SALT Hopes Soar

WASHINGTON (AP) — Claiming several bright, new prospects for a stable world peace, the Nixon administration has expressed renewed enthusiasm for a slowdown in the weapons race with the Soviet Union.

The key issue of the joint strategic Arms Limitations Talks is a proposal to mutually abolish or curtail deployment of antiballistic missiles, they said.

Administration spokesmen said the Safeguard ABM system had been a major bargaining tool at the Vienna talks, which just ended a four-month round last week. The negotiations resume in Helsinki this November.

They said the Soviet Union had expressed most interest in stopping development of the ABM. The United States has offered to do so if the Soviets would limit their large SS-9 missiles and cutback their ABM.

At a weekend briefing for editors and broadcasters in New Orleans during President Nixon's visit, the officials said Nixon's promise last year of negotiation rather than confrontation had panned out as a turning point in postwar policy.

The spokesmen, who declined identification and prohibited release of their comments until Sunday, also said the conventional ground war in southern South Vietnam is virtually ended.

They said security in that part of the nation was the best it's been since 1964.

While noting that guerrilla warfare continues and the Paris peace talks remain fruitless, they said the strengthened South Vietnamese Army now should be able to meet on its own the aggression in the southern region.

Generally, the Vietnam war was said to be winding down, and the possibility was still held open for a negotiated settlement. The officials said the Middle East truce, while fragile, offers good hope of avoiding a larger war.

The guerrilla raids along the Jordan, Syrian and Lebanese front were termed only minor violations of the ceasefire and for mostly political reasons. The critical truce front remains the Suez line between Israel and Egypt, they said.

Ship Carrying Nerve Gas On Final Voyage

By HOWARD BENEDICT
Associated Press Writer

ABOARD THE USS HARTLEY (AP) — A rusty surplus Liberty ship carrying a cargo of nerve gas and several rabbits walled through the Atlantic under tow today, headed for a watery grave 282 miles east of Cape Kennedy, Fla.

The LeBaron Russell Briggs is scheduled to be scuttled in 16,000 feet of water Tuesday, carrying with her to the bottom 418 steel-jacketed concrete vaults containing more than 12,500 nerve gas rockets.

The way for the controversial disposal of the deadly gas was cleared Sunday when Florida Gov. Claude Kirk and the Environmental Defense Fund said they were abandoning a court fight against the Army's plans to rid itself of the rockets. They claimed the gas represented an extreme danger to the ocean environment.

In a rare Sunday session, the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington upheld a district court's refusal to grant Kirk and the defense fund an injunction barring the disposal plans. But it said the Briggs must remain in port at Sunny Point, N.C., until 10 a.m. today to give Kirk and the defense fund a chance to carry an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The appeals court announced some two hours later, however, that Kirk and the group were quitting the court fight and the Briggs, which originally had been scheduled to get under way Saturday, moved out with a tug supplying the power.

Providing escort were a backup tug, the destroyer escort Hartley and the Coast Guard cutter Mendotta.

When the convoy reaches the disposal area, a 14-man team of specialists will board the Briggs, checking first the rabbits. They are sensitive to gas, should any of the vaults spring a leak.

The men will install devices to monitor the rate of descent as the Briggs goes to the bottom, remove the rabbits and all salvageable equipment, open valves to let seawater flood the ship, then abandon the Briggs.

Navy Capt. A. G. Hamilton, in charge of sinking the Briggs, estimated it would take 4½ to 5 hours for the World War II freighter to go down.

The Mendotta and Hartley will remain at the scene for eight to 12 hours, charting the exact position of the Briggs and examining environmental data and water samples to check against any early leakage of gas.

The Army said it was possible that water pressure might crack welded seams of the steel jackets which enclose the concrete vaults and that some gas might leak soon after the Briggs heads for the bottom of the Atlantic.

It said, however, that even if the vaults should crack and release gas, it would soon dissipate in the water and cause no serious damage.

Kirk said, "We have successfully made our point that the Army's plan is a tragedy of errors... In my mind we have gained a victory for tomorrow. For surely the Army will never again attempt to tamper so thoughtlessly with our environment."

Venus Probe Is Fired By Soviet

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union today launched an unmanned space probe to explore the planet Venus.

Tass said the spaceship, which it called the "automatic interplanetary station Venus 7," would "continue the exploration of the planet Venus, which was carried out earlier by Soviet automatic stations."

It said the spaceship was launched at 8:38 a.m. Moscow time — 1:38 a.m. EDT — and together with the final stage of the rocket carrier was put into an interim orbit of the earth.

At 9:59 Moscow time, the report continued, the engine of the final stage was switched on for just over four minutes to boost the rocket out of orbit and on its way.

Tass said at noon Moscow time — 5 a.m. EDT — Venus 7 was more than 25,000 miles from earth.

"Venus 7 was put into a trajectory close to the preset one," the Soviet news agency said. "All the systems and scientific equipment on board the station are functioning normally. The flight is controlled by the long-distance space communication center."

Warehouse Floors Filled, Waiting

Traditional chants of tobacco auctioneers will be heard in Greenville and other North Carolina towns as the markets open tomorrow morning.

In Greenville, space on the warehouse floors of the seven firms are filled for opening sales. Beginning last Thursday and continuing through the week-end, farmers formed caravans of small and large trucks, bringing in the harvest of golden leaves.

First day sales here will be at the Farmers; the New Independent; Raynor, Forbes and Clark; Star — Planters; and Keel's Warehouses. Two warehouses, the New Carolina and Cannon's will have second sales.

Carlton Dail, president of the Greenville Tobacco Board of Trade, noted that space for sales following opening day ones were already being taken.

In Farmville, first sales have been allotted to Bell's and Lee's Warehouses, with second sales going to Fountain and Monk's and Planter's and Prewitt's Warehouses.

Markets in Williamston and Robersonville, like those in Greenville and Farmville, are all set for the opening sales. In Williamston, two firms, Roger's and New Dixie Warehouses have reported full floors. The same is true of Robersonville's two tobacco firms, Planters and Red Front.

Quality seems to be about the same as that of last year's tobacco. Sam Weeks, Agriculture Extension Agent for Pitt County noted that "based on field observations, indications are that this year's tobacco is of fairly good quality. We are anticipating a little better than average crop so far as quality is concerned."

Again this year, W. Arthur Tripp is sponsoring an opening night party for buyers, graders and other persons closely connected with the tobacco market.

This celebration, which Tripp stated was begun about ten years ago, has become something of a tradition in Greenville.

"We have tobacco officials coming in from Washington, D.C. and Raleigh," Tripp noted, "as well as representatives from area markets, Rocky Mount, Farmville, Williamston and others places."

Sales supervisors for the various markets were today making the rounds, checking on conditions, making sure all is ready for the big day tomorrow.

Egypt Continuing Truce Violations, Avers Eban

JERUSALEM (AP) — Foreign Minister Abba Eban charged today Egypt is continuing missile movements in the Suez Canal area in violation of the U.S.-initiated Middle East cease-fire.

At the same time Eban accused the United States of failing to acknowledge Israeli evidence of these movements.

At a crowded news conference Eban said the cease-fire agreement demanded the "strictest level of precision" in determining adherence and "I cannot agree that it is immaterial whether missiles were moved up into the forbidden zone 12 hours before or 12 hours after."

Israel has provided the U.S. government, as authors and guarantors of the cease-fire with "precisely defined" evidence of Egyptian violations, Eban said.

Referring to comments by Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird on Sunday that it was not possible to determine whether a cease-fire violation actually occurred because missiles may have been in movement as of the Aug. 7 midnight shooting stop, Eban said: "Israel has lodged complaints showing transgressions took place not only immediately after the cease-fire, but continue to be made."

Eban cited these alleged violations: —Last Thursday, material on "grave violations" shortly after the time of the cease-fire was passed on to the United Nations and the United States. At this time "a considerable number of ground-to-air missiles" were moved forward by the Egyptians.

—On the same day one other missile battery was deployed. A map reference was provided to the United Nations on this second complaint.

—On Sunday, construction was observed taking place at five spots which were empty before.

Eban expressed belief Laird was not in possession of the latest Israeli material when he made his statement Sunday.

Eban stressed that he thought Laird's words were not a "final verdict."

The foreign minister added: "There is no crisis between Jerusalem and Washington... There is a frank discussion."

He said it was important for Israel and the United States to "establish the facts together."

Eban said a larger issue is "the degree of validity and credence to be given to Soviet and Egyptian assurances" that they would abide by the cease-fire agreement. These were bound to have an effect on the climate of the present peace effort, he said.

Eban said there is still material being transmitted to Washington containing Israel's evidence of the cease-fire violations and it is "impossible for me to believe we won't reach a common understanding."

Eban said he didn't know what could be done to bring about a removal of the missiles, but he said Israel at least expected a "frank acknowledgment" from Washington that indeed violations were taking place.

Commenting on the delay in negotiations under U.N. peace envoy Gunnar V. Jarring, Eban suggested this was caused by Israel's "urgent preoccupation" with the cease-fire issue and Arab refusal to appoint foreign ministers as their representatives to the talks.

In another development stemming from the cease-fire, Yasir Arafat, chief of the Palestine guerrillas, said Sunday in Amman he expects further fighting between his commandos and the Jordanian army. He claimed four brigades of Jordanian troops were ringing Amman in preparation for a new crack-down in the guerrillas during the cease-fire.

FOURTH GENERATION CLOWN — Coco the Clown, 40-year circus veteran, adjusts a plastic prosthesis on Raymond, his four-year-old son who performs as "Coconut", but eventually will carry on the family circus tradition as Coco the fourth. So hopes Coco, born Michael Polakovs, a third-generation clown with Ringling Bros. circus. (AP Wirephoto)

Circus 'Magic' Lasts And Lasts

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Neither television nor Disneyland has dimmed the lure of the stars and bangles of circus, says Coco the Clown, 40-year veteran of big tops and arenas.

Patronage was up 20 per cent this year and extra seats had to be put in the Anaheim Convention Center—across the boulevard from the vast Walt Disney recreational expanse—for Ringling Bros. Barnum & Bailey's "Greatest Show on Earth," he said.

"We don't know what it is, the magic, the spell, whatever it is—some alchemy—it's lasting, and youth, teen-agers and yes, hippies, they're still up front in our crowds," Coconsaid in an interview while awaiting the Ringling opening in Oakland Coliseum Friday.

"All sorts of things were supposed to ruin us—radio, movies, television, leaving the big top—out our crowds go on getting more enormous every year," he said.

Switching from the tent to arenas seems to have added to the attraction, he added.

"Believe me, those tents were hot and animal smells could get beastly," he said, "but these huge coliseums we're playing in have air conditioning and suction."

"With the lavish new top, maybe the show is a little more sophisticated these days, with so many beautiful girls, but it's still all there. The suspense of the high wire acts with nothing beneath them, the breath-taking trapezists, the daring lion and tiger tamers, it's all still there, and it's strictly for real. These people risk their lives daily, there's nothing phony in the circus."

And the clowns?

"Well, the clowns are the additive, we keep things going between acts, but maybe we're a little overrated," Coco said.

Hit And Run

BELVOIR — A 27-year-old man was killed near here yesterday when struck by a hit and run driver and left lying on a rural paved road.

Pitt County Coroner E. W. Harvey identified the victim as Willie Earl Howell of Bridgeport, Conn. Howell was a native of Pitt County, Harvey noted.

Highway Patrolman J. C. Ball said the incident occurred on rural road 1411, and was reported about 7:15 a.m. when a passing motorist found Howell's body sprawled in the North-bound lane of the highway.

Cause of death, according to the coroner, included severe head and other multiple injuries.

Investigation of the hit-and-run fatality is continuing.

Old Federal Building Ripped By Bomber

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. (AP) — A thunderous explosion early today ripped the old Federal Office Building, headquarters for military induction in the Minneapolis area.

A night watchman inside the building was knocked unconscious but was released from a hospital later when it was determined he had no internal injuries.

U.S. Marshal Harry Berglund made a preliminary estimate of $500,000 in damages to the structure, stone-faced structure. He said up to 20 sticks of dynamite may have been used in the 3 a.m. blast.

Scores of windows were shattered in the Post Office building a block away as well as large first-floor windows in a swank apartment building, as the concussion swept across a parking lot. Windows also were broken in an old four-story warehouse and the Milwaukee Road freight house. Chunks of concrete weighing up to 300 pounds were hurled into the lot.

The FBI and U.S. marshal's office searched the rubble for clues. A spokesman for the FBI said only that the case was under investigation.

Authorities reportedly had no one in custody.

The injured watchman, Joseph Christy, 63, complained of chest and abdominal pains but physicians at Hennepin County General Hospital found no injuries and he was released.

The explosive had been planted in the basement entry under the northside concrete steps leading to the first-floor of the building. The main entry, on the east side of the building, is located on 3rd Avenue South, a busy two-way street but without much traffic at the early hour.

The building, with a cornerstone dating to 1911, houses the Armed Forces Examination and Entry Station and has offices of the several military branches. It also houses offices of the Internal Revenue Service, Health, Education and Welfare and the Agriculture Department.

As the blast concussion spread into the basement, it ripped fixtures and furniture. Broken water mains doused the wreckage.

A new Federal Office Building, where the FBI and other government agencies are located, is three blocks away.

DEAR ABBY: I am going to marry a real great guy. I suspected there was something wrong with one of his eyes, but he never talked about it, so I never really knew what it was.

Well, a little while ago he told me that when he was a small boy a neighbor kid accidentally shot it out with a B. B. gun and he had an artificial eye put in. Abby, it looks so real, nobody would ever know it was artificial. Now that he has told me, it seems to have built his courage up, and he takes his eye out in the evening and wears an eye patch. I think the artificial eye looks better than the eye patch, but the whole thing gives me the creeps.

One night he had a few drinks and he took his artificial eye out in front of some strangers and a lady fainted.

Do you think after we're married I will get more used to this? I'd like to tell him how I feel. Should I?

SQUEAMISH IN N. Y.

DEAR SQUEAMISH: Yes, you'll probably get more used to it, but tell him anyway. And since your fiance is such a great comedian, find out if he can take it as well as dish it out.

Get a set of phony dentures, and the next time he removes his eye, you remove your "dentures." [Sort of an "eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth" arrangement.]

DEAR ABBY: I am married to a man who is too good for his own good. Everybody takes advantage of "Good Old Hank." Especially his family. They have used him all his life. They borrow a few dollars from him and forget to pay it back. When they need some work done—for free—Hank is the first one they call, and he goes running like it's an honor to do them a favor.

What is worse, we have a married son who is the same kind of a sap. Only it's his wife's family who runs him. He is always helping her father, or uncles, or brothers, also for free. Fix this, haul that, or build something. Junior never complains, either. He's crazy. Just like his father.

I worry one day that these big-hearted boobs will drop dead in their tracks from overwork. I wish I knew a way to help them see the light.

LOTS OF PROBLEMS

DEAR LOTS: I have some good news for you. You don't have any problems. Those big-hearted "boobs" might enjoy doing things for their relatives. And quit worrying. More people have dropped dead from worry than from work.

DEAR ABBY: I, too, am the wife of an airline pilot, and I used to worry myself half sick wondering what my captain might be doing with some cute young airline hostess, until one night a highly respected, much-admired professional man knocked on my door while my pilot was gone. He certainly had some swinging plans for us. And to think how for years I had envied this man's wife because she had an 8 to 5 husband!

That's all there is to my story, Abby. But the point is this: Occupation doesn't determine fidelity—or the lack of it—in a marriage. I know airline captains' wives who have more going for them while their husbands are away than their husbands have. COFFEE, TEA AND ME [AT HOME]

CONFIDENTIAL TO "50 YEARS OLD TODAY — AND DEPRESSED": Cheer up. Fifty is the "old age" of youth. But is also the "youth" of old age. You have a lot of living to do.

President's Family Dines In Mexican Style Town

By ALBERT W. WISE

SAN JUAN CAPISTRANO, Calif. (UPI) —During his summer vacation at the Western White House President Nixon took his family to an evening meal at this picturesque Mexican style town made famous by a flock of swallows which return every year.

It was only natural he went to El Adobe restaurant. He has been going there for years — in fact, when he was dating a girl named Thelma Patricia Ryan, now Mrs. Nixon.

It also was natural that the first family ordered a plate which El Adobe has named the "Nixon Special." The same meal at any of the hundreds of Mexican cafes in Southern California and along the border is known as the Mexican Combination Plate.

The meal consisted of tacos, refried beans, enchiladas and tortillas.

To residents of many parts of the country that combination might sound like something no one could talk them into putting into their mouth — let alone swallowing. But in Southern California it's as much a part of life as ham hocks and black eyed peas in the South.

The two mainstays of any Mexican meal are tortillas and refried beans.

Tortillas are to Mexico what bread is to the United States. They are made of a special corn meal called masa harina water and salt. The mixture is made into a dough. A small ball is formed and patted between the hands until it is spread out to about four inches in diameter. Place on an ungreased iron griddle over medium heat, turn often until slightly brown but not crisp.

This is the way tortillas are still made on farms and in small towns throughout Mexico. In restaurants and tortilla bakeries a metal tortilla press, turns them out in a fraction of the time. A good percentage for a small batch of tortillas is 2 cups corn meal (Masa Harina), 1/4 cup water, and 1/2 teaspoon salt. If the dough sticks to the hands it is too soft. Add more masa.

As bread in this country, tortillas are used in many ways. Probably one of the best known is in preparation of a taco—the sandwich of Mexico.

To make a taco a tortilla is folded in half. The bottom third is filled with whatever the "sandwich" is filling. The most popular fillings are beef (previously cooked and shredded), chicken, sausage or cheese.

The partly filled shell is fried in a shallow layer of lard on either side until the tortilla becomes crisp. Then the remainder of the shell is filled with shredded lettuce, chopped onions, grated cheese and are served with a bowl of hot sauce on the side. In most Mexican restaurants the sauce is home-made of chopped hot chili peppers. In the American home any of a variety of bottled or canned hot sauces can be used.

A word to the wise: On your first experiment with eating a taco, at home or out, treat the hot sauce with utmost respect. An overdose makes you feel as if you have swallowed a red hot poker. Beverages that help cool it include beer, milk or coffee.

Enchiladas also use a tortilla as a base. And again there are many varieties of enchiladas. They differ from tacos in that the tortillas are heated in lard only until limp and sandwiched with fillings and sauces.

Refried beans are to Mexico what potatoes are to the United States. Only more so.

Pinto beans are traditional but black or red kidney beans can be used. Soak the beans overnight. Boil slowly, adding a chopped onion. Do not add salt until the beans are soft. Then salt to taste and add diced bacon (about 1/2 pound for 2 cups of beans). Most Mexican recipes call for lard but this writer prefers bacon. If there is some bacon fat around the kitchen throw some of this in also.

When the beans are soft mash until they are a thick, quite dry paste.

Prior to serving, heat 2 tablespoons of lard in a large skillet. Add the beans spoonful by spoonful and continue mashing. A little more lard can be added as the process continues. When the beans are dry, serve. It is also common for a Mexican to add chile sauce at the table to liven up the beans.

Although the Nixon Special did not include guacamole this tasty Mexican Avocado specialty is popular with the Mexican combination plate at many places and in many homes. It can be served either as a salad or dip.

Take 2 large very ripe avocados. Peel, pit and mash until lumps remain; add the juice of 4 lemons and salt and hot sauce to taste. Serve as a salad on lettuce leaves or as a dip for tortillas, fried to a crisp and broken up.

Add a little paprika to packaged fine dry bread crumbs that you are using to coat chicken or fish.

New Projects Discussed At Jay-C-Ette Meet

Mrs. Mike Bell, chairman of a Special Projects Committee, led a discussion Wednesday night at the monthly Jay-C-Ette meeting regarding new projects to be initiated for the coming year.

Among these projects is a workshop to make stuffed animals for the Pediatric Ward at the hospital. The club has been maintaining a toy box at the hospital since last February. The stuffed animals will be added to these toys and also given to children remaining in the hospital during the Christmas holidays.

Mrs. Jim Higdon reported on the Books for Vietnam project which is due to be completed in October.

Mrs. Pete Small and Mrs. Rex Vorhees were welcomed as new members.

Guests attending the meeting were Mrs. Melvin Hoot, Mrs. Marty Goldfarb, Mrs. Mitchell Jones, Mrs. Lawrence Speight, and Mrs. Richard Rados.

Something To Expect In 1971

There have been reports that natural gas will soon be in short supply because new sources to feed the big pipelines have not been developed. The effect of this assessment has been felt here with the notification of Greenville Utilities by N.C. Natural Gas that it may not be able to increase the amount of gas in 1971-72. This does not affect the current fiscal year since the Utilities Commission has already reached an agreement with N.C. Natural Gas for meeting the needs through next winter. However, N.C. Natural Gas notified Greenville Utilities that, because its supplies may be limited, it might be that further increases will not be possible the following year. Director Charles Horne told Utilities Commissioners N.C. Natural Gas would be informed that the commission expects the firm to supply local gas needs. We think this is proper since distribution of natural gas is a regulated industry and is not competitive. Greenville Utilities must obtain natural gas supplies from N.C. Natural Gas. Since the line was extended here the Utilities Commission has been converting its bottled gas customers to natural gas on the assumption that supplies would be adequate to serve them. Natural gas is important to residences, business and industries here. Greenville Utilities should make every effort to see that suppliers furnish adequate gas to take care of our needs. While a crisis is not imminent, this could become an important matter to us in 1971-72.

A First-Hand Tour Report

By SUSAN SCOTT
Guest Columnist
A trip to Europe was a summer highlight for a young friend of mine, Susan Scott, the 13-year-old daughter of Governor and Mrs. Robert W. Scott. I asked her to tell about it in her own words. Here is her story. — Bryan Haislip
A first trip anywhere is exciting for me, but when it is a journey across the Atlantic Ocean to Europe, the butterflies in my stomach multiply weeks ahead of the actual departure time. The plane trip across in the huge Pan American 747 was long, but how many times to you get to see a movie and have an upstairs lounge, with food, drinks, and snacks provided at all times? And to see the sunset and sunrise just a few hours apart from each other?
When we arrived in Rome, Italy, I stepped off the plane and had my first touch of European ground. Seeing the dark Italians, hearing them speak in that unfamiliar language made me realize that the dream had come true. I was really in Rome — in Europe — and so far away from Raleigh, North Carolina.
We were met there by Mrs. James Semans of Durham who had been in Siena with the students from the North Carolina School of the Arts in Winston-Salem. She was so gracious to us at all times, but the first day of sight-seeing was probably the most thrilling.

Sunday School were beginning to come alive!
From Florence, we went to Siena, where we were to stay for four days in an ancient 15th century castle, now a hotel, on top of one of the three hills of the city. The real purpose of our visit was to attend a concert by the students from North Carolina. It was held in one of the very old opera houses, and we sat in box seats in the balcony. How very royal I felt at that time!

Tar Heel Ambassadors
The students performed so beautifully, and my parents and I felt so proud that they belonged to our state. We knew they were not only talented young people, but great ambassadors for our state and our country.

After Florence and Siena, we went back to Rome. The next day we flew to Stockholm, Sweden, where my father was to meet with a group of businessmen. We only stayed there a few days, which didn't give us much time to sightsee, but we did ride on a boat touring the islands.

Next we flew to London. Of the three countries we visited, I liked England the best. Perhaps this is so because the people speak English, it was the most like home, and so much of our history is connected to this country.

We saw Big Ben, the Parliament and the Thames River from our car. We just happened to have a wonderful guide who had a great love for his country and that great, dry wit typical of so many Englishmen.

Madame Tussaud's Wax Museum was really interesting. There were wax statues of famous people such as the Royal Family, Sir Winston Churchill, Martin Luther King, President Kennedy, President Johnson, President Nixon and many others. There was a section with the Beatles, Twiggy, Bob Hope, Sammy Davis, Jr., Richard Burton, Elizabeth Taylor, and Jackie and Aristotle Onassis (these two displayed on a merry-go-round, I wonder why?).

Students Were Digging.

We rode out to Winchester to see the Winchester Cathedral and to view the excavation going on. There students there from various universities, including some from Duke and the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and Greensboro. If anyone declares that long-haired boys never work, they should see what those students who were digging were doing. There would certainly change their minds!

We visited a hospital for elderly men that had been started in the 11th century by a king who wanted to provide ale and bread and a

Greenville Can Boast Two State Champions

Win or lose Greenville can be proud that it has two teams which are state champions. The Babe Ruth All Star team reigns as the state champions and put up quite a battle before losing to Tennessee in Alabama. The Little League All Stars took the championship for the state and went on to the regionals in Florida. The boys on these teams have brought honor to their community. All Greenville takes pride in both these teams.

Gamble In His Double Veto

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK
WASHINGTON — So confident were President Nixon's Congressional leaders that he would not veto the education appropriations bill that they had drafted a careful strategy with White House aides to explain the obvious contradiction between letting it become law while another big money bill, containing housing funds, was vetoed.

That strategy called for Mr. Nixon to view with great alarm the additional half-billion dollars tacked onto the education bill above his budget request, and to state forcefully that he would recoup that excess amount by reducing spending for other social welfare programs.

On Monday evening, the day before the President summoned his Republican leaders to the White House, that was the agreed plan. It had the approval of most of the Congressional leadership, both Senate and House. It also had the specific endorsement of Elliot Richardson, the new Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare. In contrast to total White House secretiveness before the President's veto of the Hill-Burton Hospital Construction Act on June 22, Richardson's advice on the education bill had been specifically sought, by the President, and it was frankly given — let the bill become law.

But when the President seated his Congressional guests around the Cabinet table Tuesday morning, he was immediately hit hard by several of his leaders (notably Rep. Rogers Morton of Maryland, the Republican National Chairman). They politely challenged him the crystallize the issue of big spending by vetoing both bills with a bang.

Mr. Nixon listened carefully, took extensive notes, and waited for a strong rebuttal from those who he knew did not want him to veto the education bill. He was aware, for example, that Michigan's Rep. Gerald Ford, the House leader, and Sen. Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, the Senate leader, were against an education veto. They were against it partly because they knew Congress would override it (just as Congress overrode the hospital construction veto), partly because it would give the Democrats new ammunition to portray the President as anti-education.

But strangely, the strong rebuttal never came. The veto hawks kept the offensive and the veto doves kept quiet. Mr. Nixon was warned that the half-and-half strategy — veto housing but sign education — would inevitably dilute his anti-spending image and make him look patently anti-housing. The housing lobby has political tentacles fully as powerful as the education lobby.

Finally, he was bluntly informed that the Republicans simply could not exploit the Democratic-spending issue this fall unless the President was consistent and dramatic with his vetoes. "Spendmanship," he was told, could not be dramatized with a veto here, a veto there. It demanded the drama of consistency.

Sitting at the Cabinet table that morning was Vice President Spiro Agnew, tapped by Mr. Nixon to carry the main Republican campaign burden this fall. Agnew was vocal in siding with the veto hawks. With the excess money in both bills totalling more than one billion dollars, Agnew could see a billion-dollar campaign issue.

Accordingly, the President — who had not finally told anyone in the White House or on the Hill what he would do

Strength For Today

A TRANSPORTATION PROBLEM

When George Washington was serving his second term as President of the United States and living in Philadelphia, which was then the national capital, he looked forward to trips he might make to Mount Vernon. He made several of these, but the best time he ever made on a trip from Philadelphia to Mount Vernon was six days.

How far could we go today in six days? Mostly around the world and clear around it if our flying schedule was accurately followed. Would anyone have believed a hundred years ago, or perhaps even a decade ago, that we could reach the moon? People would smile and when the guy's back was turned would wink and touch their foreheads. People in high authority pleaded with King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella to arrest the lunatic Christopher Columbus and keep him from sending three shiploads of sailors over the brink and into the fiery abyss. It had often been said of Columbus when he started out he didn't know where he was going, when he got to the end of his journey he didn't know where he was, and when he got back he didn't know where he had been—but he still stands as one of the greatest persons that ever lived.

We all remember the crackpots who said that some day men would land on the moon. Now they are talking about journeys to Mars, and many of us think they should make the try and that it would be productive of great good. But more about that tomorrow.

Paradise Is In Trouble

TAHITI — At first glance Tahiti and the surrounding islands live up to their reputation as being an earthlike paradise. But after a week you notice many things wrong. It's sad to report but Tahiti lacks many of the refinements that Americans are used to. For example, during the 10 days we spent in Polynesia there was not one smog alert.

I kept inquiring about smog, but only got blank stares from the natives. The simple souls didn't even know what smog was, which shows you how far behind the times the Polynesians still are. Another thing that struck me was the fact that none of the dancers out here are topless. The Tahitian dancers prefer to wear bras to going bare, and an American tourist can make a fortune selling photos of Los Angeles go-go dancers to the natives, who are shocked that we allow our women to dance with nothing on. It takes a few days for an American to get used to dancers wearing bras, but after awhile you stop staring and it doesn't bother you at all. One of the things that strikes you about Tahiti is the

Other Editors Say Surtax Return?

(Henderson Dispatch)
From various quarters are heard rumors that serious consideration is being given to restoring the surtax on incomes. It would make of the government an Indian giver, in that it gives and then takes the gift back. In other words, while the tax was in effect, government became accustomed to the extra revenue, broadened its spending accordingly and finds it hard to backtrack on outlay along with reduced income.

The great surprise about the surtax was that it was repealed in the first place. But it was a Nixon campaign promise and he felt it to advantage to follow through. It was dropped grudgingly, of course, and piecemeal, half at the time. The levy was initiated as a temporary tax, the like of which in most instances becomes permanent. This one didn't, but now that it has lapsed — as of last June 30 — there are suggestions that it be restored. And you can be reasonably sure that if it comes back it will be back for keeps. The president of the Federal Reserve Bank says the Federal money position would be better off if the surtax had been retained. Of course it would, in view of higher spending. Top man in the First National Bank in Chicago is plugging for restoring the levy. And more will be heard along the same line. Nothing from official sources as of now, other than the Fed chief. But give them a little more time.

Remember, though, that these authorities make no mention whatever of economy in government. It's always a search for new sources of taxation for greater and deeper digs into the earnings of citizens. No one need be surprised if the surtax returns. Trial balloons to sound out public sentiment are already being sent up. And the dove from Noah's ark may shortly return with a twig in its bill, indicating that dry land is in sight.

noise, which is deafening. The wind blowing through the palm trees, the surf crashing against the coral and the constant flapping of the sails in the breeze is more than a person can stand. It's no wonder after a few days of this that a person longs for the quiet and solitude of New York City or Cleveland. Another thing that hits you is the lack of formality in clothing. The women out here are not even conscious that the midi is now in fashion and they are still wearing their sarongs above the knees. They also insist on wearing flowers in their hair. One is amazed to see men without coats and ties in restaurants and bars. A tourist can't help wondering what on earth the missionaries have been doing all these years.

Short Trim Usual

By WILLIAM CHAZE
JONESBORO, Ga. (AP) — A word to the man who likes his locks a trifle long: Don't sit down in a country barber shop and order a "regular haircut" and expect to remain fashionably shaggy.

The country barber's conception of a regular haircut stops just a hair short of a scalping. The product is instant generation gap.

I stopped off a few days ago in a small community south of Atlanta for a soft drink at a service station. I needed a haircut and decided, in a spasm of daring, that the small, one-chair barber shop down the road would be equal to the task.

The shop was colorfully rustic with year-old copies of the Police Gazette and detective magazines on the rack; a yellowing motor oil calendar on the wall, ragged carpet on the floor and the barber—himself indifferently barbered—dozing fitfully in his patched leatherette chair.

Throwing caution to the wind, I woke him and ordered the $1.25 regular special which, according to the chart on the wall, was a general shortening. He told me I looked like a man whose tastes in reading material were more lofty than Gazette. He produced a tattered Zane Grey western and said the courthouse crowd had read it several times.

Then the barber nudged me into the chair, wrapped a kitchen towel around my neck and began his labors. My hair was moderately long and the barber squinted at it reproachfully.

He began snipping away with a rusty-looking pair of scissors. "Regular haircut, eh?" he said, then cackled. All the while the clippers were roaring in my ears. There was no mirror in front of me but a fearful amount of hair fell onto the towel and through a hole onto my shirt front.

As I turned page six of the novel, the barber suddenly stood back and angrily rapped his clippers against the washbowl. "Clogged 'em with hair, dern it," he exclaimed. "Weren't made for this long hair of today."

A few minutes later he was finished. He looked a bit worried.

"You did say regular, right?" he asked. His face brightened when I repeated the order.

He held up a hand mirror in front of me. He had left perhaps an inch of hair on top but the sides were short and clean. Nothing was there except for stubble, like a five o'clock shadow on the sides of my head. I felt weak.

"I'll do better next time," said my friend. "Takes me one or two haircuts to learn a head. Your's is bumpier than most, as you can see now. I must admit, though, that's not a bad one for a starter."

My coworkers have been kind about the haircut.

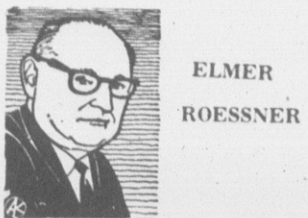

The boss tried to cheer me by saying that a year from now, a haircut like mine will be in style. Nice fellow.

Boosting Oil And Gas Prices

By ELMER ROESSNER
Despite the truce in the Israel-Arab war, the oil situation remains grave. The government-imposed cut-back in Libyan oil and the cut in the Trans Arabian Pipe Line in Syria has reduced the flow of crude oil to the West. In consequence, tanker rates have shot up, doubling charges since last spring, which were already double what they were a year ago. Middle East and African crude now costs more than domestic oil. Normally it is $1.5 a barrel less. The rise in tanker rates is increasing the profit of such fleet owners as Aristotle Onassis and Stavros Niarchos of Greece and Daniel K. Ludwig of the United States. Texas and Louisiana have both increased the allowable oil production rate and Canada is increasing its flow of crude.

We'll Pay For A War
Russia's activities in the Middle East, including the arming of Arab nations, appears to be based on her interest in oil. Her military power will be vastly increased if she can wrest control of Arabian oil from the West.

PREDICTIONS: The rice of gasoline and home and industrial fuel oil will sharply increase. Her husband will present Jacqueline Onassis with another barrel of jewelry. Domestic airlines are in a squeeze. Not only are they under heavy obligations to pay for the new giant 747s, but traffic has fallen off, due to the tighter economy. While summer travel is swelling traffic for transatlantic lines, their costs are rising. PREDICTIONS: Other domestic airlines will join United in seeking higher domestic fares. The lines will also increase demands that the government bar illegal charter flights. And when the International Air Transport Association meets next year, it will act to increase transatlantic fare.

The Big Auto Battle
New smaller cars about now being introduced by American manufacturers are a desperate attempt to fight the rising importation of small cars from Europe and Japan. It will be a hard, bitter fight.

American makers face sharply higher wage costs and prices for materials and will be forced to hike prices. Foreign cars, which have increased their share of the American market to 13 per cent, with lower wage and materials costs, will still have a price edge. PREDICTIONS: The American auto industry, including dealers and employees, will increase pressures on Congress to restrict by quotas or higher tariffs the importation of foreign cars. It will also pressure the Department of Transportation to make foreign cars meet U.S. safety standards to the ultimate.

Boston Bank Sees No Immediate Boom
The First National Bank of Boston, in its current New England Letter, says,

"Strong upward pressures on costs and prices remain despite the reduction in aggregate demand and the rise in unemployment. These pressures pose a threat to the accelerated growth being sought by the administration, which is calling for a more expansive money supply, desirous of a more rapid approach to full employment than in the five-year period following the 1960-61 contraction."

Angela Davis Search Broadened

SAN FRANCISCO, Calif. (AP) — The search for Angela Davis broadened today after a federal attorney confirmed that the self-professed Communist and former university philosophy instructor bought the shotgun that killed Judge Harold J. Haley. The judge and three other men were killed Aug. 8 during a gunbattle that followed a courtroom kidnaping at San Rafael, across the Golden Gate from San Francisco.

Miss Davis is charged with one count of murder and five counts of kidnaping under a California law which holds anyone who aids a major crime as guilty as the direct participants.

Jerold Ladar, assistant U.S. attorney, said Sunday a serial number check showed the shotgun was purchased at a San Francisco pawn shop Aug. 5 by the former UCLA instructor who the regents refused to hire.

The search for Miss Davis ranged from the West Coast to Birmingham, Ala., and abroad after Ladar disclosed that Miss Davis, 26, had a passport.

Early reports about the possible whereabouts of the attractive black educator with a high Afro hairdo had included Canada. Ladar said a passport was not needed to enter Canada, but would be necessary to go from there to any other country.

As the FBI joined in the search on a federal fugitive warrant charging unlawful flight to avoid prosecution, reports persisted that Miss Davis might be in Birmingham Ala., her birthplace.

Maj. David Orange, head of the Jefferson County (Ala.) sheriff's intelligence force, said he is convinced that she is still in Birmingham.

An informant told officers Miss Davis had attended a Black Panther party meeting in Birmingham last Friday night, he reported.

In San Francisco, Ladar said Miss Davis was reported to have been a frequent companion of Jonathan Jackson, 17, one of those killed in the shootout at the Marin County Civic Center.

Investigators said Jackson went into Haley's courtroom with a bowling bag full of weapons and interrupted an assault trial by brandishing guns and shouting: "All right, everybody freeze!"

Taking the judge and four others in the courtroom as hostages, Jackson and three San Quentin convicts—one on trial for assaulting a guard and two present as witnesses—marched the hostages to a parking lot.

In a gunbattle that erupted as the abductors tried to leave the area in a small van with their hostages, Jackson and two of the convicts, James McClain and William A. Christmas, were killed.

The third convict, Ruchell Magee, and two of the hostages were wounded.

A sawed-off shotgun, which had been taped around the judge's neck in the courtroom and which later was used to kill him, is the one identified as the weapon Miss Davis purchased, Ladar said.

She also has been named as the buyer of two other guns used in the shootings, he added.

Predicts Active Role By Church

ASHEVILLE, N. C. (AP) — Baptist editor Marse Grant says church groups will be more active than ever before in the 1971 General Assembly.

Grant, editor of the Biblical Recorder in Raleigh, told the organizational meeting of the Christian Action League Sunday that activity of the league will not be confined to opposing liquor by the drink, but will "extend to highway safety, prison reform, drug abuse, the mentally ill, and all other legislation affecting the welfare of human beings."

Riptides Claim Lives On Coast

PORTSMOUTH, Va. (AP) — At least two drowning accompanied dangerous rip tides that swept the Middle Atlantic Coast Sunday.

The U. S. Weather Bureau issued a dangerous riptide warning Sunday for the coast from Cape Hatteras, N.C., to Ocean City, Md.

Along the Virginia and North Carolina coasts officials patrolled the beaches and warned persons not to go in the water.

A Coast Guard spokesman at Portsmouth said at least two drownings had resulted from the strong tides.

The victims were listed as Mrs. Susan Jones, 23, of Cincinnati, Ohio, at Cape Hatteras and Julio Fajardo, 19, of Arlington, Va., at Virginia Beach.

Today In Washington

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS WASHINGTON (AP) — Narcotics Bureau Director John E. Ingersoll concedes that the government has failed to reduce the amount of heroin available in the United States.

He said Sunday that cutting off the supply at the borders is impossible, so his agency is concentrating its efforts at the overseas sources.

As for arresting traffickers, he said, "for every one you arrest there are a number of others standing in the wings."

Ingersoll was interviewed on the NBC television-radio program "Face the Nation."

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Philip A. Hart asked the Federal Trade Commission today to look over testimony he took about gasoline pricing and determine if anti-trust laws are being violated.

The Michigan Democrat, referring to three days of hearings last month by his Senate anti-trust subcommittee, said that "all-in-all testimony pictured a market riddled with anti-competitive practices."

He requested the FTC to receive the testimony on a priority basis and advise him of its conclusions within 60 days.

Hart said that if the FTC determines no laws appear to be violated by the practices complained of in the testimony, he would like to know if the situation suggests the need for additional legislation.

He also requested the FTC to comment on whether it would be desirable or feasible to require major oil companies to sell their retail stations.

WASHINGTON (AP) — A resolution to establish a congressional committee to investigate the treatment of prisoners of war in Vietnam is being introduced today by Sens. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., and Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass.

The panel would consist of five members each from the Senate and House. They said it would investigate POW treatment by North Vietnam, South Vietnam, the United States and the National Liberation Front.

A report would be made no later Dec. 1, "containing the results of its study and investigation and any recommendations for legislative or administrative action it deems appropriate."

Pontiff Decries Degrading Roles

CASTEL GANDOLFO, Italy (AP) — Pope Paul VI says delinquency and the use of drugs have increased to the proportions of a "social epidemic."

Speaking at his summer residence here Sunday, the pontiff also decried nudism as an "attempt to make the body the primary principle of life..."

"In this way, man the animal increasingly degrades himself, without limits. And why then should we be surprised if pleasure, egoism, delinquency and drugs take the upper hand in life? These ills spread like a social epidemic and render life so base, so sad."

Begin Week Of Recess In MacDonald Hearing

FT. BRAGG, N.C. (AP) — An Army hearing into murder charges against Capt. Jeffrey R. MacDonald has entered a week-long recess to allow the prosecution to prepare rebuttal evidence.

The defense closed its case Saturday by putting MacDonald on the witness stand for the third day in the closed-door trial.

Bernard Segal, one of MacDonald's two civilian attorneys, —decided on his great veto gamble shortly after that two-hour meeting. The gamble was a great one because at the time he made his double veto he did not know for sure whether Congress could override not only the education veto (a foregone conclusion) but also the housing veto, thus risking a dangerous loss of Presidential prestige. A single override of the double veto would be acceptable, but a double override, in the words of one White House aide, could lead "to a runaway Congress with the veto power neutralized." That question was still in doubt as we wrote this.

The gamble also assumes that the voters will believe the President that Democratic spending — not Administration failures — are responsible for the persistent and politically potent inflation and high interest rates. It assumes that the Democrats will not be able to exploit the effect of the vetoes on the major pressure groups most affected. But daring gambles, as the Cambodian affair demonstrated, are becoming a hallmark of this President.

Bora Bora and Moorea and Raitaea is provided by the natives who sing and dance until early hours of the morning. It's hard to believe that any civilization can survive without Johnny Carson or Laugh In, but somehow the Tahitians manage to do it.

At the same time, you can see the effects the lack of television has had on the natives. They have no idea which detergent contains the most active ingredients; they don't know which shampoo will add luster to their hair. They have no clue as to what works faster than aspirin, and they don't even know what mouth wash to use when someone accuses them of bad breath.

The only thing the Tahitians have going for them, as far as we could tell, is that there is no generation gap.

A young man does not argue with his father when he's told he can't borrow the outrigger canoe. A young girl must be in her hut by 10 o'clock at night.

How do Tahitian parents manage to wield this control over their children? They attribute it to a secret Tahitian phrase that has been passed down through the generations. When a child asks why he cannot do a certain thing, a Tahitian parent always replies, "No te mea ua parau vau mi tera." Translated in English, it means "Because I said so."

said the 27-year-old Green Beret physician from Patchogue, N.Y., again denied that he killed his pregnant wife and two daughters.

Defense attorneys have been the only source of information on the hearing since the Army ordered it closed shortly after it began.

Segal said MacDonald also was questioned for about 45 minutes by Col. Warren V. Rock, the officer conducting the inquiry into the bizarre Feb. 17 slayings at MacDonald's Ft. Bragg home. He said Rock asked MacDonald if he killed his wife and children. MacDonald replied, "No," Segal said.

After the hearing Rock must recommend whether or not MacDonald should be tried at a court-martial on three counts of premeditated murder.

The slayings were discovered about 3:30 a.m. Feb. 17 by military policemen who answered MacDonald's telephoned call for help. They found MacDonald suffering from several stab wounds and his wife and children dead.

Mrs. MacDonald, 26, and Kimberly, 6, had been stabbed and bludgeoned. Kristen, 2, had been stabbed.

MacDonald told investigators he was attacked by three men. He said he was awakened on his living room couch by cries from his wife. He said he lost con-

Retrieved Lost Nixon Cuff Link

WASHINGTON (AP) — The sharp eye of Mrs. Richard M. Nixon saved the loss of one of a pair of expensive cufflinks she had given the President.

Nixon caught one of the links as it fell from his sleeve Friday while he was shaking hands with an enthusiastic crowd during a visit to New Orleans, but it was feared the other link had been lost.

A spokesman for the family disclosed Sunday, however, that Mrs. Nixon had spotted the errant link on the floor of the presidential limousine and retrieved it.

She returned the gold and lapis lazuli link to the President later, when they rejoined after separate activities in the Southern city, the family aide said.

It's Pollution, But Also Means Work For People

By RICHARD M. SUDHALTER
OMIS, Yugoslavia (UPI) — Miljka Brajkovic carefully swept a half-inch layer of dirty gray powder from the stone terrace of her house overlooking the deep blue of the Adriatic. She coughed.

"It's disgusting. It's filthy," she said. She straightened the dusty black handkerchief holding her gray hair in place. "We are all wish to heaven it weren't this way."

"But it's got to be. That place over there means work for 450 of our people and food for their families. Do you know what that means, mister? It means—they can live decent lives. They don't have to be poor any more," she said.

"That place," just visible through the pines behind Miljka Brajkovic's century-old, two-story stone house, is the Renco Spercac cement factory, built eight years ago south of the Adriatic coast resort town of OMIS.

Despoiled Tourist Spas
Seven days a week, 24 hours a day, Renco Spercac's eight-story unfiltered gray smokestack spews choking gray white clouds into the air above omis, famed as a former pirate fair and center of scenic beauty. The same winds which cool tourists along the Adriatic carry the smoke high and far, spreading one factory's industrial smog over more than 20 miles of coastline.

Six miles out to sea, on the shores of the golden island of Braac, waste from Renco Spercac and from the Dugi Rat chemical plant five miles down the road floats in an oily scum on the surface of the water.

Renco Spercac is one of a series of unfiltered industrial plants which foreshadow a major pollution problem for sections of Yugoslavia's 1,250 miles of Adriatic tourist paradise.

For Miljka Brajkovic, 65, such factories are an unpleasant necessity. So she holds her tongue when her 5-year-old grandson, Nenad, spends a month in a local hospital under treatment for a lung inflammation from the air around Renco Spercac. And she only shrugs when it's time to clean dust and grime off the 45 chickens which supply the family with part of its livelihood, or water down the shriveled, soot-caked apricot and pear trees in the front yard.

Clash Of Priorities
The best solution is to forget it — over a glass of homemade Dalmatian wine, fragrant with the bouquet of dried grape.

In spite, 15 miles up the coast, Branko Zodre scowls as he discusses the effects of growing industry on the four luxury hotels he manages for Yugoslavia's million-dollar tourist trade.

"Industry is on the move here, we all know that," he said. Beyond the front steps of the glass-front Marjan Hotel, below the concrete quay, a hidden pipe discharges a widening under-water cloud of yellow, sulphurous-smelling waste from a factory somewhere inland, dimming the blue-green of the sea. Zodre wrinkles his nose at the smell.

"There have been factories here for more than 50 years. They're entrenched and they have influence. We've asked that all plants be filtered, but results are slow in coming," he said. "And there are no laws."

Balancing National Economy
According to Zodre, the Yugoslav government's credit terms to industry are far more generous than to tourism.

"I'm not about to suggest killing off industry," Zodre insisted. "We need it. But we can't afford to lose tourists. We have to reach some sort of agreement with industry, perhaps by assigning certain areas only to industry and leaving others solely for tourism. I don't know."

For the moment, the question of pollution as a hazard to life is far from the minds even of such as Branko Zodre. To him it is important that Yugoslavia made $300 million in foreign tourism last year and could double that by next season — as long as industrial development doesn't drive the customers away.

Slavko Zulj sipped Turkish coffee in the Marjan's snack shop and said he thought it was all a matter of priorities.

"We realize there's a growing conflict with tourism," he said, watching a white yacht under full sail putting out to sea across the bay. "out Yugoslavia is on the threshold of a major expansion in the petrochemicals industry. There's enormous potential there — and the best location by far for factories is by the sea."

July, 47, general manager of the Jugovinil plastics factory near Split. Two decades ago his plant pioneered manufacture of plastic sheeting in Yugoslavia. Today Jugovinil is a constantly-expanding industrial moneymaker.

"Filters? Pollution? I don't see a lot of danger," Zulj said. "What we need is designation of which coastal areas are for tourism, and which are for industry."

"More industry means more employment. Here in the Split area we have almost a one-to-one worker-student ratio, highest in the country. If it weren't for industry, that would mean disaster-scale unemployment.

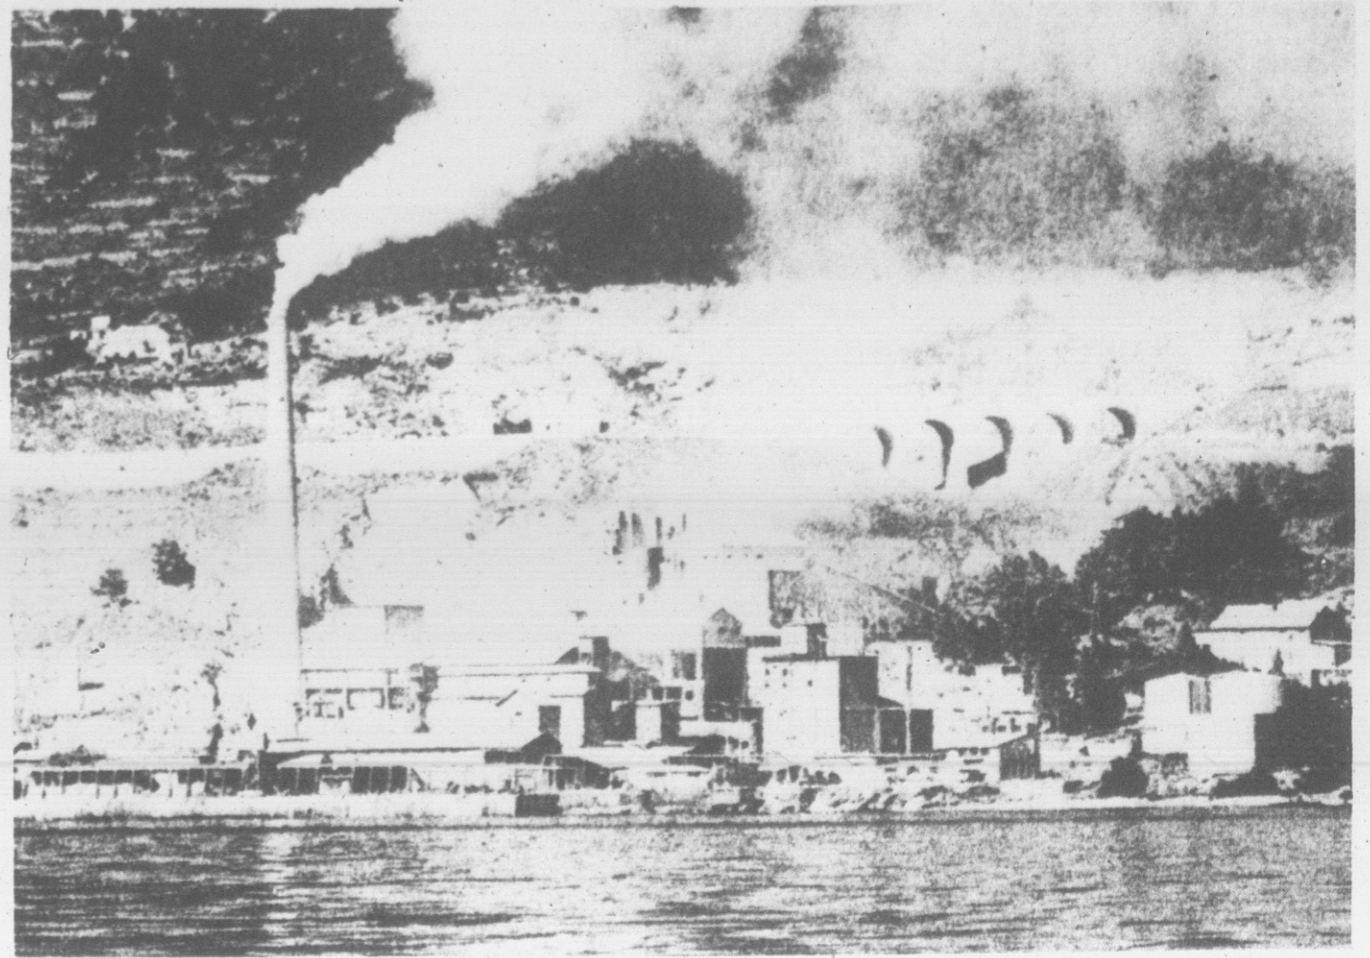

"Instead of sending our workers abroad we've got to make opportunities for them at home. Look at our plant — about 80 per cent of our processing is done within a 62-mile radius of here. That means jobs for 12,000 workers. I don't mean to sound callous, but when you're thinking about that you don't consider fishing and things like that so important. There's plenty of fishing space further out and at other places along the coast."

For the moment, yes. All the way south to Dubrovnik, Budva, Sveti Stefan and Kotor, the coast is still free of smog and waste. The islands, for the most part, still gleam fresh in the sunlight.

But for how long? At Omis, a group of American students at a six-week seminar complain of headaches and upset stomachs. Miljka Brajkovic's marigolds droop under the weight of Renco Spercac's industrial fallout. Factory officials promise a filter for next summer.

"They've said that for five years now," Miljka said.

Dusan Ulic, 33, proprietor of Omis' Brazet Hotel, insists business couldn't be better. "My hotel is full, the beaches are full. The food is good and we don't get complaints. Why are you trying to invent a crisis?"

Bills For Pure Air May Run Into Big Figures

NEW YORK (AP) — The bills for pure air are beginning to come in, and they may be heavier than some environmentalists expected.

The cost in money is not the whole cost of efforts to clear pollution from the air. A power shortage this summer and a likely heat shortage this winter — at least in the Northeast section of the United States — are the nonfiscal costs of the program.

The problem is the swing to low-sulphur heating oils to keep sulfur dioxide out of the air.

The swing is good for the Caribbean, where sulfur-removal plants are going into use, although too late to help much this winter. But it means higher oil costs and possible shortages of heat and, perhaps, power this winter.

Sulfur is not the only factor in the prospective shortages, although it is the principal one.

Others are the clamors of conservationists which have blocked new power plants in rural areas, a shortage of oil tankers, and government regulations which have kept down the price of natural gas. Even new coal mine safety legislation is partially responsible.

As a combined result of all this, power has been cut this summer and New York subways ran slowly to save electricity. And an oil shortage this winter menaces both heat and power.

A Chicago hospital has been able to buy only half the oil it will need this winter and a New England power plant only a third of its needs. What oil is available costs as much as 25 per cent more than before the shortage developed.

The New York City government, which formerly opposed new power plants within its boundaries, now favors a needed new plant since the subway slowdown. The oil tanker shortage is due to Mideast troubles, which have cut down the Mediterranean run and forced the fleet into the longer voyage around the Cape of Good Hope.

The government-set natural gas price was so low, the pipeline people say, that it was not worthwhile to explore for new gas deposits and therefore there is now a shortage.

The rigid coal mine safety law affected the fuel supply in two ways — some mines could not meet it and shut down, and at other mines where the law was not enforced the miners went on strike.

In either case, power plants had to shift to oil since extra gas was not available.

Even the oil available could not always be used because it was too high in sulfur. Many cities have enacted laws against burning high-sulfur oil, although supplies in view were insufficient.

That is where Venezuela comes in. Two plants there will take sulfur out of the regular Venezuelan crude. In addition, other desulfurization plants in the Caribbean — Aruba, Bahamas, and the U.S. Virgin Islands — will probably go into operation this winter. But the output from all of them is not expected to be enough to fill the market.

Creole Oil Co. has a prospective capacity of 166,000 barrels per day in a desulfurization plant at Amuay, Venezuela, and Royal Dutch Shell will get 50,000 barrels a day from its Cardon, Venezuela plant.

In Aruba, Standard Oil will get 88,000 barrels daily and California Standard expects 250,000 barrels from a plant at Freeport in the Bahamas.

Amerada Hess has an 86,000-barrel plant coming in the Virgin Islands and Texaco has plans for a plant in Trinidad.

All this has cost the companies about $500 million, which means that much less spent on the development of new wells. This makes the long-range outlook nearly as bleak as the short-range one for people who like their houses warm and well-lighted.

Winterville Tax Bills Mailed

WINTERVILLE — The 1970 tax bills for the Town of Winterville were mailed today.

According to Elwood Nobles, town clerk, the 655 bills mailed show a total valuation for the town of Winterville amounting to $2,457,027.

The bills mailed were based on the $1.25 per $100 valuation, the same tax rate used last year.

Nobles said the one percent discount will be in effect on all taxes paid during the month of August.

Nixon Doctrine Creating Anxiety Throughout Asia

By SPENCER DAVIS
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The administration's year-old policy, aimed at shrinking the nation's military posture and foreign aid programs has created anxiety, bewilderment and skepticism throughout Asia, diplomatic sources say.

Japan, meanwhile, is said to have emerged as a reluctant beneficiary of the so-called Nixon Doctrine, which was spelled out by the President on Guam in August of last year.

Ranking Asian and American officials in 10 countries from Japan to Pakistan commented in interviews on the effect of the doctrine.
There is agreement that Tokyo's prestige and influence has soared as non-Communist Asia, faced with declining American involvements, looks to Japan to fill whatever gaps the departing Americans may leave.

The prospect of a greatly expanded role has somewhat alarmed Japanese leaders who now are urging the United States to go slow in carrying out the deAmericanization program in Southeast and Northeast Asia.

The Japanese would much prefer to be strictly an economic partner while the United States continues to shoulder the major security burden of the region.

American officials—stung by congressional criticism that U.S. sacrifices have succeeded in making Southeast Asia safe for Japanese investment—are calling on the government of Prime Minister Eisaku Sato to take on more responsibility, particularly in stepped up aid to Vietnam and Cambodia.

The Nixon Doctrine has been met by considerable skepticism in India. It is not clear, say Indian authorities, exactly what is meant by the Guam declaration.
On one hand there is the reduction announced for U.S. ground forces in Vietnam, Korea, Thailand and the Philippines.

On the other, they say, it is the U.S. desire to get these countries to build up their own ground combat forces, in pursuance of whatever international policy the United States wishes.
Consequently, the Indians argue, there is no American withdrawal under this interpretation, but merely a change in the composition of U.S. and allied forces.

India's foreign policy makers, who keep an uneasy eye on mainland China, hope and expect that Hanoi will be the most powerful single factor in any grouping of Southeast Asian nations after the Vietnam war is ended.

The Indians say Hanoi is willing to allow South Vietnam a separate existence, although it may not last for very long—perhaps five or ten years.

The Indians say they would go along with a coalition government imposed on Saigon from the outside, because it would be impossible to hold free elections under the present conditions.

In Vietnam, the Indian view of a coalition is vehemently rejected on the ground that the government cannot choose to share its power without popular sanctions.

An election in which the national Liberation Front could participate, however, has been offered.

The Saigon government has taken a matter-of-fact attitude toward the Nixon doctrine and the vietnamization program.

Officials point out that South Vietnam has built up its armed forces from 900,000 to close to 1.1 million men who are supplied with guns and ammunition by the U.S.

"But who is going to pay for the salary and the maintenance of these men when the level of U.S. financial aid remains static?" it is asked.

Decreasing U.S. forces mean less revenue at a time when Saigon must spend more on combat operations and they expect the U.S. to pay the difference.

At the same time, high American officials have pointed out that Japan is selling Vietnam three times as much in consumer goods as the United States.

U.S. officials have asked Japan to do more for Vietnam's economic rehabilitation than so far offered.

The most anxious American ally under the Nixon Doctrine has been South Korea, where the government fears that a reduction of U.S. forces will lead North Korean Premier Kim Il Sung to miscalculate and attempt to reunify Korea by force.

American officials see little chance that Kim would risk such a move unless an opportunity such as the lapse of the present government or its replacement by a weak regime suddenly offered an opportunity with very little risk.

"It is up to us to see that this does not happen," commented one American diplomat. Nevertheless, South Koreans want to see their armed forces modernized and their air defenses and sea defenses greatly improved before the United States starts to withdraw the first 20,000 of some 61,000 troops.

The angriest reaction to current U.S. policy is in Thailand.

According to Foreign Minister Thanat Khoman "uneasiness does not come from implementation of the Nixon Doctrine. The uneasiness is caused by the present struggle between your executive and the legislative branches and the erratic behavior of some of the congressional elements.

"Many people in the world, not only in Asia, question the steadiness of U.S. policy," he said.

American authorities say there will be further scaling down of U.S. forces in Thailand as units are identified that are no longer required.

In Japan, Japanese leaders are speaking of "task-sharing" with the United States maintaining its bilateral security commitments with Korea, Taiwan and the Philippines and Japan's role contributing to social stability.

American officials say Japan also is in a position to provide limited military assistance not in the form of guns and weapons but in the form of such common use items as trucks, communications equipment and heavy construction equipment.

Anti-Fraud Unit Wars On White Collar Crime

By JEAN HELLER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Earlier this month, a former government official pleaded guilty with another man to charges of embezzling almost $80,000 from the estates of dead veterans. The two men fall prey to Seymour Glanzer, the best oboc player in the Justice Department.

Glanzer is probably the only assistant U.S. attorney in the country with a degree from the prestigious Juilliard School of Music in New York. But he long ago gave up his woodwinds for the law and the result has been a rampage against white collar crime in the nation's capital.

That sort of crime generally falls under the heading of fraud, and the victims range from the federal government to the city's poor.

Among Glanzer's cases: —The successful prosecution of a prominent Catholic lawyer who stole more than $1.5 million from an order of nuns while acting as their financial adviser.

—Convictions of four individuals in two separate cases on mail fraud charges stemming from schemes to take possession of homes belonging to poor Washington residents.

—Conviction of three men who posed as doctors here.

—And in Glanzer's most celebrated case, four persons pleaded guilty to defrauding the Navy on defense contracts for aircraft rocket launchers and siphoning some $4 million into secret Swiss bank accounts. That case helped produce legislation which would put tighter rein on Americans dealing with secret foreign bank accounts.

Glanzer, 44, who speaks with a leftover Bronx accent and talks like a runaway machine-gun, feels about such frauds much the way a dog feels about rabies.

"The impact of these crimes is staggering," he said. "In one home improvement fraud case 700 poor families were victimized. And what about those guys posing as doctors? They actually treated people. What if somebody had cancer and was being diagnosed improperly by those clowns? Could you estimate the loss?"

"And for some reason in this country people don't get very upset about white collar crime. It's preposterous! Our society seems to breed the attitude that no matter how much you have, you've got to have more. And nobody really seems to care. White collar crime is privileged. The very people who are deploring the soaring crime rate are engaging in white collar crime. They've got bumper stickers that say, 'Support Law and Order,' and they're cheating on their income tax, embezzling consumers and siphoning ill-gotten gains into secret Swiss bank accounts.

"In most U.S. attorney's offices you've got kids who aren't experienced depending on investigators who aren't lawyers," Glanzer says. "That shouldn't be. The Justice Department should have specialists to go all over the country and work on fraud cases and right now the Justice Department staff isn't big enough for it.

"I'm sick of seeing people get away with it."

Glanzer has imparted his own sense of righteous indignation to his three young assistants, Robert Ogren, Gene Anderson and Robert Boraks.

They whip through a day as though under orders to clean up the city before sundown. They make twice as many appointments as they can keep but somehow manage to keep them all, although rarely on time.

Weeks' worth of effort are saved along the way, however, because, according to Glanzer's estimate, 90 to 95 per cent of his cases end in guilty pleas and never go to a jury.

Glanzer went to the U.S. attorney's office from the Securities and Exchange Commission and in 1967 he got his first fraud case, a home improvement swindle. On that day, the anti-fraud push was on in Washington and now Flannery says he is considering enlarging the unit beyond its present four-man staff.

Glanzer would like to see it expanded nationwide.

One passenger in the Singleton car was reported injured.

Officers said a vehicle driven by Vaultine Clemmons, 21, of 401 Greenville Blvd. and a parked car owned by Orlando Little of Route 2, Williamston were involved in a 1 a.m. incident on Fifth Street 100 feet West of the Ford Street intersection.

Officers, who made no charges, set damage to the Little vehicle at $75 and estimated damage to the Clemmons vehicle at $400.

Plan Test Of Poseidon

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) — The second underwater test firing of the Navy's Poseidon missile was scheduled today amid speculation that the Russians might try to shoulder their way into a front row seat.

According to informants here, the Coast Guard has been keeping watch on a Soviet trawler maneuvering in international waters off Cape Kennedy.

The ship, crammed with electronic gear, began moving inland this past weekend after maintaining a post well out at sea.

The multiple warhead Poseidon is designed to replace the Polaris missile in U.S. submarines.

The first test firing of the Poseidon was scheduled for July 24, but was postponed when a Soviet trawler probed to within 200 yards of the nuclear submarine James Madison.

A trawler was on hand when the Pentagon finally gave the go ahead for the delayed firing Aug. 3.

Once the missile broke the surface, the Soviet spy ship raced toward the launch spot to try to recover debris and nearly collided with a U.S. ship. It then steamed away without retrieving anything from the sea.

The Navy speculated that the Soviet vessel, the Laptev, was attempting to obtain information about the Madison's exhaust for use in the development of submarine detection equipment.

Lured Into Bomb Trap

Police Bomb Lead, No Pickup OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Eight Omaha policemen apparently were lured into a dynamite trap in a vacant house on the city's Near North Side today and one was killed and seven hurt.

Lt. John Bozak said a booby-trapped suitcase on the living room floor of the two and one-half story house in a predominantly Negro section exploded, blowing the house apart.

The slain officer was Larry Menard, who would have been 30 on Thursday, Deputy Police Chief Glen Gates said. Menard had been on the police force since February 1963.

One policeman, John Tess, was hospitalized with leg wounds and was in fair condition. Six other policemen were treated at hospitals and released.

Gates said eight policemen were dispatched to the area after a report a woman was screaming. He said there had been a number of "crank" calls from the area in recent days.

Apparently, Gates said, "a dynamite trap" was planned.

Some of the officers entered the vacant house, while others remained outside.

Gates said it was not known for sure that Menard actually touched the booby-trapped suitcase, as police reported earlier.

He was the nearest officer to it, however, and was killed instantly.

Some policemen were blown through a doorway and others knocked down. The blast was heard several blocks away.

Police and firemen sealed off the area and placed a tarpaulin over the wreckage to protect it against an early morning rain.

Bozak said that after the first report came, the eight officers were sent out and began a search of the vacant house.

'Impressed' On Canadian Tour

RESOLUTE BAY, N.W.T. (AP) — Secretary of the Interior Walter J. Hickel, no stranger to the Arctic, says he has been impressed during a trip to Canada's northern regions "with the activity and the sincere desire... to make things work out."

The former Alaska governor is on a 4,000-mile tour of the Canadian Arctic which ends Tuesday.

Hickel visited the Eskimo communities of Arctic Bay and Hall Beach on Baffin Island Saturday and also stopped at a distant early warning line station and a minerals exploration camp.

U.S. B52 Fleet Is Committed Against Communist Offensive

By GEORGE ESPER Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) — The United States today committed its entire Pacific force of B52 bombers against the new Communist offensive in the northernmost provinces of South Vietnam.

Nearly 100 of the big bombers from Guam, Okinawa and Thailand dropped some 3,000 tons of bombs on North Vietnamese supply and staging areas on both sides of the Laotian border during the past 48 hours.

The raids were the heaviest in two years in the sector. Informants said clouds prevented any accurate assessment of the bomb damage, but several secondary explosions indicated hits on ammunition stores.

The U.S. Command ordered the B52s out in full force after attacks Sunday on seven allied bases guarding approaches to the populous coastal lowlands of Quang Tri and Thua Thien provinces.

The U.S. Command also announced that three American helicopters were shot down on the Laotian side of the border Saturday, two of them as they tried to rescue the crew of the first chopper downed. Headquarters said one American was killed, two were missing and five were wounded in the crashes.

Official sources said they believe the enemy pressure against the allied bases along the Laotian border and the Demilitarized Zone is part of the preparation for a big push against the Saigon government's pacification program in the lowlands.

North Vietnamese gunners late Sunday slammed nearly 200 rounds of rockets, mortars and recoilless rifle shells into five allied bases along the DMZ. It was the heaviest attack in that region in more than a year.

At the same time the North Vietnamese for the eighth day kept up attacks on two allied fire bases—O'Reilly and Barnett—some 25 miles south of the DMZ along the Laotian border. Three ground fights were reported around the bases.

Casualties and damage were reported light over-all, but one South Vietnamese artillery base, Fuller, four miles south of the DMZ, was hard hit. Seventy rounds from 120mm mortars slammed into it, blowing up an ammunition dump. A score or more South Vietnamese troops were killed, and as many more were wounded.

The U.S. Command said several Americans were killed in the other shelling attacks, but none was wounded.

Casualties reported in the ground fighting included 18 North Vietnamese, two Americans and three South Vietnamese killed, and 12 Americans and seven South Vietnamese wounded. South Vietnamese troops from Fire Base O'Reilly also uncovered an enemy stockpile of more than 200 rocket and mortar rounds two miles from the base.

Post Commander Lloyd Nooe announces that members of the American League Baseball Team and their parents will be special guests at the August meeting.

Fire Damaged Vacant House

Greenville firemen were called to a vacant house at the intersection of Sixth Street and Roosevelt Avenue about 4:48 a.m. today when a fire erupted and caused heavy damage to the rear of the dwelling.

Officers said the wood-frame dwelling owned by the Greenville Redevelopment Commission, was vacant and being remodeled.

Cause of the fire, which began around the rear door of the home, was listed as "undetermined."

New Suit Of Sails For 'Star Of India'

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP) — The Star of India, billed as the oldest iron ship afloat, is spreading her wings again.

Scampering over the 205-foot vessel, crew members will spread 25,000 square feet of nylon sail Aug. 29, her first full suit of sails since her arrival in 1927 as a waterfront museum.

Her journey here began with launch Nov. 14, 1863, on the Isle of Man and included trading trips on the England-India, West Coast-Australia and San Francisco-Alaska routes.

In all, the Star of India made 27 round-the-world trips.

At a cost of $9,000 she was purchased for the San Diego Zoological Society to be turned into a museum moored to the downtown waterfront. About 140,000 persons a year inspect her decks, her paneled quarters and exhibits of cutlasses, sea chests, ship models and a gig from Admiral Farragut's flagship Hartford.

The Maritime Museum Association, a nonprofit educational corporation with civic leaders as directors, owns the Star. The master of the ship, Kenneth Reynard, has directed a $400,000 restoration since 1961.

"The hull is original," says Reynard, a onetime boat designer and sailmaker who built his shipboard office under the poop deck.

"The masts were original with the exception of the top gallant and royal mast. There were parts we had to add to her to complete us, but in most cases what we put into her was identical to the deteriorated parts we had to remove."

Despite being moored a half-century, Reynard says "the Star of India is a seaworthy ship, in my opinion, about 85 percent as strong as she was during her first voyage."

Hopes For Joining Of 'Disillusioned'

WASHINGTON (AP) — John W. Gardner, former secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, says he hopes to channel the disillusionment with both major parties into a new political action group, "The Common Cause."

"I have my eye on creating some consequences which will alter the atmosphere in which every presidential election between now and the year 2,000 is conducted," he said Sunday.

Gardner, now chairman of the Urban Coalition, said the present political system includes some good men, "but they are smothered, they are frustrated, they are chewed up."

"I think that things have become so bad that a lot of people are ready to move—ready to act constructively."

He said discontent has spread to "middle class people, reasonable affluent people" and threatens to "lead to a splintering of the parties. It could lead to massive refusals to vote. It could lead to following demagogues. We're trying to lead that in a constructive direction."

Gardner denied that he wanted to run for office himself or that he would use the "Common Cause" as a third-party base for his friend, New York Mayor John Lindsay, to run for president.

Gardner was heard on the CBS television-radio program "Face the Nation."

No Primates On City Streets

Vick Forrest with grandfather clock he built.

Leisure Years — More Time for Woodworking Craftsman

When Vick Forrest opened the front doors on Five Points in Greenville on July 25th, 1931, State Bank and Trust Co. began to operate.

Vick's banking life had started earlier as teller with the National Bank of Greenville in June, 1926. When he retired on Aug. 31, he had completed 44 years on Five Points.

Vick was cashier at the time of State Bank's merger with North Carolina National Bank and has been secretary of the board for many years. His was an era in which a man learned by doing, and he learned how to do it all.

In those "good old days," time payment was practically unheard of and credit cards were unknown. A man who had no money just didn't spend any. On his vacation, he would lie under a chinaberry tree and watch the clouds, or just meet the Coast Line passenger train from Weldon, or the Norfolk and Southern from Raleigh, or go fishing.

On a Saturday night, a man could take his date to the movies for a quarter and buy a box of Zu-Zu crackers for a nickel. After the movie on a summer evening he could sip a Nu-Grape or an Orange Crush for five cents under a slow moving electric fan over the table at Burney Warren's drug store.

This was the era of Vick Forrest. He came to know all the customers and they all knew him. He saw them come and go, and came to know each morning which ones had written bad checks the day before.

Early in life, he learned the joy of creating something with his hands, and in his backyard shop, he found release from tensions of the day in building and rebuilding clocks.

Vick has made complete cases and installed the works for more than 25 clocks, including three magnificently carved grandfather clocks six to eight feet tall. People came from miles around, and Vick has placed in working order more than 100 vintage clocks.

Vick and his wife, Eva, have a son, Bill, who has given them a granddaughter, Vickie Lynn. And they have a daughter, Peggy Moore, whose 14-year-old twins, Pam and Pat, add a double interest to life.

In a day of specialization, retirement of a man who knows all departments should be sad for his associates. But Vick has come many a mile and earned the reward of leisurely years to build things with his bare hands, with the perfection of a true craftsman—both in woodworking and in banking.

Four Homers Helped Break Twins' Nine Game Losing Streak Stockton New PGA Champion

By KEN RAPPOPORT
Associated Press Sports Writer

The go-go power had gone in the Minnesota Twins' hitting machine... and Manager Bill Rigney was seeing double.

"Hitting's been the big problem... and for that matter, so has our pitching," said a distracted Rigney, his team stuck in a nine-game losing slide before Sunday's game at Boston.

But all bad things come to an end sooner or later—and Minnesota's Twin-barreled offense suddenly was switched in, turned on... and out of sight.

The Twins broke out in typical, fence-busting fashion with four homers that beamed Boston

9-6 in a free-swinging Fenway Park. The victory boosted Minnesota's West Division American League lead to 4½ games over Oakland, which lost 2-1 to Baltimore.

The Twins had a 10-game lead over second-place California on Aug. 8, before the start of the Great Skid. Oakland got hot and won six of eight, took over second and had cut Minnesota's bulge to 3½ games.

Milwaukee spilled Cleveland 4-3; Detroit turned back California 7-1; Washington nipped Chicago 2-1 and New York downed Kansas City 5-1 in the other AL games Sunday.

In the National League, Montreal beat Houston 5-3; New York tripped Atlanta 2-1; Cincinnati defeated Philadelphia 4-2; Chicago clipped Los Angeles 5-2; San Diego whipped Pittsburgh 8-6 and San Francisco stopped St. Louis 5-2.

Rigney, interviewed before Sunday's game, confessed the Twins had been playing raggedly.

"When you say, slump, you touch a lot of bases," said Rigney. "And we touched them all. Our play has been ragged all over."

Cesar Tovar's three-run homer in the eighth capped the long ball party and turned out to be the decisive blow. Brant Aleya, George Mitterwald and Harmon Killebrew (37) hit earlier homers for the Twins.

Reggie Smith, Tony Conigliaro and Gerry Moses homered for the Red Sox in the swinging affair that also produced a total of seven doubles.

Bert Blyleven, who started the nine-game streak with a losing effort, won the game in relief for Minnesota.

Baltimore's Dave McNally became the major's first 18-game winner, stopping Oakland's surge toward the top with a six-hitter. Chico Salmon's homer off the left-field screen in the fifth broke a tie and sent the Orioles to their 12th victory in the last 17 games.

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Young Dave Stockton of Westlake, Calif., is the new PGA champion because he believed in a dream and refused to be shaken by an antagonistic Arnie's Army.

"I came here with a positive attitude," the good looking, 28-year-old professional's son said after collecting the $40,000 first prize Sunday and crushing Arnold Palmer's bid for the only major title he hasn't won.

"All week I thought about how I'd play the 18th hole if I came down to it with a two-stroke lead—I really felt it would happen."

Stockton came to the final hole of the 72-hole championship with a three-stroke lead and he played it cool, settling for a bogey five, a closing 73 for a 279 and a two-stroke edge over Palmer and Bob Murphy.

Each of the runners-up collected $18,500. Larry Hinson and Gene Littler were next at 282, collecting $8,800.

Stockton preparing to hit a wedge from the fairway, a fan was heard to yell loudly: "Bury it in the sand, Davey." "Shank it," another screamed.

Stockton sank the short pitch shot for an eagle duce.

At the tough 13th, Stockton's jinx hole throughout the tournament, Dave dumped his second into the lake and heard one of the Army scream: "Yahoo! Go get him now, Arnie!"

Stockton almost holed out with a magnificent chip which he said saved the tournament for him. The ball stopped less than a foot from the hole.

Stockton then sank long putts on the 16th and 17th and played conservatively short on the 18th to preserve his edge.

He said tears welled up in his eyes when he saw his wife, Kathy, standing near the 18th green and he didn't think he would be able to putt out. But he did, after his caddies handed him a towel to wipe his face.

The new PGA champion is a strapping, dark-haired six-footer who describes himself as a "popcorn hitter" because of his short drives. He has developed into one of the best putters on the tour.

"Take Davey's putter away from him and he'd go around with mustard on his shirt," a fellow pro said jestingly.

Stockton grew up in San Bernardino, Calif., where his father was a teaching professional, but he insists his dad was not a doting parent who pushed him into golf.

"It was just the opposite," Stockton explained. "Our family lived on the golf course. We used the golf course water to sprinkle our lawn and mowers to mow around fishing rods, guns and sporting equipment.

Stockton attended the University of Southern California.

Jurgenson's Arm Was Hotter Than Fire In Boston's Stands

By BEN THOMAS
Associated Press Sports Writer

Even with the temperature in the 90s and flames erupting in the wooden stands, the hottest thing in Boston College Stadium was the throwing arm of Sonny Jurgenson.

Many say Jurgenson is the premiere passer in pro football.

His performance Sunday as the Washington Redskins crushed the Boston Patriots 45-21 gives an indication why.

When Jurgenson trotted off the turf early in the third period, his Redskins held a commanding 28-0 edge after four Jurgenson touchdown passes, three to Jerry Smith.

"Now we have to establish our ground game to give him some help," said Bill Austin, who is pinch-hitting as the interim head coach for the Skins because of the illness and hospitalization of Vince Lombardi.

It got kind of warm, however, even before the game began.

A fire broke out in a section of the stands, delaying the start 22 minutes.

Then Jurgenson burned up the Patriot secondary with his passing. His scoring tosses to Smith went 6, 18 and 61 yards. Larry Brown caught the other touchdown throw, an 11-yarder.

Sonny's statistics: 14 of 16 for 176 yards and no interceptions. Over-all, Washington's passing produced a 18-for-22 showing, good for 248 yards.

The Oakland Raiders are at Philadelphia tonight in the final game of the second exhibition weekend.

In the Saturday clashes, the New Orleans Saints beat the Houston Oilers 19-10 as rookie Ken Burroughs dashed 64 yards with the second-half kickoff to set up the winning touchdown. There was a free-for-all in the first quarter with both benches emptying.

"You remember a game like that for a long time and you could say it had something to do with getting us fired up," said Pittsburgh Coach Chuck Noll, recalling the 52-12 humiliation handed his Steelers last year by Minnesota. This time it was Pittsburgh 20, Minnesota 13 and the first victory in 15 games for the Steelers—13 regular season and one exhibition game loss.

Terry Bradshaw, the Louisiana Tech Little All-American and pro football's No. 1 rookie this season, played, Noll said, "a tremendous game."

The strong-armed young quarterback went the distance, completing 12 of 30 for 111 yards. Preston Pearson also sparkled for Pittsburgh, going 98 yards for a touchdown with a kickoff return and rushing 74 yards, including a 36-yard spurt which set up a touchdown.

Bob Berry hurled a pair of touchdown passes as the Atlanta Falcons crushed the New York Jets, still without Joe Namath, 33-7. The Jets' score didn't come until the final two minutes.

The Los Angeles Rams had to keep big Roman Gabriel on the bench after the quarterback reinjured his right knee in pre-game warmups.

It can run the mile in 5¢ flat.

Who says a nickel won't buy anything anymore?
That solitary nickel pays for your gas. (Naturally.)
And oil. And tires. And maintenance. And repairs. And depreciation. And registration. And insurance.
And even some nifty accessories. (Like a radio. Floor mats. Luggage rack.)
Five cents.

That's all it takes to run the mile in a Volkswagen.
Of course if you want, you can run the mile in someone else's car.
But you'll never see the finish line on a nickel.
Because a U.S. Government study says the average conventional car costs more:
10.9 cents a mile.

Cleon Jones' Homer Gives Mets 2-1 Victory Over Braves

By DICK COUCH
Associated Press Sports Writer
Chief Knockkoma's war whoops had the New York Mets' ears ringing until Cleon Jones gave the Atlanta medicine man a taste of his own fire-water.

Jones drilled a tie-breaking home run in the sixth inning Sunday as the Mets shrugged off Knockkoma's Indian sign and nipped the Braves 2-1 behind the five-hit pitching of Jim McAndrew.

The victory, coupled with Pittsburgh's 8-6 loss to San Diego, sent the second place Mets within three games of the Pirates in the National League East Division scramble.

It also silenced the Braves' mischievous mascot, who holds fourth in a tiepee just beyond the left field fence at Atlanta Stadium and celebrates each home team homer with a triumph dance.

In other National League action, Cincinnati defeated Philadelphia 4-2, the Chicago Cubs topped Los Angeles 5-2, San Francisco downed St. Louis 5-2, and Montreal trimmed Houston 3-1.

In the American League, Baltimore nipped Oakland 2-1, Detroit pounded California 7-1, the New York Yankees beat Kansas City 5-1, Minnesota slugged Boston 9-6, Milwaukee edged Cleveland 4-3 and Washington shaded the Chicago White Sox 2-1.

Knockkoma had no home runs to celebrate over the weekend but he flipped his war-bone Saturday night when Jerry Grote's third-strike passed ball and throwing error in the ninth gave the Braves a 3-2 victory over the startled Mets.

When the Braves scored the tying run against McAndrew Sunday on a zany, inning-ending double play, Knockkoma started whooping it up again. But Jones spoiled the fun by opening the sixth with his eighth homer of the season.

McAndrew ended a personal three-game losing string and brought his season record to 7-11 by blanking the Braves after Sonny Jackson scored in the fourth as the Mets completed a slow-motion double play.

With Jackson at third, Orlando Cepeda at first and one out, second baseman Ken Boswell gloved Rico Carty's sinking liner, but then let the ball trickle away. Cepeda froze on the baseline, then headed for second when Boswell recovered and tossed to first baseman Donn Clendenon.

Clendenon threw to second, then, prodded by McAndrew, called for the ball back and finally, stepped on first. In the confusion, Jackson tagged up at third and sneaked home.

The umpires ruled that Boswell had made the catch and called Cepeda out at first, but allowed the run because of the "time lapse" between putouts.

Both managers disputed the decision to no avail. San Diego's Ed Spiezio wrecked the Pirates with a three-run homer in the eighth after the Padres blew a 5-0 first inning lead. Bob Robertson's seventh inning homer pulled the Pirates even before Spiezio connected off reliever Orlando Pena to snap Pittsburgh's winning string at three games.

Johnny Bench drove in three runs, boosting his major league-leading RBI harvest to 118, and pitcher Tony Cloninger homered as the Reds checked the Phillies.

The victory increased their West Division lead to 12 games over the Dodgers who squandered a 2-0 lead and wasted 10 hits at Chicago. Randy Hundley delivered two runs for the Cubs with a pair of singles, helping right-hander Bill Hands gain his 14th victory.

Samuel Gupton Wins Soap Box Derby

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — "I didn't know I had won until I heard them call my name," said Samuel Gupton, 13, of Durham, N.C., after guiding his fiberglass racer to victory in the 33rd annual All-American Soap Box Derby here Saturday.

The 5-foot-2, 90-pound eighth grader said he plans to use his $7,500 first-prize scholarship to study engineering at North Carolina State University.

Gupton didn't reach the Akron derby last year. He lost his second heat in North Carolina.

"The defeat only seemed to make Sam more determined," said the boy's father, J.T. Gupton, a dime-store owner. "He spent all his spare time building the car in the garage."

Second-place winner was Charles W. Poole of DeKalb Decatur, Ga., who received a $5,000 scholarship. Steve M. Long of Oroville, Calif., was third and received a $4,000 scholarship. Fourth place winner was Wesley Hoover, Santa Anna, Calif., who won a $3,500 scholarship.

James Patrick Silcox of Indianapolis, Ind., was fifth and won a $3,000 scholarship. Jeffrey Allen Schockley of Muncie, Ind., was sixth for $2,500. James Bryan Hicks, High Point, N.C., was seventh for $2,000. James C. Phillips, Temple, Tex., was eighth for $1,500, and ninth was Len Scott Means of Warren, Pa., for $1,000.

Young Gupton also had the fastest heat time for the day and for the past five years with 27.12 seconds over the 975.4-foot downhill course. Fastest time for the course, however, was 26.63 seconds in 1947 by Tony Penuelas of San Diego, Calif., who set it in the first and only heat he ran. Gupton's clocking in the finals was 27.22 seconds.

On deslin, the boy said, "I molded the body out of fiberglass. There wasn't enough room inside for the steering assembly, so I mounted it on top. I nicknamed the car 'Double X' because of the shape of the frame." He added that he had a covered cockpit on the lay-down-style, heavily-propelled racer "to keep air out of the car."

He was the first winner from south of the Mason-Dixon line since 1952 when Joe Lunn of Columbus, Ga., won.

Capt. Richard Gordon Jr., pilot of the Apollo 12 spacecraft, won the Oil Can Trophy Race in the pre-race festivities.

Several accidents resulted in minor injuries to racers. One collision in the 39th heat sent Richard L. Bullock of Salisbury, N.C., and Matt Davis of Zanesville, Ohio, to Akron Childrens Hospital. Both were treated and released.

ed him win the pole position. "I'd rather not say what it is," he grinned in the press box, already cleaned up and out of his racing clothes. "Then everyone else would know."

The night before the race at supper in nearby Jackson, two boys approached Grotzbach for his autograph. Charlie signed them simply "Charlie Grotzbach."

"You should take advantage of your nickname and sign them 'Charg'n Charlie Grotzbach' two friends advised him. "I don't call myself Charg'n Charlie, that's something somebody else stuck on me," he said. "I'm just a poor country boy trying to make a living. They tell me I have no polish. But I'm too old to change now."

Atlanta Falcons Trounced New York Jets At Wake Forest

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — "Atlanta came to play and we didn't," observed New York coach Weeb Ewbank as he nursed the mental and physical bruises inflicted on his Jets Saturday when the Atlanta Falcons trounced them, 33-7, at Wake Forest University's Groves Stadium.

"We didn't block and tackle. We didn't execute. We didn't think. We were dead out there," he added.

The Jets, without star quarterback Joe Namath and defensive captain Al Atkinson, could do nothing right Saturday. They didn't score until the final moments of the game and then it took a change of quarterbacks.

On the fifth play of the game Falcon quarterback Bob Berry tossed a 52-yard touchdown pass to veteran Gail Cogdill and from then on it was Atlanta's game.

Even without the services of star linebacker Tommy Nobis, the Falcons contained New York behind the midfield stripe on all but two occasions in the first half.

Harry Theofilides came in late in the game for the Jets and threw a 20-yard touchdown pass to Ed Bell for the Jets only

TD. Al Woodall, a former player for Duke University, took Namath's place for most of the game, but couldn't get the team moving. Woodall was trapped for a loss only once, but he threw two interceptions and fumbled once.

Atlanta coach Norm van Brocklin said after the game, "Our kids came to play. We sometimes have a few things in mind but this time we played it by ear."

It was the Falcons first game but the second for the Jets. Van Brocklin explained that he didn't use star linebacker Tommy Nobis because he wanted to give others experience at the position.

The game, promoted by the Wake Forest athletic department, drew 19,700.

Van Brocklin said two things made him happy — he got to play everyone he had intended to and that no one was injured seriously.

Van Brocklin praised the play of his quarterbacks, Berry and Randy Johnson and their receivers.

Berry had to leave the game with a slight knee injury in the first quarter but returned in the second half.

Van Brocklin said that he felt that part of the receivers' success was due to the fact that they now have their own coach, Harry Gilmer. Last season Van Brocklin himself had been forced to coach them.

No word was reported from running back Art Malone, the Falcons' No. 2 draft choice from Arizona State, who left camp Friday after his additional contract demands were not met.

Van Brocklin had said that if the demands were met, it would not be fair to the rest of the Falcons and the rest of the players in the National Football League.

Meanwhile, Namath may re-join the Jets this week in time for their exhibition game next Sunday against the New York Giants.

The Monday editions of the New York Times quoted Phil Iselin, president of the Jets, as saying "Joe's people have indicated he'll be in camp Tuesday or Wednesday."

Namath already has missed two exhibition games.

Glotzbach Roars To Victory At Yankee 400 Sunday

By LARRY PALADINO
Associated Press Sports Writer
CAMBRIDGE JUNCTION, Mich. (AP) — Nearly everyone calls Charlie Grotzbach "Charg'n Charlie Grotzbach" except Charlie Grotzbach.

The veteran race driver from Georgetown, Ind., says he's just a poor country boy and will never develop the public relations prowess to sign autographs "Charg'n Charlie" instead of just Charlie.

But what he lacks in "color," he made up for Sunday at Michigan International Speedway by roaring to victory in the Yankee 400 NASCAR race before a crowd of 34,500.

The "poor country boy" collected, $14,275 of a $76,500 purse by coasting his Dodge the final nine laps under a caution flag ahead of Bobby Allison in another Dodge. Grotzbach's time was a track record 148.264 miles per hour.

"I think the fans saw a pretty race all day so I don't think they should be disappointed because it ended on a caution flag," said the stern-faced ex-bulldozer operator whose last big victory was in October, 1968 in the National 500 at Charlotte, N.C.

The Yankee 400 had been a brilliant duel most of the way between Grotzbach and the Mercury of two-time Michigan winner Cale Yarborough. But Yarborough, who was nursing his fuel tank and set of tires more than 100 miles without a pit stop, blew his engine past the first turn on the 189th of the 197-lap race over the two-mile oval.

Pole sitter Grotzbach calmly drove his plum-purple winged Dodge around the spinning Yarborough and since the caution flag came out no one was authorized to pass him the rest of the way. It was the only caution flag in the race, showing that the new carburetor rule imposed last week by NASCAR was effective.

The rule required a carburetor device installed to slow vehicles down to cut down on blown engines, suspension failures and tire wear.

"I was running as hard as I could run and was gaining on him," Grotzbach said of Yarborough. "I was catching him about four seconds a lap and could have gotten him with nine laps left."

"For a while we were concerned Cale would run 120 miles on 22 gallons of gas and that's pretty good," grinned Paul Goldsmith, ex-veteran driver from St. Clair Shores, Mich., who is co-owner of Grotzbach's car and crew chief.

"I hated to see Cale blow," he added. "I wanted to see Charlie go on and catch him."

Dick Brooks, 1969 NASCAR Rookie of the year from Porterville, Calif., was third in a Plymouth ahead of Bobby Isaac of Catawaba, N.C., in a Dodge. Fifth went to Pete Hamilton of Dedham, Mass., in a Plymouth, while Buddy Baker of Charlotte, N.C., finished sixth.

Grotzbach made only four pit stops for tires and fuel, a far better average than normal for races of this length. He led 116 of the 197 laps—the track actually measures four-tenths of a mile longer than the standard two-mile distance—and turned most of them at speeds above 155 miles per hour.

He and Yarborough each led four times, with Allison holding the advantage three times, including a stretch of 22 laps around the 300-mile mark. Allison was the only driver besides Grotzbach to finish 197 laps.

During the qualifying runs week Grotzbach mentioned there was something he learned about the M.I.S. track that help-

West North East South
1 ♠ 2 ♣ Pass ?

What do you bid?
A.—Pass. Even tho it might prove that two spades would be the best contract for your side, one cannot escape the conclusion that you will have your hands full persuading partner of that fact. By the time you have succeeded in convincing him the tariff will be exorbitant. Pass and let nature take its course.

Q. 5—Both vulnerable. As South you hold:
♠K10 9742 ♣QJ10 63 ♢5 ♣Q

The bidding has proceeded:
North East South
1 ♠ 1 ♠ ?

What do you bid?
A.—Do not make the mistake of doubling. The auction will never rest there, for both West and your partner are short of spades and one of them is sure to run. This hand is a potential misfit and the soundest strategy is to pass and await further developments.

Q. 2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AJ 8 ♣QJ 8 6 3 2 ♢7 ♣Q 8 4

The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
Pass 1 ♠ Pass Pass ?

What do you bid now?
A.—Two hearts, one more than is necessary to overcall. Such a bid can hardly be misconstrued by partner who must realize that the original pass limited your holding. A mere reopening bid of one heart could be made on a great deal less.

Q. 6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A10 3 ♣10 ♢6 4 2 ♣AJ10 7 5 4

The bidding has proceeded:
North East South West
1 ♠ 2 ♣ Pass 2 ♣ Pass 3 ♣ Pass 4 ♣ Pass 4 ♣ Pass ?

What do you bid now?
A.—Four hearts. While it is abnormal to give partner a preference with a singleton, his jump rebid indicated at least a good six card suit. Furthermore, there is no better fit in the minors and a trick contract will be a wiser choice than one for 11 on the relative misfit.

Q. 3—Neither vulnerable. As South you hold:
♠AK 9 ♣J10 7 5 2 ♢A 9 8 6 ♣K

The bidding has proceeded:
West North East South
1 ♠ 1 ♠ Pass ?

What do you bid?
A.—Even the partner made a mere overcall you should not be willing to ignore slam possibilities. A jump to four hearts would not do justice to this holding. If your answer was three hearts, you have flunked the exam ignominiously, for such a bid (when partner did not open the bidding) is not forcing. The approved call is two diamonds, a cue bid forcing to game.

Q. 7—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A 9 ♣AK10 7 ♢K10 9 6 3 ♣4 2

The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♠ 2 ♣ 2 ♣ 3 ♣ ?

What do you bid now?
A.—Three diamonds. While this hand would not normally be considered strong enough for a free bid at the level of three, in this case partner has shown a hand of "game proportions" when he overcalled West's two club bid with the drastic bid of two spades. It would waste a round of bidding for you to fail to show your second suit.

Q. 4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J 9 4 ♣Void ♢QJ 8 4 3 ♣K 9 8 5 2

The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
Pass 1 NT Pass Pass ?

What do you bid now?
A.—Pass. You have more to lose than gain by bidding. Remember one of your opponents has 16 points. The other may as many as seven.

Q. 8—Both vulnerable. As South you hold:
♠5 ♣K 6 5 4 2 ♢K10 3 ♣A10 9 4

The bidding has proceeded:
North East South West
1 ♠ Pass 1 ♠ Pass Pass ?

What do you bid now?
A.—Two clubs. This may seem rather on the timid side, but a stronger bid is not necessary. By reopening the bidding after partner's second round pass, you have indicated at least a fair hand. A three club bid is out, for we treat that as forcing to game.

they develop Tony's delight in printed matter. So use the booklet below. A splendid college insurance policy will avail nothing if a child dislikes school!

By GEORGE W. CRANE, Ph. D., M. D.

CASE 0-501: Tony B., aged 5, likes newspapers.

"Dr. Crane," his proud mother began, "Tony actually will prefer the newspaper to most of the TV shows!"

"And it all began because his daddy 'brainwashed' Tony to take a favorable view of the newspaper."

"His daddy is a reporter and naturally quite prejudiced in favor of the printed page vs. TV."

"Thus, he tried to figure out a way by which he could intrigue the interest of Tony, even though Tony couldn't read."

"So he would hold Tony on his lap and describe the various comic strips."

"Daddy was a fertile imagination, anyway, so he would sometimes add a few extra twists to the plot."

"But then he would let Tony color the comic strips with a box of kindergarten crayons."

"And he would praise Tony for staying within the lines. In fact, occasionally he'd cut out an especially neat coloring job by Tony and use a thumb tack to fasten it to the wall in Tony's bedroom."

"When Daddy was late getting home from work, he'd talk to Tony on the phone and urge him to start coloring the comic strips before they had time to sit down together and read them."

"In this way, Tony has begun to look with great favor upon printed matter, including children's story books."

"Dr. Crane, don't you think my husband used excellent psychology on our young son?"

Bravo to Tony's daddy! The term "brainwashing" originally had a bad connotation, due to the cruel use of this technique on our captive American soldiers when they were in custody of the Communists.

But "brainwashing" is a splendid tool of parents and all educators.

In psychology, we formerly urged parents to "condition" their kiddies favorably toward school.

Our "condition" meant the same as "brainwash."

Both imply the use of conscious, as well as subconscious, teaching with the proper emotional flavor attached thereto.

Alas, most parents are not as patient nor as clever as Tony's daddy.

Tony is already being given a running head start toward college, for he will soon become an excellent reader.

And reading is the real motor of the entire educational process.

Kiddies who look with favor upon printed matter, either in the form of books or comic pages, will zoom to the top of their class.

Droptouts, on the contrary, may be high in I.Q., but low in proper study habits and emotional attitudes toward study, due to lack of the happy brainwashing that Tony is getting.

Nowadays, we are trying new ways to help entice school children to become good readers, including a new 40-letter alphabet to supplement the former 26-letters.

But you don't need to stress NEW alphabets if you parents will take a little time for a few years when your kiddies approach kindergarten age.

That's your golden opportunity to set them on the sure highway to good scholarship and a fondness for educational subjects.

Send for my booklet "How to Raise Your Child's School Marks," enclosing a long stamped, return envelope, plus 20c. Order it NOW; then use it! (Always write to Dr. Crane in care of this newspaper, enclosing a long stamped, addressed envelope and 20c to cover typing and printing costs when you send for one of his booklets.)

Witch Doctor Is A 'Moonlighter'

HEAD: Witch Doctor With A Green Thumb Gives Aid for 50 Cents A Call
ART: 1-col mat John Seako
JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — John Seako is a fulltime gardener who moonlights as a witch doctor and does well in both fields.
A local physician hired Seako to tend his garden seven years ago. "He treats every flower that blooms like a newborn child," said the doctor, who did not want his name used for professional reasons.

The witch-doctor with a green thumb is technically known as a "ngaka," or bone thrower. His powers are affirmed by a certificate from the African Dingaka Association and when he isn't tending plants he dispenses information, advice and herbs to clients for 50 cents per call.

Seako's employer says the 65-year-old gardener has a flourishing sideline and serves many clients with his witchcraft.
The tools of the ngaka's trade include bones from a wild pig, porcupine and turtle plus assorted seashells which are kept in a skin bag. His method is simple. Seako rolls out a strip of cardboard, scoops up the bones in both hands and lets them tumble onto the cardboard. He claims to read signs from the way the bones land.

He declined to say whether he rolled the bones to help grow his flowers.
Seako says he inherited the bones and other intricacies of his craft from his father, also a ngaka.

Job Bank Fills Govm't Posts

By PEGGY SIMPSON
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal agency has created a job bank to place qualified Mexican-Americans and other Spanish-speaking persons in government positions.

Mexican-Americans in top civil service grades between 15 and 18 number little more than 1 per cent, the agency says, compared with 5.3 per cent for blacks.

The Cabinet Committee for Opportunity of the Spanish-surnamed adds only 2.8 per cent of all government employees are Mexican-Americans. Most work in lower echelons.

In its initial five months, only 5 to 7 per cent of the estimated 500 applicants on file have gotten jobs.

What's been lacking has been a commitment on the part of the agencies, said Merced Hernandez, a Texan with 14 years' experience in directing personnel operations within the government.

At weekly meetings with placement people from agencies throughout the government, he finds out about current or upcoming vacancies.

He is trying to persuade agencies to call him and ask for recommendations of Spanish-surnamed specialists.

When he learns of an opening, and has people qualified for it, he may send up to four applicants to be considered. The cabinet committee itself doesn't formally endorse an applicant, he said, but tries to match persons with openings.

Some persons have tried and failed to get positions for which their training and experience qualified them, he said. Others aren't aware of where they should market their skills.

Hernandez said some applicants have passed the federal entrance exams and have a rating.

But he said one-third of the people currently in professional positions in the government didn't come in by passing the difficult career entrance exams. Instead they worked at lower levels and were promoted or had compensatory training, he explained.

With the right kind of know-how, he said, Mexican-Americans can do the same thing.

Hernandez and committee director Martin Castillo also are trying other tactics to bring more Spanish-surnamed people into jobs.

Castillo suggested to the Federal Aviation Administration, for example, that Spanish-speaking air traffic controllers might be a bonus in international ports. Castillo said the controllers often converse with pilots from Spain and South American nations whose English is shaky.

Hernandez said emphasis also is placed on persuading federal job recruiters to stop at colleges which enroll sizable numbers of the Mexican-Americans.

Tobacco TIPS

By S. J. WEEKS

Root knot nematodes reduce the net return from many fields of tobacco each year. This loss is brought about in three ways (1) nematodes stunt the growth of plants and thereby reduce yields, (2) the root damaging activities of nematodes increase the damage from black shank, Granville wilt and other diseases, and (3) the tobacco from affected plants is usually thin and chaffy and of lower quality.

Root knot nematodes multiply rapidly when planted to susceptible crops like tobacco. For example, the female nematode will lay about 400 eggs and it requires only 21 to 22 days to complete the life cycle from eggs to adults. A nematode can lay a lot of eggs and the life cycle is short. By plowing out the stubbles, you can kill a large percentage of nematodes and eggs.

Nematode reproduction and development takes place most rapidly during the warm summer and fall months.

The results of research tests and farm demonstrations indicate that when the tobacco stubbles are plowed out immediately after harvest, the nematode population can be reduced 70 to 80 percent. Use of this practice alone will not give adequate nematode control, but supplements control obtained with crop rotation and soil fumigation. In a winter management test conducted at the Oxford Experiment Station, where the roots were plowed out the per acre value was $248 more than the per acre value in plots where the roots were not plowed out. In plots where the roots were plowed out and oats were used as a cover crop, the per acre value was $989. In the use of the oat cover crop, in addition to plowing out the roots, also lowered the root knot index. In all these test plots tobacco was being grown continuously.

Plan now to do your part in making OPERATION R-6-P a SUCCESS in Pitt County. In addition to helping control nematodes, you will be assisting in the control of five other pests to the tobacco plant when you cut your stalks, plow out the stubbles, and two weeks later disc and seed a cover crop. These six pests are: Brown spot, Mosaic, hornworms, budworms, and flea beetles. In order for maximum results to be obtained from OPERATION R-6-P (Reduce 6 Pests) 100 percent participation by you and your neighbors is essential.
