Gubernatorial Races

Bowles, Holshouser Nominated

By MELVIN LANG
Associated Press Writer

for boasting but for pulling together," and promised he would "not rub salt in any wounds" created by his costly runoff with Taylor.

Taylor, appearing on the program with Bowles, offered his support to the Greensboro businessman in the fall general election.

With 2,229 of 2,255 precincts reported, Bowles had 332,197 votes, or 54.4 per cent, to 278,249 votes for Taylor.

In the GOP race Holshouser had 69,325 votes, or 50.77 per cent, to 67,197 votes for Gardner with 2,229 precincts counted.

Bowles led the first Democratic primary, topping Taylor by 62,523 votes in a six-man field. Gardner, who had predicted he would poll 65 to 70 per cent of the total vote, led Holshouser by 1,269 votes in their four-man primary.

Taylor, completing his term as the state's last part-time lieutenant governor, was attempting to maintain the trend established by the late W. Kerr Scott in 1948 and former Gov. Dan Moore in 1964.

Scott and Moore were runner-up in their first primary campaign but came back in the runoff to win nomination and subsequently gain election.

The Taylor-Bowles race developed into the most expensive primary in North Carolina history.

Skipper Bowles

Bowles, reporting campaign expenses in excess of $800,000, used an extensive television campaign for the first primary and the runoff.

Taylor also turned to television and widespread outdoor advertising in the runoff as he boosted his reported campaign expenses to nearly $600,000.

As a runnerup after the May 6 voting, Taylor came back fighting for the runoff—stating he would not be outfought. He backed up the statement by stepping up his spending and his promises.

Taylor announced a tax reform package that would exempt persons with income of less than $100 a week from any

Jim Holshouser

Bowles stuck to his first-primary tactics, including a pledge that no new taxes would be levied. He strengthened his road improvement proposal and repeated his urging that the state speed up its judicial processes.

Taylor won endorsements from two of his opponents in the first primary, labor leader Wilbur Hobby and black Charlotte dentist Reginald Hawkins.

Gardner and Holshouser, both former state Republican chairmen, reversed their positions as the runoff primary started.

Gardner, who maintained a low-key campaign in the first primary as he stressed party unity, unleashed a series of attacks on Holshouser's record as party chairman, as a candidate and as a legislator.

Holshouser had used the same tactics against Gardner in the first primary. This time he spoke against Gardner only in responding to allegations raised by his opponent.

Busing of school children and White House support held the major share of their attention. Both candidates publicly stated opposition to so-called forced busing to achieve racial balance.

Gardner contended that the White House had asked Holshouser to stay out of the gubernatorial race. Holshouser denied it.

Taylor, Gardner, Galifianakis Carry County

Pitt County voters went against statewide trends Saturday in at least two of the major races as Democratic gubernatorial candidate Pat Taylor topped Skipper Bowles and GOP hopeful Jim Gardner easily.

outpointed Jim Holshouser.

Turning out in lighter numbers in the runoff than in the May 6 primary, the county Democrats voiced their support of Nick Galifianakis for the United States Senate seat over incumbent B. Everett Jordan.

With all 26 of Pitt's voting precincts reporting, Taylor compiled an unofficial total of 6,045 while Bowles, who led the lieutenant governor in the first primary, trailed with 4,356.

As of 10:30 p.m. Saturday night, however, the Associated Press reported that Bowles had apparently carried the state in his bid for the governor's seat.

The AP also gave Holshouser, a Boone attorney and former State Republican Party chairman, a slim lead over Gardner in the state GOP gubernatorial contest.

In the county, Gardner picked up 921 votes while Holshouser tallied 325. Gardner carried all but one precinct in the county in winning as Holshouser managed only a tie in the Greenville Six precinct.

Galifianakis, who led Jordan statewide by over 35,000 votes in the May primary, led his opponent from Saxapahaw early in the evening as the county returns began to come in but with about half of the 26 reporting, Jordan had slipped into a slight lead. Heavy returns for Galifianakis in several of the later precincts provided the congressman with his 846 vote margin.

The Associated Press reported at 10:30 that Galifianakis was headed for apparent victory over Jordan in the statewide race.

In the bid for Insurance Commissioner, candidate E. Russell Secrest took a fairly substantial lead over his opponent John Ingram. The unofficial tallies for Pitt County gave Secrest 5,248 votes and Ingram 4,183.

John C. Brooks took an early lead and maintained it over his opponent W. C. "Billy" Creel in the Commissioner of Labor race. Brooks emerged an even 1,300 ahead of Creel, with 5,475 votes to 4,175 votes for Creel in Pitt County.

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Rep. Nick Galifianakis, the 43-year-old son of Greek immigrant parents who was given no chance of victory a few months ago, Saturday defeated the veteran Sen. B. Everett Jordan in North Carolina's senatorial runoff election.

Galifianakis will face Republican Jesse Helms, a Raleigh television executive in the November general election.

Galifianakis, who conducted a person-to-person campaign throughout the state's 100 counties, rode a wave of votes from the metropolitan sections of the industrial rich Piedmont Crescent, to beat Jordan, the 75-year-old millionaire owner of a textile mill who has 14 years seniority in the U.S. Senate.

Galifianakis had come close in the first primary a month ago, getting 49 per cent of the vote in a four-man race. This time he did it, despite Jordan's most active campaign since he was appointed and re-elected twice to the Senate.

This was North Carolina's first bitter battle for a Democratic senatorial nomination in 20 years.

With 1,801 of 2,255 precincts reporting, the vote was Galifianakis 260,577 votes or 56.16 per cent, and Jordan 203,410, or 43.83 per cent.

Jordan's runoff candidacy moved into the national spotlight when a gunman killed three persons and wounded eight others at a Raleigh shopping center where the senator was campaigning.

Jordan had just shaken hands with some women and had gone into the shopping center mall when the gunman began firing. However, police said an investigation had eliminated "any possibility" that the man was trying to shoot Jordan.

No motive has been established for the shootings.

Galifianakis polled 49 per cent of the vote in the four-man race in the first primary compared to 44 per cent for Jordan. Both he and Jordan concentrated mainly on the person-to-person type campaign in the runoff, devoting much time to handshaking.

Jordan, who intensified his runoff efforts, said friends had told him they didn't campaign as hard as they should have during the first primary.

Galifianakis, elected to Congress in 1966, accused Jordan of "toying around" in his 14 years as a senator. In his runoff, the congressman renewed his proposal for an increase in personal income tax exemptions to $1,200 and said he would seek a means of reducing the national indebtedness.

Jordan contended he has supported drug legislation while his opponent has done nothing but talk about such problems.

Galifianakis, a native of Durham and a graduate of the Duke University law school, plunged into politics in 1960 at the age of 32 and was elected to the state House of Representatives. He also served in the 1963 and 1965 House sessions.

As the most eligible bachelor of the 1961 session, Galifianakis was not adverse to pointing out that his name "starts with Gal and ends with kis." He has been married since 1963.

Jordan, a native of Ramseur, was appointed to the Senate in 1958 by former Gov. Luther Hodges to succeed the late Sen. W. Kerr Scott.

A veteran textile manufacturer, Jordan formerly served as chairman of the North Carolina Democratic party and national Democratic committeeman.

Tripp Resigns From Commission

ASHEVILLE (AP) — Gov. Bob Scott said Saturday he has accepted the resignations of two highway commissioners accused by a Raleigh newspaper earlier this year of violating the state's conflict of interest law.

He says he also is turning over investigative reports on the two men to "appropriate district court solicitors."

E. J. Whitmire of Franklin was accused by the Raleigh News and Observer of selling crushed stone from a quarry at Penrose to the state and Arthur Tripp of Greenville was alleged to have sold fill dirt to two highway construction firms for use on projects near Greenville.

Scott said, "Some weeks ago I requested the attorney general to initiate an investigation into the charges of conflict of interest. I have carefully reviewed the reports and, since the reports rightly do not state guilt or innocence but only the facts involved, I am submitting them to the solicitors having jurisdiction."

"It will be up to them to decide if the facts warrant prosecution," he said, and added that he has accepted the resignations of the two men "in order to remove any doubts on my intention to maintain integrity in government."

The report on Whitmire will go to Marcellus Buchanan of Sylva, solicitor for the 30th Judicial District. The report on Tripp is being sent to Eli Bloom Jr. of Greenville, solicitor for the 3rd District.

A state statute makes it a felony for a commissioner or full-time Highway Commission employee to transact business with the commission.

Whitmire, 56, a former teacher and farmer in Macon County, who also owns Macon Construction Co., first submitted his resignation about a year ago, citing "the pressure of other duties," but it was not accepted. He asked to resign again when the stories ran in February.

Tripp, 50, a tobacco warehouseman, resigned Friday.

Whitmire said Saturday that he would not comment on the situation until the solicitor "releases his findings." He said, "I am not going to fight with the press but have always felt safer in the hands of the people."

Tripp was unavailable for comment Saturday night.

Planes Are Hijacked; Suspect In A Former Case Gives Up

By United Press International
A skyjacker wearing an Army captain's uniform and claiming to have explosives arrived in Algiers Saturday with $500,000 ransom in a Western Airlines plane he had commandeered on the West Coast of the United States.

During the course of the 7,404 mile hijacking—the second longest in airline history—another hijacker took over a plane at Reno, Nev., and a man sought in Honduras for a hijacking last month surrendered to officials at the U.S. embassy in Tegucigalpa.

The Western Airlines plane touched down at Algiers at 7:20 p.m. after an eight-hour flight from New York. The jet, carrying the hijacker, tentatively identified as Willie Holder, a 24-year-old black, his female companion and a crew of five was immediately surrounded by police.

All of 90 passengers aboard the hijacked Boeing 727 were released unharmed, either in San Francisco or in New York, where 40 of them flew as hostages with the hijacker in a larger Western Airlines Boeing 720.

Drops Angela Demand
The passengers said the hijacker was "cool and calm" when he commandeered the plane over Mt. Ranier in Washington State. But when he reached Kennedy International Airport in New York he shouted and cursed at FBI agents talking with him via radio and told them "it doesn't matter to me if I die."

The hijacker, smiling and wearing dark glasses, entered the cockpit Friday night, told the crew he had a bomb in his briefcase and three accomplices "high on LSD" and ordered the three-engine 727 flown to San Francisco. He demanded "custody" of black militant Angela Davis as well as the $500,000 in ransom.

When the $500,000 was delivered to the hijacker at San Francisco in what a passenger said were two white cases, he dropped the demand for freeing Miss Davis, who is awaiting a jury verdict on murder, kidnap and conspiracy charges in San Jose, Calif. The plane then took off for New York.

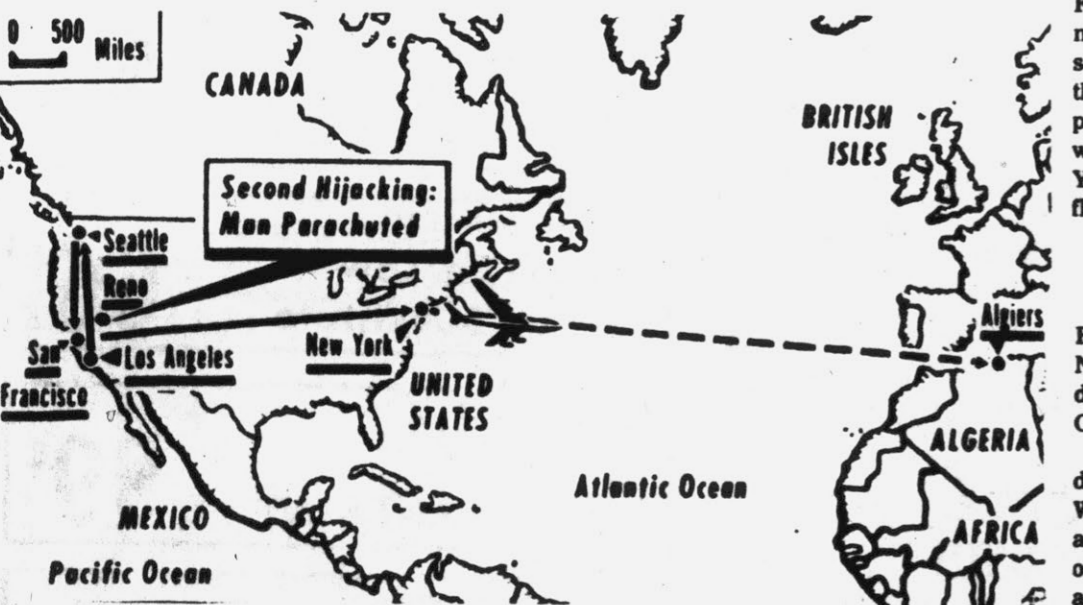

It arrived at Kennedy Air at 5:12 a.m. EDT and, disembarking the 40 passengers and adding a navigator to the crew of four, took off at 6:25 a.m. for Algiers. No stewardesses were aboard.

No Panic Aboard
There was tension but no outright panic during the hijacking.

"We weren't threatened," said Navy Senior Chief Yeoman Ronald Dellinger, 37, of Chula Vista, Calif. "He always seemed interested in us."

The hijacker was angry when FBI officials trying to buy time for an assault on the plane communicated with him from the Kennedy tower.

Authorities were heard via a police radio trying to disguise FBI agents as a co-pilot and maintenance man. They also schemed to smuggle a gun into the cockpit of the plane in a place known to the navigator, who boarded the plane in New York for the trans-Atlantic flight.

Shooting Victim Is Dead

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A 77-year-old woman died early Saturday, bringing to five the death toll in Monday's shootings at a shopping center where U.S. Sen. B. Everett Jordan, D-N.C., was campaigning.

Mrs. Jessie B. West of Raleigh died of a bullet wound in the head without regaining consciousness.

Police said Sen. Jordan was not the target of a young gunman who killed three persons and wounded eight others before taking his own life with a .22 rifle he had bought earlier in the day.

Jordan had shaken hands with some women and gone inside the shopping center mall when the gunman, Harvey McLeod, 22, started shooting.

Jordan's press secretary, Wes Hayden, was shot in the back and seriously wounded.

Police said they may never establish a motive for the shootings.

Grease Fire Is Reported

A grease fire late Friday afternoon caused little damage, but resulted in one injury.

According to police, a house owned by Russell Whichard of 103 S. Summit St. was the scene of the 6:15 p.m. blaze. The fire was caused by hot grease catching fire on the kitchen stove.

Whichard, who suffered burns to his hands, was treated and released from Pitt Memorial Hospital.

Bremer Probe Is Closed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The FBI has closed its investigation of the travels of Arthur H. Bremer, charged with shooting Gov. George C. Wallace, and concluded that Bremer acted alone with no accomplices, the Washington Post reports.

In its Saturday editions, the Post quoted federal sources as saying that hundreds of federal agents have traced Bremer's movements across the United States and Canada prior to the May 15 shooting.

In addition, the newspaper said a special report issued by the Canadian solicitor-general and prepared for the FBI by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police revealed that Bremer was spotted in Ottawa at least three times during President Nixon's state visit there April 13-15.

Bremer's travels during April and May as traced by the FBI included attendance at several Michigan rallies for Wallace and another Democratic presidential hopeful, Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, and a hurried trip to New York City, the Post story said.

Bremer now is in the Baltimore County Jail awaiting state and federal trials on 28 charges, including attempted murder, in the shootings of Wallace and three bystanders at a political rally in Laurel, Md.

Choice Apparently Not Yet Made

GOP Vice President Seen As Top Man In 1976

By NORMAN KEMPSTER
 WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Nixon is convinced that the person he picks as his running mate this year will be the 1976 Republican presidential candidate and he apparently has not decided if Spiro T. Agnew is the man.
 A source in Nixon's reelection campaign committee insisted that despite hints Agnew will be on the ticket again, the President has made no final decision.
 "You have to remember that whoever the President selects will probably be the candidate for President four years from now," the source said. "I am sure the President is weighing his decision in that light. He is keeping his options open."
 That assessment may indicate a nagging doubt about Agnew's qualifications for the presidency, and it clearly shows the supreme confidence of Nixon's political high command that the President will be re-elected.
 Moscow Spirit Prevails
 The office of the Committee for the Re-Election of the President located on the third floor of a modern office building a block from the White House is bathed in the "Spirit of Moscow."

Nixon's political strategists believe the results of his trip to the Soviet Union, coupled with the earlier journey to China, have increased his stature to the point that he is all but assured of a second term.
 They are planning a fall campaign in which Nixon will concentrate on doing his job as President and devote relatively little time to partisan activity. The vice presidential candidate — whoever he is — will carry much of the political load.
 In a recent interview with a small group of reporters, former Attorney General John N. Mitchell, Nixon's campaign manager, said: "All indicators point to the fact that the American people recognize him as a competent, dedicated President. For them to see him in that light will certainly be extremely helpful to him in this election process."
 Agnew's Future Uncertain
 Mitchell said of Nixon's fall campaigning: "He won't have time, of course, to do it anywhere near as extensively as he did in '68, but I think we're going to have to wait and see what the circumstances are in September before that determination is made."
 Agnew's future has been the subject of speculation ever since 1968 when Nixon surprised the nation by picking the little known Maryland governor to be his running mate. There has been a spate of rumors that he would be dropped from the ticket, most of them wishful thinking on the part of his critics.

 Nixon hinted broadly that Agnew would be on the ticket again when he told CBS newsman Dan Rather in a televised interview in January that he did not believe it was wise to "break up a winning combination." But in the same interview, Nixon said he would make no announcement on a running mate until closer to the GOP convention in August.
 Subtle Change Noted
 Persons close to Agnew have been saying recently that the vice president may not wish to run again. This may be a face-saving precaution by Agnew that would permit him to say it was his own idea if Nixon decides to drop him from the ticket. Such a ploy would be unnecessary, however, if Agnew were assured renomination.
 Mitchell conducted two interviews recently with selected groups of newsmen. The transcripts of these sessions show a subtle change in emphasis virtually overnight.
 "I think it was the one-on-one interview he had with Dan Rather of CBS where the President referred to not breaking up a winning team, and it seems to me that the vice president has said that the decision should be made further down the track," Mitchell said in one interview.

 "In short, you expect Mr. Agnew to remain on this ticket?" a reporter asked.
 "No, in short, I don't expect anything except that a judgment will be made at the right time, and this is premature," Mitchell said. "As far as the polls show, he (Agnew) is the strongest possible running mate for the President."
 The next day Mitchell was asked by a different group of newsmen about Agnew's future.
 "Based on what the President said in his interview with Dan Rather, and on what the vice president has constantly said, this is a decision that should be made in August and not in May," Mitchell said. In this interview, Mitchell did not mention Nixon's "winning combination" remark and concentrated on the President's statement that he was not ready to make his final choice.
 "I think the decision would probably not be made until pretty close to the convention," Mitchell said.

Ingram Leads; Creel Ahead In Two Races

By NOEL YANCEY
 Associated Press Writer
 RALEIGH (AP) — W. C. (Billy) Creel won the Democratic nomination for labor commissioner in Saturday's runoff primary while State Rep. John Ingram appeared headed for victory in his bid for the Democratic nomination for insurance commissioner.
 Creel, safety coordinator in the state Department of Labor, defeated John Brooks, a Raleigh attorney, and Ingram, an Asheboro attorney, was leading Russell Secrest of Cary.
 Returns from 2,121 of 2,255 precincts gave Creel 277,834 or 53.70 per cent of the votes to 239,464 votes for Brooks and returns from 2,117 precincts gave Ingram 262,997 or 50.82 per cent of the votes to 254,422 votes for Secrest.
 Secrest and Ingram sought to succeed Insurance Commissioner Edwin L. Lanier who did not run for reelection.
 In the first primary, Secrest ran first in a field of six with 161,966 votes while Ingram came in second with 156,463.
 Secrest, 44, had worked in state government 16 years and was a deputy commissioner when he resigned to make the race.
 Ingram, 43, fought long and hard during the 1971 General Assembly to change the state's auto insurance laws and entered the race for insurance commissioner when he did not succeed in the General Assembly.
 Both Secrest and Ingram came out for modified forms of no fault auto liability insurance. Both saw no fault as a means of reducing auto insurance premiums.
 Ingram accused Secrest of being a tool of the insurance industry while Secrest said Ingram had the support of "his fellow trial lawyers." Secrest also contended that "a number of trial lawyers have banded together to defeat me ... because my no-fault automobile insurance plan would sharply reduce their fees."
 Both Ingram and Secrest agreed that the present assigned risk setup "is a mess."

Berlin Agreement Effective Saturday

By JOSEPH FLEMING
 BERLIN (UPI)—An historic agreement reducing the isolation of West Berlin became effective Saturday when foreign ministers of the four World War II allies signed a document that each described as a step toward international peace.
 The new Berlin Agreement, the first since the Soviet Union lifted its blockade of the city in 1949, guarantees for the first time Western access to West Berlin by specific road, rail and river canal routes across East Germany and also gives residents of the city right to pass through The Wall to visit East Germany a total of 30 days annually.
 "For more than 25 years Berlin has been a major focus of tensions between East and West, tensions which at times threatened the stability of Europe and the world," said Secretary of State William P. Rogers, who signed the agreement for the United States.
 "The agreement we have just signed could serve to put those tensions to rest...could become a symbol of hope for Europe's future."
 At the same time the Big Four powers activated the Berlin agreement here, West German officials exchanged ratification documents with Soviet and Polish diplomats in Bonn to put into effect nonaggression treaties with those two countries. West Germany also announced the establishment of diplomatic relations with Poland Saturday.
 West Berlin has been a source of friction between the East and West since the end of World War II primarily because of its isolated location 110 miles inside East Germany. The Soviet Union administers East Berlin, the United States, Britain and France administer West Berlin.
 Soviet Foreign Minister Andre A. Gromyko signed the agreement for his country, calling it another step in line with President Nixon's summit meeting with Soviet leaders in Moscow last month and the nonaggression treaty with West Germany.
 "All these are very weighty elements of the increasing detente in Europe, good and strong impetus for successful completion of important initiatives in European and international affairs," Gromyko said.
 Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas-Home, who signed the agreement for Britain, said that "if we carry on from the spirit of accommodation, compromise and reconciliation which underpins this Berlin Agreement, then the omens for peace are good."

Two Wrecks Saturday

Two Saturday accidents caused an estimated $900 vehicle damage and approximately $4,000 damage to a business establishment, police reported.
 Heaviest damage resulted from a 9:35 a.m. accident at the Hendrix-Barnhill Company on Memorial Drive. According to police, a vehicle being operated by Bruce Reddick of 1917 A Kennedy Circle collided with the front of that building. Most of the damage occurred to the front of the structure. No charges were made.
 Johnnie Bunn Briley of 303 Grimmersburg St. in Farmville was charged by police with driving on the wrong side of the street after his vehicle allegedly collided with a vehicle being operated by Thomas Donald Taylor, 19, of 226 Pineview Drive in Greenville. Taylor was driving a vehicle owned by ABC Moving and Storage Company.
 Damage to the ABC Moving and Storage vehicle was $800, while damage to the Briley auto was minor.

Andrews, Rose Are Winners

By YVONNE BASKIN
 Associated Press Writer
 RALEIGH (AP) — State Rep. Ike Andrews of Siler City defeated state Sen. Jyles Coggins of Raleigh Saturday to capture the Democratic congressional nomination in North Carolina's 4th District.
 Fayetteville attorney Charles Rose III, making his second bid for the Democratic congressional nomination in the 7th District, defeated state Sen. Hector McGeachy, D-Cumberland.
 With all 172 precincts reporting, unofficial returns showed Andrews captured 35,603 votes or 52.12 per cent, to 32,705 for Coggins.
 In the 7th District, with 163 of 168 precincts reporting, Rose had 30,474 votes or 55.19 per cent, to 24,741 for McGeachy.
 Andrews led strongly in Chatham and Randolph counties and fell only 200 votes behind Coggins in Durham County. Coggins led his home county of Wake by 2,000 votes.
 Incomplete returns showed Rose in leading all six counties in the 7th District.
 In both the 4th and 7th Districts, rather muted and polite first primary campaigns gave way to heated and accusation-filled battles in the runoff.
 McGeachy, who collected only 26 per cent of the vote in the first primary and did not carry a single one of the six counties in the 7th District, surprised political observers with his decision to call for a second try.
 Rose captured 49 per cent of the first primary vote, leading McGeachy by 15,864 votes and carrying five counties — Hoke, Robeson, New Hanover, Columbus and Brunswick.
 Doran Berry, who ran third with 25 per cent of the vote, captured Cumberland County. Berry remained neutral in the runoff. Rose, Berry and McGeachy are all Fayetteville attorneys.
 Retiring Congressman Alton Lennon threw his support solidly behind McGeachy in the runoff. Rose had come within six percentage points of unseating Lennon in the 1970 primary.
 McGeachy charged that Rose had fixed cases "left and right" during his three-year term as chief district court prosecutor

Rubber Bullets Are Used On Militant Protestants

By COLIN BAKER
 LONDONDERRY, Northern Ireland (UPI)—British troops used high-pressure water hoses and fired rubber bullets Saturday to repel militant Protestants who stormed a barricaded bridge in an attempt to reach Roman Catholic neighborhoods on the other side.
 The trouble began while an estimated 20,000 Protestants marched to protest barricaded Catholic enclaves in Londonderry. A group of the marchers broke off from the main procession and rushed the barbed wire and steel barricades.
 They began to tear at the barbed wire, ignoring shouted warnings from troops behind the barricades on the upper level of the double-deck Craigavon bridge across the River Foyle.
 The soldiers turned on two high-pressure hoses, one spraying a jet of purple-dyed water. It had no effect.
 Troops Open Fire
 "You'll need more than that, you bastards," cried one youth dressed in the camouflage jacket, dark glasses and face mask of the militant Ulster Defense Association (UDA).
 A second later a jet of water caught him full in the chest, slamming him into a mass of barbed wire. He began to scream in long, high-pitched wails.
 The troops then opened fire on the advancing with rubber bullets.
 The number of rioters grew to several hundred as others left the march and joined the fight.
 The youth on the barbed-wire barrier kept screaming.
 Bridge Sealed Off
 Three or four of his comrades wriggled forward, commando-style, to free him. His face was covered with blood, arms and legs torn.
 Troops sealed off the bridge early Saturday to prevent the Protestant Waterside district to the Foyle's west bank, site of the Catholic Creggan and Bogside areas.
 These two sections have been taken over by the outlawed Irish Republican Army (IRA) and declared off limits to British troops.
 More than 800 extra troops and 400 extra policemen were on duty on almost every street in Londonderry for Saturday's march.
 They were brought in following an upsurge of violence in Northern Ireland Friday which left two soldiers dead and two policemen and a civilian badly injured.
 The deaths brought to 359 the number of persons killed in almost three years of violence between Northern Ireland's Protestants and Catholics.

Bowles, Jordan Win Greene

SNOW HILL — Unofficial returns from Greene County showed that a light turn out in this county gave B. Everett Jordan a lead of nearly 200 votes in the U.S. Senate race, with 1,091 votes to 898 for Nick Galifianakis.
 In the Democratic gubernatorial run-off, Skipper Bowles led in Greene County with a total of 1,148 versus 853 for Pat Taylor.
 The Republican gubernatorial run-off showed Jim Gardener in the lead with 162 votes. His opponent, James E. Holshouser, pulled in only 26 votes.
 In the other two contests, E. Russell Secrest polled 1,087 votes with John Ingram trailing more than 300 votes at 769 in the bid for Commissioner of Insurance. For Commissioner of Labor, W. C. (Billy) Creel nearly doubled his lead over opponent John C. Brooks, with Creel receiving 1,209 votes and Brooks 668.
 Jerry Greene, editor of the "Standard Laconic" noted the total turn out of about 2,000 voters "was substantially less than the approximately 3,500 voters going to the polls for the May primary."
 Greene said the good weather, drawing people to the beaches and the fact that a number of people were in Concord to see Greene Central High win the State 3A Championship in baseball accounted in part for the very light vote.

McGovern Appears Vulnerable

One of the phenomenons of this year's Democratic presidential campaign has been the rise of Sen. George McGovern of South Dakota.

The senator was low in the polls early in the campaigning; yet now he stands on the threshold of a victory in California which might give the impetus for an early nomination at the Democratic convention.

Fallen by the wayside since the campaign started is the early front runner Sen. Muskie of Maine. Other hopefuls such as Mayor Lindsay of New York never really stood a chance. Gov. Wallace lies in a hospital bed partially paralyzed by a bullet, which clouds his future.

So now it has come down to Sen. McGovern as the front runner in California, challenged only Sen. Hubert Humphrey.

Humphrey, whatever his faults, is a master politician and he has been near the seats of power in Washington so that he is knowledgeable in international affairs, as well as domestic matters. He is also an old friend of Sen. McGovern's and a next door neighbor who carried McGovern soup when he was sick, as one writer pointed out.

Humphrey knew that McGovern had weaknesses; he has made statements and supported causes that appear to border on the radical side. While McGovern has soft pedaled this side of himself in recent campaigning the ammunition was there for someone to exploit.

No doubt Humphrey would rather it was someone other than himself; but he finds himself in California potentially out of the race for the nomination if he loses. So he is now using the ammunition.

There are signs that he is making headway there. McGovern is clearly on the defensive as he attempts to defend his record. His usual calm was broken following the first television appearance of the two candidates.

United Press International reported McGovern "visible incensed" on the Monday following the Sunday night appearance. As he talked about Humphrey's Vietnam claims, the UPI writer described McGovern's anger as "underlined by the high pitch in his voice and the speed of his speech."

McGovern is vulnerable. It sounds good when he proposes massive cuts in defense spending. It loses some of its attractiveness when Humphrey points out that there is no provision for agreement with the Soviets for cuts in their military budgets.

McGovern welfare reforms seem attractive at first, but the allure fades when Humphrey tells a crowd of working people that "you, old buddy" will be the ones paying for it.

It may be that Sen. McGovern can stand the heat in California and still win that state's Democratic delegation. That is what the primaries do for us; that is, show us how potential candidates will stand up as presidential material.

Whatever the results, Sen. Humphrey, difficult as the task may be, is doing a service to the voters by directly attacking McGovern's record. It really has not been done before; and if Humphrey does not do it you can bet the Republicans will be prepared to.

Has Abundance Of Fish Tales

By GARY MOHORN

Roanoke Rapids Herald
WELDON, N.C. — Each spring the rockfish return to the Roanoke River. So does Sterling Keeter.

To out-of-town fishermen, Keeter is the man who sells bait and cold drinks at his stand by the river bank in Weldon.

To those who know him well, Sterling is regarded as an integral part of the river scene: as unpredictable as the changing water level, but as important to a rockfish season as the fish themselves.

Born Dec. 1, 1910 on the river bank between Garrett's old winery and the aqueduct in Weldon, Keeter has been pulling fish from the Roanoke since 1920. He is "Old Man River" and probably has more first-hand knowledge about the Roanoke than any man alive today.

He has lived through to floods (1912 and 1940) and has greeted fishermen at his bait stand on the river every Easter Sunday and Monday for the past 36 years.

Teller of Fish Tales

When Sterling says, "I reckon I have told a few fish tales in my time," it is a definite understatement. He has told about fish of such great size and number that his stories have made young people marvel, parents frown in disbelief, and grandparents nod in agreement. Keeter recalls the largest rockfish he has ever seen come from the river to be a 78-pound monster caught by William Etheride of Weldon in the days when fish slides, fish gins and nets were the preferred methods of fishing. Although illegal now, because of the staggering number of fish that could be taken with such devices, slides and gins were once the backbone of existence for those who relied on the river for their livelihood.

Slides were chute-like inventions in which outside fish were often captured, while fish gins were paddle wheel devices with four eight-foot paddles which, when operated by the river current, would scoop loads of fish into a waiting boat.

His Claims Are Modest

It would be safe to assume that Keeter has caught quite a few fish during his relationship with the river. To those who would expect boasts of a large rockfish, Sterling humbly admits that the best he could ever do was a 62-pound "midget" that he once caught in a net. He will, however, set claim to a 270-pound sturgeon that he caught on a slide.

"Fishing methods have changed a lot over the year," said Keeter. He can recall days when the outboard motor was a rarity.

"In fact," says Keeter, "I can remember when men would get in a boat and drift all night until they reached Halifax and then be pulled back up the river — four or five boats in a chain — by one fisherman who happened to have an outboard."

"Not as many people net today as they used to," he said, "and this is how all the big fish used to be caught."

Some people wonder how Sterling survives financially by selling fish bait on the banks of the river.

Services For A Fee

Well, besides operating his bait and soft drink stand, Keeter often picks up money on the side by renting boats and fishing equipment to people who want to catch a rockfish. He loads the fishermen in a boat and pulls them to the far side of the river where he anchors the boat in one of the several holes which are often productive.

He also has sold maps of the river on occasion, offered several tidbits of advice, and performed other rockfish-oriented services — often for a small fee. Besides, he will never need money for a new truck. The black-paneled beauty he has now will never need money for a new truck. The black-paneled beauty he has now will last forever!

Keeter survives on the knowledge he has of the river. That's a lot of knowledge and a respectable roll of cash.

"They're biting," shouts Keeter as he stuffs another dollar into his bulging pocket.

Soviet Needed Some Respite

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

MOSCOW — The surprisingly mild Soviet language on Vietnam in the May 29 summit communique is one more example of Moscow's express desire to pull in its horns and move toward a new "cooperation" with the U.S. of uncertain duration.

"They didn't demand an immediate halt to the bombing," a U.S. official murmured on Monday as he reread the two spare sentences in the communique defining Moscow's Vietnam position.

Instead, the Soviet position was summed up in the benignly inactive phrase "stands for" — "the Soviet Union stands for a cessation of bombings." Nor was there any reference to the fact that Soviet ships carrying military aid the North Vietnam are barred by American mines.

Although there is reason to ask how long Moscow really intends to stick to the new and unexplored road of super-power cooperation, the delicate treatment of Vietnam is perceived here as compelling evidence that the Soviet Union regards the new road as essential to give it a breathing spell after the most far-flung diplomatic adventure ever dreamed of in the Kremlin.

Moreover, the "mutually advantageous cooperation" promised in the Moscow communique ratifies the Brezhnev doctrine ruling out Western interference in Moscow's Eastern European empire. The failure of the West to intervene in uprisings against Communist rule in East Berlin (1953), Hungary and Poland (1956), Czechoslovakia (1968) and, in far milder form, Poland (1970) had established a status quo for Moscow's rule, but the summit conference gives that status quo a gleaming coat of new respectability.

Of more importance, however, is how Communist party chief Leonid Brezhnev plans to use the breathing space in areas so remote from Moscow as the Middle East, South Asia, Chile, Cuba and Africa. There are increasing signs that the Kremlin is worried about the present value of some of its costliest investments.

In the Arab-Israeli struggle, for example, the Soviet policy of encouraging a more or less permanent "controlled tension" throughout the Middle East could quickly produce too much tension with too little control. The Kremlin had been on a treaty-signing binge that threatened a nasty hangover, headed by its recent treaties of cooperation and arms supply with both Egypt and Iraq.

Likewise, in South Asia Moscow's treaty with India could prove troublesome, particularly in view of suspicions that the Kremlin is now disenchanted with President Mujibur Rahman, who owes much to the Russians for his newly independent nation of Bangladesh.

Furthermore, the long and costly Soviet investment in Communist Cuba is paying slim dividends and costing Moscow ever more hard cash. Large cash outlays have also been predicted here in the case of Chile's Marxist government. For reason of prestige, Moscow maintains regular air service to Santiago at a cost far beyond conceivable economic reward.

And yet, with all these far-flung obligations of empire, the Soviet Union has lost at least four serious encounters, one of them in the African country of Sudan when local anti-Communist forces threw out a Kremlin-backed government last year.

The other three losses resulted from U.S. toughness in Cuba (forcing Moscow to back away from its planned nuclear submarine base in Cienfuegos), in the Middle East (when Soviet-backed Syrian tanks withdrew from an invasion of Jordan in 1970), and finally when

Sunday Morning Notes

Rep. Edith Green, (D-Ore.) told the graduates and guests at ECU's graduation ceremonies last Sunday that her talk would be extemporaneous.

"I packed my bag, put my speech in the bag and Piedmont lost it," she explained.

Rep. Green told of the college president who died and went to hell.

"He was there three days before he realized he was off campus," she quipped.

Somewhere in all those 2,000 graduates there was one happy young man. Soap bubbles kept rising from the sea of graduating caps.

An auto had been pulled up to the low fence at the edge of the football field. A man sat in it listening to the solemn ceremonies. He held a small boy on his lap.

Suddenly the car horn blared out. It seems the little boy had found the button.

Public Forum

Letters submitted for public forum must be limited to 300 words

To the editor:

I recently received the April 28th issue of The Daily Reflector, due to my overseas status, it takes quite a while for newspapers to arrive.

On particular story in this issue interested me, the "Tarheel POW-MIA Family Report". The POW-MIA issue greatly interested me and I was glad to see Mack Howard's proposal that North Carolina's communications media lead the way in reviving interest in America's Prisoners of War and the men Missing in Action in North Vietnam.

I have not received any later editions of the Reflector and do not know how Mack Howard's drive is progressing; however, I would like to put my two cents worth in.

I would hope that The Daily Reflector, my former employer, would support Mack Howard, along with UNCT and the radio stations of Greenville.

For the people in the states, settled down to the daily routine and pursuing their careers, the fate of the POW-MIA's could easily slip into the background. It is too easy to read in the daily paper of a pilot shot down in Vietnam, or of a family maintaining their vigil to keep up hope for their missing son, then turn on the TV and forget about these people.

I can say the same for myself, I'm guilty also. However, after having been outside of the United States for the past 18 months, I have a feeling of what it must be like for the POW-MIA's.

For these men, their daily thoughts must be, "What is happening in the State?", "Is anybody doing anything about my situation?" "Does anybody care?"

It is a sickening thought when you realize there are men in China that were taken prisoner during the Korean War.

Can you imagine the boost in the morale of these men that would take place if a group such as Mack Howard suggests could make contact with some of the POW-MIA's in North Vietnam?

If one prisoner were reached, or one MIA's family informed of their son's status, all the money and time spent would be well spent.

Is Mack Howard's idea feasible? You never know unless you try!

BESURE TO STAY AWAKE
A little boy fell out of bed one night. His mother asked him how it happened, and his reply was, "I guess I went to sleep too close to the place where I got in."

The New Testament has considerable to say about sleeping Christians — the foolish virgins who fell asleep while the bridegroom tarried, the disciples, who, on the Mount of Transfiguration and in Gethsemane, dropped off to sleep while their Master struggled in prayer.

The weakness of the Church today is not due to the evil of its members but to their pronounced disposition to drop off to sleep not just during the sermon but unfortunately during all the rest of the week, and to let the world and its needs go by unheeded. Every year the Church receives thousands of new members, especially during the Easter season, and many of these fall asleep, as the little boy did, so close to the place they got in that they soon fall out.

So if you intend to join Church this year do so with the firm resolve that you will be a faithful and useful member. It will be easy to fall out if you drop off to sleep too close to the place where you got in.

Salary Scale Irks Congressmen

By CARL C. CRAFT
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressmen, who are paid $42,500 a year, have come close to pulling the financial plug on noncommercial broadcasting, partially because a public TV newsman draws $85,000 annually.

The Corporation for Public Broadcasting's executives would have their $65,000 presidential and $45,000 vice-presidential salaries cut to $42,500 under a bill passed by the House by a 254-69 vote and sent to the Senate Thursday.

On-the-air personalities and production specialists barely survived with their sometimes higher pay rates intact. An amendment to apply the $42,500 level to them failed 182 to 163. Since this revision would have tapped deep into PBS sources of talent and programming by blocking use of federal funds for any group or institution paying its own employees more than $42,500, opponents claimed passage would wreck public broadcasting.

After losing one salary fight and escaping with a close call on the second one, supporters of public broadcasting scored a dramatic reversal on a financing provision. First, the House voted 169 to 165 to accept an amendment by Rep. H. John Heinz III, R-Pa., to limit CPB's federal funding authorization to one year and to order a General Accounting Office audit of CPB's operations and expenditures. A few minutes later, the House changed its mind and rejected the Heinz amendment by 170 to 166.

Although defenders of public broadcasting, headed by Rep. Harley O. Staggers, D-W.Va., claimed critics were taking out their complaint on the wrong men, the House voted 73 to 46 to set a $42,500 salary ceiling for CPB executives currently in office. Staggers, chairman of the

Soaring Sport Grows

By GEORGE ROSS
Oakland Tribune Sports Editor
Written for Associated Press
OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — America, held back by decades of prosperity, is catching up in the international sport of soaring.

Soaring—don't call it gliding—is flying high and handsome.

The ranks of America's soaring pilots have doubled and redoubled in just the past 10 years, to an estimated 25,000.

Even more spectacular has been the evolution of the long-winged and lightweight birds they fly, a change from the duck-like gliders of the post-World War II era to the eagle-like sailplanes of today.

The most exotic of these are the end product of a "fiberglass revolution" by aeronautical designers, beautiful craft with tapering wingspreads of 60 feet and more, yet weighing only from 400 to 800 pounds.

Flying without an ounce of power except that found in the energies of the moving sky, they are capable of soaring flight to make an eagle envious.

Through the decade dubbed "The Soaring Sixties" every soaring record in the books was wiped out at least once.

For example, Paul Bikle, retired director of the NASA Flight Test Center in California's Mojave Desert, piloted a tiny U.S.-built Schweizer to a world record altitude of 48,267 feet.

Ben Greene of Elizabethtown, N.C., and Wally Scott of Odessa, Tex., flying German-built fiberglass sister ships, chased each other all the way from Odessa to Columbus, Neb., two years ago for a jointly held world distance record of 716.95 miles.

Ross Briegleb of Las Vegas, Nev., holds the U.S. speed record of 88.62 miles an hour around a 100-kilometer triangular course, and is preparing to go after the world mark of 96.34 miles an hour held by a West German pilot. There are 100-horsepower light planes that won't do much better.

Bikle is non-flying captain of a four-man U.S. team entered in the International Soaring Championships in Yugoslavia in July. Greene is one of his pilots and Scott is a backup alternate. Hundreds of America's best soaring pilots compete annually in 11 regional championships and the U.S. championships.

40 Years Ago Today

By GWYN COGHILL
June 4, 1932

The activities of the commencement season at East Carolina Teachers College, in which large groups of students participate, are scheduled for June 4th and 5th. Following traditions of past years these activities will be on the campus. The Daisy Chain Processional of the Senior Normal Class will march across the campus and weave their figures of 1932 in front of Wilson Hall. The members of this group, dressed in white and bearing a chain of purple to represent the class color, during their march will pause to form several figures, a diamond, a heart and a butterfly. After the formation of the last figures '32, the girls will lay the chain on the ground as taps sound to mark the close of their college years.

Observations From Editorial Columns

The Cost Of 'Dropping Out'

For the individual youngster, dropping out of school inevitable means a lifetime of lost opportunities. But the effects are visited not just on the individual but on all of us, for society as a whole must "pay the bill" for the undereducation of a significant segment of its population. And a new study by a professor at Stanford University indicates that "bill" is a staggering one indeed.

Using census data, Prof. Henry M. Levin determined that there are 3.2 million men, ages 25 through 34, who did not graduate from high school. Using standard figures, he projected these men will over their lifetimes lose an estimated $237 billion in potential income because they dropped out of school.

While it would have cost an estimated $40 billion to provide high school completion for the group, Prof. Levin says his estimates show the men would have paid $70 billion in taxes on their lost income, meaning a net "loss" of $30 billion in potential tax revenues. Moreover, this doesn't take into account what the nation's various governmental units would have saved in welfare payments to this same group, many members of which crowd the welfare rolls.

Is this a "bill" we can continue to afford to pay? We think not. —Huntington (W. Va.) Herald-Dispatch and Advertiser

Ultimate Sacrifice

Suggestions for pollution control reached the living end, literally, but we trust facetiously, at a recent White House seminar on pollution.

Judd H. Alexander, vice president of American Can, startled the group with this observation: "Any one of us could help reduce pollution if we would just drop dead. We would then no longer be consumers of valuable oxygen; we would no longer expel unwanted carbon dioxide, and our bodies would soon be supplying essential nutrients to the soil."

"I know this to be true, but somehow I just cannot bring myself to make the sacrifice. This is the dilemma in which many business organizations find themselves today. Try as we will, we are going to do some harm to this world, and we must be sure to balance that harm with positive contributions to the quality of life." —Columbia (S.C.) State

To Be Alive

Once Dr. Albert Einstein wrote: "The most beautiful thing we can experience is the mysterious. It is the source of all art and science. He to whom this emotion is a stranger, who can no longer pause to wonder and stand in rapt awe, is as good as dead; his eyes are closed."

A little while ago it was winter grey; now it is spring green. Mysterious life forces worked silently in limb and bud to recreate. Some call it art and science. Some call it God. But by whatever name, no one really alive can ponder it without a profound experience of mystery. And that said Einstein, is a "beautiful thing." —Florence (S.C.) Morning News

Campaign Blues

An interesting thing happened the other day. A fellow campaigning for public office was preparing to go out and tack up some campaign posters on trees around the countryside.

The same day he read a letter to the editor of the News-Argus from a woman who vowed she would not vote for anyone who so defaced the county.

Instead of putting up posters, the campaigner wrote the woman a letter, saying he agreed and would she please vote for him. He was confident that he had picked up at least one vote.

Then today, the letter came back. The letter writer was "unknown at the address" listed for her. Some days you just can't win. —Goldsboro (N.C.) News-Argus

Plant A Tree For Tomorrow

A century ago this year, the first Arbor Day was marked in Nebraska City, Neb., to encourage our people to keep the constant reminder before them that our nation's great natural wealth in trees has been a solid part of the foundation of its greatness and beauty.

The simple act of planting a tree is the creation of a link with, and an investment in the future. It will provide another spot of green tranquility in a world of concrete and noise.

Here in Alabama, where the second largest industry derives from our forests, we are especially aware of the beauty as well as the environmental and economic value of our trees.

There is a gratification in planting a tree, tending it and watching it grow that nothing else can provide. It is something you can leave as a part of your legacy to the future, a gift that you can make to yourself as well as to others. —Birmingham (Ala.) News

Taxpayers And Candidates Look At Taxes In A Different Light

By GEORGE BRYANT
What's wrong with taxes these days?

If you follow the utterances of the candidates, either party, you get the impression that the trouble is with these things called loopholes. Just fix them and it's all sweetness and light. The taxpayer will even shoulder a heavier burden, with a smile.

But go down to the corner and talk with a few people—taxpayers—and you get a different impression. Right off the bat, they will tell you that taxes are simply too high; that government, at all levels, costs too much and wastes too much. Odds are you will have to mention loopholes, if you get any comment on them.

Thus, it seems clear, the candidates and the taxpayers are talking about two different things. The taxpayer wants his burden lightened—wants relief. The candidate comes back with an offer of reform, but with little else. In fact, their bids for votes, without exception, call for still more taxes, but without this showing on the label.

The technique, which surfaces every four years, shows clearly in the campaigns being waged by Senators McGovern and Humphrey, current front-runners for the Democratic Party's presidential nomination. And it will show,

A Conservative View Perspective On The Summit From A Hay Field

By J. J. KILPATRICK

SCRABBLE, Va. — It is no bad thing to draw a perspective on the summit talks in Moscow from a field of hay in the Blue Ridge Mountains. From here the journey seems, in the deliberate choice of a shopworn work, fantastic.

This is such stuff as dreams are made on—imaginary figures, impossible events, a script as fragile as the blowing chaff. We see the faces on a television screen, Nixon smiling, Brezhnev smiling, but the images fade in and out. Cutting hay is dusty work; one looks for Moscow past the binder, dimly.

Fantastic is the word. On Monday afternoon, the 29th, the news from Vietnam came on this effect:

"United States Stratofortresses dropped 1,000 tons of bombs around Kontum today, in an effort to prevent Communist troops from reinforcing the provincial capital. North Vietnamese forces slammed 100 Soviet-supplied artillery shells into the city during the night. Meanwhile, south of An Loc, the Communist enemy blasted South Vietnamese troops with more than a thousand rounds of Russian-made missiles and mortar shells. Twenty-three armored personnel carriers, supplied to the South Vietnamese by the United States, were destroyed..."

This was the same afternoon that Nixon and Brezhnev, at the Great Kremlin Palace, were dining in jovial spirits at "huge tables laden with caviar, smoked salmon, giant crab claws, and other food and drink." The two leaders jested with Times correspondent Max Frankel. Does the Times print the truth, asked Brezhnev? "Pravda," said the President, trying out his elementary Russian. "That means truth."

It is all mixed up. Half way around the world, in the bloody agony of war, one perceives a part of the truth of Soviet-American relations: the ruins of a Russian tank, the wreckage of a U. S. truck. Our allies demolish one another. At the same moment, there is something else: Our leaders demolish plates of caviar and salmon. Can this be true as well?

The summit produced a joint communique that rambled on for some 2,000 words. The 2,000 words in their way, are as real as these 2,000 bales of hay: real words. Somehow the hay seems better; it has an honest weight. The two leaders are "guided by a desire to strengthen peaceful relations." They recognize "the need to remove the threat of war." There is no alternative, they have agreed, "to conducting their mutual relations on the basis of peaceful coexistence." And to demonstrate good faith, we will mine the harbor at Haiphong and they will have their missiles hurled upon An Loc.

How much is real? How much is make-believe? This much, I think, has substance: The fact of the trip; and the nature of the foe. The rest is mostly moonshine.

The President's two "journeys for peace," one to Peking, one to Moscow, now are facts of history. He seized the initiative; he took the risks; he went. And at least in the political views, for the short haul, this is likely to count for more than what they may have accomplished. Marco Polo went to the court of Kublai Khan, and Venice loved him for it. In our own political catechism, boldness remains a virtue.

There is this second fact: the nature of communism. Nothing in the record of recent years, nothing in the gaudy array of treaties, agreements and accords at Moscow, nothing at all suggest that talk of "peaceful coexistence" is anything more than talk. In one fashion or another, by whatever devices may seem most useful, the apostles of communism mean to denigrate the world. Crab claws or guided missiles, it is all the same. And we had better not forget it.

Nixon is a realist. In the end, that characteristic becomes his greatest asset. He knows the Russians are not to be trusted, and they know he knows it. Thus his first commitment is to arms, his second to disarmament; it is the distinction between the means of grace and the hope of glory. Here in a grey-green haze, blood and caviar alike seem far away. They are parallel windrows on a field of history; endlessly we bind them up together, the strange, familiar harvest of a summer afternoon.

FOR ONE REASON OR ANOTHER!

Imponderable Japanese Role Follows Summits

By JOHN RODERICK
Associated Press Writer
TOKYO (AP) — In the world of complex international relationships, following the Peking and Moscow summits, the great imponderable is Japan.

President Nixon has hammered out agreements with China and the Soviet Union which it is hoped will draw the United States closer to these ideologically opposite nations.

The idea of peaceful coexistence with Japan seems to be something else. The way things are between Tokyo and Washington these days, it looks as if it would take another summit meeting—in Tokyo—to re-establish relations on their old-time basis. Even if that were under consideration, Nixon's security people probably would veto it.

Japanese leftist extremists are determined, inventive, violent-prone and contemptuous of human life, their own as well as others. The massacre of civilians carried out by Japanese gunmen in Tel Aviv this week illustrates the danger to which Nixon might be exposed.

postponements—to try his hand.

It remains to be seen if he can resolve the problems which mar the dialogue between the two once staunchly friendly countries.

These include U.S. trade and currency restrictions, hurt feelings over Nixon's failure to consult with Tokyo over the drastic U.S. change in China policy, and American insistence that Japan shoulder more of its own defense burden.

The Japanese have yet to come to grips with the new internationalism forged by the twin summits.

Their most immediate challenge is an improvement in relations with Peking. Tokyo seems to lack any clear idea what to do. Its dilemma centers around Chinese refusal to talk with Prime Minister Eisaku Sato.

He steps down soon, perhaps in mid-July. But neither of the two leading contenders for the succession—Takeo Fukuda or Kakuei Tanaka—promises to make a bold break in policy.

Once Japan recognizes Peking it will automatically have a freer hand to maneuver within the framework of the new multipolar order in the Pacific.

Everything hinges on how, when and to what extent Japan fits into the new diplomacy. If it finds itself left out in the cold, relegated to a minor role, or once more snubbed by its old ally, not even the pacifism of postwar Japanese would bar the way to some kind of rearming.

The third-most powerful nation in the world economically, it has the men, the materials and the know-how to catch up with its militarily more advanced neighbors.

Today In History

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
Today is Sunday, June 4, the 156th day of 1972. There are 210 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On this date in 1942, the Battle of Midway began in the Pacific War. U.S. ships inflicted the first decisive defeat on the Japanese.

On this date: In 1831, Prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg was elected the first king of the Belgians.

In 1936, the first socialist government of France took office under Premier Leon Blum.

In 1943, army troops marched into Buenos Aires and overthrew the government of Argentina's President Ramon Castillo.

In 1944, in World War II, American and British soldiers occupied Rome.

too, in President Nixon's campaign for reelection, although Nixon is much more cost-conscious than any of his would-be Democratic challengers.

It's McGovern's taxing-spending positions which his party associates most. To finance his social programs, he would simply bring the troops home from Vietnam, with or without the prisoners, cut defense by one-third and turn the tax system topsyturvy in a great sharing of the wealth.

Humphrey, of course, has taken McGovern to task, even to the point of saying his is the sort of program which would be advocated by a fool. The former presidential contender toned this down later, with an apology for the word, if not for the thought.

But is should not be lost sight of that Humphrey is one of the biggest spending advocates ever to hold a seat in the Senate. And he, too, is offering tax reform as distinguished from tax relief. Without a higher total tax burden, neither Humphrey's nor McGovern's schemes could be financed without making Nixon deficits look puny.

Chairman Wilbur Mills of the House Ways and Means Committee this week went far toward putting the tax reformers on the spot. Mills is a Democratic dark horse himself, but pretty far back in the stable at this stage.

Mills picked out 54 special exemptions in the tax law—the so-called loopholes—and announced he is going to introduce legislation which would schedule their expiration, unless Congress takes other action to preserve them. Mills didn't take a stand for or against any of the exemptions. But they are what is involved when reform is talked.

It now will be easy to put candidates on the record as to just what they are taking about. Do they actually want to abolish such things as depletion allowances, deductions for home mortage interest, donations to the church, foundations, retirement income credit, special credit for the blind, exemption of state and local bond interest? Or, are they just talking?

It's a better than even bet that most of them are just talking when they raise the issue of loopholes. It's their pet out for the fact that the tax burden has reached the point where taxpayers are showing resentment—and voting it.

The thing to remember about loopholes is that they were not simply slipped into the tax structure when no one was watching. Each has received very close consideration and each has been designed, as a relief from high rates, to achieve special goals.

The encouragement of home ownership, for example, has been voted by Congress to be in the national interest. Thus, certain tax incentives have been granted. Mortgage interest is deductible from income otherwise subject to federal income taxes. The effect is to make the interest less of a burden. Local taxes on homes also are deductible, and for the same reason.

Gifts to churches, schools, charities and a wide range of so-called non-profit activities also have been voted as in the national interest and thus worthy of special tax consideration. Like other exemptions, they were given special consideration at the time they were written into law and have been under constant review.

Depletion allowances on natural resources, gas and oil, have been designed to promote exploration and development. Depreciation allowances are intended to encourage business to keep plants modern. All have been considered in the national interest.

If Congress ever faces up to the tax issue, it may be in for a real surprise. Candidates like to say that loopholes invite a tax revolt. It may be that the special exemptions have simply stayed one off.

Five-Bedroom Two-Story Features Rustic Styling

WENDOVER 6/A, 7/72

By GERRY BISHOP
As the poet said, it takes a heap of living to make a house a home.

Add to that an excellent floor plan, handsome exterior and lots of space and call it the Wendover. The result is a five-bedroom, two-story house designed by Associated House Plans.

The exterior is dominated by a combination hipped, gabled and mansard roof. The various designs blend well together and the cedar shake shingles provide a rustic touch. All roofs have a 4-12 pitch.

The rustic theme is enhanced by rough cedar plywood siding which is used with brick veneer for the exterior walls.

Besides the five bedrooms, the Wendover has two and a half baths, a living room, family room, dining room, kitchen, two-car-garage, full basement, front porch and rear terrace.

The main entrance opens into a hall which has a coat closet and is the focal point of the traffic pattern. Stairs lead to the second floor, the living room is to the right and the family room-kitchen area is straight ahead. The living room has good dimensions — approximately 21 feet by 13 feet — and would be easy to furnish. It enjoys the advantage of being out of the main traffic flow.

The dining room which adjoins the living room, also is of a nice size and has sliding glass doors which open into the rear terrace. This would be an advantage in good weather.

Open planning is used in the family room-kitchen area. This adds a measure of spaciousness and convenience. There's a breakfast bar, which seats four and divides the two rooms.

Appliances and cabinets are arranged in an efficient U. A double sink serves as the focal point. It is located under a window overlooking the backyard.

The family room — approximately 25 feet by 12 feet — is slightly larger than the living room. It would serve as a center of informal activities. Sliding-glass doors connecting with the rear terrace are a plus. When the weather is right, the room's usefulness can be expanded.

One of the five bedrooms is on the first floor. If desirable, it could be used as a study or office. The powder room is just around the corner.

Laundry equipment is located in a recessed niche in the family room.

The oversized double garage is large enough to provide storage space for a lawn mower and other garden tools.

The master bedroom suite highlights the upper level layout. It has two large closets, a dressing area and a compartmented bath. The master bedroom's dimensions are 22 feet by 12 feet.

The main bath is adjacent to the master bedroom bath. There's a saving in the back-to-back plumbing.

The other three bedrooms are clustered around the main bath. Each has good dimensions and lots of closet space.

The exterior dimensions are 50 feet by 50 feet. There are 1,400 square feet on the first floor, an equal amount in the basement, 1,176 square feet on the second floor and 528 square feet in the garage.

Here's the Answer

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — Within a few weeks I will be putting down a concrete patio at the rear of our house. At first I was going to mix the concrete myself, but I decided it would be too big a job. Now I plan to buy the concrete ready mixed and delivered to my backyard. I want to color the concrete and have been told that certain coloring ingredients must be mixed with the material. Can you tell me something about coloring concrete?

A. — The best thing you can do is to forget about doing the coloring at home. Advise the ready-mix company that you want the concrete in color. You will be given a chart from which to select the color you want. The company's mixer will do the job much better than you could and at a fairly inexpensive price over the original cost of the concrete.

Q. — We bought a house three years ago. We now have come into some money and want to pay off the mortgage. Do we have to pay a penalty for this?

A. — Nobody can answer that except by looking over the terms of your mortgage. Have you done so? Some have prepayment penalty clauses; some don't. If you have a mortgage guaranteed by the Veterans Administration, there are no prepayment charges. If you have a mortgage guaranteed by the Federal Housing Administration, you may have to pay a prepayment penalty even though your mortgage terms call for it—because of a recent amendment to the original regulations. You will have to ask a local FHA about your particular case. In you have a conventional mortgage, the chances are that there is a prepayment charge. But read the mortgage terms and ask questions of the lending institution.

Q. — There are unpainted fiberboard walls in our attic. We want to paint them with latex paint. Is a primer necessary?

A. — Yes. Make certain you get a primer intended for use with latex paint. There's a different kind for oil paint.

Q. — How much will it cost me to have an architect draw up plans for a house we intend to build?

A. — That's between you and the architect. It can be as much as 10 per cent of the total building costs if he is to draw up the plans, submit them for bids, select the contractor, help you choose materials, assist you to obtain financing and make regular field inspections to be sure the work is being done in accordance with the specifications. But you can reach a lump-sum agreement with him, as many persons do, on the basis of the amount of work he is required to do.

Q. — I have an old varnished cabinet that I want to paint so that it can be used as a bureau in my small son's room. Can I paint right over the varnish?

A. — The cabinet should first be cleaned. There are several ways to do this. One is by wiping it thoroughly with denatured alcohol. After that, lightly sand any shiny areas, as paint will not cling to glossy surfaces. After sanding, wipe off all grit, then go ahead with the painting.

ON THE HOUSE

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Given time, small openings in the outside of your house become large openings. And large openings permit the entrance of water that can cause hundreds of dollars worth of damage to walls, ceilings and furniture. That stitch-in-time proverb was not intended to apply to caulking gaps in the exterior of homes, but it sure fits the situation.

It is its flexibility, which allows it to retain its position even when the materials around it are expanding and contracting.

It is not enough merely to apply the compound wherever there is an opening. The area must be cleared of all pieces of old compound and anything else that is loose to the touch. This can be done with an old screwdriver, awl or similar tool.

While the patch need not be painted, most compounds will stay in place much longer (usually many years) if they are painted about an hour after being applied. In purchasing caulking compound, read the label on the cartridge to determine whether it can be used over a painted surface.

If you discover, while making your inspection, that an area is in need of a major repair, forget about the caulking until you have fixed it.

Fearful Destruction Recalled From Israeli Blitz

CAPTURED EGYPTIAN SOLDIERS (in truck at right) are shown being transferred to prisoner of war camp after the Israelis overran Ki Arish, Egypt, on June 8, 1967. (UPI Telephoto)

Editor's Note: On June 5, 1967—just five years ago—Israel launched a blitz attack that destroyed the armies of Egypt, Jordan and Syria in a six day war that amazed the world. Joseph W. Grigg, UPI chief European correspondent, covered the events leading up to the war, the war itself and the weeks after it on the Israeli side. In this dispatch he recalls his personal experiences covering the conflict and points up the dangers to world peace caused by the still-unresolved Middle East situation.

By JOSEPH W. GRIGG
United Press International

It looked like the graveyard of an army.

Beneath, as far as the eye could see, the red Sinai Desert was littered with the blackened, burned out hulks of the Russian-built T-34, T-54 and giant T-55 tanks Egyptian President Gamal Abdel Nasser had launched against Israel.

The Israeli air force and Israel's American-built Sherman and British-built Centurion tanks had destroyed them.

Nasser's dreams of a crushing victory over Israel were in ruins.

The remnants of his beaten army had fled across the Suez Canal and were wandering lost and half-crazed by thirst in the scorching desert or were behind Israeli barbed wire.

Five years ago, on June 11, 1967, I flew in an Israeli air force plane over the graveyard of Nasser's army and reported: "The most fearful destruction was in the Mitla Pass in the jagged red sandstone Sinai mountains, the main escape route attempted by the Egyptians towards the Suez Canal. "The twisting, narrow road snaking through the mountains in hairpin bends and breakneck gradients was littered with trucks, tanks and other vehicles caught bumper-to-bumper in convoys as they tried desperately to escape. From the air they could be seen tossed into mountain gullies and twisted into unrecognizable lumps of scrap."

War Diary

It was at 8 a.m. local time (0600 GMT) on June 5 that Israel launched her air force and tanks against the Egyptians. She did so after Nasser sent his army into the Sinai to fend for themselves," the Israeli captain said.

On June 7 Israeli forces neared the Suez Canal, captured the Old City of Jerusalem and gained control over the West Bank of the Jordan River. That night I reported "A Jew in a paratrooper's uniform blew a triumphant blast on a ram's horn at Jerusalem's Mandelbaum Gate and signalled the fall of the Old City. For the first time in 20 years Israelis prayed at their Wailing Wall."

On June 9, after defeating Egypt and Jordan, Israeli forces stormed the Golan Heights overlooking the Jordan River and sliced into Syria.

An Israeli officer told me, "We found the Syrians were dug into a sort of Maginot Line of concrete shelters three stories deep. Each had separate exits."

I reported later that night: "Long lines of prisoners came in, walking with the shuffle of defeated men, some of them blindfolded with their own khefiya Arab headresses. They were loaded on trucks and driven to the rear."

On June 10 came the United Nations ceasefire.

Commandos Relax

Next morning I flew down to Sharm-el-Sheikh on the Straits of Tiran and saw the same Israeli commandos, who only three days earlier had stormed the fortress, swimming in the Red Sea waters.

In the nearby desert lost Egyptians waved frantically to the plane to signal their plight. Landing later at Bir Gafgafa, a scorching, fly-infested blotch farther back in the Sinai Desert, I had seen what defeat really could mean to a beaten army.

"There were 60 or so Egyptian prisoners," I wrote, "huddled on the ground behind loose coils of barbed wire forming a makeshift prisoner-of-war compound. "All was quiet until an Israeli soldier passed a five-gallon can of water through the wire. Then all hell broke loose. The Egyptians fought like animals for the water."

Today, five years later, Israeli forces remain at Sharm-el-Sheikh on the Suez Canal, the Golan Heights of Syria, in Jerusalem's Old City and on the West Bank of the Jordan.

Israeli tourists fly daily in civilian planes to stare down at the Mitla Pass graveyard where the Egyptian army was destroyed. Most of the burned out tanks and trucks were hauled away long ago by the Israelis for scrap.

A tourist hotel has been built at Sharm-el-Sheikh. All attempts to get the two sides together for peace talks have failed so far.

Some Would-Be Nonsmokers Turned Off By Shock Therapy

Editor's Note — Smoking more? Enjoying it less? Then maybe you should try electric shock therapy that gives you a jolt every time you light up. One man who tried it got to hate the weed so much he couldn't bear to pick up butts on his garage floor.

By MARY PAT MURPHY
 Associated Press Writer
SEATTLE (AP) — The room is stark, small and reeks of stale cigarette smoke.

Next to one wall is a table heaped with scores of half-smoked cigarettes, crumpled cigarette packages and burned matches. The stench is nauseating.

I lit a cigarette and put it to my lips.

Then I was zapped with electric current.

This treatment is called aversion therapy. It is aimed at breaking the cigarette habit.

The Northwest firm, Schick Laboratories, which operates the program says about 70 per cent of the 1,500 people who have gone through it have stopped smoking. That "cure rate," it says, is based on three-month follow-ups.

I am one of the 1,500. The program is based on the premise that the smoker really wants to quit, since he's willing to pay the $150 treatment fee. After an initial interview, which eliminates about 7 per cent of the applicants, the smoker is prepared for his therapy.

Each smoker is asked to record on a wrist counter the number of cigarettes smoked each day between the interview and the beginning of therapy. The counter is designed to make him conscious of the number of cigarettes he smokes and when he smokes them.

Before the treatments begin, the smokes are given the usual health scare talk and are told some of the social benefits that becoming a nonsmoker will bring.

Each person then is taken to an individual therapy room, which is carefully set up to present cigarette smoking as ugly and obnoxious.

The therapist hooks up the client to the "zap box" used to administer a mild electric shock, somewhat sharper than the jolt of static electricity one gets from scuffling across a carpet.

The would-be nonsmoker is told to light a cigarette and is jolted by the current flowing through electrodes strapped to his wrist.

Two cigarettes are smoked during each hour-long therapy session. The smoker is told to take 15 quick puffs on each without inhaling, and he's zapped with each move as he picks up the cigarette, raises it to his mouth and puffs on it.

Under "quick puff" therapy, the smoker is told to smoke three cigarettes in 10 minutes, taking a drag and inhaling every six seconds. Zap.

The therapy sessions are designed to produce an aversion to the sight, smell and taste of cigarettes.

About two months after treatment it was difficult for me, once a pack-a-day-plus smoker, to even enter the therapy room.

Bob Hardwick, a local radio personality, says he could not force himself to touch some butts he found on the floor as he was cleaning his garage.

After five aversion sessions, the ex-smoker is asked to return for group therapy once a week for eight weeks.

Catch words and phrases and positive thinking are stressed through the entire program but are most evident at the group sessions. "Each ex-smoker is just one cigarette away from being a smoker," we were told. Use of the "buddy system" is encouraged for overcoming urges to smoke. Each person is told to call his buddy or the clinic staff for help whenever his will power is slipping.

At the end of eight weeks, $25 of the original $150 is refunded if the client has attended the follow-up sessions. If he has gone back to smoking and additional therapy hasn't helped, $75 is refunded.

Those going through the program range from teen-agers to older people who have been told they have to quit smoking to survive.

People who have succeeded are lavish in their praise, and even those who don't quit or who start smoking again usually blame themselves rather than the program.

Gail Lockhart, a pretty 21-year-old, was told by a doctor she was developing emphysema. The next day she went to the Seattle clinic. Gale, who was unemployed, paid the $150 from the money she'd saved for her wedding this August.

"I don't think I could have quit without the clinic," she said.

One young housewife who went through the clinic successfully last May called recently asking for additional help. She said she still couldn't stand cigarettes but had started smoking two or three large cigars each day. She was put through more therapy to get rid of the cigar habit.

Folk Medicine Study Launched

COLLEGE STATION, Tex. (UPI)—An attempt to find and classify medicinal plants used in folk medicine in parts of Texas and Mexico is being made by Dr. Clarissa T. Kimber, Texas A&M Foundation at College Station. The search is supported by a grant from the National Institute of Mental Health.

Such plants, believed to be among the first used in medicine on this continent, now are becoming extinct. Some medicinal plants used in folk medicine centuries ago and then ignored have been found to yield drugs useful in modern medicine. An example is Rauwolfia, a plant whose roots produce reserpine, an important tranquilizer and hypertensive agent.

Danes Require Annual Checkup

COPENHAGEN (UPI)—Owners of pre-1962 automobile in Denmark are required to report once a year for inspection of their automobiles. Government safety officials estimate accidents could be reduced up to 10 per cent by such inspections. In neighboring Sweden, cars with more than five years' seniority are called up every year for a check.

Count 21 Pitt Fires In May

For the month of May, Pitt County Fire Marshall Bobby Joyner reports a total of 21 fires reported to the 18 rural fire departments in Pitt County.

House fires numbered four, auto fires accounted for eight of the total, and eight of the fires fell into "other categories." Due to the wet conditions prevalent during much of the month of May, only one grass or woods fire occurred.

The total estimated loss due to the fires amounted to approximately $10,850. The value of all property involved in or exposed to the fires amounted to about $41,000.

Couple Weds In Double Ring Ceremony Saturday

The marriage of Miss Lois Ellen Bumgardner of Arlington, Va., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Bumgardner of Cape Coral, Fla., and Steven James Hecker, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Arthur Hecker of Greenville, took place Sunday at 7:00 p.m. in the St. James United Methodist Church here. The Rev. F. Gerald Peterson officiated at the double ring ceremony.

Wedding music was furnished by Mrs. William Cain, organist. The bride was given in marriage by Lewis M. Frupp of Arlington, Va. She wore a formal gown of silk chiffon over peau de soie. The bodice was designed with a gathered wedding ring neckline of pearls, crystals, and tiny flowers of Venise lace and long full sleeves, gathered at the wrist with the same trim as the neck. The gown featured a chapel length built-in train extending from the shoulders. Her matching veil of silk illusion was of a waterfall style, and fell from a headpiece of pearls, crystals, and Venise lace. She carried a bouquet of white roses.

Miss Carla Denise Hollis of Hatteras was maid of honor. She wore a pale blue chiffon dress with an empire waist and long sheer puffed sleeves with a matching headpiece. She carried a nosegay of yellow daisies.

The bridegroom's father served as best man. Ushers were Brian J. Hecker, the bridegroom's brother, of Greenville, and Howell L. Lewis III of Wilmington.

The bride is a graduate of Wakefield High School, Arlington, Va., and is a senior at ECU. The bridegroom is a graduate of Rose High School and is attending Pitt Tech. He is employed by the Greenville Utilities Commission.

Following a wedding trip to Hilton Head Island, S. C., the couple will reside in Greenville.

Following the ceremony at the church, a reception was given in honor of the wedding couple.

Punch was poured by Mrs. Robert W. Schilling of Middletown, N. J., and cake was served by Mrs. O. F. Anderson of Successona, N. J.

The guest book was attended by Miss Linda Frupp of Arlington.

Chinese Women Help Build The Country

TOKYO (AP) — Women's equality was recognized in mainland China long before the U.S. Senate on March 22 completed approval of an amendment to the American Constitution giving women equal rights.

The amendment will take effect in the United States two years after ratification by the minimum requirement of 38 states. But China's 1954 constitution stipulates that women "enjoy equal rights with men in all spheres of political, economic, cultural, social and family life."

What the Chinese constitution says are not mere words.

On the eve of his departure from China, President Richard Nixon was reported to have asked Chinese Premier Chou En-Lai if he could pose a delicate question.

"Are men or women more intelligent?"

Chou replied that "In arts and handicrafts, I think women do better." And he quickly added: "In the majority of work now, what men can do, women do as well."

Chou did not agree that in the home women always are more intelligent. He cited as an example a woman interpreter working with the U.S. Presidential party who had so many duties that her husband was responsible for managing their home.

Old habits and traditions die hard in the Chinese countryside, but any man who holds his wife under his thumb now is a violator of Chinese Communist Party Chairman Mao Tse-tung's thought, which rules supreme in the People's Republic.

Mao wrote in 1927 that a man in China was usually dominated by the three systems of political authority, clan authority and religious authority. "As for women," he said, "in addition to being dominated by these three systems of authority, they are also being dominated by men—the authority of the husband."

He said the four authorities faced by Chinese women were "the embodiment of the whole feudal-patriarchal ideology and ropes, binding the Chinese people, particularly the peasants."

Communist revolutionaries, Mao decreed, are for the overthrow of the feudal-patriarchal ideology and system not only in the countryside but in the whole country as well.

Six years after he had founded the People's Republic in 1949, the Chairman called on the nation to tap the "vast labor power" of Chinese women in order "to build a great socialist country."

Dangling a carrot before womenfolk, who were at first reluctant to take part in economic construction, Mao declared: "Genuine equality between the sexes can only be realized in the process of the socialist transformation of society as a whole."

With these words, Mao personally introduced the women's liberation movement to China's women. Today, Chinese women consider themselves totally emancipated. They perform the same tasks and receive the same pay as their male counterparts. In fact, as women some say they receive more privileges than men at their places of employment.

Liu Kuei-ying, a leading woman weaver and vice chairman of The Revolutionary Committee of Peking No. 3 Textile Mill, was quoted by the official, "China Reconstructs," as saying that in her factory a woman worker may work seven instead of eight hours per day beginning from the seventh month of her pregnancy—a privilege no male worker can possibly have.

Another privilege, she said, was that mothers may have 56 days of post-birth paid leave which may be extended to 72 days in case of twins or difficult birth. Another privilege was that mothers who must nurse their babies may have two half hour breaks a day to be with their babies in factory nurseries.

A departure from the days before the communist takeover is the absence of child brides, arranged marriages and selling of brides by poor peasants to help them tide over a lean year.

Today's Chinese officials from on women marrying before they are 25 years old. They also encourage women to marry on the basis of political thought rather than love or romance. In a move to slowdown population growth and keep women at work everywhere but in the family kitchen, the officials encourage birth control for married women with more than two children.

Gone, too, are the days when baby girls born into a poor peasant's family were drowned because women were considered as economically non-productive and an extra mouth to feed.

The Rev. Julian Howard, uncle of the bridegroom, assisted by Dr. Claud B. Bowen, pastor of the church, performed the ceremony. A program of wedding music was presented by Miss Carol Bowden, organist, and Mrs. Pamela Rouse Burke, soloist.

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs.

Clarence Thornton Martin of Greensboro, the bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a white bridal A-line gown of silk organza with scoop neckline, long sleeves with flounce cuffs and bodice which featured slightly raised waist with set-in band. The gown had shiffl embroidered lace with a lace hem.

She wore a white garden hat trimmed in pink and carried a white basket of pink daisies.

Bridesmaids were Miss Sarah Lynn Stone, Miss Marilyn Anne Newcomb and Miss Martha Louise Sampson, all of Greensboro, and Miss Janet Marie Crockett of Greenville, sister of the bridegroom. Their dresses of aqua were styled like the dress of the honor attendant.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers were Richard Clarence Martin and Gregory Lee Martin of Greensboro, brothers of the bride, Stephen Edward Reed of Chapel Hill and Dennis Michael Langston of Greenville.

Following a wedding trip to Sea Island, Ga., the couple will reside in Greenville.

The bride is a senior at East Carolina University in French and history. The bridegroom is employed by the N. C. State Highway Commission.

Immediately following the ceremony, a reception was held in the church fellowship hall given by the bride's parents.

A rehearsal dinner was given by the bridegroom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Crockett, at the Sheraton Motor Inn, Greensboro, Friday night. Guests included members of the wedding party and immediate family of both the bride and bridegroom.

By PEACE MOFFAT
AP Newsfeatures Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Parents need to set values, limits, clear approval and clear disapproval of their children's actions, especially where drugs are concerned, says Dr. Mitchell S. Rosenthal, director of Phoenix House, the nation's largest system of therapeutic communities for drug addicts.

"And they must not give into peer pressure either," he adds. "It's almost as though by discovering peer pressure parents have given up their own muscle—muscle which can be emotional, financial and legal."

"We live in a time of technical experts and parents have felt the drug problem is so complex and so technical it will take drug experts to solve it. But there is no reason for parents to tolerate addiction," Rosenthal says.

To help show parents the "muscle" they can exert in preventing their children from using drugs, Rosenthal has written a book, "Drugs, Parents and Children, The Three-Way Connection." He says he felt such a book was necessary after watching the average age of residents at Phoenix House drop from 28 to 21, with many drug users even younger.

The doctor notes that parents spend too much time trying to distinguish between which drugs are more harmful than others, and which drugs their children might be using and points out that such reasoning is ineffective. "Ten years ago, if a child had come home drunk every night, his parents would have felt they had to do something about it—without caring if he was getting drunk on Scotch or on bourbon," he says.

Rosenthal also says the rising drug rate is "inseparable from the fact that people think no matter what's wrong with them, there is some chemical that will fix it." Parents can combat this attitude, he says, by not abusing drugs, including alcohol, sleeping pills or tranquilizers, in their own homes.

Pointing out that in New York much of the money available for fighting drug abuse goes to methadone maintenance programs, Rosenthal insists, "I am in no way in favor of making more drugs available. Drug use begets drug use. In a drug-oriented society, the answer you come up with for addiction is another drug. But I feel that's just buying our need for a quick answer."

Rosenthal says it's also become more "in vogue" for parents not to be demanding with their children—"to let them make whatever choices they want given enough intellectual information." This is one attitude, he says, that can lead to drug use.

"I don't think the modern parent is bad," he says, "but that he is unwittingly doing his children a disservice by taking off the demands and giving license. In childhood, a child has to learn to grow in the adult world, not have the adult world modify itself to suit the world of the child."

Other problems he points out that may lead to drug use are that the period of adolescence has been extended by lengthened schooling, making youngsters dependent and unproductive in society for a longer period; the turbulence around sexual experimentation; and the rapid biological development and growth of youth with associated awkwardness.

"Young people are caught on two polar points of wanting to be taken care of and yet move in another direction. They're hungry for approval from their peer group, but they still want approval from their parents," he says. Parents can help their children stay away from drugs, Rosenthal maintains, by staying in close touch with them, knowing their peer groups and setting down a rule of "No Drugs!"

"If, after a long time, you have been a good role model in not abusing drugs, including alcohol and tranquilizers, after you have said, 'I will not allow you to use drugs,' and you still find your child is either disobeying you or testing your limits," Rosenthal says, "you must go the next step—to use the courts, to stop offering financial support, or to put your child out of the house. This has got to be done, not to be vindictive, but really to fight for getting your child into treatment." Rosenthal is pessimistic about the increasing use of methadone. "I think we'll go the whole route with it, then discover it won't work and come back and say, 'We won't permit people to be addicts.'" But he is optimistic about young people's attitudes. "I think we'll see young people getting as interested in cleaning up the internal pollution of drugs as they are in cleaning up the environment."

Solve Problem By Speaking First

By Abigail Van Buren

(© 1972 by Chicago Tribune-N. Y. News Synd., Inc.)

DEAR ABBY: I have a friend whose husband brought back some very good-looking purses from Europe, and she gave me one as a gift. Whenever I carry it someone is sure to notice and compliment me on it. If this friend is present she jumps in with, "Oh, I gave it to her!"

I think this is very poor taste. If I want to tell where it came from, that should be my privilege. Please tell me if she is lacking in manners when she does this, and should I mention it to her.

WONDERING

DEAR WONDERING: She is proud to have given you something that evokes so many compliments, but it would sound so much better if YOU were to announce it. So next time, beat her to it, and you'll have solved your problem.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I have known a couple for a long time. They have teen-aged children and we have always thought they were happily married.

Last week when my husband and I were dining out, we saw the wife dining with a very attractive gentleman. We assumed he was a friend and thought nothing more of it.

The next morning this woman came to my home in tears and practically got down on her knees and begged me not to say anything to her husband about being with this man. She said she would break off the affair immediately.

I was stunned. When my husband came home I told him what had happened and said I had no intention of telling her husband anything. My husband said he was of the opinion that the husband should be told.

Abby, we respect your opinion, and want to know what we should do.

MR. & MRS. X

DEAR MR. AND MRS. X.: Say nothing. Either the lady is not playing with a full deck, or she is testing your friendship. Why would a married woman dine with her lover where she's apt to be seen by friends?

DEAR ABBY: I am writing to you because I am too embarrassed to ask anyone else and I need advice.

A year ago I married a blue-eyed blond girl. She has a very fair complexion and her ancestors are German and Dutch. I also have blond hair, a fair complexion and blue eyes. My people are Danish and Swedish.

Three days ago we had our first baby, and it doesn't look anything like either one of us. It has dark eyes, dark skin and dark hair. My wife says it must have inherited her father's dark skin which he acquired from working in the Pennsylvania coal mines most of his life. [Is this possible?]

My parents live far away and are begging for a snapshot of our baby, but I am too embarrassed to send one. I have no reason to mistrust my wife, but I am sick just worrying about what this could add up to. Can you explain it?

WORRIED

DEAR WORRIED: After consulting some experts in genetics I am advised that the color of a baby's eyes and skin frequently are darker when the baby is newborn, so don't jump to any conclusions prematurely. Also, if TWO grandparents have dark coloring, it is possible to produce dark skinned, dark eyes, dark haired children, even the both parents are fair. However, her father's years in the coal mines cannot possibly affect the color of her child's skin.

DEAR ABBY: You told a correspondent that you were sure there were many men who had forgiven an adulterous wife, but you weren't prepared to cite name, rank and serial number. I submit one who not only forgave his wife, but he paid to get her back:

Name: Hosea (husband of Gover).

Rank: Servant of the Lord.

Serial Number: Book of Hosea, Chapters 1, 2 and 3.

Men In Wedding Party Parachute To Village Church

GUINGAMP, France (WNS) — Odette Corre, 27, loved the single life despite her great beauty and vowed that she would never marry a man "unless he were an angel and descended from heaven." Mlle. Corre just kept her vow by wedding Michel Hervieux, president of the Parachute League of Brittany. He jumped from the skies to the village square that holds the village church and insisted that every invited male except the priest join him in this parachute acrobatics. Was Odette frightened about the possibility of accidents? "Not at all," she said. "I'm organizing a team of girls to challenge the men for next year's championship."

1/4 cup light corn syrup
1-3rd cup water
1 teaspoon vanilla
1/4 teaspoon salt
2 cups walnuts

In a 2-quart saucepan stir together the sugar, corn syrup and water. Stirring constantly, cook over medium heat until sugar is dissolved and mixture comes to a boil. Continue cooking, stirring occasionally, to 235 degrees on a candy thermometer or until a small amount of mixture dropped into very cold water forms a soft ball. Remove from heat. Add vanilla, salt and walnuts. Stir until mixture begins to thicken and turns white. Pour onto well greased cookie sheet and separate nuts into clusters. Cool and store in a tightly covered tin box. Are High Food Prices A Blessing?

BRUSSELS, Belgium (WNS) — Dr. Alfred Nassen, who specializes in gerontology, told housewives complaining about higher food prices here that they should treat the situation as a blessing. "The higher prices may stop you from eating too much and digging early graves for yourselves and your families," he explained. "Perhaps all of you could live to be 100 if many rich products were priced out of your reach."

Cupid's Corner

At Station

CHATHAM, England (WNS)— Cabdrivers here complained that commuter husbands "passionately" kissing their wives goodbye at the railroad station each morning held up traffic. The town council met with railroad officials to solve the problem and set up a "Cupid's Corner," or "kiss-and-wait area" for romantic couples. "We do not wish to destroy or even hinder the affectionate natures of our citizens," explained town clerk Roy Hill.

Garden Designed For The Blind

By FREDERICK M. WINSHIP
NEW YORK (UPI)—"A garden is a lovesome thing," wrote poet Thomas Edward Brown. He forgot the blind, for whom a garden can be just another extension of the dangerous unknown.

Tucked away behind some early Victorian houses on the fringes of Manhattan's Murray Hill is a new garden designed for the pleasure of the blind, although a sighted person can enjoy it, too. It is one of the world's few touch-and-smell fragrance gardens and has stimulated planning of similar gardens in other parts of the country.

The garden has been a project of the Jewish Braille Institute of America ever since it purchased a headquarters with an unused back courtyard shaded by ailanthus (the tree that grows in Brooklyn) in 1969.

Dr. Jacob Freid, executive director of the institute, envisioned it as "an oasis where the blind can come to enjoy the feel and smell of plants, the splash of a fountain, the song of birds, braille books, conversation, a cup of coffee." He received financial backing for the project from a New York businessman, Harry Waxman.

Smell And Touch

Barry Ferguson, a New Zealand horticulturalist, helped Freid lay out the garden with its wrought iron tables and chairs and to select the plants. Each plant has a distinctive tactile characteristic and many have fragrant foliage. The flower beds are raised to fingertip level so the blind can read the braille plates which bear the name of each plant.

Air pollution fallout occasionally claims a victim, such as the velvety-leaved lamb's ear, but most of the plants—rosemary, begonia, fern, myrtle, lemon balm, rose geranium, chives, rue, spearmint, lavender cotton—are thriving. There also are planters of shrubs and flowers which will change with the seasons spotted around the yard.

Unfortunately, blind visitors will miss the sight of a 100-year-old chestnut tree in a neighboring garden, its candles of white bloom reaching for the sun. But one does not dwell on the liabilities of blindness at the Jewish Braille Institute.

"We are concerned with the capabilities of the blind, with persons who are normal and of normal intelligence who just happen to be blind," said Freid, a former Rutgers University professor who lost the sight of one eye as a result of a detached retina.

"We are for the abolition of the stereotype of a blind person, in seeing it that he can lead a normal life. Blindness has had a bad press. The greatest problem of the blind is that of self-respect and ego. I'll have none of that benevolent despotism toward the blind here."

Stimulates Minds

Institutions for the blind traditionally provide sheltered workshops, employment bureaus, vocational training, psychotherapy or clinical counseling, eye care, orientation sessions, and guide dog instruction. The Jewish Braille Institute does none of these things. It seeks to stimulate the blind intellectually and, in the case of Jews, help them relate actively to their Jewish heritage.

New Glue Said To Be Nontoxic

NEW YORK (UPI)—Pint-sized makers of model planes and such won't get high when they inhale fumes from a new glue. Called Notox, the glue has a lemon scent. The manufacturer reports the new glue is nontoxic and works well with models made of plastic.

Earlier glues knocked some kids out, made them flighty and in some cases got them started on glue-sniffing—a "trip" that sometimes lead to the grave.

Visit Paris In Indiana

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (AP)

—An economy-minded tourist might consider a trip to Indiana where a variety of exotic names could be visited between Lake Michigan and the Ohio River.

There exist, for instance, the Hoosier communities of Cairo, Paris, Dublin and Shanghai.

A visitor might not care to see Gary's steel mills, the Civil War sites made famous by Morgan's Raiders, or the southern hills where Lincoln once roamed.

But he could travel but a few miles to learn why Indiana towns would give themselves such names as Aroma, Gnow Bone, Fickle and Zipp.

Those are authentic Indiana place names, as are Paragon, Bear Wallow, Popcorn, Sasafra, Cyclone and Two Pumpkin Centers.

The Hoosier tourist bureau points out that visitors can tour the world, in a way, between Chicago and Louisville.

Early settlers of British ancestry named Indiana cities and towns Bedford, Brighton, Bristol, Aberdeen, Dublin, Eaton, Falmouth, Richmond, Rugby, Runnymede and Somerset.

Later arrivals imported the names of Antioch, Athens, Bremen, Cadiz, Cairo, Denmark, Paris, Pekin, Rome, Sevastopol, Shanghai, Smyrna, Syria and Warsaw.

St. Andrews Participant

Charles Wendell Tyson of Greenville and a rising senior at Rose High School will receive free tuition, room and board, plus a $100 stipend as a participant in the St. Andrews Presbyterian College summer program, beginning Monday.

This program, a new one at St. Andrews, will consist of a lecture series each morning and work on an open-ended laboratory project each afternoon.

The lecture series is to feature an interdisciplinary approach to scientific problems with broad societal interest.

As one of 20 such students participating in this program, Tyson was selected competitively by the St. Andrews science faculty. He will be instructed in the use and operation of sophisticated science equipment available in the science lab at St. Andrews, rated by a number of science consultants as among the best-equipped undergraduate facilities in the country.

Tyson is ranked in the top four percent of his class at Rose High

Has A Way To Reach The Top

NEW YORK (AP)—A Wall Street institutional saleswoman, Mimi Green, 25, has her own way of getting to talk to heads of company whom she doesn't know.

When she phones, and secretaries ask who is calling, she simply says, "Tell him it's Mimi."

The secretaries invariably put her through and when she gets on the phone with the boss, the toughest part of job-getting to talk to him—is accomplished.

"It would never work if I said, 'Miss Green,'" she says.

THE JEWISH BRAILLE INSTITUTE has opened a new garden in New York, one of the world's few touch-and-smell fragrance gardens for the pleasure of the blind. (UPI Telephoto) blind person in the world on request, and the same service is offered for more than 1,000 recorded and taped books and large type books in both Hebrew and English. In its own sound studio, the institute produces Hebrew conversation courses and hi-fidelity recordings of Jewish religious services and Yiddish classic literature.

Women volunteers throughout the nation aid the institute by typing braille books and making recorded books to meet the needs of the blind. No request is ever turned down although some volunteers have been reluctant to record blue novels such as "Portnoy's Complaint." The institute also gives braille material gratis to Jewish and non-Jewish theological students, scholars and clergy, such as the 20-volume Bible which costs $100 to produce.

One of its finest contributions to the blind is the Jewish Braille Review, a free monthly literary magazine that is distributed to virtually all Jewish and non-Jewish college graduates in 36 countries, about 3,500 in number. About one-third to one-half of its content is original material and the rest is reprinted from leading cultural journals.

Pencil-Chewing Is Safer Today

NEW YORK (UPI)—Children chewing on lead pencils probably run less a chance of lead poisoning these days. The Pencil Makers Association Inc. reports a new testing and certification program which requires that members' pencils contain less than one-half of one per cent of lead in the lacquer. Ninety per cent of pencil makers hold membership in the association.

New Ice Cream Truck Rules

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (UPI)—The National Safety Council's cheering over an ice cream truck safety law in Indianapolis. It's designed to avoid ice cream truck deaths which can occur when children swarm around the vehicles on busy streets.

According to the law, similar to a law affecting school buses in most states, motorists approaching an ice cream truck must stop and then proceed with caution. The trucks, by law, must be equipped with fold-out signs warning motorists to "Stop-Proceed with Caution."

CARROLL RICHTER'S HOROSCOPE

from the Carroll Richter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: A day when there is such a jumble of good and adverse planetary positions that you would be wise to approach whatever you have in mind in a hopeful manner, but with reservation. Make sure your thinking is right so you can rise above trouble.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) You are now in an indecisive mood so be sure to attend the services of your choice and come to right conclusions. The evening can be particularly happy in the company of friends.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Show that you like your friends and don't criticize. Instead, try to be helpful. Daytime is best for whatever you consider important to do. Attend the social this evening.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Plan how to handle an outside affair wisely in the morning. Later visit good friends and have a delightful time. Don't neglect important credit and civic matters.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) You have to change your attitude if you want to get along much better with others. Make plans for a trip now. Evening is fine for making new and valuable acquaintances.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Make sure not to use erroneous hunches but definitely follow the right ones today. Your best judgment should be used at all times. Come to a better understanding with mate tonight.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Know what is expected of you by your associates and do your utmost to please them. Problems may arise, but you can solve them very easily, no matter how difficult.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) There is some work you want to do but lack the know-how, so obtain the advice of experts. Try to be of assistance to others, also. Take care of apparel and look more charming.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) If you have a cheerful attitude you turn what could be a dull day to a happy one. Show affection for others and show that you have creative talents. Take health treatments.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Think about having fun today instead of stirring up trouble at home. Plan a nice party for the early evening. Renew old acquaintanceships and show that you have poise.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Contact good friends and do some fine organizing that could lead to good things in the future. Attend the services of your choice and add to present wisdom. Be logical.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Do some sound thinking about finances and outline a new plan for greater abundance in the near future. Obtain the right advice from a business expert. Take it easy tonight.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) You are undecided about what you should do but later in the day all works out fine and you come to right decisions. The social can be most productive. Be sure to dress well.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY... he or she will be one of those charming young people who early in life questions everything and learns a great deal. Be sure to take time to answer questions accurately which will help your youngster become an able and successful person. Give spiritual training early with emphasis on a fine balance between the idealistic and the practical.

there can be happiness in this chart. Then your youngster will do well in merchandising, big productions of all kinds. The mind here is definitely scientific and has organizing ability. Sports are a natural.

Indians Learn How To Guide Tourists

POJOAQUE, N. M. (UPI)—A group of New Mexico Pueblo Indians went to "school" this year to learn about Indians so they can guide tourists through the Indian cities.

The school was started by Northern Pueblo Enterprises last winter for a new tourism program which will use Indian guides for the first time.

The small group of Indians participated in training sessions twice a week to learn about such things as architecture, archeology and anthropology.

The Indian guides learned to take small groups of tourists on a week-long excursion through the northern New Mexico pueblos, teaching the tourists about Indian culture.

Not Just Sightseeing
"The thing that makes it different from an ordinary sightseeing tour is our individuality," says Mrs. Rita Dickey of Santa Fe, tourism director for Northern Pueblo Enterprises.

"It is not sightseeing," she says. "It is truly an educational experience."

The guides were taught to show visitors pottery making, bread baking and other Pueblo skills.

Between Us Children Will React To Power Of Personal Example

By DR. HAIM GINOTT
Note to readers: The encounters depicted in my column are designed to serve as a practical guide to improved communication. They are not to be taken literally. They should be adapted to individual situations and individual ways of speaking.

LEONARD, 8, was smacking his lips loudly at the dinner table. His father turned to him in anger: "You eat like a pig. Do you know what a pig is?" "Yes," answered Leonard. "It's the son of a swine."

This story drives home a basic truth: Children become what they experience. Swinish methods bring up pigs. To bring up humans we need humane ways.

Father could have invited his son's cooperation without insult by saying: "Son. The munching noise is annoying."

Manners cannot be taught rudely. Politeness can only be taught with politeness. Civility must be demonstrated.

Teacher: I recently read two books that would interest your parents. They deal with how to bring up children kindly and they were written by Dr. Geenoot.

Jan: Are you referring to the books "Between Parent and Child" and "Between Parent and Teenager"?

Teacher: Yes. Those are the books.

Jan: The correct pronunciation of the author's name is Dr. Ginott, like in Scott.

Teacher: Who asked you? Sit down and shut up!

This true story sums up the tragedy of miseducation: Many virtues are much preached but little practiced in our schools. A teacher who recommends books for parents should at least have the kindness to say, "Thank you, Jan, for bringing it to my attention." Certainly, he should not demonstrate cruelty and rudeness.

KATHY, 7, had a seizure in the classroom. When she fell on the floor, the children started to shriek. The teacher said authoritatively, "In an emergency, we do what is necessary." The mood of the class changed instantly. An ambulance was called and Kathy was moved to the hospital.

A few months later, Kathy had another seizure. The substitute teacher reacted hysterically. She jumped on the chair and yelled incoherently.

Dennis, 8, saved the situation. "Mrs. A," he said, "in an emergency we do what is necessary." He left the room, ran to the office and said to the principal, "Kathy is very sick. She needs an ambulance."

Kathy, who suffered a respiratory arrest, was resuscitated in the hospital. The doctor said she would have died had an ambulance not been called in time.

As this incident demonstrates, a teacher's calm authority and clear direction can have vital consequences.

Roger, 14, ran into the house, anxious. His shoes, socks and pants were wet and he still had to dink his books. He was expecting the worst from Mother. But Mother surprised him.

Mother: Roger, it's late. Is there anything I can do to help?

Roger: Gee, Mom, thanks. Can you get me dry socks and pants? I'll look for my books.

Mother: Sure, Son. Roger: Thanks a lot, Mom. I do appreciate your help and understanding.

The next day Roger was asked by his sister to have their small sailboat ready for her by 2 p.m.

He and a friend sailed in the morning. At the agreed time he had the boat cleaned and ready and waiting, but his sister did not show up. At 3 o'clock, burning with anger, he came home looking for his sister.

Roger: I could have sailed for another hour. All I'm doing is waiting. When Pearl comes, I'm going to give it to her.

Mother: I see you're angry. You could have been out with the boat instead of waiting.

Roger: Yeah. It was nice. (At this moment Pearl arrived home.)

Pearl: I'm sorry Roger that I'm so late. I missed the bus.

Roger: I've been waiting for you for over an hour. But, since you're so late, do you need any help?

In their response to children, parents can always risk a kind gesture. There is a good chance that it will be absorbed imitated and emulated.

Getting A Passport A Woman Is Behind It All

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP)—When white South Africans need a passport, they fill out an official form, submit it with $4 and await the document. Black applicants need much more money, effort and patience.

Africans must supply a deposit of $532 if they plan to visit the United States and $266 if Europe is their goal—plus the application fee.

Immigration authorities say the deposits are required in case the traveler becomes stranded and must be returned home at government expense.

Suspicious blacks believe the deposit is aimed at discouraging them from foreign travel. Some point out that even African students able to study abroad on full scholarships must fork over deposits.

The red tape doesn't stop with money, however.

Blacks have to provide eight copies of letters to support the passport application from two notables, usually a clergyman and an officeholder in their segregated communities.

Then the applicant gets a document from the Bantu Administration Department's immigration section which must be cleared at Johannesburg's Non-European Affairs Department.

"Bantu" is the official label for Africans and "Non-European" is South Africanese for anybody who isn't white.

The clearance form describes the applicant's worthiness and political leanings, if any. It also reports whether he or she "is considered a fit and proper person to visit countries where there is no racial segregation."

Next income tax and poll tax receipts must be produced. Birth certificates are OK in the case of minors.

Many applicants say that if any of the necessary papers or funds are lacking, immigration officers decline to pass it along to headquarters in Pretoria for final approval.

When opposition politicians chided the government last year about passport obstacles a spokesman spurned the criticism by saying that passports are a privilege and not a right of citizens.

BERKELEY, Calif (UPI)—Behind at least one successful computer there's a woman.

Diane McEntyre, a 26-year-old graduate student at the University of California, has made a computer that argues in favor of women's liberation.

She calls the computer FWAM, meaning Free Women and Men.

FWAM is on display at the university Hall of Science where anybody and everybody is welcome to argue with it.

One woman asked FWAM the following question while Mrs. McEntyre operated it: "Did you ever play with footballs or cars or snakes?"

"Yes, the woman answered. "That's okay as long as you gave it up when girls are supposed to," FWAM replied.

Mrs. McEntyre said she has written one program for men and one with women.

"Whenever I pretend I'm a man and answer FWAM," she said, "I come off really sexist." "I guess I'm more aware of the male prejudices."

Rams Outlast Cabarrus, 9-7

CONCORD, N.C. (AP) — Greene Central exploded for two runs in the 10th inning Saturday to whip Northwest Cabarrus 9-7 and capture the North Carolina 3A high school baseball championship.

Greene Central took the best-of-three series by winning two straight games after losing the opener.

With two out in the 10th, Stevie Williamson singled home to go-ahead run and another run scored on the same play on a throwing error.

Billy Williamson was the winning pitcher in both Greene Central triumphs. Williamson came in on relief in the final game's seventh inning, to put down a Northwest Cabarrus uprising and record his sixth victory of the year without a loss.

Gerald Marshall had a two-run homer and a double for the losers. George Marshall was the losing pitcher, finishing the season with a 14-1 slate.

NCNB, Dairymen Claim Victory

North Carolina National Bank and Carolina Dairy picked up victories in the Babe Ruth League last night. NCNB downed College View, 16-10, and Carolina Dairy beat Planters Bank 3-2. The game between Pepsi-Cola and Home Builders was suspended because of time in the fifth inning with Pepsi leading 14-8. The game will be completed at a later date.

In the opener, Carolina Dairy took the lead in the first inning. Grif Garner walked and moved up on an out. He scored when Kelvin Walter singled.

Planters tied it up with a run in the third. Ed Connolly doubled and took third on a wild pitch. A passed ball let him score.

Planters moved ahead in the sixth, 2-1. Bobby Sasser walked and scored when Greg Jester doubled and Wayne Elks singled.

But the lead didn't hold as Carolina Dairy came up with two in the bottom of the seventh to win it. Jimmy Peszko led off, reaching on an error, he stole second and Edwin Clark singled. Clark also stole second. Chris Garrett singled, scoring Peszko with the tying run. Leonard Williams then hit a sacrifice fly to score Clark to end the game.

Jester and Elks each had two hits to pace Planters. No one had more than one for Carolina Dairy.

In the second game, College View took the lead with four in the first inning. Keith Jones sacrificed on an error, trying to sacrifice a previous runner. Connor Merritt reached on a fielder's choice and Jimmy Buck singled in Jones. Lee Moore walked and Billy Wilson walked to bring in Merritt. Another walk to Mike Sutton brought in Buck and Moore scored when Lee Shearin was walked.

In the second, they added another. Jones reached on a two-base error and was wild pitched to third. He scored on Buck's single.

In the third, however, NCNB came up with nine runs to take the lead for good. Ashley Bass walked and with two outs, Donnie Haddock reached on an infield hit. Jeff Smith walked to load the bases. Walks to George Martin, Joey Cherry and Robert Bellesheim brought in three runs. Jimmy Radford reached on an error to score Martin and Cherry, and Bass also reached on an error, scoring Bellesheim. Kelly Heath singled in Radford and Bass scored on a passed ball. Jack Jenkins singled to score Heath with the ninth run.

NCNB then added seven more in the fourth inning, wrapping it up. College View picked up three in the fourth and one in the seventh.

Heath, Haddock and Martin led the NCNB hitting, while Buch had three to pace College View.

Gilbert Clings To Kemper Golf's Lead

By BOB GREEN
Associated Press Golf Writer
CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Gibby Gilbert maintained a one-stroke lead with a one-under-par 71 Saturday in the third round of the $175,000 Kemper Open Golf Tournament.

Gilbert, slump-ridden all this season and a non-winner on the tour for the past two years, had a 54-hole score of 206, 10 under par on the 7,278-yard Quail Hollow Country Club course.

Lee Trevino, one of the game's most feared competitors, moved into contention, one stroke back, with his third consecutive 69.

Trevino, winner of the Danny Thomas-Memphis Open two weeks ago, was tied at 207 with veteran Doug Sanders and first-round leader Cesar Sanudo, each of whom had a 71. Australian veteran Bruce Crampton and Dave Hill were next at 208. Crampton shot a 67 and Hill matched par 72 on the hot and sunny day.

There were seven more players at 209. That put a total of 13 players locked within three strokes of each other going into the final 18 holes in the chase for a $35,000 first prize.

In that group—very, very much in contention—were South African Gary Player, defending champion Tom Weiskopf, Australian Bruce Devlin, Tom Shaw, Kermit Zarley, Labron Harris and veteran Billy Casper.

Casper, one stroke off the pace when the day started, bogeyed the 17th hole for a 73. Weiskopf, who had an eagle two in his round, and Devlin came out of the pack with 66. Player had a 70. Shaw had a 70 and Zarley 71.

Arnold Palmer, who just made the cut for the final two rounds, managed a 71 but appeared out of title contention with a 216, 10 strokes off the pace.

Jack Nicklaus is not competing, taking time off from the tour to prepare for the United States Open Championship in two weeks.

Sanudo, a Mexican-born American citizen, had to birdie the last hole from 15 feet to gain his share of second. He's seeking his first title on the major tour in a four-year career.

The graying, veteran Sanders moved to within one shot when he stroked a four iron to five feet on the final hole and made it.

"I'm playing a lot more consistently than I have in a long time," declared Sanders, a flashy dresser whose colorful outfits have earned him the nickname "the walking rainbow."

Trevino, too, talked about his putting. "I feel good about it now. I can see the line real good. I'm rolling it good. I just feel like I can make 'em all. And I'm making all those little four and five footers. Those are the ones that count."

Brewers Win, 3-1

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Right-hander Bill Parsons pitched a five-hitter and George Scott knocked in two runs to lead the Milwaukee Brewers to a 3-1 triumph over the Texas Rangers Saturday.

Parsons, 5-2, outdueled Pete Broberg, 3-4, as the Brewers won their third game in a row.

The Milwaukee right-hander gave up the Rangers' only run in the first inning on a home run by Don Mincher.

Scott's run-scoring single in the first inning gave the Brewers a 1-1 tie, then the Milwaukee third baseman drove in the deciding run with a sacrifice fly in the fifth inning.

A squeeze bunt by Rick Auerbach scored the Brewers' final run in the sixth.

Eagles Fly To 14-4 Class A Title Victory

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor
ROBERSONVILLE—“Two for 72.”

That was the rallying cry in Robersonville this weekend. And the cry has become reality.

Yesterday afternoon, the Robersonville High School Golden Eagles stomped Rowland's Cobras, 14-4, to become the 1972 Class A State Baseball Champions. During the 1971-72 school year, the Eagles have claimed two state titles, winning the football crown for Class A schools last fall.

The Eagles unleashed their bats, banging out 14 hits and taking advantage of six Rowland errors to roll up their win. They won the series in two straight games. (See first game story on page 16.)

Actually, they got all they needed in the first inning when the pushed over five runs. But when Rowland began to creep closer, the Eagles just flew away, added two in the third, three in the fifth and four more in the sixth.

Only two members of the team failed to collect a hit in the game, and one of those was a substitute who made only one appearance.

Matt Wilson tossed the victory, his sixth in seven starts, and went through some shaky moments despite the lead his team built up for him. He gave up nine hits, walked four and struck out four on the way to the win.

Loser Prestin Britt suffered his first loss of the year after

South Alabama Gains Finals

GASTONIA, N.C. (AP) — South Alabama defeated Virginia 6-1, Saturday afternoon to advance to the finals of the National Collegiate Athletics Association District 3 baseball tournament.

Mississippi, which earlier eliminated Florida State, 8-3, met Virginia Saturday night with the winner getting the other championship berth.

South Alabama pushed its record to 36.6, the best in the tournament, as it became the only undefeated team. Virginia put an 18-14 mark against Ole Miss's 25-14 record.

Three runs in the third inning got South Alabama on its way, with three hits and an error accounting for the scoring. Steve Gaskin, a big gun for the Jaguars, tripled in one of the runs and Ernie Rosseau and Gary Conley singled for the other hits.

Two more runs came in the sixth with hits by Gaskin, Rosseau and Forrest Crowder, and South Alabama's final run came in the ninth on one hit and two errors.

Dave Bratt connected for Virginia's only run with a homer in the fourth inning.

Mark Hoffman, who started for the Jaguars, got credit for the victory, his sixth against two defeats, and Dave LaCross, four victories during the campaign. Two other pitchers were called to the mound, but none were able to snuff out the fire.

The Eagles started things off with five in the first inning. Edward Warren led off with a single to left and Ricky Brown rapped one into center. Loyall Corey walked, loading the bases. Wilson then singled to score Warren, but Corey was cut down when he overran second.

Summy Mobley walked, reloading the sacks, and Phil James singled to left, scoring both Brown and Wilson. Larry Jackson reached on an error, with Mobley scoring after the miscue and James moving to third. Doug Warren then lifted a sacrifice fly to right, bringing in James with the fifth run.

Two singles in the bottom of the first gave Rowland a threat, but they didn't score. A walk and a single got the Eagles another chance in the top of the second, but they, too, didn't score.

Rowland put on a rally in the bottom of the second, scoring three to cut the lead to 5-3. James Locklear led off with a single to right. Greg Britt also singled, and Locklear was nearly caught off when he tried to go too far. He finally made it to third, however, on an error, and Britt pulled into second on the play. Charles Sherwood hit a sacrifice fly to score Locklear, and George McCormick walked.

He stole second and both runners scored on Jerry Johnson's single to left.

The Eagles added two more to their lead, making it 7-3, in the third. Jackson reached second on a two-base error and Doug Warren walked. Mike Matthews beat out a bunt to load the bases and Ed Warren sacrificed Jackson across with a fly ball that went into short left, was caught by the shortstop, who was then knocked down by the charging left fielder. Brown then singled to left, scoring Doug Warren.

Rowland also scratched in the third, scoring one time, it was to be the last time. Britt led off with an infield single and took second on a wild pitch. Bobby Hunt lined a double into left center, bringing Britt around with the final run.

Rowland offered only one more threat in the game. In the fourth, Johnson walked with one away and took second on a wild pitch. But then, Corey, who had just made a running-one-handed catch of a long fly to open the inning, came up with another fine play. He caught a long fly to left, then rifled the ball to third where Johnson was just tagged out for a double play.

But the Eagles weren't through, if Rowland was. They came up with three runs in the fifth. Matthews walked and Ed Warren singled to right. Brown, trying to sacrifice, hit back to the mound and Matthews was cut down at third. A passed ball moved both of the survivors up and Corey singled to score Warren. Corey and Brown worked the double steam with Brown scoring. The throw to home to try and get Brown was late and high, and Corey moved on to third on the play. The relay to that base was also off target, and Corey kept coming, making it easily with the 10th run.

In the sixth, the Eagles added four more runs. James started it all off with a ringing homer to straightaway center.

Jackson followed that with a single to left, and Doug Warren reached on an infield single. Matthews singled to score Jackson, and on the relay to third, the ball was again errored, and Warren came in. Matthews moved all the way to third on the play. He scored on Brown's sacrifice fly with the game's final run.

The win gave the Eagles a 20-1 record for the year. Rowland finished with a 19-7 mark. For Coach Noland Respass, it closed out a fine year. He also coached the football championship. It was his third state title, the second in baseball at Robersonville. He earlier won the title in 1967, and took his team to the finals in 1970, before bowing for Farmer, two games to one.

Florida State hitting was led by Denny Williams with a single and a double, and John Librandi and Tim Sherrill each with two singles.

Mississippi jumped out to a 1-0 lead in the first inning and never trailed.

Lee May, Houston's new first baseman, hit 133 home runs in the last four years with Cincinnati.

Ralph Garr, who hit .343 for the Atlanta Braves, last year stole 30 bases in his first full major league season.

East Carolina University's field house has recently seen the completion of a new wing of coaches' offices. The new section provides offices for all of the outdoor sports coaches, the trainer, and has a large meeting room for teams.

A large reception room in the east end of the building opens into Head Football Coach Sonny Randle's glass-fronted office. Space is provided there for meetings with his staff. Leading off the reception room is a hall providing entrance to the various assistants offices, the trainer, the baseball coaches and the track coach's offices, plus the meeting room.

The building is a great addition to the program at East Carolina. Still inside Minges Coliseum are the offices for the various indoor sports, basketball, wrestling, swimming, and the like.

Administration offices are still also in Minges, along with the Sports Information Office.

The Summer College Baseball League will open play Tuesday in Eastern Carolina. Three games are on tap, with the interest here on the University of North Carolina's visit to East Carolina. Immediately following that, on Wednesday, the Pirates play host to the University's Wilmington branch.

Carolina and Wilmington, which finished one-two in the league last year, are the favorites again this year. So the Pirates should learn quickly how they will be faring this season.

Season tickets, both individual and family, are on sale now, and are a good bargain. There are 18 home games on the slate, all single affairs. No doubleheaders will be played, even for make-up games. The program is a good one, and deserves good support from the Pitt area.

Best wishes go out to Osborne Meyete, basketball coach at Rose High School. Oz suffered a heart attack last week, and is currently in Pitt Memorial Hospital.

We wish him a short convalescence, a speedy recovery, and a return to full health.

Congratulations go out to Robersonville and Greene Central for their baseball successes this year. We can say without doubt that this area of Eastern North Carolina is one of the sports centers of the state.

No other area can claim to have two state finalists in a sport, and probably few areas send as many team to the various playoffs. Couple all that with East Carolina University, and you have a thriving sports area.

Seaver Claims Eighth Victory

NEW YORK (AP) — Tom Seaver became the National League's first eight-game winner despite failing to pitch a complete game for the seventh straight time and Duffy Dyer drilled a three-run homer for the New York Mets beat the Atlanta Braves 5-2 Saturday.

Seaver, 8-2, scattered seven hits before leaving the game after hitting a batter with one out in the eighth inning. Tom McGraw relieved the Mets' ace at that point and gave up two hits and a run before recording his eighth save of the season. Seaver, who had a staff-leading 21 complete games for New York last year, most recently went the distance April 26 against San Diego, when he pitched a seven-hitter. He's completed only one other start this year, a four-hitter over Chicago.

Dyer, a part-time catcher filling in for Jerry Grote, provided the winning margin with his three-run blast in the second inning after a single by Cleon Jones and walk to Wayne Garrett by Tom Kelley, 3-5.

Seaver doubled, went to third on a single by Bud Harrelson and came in on Ted Martinez' bounce to give the Mets a 4-0 lead in the fourth. After Atlanta scored its first run in the sixth on Dusty Baker's sacrifice fly, the Mets came up with their last run in the seventh on Cleon Jones' RBI double.

Philadelphia jumped to a 5-0 lead against Wayne Simpson as Tommy Hutton homered in the first following singles by Denny Doyle and Greg Luzinski and Larry Bowa drilled a two-run triple in the third.

Baltimore trimmed Oakland 4-2. BALTIMORE (AP) — Mike Epstein drove in the winning runs with a two-run homer in the eighth inning and Ken Holtzman notched his eighth victory of the season as the Oakland A's trimmed the Baltimore Orioles 4-2 Saturday.

Epstein ripped his sixth homer of the year after a one-out single by Sal Bando and made a loser of Baltimore starter Pat Dobson, 5-6.

Holtzman, 8-3, was stalked to a 1-0 lead in the second inning when Dave Duncan chased in Banco from third with a squeeze bunt.

Loyall Corey (10) heads down to the plate in the bottom of the seventh inning Friday night to score the game-ending run as Robersonville nipped Rowland, 5-4, to claim the first of the best-of-three series for the state Class A title. Corey had reached on a

Pirates Rally To Get 4-3 Win Over Giants

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Al Oliver's two-run double in the seventh inning highlighted a three-run rally that lifted the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 4-3 victory over the San Francisco Giants in a nationally televised game Saturday.

The Giants had taken a 2-1 lead in the sixth when Willie McCovey celebrated his return to action with a two-run homer following a walk to Tito Fuentes.

With two out in the seventh, Blass singled to left and went to third on Dave Cash's double. Oliver followed with his double to left-center for a 3-2 lead.

Roberto Clemente then lashed a run-scoring single to center before Willie Stargell's infield single chased San Francisco starter Sam McDowell, 6-3.

Jose Pagan's homer gave the Pirates a 10-lead in the fifth before McCovey, hitless in his first two trips, lined a 375-foot two-out homer in the sixth. McCovey, who had not played since suffering a broken arm April 18, walloped a pair of homers off World Series hero Blass, in the 1971 National League playoffs.

Ken Henderson belted his fifth home run of the season leading off the bottom of the seventh, capping the scoring for the Giants.

Pittsburgh right-hander Steve Blass improved his record to 6-1 with ninth inning relief help from Dave Giusti, who got the last two outs after the Giants put men on first and third. Blass gave up seven hits, one of them a fluke double by McCovey that started the ninth inning trouble.

Both starters were effective in the early innings. Blass retired six in a row after hitting Chris Speier with a pitch, opening the first.

Dave Rader led off with a single in the third, but McDowell missed on a sacrifice bunt attempt and grounded into a double play. Speier then walked but Fuentes grounded out, ending the inning.

Dave Kingman opened the fourth with a single but Bobby Bonds' double-play grounder retired the side. Rader singled with two out in the fifth and McDowell's grounder ended the inning.

McDowell, a native of Pittsburgh, retired the first seven Pirates before Gene Alley singled with one away in the third. With two outs, Alley stole second and Cash walked.

Oliver then ripped a hopper, McDowell making a great stab and throwing the runner out at first. Clemente led off with a single in the sixth and advanced on a wild pitch before McDowell worked out of trouble.

Reds Win Sixth Straight, 6-5

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Julian Javier's tie-breaking single in the 10th inning carried the streaking Cincinnati Reds to a 6-5 victory over Philadelphia Saturday, extending the Phillies losing streak to seven games.

Ted Uhlender began the one-out rally off Ken Reynolds, 0-2, with a single and took second on Bobby Tolan's single.

Darrell Brandon took over on the mound and Javier scored him with the single to left that gave the Reds their sixth straight victory and eighth in nine games. The Phils have now lost 17 of their last 18 games.

Philadelphia jumped to a 5-0 lead against Wayne Simpson as Tommy Hutton homered in the first following singles by Denny Doyle and Greg Luzinski and Larry Bowa drilled a two-run triple in the third.

But the Reds, held scoreless on two hits through six innings by Steve Carlton, finally tied it in the ninth on Hal McRae's one-out homer.

Homers Lead Angels To Win

CLEVELAND (AP) — Home runs by Leroy Stanton and Ken McMullen helped power the California Angels past the Cleveland Indians 8-4 Saturday for their fifth straight victory.

Stanton's two-run homer capped California's four-run rally in the first inning. Then, after the Indians tied the score at 4-4 in a fourth-inning outburst keyed by Eddie Leon's three homer, McMullen hit a two-run shot in the fifth.

McMullen's homer, his second in two games, followed Pinson's infield single and was delivered off reliever Steve Hargan, who was charged with the loss.

The Angels' winner was Rudy May, who took over for Nolan Ryan in the fourth. Ryan had control problems as he walked five, including Graig Nettles prior to Leon's homer. The other Cleveland run, also charged to Ryan, came on Tom McCraw's triple and Jack Brohamer's single.

The defeat was the Indians' ninth in 10 games, and 10th in their last 12.

ROBERSONVILLE—Robersonville's Golden Eagles pushed over a run on a hit and an error in the bottom of the seventh inning to nip Rowland's Cobras, 5-4, Friday night and take a 1-0 lead in the best of three series for the 1-A Baseball Championship.

The Eagles had seen a 4-1 lead vanish in the top of the seventh when Rowland put on a rally of its own.

But a walk, a fielder's choice, a single and an error combined to bring Loyall Corey around with the winning run with one away in the bottom of the seventh.

The two teams were to meet Saturday afternoon, and Saturday night, if necessary, to finish the series. (See story, page 15.)

Rowland kept the pressure on the Eagles most of the evening, threatening in nearly every inning. But Doyles Farmer, who won to stretch his record to 12-0, was able to get them out when it counted.

In the first, Rowland put a man on third when Johnny Cottrell singled to short and then stole both second and third. In the second, Charles Sherwood reached second on an error with two away. The third also saw Tommy Pate reached on a fielder's choice, and then moved to third on an error on Preston Britt's grounder.

Finally, in the fifth, they broke the ice. But by then, Robersonville had pushed over four runs to hold a 4-0 lead. The Eagles got their scoring going early, getting one each in the first four innings. With one out in the first, Ricky Brown reached on a slow roller down the third base line. Corey walked and Matt Wilson cracked a ground ruled double to right center. That brought in Brown for a 1-0 lead.

In the second, the Eagles struck with two away. Edward Warren singled to center, and then moved to second when a pickoff attempt was thrown away. Another pickoff play was tried there, and when the ball got through the second baseman and the center fielder, Warren sped all the way home for a 2-0 advantage for the Eagles.

In the third, Robersonville added another. With one down, Wilson drew a walk and Summy Mobley singled to left. Both moved up on a wild pitch, Phil James lofted a short fly to left, and the shortstop, Tommy Pate went back to field it. He caught the ball, but stumbled and fell. By the time he could get back up and throw, Wilson had raced home with the third run.

The Eagles struck again in the fourth. Warren walked and Brown singled to moved him to third. Brown then got himself caught in a rundown, and Warren trotted home unnoticed fifth the fourth run.

Rowland finally got on the boards in the fifth. With one away, Pate singled to left. Cottrell followed with another hit, this one to left also. Britt flied out to right, and Pate took off for third on the catch. The ball was thrown away at third, and Pate scrambled on home to give the Cobras their first run.

They threatened again in the sixth, when James Locklear and Percy Bullock both singled, but it died there.

The seventh, however, produced the three runs they needed to catch up. Pate led off with a walk and Cottrell reached on an error. Britt then singled to center, scoring Pate. Bobby Hunt followed that up with a double to right center, bringing in both Cottrell and Britt with the tying runs. Farmer, angered by this, struck out the next three to avoid further damage.

Robersonville's scoring string, meanwhile, had come to an end in the fifth. Corey had reached on an error, moved up on a wild pitch and a single by Mobley, but couldn't get in this time.

No one reached in the sixth, but with their backs to the wall in the seventh, they did the job. Brown led off with a walk, but he was cut down going to second on Corey's grounder to third. Wilson slapped a single into left, and when the ball got by the fielder, Corey raced all the way form first to score the winning run.

Lions, Coke Take Victories

Coca-Cola took over sole possession of first place in the North State Little League yesterday with a 19-10 rout of Kiwanis. The Lions slipped past the Optimist 7-6 in the other League contest also played yesterday.

Coke spotted Kiwanis a pair of runs in the first as Brad Brown got a hit and moved up on a wild pitch. Danny Hester also got a hit to score Brown. A wild pitch and a passed ball allowed Hester to score.

Kiwanis added six more in the third to up their lead to 9-0 before Coke had broken the ice. Coke finally got on the boards in the bottom of the third as Ronnie Chapman walked, went to second on a passed ball, and scored as Marshall Crumpler hit into a fielder's choice.

Coke pushed over four in the fourth to cut the Kiwanis lead to 9-5. After seeing Kiwanis get a long tally in the fifth, Coke, in the bottom of the frame, exploded for 14 runs rapping out six hits in the spree while drawing seven walks and two hit batters. Kiwanis got another run in the top of the sixth but could not catch up.

Brown had three hits for Kiwanis and Hester had three. Besides Chapman's two hits, Joe Downing also had a pair, a double and a triple.

The second game was not so hectic. The Lions struck first in the opening frame with four runs. Marty Worthington reached on an error and scored on a triple by Jesse Baker. An error on the play let Baker score. Ray Kilpatrick got a hit as did Franger Sanders. Tom Carpenter walked to load the bases. Peter Pace hit into a fielder's choice getting Kilpatrick at home but a hit by Krage Gardiner drove in both Sanders and Carpenter.

Optimist came back in the bottom of the inning to pull within one. With one out, Eric McCormick singled and went to second on a passed ball. Gary Lee was safe on an error and another passed ball advanced the both runners. Jeff Aldridge slammed a double to score them and an error on the play let Aldridge score.

The Lions got another one in the third and one in the fourth. They increased their lead to 7-3 in the fifth as Mike Williams doubled and scored on Carpenter's double.

Optimist rallied for three runs in the fifth but the threat was ended just a run shy of tying it up. James Show reached on an error and McCormick got a hit. Lee hit a double to drive in Shoe and a hit by Aldridge scored McCormick and Lee. The rally ended there as a ground out and a pop-up ended the inning.

Kilpatrick had a pair of hits for the Lions while McCormick, Aldridge each had two.

Coke is now on top of the North State League at 4-1 and the Optimists are 3-2.

The Graniteers pulled back into a share of first place in the Tar Heel Little League yesterday with a 15-5 romp over the Moose.

The win left the Graniteers tied with Pepsi-Cola for the lead with 4-1 records. The Moose are now 2-3.

The Graniteers took the lead with three runs in the first inning and never lost it. Timmy Allen walked and Kevin Haut reached on a fielder's choice. Chris Moye singled, loading the bases. Mike Moye walked to score Allen, and H. L. Austin singled in Haut. A walk to Billy Coltrain brought Chris Moye over with the third run.

The Moose came up with the one in the bottom of the frame. Steve Lawler singled and moved to second on an error on Mickey Finn's grounder. William Brewington reached on a fielder's choice, as another error left all safe. A passed ball brought in Lawler with the first Moose run.

The Graniteers came up with six more in the bottom of the second. Micah Dixon led off with a walk, and Allen reached the same way. Haut singled, loading the bases. Chris Moye reached on an error, scoring Dixon. Mike Moye walked, bringing in Allen. Haut scored on a passed ball and Austin reached on an error.

Texas Waits For Rain But Doesn't Get Wish

By BRUCE LOWITT
Associated Press Sports Writer

"I bet I got 2,000 letters of protest from people who thought the game would never start again and went home, only to find out it had been completed," Frank Lane said.

"I think I sent out 2,000 tickets to those people."

Lane, the director of baseball operations—in other words, the general manager—of the Milwaukee Brewers, was recalling his first year in the front office of the Chicago White Sox back in 1949.

And he had plenty of time to dredge up those memories. For 2 hours 16 minutes Friday night, the Brewers and Texas Rangers played baseball. And for 2 hours 47 minutes, the Brewers, Rangers and nearly 10,000 Milwaukee fans, watched the rain.

Texas Manager Ted Williams did more than just watch. He strolled through the outfield with Nestor Chylak, squishing and splashing and trying to convince the umpire that enough was enough and the game should be called. But to no avail. The game was finished—and with the final out, so were the Rangers. Unable to overcome a seven-run lead, they bowed to the Brewers 7-5.

In other American League games, Baltimore beat Oakland 5-1, Detroit defeated Minnesota 5-4 in 11 innings, California clipped Cleveland 4-3, the Chicago White Sox slammed the New York Yankees 6-1 and Kansas City blitzed Boston 9-1.

Lane's recollections involved a game with the Yankees. Even before it started, rain delayed the proceedings for 1½ hours. After an inning or so, another downpour forced a 50-minute halt. And around the fourth inning, play was stopped again.

Before the 2-hour 23-minute first-inning delay, the Brewers already had a 4-0 lead, with three of the runs coming on Paul Ratliff's home run, his second hit of the season and first since Opening Day.

Jim Lonborg was the grateful recipient of the Brewer power and even more grateful when Frank Linzy relieved him and slammed the door on the Rangers after they had struck for five runs in the sixth, sixth.

Williams was chagrined but not angered by Chylak's decision to keep the game going. "I was trying to encourage him a bit to call the game but I have to agree with him for starting it again. I've played in a hell of a lot worse than this," he said.

Vida Blue, who had lost but one game while winning 10 around this time a year ago, absorbed his second setback without a victory as the Orioles pounced on him for four runs in five innings.

Paul Blair did the heaviest damage, driving in three runs with a homer and a double.

Bobby Grich, a surprise starter in place of third baseman Brooks Robinson, batted in the other two runs.

"I didn't feel like I was getting tired," Blue said, "but I was losing some of my form, throwing sidearm. I still haven't had as much work as I would have had in spring training."

Mickey Lolich looked like a sure bet to pick up his ninth victory after Detroit gave him four runs in the second inning.

But the Tigers' left-hander, after holding Minnesota hitless for 5 1-3 innings, saw the lead evaporate by the ninth, when he departed for reliever Mickey Stanley's walk and Gates Brown's double two innings later kept the Tigers half a game ahead of Baltimore in the AL East.

Ken McMullen belted a three-run homer, his first of the year, in the fourth inning, then scored the decisive run in the eighth on reliever Phil Hennigan's second wild pitch of the inning, to carry California past Cleveland.

The White Sox' exploding scoreboard had a grand old time celebrating two-run homers by Rick Reichardt and Bill Melton that helped Chicago down the Yanks. Dick Allen also knocked in two runs for the White Sox with a double.

ABA Head To Resign

NEW YORK (AP) — Commissioner Jack Dolph is leaving the American Basketball Association when his contract expires because he says his job will disappear when a merger takes place with the National Basketball Association.

"I believe," Dolph said Friday in a prepared statement announcing his resignation, "that a merger between the two leagues is only a matter of time and Walter Kennedy (NBA commissioner) will be the commissioner of the single expanded league. It, therefore, behooves me to look to my own future and certain opportunities that are available to me at the present time."

Dolph, whose three-year contract ends in October, said he would help the league in its search for a replacement.

Tennis, Anyone?

FOUR KEY POINTS WHICH MAKE A GOOD SERVE

Knee action, shoulder rotation, a fully-bent elbow and a hard, snapping wrist. These are the things good serves are made of. Almost all tennis players can hit a hard serve and most can hit an accurate serve. Few, however, can do both at the same time.

This is usually the direct result of players trying to hit hard by using strictly arm power, which detracts from accuracy.

By getting good thrust from the knees, a full turn of the shoulders and a "hammer-swinging" action from the elbow, all the power of the body is transferred to the wrist and racket head.

With the power source already there, all it takes for accuracy is a good snap of the wrist.

Greenville's American Legion baseball team rolled to a 7-2 victory over North Raleigh Friday night, gaining their second victory in three starts.

The Legionaires were scheduled to play a doubleheader in Hamlet Saturday and will go to Smithfield today for a game there.

A Monday night meeting with Rocky Mount has been postponed.

Stanley Cobb hurled the victory for the locals, scattering eight hits.

Greenville got off a threat in the bottom of the first, but it wasn't until the third that they finally broke the scoring ice. In the first, Cobb had walked and stole second to get into scoring position.

North Raleigh also got its first threat in the first frame. Glenn Harp led and was hit by a pitch, and Mark Dickerson also got a hit. Harp tried for third, but was thrown out. Dickerson also was thrown out trying to go to third when Steve Rackley singled. He gained second on the play but died there.

North Raleigh also threatened in the second. With two away,

Jeff Roy singled and moved around to third on an error, but was then thrown out trying to score on an infield grounder.

In the top of the third, they tried again. Harp walked and stole second, but got no further.

Greenville finally pushed over two runs in the bottom of the third. Jerry Griffin, trying to reach on a bunt, was safe and moved on to second when the ball was thrown away. Duncan Charlton reached on a fielder's choice. An error on Cobb's fielder's choice, scored Griffin, and moved Charlton around to score too.

Greenville added four more in the fifth to put the game on ice. Cobb led off with a walk and Phil Blount also walked. Dale Manning reached on a fielder's choice, Randy McKinney singled to left, scoring both Cobb and Blount, and a single by John Barwick brought in both Manning and McKinney for a 6-0 lead.

North Raleigh, after threatening again in the fourth inning, finally broke the ice in the sixth. Steve Rackley walked and Don Williams got a hit. Doug Jones followed with a single, scoring Rackley with first Raleigh run.

In the seventh, they scored again. Ricky Walker walked and Harp did too. Rackley then followed with a double, scoring Walker to cut the lead to 6-2.

Greenville came up with its final run in the eighth inning. Robbie Cox walked and moved up when Cobb walked. Blount then doubled to right to score Cox with the final tally.

North Raleigh kept the pressure on, threatening again in the eighth and ninth, but to no avail.

The Lions rolled to a 10-4 victory over R. C. Cola in the North State Little League Friday afternoon.

The win boosted the Lion record to 2-3 in the league, while R. C. Cola fell off to a 1-4 mark.

R. C. Cola took a temporary lead, pushing over three runs in the first inning. Doug Selby reached on an infield single and took second on a wild pitch. Ricky Bolonde walked and Jay Wood did too. Stuart Flanagan singled, scoring Selby. A pickoff attempt was then errored, and both Bolonde and Wood scored on the play.

In the second, the Lions came up with three to tie it up. Mike Adams walked and Mike Williams singled. Tommy Carpenter walked, loading the bases. Eric Tomlinson reached on a fielder's choice, scoring Adams. Peter Pace walked to bring in Williams and a single by Ray Kilpatrick brought in Carpenter with the tying run.

R. C. Cola moved back into the lead with a run in the bottom of the third. Doug Selby walked and moved up on Bolonde's single. Both moved on a wild pitch, and Jeff Worthington reached on an error, scoring Selby for a 4-3 lead.

But the Lions took the lead again with three in the top of the fourth. Marty Worthington reached on an error, as did Krage Gardiner. Kilpatrick doubled, scoring Worthington. Frager Sanders reached on an error and that scored both Gardiner and Kilpatrick for a 6-4 lead.

The Lions added four more in the fifth. Worthington walked and so did Gardiner. Kilpatrick reached on a fielder's choice, and Sanders cracked out a grand-slam homer to account for the rest of the scoring.

Sanders and Williams each had two hits for the Lions, while no one had more than one for R. C. Cola.

STEERING COLUMN

By Bill Brodrick

INDIANAPOLIS: Indiana — "On race day the meter clicks 100. The next day it's back to zero again. Tomorrow you forget today. It's an old saying in racing," so says Mark Donohue.

Rubbish!!! Mark Donohue will remember Saturday, May 27, 1972, for the rest of his life. Last Saturday he gained membership into the exclusive club of Indianapolis 500-mile race winners. Nobody, I say nobody, forgets the day he does that.

Millions observed the Indianapolis 500 on television and millions more have read about it. Any reader of these sports pages already knows of the results of that race. And after reading about and seeing all of the "unusual" events that made up this year's race, it's safe to assume that there will be some changes made. Not necessarily at Indianapolis. Things just don't change at Indy. But to the championship Indy-type care series in general.

Durability was the key to Donohue's Indy victory. He cut his horsepower in order to do the same in the upcoming races.

"I chose to run the small turbocharger on my car," said Mark. "It really hurt me when I tried to pass on the straights. The traffic was a problem because we lowered the boost pressure and with the smaller turbocharger we lost 200 hp in the engine. It was my decision to go that way, nobody else's. It was a gamble to sacrifice the horsepower and speed for durability, but it paid off. You've got to finish to win."

A new system utilizing a series of eight yellow lights was used at Indianapolis for the first time to slow the cars down when the yellow caution flag was displayed. There was a great deal of doubt expressed before the race by drivers, mechanics, and anybody else who wanted to get into the act that the new system would work. It did. We're sure to see the system installed elsewhere.

"Before the race I was in favor of a pace car," said Donohue. "But the lights are much better. I take my hat off to whoever came up with this system. The new system is a definite must for the 500-mile races at Pocono (Pa.) and Ontario (Calif.). The race track was cleaned up quicker, the yellow flag was out for a shorter time, and it was just better all the way around."

The start of this year's race was almost a finish at the same time. The green flag was displayed one lap sooner than it was expected by the drivers. In the future, the starting procedure will be a closely adhered to format.

"We were coming out of the number four turn and I notice that guy grab for the green commented Mark. "I started grabbing for a gear and turned the engine over 9500 revolutions to keep in the pack. We had been given the signal that there would be one more lap. Bobby (Unser), Peter (Revson), and I had our hands up in the air to signal the drivers behind us. Suddenly we were racing."

"I'm amazed that they would do such a thing. It could have been a very, very dangerous situation. We're lucky we didn't have a bad, bad accident."

Many people have said that the huge wings on the Indy-type racers will be disallowed in the future because of the high speeds turned by the cars. Now that's questionable.

"It seems to me that this was the safest race we've ever had here," continued Mark. "It shows that the wings make the car very stable. The wings also save the brakes and make stopping easier. There's so much drag that all I had to do was lift from the gas pedal and the car almost stopped itself. I slowed down at the end only to save fuel."

Only seven press members of the Union 76 Racing Panel of Experts forecasted that Donohue would win the Indianapolis 500. He wasn't rated a favorite. But Donohue is a businessman in the business of automobile racing. He doesn't like to see this business go bad. So where does he go from here?

"I would like very much to win at Milwaukee this Sunday," Mark said matter-of-factly. "It's the next race on the schedule. We started work for that one the day after the 500. It's the business we're in."

The meter had already clicked back to zero.

Wildlife Afield: Kitchen Sink Trout

By JIM DEAN

When the first flies began to hatch out of the stream, there couldn't have been more than two hours of daylight left. A. J. Johnson and I sat on a high rock overlooking the stream and watched the trout begin to rise in the pools and riffles below us.

"Let's go catch a fish," said Johnson after we had watched for a few minutes.

We left the rock and went downstream a few hundred yards, then waded across and came back up to the pool we had been watching. There were at least half a dozen trout rising in the pool, and the "hatch" of mayflies and stone flies was well underway, and heavy by Tar Heel standards. By that, I mean we could see dozens of flies on the water and in the air. In other parts of the country, where streams are richer, a heavy hatch is measured not by dozens of insects, but by thousands.

Even so, we expected some good fishing. Both of us tried several of our favorite flies. They were ignored.

"I don't understand it," I said finally. "The flies we are using seem to be about the same size and color as the naturals. I've run into selective trout before, but this is ridiculous." "See if you can catch one of the flies, and maybe we can see what we're doing wrong," suggested A. J.

I put my rod down and began to try to snare one of the lies as it flew past. The most common fly appeared to be a small yellowish mayfly, although there were also some large stoneflies hatching. Finally, I caught several of the mayflies. Our mistake was apparent at once. "Look here," I called to A. J. "These flies look cream or yellow in the air, but they aren't. This one has an olive body and slate gray wings. I'm just guessing, but I'll bet it's one of the blue-winged olives." We began to search through our fly boxes, looking for anything that might approximate the natural mayfly I'd caught. I found only one artificial fly that was even close. It was tied with grizzly hackle and had a pale green body, but it was too large.

I took my nail clippers and snipped off enough hackle to make the fly appear the same size as the naturals, then knotted it on my leader and began to fish again.

This time, the same fish that had ignored seven different flies in a row earlier took the fly on the first float. Soon, I had taken four other trout—three of them fat browns and one a small rainbow. Meanwhile, A. J. was having no luck even though he was fishing over the same fish with different flies.

I offered to let him use my fly, but he wanted to continue trying to find something else the trout would hit. He never did. Without the green body, his flies just didn't match the natural insect, and the trout were having none of them. It was one of those rare times when trout in North Carolina decide to be selective. Most of the time, they eat like swine. They take what they can get when they can get it, and the angler's choice of pattern is not nearly so critical as his technique for fishing it.

As it began to get dark, we went downstream a ways, and began fishing another pool. The same flies were hatching on it. "There are some good native brown trout in this pool, and since you seem to have found the right combination, I want to see you catch one of them," said A. J., declining my invitation to use the fly that was taking fish.

On three straight casts, I took three trout—the largest a handsome 15-inch brown which I decided to keep. By then, it was full dark and we left the stream and went back to the cabin. When I took the trout into the cabin, he was still very much alive. I ran the sink full of water, and put the trout in it where it swam around while we fixed supper.

After supper, I was filled with both steak and remorse. The trout—still swimming in the sink—was just too pretty to keep. I got a bucket and carried him to the creek in front of the cabin and turned him loose.

"I'm glad you did that," said A. J. when I got back. "I know you're crazy about trout fishing, but I'd hate to think I'd catch you fishing in my sink."

Niekro Three-Hits Mets As Braves Win

By KEN RAPPOPORT
Associated Press Sports Writer
Phil Niekro nibbled at corners, doling out a starvation diet at home plate with his knuckleball.

Except for John Milner, the New York Mets went away hungry Friday night. The Atlanta right-hander with the hard-to-hit, off-speed pitch gave up but three hits—all by Milner—as the Braves defeated the Mets 6-1.

"I'm throwing harder than ever this year, but, of course, the knuckleball is working," said Niekro, who has won seven of the nine complete games on the Braves' pitching staff.

After Milner hit one of his fastballs for a home run in the ninth inning, Niekro went back to his Old Reliable. The last two New York batters were unable to hit the thing out of the infield and Niekro had his seventh victory of the year in 11 decisions, the best record on the Braves' wobbly staff.

In the other National League games, the Houston Astros defeated the Montreal Expos 7-1; the Cincinnati Reds turned back the Philadelphia Phillies 6-3 in 17 innings; the Los Angeles Dodgers trimmed the St. Louis Cardinals 8-3, the San Francisco Giants downed the Pittsburgh Pirates 7-4 and the Chicago Cubs beat the San Diego Padres 2-1 in 11 innings.

Bob Watson and Lee May drove in two runs apiece to back Larry Dierker's eight-hit pitching as Houston stopped a six-game losing streak with its victory over Montreal.

Johnny Bench's second home run of the game, a three-run blast in the 17th inning, capped a four-run rally that pulled Cincinnati past Philadelphia.

Singles by winning pitcher Don Gullett, Joe Morgan and Bobby Tolan set the stage for Bench's 12th homer of the year and his sixth in the last four games. The loss went to Wayne Twitchell, who gave up the first two hits of the inning, and was the 16th in the last 17 games for Philadelphia.

Manny Mota, Willie Crawford and Duke Sims each drove in two runs to lead Los Angeles over St. Louis and maintain the Dodgers' lead in the National League West by 1½ games.

Blalock To Play

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — Jane Blalock, leading money winner in the Ladies Professional Golf Association, will be in the field next week when the LPGA tournament begins at Sutton, Mass.

Miss Blalock, 26, suspended for one year by the LPGA executive committee Thursday, won court permission Friday to continue tournament competition while her case against the LPGA is being resolved.

The blue-eyed blonde from Portsmouth, N.H., has countered the suspension by filing a $5 million lawsuit against the LPGA.

In a brief hearing here Friday, U.S. District Court Judge Charles A. Moyer Jr. granted a delay in hearing the case at the request of the district attorney who said he needed more time. He also granted a defense motion to allow Miss Blalock to continue playing.

Miss Blalock posted a $10,000 fine with the court in order to be allowed to play. Her lawyer said the bond was a formality.

Moyer said the next hearing probably will be the week of June 12.

Miss Blalock was suspended for what the LPGA described as "actions inconsistent with the code of ethics of the organization."

Neither she nor her lawyers would comment on the situation surrounding the suspension.

SKATERS TURN PRO
NEW YORK (AP) — Jo Jo Starbuck and Ken Shelley, three time U.S. figure skating pair champions, will make their professional debut in Atlantic City July 21 when Ice Capades begins its national tour. Both are 20 and natives of Downey, Calif.

Tommy John, with late-inning relief help, won his fourth game in seven decisions as the Dodgers kept their lead over Cincinnati and Houston, who are tied for second place. The victory was the Dodgers' sixth in seven games.

Juan Marichal pitched a seven-inning, snapping an eight-game losing streak, to help San Francisco defeat Pittsburgh. The Giants' right-hander, who had not won since opening day, April 15, picked up his second victory of the year. Dave Kingman, Bobby Bonds and Ed Goodson made things easy for the right-hander with home runs.

Jose Cardenal scored the winning run from second in the 10th inning when catcher Bob Barton dropped an outfield throw, giving Chicago a tight triumph over San Diego.

Record Number Sign Up For Newport Race

By JACK WOLISTON
NEW YORK (UPI) — From the ditty bag:

—A record number of 181 yachts have signed up for the 28th biennial sailing race from Newport, R.I., to Bermuda which gets under way June 16. Previous record for starters was 167 in 1966. Of the 181 yachts entered this year, 56 have signified their intention to compete in the trans-Atlantic race which follows the Bermuda event. That's a record number, too, topping the 42 boats that competed in the sail from Bermuda to Denmark in 1966. This year the trans-Atlantic affair will terminate in Spain.

—Adm. Elmo R. Zumwalt Jr., Chief of Naval Operations, has announced construction of a sailing center which will contain a two-story building with docks and an anchorage basin on the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md. Among other things, it will be used for meetings of various sailing organizations, including collegiate groups and regatta committees. It will also provide facilities for the Academy's program of varsity and intramural sport sailing. The center will be named in memory of the late Capt. Robert Crown, U.S. Naval Reserve, of Chicago.

—The Nebraska Game and Parks Commission reports that the state has averaged about six boating fatalities a year since boating records were started in 1960. From that date through 1971, 71 deaths and 95 injuries occurred in the 216 boating accidents reported to the commission. At the same time, boat registrations in the state have doubled since 1960 when there were 14,000 licensed craft.

—One of the greatest misconceptions about fiberglass hulls is that owners never need worry about barnacles or algae growths. Not true. Like wood and steel hulls, fiberglass bottoms need antifouling paint. Valspar Corp., a manufacturer of marine finishes, reports that barnacles can cause pits up to one-eighth inch deep in a fiberglass surface, which weakens the hull, increases fuel consumption because of increased drag or hull friction, and eventually requires a costly refinishing job to restore the original surface.

—Marina facilities are hard to come by these days. George Rounds of the National Association of Engine and Boat Manufacturers told a recent meeting of recreational officials: "While the number of people going into boating has increased 25.4 per cent over the past decade and the number of boats is up 25.1 per cent, marina facilities in which to accommodate these boats have increased only 14.5 per cent. In actual number of slips that represents one-eighth of the number of new boats on the water."

—A new company—Eight Shares Corp.—has been formed in New York to sell sailing yachts to groups of eight owners each. The idea is that each owner will have the use of the yacht for three or four weeks of the year, and for about eight weeks it will be rented out on charter to reduce the overhead cost. The yacht can be based in Long Island Sound, the Bahamas or in the Mediterranean, depending on where the members of each participating group of eight shareholders want to spend their vacations under sail.

Refuges Launch No-Litter Drive

NEW HOLLAND, N. C. — In recent years nationwide attention has been focused on environmental pollution. Particularly the problem of littering public lands. These are lands intended to enhance the enjoyment of all persons. Mattamuskeet and Swanquarter National Wildlife Refuges, as public land, are not immune to this onslaught of public abuse.

Increase pressures for outdoor recreation have significantly increased in recent years resulting in additional demands on both public and private lands. With the spring fishing season at hand and the advent of warm weather, thousands of persons are seeking various forms of outdoor activity. With many of these people come their litter. Much of it in the form of beer cans, lunch bags, styrofoam containers, soda bottles, etc. will remain to clutter up and mar the beauty of our natural environment.

Mattamuskeet and Swanquarter National Wildlife Refuges, in the face of this dilemma, have provided litter barrels and posted areas bringing the problem to the attention of the visiting public. To date, these measures have not been entirely successful. These litter barrels are for visitors to Mattamuskeet and Swanquarter National Wildlife Refuges such as fishermen and boaters and not for bulk household rubbish.

In light of the problem, a concentrated effort to curb this illicit abuse is being undertaken. Both State and Federal laws prohibit the littering of public lands. These laws form the authority for this action. Appropriate action will be taken in the event of an apprehension.

Not only is this form of environmental pollution unsightly, it creates a health hazard for those very people who are seeking a rewarding, enjoyable outdoor experience.

The problem of littering is one which should be of concern to all of us. Help us maintain your area in a beautiful, natural, and uncluttered condition and increase the enjoyment for all.

Industrial Training Programs, A Pitt Tech Specialty

Text and Photos by Blanche Hardee

"Pitt Technical Institute is a people-oriented institution and our major responsibility is to serve the individual," explains PTI President William E. Fulford Jr.

In accomplishing the objectives established at PTI, Fulford further stated, "Our major emphasis is on developing skills within the individual who is seeking work in industry."

"We, as an institution of learning, are owned by the people and are dedicated to rendering service to these people," Fulford noted.

In Pitt County, as new industries come in and established industries expand or need to upgrade training for their employees, Pitt Technical Institute is ready to help.

Joe Downing, Occupational Extension Director at PTI, maintains a close liaison with all industries in the area and provides the leadership and expertise in working with those industries desiring training programs.

"Flexibility is the key to our successful efforts in industry training programs," Downing said. "We never know exactly what type of specialty training an industry might desire, but if it can be done, we provide it."

Downing added, "If we have to go outside our area to find competent instructors for a specific training program, we do that too."

Much of the occupational extension program at PTI is geared to the needs and interests of local industries. "If a new training program is needed, it is added to our total program," Downing emphasized.

During the last two years, over 800 employees in Pitt County received more than 200,000 hours of training in new jobs (production types) through PTI.

A large part of the training was in-plant, on-the-job training. In addition to this, industry employees take a number of courses in vocational and technical subjects for personal enjoyment at night on the PTI campus.

Programs vary considerably, from training in the use of simple machines to specialty training with delicate and complex machinery to personal development training programs.

"Recently, our biggest demand for training has been in the areas that the state and federal governments have raised or established standard," Downing explained.

Downing feels occupational safety has been the major area of training needed by local industries.

More than 600 hours of training have been conducted during the last six months with more than 370 employees participating.

Major direct training areas provided by Pitt Tech for local industries include production and assembling for new employees, supervisory development for supervisory level personnel, fire brigade, first aid and occupational safety.

"Some industries encourage their employees to take certain technical or vocational courses on the PTI campus in addition to the employee's in-plant training," Downing said. "These courses broaden their skills and knowledge in certain areas, thereby improving the employee's position relative to promotion and pay."

Industry training at PTI also includes public and private businesses, organizations, and city and country government.

PIN DRAFTER MACHINE... Operating the Pin Drafter Machine is Fieldcrest Mills employee Jimmy Brewer. Instruction and training in the use of this machine is one of several in-plant, training on-the-job programs, sponsored by PTI.

FIRST OPERATION... Training in the first operation of the cordless electric shoeshine kit manufactured by Empire Brush Company was provided by Pitt Technical Institute. Judy McKeel is seen assembling the motor assembly to the motor mount in the power unit of the shoeshine kit.

PTI TRAINS PERSONNEL... When the Burroughs-Wellcome plant came to Greenville, PTI assisted in training personnel to use the tablet filling machine shown above. Operating the machine are Verna Hardy, checker operator, and James Spruill, packaging line operator.

The Low-Key Type—That's Sinatra, Jr.

FRANK SINATRA, JR. looks and sounds a bit like his famous father, but unlike his dad he is low key. "I just try to fit into society the best I can", he says (UPI Telephoto)

By RENA PEDERSON
DALLAS (UPI)—"I'm just an itinerant singer," said Frank Sinatra Jr.

The skinny young man with the padded-shoulders suit seemed just as blue as his songs—sad, sort of. "I'm not," he said. "I'm just down to earth. I simply do the best I can. I have never been a person to build empires."

He looks and sounds a bit like his famous father, but unlike his Dad he is low key rather than otherwise. Not, for instance, the "Rat Pack" type.

"I just try to fit into society unobtrusively, be smooth. I don't want to hurt anybody, or be hurt."

Now that Frank Sr., is retired, Frank Jr., is beginning to come into his own, although he has yet to sell a gold album among the three he has recorded.

"I guess financially my career is slowly but surely making headway. If I had it on a graph, you could tell, I'm coming up," he said.

At 28, he has been singing professionally for 10 years, since he dropped out as a music major at the University of Southern California. He travels 40-odd weeks out of the year and has played "in every state in America and in Canada and 34 other countries."

Combination of Talent
He plays the piano and writes songs and does many of his own arrangements for an accompanying eight-man band.

Appearing at the Loser's Club, a popular nightclub in Dallas, he took a clever approach in presenting the Sinatra music most closely associated with his father by singing a medley which included "In The Wee Small Hours of the Evening."

In the contemporary vein he sails smoothly into "Does Anybody Know What Time It Is?" and "Everybody's Talking."

With short sideburns and a wide-lapel suit, he looks like a ghost from the '40s, waving the microphone and snapping his fingers. How does he compare with the original? It's hard to say, because he has much of his father's voice and charm, but something else, an honest appeal that's all his own, an unSinatra like modesty.

"I'm not a superstar. I'm a band singer. I started in one night stands at nightclubs and honkey-tonks all over Texas," he said.

"I love band singing. Films and TV are great but there is nothing like a room full of people congregated to relax, relieve their tensions, listen to entertainment. And I like to entertain them."

While he doesn't necessarily cash in on his old man's style, he doesn't hide it either. He explains his old style hair-do, saying, "I'm a square. I've always looked this way." And he said he wouldn't ever change his name and start out unknown, alone, in some place like Tulsa, Okla. "Even Shakespeare said 'What's in a name?'" he said, kidding.

Maintains Privacy
Sinatra is close to his mother, Nancy, and sisters, Nancy and Christina, although he very rarely sees them. He doesn't encourage talk about his private life or the famous kidnaping incident in 1962 when he was abducted. ("I don't think about it any more.")

He calls himself a "very private person," but said he would like to get married soon. "I'm almost 30," he said, "I ought to be married."

But that's hard to do when you travel most of the time. It will wait, Frank Jr. said. Right now the things that are valuable to him are his health and the opportunity to work.

"My job helps me to develop myself, to stabilize my environment, to make my own decisions. No one can ask for more than that," he said.

Raymond Burr's Biggest Enemy Is The Calendar

By VERNON SCOTT
UPI Hollywood Correspondent
HOLLYWOOD (UPI)—Raymond Burr lives a life unlike any star in television, a nomadic existence around the United States and in various parts of the world when his "Ironside" series is on hiatus.
Burr has two homes. One is in Hollywood, the other on Naitauba, a 5,000-acre island in the Fijis. His spiritual home is the latter.
In Hollywood, Burr purchased a huge old house and added third story to it which has become his bedroom. It also doubles as an office.
The rest of the household consists of eight natives of Fiji, mostly youngsters whom Burr is having educated and trained for jobs back on Naitauba (population 173).
Owens Whole Island
Burr bought the island six years ago. It produces cattle, copra and pork in addition to raising produce and fruit for the inhabitants. All those on the island work for Burr.
The actor spent nine years as "Perry Mason" and currently is working on his sixth year in "Ironside." Thereafter he plans to go into motion picture production.
"We have two more years to go with 'Ironside,'" he says. "Then I plan to do a movie on Henry the Navigator and Pope John XXIII."
Meanwhile Burr drives to work at dawn to Universal Studios, a 15-minute trip from his house. Because he is in almost every scene he rarely leaves the studio before 7:30 or 8 p.m.
Weight has always been a problem for Burr. He is heavier than usual now because as Robert Ironside, San Francisco Police Chief, he is confined to a wheelchair. He gets little exercise and is a gourmet cook who enjoys fine wines. Both tend to add bulk to the actor.
He travels extensively in Europe and the South Pacific. His home reflects his many ports of call. There are pieces of furniture, oddments and decorations from Portugal, Italy, and various parts of America.
Special Kitchen
The kitchen of his Hollywood house has been remodeled to resemble that of a moderate sized restaurant.
Burr and his Fijian companions share the cooking duties.
Twice widowed and once divorced, Burr seldom has time for dates or social events.
Many of his days are taken up with the law school at the University of Pacific. He is on the board of trustees and involved with the scholarship fund. His interest in the school began during his "Perry Mason" days.
Burr's interests are varied. In addition to acting he is one of television's busiest businessmen. He is organizing a cattle business and orchid cultivation in Fiji and the Azores.
Moreover, his love of food and wine has led him to make plans for a chain of restaurants in various parts of the world, along with resort hotels.
"My biggest enemy is time," he says. "There just doesn't seem to be enough of it to accomplish all I would like."
More than anything else Burr longs to spend more time in the Fijis. "Someday, and not too far from now, I'll be spending six months a year in the Fijis. I couldn't ask for more."

EXISTENTIAL ERRANDS, by Norman Mailer. Boston: Little, Brown, & Co., 1972. 362 pp. $7.95.

Norman Mailer is the most imposing figure in American letters today. He is the marvelous boy who burst upon the world with THE NAKED AND THE DEAD in 1948. He is the self-pitying, self-effacing dolt who published DEATHS FOR THE LADIES with a straight face in 1962. He is the editorial journalist who deserved and won both the National Book Award and the Pulitzer Prize for THE ARMIES OF THE NIGHT in 1969. As is evidenced by EXISTENTIAL ERRANDS, his ability to create with words is great; his vision is keen. He will one day be awarded the Nobel Prize.

EXISTENTIAL ERRANDS is a collection of essays, interviews, prefaces, letters, and miscellaneous non-fiction writings which have appeared over the last nine years in periodicals ranging from THE POETRY BAG to SATURDAY REVIEW to LIFE to NEWSWEEK now gathered into a single volume and supplied with an implied thesis: Norman Mailer is an existentialist. The thesis of course is faulty as well as unnecessary. It exists only because Mailer felt he had to unify his anthology thematically. He need not have made the attempt.

The several straightforward essays are easily the most notable inclusions in this collection. They range in subject from the already classic "King of the Hill" article on the Ali-Frazier fight done for LIFE magazine to a superbly wrought critical-philosophical discussion of contemporary theater and another of film theory. Mailer's prose style is powerful, his reasoning logical, his position always well defended; more important: what he has to say is inherently significant whether he is speaking of what he terms the New York Literary Establishment or Richard Nixon.

Unfortunately there lies an appalling amount of dead weight between the covers of EXISTENTIAL ERRANDS. One has to wonder why a writer of such and I do not hesitate to use the word genius as Norman Mailer — and that genius is apparent here: the "Homage to El Loco" essay, for example, captures substantially more of the reality, more of the vulgarity, more of the emotion, and as much even of the classicism around and inside the bull ring as does the series of articles Ernest Hemingway wrote for SPORTS ILLUSTRATED on the same subject. Mailer, of course, knows it: in sheer literary power the man is without peer among his contemporaries — feels it necessary to pad his work. There is a certainly dated and naively extolling review of Mark Lane's (remember him, trivia fans?) RUSH TO JUDGEMENT included here, and a sophomoric translation of a long Lorca elegy, and an innocuous attack on TIME magazine (which publication had had the audacity to review in parody Mailer's one abortive foray into the realm of Gentle Poesy) that is an enigma to this reviewer. TIME is after all the magazine probably most vulnerable, most susceptible to literary attack in this country. Norman Mailer is the hero most capable of mounting such an offensive. What is the result of their crossing, an epic battle of titans? a scholarly debate of Sherman-Mencken proportions? No: a single poorly contrived defensive shot followed by an undignified retreat.

But my criticism is quantitative, not qualitative. The author of EXISTENTIAL ERRANDS has included much second rate material to companion much more that is undoubtedly worthy of him. One of the less cheery facts of life is that writers do this. No doubt it has something to do with the economic law which stipulates that a man, even a famous one, who intends to charge the public X number of dollars retail for his book has to come up with Y number of pages of copy to justify that price.

Spirited Artist-Teacher Heads Rose High's Vital Art Program

Now putting down roots in Greenville, Mrs. Audrey Kathleen (Kay) Middleton Whitehurst has roamed far and wide before homesteading here. Earliest childhood memories are of living on a houseboat plying up and down the Mississippi, much like a little girl version of Huckleberry Finn, with home being docking points in Arkansas and later in delta Louisiana.

The vivacious mother of four boys agreed hers has been an exciting life and continues to be in her role of head of the art program at Rose High School.

Following the Mississippi stage of childhood, Mrs. Whitehurst attended a high school in Monroe, Louisiana, then headed west to the Long Beach, California, Polytechnic High School and Long Beach City College.

The adventurous spirit that marks Mrs. Whitehurst's approach to the expanding art program at Rose was clearly manifest when she was a young girl. "I joined the very first company of women to enlist in the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps." With a smile she revealed she achieved the rank of sergeant before the authorities discovered she had enlisted under-age, which resulted in her being discharged.

Her next big adventure was one still going strong — switching to the Navy viewpoint by marrying William Whitehurst, a Bethel native and career Navy man, now retired and working at East Carolina University.

Service years for the Whitehurst family meant stimulating change of scenery — Charleston, Newport, R.I., points along the West Coast, and "some wonderful years in Japan."

"My husband says it's obvious whose influence is strongest in the family," she observed after saying that three of their four sons had served in the Army, with none joining the Navy. The sons are Robert, Frederick, and twins Mike and Mack. "But," she added, "our sons are at heart all sailors. Mack has just returned from a sailboat trip in the Leeward Islands. He's the only son we have who has not yet served a tour in the military."

Just a few months ago Robert married a tiny, doll-like girl from South Vietnam in a quiet church ceremony in Greenville. "He will complete his service soon and will be returning to his art studies at the Rhode Island School of Design."

"It has been a very exciting year," she said, putting aside a stack of essays she has been grading. "This is the first year I've been in charge of the program." She praised the work of Robert Karl, the young teacher who with Mrs. Whitehurst constitute the art faculty at Rose.

Outlining the programs that have been in effect during the school year, Mrs. Whitehurst said, "We had 120 students in Art I, and 60 in Art II. Art I is basically an introduction to the fine arts and crafts, with a program based on a broad spectrum. At this level students who are capable of working best with their hands go into the crafts program."

Others, she explained "concentrate on fundamentals of sculpture, painting and print-making. These students usually go into Art II. In any event, each youngster gets two years in art if he wants it."

In Art II, the school year is divided into two phases. "The first half of the year is guided instruction," Mrs. Whitehurst remarked, "During the second half the student is permitted to explore into a field of his choice. Once he chooses a field, for example, ceramics, then he's obligated to work in that for a six weeks period."

Mrs. Whitehurst noted the first two years in the art program were ones in which students receive a basic understanding of art and exploration into techniques of various media.

"The classes for Art III and IV are much smaller," she said. "This year we had 11 students in the two classes combined. But interest in more advanced areas is growing. Next year we have 28 who will be in advanced art programs."

Mrs. Whitehurst said at this level "students work primarily in one media. Some will concentrate on pottery, others on sculpture or painting."

One circumstance she said made such a difference is the new art building. Now two years old, the building was the first of four separate buildings constructed behind the main plant at Rose.

"We have three potters wheels now," the art teacher pointed out, "and tools for woodwork. We're adding a new program next year, weaving and macrame. The youngsters have expressed keen interest in this."

Mrs. Whitehurst, herself a painter, is handy with saw and hammer. "I'm making a weaving frame during the summer for the students to use." She said that Robert Allgood, principal at Rose and the school administration in general have been "most understanding and seem pleased with the results of the art program at Rose."

"Of course just now our big concern is a third teacher. We have students signed up for 15 classes next year, with two teaching positions firm. We're hoping we can get the third teacher. This depends on action taken on the budget."

As the art program at Rose expands, so does the scope of related activities planned for the future. "We're interested in forming a Student Art Club, one that will focus on artistic growth and service."

Other plans mentioned by Mrs. Whitehurst include trips to museums, galleries, service projects connected with other schools and other fields of study at Rose, and closer ties with the Art School at East Carolina University.

Mrs. Whitehurst is in the fortunate position of being able to teach art and still teach another subject she says "is a joy to teach," Asian history.

A glance at the long list of awards students at Rose High amassed in art for this school year is probably the best proof that at Rose, student interest in art is very much alive with an even brighter future ahead.

A rambling old mansion on the rock-bound coast of Maine is the setting of FREER'S COVE by Ethel Gordon. Here the vulnerable young Daisy Holland seeks to escape the wreckage of her crumbling marriage by becoming a companion to Amos Free's pregnant wife. Instead of the sanctuary she expected it to be, Free's Cove becomes a perilous trap for Daisy. This house on the cliff and its three would-be heirs have seen more than their share of tragedy and death. Life at Free's Cove turns to nightmare for Daisy when she finds herself entangled with the passions and sinister secrets of the Freers and the dark destiny that haunts them.

Norah Lofts — known primarily for her biographical novels about great women in history — enters the field of suspense a second time with her latest novel, OUT OF THE DARK. This story, based partly on an actual and unresolved murder, focuses on a young Englishwoman named Charlotte Cornwall, her family, the unresolved murder that changed their lives, and Charlotte's attempt to escape the awful events of her past. Though she moves away and, under a new name, becomes a teacher, she finds it impossible to escape the suspicions that surround her. Gradually these suspicions destroy her confidence, involve her in a strange disappearance and another death, and make her doubt her friends as well as herself. This novel of romance and mystery is filled with engrossing twists and stunning surprises.

McBEE'S STATION, referred to as an incisive portrait of the South today, is the work of Elise Sanguinetti, a new and significant voice in Southern fiction. The central figure in this novel is Letitia Graham McBee, a proud, aristocratic descendant of a once — wealthy Southern family, who is now reduced to selling flowers to support herself. The dynamic ambition of her neighbors poses a threat when among other things they build a modern greenhouse. Letitia's one hope at maintaining family continuity is her only son, John. Unsuccessful as a publisher and writer, he delivers the final blow when he brings home a black girl friend instead of the daughter of the "prominent" Ashton family expected by Mrs. McBee.

For Helen Van Slyke, THE RICH AND THE RIGHTEOUS is a first novel. Being herself a part of big business, she has written a bold and powerful novel about "big business." Her story is an honest, painful analysis of one man's life, the empire he built, the family he loves, the people he trusts and the religion he turns to when he needs it most. His last year in power is a year of discovery for the dynamic Joseph Haylow. He discovered that he was mortal and fallible, and that some of the people closest to him were ruthless and weak. THE RICH AND THE RIGHTEOUS reveals a frightening picture of high-level corporate politics.

NCSA Summer Special

WINSTON-SALEM, — A special summer program of individual instruction in instrumental music was announced today by Robert Hyatt, Director of Summer Sessions of the North Carolina School of the Arts. The program will also include chamber music and ensemble work.

Hyatt said that interested students will be asked to audition or to submit a tape, but that evidence of promise is more important than technical competence.

The faculty for the program are all drawn from the regular winter faculty of the School of Music and include Clifton Matthews and William Zimmerman, piano; Frederick Bergstone, French horn; Marion Davies, cello; Philip Dunigan, flute; Robert Listokin, clarinet; and Mark Popkin, bassoon. Bruce Moss, a former Arts School student now studying at Juilliard, will serve as accompanist for the program.

The six week session, which opens June 18, will make use of the full recreational and enrichment program of the regular summer session on the Arts School campus. In addition to weekly private lessons, master classes and ensemble work, student performances will be scheduled as an outgrowth of the program.

Applications for both boarding and day students may be obtained by writing to Director of Summer Sessions, North Carolina School of the Arts, Box 4657, Winston-Salem, North Carolina 27107.

Eugene Isabelle, oboist and faculty member in the School of Music, East Carolina University, has received a full year scholarship grant to pursue graduate work at Yale University's School of Music.

Isabelle, who headed the Children's Music Program at Sheppard Memorial Library for the past couple of years, will be studying with Robert Bloom, oboist with the famed Bach Aria Group and a member of the Yale School of Music faculty.

The ECU faculty oboist has completed five years at East Carolina University, having come here from a teaching position with the Louisville, Kentucky public schools. In Louisville Isabelle was also a member of the Louisville Symphony Orchestra.

Egyptian Reliefs Gift to NCMA

A NEW LIGHT IN RALEIGH These two Egyptian limestone bas-reliefs, in the North Carolina Museum

A new light from ancient Egypt is shining in the North Carolina Museum of Art in the form of two white limestone reliefs.

The reliefs, a gift from the James G. Hanes Memorial Fund of Winston-Salem, are more than 4,200 years old.

Charles W. Stanford, director of the museum, said the works are of "extremely high quality and show the clarity and very fine workmanship typical of Egyptian relief sculpture of the Old Kingdom."

The sculptor apparently started to copy the finished relief in reverse, with the figures facing in the opposite direction, but then stopped.

Scholars are concerned with the insight which the unfinished work provides on the carving techniques of the period.

The reliefs come from Saqarah near Giza, site of the great pyramids of ancient Egypt.

The reliefs date from the time of the Old Kingdom, about 2420-2250 B.C. The period is roughly 1000 years before the time of King Tutankhamen.

The State Art Museum reliefs are said to have been carved on the door posts of a mastaba believed to be the tomb of Khnoumti, a chief priest.

Mountaineer Playhouse In Boone Staging Five Summer Productions

BOONE—Appalachian's Mountaineer Playhouse will stage five productions here this summer as part of its second season.

According to Charles Martin of the ASU speech department, the Playhouse season will emphasize children's and family entertainment.

Martin replaces Ed Pilkington who served as the theater's managing director during its first season. Pilkington will work with the outdoor drama Horn In The West this summer.

The Mountaineer Playhouse's 1972 season opens with the July 5-8 production of Blithe Spirit. Noel Coward's 1940 comedy about ghosts.

the Priest-Chief Reader; the Elated One Next to the Great God." The inscription also lists gifts as bread, beer, meat, poultry, alabaster vases and woven cloth intended to accompany the deceased into the spirit world.

In an upper corner priests are shown performing funeral rites. One is kneeling, consecrating the altar. Two stand reciting prayers. Another performs a rite called "Int-rd," which consisted of backing out of a chapel, pulling some linen behind to efface all human traces in the chapel.

Show number two is the musical based on the "Peanuts" comic strip characters. You're a Good Man, Charlie Brown, which will run July 12-15.

Barefoot In The Park, Neil Simon's popular comedy that enjoyed a long run on Broadway, follows July 19-22.

A version of Cinderella, where the good fairy needs help from the audience for her powers to work, will be the July 26-29 children's production.

The Playhouse season ends August 2-5 with an old-fashioned version of Dracula, in which the audience will be encouraged to boo the villain and cheer for the heroes.

This year's Playhouse company will total 14 actors and actresses, seven paid professionals and seven local apprentices, Martin said.

Rehearsals begin June 19, with productions again planned for Chapel Wilson Auditorium on the Appalachian main campus.

The theater is to move in to the new barn theater on university property at a later date, Martin said.

Autographing State Calendar A Bill Is Illegal Was 'Different'

WASHINGTON (AP)—A $10 bill autographed by President Nixon recently was stolen from the Cheverly, Md., residence of U.S. Rep. Manuel Lujan Jr., R-N.M.

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP)—The New Mexico Department of Development was in a daze over its days on the 1972 calendar. The department's official state calendar had 31 days in April. The same calendar showed Mother's Day to be on Saturday, May 13, instead of its usual Sunday place—May 14. And, the calendar said the Santa Fe Downs horse racing season would open May 13. The track said it would open May 19.

Nixon insisted on paying for the ticket. He borrowed $10 from an aide, John Nidecker.

Lujan asked him to autograph the bill and the president did with a comment, "This is illegal, you know."

Jail Stay Is Educational

SHELTON, Wash. (AP) — "Your thoughts become limited and your sense of values change radically when those iron gates clang shut. You begin to live from meal to meal—hour to hour."

Joe Rinaldi, showing after spending time behind bars, reflected on his taste of prison life at the Washington Correction Center.

He was different from the average inmate—his stay ended after a three-day experiment.

Rinaldi, who is with the state's Division of Probation and Parole office in Seattle, was among 17 state employees who were imprisoned voluntarily recently and treated like all other inmates.

"I found it's hard to live here and maintain your values," he said while being processed to leave. "I think the most important thing I've learned is that basic feeling, the human experience all inmates feel—the urge for survival. You become keenly aware of it and begin living it."

Rinaldi said he was apprehensive when he first came to the small timber-oriented community to participate in the short-term imprisonment. That soon changed to fear and his thinking became "limited and channeled," he said.

"I've got a feeling now about what these inmates experience," he said. "This is an unprincipled nowhere land. As a probation officer I'll think twice about whether to recommend that a man be sent back here."

Center Supt. Robert Raines said the 17 "inmates" were given no special treatment.

The men were not given work assignments; instead they spent their days and evenings "rapping" with inmates and participating in seminars on parole officer-resident training along with men from the Resident Government Council.

Later the inmates and their short-term guests exchanged views on the visit, and news-men were invited to observe.

"I got a lot better understanding of you cats now," one inmate told the visiting counselors and prison staffers. "Now I won't feel when I get out of here that I've got a cage coming down around my head."

"There has been some real enlightenment on both sides," said another inmates. "I see now there are some cool people on both sides of the fence."

Ask Them Yourself

Want to ask a famous person a question? Send the question on a postcard to "Ask," Family Weekly, 641 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022. We'll pay $5 for published questions. Sorry, we can't answer others.

FOR GOV. RONALD REAGAN of California

I was shocked recently to read a piece quoting you as saying we should not forget the Chappaquiddick incident involving Sen. Edward Kennedy. Was this a misquote, or are you saying we should judge our public figures by the tragedies that happen in their lives?—C. Braun, Stockton, Calif.

● I have never mentioned the unfortunate incident at Chappaquiddick. I have, however, had a few comments to make about the Democratic hopefuls and their California campaigning. Here is my entire remark: "Senator McGovern has been out here recently testing the political water to see if it's all right for Teddy Kennedy to walk on." Senator Kennedy has displayed a somewhat less gentle approach in remarks he has made about me. And I think my remark hardly ranks with Senator Kennedy's charge that President Nixon deliberately sent young Americans to their deaths in order to further his own political career.

FOR ERIC SEVAREID

I notice that you make references that show your familiarity with Old Testament Biblical history. Where did you acquire this learning?—Mrs. Harry Price, Fort Myers, Fla.

● If you were a small boy raised in a Norwegian Lutheran Church family in a small North Dakota town long ago, you learned your Bible—or else.

FOR PETER USTINOV, actor, writer, director

You know both Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton. Is it true they're constantly fighting with one another?—K. T., Bakersfield, Calif.

● I've just finished directing them in a new movie, "Hammersmith Is Out." In the course of the day, they bicker, they quarrel, they strike attitudes and pretend they're about to strike one another. But I've come to the conclusion this is merely a part of a recurring courtship. And rare it is to hear the language of courtship so long after marriage!

FOR MRS. BOB CUMMINGS

I understand you were an ardent movie fan of your husband before you met him. True?—F. G., San Luis Obispo, Calif.

● Yes indeed. I grew up in Macao, but I had seen every one of his movies before we met. That happened when Bob was in Hong Kong making a movie. I was hired as a script supervisor because I speak six languages, including Mandarin and Cantonese. We fell in love and were married 2½ years later, after Bob consulted three astrologers about whether and when we should be married.

FOR CHER

How do you keep your long hair so nice?—Mrs. R. G., Patterson, N.Y.

● My hair is shampooed every day. It gives it a nice shine and good body. I also use an organic creme rinse and make sure that the ends of my hair are constantly shaped and trimmed to prevent splitting.

FOR JACK WEBB, producer of the TV series "Emergency"

Do you use Los Angeles Fire Department equipment in your program?—William B. Strickland, Eureka, Calif.

● Yes, on occasion we are able to use LAFD equipment. Our Rescue 8 unit is our own property—but it is equipped exactly like the county's unit.

FOR JOHN WAYNE

You made movies back in the so-called "Golden Era," and you're still making movies today. Help settle the argument: Which is better—the old Hollywood or the new?—J. Ross, Akron, Ohio

● I think the old days of the responsible moviemakers were generally better. A lot of producers today don't care whether a script is good or bad, as long as it's pornographic and it sells tickets. But I don't think the trend is going to last. I sure hope it isn't.

FOR SAM LEVENSON, comedian-author

I always appreciated your stories with a moral—I believe you call them essential stories—as much as your jokes. What is your favorite?—L. Smith, Chicago, Ill.

● My favorite essential story goes like this: To solve all family problems, as soon as a child is born, he should be exchanged for another child born to another mother. You see, everybody knows what's wrong with the way those other people are raising their children. Now, if we could raise their children and they could raise our children, we could all have wonderful children!

FOR BARBARA EDEN, actress

We were fans of "I Dream of Jeannie" and were disappointed that it was canceled. Will you be back on TV soon?—L. Smith, Salem, Ore.

● Two new formats are now being completed and hopefully they will be on the air during the 1973-74 season.

FOR WALTER CRONKITE

Does today's news—with all its violence, war and the like—tend to upset you personally? Or are you able to "leave it at the office"?—Gloria Blethrow, Torrance, Calif.

● I don't believe any newsman, or for that matter any other concerned citizen, is able to leave the deep concern we all feel about war and violence and man's inhumanity to man "at the office." However, newsmen are like human beings everywhere in that they have an amazing resiliency that God saw fit to build into them. It is that, I suppose, which permits most of us to lead normal, happy lives despite the tragedy we must deal with daily.

QUIZ/By John E. Gibson

That Eerie Process Called ESP:

How Much Do You Really Know About It?

True or False: Some people are so good at sending and receiving messages by ESP that they can almost dispense with the telephone. (See number 5.)

Most of us have had experiences that might be attributed to ESP — such as trying to phone a friend who is trying to call us at the same moment, etc. Sometimes these are pure coincidence, and sometimes they are ESP. Man may not have wings, but his thoughts do—and it's exciting to think of people's thoughts flying through the air with the greatest of ease. And while science doesn't know exactly what makes mental telepathy work, it knows that it does work when conditions are right. In this quiz, we take a look at some of the findings of the experts.

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. People who are nervous and high-strung have the edge over the rest of us when it comes to ESP ability.
2. ESP works best with people who are congenial with each other.
3. How well you do at ESP depends on your state of mind.
4. You can receive telepathic messages from another person without realizing it.
5. Some people are so good at sending and receiving messages by ESP that they can almost dispense with the telephone.

ANSWERS

1. False. Consensus of studies shows that people who have well-balanced personalities, who are calm and easy-going, make far better showings on ESP tests than persons of nervous or anxious temperaments.
2. True. Studies have shown that people who are close friends, who have an emotional tie with each other, tend to make the highest scores on tests of ESP sending and receiving ability. In other words, the more compatible you are with someone, the more receptive you are to his thoughts — whether they're expressed orally or go winging through the air in silence.

3. True. In studies at the University of California, best results for transmitting ESP messages to another person were obtained when the sender was keyed up and emotionally excited. Not so for receiving messages, however. Best results in this department were obtained when subjects were as calm and relaxed as possible. It would appear that mental-telepathic reception involves a somewhat different process than sending does.

4. True. You may experience it only as a sudden and unaccountable change of mood. ("It's the funniest thing! Only a few minutes ago I was feeling down in the dumps, but now I feel just fine. I can't figure it out.") Could be that a friend was sending you a think-o-gram full of good thoughts. And researchers at Maimonides Medical Center, New York, have shown that ESP messages received while we're asleep influence our dreams. So next time you have one of those weird dreams that make you wonder how on earth you could be capable of dreaming anything like that—relax, it could be you were just receiving thought waves from that fellow who lives down the block.

5. False. Studies show that ESP is dependent on the temperament and mood of both the sender and the receiver. ESP ability is sometimes present, sometimes absent. In laboratory tests of telepathic ability, a subject may make astonishingly high scores for a given period, then suddenly lose his capacity completely. People who think ESP will supplant the telephone are kidding themselves (and that's a case of extrasensory deception!)

The Race for First Lady

By Vera Glaser

Meet the Six Leading

ELEANOR McGOVERN — quiet, spunky and brainy, totes protein bars for quick energy on the campaign trail. Her tiny build (5 feet, 94 pounds, size 4) can be a problem, making it almost impossible to spot her in a crowd. She takes it good-naturedly when TV cameramen, focusing on six-foot Sen. George McGovern, hit her with their equipment.

But politically, the candidate's wife stands tall. She managed her husband's winning House race in 1956, helped him capture two Senate terms, and has campaigned at his side for the nation's highest office for a long, grueling year. She is regarded as one of the best platform speakers of the potential First Ladies.

Eleanor McGovern: day care would be one of her things.

"The high point of my life," Mrs. McGovern recalls, "was winning a high school debate against George." Now five outspoken young McGovern's have joined the verbal free-for-alls. "We have all ranges of political and religious views," their mother says. "Our 16-year-old has decided to become a Catholic. The rest of us are Methodists. They are all independent spirits, and I'm glad."

The White House? "I can't imagine," says this pretty onetime farm girl, "being satisfied with cutting ribbons or giving tea parties. Day care would be one of my things. Mothers should have a choice of staying home or working."

HELEN JACKSON terms Women's Lib "ridiculous. Anything I would say would set it back 30 years." In her book, being a mother is a woman's most challenging task. She resents what she sees as a feminist drive to downgrade domesticity.

The wife of Sen. Henry "Scoop" Jackson is 39, two decades younger than her husband. She has a cool, fragile beauty that has been compared to that of Princess Grace Kelly. Mrs. Jackson is soft-voiced and shy, by her own description, and "not one of those wives who make speeches." But she flashes a ready smile for voters. One gets the impression Mrs. Jackson could take the White House or leave it.

Although Jackson is one of the nation's most knowledgeable experts on defense and conservation, he and his wife rarely discuss those things. "Scoop is away from home at least 12 hours a day," Mrs. Jackson explains. "When he gets back, he is tired. He wants only to roughhouse with the children and read the mail and newspapers."

Mrs. Jackson holds a master's degree in English literature from Columbia University. After her first marriage to a physician ended in divorce, she came to Washington in 1961 to take a job in the U.S. Senate. She met Scoop in the elevator on her first day, and 11 months later they were married. Their children, Anna Marie and Peter, are eight and five.

Mrs. Jackson has no plans to overhaul the White House. "It looks fine to me," she says. She regards Lady Bird Johnson as history's ablest First Lady and would use her as a model.

First Lady candidates still depend on their husbands to enter the White House. Some, like Jane Muskie and Joan Kennedy, may even depend on a deadlocked convention. But this time, the "feminine" point of view could be something for the voters to reckon with.

Challengers to Pat Nixon's Title

CORNELIA S. WALLACE draws, "I was born in Elba on Pea River. My grandfather Folsom was a country politician, just like George's father and grandfather." Alabama Gov. George Wallace, Cornelia's spouse, now shuns the country as he races hell-bent for Washington—in his words, "the hypocrite capital of the world!"

Cornelia coordinates George's wardrobe, brushes dandruff from his coat, straightens his tie and appears to be in charge of sprucing up his image. The new Wallace, leaner and meaner than the pre-Cornelia model, is sometimes called a demagogue, but that doesn't faze his wife. "History will show he is more of a Populist," Cornelia says.

A stunning brunette with flowing hair, Cornelia's ambitious streak is masked by magnolia-blossom charm. She plays piano, saxophone and organ. She has been a beauty-contest runner-up, professional water-skier and Country-music singer. She and George have six children and a grandchild between them from earlier marriages.

While other wives campaign solo to reach the greatest number of voters, Cornelia sticks close to her man. She rarely veers from "feminine" subjects. Should she move into the White House, she'll probably concentrate on social duties, leaving such things as "leadership" to men. But it would be a mistake to sell Cornelia short.

JANE MUSKIE, a free soul, learned the hard way that a candidate's wife may not relax with the press. Her breezy comments on clothes, liquor and her husband appeared in print, turning Jane herself into an overnight issue. Sen. Edmund Muskie, defending her, broke down before the TV cameras, triggering what seemed to be a decline in his political fortunes. Yet Mrs. Muskie insists, "The more open, honest and direct you are, the more people respect it."

At 45, Jane Muskie is remarkably youthful. A former model, salesgirl and bookkeeper, and now mother of five, she has flashing dark eyes, a mouth that turns up at the corners, and a mind of her own. It is Jane, not Ed, who has the temper, she claims, observing, "Every once in a while I blow." At times she publicly differs with her husband. She favors abortions, for example, while he does not. She counts herself a "feminist," but hates the phrase "Women's Lib," preferring "Equal Rights."

Mrs. Muskie would almost certainly be an activist First Lady, should her husband make a late comeback. Needling Pat Nixon and Lady Bird Johnson, she asserts, "The President's wife can no longer afford the luxury of a single project like volunteerism or beautification." Mrs. Muskie's interests: health, drug abuse, day care. Her children have taken note of her drive. Passing the White House one evening, 11-year-old Ned said, "I bet the first thing Mummy does is paint it blue—that's her favorite color."

JOAN KENNEDY, a spectacular blonde, has been called "the Marilyn Monroe of politics." She's a swinger who loves loud colors and mod clothes, whose miniskirt shocked the White House. She is also warm, sweet, uncomplicated, a devoted mother of three and dutiful wife to Massachusetts Sen. Edward "Ted" Kennedy. Three years ago, when a young woman drowned in Ted's car on remote Chappaquiddick Island, in circumstances that remain mysterious, Ted and Joan's marriage underwent strain. It appears to be stabilized now.

If fate zeros in on Ted next month and a deadlocked convention turns to him, Joan wouldn't cheer. She has called the possibility "a nightmare." She is deeply conscious of the tragic deaths of Ted's two brothers, knows her husband receives threats and crank mail, goes to great lengths to shield her children from fears.

Joan has accompanied Ted to Europe, Israel and India. When she is not off skiing, she prefers their luxurious $750,000 estate in the Washington suburbs. There, she spends much time practicing the piano. Her talent recently earned Joan $7,500 as a guest star on the Andy Williams TV show. Her love of music is not "pasted on." Joan often drops in unannounced at symphony concerts.

Writing of the Kennedy women, novelist James Michener reserved his most lavish praise for Joan: "An enviable figure... divine face... shock of lovely hair... rowdy sense of humor... by far the best speaker of the Kennedy women."

Muriel Humphrey: helping the mentally retarded would be her blockbuster effort.

MURIEL HUMPHREY arrived in Washington in 1948 as a shy Senate wife. Now 60—silver-haired, blue-eyed, warm, friendly, chic—she is just hitting her stride as a political asset to her husband, Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey. It has been a long road from the sod house in South Dakota where Muriel was born and from those Depression days when she typed, sold sandwiches and had a $7 bank balance. When "Humphrey," as she calls him, was Vice President, they traveled the world together on a red carpet, and Muriel acquired a taste for the White House.

Perhaps the greatest blow of her life was learning that her first grandchild, Vicki Solomonson, born election night 1960, was mongoloid. Since then, Mrs. Humphrey has given much of her time to helping the mentally retarded, and could be expected as First Lady to make that her blockbuster effort.

The Humphreys enjoy their fashionable Washington apartment, but care most deeply for their 25-acre place on Lake Waverly, Minn. Keeping the house and grounds in spit-and-polish shape is their favorite year-round fun. There, Muriel water-skis or runs up a dress on her sewing machine. There, Humphrey teases her about her passion for gardening. "She's going steady with the nurseryman!" he cracks. Over the years, Muriel has proved herself the perfect foil for her bouncy, fast-talking spouse. "I always know what he is thinking, how he is feeling, and he is the same way about me," she says.

The Diet Watch

Are You a "Binge Eater"?

"Binge eater" is a term used in psychological and medical circles, and was coined by psychiatrist Dr. Albert Stunkard, who at the University of Pennsylvania noticed that obese patients would gorge themselves with food from time to time. The binge eater is a person whose sudden binge eating is precipitated by a special event—and who hates himself for his excess afterward. Getting to know and recognize the kinds of events that keep cropping up and exasperating or frustrating you—in both your home and your job—can alert you to the danger. One problem, psychologists point out, is that when you're inclined to binge eat, you can find yourself doing it almost before you know it. So a good idea is to have plenty of low-calorie favorite foods on hand. Sweets are popular with binge eaters, so it's smart to have low-calorie cookies, diet drinks and even low-calorie chocolate pudding (one serving, 50 calories) within reach.—By Harriet La Barre

MARLO THOMAS: 'People on Relief Would Prefer Jobs'

"It's time to get rid of the myths we have on the subject of welfare," says Marlo Thomas. "People tend to think of welfare recipients as criminals who are out to beat the system. But I don't think most people on welfare want to be on welfare, or that they have more children just so they can get on relief. They would rather have jobs. I don't think the needy people should be penalized just because a small group of people cheat. Yet that is what is happening in the current effort to crack down. That's why I got out and actively worked against the HRI bill. I'm appalled at some of the ideas that people are trying to put into effect in the country. I'm against making people work at lower than normal wages in return for a welfare check. Either give them a job at proper wages, or just a welfare check. I'm against forcing mothers to leave their children at centers where there is no community control. I'm against efforts to get children to spy on their parents who are on welfare. . . . Cutting down on welfare is anti-woman, because the woman is the one who must bear the burden. We cannot have people living poorly and not do anything about them. We can't sit comfortably in our living rooms next to the fireplace while people are starving nearby. That's one of the things wrong with this country. People have to think in terms of helping each other."

Are the Biggest Athletes Also The Best?

People used to talk about "the years when giants walked the earth." Right now, a tremendous amount of sports history is being written by giants who are not only walking the earth, but are causing large indentations in the nation's baseball and football stadiums, basketball courts and hockey rinks.

Athletes are bigger and stronger than ever before. This year already has seen 1) wrestler Chris Taylor use his more than 400 pounds to capture the collegiate heavyweight title for Iowa State; 2) the selection of the tallest player ever chosen in baseball's free-agent draft; 3) the selection of the heaviest player ever drafted for pro football; and 4) the arrival of a college-basketball center who stands seven feet, four inches high.

In years past, basketball was dominated by athletic giants, but many of today's examples are from outside basketball. In last January's free-agent baseball draft, the Montreal Expos selected a 6-10½ right-handed pitcher from Omaha, Neb., named Wayne Piper. Should he reach the major leagues, Piper, 19, would become the tallest player to do so.

HERE ARE THE RANKING GIANTS OF THE CURRENT SPORTS WORLD:

BASEBALL: FRANK HOWARD (6-7, 270)

"It makes a guy feel puny," smiles 6-7 Frank Howard, the slugging outfielder of the Texas Rangers. "The kids are getting bigger and bigger, and there'll come a time when you'll see kids of 6-9 and 6-10 in all the sports, not just basketball. And, as long as they have the skills to go with the size, there'll be a spot Baseball's leading behemoth. At 6-7, 270 pounds, the Texas Rangers' Frank Howard has long led major leaguers in overall bulk. But that huge strike zone (above) he presents at the plate makes many pitchers happy.

Family Weekly Sports Extra

for them," says Howard, who was an All America baseball and basketball player at Ohio State.

Howard lost his claim to the title of tallest active major leaguer when Houston promoted from the minors a young 6-8 pitcher named James Rodney Richard. But no one in baseball can match Howard's overall bulk. During the season, his weight fluctuates between 260 and 280 pounds, "depending on what city we're in and how the steaks are there."

Howard's heft has contributed significantly toward his career as one of the most powerful beltters the sport has known. But his massive strike zone and almost nonexistent speed have placed him among the all-time leaders in strikeouts and double plays as well.

Can a man compile the slugging credentials of a Frank Howard without Howard's physical dimensions? The obvious answer is yes, since much smaller men like Henry Aaron, Ernie Banks and Willie Mays have gone far beyond Howard in total home runs — if not in distance achieved on long balls. Howard may propel the ball farther when he connects, but he doesn't connect as often as many men of average size.

COLLEGE BASKETBALL: BILL WALTON (6-11, 225), TOM McMILLEN (6-11, 225), TOM BURLESON (7-4, 230)

On the college level, UCLA rolled to its sixth consecutive national championship last season on the shoulders of a 6-11 sophomore named Bill Walton. Maryland gained the championship of the National Invitation Tournament with another 6-11 sophomore, Tom McMillen, leading the way.

But the biggest of the big men in college basketball is still another sophomore, whose 7-4 height dwarfs even that of Wilt Chamberlain and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, the pro game's reigning mastodons. He is Tom Burleson of North Carolina State, who enjoyed a fine season in 1971-72 and is expected to advance still farther in the next two seasons of varsity play.

Burleson, at 230 pounds, comes from Newland, a hamlet of fewer than 600 people in the mountains of western North Carolina. He began playing basketball as a boy in his father's barn, challenging his older sister Connie to one-on-one matches, which Burleson usually lost.

Burleson feels he has more to offer on the basketball floor than his size. "A lot of people think I'm a big clod," he says. "But I had a lot of very good games and, overall, showed I could play the game." Burleson averaged more than 21 points per game for the season in the tough Atlantic Coast Conference, where Maryland's McMillen also held forth.

Burleson was hailed as a basketball great as far back as the eighth grade, when he already was well over six feet tall. As a high school freshman, he was 6-8 and finally had reached a stage where he could beat his sister, who was a high school star herself.

An easy and gawky target for rough tactics by opponents during his high school years, Burleson learned how to assert himself, and doesn't tolerate the pushing and jabbing that many big men must endure. "I remember once I broke a guy's nose," he recalls. "I caught him with an elbow when nobody was looking. It was a great move."

PRO FOOTBALL:

BUBBA SMITH (6-8, 275), BUCK BUCHANAN (6-7, 270)

Football always has sought out bulky athletes, and at various times in its history it has featured players of moderate height but massive girth, such as the late Les Bingaman, the fine but immobile middle guard who played for the Detroit Lions a generation ago. Bingaman weighed 330 pounds, but was little more than six feet tall.

By contrast, today's pro football stars are agile, quick people—as are two of the largest among them, Buck Buchanan of the Kansas City Chiefs and Bubba Smith of the Baltimore Colts. Buchanan, who stands 6-7 and weighs 270, has starred at defensive tackle for the Chiefs since 1963. His speed is so great that he has often out-sprinted Kansas City's running backs. His height also makes Buchanan, a product of Grambling College in Louisiana, extremely effective at knocking down enemy passes.

Bubba Smith, whose real first name is Charles, is a devastating force at defensive end for Baltimore. Yet, like Buchanan, he moves with amazing quickness and often winds up in the enemy backfield bringing down runners much smaller than himself.

For the past couple of seasons, Hank Stram, coach of Kansas City, has been working with a 6-10 player on his roster named Morris Stroud, with the intention of having Stroud use his height and 255 pounds to catch passes and run with them. Stroud learned his lessons well in 1971, catching 22 passes and averaging more than 20 yards in gains with those passes. The idea of a 6-10 giant trampling over enemy defenders as a pass receiver has been keeping most coaches in the National Football League awake nights. Stram feels that Stroud, with such bulk and ability, is "a pioneer, a man who could revolutionize football as the ultimate tight end."

Revolutionary, too, are the credentials of Gary Kipfmiller, the 16th-round draft choice of the New York Jets for the 1972 season. Known primarily as a college wrestler, Kipfmiller showed New York scouts enough potential as a football player to warrant his selection. Kipfmiller is 6-4 and weighed 370 pounds at the time he was drafted, which would make him the heaviest man ever to appear on a pro football team's roster. Like Wayne Piper, the 6-10½ pitcher drafted by the Expos, Kipfmiller is a native of Omaha, where he did his intercollegiate wrestling. Weeb Ewbank, coach of the Jets, refers to Kipfmiller as an "unusual animal," which may be understating the case.

How does such a giant compare with pro football's average-sized behemoth—for example, a 6-4, 250-pound tackle? Well, to have any real advantage, he would have to combine his devastating size with speed off the mark, and the ability to pursue much smaller men. While he might deliver a telling blow against any opponent he did catch up to, many running backs like Floyd Little and Leroy Kelly would probably have the agility to sidestep or swerve away from him.

If Jack Benny's impressed, shouldn't you be impressed?

$5.40 a month

$5 a month for $25,000 at age 25.

Read how American Republic is challenging over 100 years of insurance tradition as we offer young families an amount of protection they thought only older families could afford.

"Gee... why wasn't this available the first time I was 39?"

Thanks, Jack, for helping us introduce Americare® 39 Life Insurance.

I'm Watson Powell, Jr., Board Chairman of American Republic Insurance Company.

How can we offer so much coverage at such remarkable rates?

Is this some kind of fly-by-night, limited policy that only pays off under extraordinary circumstances?

No. This is the kind of insurance that I believe people in this country need and want to hear more about. Especially young people.

Pure insurance

Our Americare 39 Plan is pure Term life insurance. (For example, the famous "G.I." insurance available to men and women in the armed services, was Term life insurance.)

Term life insurance has no cash or loan value. It's just plain, pure insurance. It's designed simply to do this: Insure your life and pay your beneficiary.

But isn't that why you want insurance in the first place?

The chart (at right) shows just how much pure life insurance you can get for exactly how much money with the Americare 39 Plan.

You can see that a 30-year-old man does have $25,000 of protection for only $5.40 a month!

This means if this man dies when he's 30 (it does happen) and has this policy, the beneficiary he has named (probably his wife and children) will get $25,000. During his 30th year, he would have paid $5.40 a month to make sure they had all that protection. $25,000!

Who needs $25,000?

Would a $10,000 policy make more sense? Would it? How much money would your family need if you die?

How many payments do you owe on your house? Do you want your children to go to college? How much would your funeral cost?

Would your wife have to go to work, and how much could she earn?

In 1972, $25,000 makes a great deal of sense.

No salesmen.

Our Americare 39 Plan isn't sold by agents. This advertisement is our salesman.

Handling everything by mail is another way we keep costs down for you. And if you feel hesitant about buying insurance by mail, let me assure you:

We wouldn't have been in business since 1929 if we didn't perform when people needed us.

American Republic is an old line legal reserve insurance company. Our honesty and financial competence have been tested and found worthy.

More insurance for the money.

Consumer advocates are talking today about the advantages of Term life insurance. People are listening!

Our whole concept is to give you as much straight, pure life insurance protection as we can, for as little money as we can, during each year of your life.

A man has $25,000 coverage until he reaches his 40th birthday. Every year until then his monthly premium goes up slightly. He's getting older so the risk is getting bigger.

From his 40th birthday until he's 65, his monthly premium holds steady at $9 and the amount of coverage goes down some each year. At age 65 the policy converts to a $1,370 Whole Life Plan building future cash and loan values.

Dividends too.

Even though the premium rates for Americare 39 are low, the plan makes provision for the payment of dividends. Of course the dividends can't be guaranteed. No insurance plan can do that.

But because this is individual life insurance, designed to be sold to great numbers of people at low cost, we anticipate that we will be able to pay dividends.

Women.

There are two separate ways a woman can have the protection of Americare 39.

First, she can have the same meaningful coverage as a man, but at a 10% lower rate.

WE EVEN PAY THE POSTAGE!

Just tape or paste this postage paid label to the front of any envelope. No postage, no addressing needed.

JACK BENNY, "America's Number One Common Sense Buyer," is helping American Republic Insurance Company announce Americare 39. American Republic was founded in 1929 and has surplus to policyholders of more than $22,000,000 and assets of more than $80,000,000. "The operations of the company - American Republic - have been well managed by capable and experienced executives. The results achieved by the company have been very favorable." This is a direct quote from A. M. Best's Life Insurance Reports - the book that has been referred to as "the bible" of the life insurance industry.

$8.60 a month for $25,000 at age 39.

Or, if she's a wife, she can add $2500 of protection for herself to her husband's policy, at a very low cost per month.

Children.

You can have $1000 coverage for each of your children under age 21 for 50c a month added to your basic policy. That's one 50c for all your children no matter how many you have. At age 21 each insured child can have his or her own $25,000 policy with no physical examination.

No physical.

All you do is answer the two questions about health history on the application form.

Of course, if people are in bad health we can't insure them. But most people are in sufficiently good health to qualify.

And if you ever want to convert your Americare 39 policy to a low-cost plan with cash and loan values, you can do it, with no physical examination.

We guarantee your right to renew your policy each year. Your protection can never be cancelled because of your age or a change in your physical condition.

Please don't send money.

I want you to see your policy without risking one cent. Just fill out the application and mail it to us in an envelope.

Affix the special postage-paid label to the front of the envelope. You don't even need a stamp.

When you receive your policy you'll see that it backs up everything we've said in this ad.

Enclosed will be an envelope for your first month's premium. When we receive your premium, your insurance will be in force.

Can you feel safe buying insurance this way?

Some insurance programs do call for the advice and counsel of a trained, professional insurance agent. His services can be invaluable in areas relating to the complex problems of estate planning, annuities, trusts, retirement programs, the establishment of group plans, etc.

However, where the need is for pure and simple Term life insurance, you can feel absolutely confident dealing directly by mail with American Republic.

And remember, American Republic is licensed and regulated by your state Insurance Department.

You may already have some life insurance; however, the added protection of Americare 39 will materially help you build the size of your estate. And for only a few dollars a month.

I urge you to mail your application today.

Think about it: Americare 39 Life Insurance is something you can easily live with, and it may be your family could not live without.

Sincerely,

Watson Powell, Jr.

PRO BASKETBALL: WILT CHAMBERLAIN (7-1, 285)

KAREEM ABDUL-JABBAR (7-3, 245)

"I worked hard to develop the body I have," Wilt Chamberlain has said. "The height has nothing to do with it. I consider myself maybe the best all-around athlete in the world, who happens to play basketball."

CHAMBERLAIN ABDUL-JABBAR

The semifinal series in this spring's National Basketball Association play-offs, won by the Los Angeles Lakers over the Milwaukee Bucks, offered the classic confrontation between the two most able big men in professional basketball history—Los Angeles' 7-1, 285-pound Chamberlain, and Milwaukee's 7-3, 245-pound Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, formerly known as Lew Alcindor.

Chamberlain and Abdul-Jabbar bring far more to basketball than their great size. Chamberlain is one of the strongest men in sports, and is able to harness his strength to produce maximum effectiveness as a rebounder and short-shot specialist. He also has remarkably strong legs.

Abdul-Jabbar is the most mobile big man basketball has seen. Unlike giants of the past, who have, for the most part, found flowing movement a tough challenge, he moves with grace and agility. Abdul-Jabbar is able to dribble the ball the entire length of the floor against defenders, virtually unheard of for basketball giants.

"Even when I was in high school," says Abdul-Jabbar, "I concentrated on developing all my skills in basketball, not only

HOCKEY: PETE MAHOVLICH (6-5, 210)

Pete Mahovlich of the Montreal Canadiens is currently the tallest player in major-league hockey, at 6-5. He has derived no particular physical or mental advantage because of his height, but two men who stand just an inch shorter, one of them a teammate of his, have benefited greatly from their height. The first is Montreal's exceptional goaltender, Ken Dryden, and the other is Chicago goaltender Gary Smith. At 6-4, each can stretch a long way in any direction to stop a flying puck.

GOLF: GEORGE ARCHER (6-6)

The team sports aren't the only ones in which big athletes are excelling. George Archer, the biggest competitor on the Professional Golfers Association tour, is 6-6. In the early part of 1972, Archer won the Glen Campbell-Los Angeles Open and the Greater Greensboro Open. A native San Franciscan, Archer is considered to be one of the outstanding putters in professional golf, a talent that is obviously unrelated to his size.

Can smaller men match up against these two? Chamberlain's awesome strength and Abdul-Jabbar's mobility would make real competition impossible for any centers who possessed neither strength nor agility. But Chamberlain has had difficulty with (relatively) smaller men of greater agility, such as Jerry Lucas of New York and Abdul-Jabbar has found the going rough against some smaller men who are more powerful than himself, such as Nate Thurmond of the Golden State Warriors, and Chamberlain himself.

STAN SMITH

TENNIS: STAN SMITH (6-4)

Stan Smith, the number-one-ranked American in tennis, is one of the tallest tennis stars America has produced. His 6-4 height dwarfs everyone else in the U.S. Top Ten, almost as much as his ferocious serve has seemed to dwarf many of his opponents. In 1971, Smith received enough time off from his Army tour of duty to capture the U.S. Open championship, lead the winning U.S. Davis Cup effort and achieve top world ranking.

Is Your Family Stuck on What to Give You This Father's Day?

(Maybe You Should Drop Some Hints!)

For occasional woodcutting, you'll really appreciate one of those new lightweight chainsaws they're making nowadays. Pictured is McCulloch's new Mini-Mac Electric, about $99.95. Weighing only eight pounds, it features a thumb-activated safety latch that prevents accidental triggering.

By Rosalyn Abrevaya

Though it took a long time for Father's Day to be dubbed "official," it's not any less important! How do you think your family will remember you this year? Here are several gift ideas—which boast style, imagination and practicality—to set you (and them) thinking.

The key to the well-dressed man lies in putting the latest looks together—or in reviving clothes you refuse to part with. To wit: A pair of unordinary cuff links from Swank can be worn not only with French cuffs, but clipped on to cover the buttons of any barrel-cuff shirt. In gold, silver or colors, they're packaged four to a box at $5. Or how about a great-looking plaid lounging set in cotton flannel by Pleetway Pajamas at $21, to wear on Sunday morning (it'll make your wife much happier than that old robe!) or when houseguests are underfoot? And a sartorial gift the whole family can give: A knit blazer, sweater vest or knit shirt will give you the newest layered look for fall.

If you're the "up-at-dawn" outdoor type, and ready for a new streamlined fishing rod, talk them into a combination rod and reel with a difference. The exception: Besides being very light and having an all-cork grip to prevent slippage, it features a reel stem that sweeps back behind the hand to give comfortable, complete freedom of movement. The Garcia Mitchell 508 spinning reel, 5½-foot rod, line and spare spool come packaged in a custom-made vinyl case. About $45.

Be remembered, give a lasting gift.

Zippo

The windproof lighter—
it works, always—or we fix it free.

Hi-fi buff? If so, pray that they'll be thoughtful enough to get you your own set of headphones that can plug into most stereo units. About $20. If you're particularly careful about records, you could probably use a stylus force gauge so the phonograph needle can be adjusted for optimum performance with minimum record wear. Under $5.

A new receiver might be the thing. The Scott model shown here is about $200, a budget price as stereo components go. If members of the family are in an expansive mood (and your budget can stand it), they could pool their resources and give you one of the latest four-channel adapters, another stereo power amplifier and an added pair of speakers. The whole family will enjoy the unbelievable sound!

This picture made me lose 58 pounds. See!

By Sandy Vargo — as told to Ruth L. McCarthy

At 182 pounds, those horizontal stripes weren't for me. But it took this picture to make me realize it.

ONE thing's for sure. You never see yourself as others do. At least, I didn't — not even after my doctor poked me in the stomach and said: "You're too fat." I just went home and ate a batch of my mother's Kiflis. They're Hungarian pastries, made of rich butter and sour cream dough and filled with nuts and lots of other delicious calories. That's what did it, all right — Mom's baking and my eating between meals. It pushed me beyond 180 pounds before I was even 16 years old.

Actually, my fat kept me off the Honor Roll. Honest. You see, I was an A student in all my classes, except gym. I just couldn't get more than C in that, because of tumbling on the trampoline. I'd always hang back near the end of the line, hoping the bell would save me. It did occasionally. But it didn't save me from getting into that horrible gym suit. One of those Navy blue bloomer jobs. Ugh!

Clothes were really a problem for me. My mother had to order old lady styles out of a catalog, because I needed a size 20½ dress. The only decent things I could get were shorts and shirts, but they showed up my middle something awful. Sometimes, I wanted to cry.

My daddy tried teasing me about my weight, hoping I'd lose. "You'll never get a boyfriend," he'd say. But as long as I could curl up with a good book and a bag of potato chips, I didn't care. Not until the day I saw that fat picture of myself. I decided right then I needed to lose.

Being a bookworm, I'd read those stories in teen magazines about girls who've lost weight with the help of that reducing-plan candy Ayds®. I thought maybe they'd work for me, so I asked my mother about them. When she found that they contain vitamins and minerals, but no drugs, she bought me a box of the plain chocolate fudge-type Ayds at our local drugstore.

I used to read a book a night, but now that I'm 124 pounds, I don't think I'll be staying home that much.

Well, they tasted so delicious, I went on the Ayds plan right away. For breakfast, I took one or two Ayds, like the directions say, with a hot drink—for me, coffee—then I'd have scrambled eggs. Lunch was at school (in Lorain, Ohio) and, believe it or not, at 10:30 a.m. because of my three-hour steno class. Naturally, I wasn't very hungry at that time in the morning, so I'd bring coffee in a thermos and have a couple of Ayds. Then I'd have my dinner at 5:00 p.m. Ayds first, of course, followed by meat, vegetables and salad. I never ate after 6:00 p.m. And you know what? On the Ayds plan, I began to lose weight the very first week. It was terrific. I have to admit, though, it was not until I dropped 30 pounds that others started to notice.

By then, I'd begun to ride my 20 incher bike. I never wanted to before, because it was too hard to pump. But the slimmer I got, the more fun I had. And the more fun I had, the more I pumped. It really helped me firm up.

Pretty soon my clothes were hanging on me, so my mother had to take them in . . . and in. Even my shoe size went from 9B to 8½ AA. It's made such a difference in my looks, my doctor's nurse saw me in a store and didn't recognize me. That really made me feel good.

Right now, I'm looking forward to buying a new bathing suit. It might even be a bikini, thanks to the Ayds plan. After all, if I can handle a trampoline now, why not a bikini?

COOKBOOK/By Marilyn Hansen

How about an easy barbecue tonight? Fresh fish, corn on the cob and French fries are seasoned with a deft hand, then wrapped in foil and grilled. A light tossed green salad completes the meal.

A Lazy Cook's Barbecue: Fish, French Fries and Corn

Cooking it all outdoors: Herb-stuffed fish, corn and French fries make a tasty menu.

GRILLED BLUEFISH IN FOIL

Heavy-duty aluminum foil
Charcoal briquettes
Butter or margarine

- 1 3½-4-lb. bluefish or striped bass, dressed and washed
- Salt
- Pepper
- ½ teaspoon paprika
- 3 tablespoons lemon juice
- ¼ cup chopped onion
- ½ cup chopped celery
- ¼ cup chopped parsley or 2 tablespoons parsley flakes
- 1¾ cups packaged herb-seasoned stuffing mix
- ¼ cup crumbled blue cheese
- ½ cup water
- Lemon slices

1. Prepare outdoor grill. For easier cleaning, line with heavy-duty foil. Fill with charcoal briquettes and ignite.
2. Tear off a large sheet of heavy-duty aluminum foil. Heavily butter one side of foil, using 2 tablespoons butter.
3. Place fish on buttered side of foil. Sprinkle fish inside and out with ½ teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper, ½ teaspoon paprika and 1 tablespoon lemon juice.
4. Prepare stuffing: In medium skillet melt 2 tablespoons butter. Add onion and celery, sauté over medium heat for 5 minutes, stirring frequently.
5. Stir in remaining 2 tablespoons lemon juice, parsley, stuffing mix, blue cheese and water; toss lightly to mix. Season with a few twists of pepper from pepper mill.

6. Spoon stuffing into cavity of fish, placing any extra stuffing on the side.

7. Bring up foil lengthwise over fish, fold using double fold. Double-fold ends of foil.

8. Place on grid of grill about 4 inches away from hot coals. Grill 1 hour, turning every 15 minutes.

9. Open foil and test for doneness at thickest point. Fish should be opaque and flake easily. If not done, rewrap, grill 10-15 minutes, or until done.

10. Place foil-wrapped fish on serving board, unwrap foil. Place lemon slices on top of fish. Serve right from foil, spooning any juices over each portion. Makes 4-6 servings

FOIL-ROASTED CORN

- 6 ears corn
- Salt
- Pepper
- 6 tablespoons water
- 6 teaspoons butter or margarine

1. Place one ear of corn on small sheet of heavy-duty foil. Sprinkle with salt, pepper and 1 tablespoon water. Dot with 1 teaspoon butter.

2. Wrap foil securely around corn, using double fold. (Use double thickness of foil if fire is very hot.) Continue with remaining ears of corn.

3. Place foil-wrapped corn on grill, about 4 inches away from hot coals. Grill for about 25-30 minutes, turning frequently.

4. Serve hot with additional salt, pepper and butter as desired. Makes 6 servings

FRIES IN FOIL

- 2 pkgs. (9-oz. size) French fried potatoes, thawed
- ½ teaspoon seasoning salt

1. On large sheet of heavy-duty aluminum foil arrange 1 package French fries in single layer. Sprinkle with ¼ teaspoon seasoned salt.

2. Bring foil up around French fries, wrap loosely, seal with double fold. Seal ends with double fold. Repeat steps 1 and 2 with second package of French fries.

3. Place on grill about 4 inches away from hot glowing coals. Grill about 30 minutes, turning foil packages every 10 minutes.

4. Open foil, folding back sides. Grill 5-10 minutes to crisp potatoes, stirring frequently with spoon.

5. Serve hot. Makes 4-6 servings

Doctor Developes Home Treatment that

RINSES AWAY BLACKHEADS HELPS DRY UP ACNE-PIMPLES

In 15 Minutes or Your Money Back!

Queen Helene Mint Julep Masque 15 Minute Treatment Must Show Immediate Improvement or — YOUR MONEY BACK!

A leading New York Doctor working with a cosmetic laboratory, has developed a simple medicated home-treatment that rinses away blackheads and whiteheads in a matter of minutes. It was demonstrated recently on five teen-age girls and three teen-age boys. The results were breath-taking. Blackheads really rinsed away. In fact, many could be seen on the cloth used to wash off the Masque. But this wasn't all! Acne-pimples improved after one application, enlarged pores reduced, and rough, muddy complexions became cleaner, clearer and smoother looking. These results certainly indicate why teen-agers, both boys and girls, are now saying "this is one product that really works", for good, clear, clean, healthy skins . . . and why mothers of teen-agers have heartily endorsed its use. The Masque Cream Treatment is indeed a remarkable discovery, not only for healthy skins, but also for the confidence, poise and self-esteem a fine complexion brings to teen-agers!

Anyone Can Use It

If you suffer the agony of teen-age blackheads, whiteheads, acne-pimples and rough, unsightly complexions give yourself this home treatment at our risk. Apply this delightfully Mint-Scented Cream and within 2 or 3 minutes an absorbing agent called Argilla dries and turns this cream into a plastic-like masque. You will now feel as though hundreds of "tiny fingers" were softly kneading the skin, loosening pore-caked dirt, blackheads and foreign impurities. As it firms and hardens, its suction-action draws out waste matter from the pores. . . . In 15 minutes you simply rinse the masque away with lukewarm water which dissolves it immediately. When you wipe your face, you can see that blackheads and other pore "filler" actually come off on your towel. And your skin feels clean . . . really clean . . . refreshed, smooth like velvet!

Start Now to Improve Your Complexion

Now is the time for action. Don't take a back seat or be a wall-flower because of bad skin. If you want to get your full share of fun and parties . . . clear up your complexion and let Mint Julep Masque "Lead the Way"! You owe it to yourself to try a single fifteen minute home treatment to convince yourself that this new Queen Helene masque-cream can work wonders for you.

Attention! MOTHERS of Teen-Agers

Queen Helene Mint Julep Masque is a MUST for you, too! It will help tighten sagging skin on face and throat, relax tired face muscles and stimulate a fresher, cleaner, more youthful complexion. Try a Medicated Mint Julep Masque Treatment YOURSELF. You'll be delighted with the skin-tightening experience and more alive feeling that comes with every home-treatment.

Queen Helene Mint Masque is only $3.00 for the six ounce jar, enough for over 3 months of daily home treatments. Buy it today! Start using it immediately! Prove to yourself at our risk, for one full month. If, at any time during the month, you are not completely satisfied, simply return the unused portion and you will get back every penny of your purchase price.

STAR PROFILE By Gloria Paternostro

Cheerful Philosopher Burl Ives:

Carl Sandburg called him "the mightiest ballad singer of any century"—but Burl is embarrassed if you mention it.

Success Is a Two-Edged Thing

I got up late," said Burl Ives. "I'm stupid in the mornings—more stupid than usual, that is!" But the merriment in his blue eyes tells you he doesn't believe this any more than you do.

Burl is losing weight faster than fast. In the last two years, he has succeeded in bringing a 57-inch waistline down to 42 inches, losing approximately 150 pounds in the process.

"By the time I'm 65, I will for us old people to have someone with gall, in sandals and a robe, to challenge us.

Burl Ives loves his successful NBC television series, "The Bold Ones"—as well he might. "The Bold Ones" has good ratings and good-quality people watching. I enjoy it. But if it were canceled, I wouldn't be upset. I learned a long time ago in this business not to have a glass heart. I never get excited about what I might do—not until it's definite, and the changes.

"But I'm a happy man. When I get up in the morning and find another day to live, that makes me happy.

"I get sad occasionally. But 'sad' is a hard word to define. Sometimes we think we should be sad, and what we're really feeling is self-pity.

"I used to have a bad temper. As the Irish say, 'There's a devil in all of us.' We're all two people, and we have to control that other person.

Burl had just been to Washington to discuss the Johnny Horizon anti-pollution program sponsored by the Interior Department. "This is something I have a gut feeling about, something I have to do. When I go to a town to help clean it up, the people are delighted. They like to see someone they know, someone from TV or movies, concerned about their town. That's the magic. It gets people together and that's what's necessary. The government can't do it alone, neither can industry, the scientists or the individual. Everyone has to be concerned.

Carl Sandburg called Burl Ives "the mightiest ballad singer of any century," but Burl is embarrassed if you mention it. He even denies that he would rather sing than act.

"I do them both standing in the same place. I deal in words, music, poetry. Creativity is the important thing—it doesn't matter which form you use to express it. My favorite is always whatever I'm involved in now."

"When I was a young man, I pictured success as I saw it in magazines. I saw a red-brick house, a car, a dog and a lady. Well, I got the house, the car and the dog. And I got the lady. But it wasn't like the picture. Life is never like the picture."

have lost another 40 or 50 pounds," he says firmly. "It's all a matter of attitude. A friend of mine who was somewhat corpulent himself, once told me, 'Show me a fat man, and I'll show you a pig!' And it's true. I had to change my mental attitude toward food. Something inside is fooling you, saying you need food you don't really need. I didn't go on any special diet—I just ate less. And you know, I was hungrier when I was fat than I am now. Mind you, there's still a lot of me left! No, I don't feel any better—I always felt good!

"Change is the essence of everything," says Burl, who, at 63, is at an age when most men resist change. But he loves young people. "I think they're so alive and involved. I think it's good money's in the bank! By the same token, I don't worry about what I can't do—something better may result and I may wind up being quite delighted."

Was success all he thought it would be?

"It depends where you're standing. Looking back, now that everything is good — yes. But things are never what they seem. When I was a young man, I pictured success as I saw it in magazines. I saw a red-brick house, a car, a dog and a lady. Well, I got the house, the car and the dog. And I got the lady. But it wasn't like the picture. Life is never like the picture. Man has a vivid imagination — his achievements can never match his dreams. And like everything else, the dream

What in the World!

CHRISTINE, EX-BEAUTY QUEEN
Now she'll be a nun

"I feel that the time has now come," says 23-year-old Christine Francis, referring to her decision to become a Roman Catholic nun in the strict order of the Cistercians in England. She decided she wanted to be sure. Once winner of Queensland's "Girl in a Million" beauty-queen title, she has said good-bye to her beloved Australia, male company, stylish clothes, sports and freedom. She'll be restricted to the convent grounds for life. "I love champagne, but I don't anticipate hearing the cork pop any more," Christine mused on the champagne flight from Down Under. "Now I'm content to devote the rest of my life to God."

Novelist Irving Wallace, who doesn't fly, has taken up the cudgels for America's trains. Meanwhile, all of the author's schedules are built around his distaste for the airplane. For instance, he has yet to visit a house he owns in the Balearic Islands because it means a one-hour flight from Spain "on a very rickety plane." He raves about America's Super Chief train: "Amtrak has kept it up, and it matches the best in Europe. You can really live aboard that train during the 39 hours from Chicago to Los Angeles. I'm on the board of directors of a lobby to make trains better—The Railroad Passengers

WALLACE
Plane-Hater

Association. We've enlisted a lot of influential people who want to save the train. When I'm finished with this promotion tour [for his new book, "The Word," Simon & Schuster, $7.95], I'll take the train to cover both political conventions from a novelist's-eye view." Is Wallace afraid of a plane crash? "No, I think I'm afraid of heights. Actually, I would fly in an emergency; it's just that there haven't been any real emergencies."

SHE BUILT IT HERSELF
Just a weekend job

Eleanor I. Byer, a spry, husky girl of 67, is ensconced in her new home at long last. What is so different about the house is that this grandmother built it all by herself. She did it by dint of more than four years of blood, sweat, a few tears, and a queen-size share of true grit. How did she do it? She bought a lot and an encyclopedia on carpentry—in that order. "I read the book clear through," she says. Then she drove around to construction sites and watched carpenters and masons at work and asked a lot of questions. Except for the wiring and plumbing, she built the house by herself on weekends, from the concrete-slab base to the roof. What was the hardest part of the job? The concrete mixing, which she was doing in a wheelbarrow until a neighbor took pity and loaned her a cement mixer. The 24-foot beams also gave her a little trouble. "They're pretty heavy, you know," she says, demurely.

ARMOUR'S ARMOURY

Pray Tell
By Richard Armour

Each night, as I have done for years,
I pray for all I know Whose health or plight brings me to tears,
I feel their worries so.
Each night I pray for peace on earth,
For all who starve or suffer.
I pray, I say, for all I'm worth
And it grows ever rougher.
My list has grown so long, I yawn
And sometimes don't get through till dawn.

I chided my youngest at the dinner table recently, when he made a grab for the pie.

"Why do you always reach for the largest piece?" I asked him. "Don't you think your older brother ought to have that one?"

"Nope," my little one replied, and with logic: "He was eatin' pie five years before I was born."

The tightwad got married. When the minister concluded the ceremony, the groom said, "I suppose there's a charge for this. What will it be?"

"Let your conscience be your guide," said the minister. "I'm usually paid in accordance with the beauty of the bride."

"Well," grumbled the tightwad, "here's a dollar."

"Thanks," said the minister. Then, glancing at the man's bride, he added, "And here's 75 cents change."

MR. AND MRS. CLEAN

Each time we go visiting
We always leave the scene,
With my husband saying,
"Gee, their house was clean."
He doesn't seem to realize
The cleanliness detected
Would never be if ever we Walked in unexpected.
