carolina farmers used about $400 million worth of services and supplies in producing commodities valued at about $1.2 billion.

ALLIED INDUSTRIES — Food processing industries create the need for other industries. In Western North Carolina, for example, Ball Glass Company established a plant across the street from Gerber Foods Company. International Paper Company built a plant in Raleigh to make paper milk containers for dairy plants in the area.

CONSUMERS — North Carolinians who do not work directly or indirectly with our food industry are still consumers. And it has been the consumer who has benefited most of all from the advances of America's food industry. We spend about 20 per cent of our disposable income for food, while the average Russian spends 30 per cent. We, as consumers, have variety; 7,000 items in the average grocery store as compared to 1,000 in 1930. And we, as consumers, have convenience in our ready-to-cook foods.

The list of benefits which come from food processing could go on. But perhaps these are enough to explain my enthusiasm for the future of this industry in our state.

We have made some measurable progress already. Last year, food processing was about a $35 billion business in North Carolina. It should be twice that within 10 years.

Those who have opposed the legislation, and continue to do so, are on good ground. The problem proponents of the measure seek to overcome is not in the literacy requirements of the individual states pertaining to voters qualification, but rather the manner in which those requirements are administered. No one should be denied the right to vote by unfair administration of the literacy requirements. At the same time, the federal government should not encroach upon the right of the states to set voter qualifications.

Passage of the proposed federal legislation on literacy requirements for voting would not eradicate the evil of unfair administration of the state requirements that now exists in some isolated sections.

Unofficial Power Can Be Very Effective

By throwing the weight of his administration behind the move to prevent further rapid inflation in the U.S. economy, President Kennedy has illustrated again that the unofficial power in the hands of the chief executive can often be as effective as the official authority he has.

The President, by his personal action, thwarted efforts by big steel companies to make a $6 per ton price increase stick in the steel industry. He has now made it clear to major labor organizations of the country that he expects labor as well as management to play a part in holding the line against a new wage-price spiral.

It is not likely that there will be no increases in wages or prices for the remainder of the Kennedy administration, but it is evident even now that the President's efforts in this field have been effective in averting another sharp inflationary spiral.

The President has made it clear that his administration will follow a course pointed toward holding inflation at a minimum rate. Although this course may not be implemented with official wage-price fixing, the administration, nevertheless has shown that its influence can be used to accomplish the goal without wage-price legislation.

There can be no doubt that the administration can do a more effective job of holding inflation down through its present tactics than it could by risking a congressional fight over whether or not to institute specific controls on wages and prices.

Facing Up To Reluctant Allies

By JAMES MARLOW
WASHINGTON (AP) — For many years there has been a reluctance — at least publicly — by the American government to belt its Allies, even when they dragged their feet or got downright obstructive.

The Kennedy Administration seems to be melting some of this reluctance. But nothing visible yet shows that President Kennedy has reached a decision to get tough. He's only in the chastising stage now.

A couple of examples came in this past week from Kennedy and his secretary of defense, Robert McNamara.

Ever since last summer Kennedy has been sweating out the job of trying to cool off the Berlin crisis and reach some agreement that will calm the Russians and still be acceptable to the Allies, particularly West Germany.

Then in the past few weeks the West German government of Chancellor Adenauer has been belittling the American efforts and ideas. President De Gaulle of France wouldn't even approve negotiating at all.

Kennedy has been trying to avoid a showdown Berlin crisis which could lead to war in Europe. The disdainful De Gaulle stood aloof, doing nothing although such a war could overwhelm him.

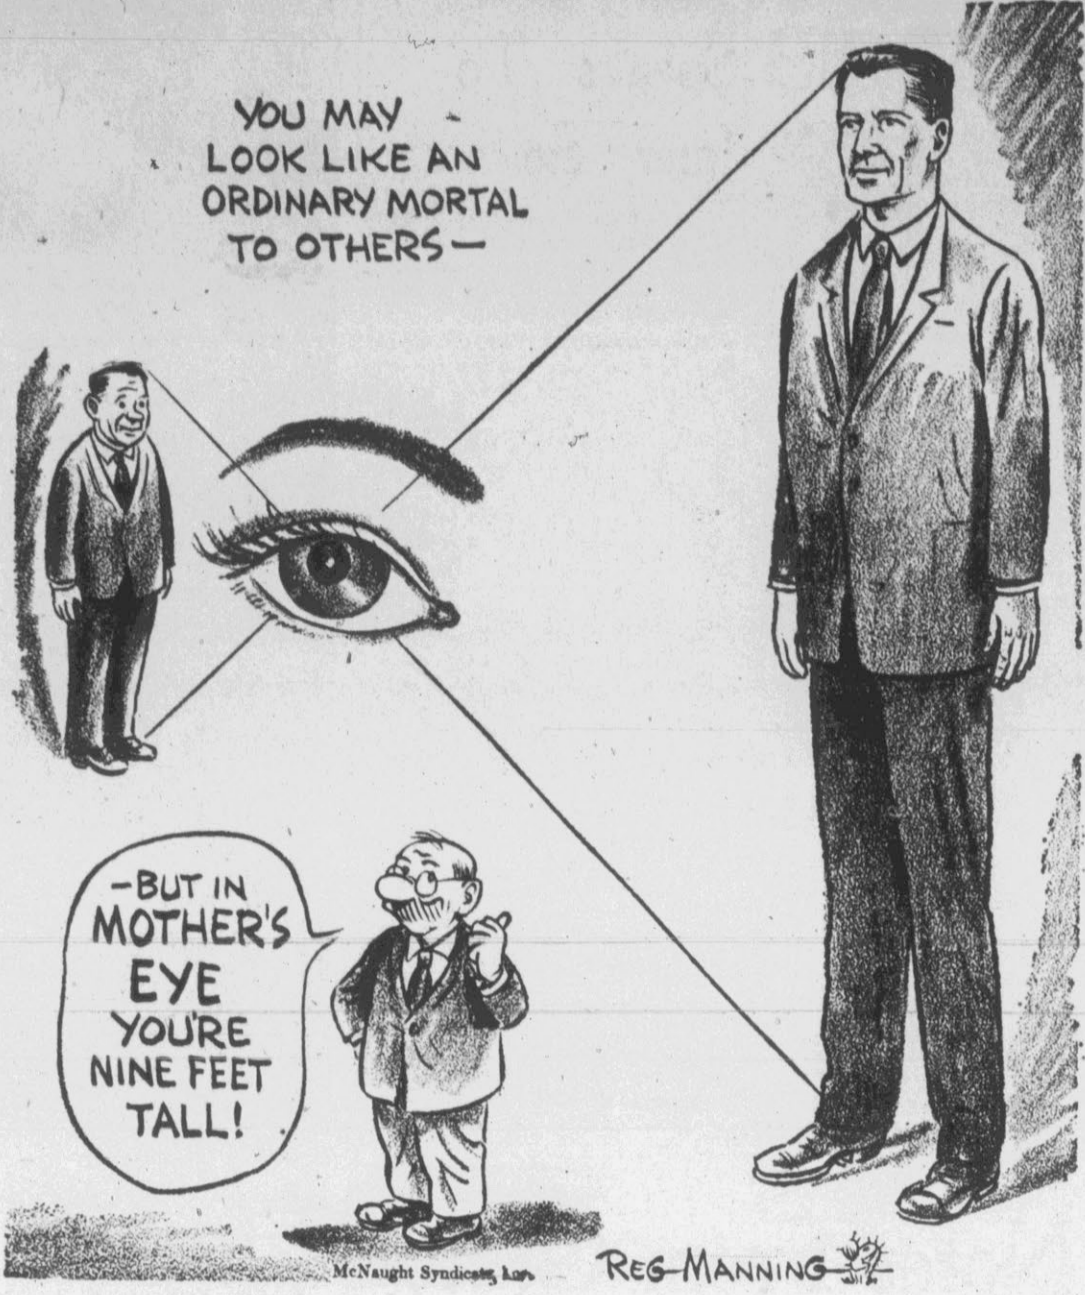

In his news conference this week, just after Adenauer had scoffed at the arrangements this administration was trying to work out on Berlin, the President let go.

He said the United States had done more than any other nation to guarantee the freedom of the West Berliners — over whom Adenauer expresses so much concern — and would bear the brunt of any conflict with the Russians.

For that reason, he said, "We have some rights to at least explore" the possibility of a solution.

But this could be taken as a double crack at De Gaulle who hasn't yet fulfilled his share of the Allied agreements on how many men and divisions would be put at the disposal of that organization in case of war.

This is where Kennedy seemed to be aiming at the Frenchman: "He said 'It isn't difficult to say you shouldn't do this or that, and at the same time some

Seasonal Cleanup Binge

By HAL BOYLE

NEW YORK (AP)—If cleanliness is next to godliness, most people this time of year are rubbing elbows with heaven.

Now is the time when housewives at home and bosses in the office go on their annual spring tidying up spree.

I hate this seasonal emotional binge because it threatens the lifetime of considered disorder I have let pile up on my desk—my empire of disarray.

One by one the messengers of order from buck private to vice president — ride up with the query: "Everybody else has cleaned up his desk, so why can't you? Aren't you getting tired of playing the role of an indoor Huck Finn?" The answer is a firm "No."

The urge to a uniform office cleanliness is just one more form of hysteria in a mad world, a succumbing to the universal brainwashing and the fear of being found out to be different.

Any coward can clean off his desk and make it look as anonymous as everybody else's desk. But it takes courage to give your desk the stamp of your identity.

My theory is this: I don't feel like everybody else — or anybody else. Why shouldn't, therefore, my desk share this liberty? Why should it be a shining zero, indistinguishable from the rows of gleaming desks around it?

A desk that is always neat is like a person who always has his hair combed — clean, but suspiciously unhuman. What emptiness of dream is all that polished perfection hiding?

A fac and a desk—so runs my reasoning—both should reflect a personality and show a lived-in look.

Naturally this attitude ends up by making a man an unwilling rebel. If you enjoy having a desk that looks like a quarter section of a city dump, you have to fight the forces of office order to keep it that way.

I don't have a sign saying "Think!" on the wall behind me. I have signs saying, "Don't throw it away!" and "Beware of creeping cleanliness."

My favorite office hero is the late Kansas editor, William Allen White, whose famous rollop desk was perhaps the most disorderly in the history of American journalism. White's theory was that when a pile of mail became too high and toppled to the floor it was time to pick it up, open the envelopes—and then respond to the letters that really required an answer.

This simple labor-saving device enabled the justly renowned editor to conserve his energy, live to a ripe old age, and write the obituaries or biographies of many of his neater contemporaries.

The trouble with devoting a lifetime to the creation of a truly memorable desk is that when you come to make out your will you have a problem. Who can you leave it to?

Other Editors Saying Driver Training Courses

(Rocky Mount Telegram)

One method of reducing the great number of accidents on our roads today is the proper teaching of good driving habits to our youngsters. Such training would then carry over into their adult years. Good habits are as difficult to break as bad ones. Good driving habits mean safe drivers.

State education officials from around the country met in Winston-Salem recently to discuss this problem. While agreeing that driver training is important they think it should be extended to federal support of such a program. After all, they reason, if the federal government builds roads it also has the responsibility to put people on the highways who know something about driving.

It seems reasonable to assume that if we are going to do the job right we are going to need more support. As a means of furthering the driver training program the group in Winston-Salem recommended that the federal government eliminate the 10 percent federal excise tax on cars loaned to schools for driver training.

Most of the 12,000 cars used at various high school programs around the country are provided free by dealers, many of whom say they need the tax relief to continue the program.

The February issue of Popular Government, which was concerned mainly with the accident problem in North Carolina, points out that driver training in the horse and buggy days was a family affair, in an era when autos were few and far between. But by the 1930's the need for more and better training was apparent and driver licensing pointed up the need of every driver to know the rules of the road and how to drive a car in traffic.

This need became imperative in 1947 when North Carolina set up tests for new drivers and old drivers alike. Somehow drivers had to learn enough to pass these tests—by personal study and observation or private instruction, for there were no driver training courses.

Today North Carolina has a rather comprehensive driver training program in our high schools. In 1960, 173 administrative units gave driving courses for 43,920 high school students. In addition to such courses the state provides driver improvement clinics for those whose licenses have been suspended, who have racked up too many traffic points and for volunteers wanting the instruction.

The Institute of Government is working with Driver Education officials of the Motor Vehicle Department and with high school and college teachers on their driver training program. This work is speeding and expanding in answer to the governor's call. It will help, obviously, but it must be made extensive enough and comprehensive enough to reach all across the state. With such an effective program the results in years to come will prove startling.

Often Heard Fears

By GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY
Copyright, 1962, King Features Syndicate, Inc.

This is a paragraph of a letter from New York lawyer: "I believe that Kennedy has deliberately surrounded himself with Socialists, that he aims to tamper with our economic life to the detriment of the people who are losing control of their own existence, and I think that you and others, whose writings influence the public opinion and frighten candidates, should protest against the trend. We older ones owe this obligation to our children and grandchildren who will be the innocent victims of Socialism after we are gone."

Why is he so frightened? He believes that we are on the verge of socialism. I have heard that outcry since I was a small child. It was heard here in New York when William Randolph Hearst ran for Mayor in 1909. It was then claimed that Hearst was a socialist who would destroy business when, as a matter of fact, he was a capitalist who was building a big business. It was said of Theodore Roosevelt when he interfered in labor-management matters, particularly in the coal strikes. It was said of Gifford Pinchot when he fought for conservation of our natural resources. It was said of Upton Sinclair when he fought against the pollution of our food. It is always said about anyone who uncovers a scandal or offers a reform.

But socialism is clearly definable: it is government ownership of the means of production and distribution and exchange. There are many kinds of socialists. For instance, George Bernard Shaw was a socialist because he believed that poverty is a sin. Beatrice and Sidney Webb, who were the heart and soul of British Fabian Socialism, would, in this country, have been called reformers and their proposals were not as radical as those of the elder La Follette. In this country, neither Eugene V. Debs nor Norman Thomas were socialists of the Bolshevik stripe and among Communists they would be regarded as Utopians, as dreamers for a better world without the willingness to be revolutionary to achieve it.

No President of the United States has been a socialist. Andrew Jackson was, at worst, a precursor of the Populists. Theodore Roosevelt, in retrospect, must be regarded as one who rescued American capitalism from its own excesses. The Marxists say that capitalism contains the seeds for its own destruction. We have been fortunate in this country that whenever those seeds grew into gallstones, some way appeared to do some major surgery without killing the patient.

The Sherman Anti-Trust Law is an example of precisely such an operation and it is often forgotten that it was the conservative William Howard Taft who did most to enforce this law. These days one hears much in complaint of the Supreme Court, but were it not for the early decisions of Chief Justice John Marshall, it is very doubtful if this nation could have survived at all, because he defined the relations between the powerful States and the weak Federal Government.

Strength For Today

By EARL L. DOUGLASS
HEADLINES

Some people would rather make the headlines than achieve anything else in life. It is said of some criminals that they are glad to go to the electric chair or the gas chamber if they can just see their pictures often enough in the papers and read about their crime in the headlines.

Yet what good do headlines do us? We can be in the headlines through scandal just as much as through achievement. After we have had a headline — if we fancy headlines — we are hungry and thirsty — we have another. And if we happen to be in that station of life whereby headlines are a common — perhaps daily — occurrence for us, we get so sick of them that we wonder how anyone with any sense in his head could desire them.

Almost every one of us thinks he wants more than anything in the world something he does not have. Human experience has proven, however, that when we set those coveted things we are appalled to find them utterly disappointing. We thought they would bring life, they bring astonishment and boredom.

Ask the men who have plenty of headlines whether they like them or not. Most of those that are honest will definitely say No. The world is so full of a number of things that we are foolish and off the beam entirely if we waste our time longing for or seeking after headlines.

They don't pay and they don't satisfy.

Further Administration Steps

By ELMER ROESSNER
You can expect President Kennedy to take more steps to demonstrate that the Administration is really not anti-business. Some members of his cabinet will also make statements, speeches and rulings in efforts to convince the public that the White House truly loves free enterprise—but not too much.

The current slump in the stock market came too close after Mr. Kennedy's crackdown on U. S. Steel for political comfort. Investors, losing millions of dollars a day, are willing to believe that the President's blow has influenced that tremendously important intangible — confidence — and is thereby undermining the market.

The fact that the market showed signs of dipping before the President pummeled Big Steel into crying "Uncle!" will be overlooked or forgotten by many. Those that remember will note that the President's action did not stop the slide.

And if the slide turns into a recession, you can count on the Republican National Committee pinning the "Kennedy depression" tail on the Democratic donkey.

That's why you can expect considerable propaganda intended to show that Kennedy loves business and that the boom will rise again.

CANADIAN OPPORTUNITIES
Look for: More investments in Canada. Efforts of the Canadian government to establish the Canadian dollar at 92½ cents is interesting many investors. That means that for each 92½ cents in U. S. money they can get $1 worth of income-producing Canadian property. The Canadian government planned it that way.

A flow of dollars across the border would, of course, create a fresh drain on the American gold supply.

In addition, Canadian Federal, provincial and local governments are eager to help American investments. Loan, trust and insurance companies are permitted to invest a small part of their assets in new equities and there is no limit on purchases of proven stock.

Look for: Higher prices for milk and similar cartons; the paper that goes into them has gone up in price.

Look for: A leveling off in inventories. While totals are $1 billion above 1959-60 highs, accumulations during the next six months are likely to be moderate. Lack of inventory rises may brake any boom tendencies this year.

OLD PROMOTER OFFERS WAYS TO RAISE MONEY
"I see," said the Old Promoter during his visit today, "that the Administration has decided to collect taxes on children's croquet balls to help balance the budget."
"There was some sort of item," I said.
"If the government really needs money, why not a tax on those plastic rubber plants? They are an abomination and an affront to the Almighty," he said. "Why not a tax on close-out sales that don't close stores? Or a tax on commercials that are louder than the program?"
"Or a tax on gentlemen of the old school who go around giving advice?" I put in.
"No comment!" he said, taking a handful of cigars from his pocket and stomping off in displeasure.

Theft Of Four Vehicles Charged To Craven Youth

Curtis Harris, 17-year-old Craven County Negro who jumped from a Highway Patrol car May 2 near the Pitt-Craven County line, has been charged with the theft of four vehicles and is in Pitt County jail under $6,000 bond.

Harris was picked up by members of the Highway Patrol after a vehicle, stolen from Greenville April 29, was found at Pitchkettle Landing. He jumped from the auto while being returned to Greenville.

Harris, in addition to being charged with that larceny, has been charged with the larceny of a New Bern policeman's car from near the police department April 22. Officers said that vehicle was driven to Grifton where it was wrecked while being pursued by the Grifton police.

Later that same night, Harris allegedly took a wrecker truck, owned by a Grifton garage, drove it to Pitchkettle Landing and backed it into the Neuse River.

The fourth auto larceny charge to be lodged against the youth stems from the larceny of a vehicle in New Bern on April 29.

Police said he admitted taking a station wagon, driving it to Greenville where it was found abandoned, then taking the car from here.

The vehicle stolen here was owned by Bright Leaf Motor Co. In addition to these charges, patrol officers said Harris will be charged with getting gas at two service stations, one between Ayden and Grifton and the second in Craven County, then driving off without paying for it.

Colony Returns 10,000 Refugees

HONG KONG (AP)—The Hong Kong government today announced that some 10,000 refugees from hunger-ridden Communist China have been rounded up and returned to the mainland in the past 11 days.

The government denied that a large group of Red Chinese troops and militia were among the refugees.

Five Hong Kong papers earlier reported that 300 Communist soldiers crossed the border into Hong Kong Wednesday, requesting asylum on Formosa.

The government announcement was the first official statement on the recent turnback of refugees from Red China. Hong Kong papers and eyewitnesses have reported the action.

The Hong Kong government's action caused concern among social workers here.

Roman Catholic Bishop Edward E. Swannstrom, auxiliary bishop of New York and executive director of Catholic Relief Services, toured the border area.

"I have cable an appeal to the highest authorities in Washington asking that some immediate, strong action be taken by the U.S. government in cooperation with other governments of the United Nations, on behalf of the escapees from Communist China," he said.

The Human Rights Council of Hong Kong urged the Hong Kong government to enlist organized international aid for refugees.

The Little Folk Win Their Case

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP)—The little folks won their case at nearby Springlee, an appropriately small city near Louisville. Won it at City Hall, right over the big ones, too.

The issue was ice cream. The town's children heard that adults were circulating a petition to bar ice cream vendors, so they got up a counter-petition. Both groups appeared at a recent Board of Trustees meeting. The big people had 45 signatures. The little people had 110.

Board Chairman Walter C. Hopkins, a big people, pronounced the majority victorious. As it happened, another big people, the city attorney, had already ruled the vendors could not be barred legally.

Wilson spent most of his life in Vanceboro and was graduated from the Vanceboro Farm Life High School in 1959. He enlisted in the U.S. Army in August 1959, and had been stationed in Germany most of that time with the Military Police. He was a member of the Vanceboro Pentecostal Holiness Church.

Next Astronaut Flight May 19

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP)—The scheduled orbital flight of astronaut Malcolm Scott Carpenter has slipped two days to May 19 because of trouble with the automatic control system in his space capsule.

Officials reported that the problem was minor but required extra time to correct. Difficulty with the control system plagued the orbital flight of both Enos the chimpanzee, and astronaut John H. Glenn Jr.

Carpenter, meanwhile, continued preparations for the flight, which is slated to be a three-orbit mission like Glenn's.

At Boulder, Colo., Carpenter's mother spoke with pride and confidence of her son's mission.

Mrs. Florence Carpenter said "The magnificence of the experience he is going to have is so great that it would minimize I would erase—any apprehension I might have."

Mrs. Carpenter, frail but articulate, was in high spirits at a press conference Thursday.

"Most people don't like to hear about other people's children, although they enjoy talking about their own," she said. "Scott's selection as an astronaut has given me freedom to talk about him all I choose, and I enjoy that."

New Constitution Voted By Michigan Convention

LANSING, Mich. (AP)—A new constitution to replace Michigan's present 54-year-old document has been approved by a constitutional convention that began on a note of bipartisan harmony and ended in bitter political wrangling.

After seven months and some three million words of debate, delegates adopted the proposed new constitution Friday, 99-44. The vote followed mainly along party lines, with Democrats generally opposed.

Ratification of the polls will be required before the product can become the basic law of the state.

Officials of the Democratic Party, including the governor—and powerful labor leaders have announced they probably will fight against adoption. A few rural area Republicans also indicated they were not happy over some provisions.

There is even a dispute over whether the proposed document will be placed on the ballot next November or in April 1963.

Adopted at a cost of more than $2 million for delegate salaries and other expenses, the proposed new constitution included changes in every article of the present document.

The new constitution would re-appoint the State Senate after the 1970 census on a formula giving a weight of 80 per cent for population and 20 per cent for area. Democrats insisted the re-districting should be a strict population basis.

Other changes in the proposed document included establishment of a Court of Appeals, one step below the State Supreme Court; a ban on a graduated state income tax; lengthening the term of governor from two years to four; and switching four top state offices from elective to appointive status.

Democrats insisted that, although they agreed with many of the provisions in the new draft, the over-all package was objectionable and did not deserve support over the present 1908 constitution.

Expected Recommend Quitting Nat'l Council

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP)—A standing committee of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S. (Southern) was expected today to recommend that the church withdraw from the National Council of Churches.

A source close to the Assembly said the expected committee recommendation will reverse the recommendation of the permanent Committee on Inter-Church Relations which has been published in the church's blue book.

John A. Fulton Jr. of Louisville, Ky., is chairman of the permanent committee; the Rev. R. T. L. Liston of Bristol, Tenn., is chairman of the standing committee.

The recommendation of the permanent committee was: "That the General Assembly affirm: 'Programs, pronouncements and policies of the National Council of Churches are produced through Democratic processes in representative assemblies. Under such circumstances it is impractical that all such programs, pronouncements and policies be always uniformly agreeable to all participating communions.'

"Responsible participation does not in any way obligate or bind the Presbyterian Church in the U.S. to endorse or approve of the actions and positions of the National Council of Churches. However such actions and positions always should be given our serious and prayerful consideration."

The reported recommendation of the standing committee to withdraw was expected to be presented on the floor of the General Assembly today. The commissioners (delegates) will take the final action.

At least three overtures are before the assembly requesting withdrawal from the national council. They are from the Presbyteries of Central Mississippi, and Enoree and Harmony, both in South Carolina.

The assembly has delayed action on a proposal to allow women to become ordained officers of the church on an equal basis with men.

Pitt's Company In Thick Of Battle

By JOHN G. DUNCAN

The battle of Plymouth, N. C., was fought on April 20, 1864. The town on the Roanoke would resound of shot and shell.

Company "G" In July 1861 two Greenville men, E. C. Yellowly and A. J. Hines issued the following circular: "One Hundred Men Wanted For the First Regiment of State Troops."

Recruits will be enlisted at Greenville, Pitt County, by the undersigned until the company is formed. E. C. Yellowly, Capt. A. J. Hines, 1st Lieut.

Water Under the Bridge Much water would flow under the bridge until that Wednesday, April 20, 1864 that found the Eighth with other parts of Ransom's Brigade thrown into line across the Columbia

Road. The April dawn was misty and cool. The fields lay damp and all was still. It was a stillness that speaks softly, but ominously about things to come—the stillness before a storm of shots and shells.

Quietly a battery of artillery slipped into position on the left of the Eighth Regiment. Signal rockets broke the silence—their starlike fire arching high over the town. The artillery battery broke into a roar; the regiment and the rest of Ransom's Brigade moved out. The artillery fire poured into Fort Comfort. This place was the target of the 35th Regiment. As the regiment neared the Fort, the Artillery Battery ceased firing.

Fort Williams Across town about 2,000 feet from Conaby Redoubt, was the strongly held Fort Williams. It was about 500 feet from Lee's Mill Road, at the foot of Jefferson St. The men of the Eighth charged up to the fort to find it surrounded by a ditch. The ditch proved to be an unsurmountable obstacle.

The Yankees poured a murderous fire into the Confederate ranks. Two courses were left to the Southern soldiers; they could fall back or surrender. They choose to fall back and then the Yankees really let them have it.

Fearful volley, after volley hit in the ranks of the retreating men. Many were killed and wounded. History says this charge against the fort was unnecessary. It was done under the flush of victory and not on order of the commanding general.

The fort being surrounded, surrendered anyway in a few hours. The Eighth fell back to lick its wounds. Time was on the Confederate side—for a while at least the town on the Roanoke would be free from the Yankees who had owned the place for a year or more.

The fierce fighting continued from street to street. The Yankees fought hard to hold on to the town. Their year's story in time had given them ample time to fortify many places. But the Confederates under young General F. Hoke poured the lead to them. Hoke was only 27 years old at the time.

Victory Victory was sweet—the Yankees lost a total of 2,707 men, killed, wounded, and missing. In addition they lost 28 pieces of artillery, 500 horses, 5,000 stands of arms and immense supplies.

It also gave the Confederates a strong base of operations for further forays against Federal shipping on the Albemarle and Pamlico sounds.

The Cost

The Confederates lost about 125 killed and between 400 and 500 wounded. The Eighth North Carolina suffered the most. About one-third of its total force of 154 men were killed and wounded. The Eighth, came into the battle by chance. It belonged to Clingman's Brigade and had been temporarily substituted for the Forty-ninth North Carolina, which had been detailed to picket duty on the Chowan. Lieutenant L. D. Langley and Sergeant J. T. Turnage of Company "G" were among those killed.

The Road

The road for the men of the Eighth Regiment lay hard and bloody ahead. They fought at New Bern and then went on to Virginia and took part in battles at Drewry's Bluff. This fight cost them 100 men. Here Captain A. J. Hines was wounded.

ed. Cold Harbor cost the Eighth every officer it had and the men from Pitt lost heavily. At Fort Harrison on May 17th, Company "G" came out with only nine men left. Then came Fort Fisher and the dwindling ranks of the Eighth were cut down again.

At Greensboro the war ended for the three men left of Company "G" of the Eighth Regiment.

Their Finest Hour

Maybe history would say the finest hour of Company "G" was on that April morning of 1864. How at dawn, they swept on toward the town of Plymouth, the dew damp on their battle flag and the rebel yell on their lips. Here they tasted the salty taste of victory. The men who answered the circular put out by E. C. Yellowly and A. J. Hines had earned a place among the elite of the North Carolina fighting men.

Today

What remembrance is there today of the farmer, the merchant, the clerk and the school boy who went off to war?

Have they been gone too long—are their deeds lost in the shuffle of time?

Has the land grown too green with other things and forgotten the harsh redness of their days?

Their rusty arms have long been stacked on some distant hill—they had their rendezvous with death at some disputed barricade—and their battle banners fly only from the steeple of the years.

But there has been no real forgetting; for sometimes there is a stirring of the wind. And across the face of time, the thin gray line moves out—moves forward for one more charge against the foe. Perhaps from only between the pages of a book, or an old tale remembered and told again. But somehow, somewhere, the gray lines moves out and always will.

Reviews And Reflections

By JIM POINDEXTER

As was predicted here several months ago, Thomas M. Storke won a Pulitzer Prize last week.

Storke, 85-year-old editor of the News-Press of Santa Barbara, California, was cited for his exposure of the activities of the Birchers in his community. The prize in fiction went to Edwin O'Connor for his "The Edge of Sadness," the fine novel about an alcoholic Roman Catholic priest that was reviewed here last fall.

Source of Fiction?

A point of perennial interest among the critics is why there continue to be so many good novels coming out of the South. A few years ago, Donald Davidson of Vanderbilt reasoned that it was because Southerners tend not to view society in terms of scientific abstractions but as a collection of characters.

Now Flanery O'Connor, in an interview with Granville Hicks in the Saturday Review, has put more or less the same idea more succinctly by saying, "We don't discuss problems; we tell stories."

She goes on and adds two other fiction-producing characteristics of Southerners: a knowledge of the Bible and a sense of history. A sense of history, perhaps, but the claim for knowledge of the Bible among us, the term Bible Belt notwithstanding, must appear as a dubious proposition to anyone who teaches the present generation of Southerners.

According to Robert Daniel, a Tennesseean, Southern fiction rises out of "a sense of place," whereas Leonard Rubin agrees with Miss O'Connor by finding the secret in "historical perspective."

Remark upon Rubin's pronouncement, Walker Percy, writing in Commentary, issues this warning: "It may be true that one needs the past to understand the present, but one can also be trapped by it, like Mark Twain's river boat which got locked up forever in a bayou when the river changed course."

Calendar

Varied Activities Win HD Award For Mrs. Waters Of Renston-Nobles

By PATRICIA MOORE Reflector Staff Writer

Mrs. Wiley Waters must believe the old saying, "Idle hands are the devil's workshop," because she loves to stay busy, especially with projects using her hands. Refinishing and restyling old furniture, some of which are antiques, caning chair bottoms, making door mats, tin can work and cooking are just a few of the pastimes of this homemaker.

The naisance of the arts in Washington City may even have a salutary effect upon the rhetoric of filibusters and of official documents, like the following:

Such preparations shall be made as will completely obscure all Federal buildings and non-Federal buildings occupied by the Federal Government during an air raid for any period of time from visibility by reason of internal or external illumination. Such obscuration may be obtained either by blackout construction or by termination of the illumination."

According to the Herald Tribune, this bit of government prose is quoted by Joseph Cooper in his new book, "How to Get More Done in Less Time," as a specimen of the style of one of President Roosevelt's aides.

FDR himself translated it into English: "Tell them that in buildings where they have to keep the work going to put something across the windows. In buildings where they can afford to let the work stop for a while, turn out the lights."

Censors, Note

The latest note on censorship (here the source is again the Herald Tribune) is that a Birchler in Houston is objecting to a schoolbook version of the life of Plato, and we quote: "I haven't read Plato in a long time but he talks about free love and communal living and such. . . I can't help but believe that this is one reason we have so many sex maniacs walking around." At least, this takes some of the heat off the comics.

MAKING HATS . . . is just one pastime of this busy homemaker and outstanding Home Demonstration Club woman, Mrs. Wiley Waters. Above she shows a black fabric hat and a summer straw. (Reflector staff photos.)

Because of her interest in such projects through Home Demonstration Club work, as well as her leadership in her own club and participation in 4-H Club work, it is not surprising that Mrs. Waters was selected as this year's outstanding Home Demonstration Club woman for Pitt County.

She is now serving her second term as president of the Renston-Noble Home Demonstration Club and was formerly secretary for 10 years. Of all her projects, Mrs. Waters enjoys refinishing furniture and picture frames best. Her home, located off N. E. Highway 11 south of Greenville, is filled with pictures in frames which she has refinished. Many of them are antique frames.

Mrs. Waters loves to work with wood. "The grain is so pretty and you get attached to a piece of furniture you're working on," she said. "It is fascinating to take an old piece of furniture that is so covered with paint that you can't tell what kind of wood it is and turn it into something," she said.

She has refinshed most of her chairs, a spinning wheel that is well over 100 years old, and a picturesque chest which she also restyled. The chest, shown in an accompanying picture, had been in the family for years.

It had been moved around, nailed on and scratched up by children and finally was abandoned to the attic. A furniture refinishing workshop sponsored for Home Demonstration Club women by the N. C. Extension Service inspired Mrs. Waters to do something with the old chest.

After it was removed from the attic, inspection showed that two of the drawers were useless. So, in addition to refinishing the chest, Mrs. Waters had the two bottom drawers removed and louver doors made for their places. She had the wooden legs at the bottom of the chest sawed off, with the resulting quaint cabinet, now in her living room.

The chairs she has refinshed range from dining room chairs to rockers.

There are many more pieces of furniture which belonged to the Waters' parents which she plans to refinish in the future.

One of her recent interests, besides furniture refinishing, is working with tin cans. Mrs. Waters develops many of her projects through summer workshops for Home Demonstration Club women. Usually she picks a new project at each workshop. In her living room is one result of the tin can work—a gold sunburst, which in no way resembles a tin can.

She used tin cans to create several small Christmas trees during the holidays. As for needlework, since she was a little girl, Mrs. Waters has loved to sew. She made doll clothes then and later made most of her two daughters' clothes. Now she makes hats, both fabric and straw.

cook, and a gardener. In the days before the family obtained a freezer, she canned almost every vegetable and fruit—apples, corn, okra, peaches, tomatoes and others. Now she confesses she prefers these items frozen rather than canned, though she still does some canning.

She finds she can make up pastry—such as sweet potato pies and turnovers—and freeze them until she is ready to use them.

Almost every piece of shrubbery in the yard was rooted by the Waters themselves.

A native of Stokes, Roxie Waters and her husband, Wiley, have four children. The daughters, Roselyn and Alice, are married. Moya is a junior at East Carolina College and Monroe is a sophomore at Winterville High School. All have been outstanding in 4-H Club work, the oldest three having received plaques for outstanding senior work. Monroe received a plaque for outstanding junior work. He is now president of the Winterville Greenville 4-H Club and vice president of the County Council of 4-H Clubs.

In addition to offices she holds in her local Home Demonstration Club, Mrs. Waters is secretary of the County Council. She was the county 4-H Club leader for six years and has been a local 4-H Club leader for 12 years.

Also active in the Winterville Missionary Baptist Church, she served as stewardship chairman for about six years and has worked in one of the nurseries for five years. This will be the first year she hasn't worked with a summer Bible class.

Though she hasn't worked in many many years, Mrs. Waters is also a registered nurse, having graduated from the nursing school of D. C. General Hospital in Washington.

THIS CHEST . . . was transformed into its present form through refinishing and restyling. Mrs. Waters noted the chest had been in the family for years. After the bottom drawers became useless, she had louver doors made.

Irving Berlin Is A Week Of Re-Enacting Civil War Battles

NEW YORK (AP)—At age 74, songwriter Irving Berlin is busy with still another show for Broadway.

The upcoming musical, for which Berlin is doing the score and lyrics, goes into rehearsal in mid-July. It will be No. 20 in his output of musical comedies and revues. He also has 18 movies to his credit. He has published about 900 songs.

"You can't retire when you are still able to work," Berlin said yesterday, his birthday.

His last Broadway project was "Call Me Madame," a hit show of 12 years ago. The new production, now titled "Mr. President," has Russel Crouse and Howard Lindsay working on the libretto.

As an annual birthday celebration, Berlin said, he and his family will be together for the next few days at his home in Livingston Manor, N.Y., in the Catskills. His family consists of his wife, the former Ellen MacKay, whom he married in 1926; three daughters and four grandchildren.

The Berlins have a Manhattan home on Beekman Place near the East River.

Berlin, a product of the lower East Side, said of his fashionable upper East Side address: "Now I'm a little further uptown," adding:

"We see the same tugboats and ships."

GREENVILLE, S.C. (AP)—Some 400 "Feds" and "Rebs" are going at it hot and heavy this week in northern Greenville county. Scenes from the Battles of Manassas are being reproduced by Bob Jones University students and faculty for "Unusual Films," the University's Division of Cinema.

Six days of shooting have been budgeted for this portion of the script; but only about 10 minutes of actual screen time will be result.

Preparation for the big battle scenes has been under way for several weeks. Three genuine Civil War cannons (six pounders) were procured, two from Dr. Neill W. MacCaulay of Columbia and one from Col. John May of Aiken, a member of the South Carolina Civil War Centennial Commission.

Four additional artillery pieces were made by the staff. Hundreds of uniforms and rifles—both Yankee and Confederate—are being used.

More than 20 horses appear in the scene. Some were brought here from as far away as Murfreesboro, Tenn.

Many of the soldiers have beards, most of them genuine. The beard-growing began in February.

The site of battle is a rolling cadow on the Gilreath Farm, about 10 miles from the Bob Jones

University campus. This poses quite a problem in logistics. Not only must the actors, crew, and horses be moved to the site, but they have to be there after they get there.

For lunch on the first day of shooting, the university sent 800 meat sandwiches, 40 gallons of fruit punch, a dozen heads of lettuce, 8 pounds of potato chips, 400 apples, and 800 cookies.

The set is closed to most visitors.

Those admitted see a panorama of color and action. In the foreground are the Confederate artillery battery and the main body of Southern troops. To the left, down the slope, are the Federal troops, some in the familiar blue uniforms—others dressed in the flaming red of the quavers.

Between the opposing camps lies the bowl-shaped field where the main battle is to be fought.

Watching from his vantage point on a slight rise above the scene, the observer feels much like the spectators must have felt when they turned out in force 100 years ago to "see the show" when the First Battle of Manassas was fought.

But there is one big difference. In history the observers only thought they knew how the battle would end. Modern day observers already know.

Each Prize Went To Name-Drawer

NEVADA, Iowa (AP)—The annual Ladies Night Dinner put on by the Nevada Lions Club Wednesday was still the talk of the town today.

The social event was held in the Methodist Church and 100 persons were on hand.

The Rev. James Dendler, asked to draw for the first door prize, drew his own name.

Next, Henry Scudder, a councilman, was asked to draw. The name? Henry Scudder.

For the third prize Bill Dial, member of the Board of Education, drew a name, also pulled out his own.

After a few embarrassing moments it was decided that each would get to keep his prize.

CRASH VICTIM MEDIA, Pa. AP)—Dr. Constance G. Volk, 59, who teamed with a fellow physician to win last year's All-Women's International Air Race, was killed yesterday in an auto crash.

Royal Ambassadors Hold Camporee

The Royal Ambassador Boys, a Southern Baptist organization for boys of the South Roanoke Association, held their annual Camporee near Belhaven on the Pungo Creek last weekend, Friday and Saturday, May 4 and 5.

Boys from four or five counties attended the Camporee.

Churches receiving gold ribbons were New Hope, Wilson; those receiving blue ribbons were Arlington Street, Greenville; Eagle Church, Crisp; Fountain Church, Fountain. Those receiving red ribbons were Elm City Baptist, Elm City; Williamston West End, Williamston, and Winterville Baptist Church, Winterville. Churches receiving green ribbons for camping were Chocowinity Baptist Church, Chocowinity, and Belhaven Baptist Church, Belhaven.

Larry R. Stox was camp director and Rev. John A. Moore is associational missionary. Stox stated that this was the best all-around Camporee that has been held. The next outdoor activity will be the Royal Ambassador Circus and Exposition to be held in the Greenville Area in August.

Franco Changes Holiday Plans As Crisis Grows

MADRID, Spain (AP)—Generalissimo Francisco Franco suddenly canceled a vacation trip to strike-torn Northern Spain today and remained in Madrid to deal with the nation's mounting labor troubles.

Informed sources said Franco changed his travel plans at the behest of his worried ministers in a 15-hour cabinet session on the labor crisis, one of the severest of his 25-year strongman rule.

A communique issued after the cabinet meeting said Franco and the ministers discussed proposals that would come close to meeting demands of 70,000 striking miners and industrial workers.

Franco was believed balking at bowing fully to the strikers' demands but was expected to order general wage readjustments throughout the country to head off a further spread of strikes.

The government sets most wages in Spain and strikes are officially banned. But the strikers—all but 8,000 of them in the Asturias coal mining regions and Bigaio industrial area—have been off the job as much as a month. They cite soaring living costs, their demands for the equivalent of about $2.10 a day, as compared to their present $1.40 to $1.60 a day.

In Barcelona, 500 university students shouted insults at Franco and voiced support of the Asturias strikers before police invaded the campus and arrested 21 demonstrators.

One striking group was already claiming victory in San Sebastian, where 3,000 workers struck a government railway materials plant 10 days ago. The provincial governor ordered the plant reopened today. Labor circles called it "a sound triumph" for the workers' demands for higher pay.

Government officials insist that the strikes and demonstrations are motivated by economics, not politics. The government has maintained strict censorship on events, and Spaniards have turned to foreign radio broadcasts—some beamed from Moscow—to keep up with developments.

HAD SNOW STORM TOKYO (AP)—Some provinces in Mongolia were hit last weekend by a wind and snow storm that stopped traffic and buried a large number of animals in the snow, the New China News Agency reported.

CARTER A. VAUGHAN'S Exciting Novel of Revolutionary Romance SCOUNDRELS' BRIGADE

CHAPTER 30

"I know the H. M. S. Phoenix," Benly Flaherty declared. "She's anchored on the near side of the East River, close to a patch of woods upstream."

August Dale stroked his chin thoughtfully. "I dare say I've met her captain."

"The Phoenix," Katie Dale said quietly, "carries forty-four guns."

"How did you know that?" Hugh Spencer demanded.

"I told you I didn't intend to hide meekly while the rest of you went out on your investigations every day," she replied smugly. "So I've made it my business to find out everything I can learn about the British army and navy here. I hoped my information might be useful someday."

"How—"

"I've gone down to the taproom occasionally for a cup of tea. It's astonishing how freely officers will talk."

Hugh was wildly jealous, but could not let his emotions interfere with his duty. "Your information is correct," he said coldly. "Major Talmadge writes that the Phoenix is a frigate of four-hundred guns and that the presses are located in a cabin near the stern of the ship, next to the captain's quarters. Our orders are to destroy the equipment at all costs."

There was a silence, and August clared his throat. "Although you've excused me from participating in this enterprise, I hope you'll reconsider your decision."

"Certainly," Hugh said promptly. "We'll need all the help we can get."

"No, Pa, you're too old," Katie was distressed.

Her father silenced her with an eloquent gesture.

"There's work for you to do, too," Hugh told her. He threw Talmadge's letter into the hearth, and as he watched it burn to ashes on the glowing coals, a plan began to form in his mind. He walked to the window, then started to pace up and down the room, his hands clasped behind his back.

At last he faced the group, halted, and hooked his thumbs in his sword belt. "It's essential that we act quickly," he said. "When Lord Howe learns that the Morning Star and the Blacksnake have been captured he'll probably move the printing presses from the Phoenix to another ship and undoubtedly take the precaution of mounting a strong guard to protect the counterfeiting equipment. We've got to strike first."

August tried to interrupt, but Hugh gave him no opportunity, and, speaking firmly, made it clear that only one man was in command of the expedition.

"There's another reason we can't delay," Katie said. "I no longer have a valid reason for staying in New York. Under the circumstances it would be natural for us to return to Philadelphia, reclaim our property, and dispose of it. If we tarry here, the British will become suspicious, and even a cursory investigation will prove to them that our whole story is a fabrication. So we'll have to notify the proprietor that we're leaving for home tomorrow, and that means we'll attack tonight."

"I've always made it my policy to avoid violence," August declared, unable to curb himself any longer. "I bow to your greater experience in such matters, but I've always found that it pays to weigh a plan carefully before moving."

"We can't afford the luxury of waiting," Hugh said, "and I don't think circumstances will favor us more than they will tonight. As I came back to the inn a short time ago, I saw large numbers of British soldiers and sailors in the crowds. It's traditional in the armed services to grant leaves of absence for a day and night after a major victory has been won, and I feel certain that both the army and the fleet are observing the custom today."

Benly, who had been beating a restless tattoo on a table with his fingertips, relaxed slightly. "That's clever, Hugh. You're saying that there will be a weaker guard on board the Phoenix tonight than there will be tomorrow or the next day."

"Precisely. And my scheme is very simple. We'll disguise ourselves in British naval uniforms, commander one of the small boats that are tied to the East River docks, and after we row ourselves out to the frigate, we'll destroy the equipment."

"His daring stunned the others. 'Where will we get uniforms?'" Benly asked uneasily.

"There's a naval storehouse behind the gardens of the Bouwerie. We'll have to steal seamen's clothes for you and the Simpsons there."

Dick grinned. "You leave that to me, sir. There won't be many men on duty at the storehouse today, and I can walk off with all the uniforms you want. There ain't a place I've seen yet, where I can't steal whatever I want."

His brother was annoyed. "I taught you everything you know about burglary. You ain't as good as I am!"

Hugh was pleased that his band consisted of conscientious scoundrels. "You can prove your boast by finding me a naval officer's uniform at one of the tailoring establishments, Dave."

"You can depend on me, sir," Dave said happily.

"I presume you'll want me to appear in the disguise of an officer, too," August said briskly.

"I'd be too conspicuous as an admiral, but in view of my age, I should think a captain's uniform would be suitable."

"You'll wear civilian clothes," Hugh told him. "Dress in a dark suit."

The old man was outraged. "Are you denying me the right to take part in this raid?"

"We'll need someone to wait for us in the boat so we can escape after we've accomplished our task," Hugh replied. "What's more, you aren't familiar with the regulations of the armed services, and if someone dressed as a senior officer should reveal his ignorance of the protocol that's observed on board His Majesty's ships, you'd give all of us away."

August subsided grudgingly. "I've always thought I'd look distinguished in a naval captain's epaulet, but I suppose you're right."

Katie, who had listened carefully but said nothing decided to intervene. "Your scheme isn't sound, Hugh. Where will you change into the uniforms, presuming some can be stolen? And where will you change into civilian clothes again? You can't do it here without calling attention to yourselves."

Hugh looked less sure of himself and hesitated for a moment before he replied. "Our ability to slip in and out of disguise will depend on your willingness to assume an unsavory role."

"She thought he was challenging her. "Do you think I'm afraid?"

"No, but I am." He smiled wryly, then took a deep breath. "There are a number of houses on a street called the Queen's Walk near the East River waterfront that can be rented for a single night."

The men, who realized what was in his mind, glanced at each other uncomfortably, but Katie listened innocently.

"You aren't familiar with that part of the city," Hugh continued. "The rooms are rented exclusively by harlots."

"I see." She controlled herself with visible effort.

Another Gathering Of Artists At White House

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Kennedy, who has been boosting culture, now reports jestingly that the White House "is becoming a sort of eating place for artists."

"But, they never ask us out," he lamented smilingly as he looked around the State Dining Room Friday night at a gathering of 165 writers, artists, actresses and "creative thinkers."

He and Mrs. Kennedy had invited an unusual array of distinguished personalities to a black tie dinner at the White House in honor of the visiting French Minister of Culture, Andre Malraux.

The evening combined tributes to the arts, to France, to Malraux and to French President Charles de Gaulle.

Fish, a Friday favorite, was featured on the French-accented menu.

In his champagne toast, Kennedy paid tribute to "creative thinkers" and declared:

"One of the great myths of American life is that nothing is pleasanter or easier than lying around all day and painting a picture or writing a book."

"In my opinion," said the President, "the ultimate in self-discipline is a creative work. Those of us who work in an office every day are actually the real gentle livers of American society."

The party lasted longer than any other state dinner the Kennedys have given. The President lingered past midnight to chat and no one seemed able to decide if it was protocol to leave before he did.

A few guests even joined the Kennedys in their living quarters later and Charles Lindbergh and his wife, Anne, were overnight guests in the Lincoln Suite. Lindbergh's nonstop flight across the Atlantic from New York to Paris 35 years ago this month catapulted him into the limelight.

Unusually long applause, cries of "bravo" and cheers greeted a 25-minute after-dinner concert by violinist Isaac Stern, pianist Eugene Istomin and cellist Leonard Rose.

Malraux, a man who is as much at home in politics as he is in the arts, found himself in an unusual predicament.

Apparently, no one translated Kennedy's toast for the culture minister.

When he got up to respond, Malraux told Kennedy he was probably "the first guest you have received who will have to reply to your speech without knowing what you have said."

He rose to the occasion though, saying it wasn't difficult to say thanks for the hospitality he had received. And he praised the United States as the first country in history "which has become a leader not through conquest but by seeking justice."

TV Series Must Justify Staying With Audiences

By BOB THOMAS
HOLLYWOOD (AP)—Recently this space featured an obituary of the television series that will be interred at the close of the season.

The reader response has been ire and perplexity: How dare they take my favorite show off the air? How do they arrive at these decisions?

The truth is that a series is seldom killed capriciously, though sometimes you hear of behind-the-scenes shenanigans. Most shows expire from malnutrition; not enough beef in the ratings. It is figured mathematically—does the show attract enough viewers per dollar it costs?

"The Dick Van Dyke Show" ran up against this mathematical jeopardy—and won. But it was a stiff fight.

The series was in the iffy category for several weeks until it finally won a renewal.

Star Dick Van Dyke says, "I was shocked. I thought we were doing a good job. But apparently it wasn't good enough."

"According to our cost, we should have been attracting an audience of 10 million. We were getting only 8½ million. That's why one of our sponsors dropped off the show."

"The other sponsor wanted to keep the show and the time slot. It all depended on finding a new sponsor who was willing to go along on the hope that the rating would rise. Fortunately, we found one."

How does he hope to corral those errant 1½ million viewers? It won't be easy, since "The Dick Van Dyke Show" will again be facing Perry Como on Wednesday nights.

"I don't think we'll change anything," the actor said.

Van Dyke is delighted about the renewal—"the show has been the most pleasant experience of my career." He'll get no summer rest; he's now filming "Bye, Bye, Birdie," in which he starred on Broadway.
