

Fighting Flares As Cyprus Talks Set Up

By The Associated Press
Fighting flared today in northern Cyprus as Britain, Greece and Turkey made preparations for peace talks in Geneva.
The British Defense

Further details on the fighting were not available, but the ministry said the evacuation of about 2,500 refugees was continuing at a beach six miles east of Kyrenia.

United Nations forces reported Monday night that the fighting on the island had stopped and the cease-fire was holding.
More fighting was expected, particularly between the Greek and Turkish Cypriot communities. Turkish Premier Bulent Ecevit said if either Turkish forces or the Turkish Cypriots were attacked, "we will shoot back."

U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim announced he would double the 2,300-man U.N. peacekeeping force on Cyprus.
Britain said it expected negotiations for a peace settlement to open in Geneva today or Wednesday. But it appeared that the talks would be delayed several days or until next week.

The Greek cabinet was reported undecided who to send, since Acting Foreign Minister Constantine Kypreos took over the Foreign Ministry only a fortnight ago and is not considered experienced enough for the complicated negotiations ahead. Turkish Foreign Minister Turhan Gunes' arrival was scheduled for today but delayed 24 hours, and Turkish diplomats said he might delay longer.

A coup scare that swept Athens Monday subsided after the official radio repeatedly broadcast assurances that "foreign radio stations, known for their anti-Greek attitude, are broadcasting false reports about the internal situation in Greece."

Reports circulated in Athens that an army corps commander in northern Greece had tried to organize a coup to oust the Greek military government and its behind-the-scenes strongman, Brig. Gen. Demetrios Ioannides.
There was no confirmation. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's cease-fire negotiator in Athens and Ankara, Undersecretary of State Joseph J. Sisco, said early today on his return to Washington from Greece that he had heard the coup rumors, "but there was no sign to substantiate them."

Salonika and Larissa, the major cities in northern Greece, were blacked out Monday night. Civilian traffic was banned from the main highway from Athens to northern Greece, and military sources said tanks had taken up positions north of the capital.

Casualties in the fighting since Turkey invaded Cyprus Saturday were believed to be high, but no reliable estimates were available because of the confusion and communication breakdowns.

Evacuees told of massacres and mass graves, and newsmen said they saw many bodies of civilians lying on roadsides beside bombed vehicles. Each side accused the other of indiscriminate killing of civilians.

Reports from Cyprus said fighting continued on Monday for at least two hours after the cease-fire was supposed to have taken effect. Turkish jets attacked Famagusta, on the east coast, with bombs and napalm. Scores of persons, most of them Cypriot civilians and foreign tourists, were reported killed.

In Washington, the Pentagon said U.S. Navy helicopters evacuated 378 Americans and Lebanese from southern Cyprus before nightfall Monday, and more would be taken off today. They were put aboard Navy ships and were to be taken to Beirut, the Lebanese capital.

Kissinger told newsmen he expected the cease-fire to hold though some fighting between the Greek and Turkish Cypriot communities might continue for a few days. He said the danger of war between Greece and Turkey—both members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization—had been overcome.

A New President

By FRANK N. HAWKINS Jr.
Associated Press Writer
NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — The Cyprus government announced a new president today in an apparent attempt to come to peace terms with Turkey.

The announcement said the new president would be Glafcos Clerides, speaker of the House of Representatives in the previous regime of President Archbishop Makarios and the man who headed the intercommunal talks with the Turks during the Makarios regime.

Makarios was overthrown in a coup July 15. A spokesman for the Greek Cyprus government said Clerides would hold a press conference at 11 a.m. EDT.

Radio Cyprus said Nikos Sampson resigned as president of Cyprus.

In a speech broadcast by Radio Cyprus and monitored in Beirut, Sampson said Clerides, because of his experience, is better fitted to lead the nation.

Sampson said he was stepping down with a clear conscience. He said his actions since the coup of July 15 had been motivated by a desire to avoid civil war.

$83.45 Opener On Greenville Market

The Greenville Tobacco Market opened Monday with an average slightly down from the 1973 season opener but above the overall figure posted by the Eastern Belt.

With the bulk of local sales consisting primarily of first primings and lugs, Greenville warehouses sold 822,268 pounds for $686.221 in averaging $83.45.

Monday's totals reflected just under a $1 decrease from last year's first-day average of $84.46 although both poundage and money were up this year from last.

In posting a respectable $83.45, the Greenville market average compared with the belt average of $82.75, tabulated on the basis of 13 of the 17 member markets which opened on Monday. The remaining four markets, including Robersonville, were set to open today.

According to the Tobacco Market News Service in Raleigh, Stabilization receipts Monday totaled 1,620,732 pounds or some 20.7 per cent of total sales.

The following tabulation, compiled by the News Service, shows the opening day results on the Eastern Belt markets.

Evacuees Landed

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A U.S. Navy ship landed 384 Americans and 82 Lebanese from Cyprus in Beirut today.

The evacuees were among 4,000 foreigners British forces conveyed from Nicosia to a British base on the south coast of the embattled island Sunday, after the Turkish invasion trapped them in the Cypriot capital.

U.S. Navy helicopters ferried the 466 persons to the amphibious ship Coronado Monday night for the trip here.

An American official said the Coronado was the first Navy ship to dock in the Lebanese capital since its waters were closed to the U.S. Navy after the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

Several dozen Lebanese army troops armed with submachine guns stood guard as the evacuees disembarked.

They were taken to the Holiday Inn in downtown Beirut. Yvonne Bachelis of Pacific Palisades, Calif., said it had been a "terrifying" experience.

"I have never felt raw fear before this," she said. Mrs. Bachelis was one of more than 100 Americans who took refuge in the Hilton Hotel in Nicosia.

Med School Plans Talked

By STUART SAVAGE

CHAPEL HILL—Dr. Christopher Fordham, Dean of the School of Medicine at the University of North Carolina, termed the planning of an expanded medical school at East Carolina "a formidable task," but expressed confidence in being able to develop a "credible program" at the Greenville campus.

Dr. Fordham met in Greenville yesterday with ECU Chancellor Dr. Leo W. Jenkins to discuss the expansion planning. "We had a very useful session..." Dr. Fordham said, noting that "every effort" will be made "to work very closely together in carrying out the legislation as best we possibly can. I perceive the Chancellor (Dr. Jenkins) feels the same way."

UNC President William C. Friday, two weeks ago, instructed Dr. Fordham to supervise the planning of an expanded program at ECU and to name a full-time director at Greenville.

"It will take a pretty extensive effort to find the right individual...to find and recruit the right individual," the UNC medical school dean said.

"We have ideas about candidates," Dr. Fordham said, but he noted "we will establish a search committee, a small search committee, to assist in that task and it will include representatives from the present faculty on the Greenville campus."

"A formidable task," is the way the UNC dean described

Guidelines Set By Holshouser

By RICK SCOTT
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Gov. Jim Holshouser today unveiled a set of policy guidelines for his administration which he said will give greater emphasis to the performance of state programs.

Holshouser told a news conference that "more emphasis must be given to setting priorities which reflect careful and considered choices among new and old programs."

"Anticipated reductions of the rates of growth of state revenues and the rapid inflation of the cost of delivering state services makes program planning and evaluation especially crucial," he said.

"Reflecting this need, greater emphasis will be placed on developing performance indicators for programs to be printed in the (1975-76) budget document."

The Governor's Policy Guidelines covers 12 areas: aging, corrections, economic development, education, energy, land policy, law enforcement, lead regional organizations, physical and mental health, recreation access, transportation and water resources.

Holshouser said these would be the priority areas of his administration. This will be reflected by executive department decisions and recommendations to the 1975 General Assembly, he said.

The brief discussion on each of the 12 priority areas contained in the guidelines is of a general nature, with broad statements calling for improvement and setting priorities.

The section on aging, for example, says in part: "No group in our society has been hit harder by inflation than the aging. We need to be sure that our tax structure is equitable, that it is not eroding the small reserves older citizens may have."

The other areas are discussed in similar terms in the 20-page policy document, which Holshouser said would be distributed to department and agency heads within the government.

The governor said the policy guidelines are needed to set priorities because "too many division heads don't actually know the commitment of the governor's office."

"Since money is at a premium, it also demands very careful thought on our part" in setting which government programs and policies receive priority in planning and budget decisions.

The governor said many areas were not included because, "You can't set priorities and include everything."

Lawyer Expects One Article Of Impeachment

By CARLL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer
A former U.S. Eastern District Attorney, Mack Howard, feels the House Judiciary Committee will vote to present at least one impeachment article against President Richard Nixon, but that when the impeachment vote is taken in the House of Representatives, it will be defeated.

Howard, a former resident of Greenville, now an assistant special counsel to the President, was in Greenville yesterday after spending some time on North Carolina's coast.

The former U.S. Attorney and Army officer, was born in Kinston but made his home in Greenville at one time.

After the historic impeachment question is settled, Howard states he plans to return to Greenville to practice law.

Four and one-half months ago he was the U.S. Attorney for the Eastern District of North Carolina when he was approached to serve as assistant special counsel to the President under James St. Clair.

Although Howard feels the job is an inconvenient one at times, it is one he will most likely never have the opportunity to take on again.

Howard is a former political candidate, having run for Congress against Walter B. Jones in 1972.

Now working in the White House under St. Clair, he feels he was selected to serve as an assistant special counsel because of his courtroom experience. Only one other Presidential lawyer working on the impeachment trial has courtroom experience, says Howard, along with the well known, St. Clair.

"We feel the Judiciary Committee will return at least one impeachment article," says Howard, "but we do not believe the House will pass an impeachment vote, though it will probably be close."

One of the problems the judiciary committee faces, says Howard, is deciding on the definition of an impeachment offense.

This momentous question is coupled with the upcoming Supreme Court decision on executive privilege. Some say the high court is awaiting the Judiciary Committee's vote on the impeachment articles before handing down their decision, while others speculate that the House group is awaiting the Supreme Court's vote, says Howard.

Howard stated yesterday that the White House filed a legal brief with the Judiciary Committee last Friday, asking that any impeachment articles be set down as specific allegations.

This determination of a specific impeachment allegation is coupled with the committee's decision on what an impeachable offense actually is, indicates the attorney.

Howard states he feels the House Judiciary Committee does not represent a good cross-section of the country, and that their vote on the impeachment articles will not reflect a true attitude of the country and the House of Representatives.

The Eastern North Carolina native has attended all of the Judiciary Committee hearings, along with St. Clair and a third attorney assigned to the momentous task of defending the President of the United States.

The counsel speculates that the upcoming Supreme Court decision may be one that will not answer all the questions on executive privilege, but will be a "limited decision" addressing only specific issues.

"This may require the White House to hand over specific tapes or documents, but not all of them," says Howard.

"The Executive Branch is a co-equal branch of government," he says and is standing on this as support for executive privilege.

A HOTLINE APPEAL
NEED HOUSE TO USE, RENT, OR BUY
Mrs. Judi Miller of the Operation Sunshine Board of Trustees says the girls' activities program is badly in need of a house to use, rent or buy, preferably on the west side of Greenville.

The house should not cost more than $10,000, if it is one for sale, she added, as she feels this would be about the largest goal the organization could hope to reach if it had to try to raise funds.

The program, which has several years in operation, serves to give adolescent girls meaningful activities after school each schoolday and during the summers. The use of the house that is now the "Sunshine Center" must end soon because the land is being sold by the church which has donated the use of the house for several years.

Anyone who can give Mrs. Miller any prospects for a new Sunshine Center should call her at 752-7631, or Hotline at either 752-1336 or 752-6166.

WHAT ARE MINIBIKE LAWS?
What are the laws in North Carolina concerning minibikes and the age of the riders? L.C.

According to Lt. Carl Gilchrist of the N.C. Highway Patrol, any age person may ride a minibike on private property since there is no requirement that this kind of vehicle be licensed or insured. Those ridden on public roads must be licensed and covered with liability insurance and may be operated only by licensed drivers 16 or older, of course, he said.

Reveal Nixon Resisted Tape-Destroying Advice

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon rejected suggestions from his staff that he destroy any White House tapes that might prove politically and historically embarrassing, the Cox Newspapers Washington Bureau reported today.

The story quoted a July 25, 1973, memorandum to the President from speechwriter Patrick J. Buchanan who asked, "If there are conversations with confidential aides, such as Charles Colson or (H. R.) Bob Haldeman (exclusive of the so-called Watergate tapes) that are better left confidential forever—what then is the sense of their preservation?"

"Perhaps the President should be provided with a day-by-day log of his tape library, and himself separate the wheat from the chaff—from his own recollection—and have the latter burned."

Buchanan wrote his memo nine days after Alexander P. Butterfield, a former White House aide, had disclosed in testimony before the Senate Watergate committee that presidential conversations routinely were taped.

The story, written by David Kraslow and Eugene V. Risher, quoted a ranking official as saying Nixon rejected the advice on the grounds "it would be wrong—ethically, politically, legally. In fact, the mere act of destroying the tapes might have been considered by many people enough to warrant impeachment."

The source also said, "For one thing, we knew there were a number of people around here who would not have stayed if that had happened. Those tapes could be evidence in an investigation already under way. The President understood that. We all understood that."

Buchanan was quoted as saying in an interview that he was not advocating the destruction of any tapes that might be considered evidence in criminal proceedings.

In his memorandum, Buchanan said the taped conversations "can both confirm the President's place in history, and—in the hands of an unscrupulous or malevolent or hostile critic—besmirch the President's name badly."

Buchanan also advocated mounting an attack on special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox as "a known Nixon hater" in order to constrict the focus of his office "to the assignment they were brought in to perform—investigate Watergate and campaign abuses, prosecute and depart."

If all else failed, Buchanan recommended "the outright firing of Cox, giving as the reason, his issuance of subpoenas against the President of the United States."

Nixon did fire Cox on Oct. 20, 1973.

One Injured In Accidents

One person was reported injured in a series of two mishaps here yesterday afternoon that resulted in an estimated $2,850 property damage.

Greenville police reported heaviest damage resulted from a 4:45 p.m. collision at the intersection of Fourth and Pitt Streets involving cars driven by Mary Taylor Wilkes of 1506A Fleming St. and Roger Clinton Venters of Route 1, Grimesland.

Officers, who charged Mrs. Wilkes with failing to yield the right of way, estimated damage at $1,300 to the Wilkes car and $1,200 to the Venters vehicle.

Barbara Ellen Dorsey of Route 5, Lexington was reported injured in a 5:15 p.m. collision on Greenville Boulevard 383 feet East of the Evans Street intersection.

Police said a car driven by Miss Dorsey collided with a vehicle driven by George King Jr. of 707 Red Barn Trailer Pk., causing an estimated $100 damage to the Dorsey car and $250 damage to the King vehicle.

King was charged with failing to reduce his speed enough to avoid an accident following investigation of the mishap.

Angola Govm't Given Military

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — Portugal's military rulers have decided to turn the administration of Angola over to the armed forces in an attempt to restore order in the rebellious African colony.

A communique Monday night gave no details but said a statement will be released shortly giving details of the transition from civilian to military government.

Gen. Silvino Silverio Marques, who was named governor-general of Angola on June 11, came to Lisbon on Saturday for conferences with government leaders, and there were reports he might not return.

At least nine persons reportedly have died in bloody violence that has rocked Luanda, Angola's capital, in recent weeks.

DURHAM (AP)—Fewer than one-fourth of the black graduates of North Carolina Central University Law School in the past four years have passed the state bar exam on their first try.

Figures compiled by John Sanders, vice president of planning for the University of North Carolina system, show 13 of 60 blacks from NCCU passed the bar exam in the past four years. All 10 white NCCU law graduates who took the exam passed and three of the four Indians passed.

Bar exam passage rates for other law schools in the state, UNC at Chapel Hill, Duke University in Durham and Wake Forest University in Winston-Salem, average about 90 per cent. NCCU averages about 33 per cent.

"Obviously we're concerned," Sanders told The Associated Press. "Something's wrong."

"The facts suggest that it's not the school that's causing blacks to fail," NCCU Chancellor Albert N. Whiting said.

Theories about the problem include bar exam discrimination, low admission standards, inadequate funding and facilities and a supposed lack of communication skills common in black students.

More statistics cloud the issue:

—Only one white student in the history of the predominantly black law school has ever failed a state bar exam, and that was in New Jersey.

—Several blacks from NCCU who failed the North Carolina bar have passed exams in Pennsylvania, Connecticut and other states.

—From 1970 through 1972, 95 per cent of the blacks from other law schools who took the North Carolina bar exam passed.

NCCU Law Dean LeMarquis DeJarmon has no answer why. "I just don't know," he said.

NCCU in Durham was founded as a black state college in 1910. The law school opened in 1939 and admitted its first white students in 1965. With the state university reorganization two years ago, NCCU became part of the 16-campus UNC system.

"The school was never adequately funded," said alumnus and state Rep. Henry Ward Oxendine, D-Robeson, who in 1973 became the first Indian to graduate from a North Carolina law school.

The only other state-supported law school in North Carolina is UNC at Chapel Hill. According to UNC Provost Charles Morrow, the UNC law school 1973-74 budget was approximately $882,000 for 704 students. That comes to about $1,250 per student.

NCCU's budget was approximately $276,000, or about $917 per student.

UNC's student-faculty ratio for the law school is 23 to 1; NCCU's is 33 to 1. UNC's law library contains some 150,000 volumes; NCCU's contains 42,388.

The average faculty salary at NCCU law school lags $7,442 behind UNC's, according to DeJarmon's figures.

In a January progress report to the American Bar Association, DeJarmon said: "We feel that the weakness of the law school that the report emphasized should also state that these weaknesses can be corrected by adequate financial assistance from the state, and that the school has and is presently attempting to secure those funds."

The ABA, after accrediting the school in October, sent a list of criticisms including low salaries, inadequate physical facilities, large class sections and admission standards.

NCCU's admission standards differ from those of other law schools in the state, as little emphasis is placed on the Law School Admission Test, a national test given to law school applicants. High score is 800.

The median LSAT score for entering students at NCCU last fall was 386. The median for students at UNC was approximately 635; at Duke, between 650 and 690; and at Wake Forest, about 600.

DeJarmon said although a few white students at NCCU have high LSAT scores, the qualifications of black and white applicants in general are about the same.

He said studies by the North Carolina State Bar Association show an applicant's grades in law school have a closer correlation to his bar exam performance than his LSAT score or undergraduate grades.

DeJarmon and Whiting said many blacks have a problem with writing skills, but the school takes extra care to help such students.

Two semesters of legal writing are required instead of the one at other law schools. Tutors are available and students who feel they need more help can take writing courses from the academic sector of the university.

Another explanation for the low passing rates among black graduates is that members of the state Board of Law Examiners are discriminating against blacks.

State Rep. H. M. Michaux Jr. of Durham, who graduated from NCCU in 1964, is vocal in his criticism of the board. Michaux failed the exam his first try, but passed in 1966.

"Traditionally, never more than two or three blacks passed the state bar each year," he said. "There may be some prejudice here although you can never put your hand on it."

The bar exam is written and tests are graded by numbers which are not matched with applicants' names until grading is completed. But Michaux claimed, "They can always find out."

DeJarmon's figures, however, show that until 1968, usually no more than four, and often only one or two blacks took the bar exam each year, and they generally passed.

Whiting and DeJarmon are hoping NCCU's proposed budget increases will be approved by the UNC Board of Governors and the General Assembly.

The school is requesting funds for a new building. The present law school is housed in a 37-year-old converted library and contains one classroom, one moot courtroom, several faculty offices and the law library.

The school has also hired more faculty for 1974-75 and is decreasing its entering class enrollment.

The Board of Governors has expressed interest in the law school; Sanders is conducting a study due in October to the board.

And the recently approved desegregation plan for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare outlines plans to equalize facilities and programs at all 16 UNC campuses.

"I feel confident the board will support our recommendation," UNC President William C. Friday said of NCCU's budget requests. "We've spent a considerable amount of time and effort on the problem."

DeJarmon is more cautious. "I have no idea what the legislature will do," he said, "although I sort of think they're sympathetic."

Jackson Wants Credit Control

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP)—Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., says, "Rationing credit under a tough economic czar is urgently needed to stop inflation."

He said such a czar should control credit "and channel it through the Federal Reserve to the places it is needed, especially housing loans."

The Nixon administration has "plunged the American economic system into the worst crisis since the great depression of the 1930," Jackson said Monday night at a fund-raising dinner for Robert Morgan, Democratic candidate for U.S. senator from North Carolina.

At a news conference before the speech, Jackson said the Soviet Union is trying to recoup its losses among Arab countries of the Middle East by supporting the Turkish invasion of Cyprus.

He said the Soviet Union was recently "pushed out of Egypt" and is trying to regain its loss by supporting Turkey in hope of establishing a strategic military base in the area.

"We really have to push the Greek junta as well as the Turks to come to a cease fire," he said.

The dinner was the first of eight $50-a-plate affairs which the Morgan campaign staff plans for the next few weeks. Other national Democrat figures will speak in Raleigh, Fayetteville, Charlotte and elsewhere in North Carolina.

London Living Undergoing Change

By ROBERT MUSEL
UPI Senior Editor
LONDON (UPI) — The miniskirt is proving to be a harder fashion to kill than it was to create.

The French, who originated it, were glad to see it go, but then the French do not have the legs of the British, arguably the best feminine underpinning in the western world. So there is still an occasional pleasant bonus in London these days climbing the steep steps of a double-decker bus behind a young girl public-spirited enough to cling to last year's fashion.

The new styles, slowly nudging everything else towards the second-hand sales, are the long skirt and the touser. The skirt is worn with various tops from cheese cloth to wild silk, sometimes with a plunge to emphasize another area in which the British believe they are out in front of the French. The trousers are not as wide as they were last year.

And one must mention the continuing fad for second-hand clothes which should have denuded the street markets of the last genuine gear of the reign of Queen Victoria before now.

Carnaby Street and the King's Road in Chelsea no longer set the fashion, although tourists seem to think they do. The rule of thumb seems to be that the prettier the girl the less she is apt to conform, the more likely she is to wear what she thinks suits her.

As a result there is a note of desperation in some of the advertising copy for the fashion houses. But it makes for a more colorful passing show on the sidewalks.

The British are conservative in food and most other things, but the last defenses are crumbling in all directions. After World War II there was an invasion of Chinese restaurants. Then Italian restaurants moved in. That was followed by a craze for Greek food. And a few years ago a couple of expatriates opened a hamburger palace, the Great American Dister, with a reasonable facsimile of an American burger.

The advance of the hamburger has been slower than that of chop suey, lasagna or mous-saka. But now its temples are springing up all over, more or less on a similar pattern—plenty of meat, plenty of French fries and plenty of noise from high-volume records.

Prices are reasonable, but only by the hectic standard of an inflationary economy. One American recently offered to exchange his apartment for one in London in a summertime swap with this lure: "Live in New York, where it's cheaper." It is, too.

Yet there is little real grumbling, and in a way the Royal Family can take credit for this. With the economy collapsing, massive strikes threatened and the balance of trade in the red, the British pushed everything out of mind to wonder about Prince Charles, the heir to the Throne, and the blonde California girl he invited to Kensington Palace for a drink.

Princess Anne's wedding blotted out another crisis. So did the reports from the U.S. of a quarrel between Princess Margaret and Lord Snowdon, and that story was seven years old.

When the British need a fantasy world to escape into, or whipping boy for their own frustrations, the House of Windsor is always there, as royalty has been under one dynasty or another for more than 1,000 years.

London is a more difficult city to get to know than Paris or practically anywhere else in Europe. It never really was "swinging London." Not for the general public, foreign or domestic. You can't really swing in a town where transport collapses before midnight, where seven million people barely fill a handful of night clubs, where a cannon fired into Piccadilly Circus at the witching hour would hit only the pathetic addicts waiting for the stroke of 12 to get their legal next day's shots at an all night drug store.

It is, in fact, a private city. The best places are for members only. The great gambling clubs like Le Cercle (a Rothschild mansion), the Curzon (the town house of the Marquesses of Zurzon), the Clermont (in the bijou mansion a king built for his mistress) have strict membership qualifications—and the highest average stakes in gambling.

The other night an Eastern gentleman, playing three roulette wheels at once, won dls 200,000 at one of the above, and wins and losses in six figures are not infrequent.

The most celebrity-filled night club in town, Tramps, actually discourages publicity, as do many other clubs. Hence the average Briton couldn't name a British jet setter if he tried. Oscar Lerman of Philadelphia, who owns Tramps, begs his journalist friends not to write about it. One club owner used to give his members cards with his photo, forefinger to lips and the caption: "If you know who I am, don't tell anyone where I am."

Non-membership clubs do only average business. London was a good night club town before World War II, but there was such a falling off in business afterwards that one owner had some research done on what had happened to his

At Wit's End

A dinner-theater is a new concept in the arts. It combines 500 patrons in a room built to store floor polishers and paper products, 150-cocktail waitresses, a dinner served by two waiters, and a Broadway musical accompanied by a piano and a drum.

The results are amazingly quite entertaining and successful with the following flaw. The evening opens with a cocktail waitress asking, "May I get you something from the bar?"

This is followed in ten minutes by "Another round here?"

An attempt is made at this time to excuse yourself and retreat to the powder room. However, in this "intimate" atmosphere if you so much as twitch a muscle, you will break the 9th commandment with the stranger sitting next to you.

The drinks are followed by dinner, which usually includes a wine, plus frequent visits by Sabu, the water boy. After your third cup of coffee, you make plans to slide down on your chair and crawl under the table, but it is show time and you realize with horror that you cannot possibly make an exit. Not only are you illuminated by the spotlight, but you are two inches from the bed where Imogene Coca is spending her wedding night with King Donovan. A critic doesn't walk out on a wedding night.

After a "full" act, there is a scuffling of chairs and you exit just before the cocktail waitress takes another order, the water boy fills your glass and the friendly waiter warms up your coffee.

You charge out of the room to a restroom that accommodates two. There are 18 women ahead of you. . . 15 of them in body suits and pantyhose.

You return to the table without so much as having seen the inside of a powder room.

British girls, it appeared, were somewhat slower of foot.

It's Wife's Duty To Cure Depression

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (WNS) — Speaking to Working Wives at their monthly luncheon here, marriage counselor Ellen Sorensen advised the ladies not to feed their mates when hubby suffers from depression. "More research is needed into the sexual side effects of drugs, but depressed patients are reluctant to mention sex problems," Mrs. Sorensen added that it is up to wives to cure unhappy husbands "by creating your own imaginative, happy and loving techniques."

Some of my friends tell me that the dinner-theater concept is becoming so popular that special theaters are being built to accommodate more comfortably the crowds, the food and the stage.

No one enjoys good theater and good food more than I. But we must ask ourselves, was man or woman built to sit through 4-½ paralyzing hours of two cocktails, three glasses of water, one glass of wine and four cups of coffee?

Let Husband Do The Talking

By Abigail Van Buren
© 1974 by Chicago Tribune-N. Y. News Synd., Inc.

DEAR ABBY: My husband owns a motorcycle which he tinkers with quite a bit in our front yard.

There is a 14-year-old neighbor girl who has a terrific crush on him, and now that school is out, she is over here the minute my husband appears outside to work on his cycle, and she stays until he comes inside. All the neighbors have commented on how this dopey kid moons over my husband.

? My husband didn't mind it so much at first, but he says now she has become an awful pest. He hates to have to hide in the house because of this girl. He is really bugged, but he doesn't want to hurt her feelings.

How can I tell her to quit hanging around my husband without appearing to be jealous?

JEALOUS

DEAR JEALOUS: It won't be easy. Why not tell your husband that any man who is old enough to ride a motorcycle is old enough to speak for himself? And then let him figure out a way to tell this girl she's bugging him.

DEAR ABBY: Our 25th wedding anniversary is coming up, and my husband offered me a "present" which I don't know how to take.

He said, in all seriousness: "I think it's time for us to present each other with a week off from our marriage every month."

I didn't know exactly what he meant, so I asked him to explain it. He said, "Well, one week out of every month you can do whatever you want, go wherever you please, and no questions asked. This includes staying out all night, and even going out of town if you want to." And, of course, he wanted the same privilege.

I said: "Over my dead body!"

Abby, I know some people have this kind of arrangement, but I think they are only asking for trouble. What do you think?

FULL TIME WIFE

DEAR FULL: I agree. But I wouldn't have put it the way you did. That's also asking for trouble.

DEAR ABBY: I am hard of hearing, and I rely on lip-reading to understand what others are saying, but when performers cover their lips with the microphone, it is impossible to read their lips.

Abby, will you do us hard-of-hearing people a service, and ask speakers and entertainers to please be sure their lips can be seen, so we can enjoy them, too? Thank you. MRS. W.

DEAR MRS. W.: Consider it done. It's amazing how we never give a thought to a problem—unless it's our own.

DEAR ABBY: I, too count the number of steps, arrange my clothes hangers and shoes in order, and have the bills in my wallet separated by denominations and all facing in the same direction.

A psychiatrist friend of mine told me that we are called "arithmomanics".

W.A.B.

DEAR W.A.B.: It figures.

Problems? You'll feel better if you get it off your chest. For a personal reply, write to ABBY: Box No. 69700, L. A., Calif. 90069. Enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope, please.

Always A Danger For Others

The war continued on Cyprus and, as it did, it created another potential disaster area for the world.

The National Guard take-over of the island, engineered by Greek generals, led to Cyprus President Archbishop Makarios being deposed. This was followed by a Turkish invasion and, as of Monday, the United Nations was still attempting to negotiate a cease-fire.

The war on the island of Cyprus had brought

A Useful Panic By Sindlinger

By ROWLANDE EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON—A major reason why the Western White House has finally begun displaying a sense of urgency about the economic crisis was a secret warning from President Nixon's favorite pollster that a serious money panic really does impend.

Albert Sindlinger, the Philadelphia-based consumer opinion analyst whose daily national telephone polls regularly go to the White House, was stunned by the turn his surveys took two weeks ago.

About two months ago, Sindlinger added this question to his survey: Have you heard rumors that leading corporations and banks may be in trouble? At first, only about 20 per cent said yes. But two weeks ago, that figure jumped to 60 per cent. What's more, 15 per cent indicated a desire to withdraw their personal deposits.

A highly agitated Sindlinger descended on Washington to button-hole anybody he could find: White House communications chief Kenneth Clawson (his normal contact), officials at the Office of Management and Budget (OMB), several sub-cabinet members and a long, bipartisan list of Senators (with Sindlinger sitting in on a Capitol Hill luncheon of conservative pro-Nixon Senators last Tuesday).

Sindlinger's message was desperate: the American people, having lost confidence in their politicians and institutions, have little left but faith in the dollar. If that also goes, we may be vulnerable to a man on a white horse. Consequently, it behooves the administration to do something and do it quickly.

Sindlinger's panic is credited by high officials as helping to end the inexplicable do-nothing mood in the administration, where there seemed so little prospect of action that William Simon, Secretary of the Treasury, felt safe enough to take a two-week mission to Europe and the Mideast. Early last week, OMB was finally ordered to crank up options for the President, and his top economic policymakers (minus Simon) were summoned to San Clemente for emergency conferences.

Decontrolling Fuel So high is the priority that the Nixon administration puts on decontrolling petroleum that Treasury Secretary William Simon last Tuesday sent a cable from Cairo to Sen. Henry M. Jackson pleading with him not to take quick action extending the allocations act.

There has been only a few months of experience with the act and we believe the act has been creating distortions," cabled Simon, who asked for "thorough public hearings."

Simon's persuasiveness, often compelling in person, failed at trans-Atlantic distance. Jackson will ask his Senate Interior Committee to quickly extend the authority without hearings. Without controls, Jackson believes, independent refiners and marketers will be driven out of business by the major oil companies.

A footnote: Simon's intense desire to decontrol petroleum is not shared by bureaucrats inside the Federal Energy Administration (FEA). Since their jobs might be eliminated by decontrol, they are secretly lobbying against the administration policy. Furthermore, congressional Democrats believe FEA chief John Sawhill, while loyally supporting decontrol, has private misgivings.

Citizen Haldeman

Riding in a first-class seat on a Los Angeles-Washington flight July 7, H.R. Haldeman, President Nixon's former chief of staff, got into a conversation with his seatmate which revealed that both his arrogance and his isolation from political reality have survived his fall from power.

Haldeman was obviously seeking solace from the man sitting next to him, whom he had never met before. Instead Haldeman received a judicious review of the Watergate scandals, summed up with the remark that the courts had been too lenient in some of the sentences imposed.

Haldeman listened, then tried to argue his seatmate into a different position, playing heavily on the alleged national security issue as the underlying cause of the scandals. But he could not budge the man beside him. So, after a few minutes, Haldeman exploded: "This is the first time I have talked to someone who isn't supportive of my position and the President's." He then reached under the seat in front of him for his briefcase, muttered goodbye and moved across the aisle.

A footnote: Lawrence Higby, Haldeman's top sergeant in his glory days at the White House, is moving back up in the official presidential family. Exiled for a long period to a cubbyhole in the Executive Office Building after Mr. Nixon was forced to fire Haldeman, Higby is now top aide to Fred Malek, No. 1 man in the Office of Management and Budget. What's more, Higby was summoned to San Clemente last week to sit at the highest level in policy conferences.

nations, with threats of declaration of war if the fighting is not stopped.

It is situations such as this that have led to world wars, for once the fighting starts and major powers align themselves, there is always the possibility of the big nations being drawn into the conflict.

The Cyprus situation is far from this stage at present, and there seemed to be a fair chance yesterday that some sort of cease fire would be arranged.

Hopefully order can be restored on the island, which has a background of citizens of Greek and Turkish descent, and orderly government can be restored.

Coastal Commission Is Basis For Building

A Coastal Resources Commission, created by the last Legislature has been appointed and sworn in. It has begun the job of management of coastal lands.

There were many who felt the Coastal Management bill was irreparably weakened before it became law, but at least the Commission is operating now. It is something to build on.

Many Eyes On Governorship

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — While most political observers give Lt. Gov. James B. Hunt Jr., the edge in current jockeying for the 1976 governor's race, there is no shortage of contenders for the Democratic nomination.

Charlotte is a hot-bed of activity in that direction with no fewer than five men interested. Close Hunt aides confess that one of their hardest jobs is keeping tabs on who the challengers are.

Add to the growing list the name of State Senator Eddie H. Knox of Charlotte. Knox did not seek re-election to the senate this year, opting instead to take chairmanship of the new Commission on Sentencing, Criminal Punishment, and Rehabilitation. In reality, this is a prison reform study group despite its bulky name.

In town recently for a meeting of his commission, Knox confessed that he is eyeing a statewide bid for office, but discounted rumors that he would run for lieutenant governor. "If I run, it will be for governor," Knox said, and put his name on a growing list of possible candidates.

On Outside — sh

Oddly enough, the contenders are all outside looking in right now — Hunt is the only man considered a serious candidate who remains in public office.

Several hopefuls admit they would rather be out of office watching for Hunt to stump his toe.

Among those who readily say they are interested in the governor's office are former House speaker James E. Ramsey of Roxboro; former Senate president pro tempore Gordon P. Allen of Roxboro; and former governor Bob Scott of Haw River. Scott, intimates say, is seriously studying running for lieutenant governor as a forum to make a bid for a second term as governor.

Meanwhile, political gossip continues to put the name of Charlotte Mayor John M. Belk in the governor's race. He at one time toyed with the prospect of entering the U.S. Senate race when Sen. Sam J. Ervin stepped down.

Belk, chief of the sprawling Belk stores chain with 300-plus outlets, including a store in almost every town of any size in this state, is considered a formidable opponent in politics with a name as well-known as any in North Carolina, his own millions of dollars to draw on, plus the obvious advantage of having store managers and employees numbering in the thousands and reaching into every community across the state.

Bank Exec — sh

Another Charlottean being much mentioned in Raleigh scuttlebutt lately is the son of former governor — Luther H. Hodges Jr.

Hodges, head of the rapidly growing North Carolina National Bank, shares many of Belk's advantages, including a well-known name and a sprawling network of bank offices and branches in which loyalty can be assumed.

Hodges has the additional boost of a Time magazine story a couple of weeks back which listed him among the 200 young people in the nation expected to provide leadership in the years ahead. Even before that article appeared, Hodges was being seriously talked about as a candidate for governor.

A fourth Charlottean whose name has been mentioned in the developing Democratic battle is real estate developer Calvin J. Harris. Former head of the Ervin Corp. building firm, Harris now heads a development operation of his own named Farrington Properties.

A fifth Charlottean in a similar category of successful businessman and civic leader — but not well-known politically statewide — is Eckerd Drug chief Ed O'Herron who also would like to enter the race, according to close associates.

Also still considered interested, and in the running, is Agriculture Commissioner James A. Graham.

Strength For Today

PRIDE AND SELF-RESPECT

The Swiss have an old adage, "God never lets the trees grow so tall that they touch the sky." By which is meant that when men become haughty and arrogant and use other people and their own prowess just to feed their vanity, God will stop them somewhere short of their selfish goals.

Of course, every person needs self-respect. There are many sources of this quality, but one of the most important of them is living in such a way that one's life contributes something valued and needed by society. But there is all the difference in the world between self-respect and pride. The "proud" person is easily recognizable. Perhaps he proclaims that his abilities are far greater than people know them to be; perhaps he lives in garish pretentiousness. Everyone who has that sense of confidence which accompanies self-respect should examine himself to find out whether or not it has corrupting elements of pride.

Neither trees or men ever grow so tall that they reach the sky.

NOT COMPLETE TILL THE APPENDIX IS WRITTEN!

By JAMES J. KILPATRICK

The Showdown Is Here

A melancholy time is approaching for the many Americans who have tended generally to support Richard Nixon. I count myself among them. Our President — he is peculiarly our President — is about to be impeached.

The President will be impeached by the House of Representatives on three broad grounds. No matter how the individual articles of impeachment may be formulated, they will boil down to these charges: the abuse of power, the abuse of justice, and the abuse of money.

The quest for future evidence, in the form of additional tapes or documents, has now become meaningless. The Judiciary Committee and the whole House have sufficient evidence to weigh a vote to impeach. This not to say that the evidence is sufficient for two-thirds of the Senate to convict. Such a judgment will have to wait upon trial.

I venture these predictions out of emotions I cannot sort out: sorrow, shame, anger, pity, contempt, scorn, despair. I don't know. For the past week I have read little but House documents and Senate reports. Their cumulative effect, in my own view, is devastating. The President's last-ditch partisans are only deceiving themselves by persisting in the notion that Watergate is no more than a conspiracy among the Democrats and newsmen. This evidence is no mirage; this evidence is as real as any avalanche. It overwhelms.

For many months I have advanced the theory that an impeachable offense must be a criminal offense. The experts notwithstanding, I cling to that theory still. That is what the Constitution plainly says to me. But if that theory ever truly mattered, it matters little now. The Constitution is what the judges say it is, and an impeachable offense is what the House says it is. It is too late in the afternoon to argue abstract law.

Some of this damning evidence deals with the President's abuse of money. He closed his eyes, or never opened them, to flagrant abuses in the raising of campaign funds. At San Clemente and at Key Biscayne he ventured no objection to the spending of public money for his personal pleasure. He looked the other way while his lawyers and accountants manipulated dates and documents to his tax advantage. He gave his wife diamond earrings — and paid for them with mystery money produced in a shell-game shuffle.

Other evidence — pages upon pages of evidence — deals with his abuse of justice. What hurts in this area is the President's attitude. His purpose was not to get the truth out; his purpose, revealed from his own mouth, was to keep the truth in. Containment! That was the plan. Stonewall it! Instead of pursuing a policy of full disclosure, along the paths of public candor, he was content for months to travel what John Ehrlichman described as "the limited, modified, hang-out road."

The most damning evidence, in my own view, deals with the President's abuse of power. It is sickening — no other word comes to mind — to read of John Dean's slimy efforts to harass the President's "enemies" through the Internal Revenue Service. And Nixon knew what Dean was up to. Among the documents is a transcript of a conversation in which H.R. Haldeman reports ap-

Other Editors Say Winter Troubles

(Henderson Dispatch)

An official of the Carolina Power & Light Company told the Utilities Commission last week that a power shortage next winter is a possibility. He was testifying for the company in its request for a 31 per cent increase in rates.

The threat mentioned was high prices for coal and chances that a mine strike would seriously reduce fossil fuel, which is a major source of fuel for the power plants. Already there is a strike at a company-owned mine of Duke Power Company in West Virginia. CP&L has not been affected in that respect as yet.

Some of the plants in this State are operated by water power. Others, including the huge facility near Roxboro, are fired with coal, and a lot it is needed.

It is possible that CP&L could obtain electric current from the Kerr Dam generating plant. It is now wheeling power from that source to cooperatives in sections of eastern Carolina. The plant at the dam does not run at capacity as a rule, and it would seem that all units could be operated in any emergency that might develop. This is only our speculation. We do not know from facts, but the Kerr facility was designed to provide power for needs that might arise.

As for CP&L's appeal for higher rates, nobody wants to pay more for electrical energy. At the same time, the power companies, like all other activities, are feeling the pinch of inflation and scarcity, and need some relief if they are to function efficiently. How much of an increase is for the Utilities Commission and the company to determine.

More electric current is being consumed today than ever before. CP&L has projected new plants to meet the growing requirements, but in some instances these plans have been deferred for lack of capital, pollution and other problems. One thing certain is that power must be had if the economy is not to be crippled in service to consumers.

Trends That Point Up Change

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Here are a couple of long-term trends that businessmen, investors and others will be watching for signs of change:

— Automobile registrations. In every decade this century the number of passenger cars registered in the United States has grown. And simultaneously the number of persons per car has fallen.

In 1910, for example, there were 500,000 passenger cars registered, one car for every 202 persons. By 1950 the number of registrations had risen to 40.3 million, and persons per car had dropped to 3.8.

The latest compilation by the National Automobile Dealers Association shows that in 1973, when the population totaled 210.4 million, there were 101.2 million passenger cars on the road, one for every 2.08 persons.

Because of the high price of gasoline and threats of further shortages, forecasts of an end to this trend have been common. But the car dealers say no, we'll just have more of the same.

By 1980, they project 126.7 million cars, or one car for every 1.8 individuals.

— Institutions: Back in 1965 it became obvious institutions were becoming a growing factor in stock markets. The oldtime bank trusts and life insurers were being joined by mutual and pension funds.

Moreover, these institutions were changing their investment style. Institutions by tradition were investors rather than traders. It was their style to sit on good quality stocks and be content with dividends.

But some to the institutional ranks had different ideas. They wanted to show bigger returns, and quickly, and so the performance game was born. It meant churning their portfolio in search of big capital gains.

As a result, large block transactions on the New York Stock Exchange began to soar, and by the early years of this decade fully 70 per cent of trading on some days was by institutions.

By 1972 the total of big blocks — that is, single involving 10,000 share or more

Wife Can't Retire

By PAUL R. ALLERUP

NEW YORK (UPI) — "Well, one thing you may as well know right now — I will NOT make lunch for you!"

If you haven't guessed it already, that was my wife responding to my announcement that I was going to retire. And had picked the date.

What, I wanted to know, did making lunch have to do with anything? And wasn't that a rather petty point to be making, in response to an announcement of such great importance to our lives?

"Paul," said the woman I have loved and honored for nearly 40 years, "of course it is important. But what you are saying is that YOU are going to retire. How about me? Will I be retiring, too? Am I not as entitled to say, 'That's enough, I've had it?' Making lunch is just the symbol of it all. You are going to stay home, you say. Fine, and you've earned it. Have you, though, given any thought to what this will mean to me? How do I retire from keeping house? From looking after you?"

"Honey," I said, "Don't worry about it. If I want lunch I can make my own. After all, for goodness sake, I can make a sandwich, can't I? I'm not expecting you to fuss over me. I can take care of myself. Just forget I'm here."

"Sure," said my honey, "forget you're here. Easier said than done. And knowing you..."

"Oh, come on, now," I said. "It's got to be more than just lunch. What's really bothering you?"

"Paul," she said, "what's bothering me is something I'm afraid you just won't understand. All these years you've been going off to work every morning, coming home each evening. And what have I been doing in between? 'Keeping

Plan To Ordain Women Former Senator Morse Is Dead 'Invitation To Anarchy'

By GEORGE CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A storm whirled through the Episcopal Church today over plans for 11 women to be ordained in defiance of church disciplines. One critic called the move an invitation to anarchy.

Several bishops in the women's home dioceses said they would not be allowed to function as priests.

"The tragic point of it is that if these very fine, qualified people go ahead and supercede the laws of the church, I can't go along with it," said Bishop Philip F. McNairy, of the Minneapolis diocese, where two of the women reside.

He said they would be barred from serving there as priests.

Similar reactions came from other bishops in charge of the home diocese of the women listed for an irregular ordination ceremony in Philadelphia next Monday.

"I have no doubt of their sincerity, but I have grave doubts about its practical wisdom and its effect on other women standing in line waiting for the priesthood," said Bishop George E. Rath, of the Newark, N.J., diocese, where another candidate lives.

He and other bishops contacted said they would restrict activities in their dioceses of women taking part. The bishops said they themselves favor changes in church regulations to permit ordination of women, but would not approve it without that authorization.

"The tragedy of it is that the church is not ready to do what I think we should have done a long time ago," said Bishop McNairy. He said he saw the planned ordination as "dividing, hurting and angering some people and saddening others."

In Austin, Tex., Mrs. Dorothy Faber, editor of the Christian Challenge, said if the planners of the irregular service "get away with it, then the laws of the church don't mean a thing."

The Christian Challenge is published by an independent Episcopal group, the Foundation for Christian Theology.

In Philadelphia, a local pastor, the Rev. George Rutler, said it would provoke a schism. Another pastor called the planned ordination arrogant and irresponsible.

Under the church canons, candidates for ordination must be recommended by their home bishop, the standing diocesan committee and the pastor and vestry of the home parish.

So far as could be ascertained, home bishops of the women involved—and the standing committees—have not given that approval. According to some bishops, this could subject the women ordained to suspension from the ministry, or trial and removal. They come from seven states.

However, planners of the rebel ordination service—scheduled to be led at Philadelphia's Church of the Advocate by three inactive bishops—maintain that the recommendations from home dioceses are only advisory.

The church's Presiding Bishop John Maury Allin was reported trying to persuade two retired bishops involved, Daniel Corrigan, now of Denver, and Edward Randolph Welles, now of Manset, Maine, not to go through with the service.

A 1972 poll showed that a 74 to 61 majority of the Episcopal House of Bishops favor changes to allow ordination of women.

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Former U.S. Sen. Wayne Morse, one of the first critics of U.S. involvement in Vietnam and a fierce independent whose convictions were respected by friend and foe alike, is dead at 73.

Morse, hospitalized last Wednesday with a urinary tract infection, slipped into a coma early Monday and died of heart and kidney failure.

Jim Miller, a spokesman for Good Samaritan Hospital, said Morse's family had decided against the use of a kidney dialysis machine to prolong his life.

"Some time ago, he made it clear that if he was ever at the end of the line, he didn't want some kind of machine," said Miller. "Philosophically, this wasn't something he would condone."

Funeral arrangements were pending but were expected to be held in Eugene, Ore., where Morse and his widow, Midge, resided. They had three daughters and six grandchildren.

Morse had been hard at work on a campaign to unseat Republican Sen. Bob Packwood, who had ousted Morse in 1968. Two months ago, Morse won the Democratic nomination over Jason Boe, 44, president of the Oregon Senate.

"I didn't always agree with him, but I always knew him to speak with sincerity and conviction," Rep. Edith Green, D-Ore., said in announcing Morse's death to the House.

In the Senate, Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., who turned aside a Morse challenge in 1972, said, "Senator Morse was a politician from a unique mold and an enigma to many people. When convinced of a position on an issue, he was not swayed by political considerations or pressures."

"He was a man never afraid to fight for his convictions," Packwood said.

Morse and former Sen. Ernest Gruening, D-Alaska, who died last month at age 87, were the only senators to vote against the 1964 Gulf of Tonkin resolution, which President Lyndon B. Johnson used to escalate U.S. operations in Southeast Asia.

Born the son of a Wisconsin farmer on Oct. 20, 1900, Morse earned a bachelor's degree at the University of Wisconsin, a law degree from the University of Minnesota and a doctorate of jurisprudence from Columbia University.

After teaching assignments in Wisconsin and Minnesota and at Columbia, Morse moved to Oregon in 1929. He became the dean of the University of Oregon law school two years later. Morse won a seat in the Senate in 1944 and served until his defeat by Packwood in 1968. He was a Republican, Morse became an independent in 1952 and a registered Democrat in 1955.

Chairwoman Caroline Wilkins of the state Democratic Central Committee said selection of Morse's successor on the November ballot probably would be made at a committee meeting Aug. 11.

Receive Grant For Drivers Ed

The Driver and Traffic Safety program at East Carolina University has received a grant of $86,200 from the Governor's Highway Safety Program to enlarge a program in teacher certification in driver education.

Dr. Alfred S. King, coordinator of the ECU program, said the new program is the result of a state Board of Education ruling which requires full certification for all driver education teachers by September 1, 1977. The certification standard requires completion of an undergraduate degree program.

Socialite Wife Will Head Firm

SOUTHFIELD, Mich. (AP) — Dollie Cole, socialite wife of the president of General Motors, has been named to head an auto parts supply firm.

Noel Gage, chairman of Huron Die Casting Inc., said Monday Mrs. Cole had been elected president of the firm. Huron makes injection molded plastic parts for the auto industry and employs about 135 persons.

"Mr. Cole is not a stockholder in the Huron company, and in view of the imminence of his retirement from GM, we see no conflict of interest," Gage said. Ed Cole turns 65 this fall and falls victim to GM's mandatory retirement.

house,' you say. Sure, keeping house. But that hasn't—doesn't—take up all my time every day. So, just like you in your office, I have my own routine. Things I do. Places I go. Interests of my own—not important, maybe. But it is MY time. My very own time. And now this'll all be changed."

"Why?" I said. "Why must it all be changed? Why can't you go right on doing your own thing. Whatever it is."

"See," she said, "that is just what I mean. That crack, 'whatever it is.' To you the way I spend my time is doing 'those silly little things that keep a woman busy during the day.' You give it no importance. You just don't understand. Probably never will."

I am very fond of this lady. She is very fond of me. I am not approaching retirement with any great enthusiasm. I'm wondering, too, what I will do with myself.

"Look, love," I said, "I think you underestimate me. I do understand. I'll do my level best not to get in your way. I will not want you to make lunch. Maybe I'll even help you clean house ('hah'" she said). Anyhow, I'll find things to keep me busy—out of your hair."

She gave me a long look. "I know you will, dear. I'm sure it'll be okay. And you know what bothers me the most? You are taking the big moment of my day away from me."

The big moment of your day? "The moment you come home each night, love. I look forward to that all day. What'll I have to look forward to now?"

"Me making lunch," I said.

Perry To Start For AL; Messersmith Up For NL

By DICK JOYCE

AP Sports Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP) — "I hope we win," said Oakland slugger Reggie Jackson, "but if we don't, it doesn't mean we're an inferior league. We won the world championship the past two years and that's the important thing."

Jackson, Most Valuable Player in both the American League and the World Series last year, was defending the AL's showing in recent All-Star games. The National League has dominated the rivalry by winning 10 of the last 11 meetings.

Tonight the midsummer showdown will be played for the 45th time. Gaylord Perry of Cleveland starts for the American League and Andy Messersmith of Los Angeles for the National before a sellout crowd of 50,235 at Three Rivers Stadium at a national television audience—NBC. Game time is 8:30 p.m., EDT.

Jackson, who will be in right field and bat No. 3, emphasized that he'll play to win, but he won't take any chances on hurting an opposition player or himself.

"I'm going to take the extra base when I can," he said, "and I'm going to try for the diving catch."

He added: "I don't want to hurt myself or my club. It's foremost in my mind that I don't get injured because I'm susceptible to injuries. I haven't played a season yet without getting hurt."

Scrappy Pete Rose, who will bat leadoff and probably play left field for the National League, has a different approach.

"I'm going to play as hard as I always play. I don't want to lose," said the Cincinnati Reds star.

Lee MacPhail, the new AL president, doesn't want to lose either and he took steps so that Dick Williams, the AL manager, had a rested pitching staff. American League clubs were directed to set up their rotation so that All-Star pitchers would not hurl last Sunday. Except for relievers, Rollie Fingers and John Hiller, they all sat out Sunday's games.

"We're going to win at all costs," said Williams "we're going to try to keep our best players out there, whether they are starters or reserves."

Messersmith, who has an 11-2 record and 2.11 earned run average this season, criticized MacPhail's move, saying, "It's kind of farcical to put this game ahead of a pennant race. It's like a busman's holiday. I want to win, but I'm not taking it too seriously."

Manager Yogi Berra's National League team will include Atlanta right fielder Hank Aaron, the all-time home run king, in his final All-Star appearance before retirement.

Berra wasn't certain who would follow Messersmith, but Steve Carlton of Philadelphia, Jon Matlack of the New York Mets, Ken Brett of Pittsburgh and Lynn McGlothen of St. Louis are the most likely since Montreal's Steve Rogers and Atlanta's Buzz Capra worked Sunday.

Williams said he probably would follow Perry with either Boston's Luis Tiant or Jim "Catfish" Hunter of Oakland, adding that he'd lean toward using at least four pitchers.

All-Star Shorts

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Broadcaster Joe Garagiola on Oakland A's slugger Reggie Jackson: "The thing I like about him is that he doesn't treat baseball like it's High Mass."

Garagiola on his old 1952 Pirate team, which finished with a .273 winning percentage: "We had such men as Forrest Main, Clem Keshorek, the O'Brien twins and a fellow who played fiddle ... We lost 112 games on merit that year."

PITTSBURGH (AP) — "I might throw one in on old Hank to make him feel at home," said Gaylord Perry, the American League's starting All-Star pitcher. The suggestion was that Perry, self-described as a reformed spitball pitcher, might toss a wet one to Henry Aaron for old time's sake.

"I didn't say I'd do it," Perry added with a grin. "I said I'm thinking about it."

Meeting in Los Angeles, NASCAR officials said if an infraction by Yarborough had been reported and confirmed during the race, the Timmonsville, S.C., driver would have been given a penalty.

But, under NASCAR rules, such violations must be pointed out during the race. Hence, Allison's claim—though valid—carries no weight because it was reported too late.

At the time, Allison was asked if he was optimistic that his protest would favorably affect the race. The Hueytown, Ala., driver replied, "With NASCAR? You gotta be kiddin'."

It was the second consecutive week that Yarborough had won a race only to have it disputed. A similar episode unfolded July 13 in Bristol at the Volunteer 500 when Buddy Baker's car and Yarborough's car bumped each other on the last lap, giving Yarborough the lead and victory, which also was upheld by NASCAR.

Allison had said he was at least one lap, and possibly two, ahead of Yarborough at the finish of the Nashville 420. He claimed Yarborough had illegally passed a pace car following a nine-car wreck and, during a later wreck, sat idle unnoticed by score-keepers for one lap.

Lyn Kuchler, NASCAR vice president, said a check of scoring cards showed Yarborough probably passed the pace car around the 40th lap.

The pace car is deployed on the track when something hazardous occurs—and is supposed to keep all the cars in their present position, enabling them only to close the gap between racers but not allow any driver to overtake another.

After hours of deliberation following the race, Chief Scorer Joe Epton admitted the error.

"The caution car picked up Allison when it should have picked up (Charlie) Glotzbach," he said of the first wreck. "We later held Glotzbach up a lap when we realized our mistake, but we didn't know until after the race that Cale had gained a lap at the same time."

Kuchler said the ruling was postponed in keeping with a policy of letting tempers cool after an incident. He said he had checked the decision with NASCAR President Bill France Jr.

Besides Kuchler, other officials who upheld Yarborough's victory were Epton and Chief Technical Inspector Bill Gazeaway, who also was at the race. The men met in Los Angeles because they happened to be in the city at the same time but for different reasons.

This Time, The Egg Came Before The Chicken

Kentucky Fried Chicken did not lose a regular season game finishing undefeated but when they got to the City League tournament, they had different results.

KFC was knocked into the losers bracket of the double elimination affair by Sunny side

Eggs in a surprise loss. KFC rebounded to win its way into the finals of the tournament for a rematch against Sunnyside.

But again, the "egg" came before the "chicken" as Sunnyside rolled to an easy 9-3 win over KFC to claim the City League Gold division tourney championship, last night.

Sunnyside will meet the Little Sluggers for the championship later this week.

Sunnyside got two in the first as Gaddis and King reached on errors and scored on a hit and an out. KFC got its first run in the second as C. Vincent singled and scored on L. Wells' double.

In the third, Sunnyside rallied for three runs which was enough to take the win. Sunnyside added two more in the fifth as Addison Bass put one out with a runner on for a 7-1 lead.

Sunnyside picked up one in each of the sixth and seventh. Clark and Aldridge opened the sixth with hits for KFC and scored on a single by Wells and a double by Meeks but they were all the runs they could get.

KFC had one more hit than Sunnyside, 14-13.

Teams Have Compiled Some Impressive Stats

In this year's Boy's Home All-Star game, the South will be battling not only to win but to even up the score on several counts not only in the won-loss column.

Although the South won the first of their series, now in its 12th year, in a lopsided decision, 26-0, the North took the upper hand winning the next six in a row but the South has come back to win two of the last four games.

The two tied last year in the only deadlock of the series.

Overall, the North has the edge in the stats. They are averaging 16.9 points a game, over four points better than the South, 12.2. The biggest game for the North was back in '65 when they blanked the South, 32-0. The South won by nine points, 27-18 in 1970 for their best scoring night but the largest margin of victory for the South was in the first game.

Until last year the closest game was in 1967 when the North survived a fourth quarter rally by the South to win, 19-14. Last year, Greenville's Reggie Perkins scored in the fourth quarter to even the score.

Both teams have amassed good rushing totals. The North has the advantage averaging 134 yards a game. They have an 11-game total of 1474 yards. The South is just shy of 112 yards a game. They had rushed for 1230 in the 11 games.

In first downs, the teams are fairly close. The North again has the average edge, 11-9.1. The North has been more accurate in their passing connecting on 61 of 145 for 42 percent and 822 yards for an average of 74.7 a game. The South has done well in their passing attack hitting 62 out of 160 tries for 668 yards, 60.7 a game and 39 percent.

Over the years, the South has been more of a first quarter team scoring 11 times in the opening frame. The North has pushed over scores six times in the first period but warmed up in the later periods scoring eight times in the second, six in the third and eight in the fourth quarters. The South has tallied five times in the second, three in the third and six in the fourth.

Overall the South has scored more touchdowns, 25-21, but they were more in bunches than in steady fashion.

In 1966, Toby Morgan, then of Hickory, ran back a kickoff 90 yards for the longest run in a Boy's Home game. He also set a record for most touchdowns in that game scoring three times.

On the three scoring plays alone he compiled 222 yards. On two TD's he rushed for 132 yards taking the ball over on gallops of 86 and 46 yards. He also holds the rushing record, 247 in 11 carries also, set in the '66 game.

Oxford's Perry Williams holds the record for most extra points having set the passing record in the 1965 North win rolling up 134 yards in 10 attempts.

The game has not only been a good football players' game but has drawn the fans in good style. Only twice has attendance dropped below 5,000 and both times was because of rain.

The biggest crowd on hand at a Boy's Home classic was in 1971 when 8,200 people saw the South win 21-7. The first year the North Carolina Jaycees sponsored the game, they sold 5,600 tickets and increased that by almost 50 percent the following year as 7,500 came. In '66 and '67 the numbers dropped off to 2,100 in '71. The average is 5,793.

The Jaycees hope this year's game will be just as exciting as those in years past.

Kickers Needing Stronger Legs

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (AP) — The game was scoreless. With about 30 seconds left in the half, Houston Oilers' kicking specialist Finn Seaman trotted out for a field goal attempt from the opposition's 37. Last year in the National Football League, the kick would have been successful with several yards to spare. This year, it fell short by inches. "The field goal kicker, he's going to have to be some kind of strong-legged field goal kicker if we're going to see some three points," said Oilers owner Bud Adams. This year the goal posts are 10 yards deep in the end zone rather than on the goal line in the NFL. This new rule and others got what apparently was their first full-scale game tryout this past weekend when a squad of mostly rookies and some veterans from the Oilers' training camp beat the San Antonio Toros 13-7 in an exhibition with the minor league team. "It's like it's 50 million miles away from you," Houston Coach Sid Gillman said of the goal posts' new position. Earlier in the half, Seaman was not called on by Gillman when the Oilers' drove to the San Antonio 40 and then to the 44. Both times, Gillman chose to punt, rather than attempt what this year would have been field goals of 57 and 61 yards. The Toros elected to punt once when they stalled on the Oiler 27. Fans saw nine punts in the first half. Gillman sees more excitement in punt and kickoff returns but also worries about injuries in kick coverage. On punts this year, only two members of the punting team can run downfield before the ball is kicked. On kickoffs, the ball is placed on the kicking team's 35-yard line instead of the 40. In last weekend's contest, all seven kickoffs were returned. None found their way into the end zone for touchbacks. "Oh boy, what a premium for great return men," Gillman declared. "Get a little organization (blocking) and it's goodbye." The NFL officials who refereed the game were lenient on the punt rule, calling only one penalty, although in several instances ineligible linemen began charging downfield prematurely.

Allen Not Ready To Concede

By JOE MOOSHIL
AP Sports Writer
CHICAGO (AP) — When Dick Allen speaks, listen closely. His voice is as low as his upper eyelids are heavy which earned him the nickname of "Sleepy" as a youngster. Then interpret his remarks. He had just had one of those Dick Allen games. A homer, two doubles, two runs batted in and two runs scored for another Chicago White Sox victory. "Gentlemen, what can I tell you?" he asked in his most majestic manner. "Nothing special," said the Allen who had hit four home runs in five games. "They're just throwing it where I'm swinging."

When asked a personal question or one which might provoke controversy, Allen responds "Nah, got nothin' to say 'bout that." Ask him about the White Sox pennant chances, Allen responds. "Yes, we can beat Oakland. It'll take some runs. Got to grind it out. We've played them heads up but we get no help."

What Allen means is the Sox have held their own against the A's, winning three of seven games, but the other teams aren't. It's not that Allen doesn't respect the two-time world champions. It's just that he's not awed by them and not ready to concede them the Western Division title in the American League.

"Numbers aren't important. It's getting what you need for the Sox is what interests me. Not any records." The meaning is his 26 home runs to lead both leagues have no bearing on how well he's going. Homers are important if a homer is needed to tie or win the game. A single which wins a game is more important than a wasted homer.

"We've got 11 games to go with Oakland and that's it," said Allen. "I like our chances against them right now better than any other club. We're tough. We can open up and we can win one-run games."

Allen gets more than his share of criticism. He's been ripped for not going through spring training in the usual manner. He gets criticized for not taking batting practice. His replies this season have been his 26 homers, 70 runs batted in and a current .302 batting average. He has a good chance of bettering his career high of 40 home runs hit in 1966.

"Just doing the best I can," said Allen. "He's doing better than that," said Manager Chuck Tanner. "He's having the best year in his life. He's doing it all. What more can anyone ask? And I think my program is helping him."

Tanner goes along with Allen. "He's doing better than that," said Manager Chuck Tanner. "He's having the best year in his life. He's doing it all. What more can anyone ask? And I think my program is helping him."

len's spring training routine because "He's never out of shape" and as long as Allen hits he doesn't have to take batting practice. Tanner's program for Allen is rest. He might sit him out of a day game after a night game and seldom makes him play the second game of a double-header.

"Too many people misunderstand him. A writer comes in and asks me where Allen was. I said I didn't know. "He walked off thinking Allen hadn't arrived at the ballpark yet. You know where he was? I found out later he was down in the dugout watching the other team take batting practice."

Rossman Earned Title Of Being Jewish Bomber

By ED SCHUYLER Jr.
AP Sports Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Mike Rossman was afraid to go out for football in high school because he didn't want to risk an injury that would affect his work as a professional fighter. The 19-year-old Rossman, who fought professionally during his senior year, has acquired a 13-0-1 record punching for pay since last August and also the tag of "The Jewish Bomber."

Rossman, who has scored 10 knockouts, could—in the opinion of some boxing observers—develop into the first top Jewish fighter in U.S. boxing in a long time. "A newspaper man in Philadelphia called me 'The Jewish Bomber,' said Rothman, who will fight Irish Mike Baker, 19-2, of Washington in an eight-round middleweight co-feature next Monday night at Madison Square Garden.

In New York, a boxer must be 20 before he can fight 10 rounds. Rossman just turned 19 July 1. The feature fight will be a 12-round light-heavyweight fight between Angel Oquendo of Puerto Rico and Argentine Jorge Ahumada, who in his fight narrowly missed winning the light heavyweight title when his bout with champion Bob Foster ended in controversial draw.

Rossman, of Turnersville, N.J., got interested in boxing by hanging around gyms as a kid in Philadelphia where he turned into an avid fan. A photographer asked him to pose Monday during a press luncheon with left hand extended and his right hand held close to his body.

"No, that's not the way," Rossman said quietly, striking a stance with his right hand extended and his left arm tucked to his body. "This is the way the old timers did it. Now that's a pose."

Rossman stopped being a student-fighter when he was graduated in June, and he's happy about that because his chosen profession prohibited him from being an "average" student.

"The kids would go to parties and I couldn't, and I'd have to get up at 4:30 and do road work before going to school," he said.

"Kids in school, they play around. In the gym, guys are serious."

Durrance Heads List Of Rushers

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Tommy Durrance tries harder—or more, at least. The running back of the Jacksonville Sharks is No. 1 in World Football League rushing yardage, according to statistics released today by the league.

But that's because he has been handed the ball more than anyone else. Durrance has run up 184 yards in two games this season, 14 more than last week's leader, J.J. Jennings of Memphis. But Durrance has had 48 shots with the ball, six more than Jennings.

Florida's Jim Strong is third with 130 yards, followed by Kermit Johnson of Southern California with 117 and Jim Ford of New York with 109. Ford has done the most with the ball, a 5.5-yard average.

Bubba Wyche of Detroit is the passing yardage leader with 447, Norris Weese of the Hawaiians is first in completion percentage, having connected on 29 of 47 attempts in two games for a 61.7 mark, and Virgil Carter of Chicago leads in completions with 33 in 62 attempts.

James Scott of Chicago has caught 14 passes to lead WFL receivers but Hubie Bryant of Detroit, with nine receptions, has made the most of them, gaining 179 yards, a 19.9-yard per-catch average.

Tony Adams of Southern California, with two touchdowns—both rushing—and one "action point," leads the league in scoring with 15 points.

Five WFL players have made two interceptions, led by Houston's Pat Gibbs, who has run them back for 40 yards.

Alonzo Emery of Southern California is the No. 1 kickoff returner with a 52-yard average. Alvin Wyatt has averaged 19.6 yards to lead punt-returners and Chuck Ramsey, with a 44.7-yard average, is tops among punters.

CBS Sports To Have Shake-up

By MICHAEL B. FALLON
The Worcester Gazette
For The Associated Press
WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — Bob Wussler, the new vice president of CBS Sports, says comparing him to a new coach admonishing his team that "nobody's job is safe" is a little bit corny.

But the 37-year-old network executive, who shifted from station general manager of Chicago's CBS affiliate 10 days ago to vice president for CBS Sports is making some bold promises.

"A year from today you won't recognize the place," Wussler said in New York. "I plan a total facelifting which will follow a thorough re-evaluation of what we do, how we cover things and the image we have to the sports viewing community."

Wussler, who as CBS's director of special events, planned coverage of Apollo space shots, political conventions and presidential journeys, is candid about the network's reputation for lack of aggressiveness in the sports programming field.

The past year, under former sports head William MacPhail, earned him the nickname of "Sleepy" as a youngster. Then interpret his remarks. He had just had one of those Dick Allen games. A homer, two doubles, two runs batted in CBS, among other things: —Lost Ray Scott, regarded as the one of TV's most capable football announcers; —Fired Elgin Baylor for incompetency as basketball color analyst during the NBA playoffs and replaced him with Rick Barry.

—About a month ago the Kentucky Derby, a CBS staple for more than 20 years, ran off to the American Broadcasting Co.

Two seasons ago, the National Hockey League switched to the National Broadcasting Co. Wussler indicates that he is under pressure to upgrade the network's sports image in a hurry. Recently, he has been meeting with sports packagers, independent producers and others who have TV sports rights that CBS might show interest in acquiring.

"Our biggest weakness?" he said. "Leadership and direction. I don't think we are organized to compete with NBC and ABC.

"There is no question that we are running third and at times we are perceived to not even be competitive ..."

Shero Signs Pact With Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Coach Fred Shero, agreeing to return to defend the Stanley Cup title, says he will be making as much money as some of his National Hockey League champion Philadelphia Flyers. Shero, 48, saying "I never really wanted to leave Philadelphia," signed a three-year contract with the Flyers Monday, ending speculation he might enter law school or jump to the World Hockey Association.

Contract terms were not disclosed, but it was estimated to be about $80,000 a year.

Mark Steward, Shero's agent, said Shero would have gotten more money from Minnesota of the WHA. The Fighting Saints reportedly offered Shero the jobs of coach, general manager and part owner.

However, he added, "when you take in other considerations, it is a fine contract."

Shero had two years remaining on a three-year pact. His old contract was torn up.

Shero has coached the Flyers for three years, guiding them to a fourth-place finish in the NHL West in his first year, second place in his second year, and the Stanley Cup this year.

The Worry Clinic Brain Requires A Stimulation

Don Bleitz shows how you can be a true scientist just as a hobby. Such hobbies will keep your brain exercised and your muscles more vigorous than those of older people who stagnate. Imitate Moses and Caleb, if you wish long life!

By George W. Crane
Ph.D., M.D.
CASE A-692: Don Bleitz entertained Mrs. Crane and me on one of my lecture trips to California.

The reason I am mentioning him is to show young people what true scientific dedication really is.

For Don was then operating a pharmaceutical firm, though he had been a deft photographer and photoengraver.

"Dr. Crane," he smiled somewhat apologetically, "my real hobby is birds."

"For I try to get unusual shots of species that may be nearing extinction."

"Last summer, I thus flew to Alaska and spent a month there, taking pictures of wild fowl."

"I'd set up my camera in what seemed a desirable location; then arrange for the birds to take their own pictures when they seized a bit of food that would trigger the shutter."

Don had some of the most amazing four-color plates of birds that I have ever seen, for he was preparing a large, slick paper book on North American feathered creatures.

"Dr. Crane," he added, "one species that has been declared extinct, puzzled me."

"For a friend in Texas described what seemed to be a pair of these birds that were nesting on his ranch."

"So I negotiated with a local aviator to have a plane ready for instant take-off."

"And advised my friend to telephone me the moment he saw either one of these rare birds."

Don Bleitz is an ornithologist by avocation, though he would make a superb professor thereof at the university.

All his spare time is spent in his photographic laboratory, developing exquisite 4-color plates of birds.

He is as much a true scientist in that field, as was Archimedes, who brushed aside the invading barbarians as he kept concentrating on specific gravity and other problems in physics.

Up till we visited Don Bleitz, Mrs. Crane and I were not very familiar with birds.

Oh, I could probably identify maybe a dozen at most, including robins, blue jays, sparrows, etc.

But I didn't know there are many species of sparrows including the beautiful fox sparrow and song sparrow, marked like a little quail.

Since then, we have bird feeders at our homes and I have counted as many as 95 various birds at one time eating in winter where I have cleared the snow and spread out bird seed.

cracked corn, etc.

In fact, I feel I'd become a bird watcher as a hobby if I were invalided or a Senior Citizen with nothing else to whet my wits.

So I wish to salute not only Don Bleitz, but all those other scientific observers who are so dedicated they will spend hours or weeks digging up original data about birds or rocks or flowers.

If you older folks are due to retire from your previous jobs, start planning a hobby that will exercise your brain and also give you some physical activity.

For you should never stagnate just because you have reached 65.

Biblical Moses and Caleb were just in their prime at 80, so insure yourself a more alert brain and more vigorous body by means of an appropriate hobby.

Nat'l Geographic Specials Off Air

By JAY SHARBUTT
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Barring last-minute changes by CBS, the 1974-75 season will be the first in 10 years that the National Geographic Society hasn't had one or more of its specials on network television.

The reason: A federal court decision last month which ordered the Federal Communications Commission to delay until September 1975 revision the FCC had made in its prime time access rule.

The revisions in effect would have increased by 1½ hours a week the time each network could have on local stations during the prime evening hours, the FCC says.

But because of the court order, CBS, which had planned to air six half-hour National Geographic specials on Saturday, said it was forced to drop the programs from its 1974-75 schedule.

It was the second setback of the year for the Society. Earlier it had been told ABC — which aired National Geographic specials last season — wasn't renewing its contract with them for the new season.

After ABC's decision, "we in essence were looking for a network when CBS told us it had this opening from 7:30 to 8 on Saturday nights," said Dennis B. Kane, head of the Society's TV division.

He said the six shows, produced in association with documentarian David L. Wolper, originally were planned as 60-minute programs, the usual length of National Geographic specials.

They were cut to 30 minutes each for CBS.

"It seemed at the time the CBS offer was the only thing available to us and it was up to us to make the decision on whether we wanted that or not," Kane said.

"We finally said, 'Rather than leave television, because we feel that it is important, we'll stay in it in the half-hour format and see what happens the following year.'"

They'll appear during the new TV season in Canada, he added, but there's little chance they'll appear then on CBS, which aired National Geographic specials for eight seasons until 1973-74.

Although CBS expressed hope it could air the shows then, the Society is free to deal with other networks, he said. He was asked why National Geographic doesn't try the syndicated route.

"We may," he said. "We're not ruling that out. We've even thought of trying public television, but we haven't decided which direction we're going to take."

"We may just take the year off, finish all our shows and be back on next year the way we normally have been. But there's no question we feel very badly that we probably won't be on this year."

Strip Miners Win In Key House Vote

WASHINGTON (AP) — Environmentalists have suffered a number of major setbacks on House legislation to curb the abuses of strip coal mining. By a 65 to 19 vote Monday, the House agreed to exempt strip miners who remove entire mountaintops from the stringent requirements that would apply to those who do their mining on the steep sides of the mountains. The amendment was offered by Rep. John Slack, D-W. Va., who said steep slope regulations should not apply to mountaintop removal mining because when the top of a mountain is entirely removed, a flat "plateau" is created. The problems of strip mining and land reclamation on such a plateau are different from those on a sharp incline, he argued. In another defeat for environmentalists, the House rejected 58 to 13 a proposed amendment by Andrew Young, D-Ga., that would have banned all strip mining on mountain slopes that are steeper than 20 degrees. It also rejected an amendment that would have established tough federal strip mining standards within 120 days. The bill provides that these standards be phased in gradually over a three-year period. In the meantime, less stringent interim standards would be in force. The controversial legislation has passed the Senate in a slightly different form. House debate was due to resume today. The legislation would establish a federal-state program for regulating strip mining.

Candidates Run Into Each Other

ATLANTA (AP) — With 17 candidates for governor and 12 running for lieutenant governor in Georgia this summer, even the candidates are having a problem remembering who's who. State Rep. George Busbee, a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor, was busy hand-shaking at a convention of broadcasters. "What station are you with?" Busbee asked one man. "Station? I'm running against you for governor," the man replied.

Food Stamp Program A Profitable Plan For N.C.

Tobacco Boycott Threat Is Raised In Valdosta

MOULTRIE, Ga. (AP) — Sales on the Georgia-Florida flue-cured tobacco markets in Moultrie and Tifton were blocked Monday by farmers unhappy over prices, but sales continued in Valdosta after the threat of a boycott.

The Federal-State Market News Service said most grades of tobacco showed increases of $2 to $3 per hundred pounds over last Thursday's prices. The top price offered was $95 per hundred pounds, the service said.

The service said 5,924,182 pounds were sold Monday for a total of $5,439,604 and an average of $91.82 per hundred pounds. Opening week sales had averaged $86.17.

For the season, Georgia and Florida farmers have sold 33,509,736 pounds for $29,209,354, an average of $87.17.

The boycott began when J. C. Saunders, a Moultrie farmer, told buyers he could not afford to sell his crop at the offering price of 95 cents per pound.

Saunders' crop was passed, but the buyers were confronted on the next row by a group of 25 to 30 farmers who asked warehouse owner Frank Pidcock to halt sales.

Pidcock replied that under law he could not stop sales, but that the farmers had a right to refuse to sell their crops. Another warehouseman, Graham Cole, said sales in public warehouses could not be halted legally.

Among the farmers who refused to offered prices was state Rep. Dorsey Mathews, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee. "Gentlemen, we cannot produce crops at this price," he told the other farmers.

The farmers told buyers they needed at least $1.00 per pound for their top grade leaf. Pidcock said he talked with Agriculture Secretary Early Butz, and was told if prices had not picked up by Wednesday he would ask the tobacco companies to pay more.

"We're not trying to be unreasonable," said producer Roscoe Gay. "We just want to be able to stay in business."

In Washington, Rep. W. S. "Bill" Stuckey, D-Ga., said he would testify before the House Agriculture Committee today on the tobacco situation.

"We are beginning to get a little pressure to Butz," Stuckey said. "He is to investigate to see if any collusion is involved" on the part of buying companies.

"I think what they (the committee) really ought to look at is that if there is collusion to hold prices down, there's the answer right there," he said in a telephone interview.

Stuckey said he thinks prices will rise, but added, "The point is, though, will prices go up high enough to keep them (the farmers) in business?"

By RICK SCOTT
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The federal food stamp program is a big and profitable business for North Carolina.

It now costs the state about $2 million a year to dole out the food coupons, which will buy about $125 million in groceries. The state collects more than $5 million in sales tax when recipients use the coupons.

That leaves a profit of about $3 million annually for the state treasury. And, there is the profit to the grocer who sells food now to customers who formerly could not buy.

The state's top food stamp administrator, John H. Kerr, says he expects the number of food stamp recipients in North Carolina to eventually reach about 600,000. Currently about 335,000 persons are recipients.

New changes in state law and federal guidelines have greatly increased the number of persons eligible for food stamps. Only a few get the stamps free, however.

State law now requires all counties to participate in the stamp program. The commodity program — under which the poor were given food instead of coupons — has been discontinued. Kerr said 31 of the state's 100 counties have begun food stamp programs since January.

The new federal guidelines have increased the maximum net income a person can have and still receive the stamps.

For example, a household of four with a monthly net income — after taxes and deductions — of $500 is eligible to buy $150 worth of food stamps per month. This family, however, will have to pay $126 for $150 worth of coupons.

A four-person household with a monthly net income of less than $30 pays nothing for $150 worth of stamps.

Through "outreach" programs to find the poor and enroll them in the food stamp program, Kerr hopes to increase the number of food stamp recipients to about 450,000 by next July.

A special U.S. Senate commission estimated that a million people are eligible for food stamps in North Carolina, based on income figures. But Kerr disagrees with the estimate. There are retired people, for example, with no income except from resources such as savings accounts and investments. Many are not eligible, because of these resources, Kerr said.

But Kerr agreed that many people eligible for food stamps are not in the program. And, he puts some of the blame on administration of the program at the county level.

Many of the offices where applicants are interviewed for certification in the program are understaffed. And, they usually are located in the county seat, often a good distance from the rural poor.

Critics of the food stamp program in North Carolina say the "profit" the state makes from the program should be reinvested to improve the program. Kerr agrees, but this is primarily a matter for the legislature.

The money made in the program could be used to increase efficiency, hire more personnel and develop innovative programs to reach more poor people.

Kerr notes a great difference in the way the coupon program is administered from county to county. He cited Mecklenburg and Durham counties as good operations.

In some counties the coupons can be obtained through the mail, after certification is approved. Kerr hopes this program can be expanded.

Some critics want to abolish the stamp program. They charge the stamps cost too much, that they are too restricted in their use for food items only, that there is often harassment and red tape involved in obtaining the coupons, and that there is a stigma attached to their use.

Most of these critics prefer a cash plan, such as a guaranteed annual income. But Kerr contends many would go hungry if they received cash instead of coupons good only for food.

He says there is often truth to the charge of harassment and red tape in obtaining the stamps and says that problem needs to be corrected.

Kerr also is concerned that food stamps recipients use the coupons "wisely." He would like to expand the number of nutritionists to teach the poor how to buy and prepare food for balanced diets.

There is some fraud in the program, Kerr says, "but less than in most other assistance program." He says the U.S. Department of Agriculture, which operate the food stamp program, has a representative in each county to investigate possible misuse of the coupons.

Applicants for food stamps must be certified by their county social services department. Each month a recipient receives an authorization card, allowing him to buy the stamps. He can then purchase them at a variety of outlets, including Post Offices in some places, banks in others, the social services department or by mail.

Prepared To Defy Court

NEW YORK (AP) — Time magazine quotes John W. Dean III as saying President Nixon was prepared in 1971 to defy the U.S. Supreme Court if it had ruled against a proposed nuclear test.

But the high court ruled 8-1 in the government's favor in a suit brought by environmentalists who wanted to halt an atomic bomb test on Amchitka Island in the Aleutian chain off Alaska.

The magazine quoted Dean, a former White House aide and counsel to Nixon, as saying in an interview that "the President was prepared to defy the Supreme Court if it ruled against the Amchitka blast in 1971."

"He was going to say 'pull the trigger' and then explain that he had taken the action because it was vital to the military position of the United States vis-a-vis Russia," he was quoted.

"Everyone was in readiness to act anyway if the ruling had gone the other way," Dean said in the magazine interview.

Local Students On Dean's List

LAURINBURG—Two Greenville students have been named to the Dean's List for the spring term at St. Andrews' Presbyterian College.

Named to the list are Karen B. Tripp, a junior, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bryant Tripp of Rt. 5, Greenville, and Mary B. Matney, sophomore, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bronson Matney Jr. of Greenville. Miss Matney is being named to the Dean's List for the second consecutive time.

In order to attain the Dean's List, freshmen and sophomores must earn an academic average of 3.25 or better, with upperclassmen required to have an average of 3.50.
