Price Of Oil Set To Rise Next Week

By FERRY WIMMER
VIENNA, Austria (UPI) — The world's major oil exporters decided unanimously Saturday to raise oil prices 10 per cent starting next week, with the possibility of another increase in mid-1976. President Ford's top energy adviser termed the move "outrageous."

Experts estimated the increase will raise the world oil bill by $10 billion a year and boost the cost of American oil imports by $2.5 billion.

After four days of hard bargaining, oil ministers of the 13-nation Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries said the new price of $11.51 a barrel would be in effect from Oct. 1 until next June 30.

The current price, frozen since January 1, has been $10.46. These are prices for typical Saudi Arabian light crude.

In Washington, Federal Energy Administrator Frank Zarb, informed of the OPEC decision, said, "It's outrageous."

In a blast at Congress, which he has blamed for failing to pass Ford's program for making America independent of foreign oil, Zarb added, "I'm not sure whether it is an OPEC or congressional price."

The increase was called moderate in Paris and French government sources said it would enhance prospects of a worldwide accord on energy and raw materials.

In the OPEC meeting, Iran pressed for an increase of 15 to 16 per cent, but Saudi Arabia, the world's biggest oil exporter, fought throughout to limit the size of the increase.

Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani, the Saudi Arabian oil minister, said repeatedly that he wanted a continuation of the nine-month price freeze that expires next Tuesday.

But in private negotiations he came around to the compromise 10 per cent figure proposed by Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates.

"This is the best I was able to get, but I am not as happy as I was when I arrived," he told reporters.

Yamani said he was unhappy with the decision to review prices again next June. He said he wanted a freeze "at least until the end of 1976."

Proponents of a price increase said it was needed to offset the erosion of earnings caused by Western inflation.

U.S. Vulnerable To Price Hike

By RICHARD E. LERNER
WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford said Saturday worsened inflation and greater unemployment will result from a 10 per cent oil price increase announced by exporting nations. He said Congress is to blame for failing to spur U.S. oil independence.

"We will continue to be vulnerable to arbitrary price increases — which will take away billions of American dollars and thousands of America's jobs — until Congress faces up to the energy problem and makes the hard decisions for Americans to regain their energy independence," Ford said.

"The American people should realize that Congress has refused to take any step to reduce our vulnerability to such whims of the OPEC (Organization of Petroleum Exporting Nations) oil cartel," Ford said.

"So long as Congress refuses to enact a program which will allow America to produce its own energy with its own workers and to set its own prices, we will find ourselves increasingly vulnerable to OPEC."

Ford's blast at Congress came in a statement released after he conferred with Federal Energy Administrator Frank Zarb.

Earlier, Ford discussed the world energy problem with French Foreign Minister Jean Sauvagnargues.

Zarb told reporters OPEC's action would raise the price of a gallon of gasoline a penny or a penny and a half. "Am I mad? Yeah, I am," he said, calling the increase "outrageous."

Ford was less critical of OPEC than of Congress. "I strongly regret the price increase announced today by OPEC, though it reflects a moderating influence by some oil producing countries," the President said.

Ford said the hike was not as high as some expected "but nonetheless will have a 'significant impact.'"

The President said the OPEC action proves wrong the position of lawmakers opposed to decontrolling domestic oil to spur production.

Energy was a major topic of Ford's Oval Office meeting with Sauvagnargues and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger.

Kissinger said later that the OPEC action was "better than it could have been."

A jovial President greeted Sauvagnargues as the first sunshine after nearly a week of rain streamed through the Oval Office window. "With sunshine we get good humor," Ford said. "We haven't had much sunshine for a long time."

The banter continued while photographers were present, but the conversation then settled into a serious discussion of international economic matters.

Talk centered on planning for the second meeting of oil consuming nations scheduled for next month, the statement said.

Ford planned to travel to the presidential retreat at Camp David, Md. later Saturday with his wife, Betty.

"Ridiculous"

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — Prisons Director Ralph Edwards has told state legislators that it is "ridiculous" to spend $200 million on prison construction but that it will be necessary unless lawmakers provide alternatives.

Edwards suggested to the Commission on Correctional Programs Friday that instead of a large building program, county and city jails could be used for state inmates. He said single-cell units should be added at some of the present medium-security prisons.

He said it would take $50 million per year to operate an expanded prison system and this would be a heavy burden on the state's taxpayers.

But Edwards said Saturday

he was not suggesting that the plan be abandoned.

"If other things don't happen, then the long range plan that we submitted last year is going to have to occur," he said. "We are reaching the saturation point now."

Rep. Herbert Hyde, D-Buncombe, vice chairman of the commission, asked Edwards if he was speaking on behalf of his boss, Secretary of Corrections David Jones.

"I hope I am," Edwards said. Edwards said the state needs more single-cell units, but they need not be in high-rise prisons as had been suggested.

He added that county jails are now running 30 to 40 per cent occupancy.

To Talk Egyptian Aid

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Administration and Egyptian sources say U.S. officials have a commitment to discuss military aid with President Anwar Sadat when he visits here the last week in October, but there have been no promises to supply arms to Egypt.

Both White House and State Department officials made a point Friday of toning down the impression given by President Ford when he said in an interview that the administration felt it had "an implied commitment" to supply some military equipment to the Egyptians.

"There is no commitment either direct or indirect," said State Department spokesman Robert Anderson. He said that when Sadat arrives for talks here, "we will just have to wait and see what develops."

White House spokesman Ron Nessen, meanwhile, said the only commitment made to Sadat was to talk about U.S. arms.

Egyptian sources said Sadat would be arriving with a "shopping list" that includes jet fighters. He has accused the Russians, once Cairo's principal supplier, with taking back four MIG25 fighters and otherwise not filling Egypt's needs since the 1973 war with Israel.

The tentative date for Sadat to visit Washington is Oct. 28. While in the United States he will also address the U.N. General Assembly. The visit is designed to symbolize and accelerate a new friendship between the United States and Egypt.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger has made the cultivation of Sadat the cornerstone of the administration's Middle East policy and guided the Egyptian president into Suez and Sinai disengagement agreements with Israel.

Egypt is expected to get about $500 million in economic aid besides whatever arms Sadat may be promised. Israel is in line for a fresh supply of F15 jet fighters, Lance missiles and laser-guided bombs as part of a $2.5 billion military aid request.

Meanwhile, Congress is delaying approval of sending some 200 civilian technicians to surveillance posts in the Sinai. The principal issue in dispute is Kissinger's unwillingness to make public the texts of U.S. understandings with Israel and Egypt.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee will meet in executive session Tuesday to discuss the Sinai issue and the House International Relations Committee has postponed action until Wednesday or Thursday at the earliest.

The protocols for the Sinai accord were completed by Israeli and Egyptian negotiators in Geneva on Tuesday. However, Israel has said it will not sign them formally until Congress approves the assignment of American monitors.

Congress will take a 10-day recess beginning Oct. 10.

"Obviously a prolonged delay will not be helpful," Anderson said.

New Network For Police

RALEIGH (AP) — Information on every North Carolinian who has a run-in with the law would be stored in a computer system and be available to police agencies nationwide under a plan that has been approved by the Governor's Committee on Law and Order.

The 15-7 vote Friday overruled objections that the system would duplicate existing facilities and possibly violate citizens' privacy.

The computer is expected to cost about $14 million over the next two or three years and be put under the Department of Natural and Economic Resources but be administered by an independent board.

Favoring the program were mostly Republicans led by Superior Court Judge Donald Smith, an appointee of Gov. Jim Holshouser.

Charles Dunn, director of the State Bureau of Investigation, and Atty. Gen. Rufus Edmisten opposed the system. Both said the system could end up violating privacy rights of citizens and allow a "Big Brother" government.

Edmisten, a Democrat, called the computer a "monster" and said it would duplicate the existing Police Information Network (PIN).

Information on every person who becomes involved with the criminal justice system would be stored in the machine. Arrest records, investigative reports, court actions, prison records and parole information would all be stored.

In addition, the North Carolina computer would be part of a national system of computers now being developed under sponsorship of the federal Law Enforcement Assistance Administration. Federal guidelines to take effect in 1977 will forbid the public having access to the stored information.

Under the PIN system, police and other criminal justice agencies around the state can get information on vehicle registration, stolen goods and traffic violations.

"PIN, compared to this, is like comparing General Telephone with Southern Bell," said Sam Long, counsel to Holshouser.

If federal rules change, Long said the computer could end up including information on mental patients and welfare recipients. Rules now forbid that being included.

The $14 million cost of the system would be about one year's LEAA grant to North Carolina.

Hospitals May Insure Themselves

RALEIGH (AP)—Just hours before their current medical malpractice insurance policies expire next week, 43 hospital administrators will learn whether a plan that would have hospitals insuring themselves will work.

At a meeting Friday, 48 members of the North Carolina Hospital Association tentatively agreed to the self-insurance plan, but it will require agreement of the Lloyd's of London insurance company.

If the plan is implemented, each participating hospital will annually contribute $200 per bed to the fund. In the event of a suit, the fund would pay up to $100,000 with a maximum total payment of $2 million a year.

If Lloyd's of London agrees to the plan, it would get part of the $200 per bed and would pay the remaining part of any claim above $100,000 and pay the excess if total claims surpass $2 million in a year.

The assessments would raise about $3 million a year.

A representative of Lloyd's was at the meeting and will fly to London Sunday to discuss the matter with the insurance firm. But, Paul R. Brislen said he wouldn't have an answer before Tuesday. Current malpractice policies for 43 hospitals expire Wednesday.

Marion Foster, president of the NCHA, said the plan would be more expensive at first and probably would force an increase in charges to patients. In the long run, he said, the plan would save hospitals money because they would have control of the situation and not be at the mercy of insurance companies.

William MacNeary, the association's insurance consultant, said increases for malpractice insurance fees approved by Insurance Commissioner John Ingram raise the rates to $100 a bed and will go to $200 a bed after five years. The expiring Employer's Mutual of Wausau policy held by 43 hospitals now has rates of $17 per bed.

Foster said the cost to patients would go from the current $90 a day to $92 with the insurance rate increase and an additional $2 would be tacked on by the end of the five years.

Resistance to the self-insurance plan came primarily from large hospitals such as Moses Cone in Greensboro and North Carolina Baptist in Winston-Salem. But, the plan was supported by the Wake County hospital system which would have an assessment this year of $102,600.

The self-insurance program would cover hospital workers such as nurses and laboratory technicians but not physicians who would still have to get their own coverage.

Michigan Mutual Insurance Co. had considered offering a policy to the 43 hospitals by putting it in a reinsurance pool set up by a new state law. That firm backed off after more than 100 companies won a temporary court order exempting them from the pool.

The state law, aimed at guaranteeing availability of malpractice insurance, is being challenged in the courts.

Meanwhile, St. Paul Fire and Marine Insurance Co. was considering a concession by Ingram on its demands for higher rates and a change in form of coverage. That firm insures 97 per cent of the state's physicians and several large hospitals.

MacNeary said it is doubtful that St. Paul would cover the hospitals even if the firm accepts Ingram's compromise.

"Some Talk"

Pitt County Memorial Hospital Board of Trustees chairman W. B. Duke said Saturday he could make no comment on the hospital's involvement with a proposed hospital self-insurance plan until after state insurance commissioner John Ingram's Monday meeting with insurance company and hospital representatives.

"There has been some talk on it," Duke said, "but we don't know what we are going to do. We are in a dilemma until after Monday."

Duke also said the hospital has received an extension on its malpractice coverage until after the meeting. "We will be covered until a decision is made Monday," Duke said.

Some hospitals in the state whose medical malpractice will expire this week are considering cutting back their services to only emergency patients if insurance coverage can't be obtained. Duke said Pitt Hospital's extended coverage will prevent the need for a cutback.

Cox To Run For Mayor

City Councilman Percy Cox announced Friday that he definitely decided to be a candidate for mayor in the Oct. 7 municipal elections on a write-in basis.

Cox said that he planned now to actively campaign for the post.

The veteran councilman, who has served as Mayor Pro-tem for the past eight years, did not file for reelection to the City Council and indicated earlier this week that he was gauging potential support as a write-in candidate before making a campaign commitment. Rumors had circulated that Cox might attempt to unseat Mayor Eugene West.

Cox joins West and mayoral candidate Willis Stancill in the race for the top city post. West and Stancill will be listed on the official ballot while Cox will not, as he failed to file by the deadline.

A Greenville native, he is owner of Cox Armature Works. He has served 12 years a member of the Council.

He served two years in the Army during World War II. He is a member of First Presbyterian Church and is a member and past governor of the Moose Lodge. Cox is also a member of the Elks Lodge and is a Mason.

The councilman is married to the former Jancie Brown of New York City and they have five children.

Funny Smell Was Cat Food

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Tamara Campbell thought the stuff in her can of "Breast 'O Chicken" tuna smelled funny and didn't look right. It turned out to be cat food.

Ted Law, president of the Piedmont Better Business Bureau, said Friday the can had been correctly stamped as pet food on its metal lid. But the label, which most consumers read, indicated the contents were for humans, he added.

"We went into half panic," said Raul Garcia, quality control supervisor for the packer, Sun Harbor Industries of San Diego, Calif.

According to Garcia, the cat food produced by his company is 100 per cent tuna. But tuna destined for humans comes from a different part of the fish, he added.

Two Wrecks Investigated

Greenville police charged Harley Demetrius Ebron of 1902B Norcott Cir. with failing to stop for a stop sign following investigation of a 2:30 a.m. Saturday collision at the intersection of Dickinson and Line Avenues.

Officers said the Ebron car collided with an auto operated by Anthony Joseph Gallinto Jr. of Route 1, Bethel, causing an estimated $1,000 damage to the Gallinto car and $150 damage to the Ebron auto.

No charges were reported following investigation of a 2:30 p.m. collision Friday on Greenville Boulevard, 300 feet East of the Bismark Street intersection.

Police reported cars driven by Richard Scott Allen of Raleigh and Elaine Augusta Woody of Oxford collided, causing an estimated $200 damage to the Allen car and $500 damage to the Woody car.

Seek To Sell Gas Direct

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP)—Gov. Jim Holshouser terms his trip to the Southwest with North Carolina industrialists a success, but still contends that Congressional action is needed to end the state's worries over the natural gas shortage.

"I have come back to North Carolina more convinced than ever that action by Congress to relieve the natural gas shortage is a necessity if we are going to avoid some very serious problems this winter," the governor said in a statement Saturday.

Holshouser and Tar Heel industrialists traveled to Oklahoma, Louisiana and Texas to talk with natural gas producers about making direct purchases of the fuel this winter. North Carolina faces a 60 per cent "gas shortfall" this winter; last year's industry-closing shortage was 40 per cent.

He said more than a dozen independent producers indicated they were in a position to supply gas to the state's industries.

"We now have the job of following up on discussions by determining which industries are eligible under the Federal Power Commission ruling to purchase the unregulated, intrastate gas and to make certain that they are put in contact with the firms in the Gulf area so they can begin making arrangements as to price and transportation," Holshouser said.

The FPC ruling allows the state's industries which cannot find alternative fuels to buy intrastate gas, or gas produced within the state it is sold in, and ship it to North Carolina. That gas is more expensive than interstate gas, the price of which is federally controlled, but it is also more available.

He said details need to be ironed out before the winter curtailment season starts November 15.

The follow-up process of contacting industrial natural gas users and telling them how to negotiate for the gas will be coordinated by the energy division of the Department of Military and Veteran Affairs, he said.

"We would prefer, of course, to be able to rely on our normal supply and distributions system to fill our natural gas needs and let private enterprise get the job done," Holshouser said.

Visitor Excites N.C. Women

RALEIGH (AP)—Charles "Pug" Ravelen, the political unknown who excited South Carolinians enough to win the Democratic gubernatorial nomination in 1974, aroused a similar response from the North Carolina Democratic Women.

Ravelen spoke to the group at their annual meeting in Raleigh Friday. After the standing ovation when he finished, Dr. Dorothy Preston, president of the Wake Democratic Women, told Ravelen, "We wish we could go to South Carolina and vote for you."

The boyish-looking Charleston

nian with Kennedy-like charisma, was considered a dark horse candidate when he announced in the spring of 1974. He waged an intense campaign and media blitz that sent several veteran politicians to defeat.

His efforts were in vain, however, as the state Supreme Court ruled him out of the race a month-and-a-half before the general election. The court said Ravelen did not meet the state constitution's requirement that a gubernatorial candidate live in South Carolina for five years preceding the election.

Ravelen was replaced by the No. 2 man in the Democratic primary, but the substitute was defeated by Republican Jim Edwards.

"I always wanted to run for office since I was 16," Ravelen told the Tar Heel women. He said his first priority was to make enough money to afford a major race.

He was a star quarterback at Harvard even though he had been told he was too short to ever make it in football. After graduation, he worked in a New York investment house and reached the level of wealth he thought adequate.

Ravelen returned to Charleston in 1972, opened his investments business and laid plans for politics. He told the women Friday that the run for governor depleted his finances. "My net worth is zero," he said. His remaining campaign debts amount to $180,000.

His political ambitions are still high, he said. He wants to run in 1978, the year Edwards leaves office and Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., is up for reelection. "I would like to run in 1978 and, God willing, that will come to pass."

Edwards, a Charleston oral surgeon, has said he has no higher political ambitions than his current office. He cannot succeed himself. Thurmond, whose reelection has traditionally been a virtual certainty, has said he plans to run again.

Speaking of his dramatic race last year, Ravelen told the Democratic women the people were more concerned with the candidate's character and what he stood for than with his record in public life. "People wanted more quality in their lives, in our lives, not quantity."

$40,000 Bank Theft

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Two Washington, D.C., men were arrested Friday shortly after three masked gunmen robbed a Greensboro bank more than $40,000, police records show.

No one was injured and there was no gunfire after a branch of First Citizens Bank and Trust Co. on High Point Road was robbed, according to investigators.

About an hour later, two suspects were apprehended at a highway patrol roadblock on I-85 just inside Alamance County.

The SBI identified them as James Charles Herron, 29, and Alvin Julius Tobin, both of Washington. FBI agent Herb Shrider said the two who were to be arraigned under federal bank robbery statutes, are suspected of being members of the "Dinging Gang," a loosely-knit ring of bank robbers based in the Washington area.

Shrider said the FBI would question Herron and Tobin in connection with several other bank robberies that have occurred across the southeastern U.S. over the past two years.

A third, unidentified suspect is still being sought by the authorities.

At a news conference Friday night, Shrider said none of the money had been recovered. The gunmen, all armed with handguns, removed the money from the bank in two pillowcases and a paper bag.

A witness said the trio took money from the vault and cash drawers.

Although authorities refused to reveal the amount of money taken, it was later learned that the complaint charging Herron and Tobin with bank robbery showed the amount to be more than $40,000.

Experts Hope To Settle Kennedy Death Question

LOS ANGELES — Seven experts on criminal evidence hope comparisons of test bullets with the slugs recovered from the body of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy will help settle the question of whether more than one gun was used in his assassination.

Big Book Fine

NEW YORK (AP) — Joseph Feldman turned himself in Friday after learning from newspaper reports that police were looking for the person who forgot to return 15,000 books borrowed from the New York Public Library.

It took 20 men, seven trucks and three days to clear out the books, valued at $100,000 to $150,000, from Feldman's four-room Greenwich Village apartment, according to Detective Charles Pendergrass.

"There were books everywhere," Feldman, 58, who said he was an attorney, was charged with criminal possession of stolen property. He faces up to seven years in prison, and the library said he could owe a maximum late-return penalty of $5 a book — $75,000.

"I do a lot of studying," Feldman said.

firearms expert. Four rounds were fired from the .22-caliber Iver Johnson Cadet revolver into a six-foot tank of water.

The markings on the bullets will be examined under a special microscope and compared with those taken from Kennedy's body.

Superior Court Judge Robert A. Wenke signed an order Friday authorizing refiring of the pistol at the request of the panel of experts "to enable them to complete the classical microscopic comparison test."

The "second gun" controversy centers around photographs taken by Pasadena criminologist William W. Harper in late 1970.

Forensic expert DeWayne

Wolfer testified that a bullet taken from the base of Kennedy's neck and bullets taken from two persons wounded in the pantry of the Ambassador Hotel where Kennedy was shot were from Sirhan's gun and "no other gun in the world."

But Harper said his examination of the bullets from Kennedy and one of the persons wounded led him to believe they had not been fired from the same gun.

Lowell W. Bradford, one of the seven experts, said the test bullets were "nicely marked."

Sirhan is serving a life sentence in San Quentin prison.

Because there had been some doubt as to whether refiring the gun would be necessary, Friday's test shooting was interpreted by some as an inference the experts were dissatisfied with results of tests on the death bullets.

The district attorney's special counsel in the inquiry, Thomas F. Kranz, said the apparent lack of reports in 1968 by Wolfer, now head of the police crime lab, "raised doubts as to the substance of the evidence in the case."

The inquiry was opened after Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., and Paul Schrade, one of those wounded, filed a series of legal actions seeking to open the files on the 1968 investigation.

Protest Firing Squad Executions

Natural Gas Prices To Rise 300 Per Cent

By EDMUND PINTO
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — A Getty Oil Co. report, intended by the company to be a confidential internal document, forecasts a more than 300 per cent increase in the price of new natural gas if price controls are lifted.

The document also predicts a steady rise in the price of new natural gas sold interstate even if controls are maintained. The company said that with controls, natural gas will rise from the regulated price of 52 cents per 1,000 cubic feet (mcf) at the wellhead to $1.21 by 1981.

Getty said that if deregulated, natural gas prices immediately would reach $2.25 at the wellhead.

The confidential report by Getty predicts an unregulated price considerably higher than forecast by a trade industry organization and substantially above what other major natural gas producers have admitted publicly.

Getty's forecast could mean a 10.7 per cent increase in the average gas bill of an American homeowner, according to American Gas Association figures. Earlier this year AGA testimony at a Senate hearing indicated decontrol could mean an immediate rise to $1.50 per mcf at the wellhead and a 6 per cent increase in a homeowner's bill.

The Getty figures were contained in a publication called "Industry Outlook Series," which is printed early each year on a confidential basis for Getty executives only.

An introduction to the report says it is designed to be a forecast to be used for corporate planning and investment evaluation.

In Houston, Getty lawyer Cloy Monzingo expressed anger over release of the figures. Calling the document "highly confidential," he said it could not be released "to anybody for any purpose."

Monzingo had sent a copy to Rep. John Moss, D-Calif., chairman of a House investigations and oversight subcommittee. Moss had requested the material as part of an investigation into the natural gas industry and subsequently inserted it into the public record of another congressional subcommittee.

The Getty report also talks about energy consumption in general, and predicts that higher prices will result in reduced production from industries that were built "on low energy costs."

Mail Improvement Hoped

A nationwide Consumer Service Program designed to improve and broaden the quality of mail service was announced today by Postmaster H. Lloyd Mills.

Beginning October 1, the U. S. Postal Service will introduce a program at the Greenville Post Office and other offices across the nation to encourage mail users to register problems they may have with their mail service.

At the core of the program is a consumer service card, through which problems are identified and which postal managers attempt to expeditiously resolve.

The Consumer Service Programs reflects Postmaster General Benjamin F. Bailar's determination that mail services to the public will be friendly, courteous and efficient, as well as speedy and reliable.

"Good service is a far broader concept than just fast mail handling, as important as that is," the Postmaster General says. "It is also built on employee courtesy, our responsiveness to customer needs, the sympathy and understanding we bring to your own expectations of what good postal service is all about."

Postmaster Mills urged customers in the Greenville area to bring their inquiries and complaints to the attention of postal managers.

"If people feel their problems have not been properly handled," the Postmaster said, "they should see him personally."

To make it easier for a customer to make a suggestion or complaint about postal service, the new consumer service card will be available from letter carriers and at post offices.

According to Postmaster Mills, the card is two postal cards with carbon paper between them. "One copy goes to me or a station superintendent so work can begin on the problem," he said. "The other goes to Postal Service Headquarters in Washington for cataloging and analysis. The cards will help management spot problem areas and trends and take corrective action if necessary."

The Consumer Service Program was tested earlier this year in Illinois, Massachusetts, Arizona and Rhode Island. Postal Customers in the test found the cards easy to complete and most complaints were resolved to the customer's satisfaction.

The card should take no more than two minutes to fill out. The postmaster also said he and his staff are willing to discuss any problems, including lack of courtesy, irregularities in deliveries or collections, collection box convenience and postal office hours.

"We want you to come to us with your problems," concluded Postmaster Mills. "The whole point of this service program is to bring your problems and gripes out into the open where we can attempt to resolve them."

Write-In Procedures

Miss Margaret Register, executive secretary of the Pitt Board of Elections, has cited regulations dealing with write-in procedures for voting in the Oct. 7 municipal elections.

Referring to the N.C. Election Laws, General Statutes 163-151.2(c), the law states that in an election but not in a primary, "If a voter desires to vote for a person whose name is not printed on the ballot, he shall write the name of the person for whom he wishes to vote in the space immediately beneath the name of the candidate printed in the section of the ballot assigned to the particular office."

The statute further stipulates: "In such a situation, the voter shall write the name himself unless he is receiving assistance to which he is entitled under provisions of G.S. 163-152, in which case the person rendering assistance may write the name of the voter under his direction."

Miss Register urged voters to acquaint themselves with the authorized write-in procedure in order that they fully understand the steps necessary to cast an accepted write-in vote.

The official also referred to a section of the election laws involving the conduct of municipal elections. The section 163-294.3 reads, "Each candidate for municipal office in nonpartisan municipal elections shall be voted upon, even though only one candidate has filed or has been nominated for a given office, in order that the voters may have the opportunity to cast write-in votes under general election laws.

Board Holds Three Hearings

Public hearings were held on three items by the Greenville Board of Adjustments on Thursday night.

The board, meeting at 7:30 p.m., granted a request by Tommy R. Harris for a special use permit in order to operate a music and record shop at 600 Albemarle Avenue on property zoned for Unoffensive Industry.

A request by Rental Tool Co. for a variance in order to erect a sign at 3014 E. Tenth Street on property zoned for Highway Commercial was also granted. The board, after considering requests for variances by Mrs. Velma Clark, granted her request for a variance from Section 32-11 of the city code involving one principal use on a lot but denied a request for variance from the front and rear setback requirements under Section 32-80 of the code.

Mrs. Clark indicated that she wished to place a trailer on the lot at 606 Mumford Road on property zoned for R6-MH (mobile home) usage.

A request for a special use permit by Sobalco Inc. in order to construct condominiums on the vacant lot adjacent to the University Condominiums between Cedar Lane and John Avenue was tabled until the October meeting.

Who Is The Real Patty Hearst?

The Patty Hearst case will long be remembered as one of the strangest ever.

The newspaper heiress was kidnapped 19 months ago by a little-known group which called itself Symbionese Liberation Army. To say they were a bunch of kooks is an understatement. They were not known even among the revolutionary fringe element which seems to thrive in California.

Anyway there were efforts made by Miss Hearst's family to obtain her freedom through a multi-million dollar food give-away program, which began with riots and fighting and in the end did not bring about Miss Hearst's freedom.

In fact the next reports were that Patty Hearst had adopted the revolutionary ways of her alleged captors and had taken on the name "Tania." She became a fugitive from the law when she was photographed holding a weapon in the midst of a bank robbery.

The hunt for Miss Hearst by the FBI has been unending since her disappearance and at one point the Symbionese Liberation Army was virtually wiped out in a fiery raid, which did not net the heiress.

Finally the heiress was captured in San Francisco and taken to jail, complete with the clinch fist salute and the listing of her occupation as "urban guerrilla."

Now, however, a new Patty Hearst is emerging. Her attorneys argue that she was driven to the brink of insanity by the cruel and inhumane treatment at the hands of her captors. In an affidavit, she says she was blindfolded, bound and locked in a closet for weeks and threatened with death. She says she sees the period since her kidnapping as a time of living in a fog. Her family sees her situation as similar to that of a brainwashed prisoner-of-war. This image of a brainwashed prisoner who is returning to reality includes a request that the "urban guerrilla" designation be changed to "not employed."

A judge has refused to release Miss Hearst on bond but she will be examined by psychiatrists and psychologists.

So which is the real Pattie Hearst—modern day hardened revolutionary, or a young lady who has been victimized in the cruelest sort of way by a group of sadistic fanatics?

It will take all of the wisdom that the courts can muster to determine that, and it is in the courts—imperfect as they are—that the final decision on Patty Hearst will have to be made.

Cotton Seeing Comeback

By BILL NOBLITT
RALEIGH—Remember cotton-picking time?

School started in mid-summer then let out awhile, and the highlight of the year was when that first Cleveland County bale was sold at auction and took its place in history on the court square.

Along came the boll weevil, and folks finally thanked him for taking their breaking backs away from the chopping and picking, and turning the red clay toward other more profitable, uses; forcing diversification.

Nowadays, there are polyesters and a host of other manmade fibers. There is also an energy dilemma, and State Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham figures it takes five times the energy to produce synthetics that it takes to produce cotton fiber.

New Gins

Experiments are underway with cotton gins that burn their own waste to produce energy to drive the gears, and a multi-state Boll Weevil Eradication program involving growers, state governments, and Washington is underway.

They are even advertising on Television that new, miracle fabric which feels so good, washes so clean, and lasts so long: cotton.

"I say cotton is coming back . . . cotton is high fashion. People like garments made from it. It looks good, wears good, and feels good," Graham says.

Besides the energy to produce the fibers, many synthetics are themselves made from petroleum derivatives. "Energy and cotton are inseparable," Graham thinks.

Police Retirement
A persistent rumor heard in various places across the state has policemen upset over the investment of retirement funds.

Reports persist that a big chunk of money ($26 million) is invested in one extremely low-interest water bond issue by the Lenoir City (Caldwell County) government.

Interest, the rumor says, is only one-tenth of one per cent, and policemen are upset that the fund isn't growing properly.

"Absolutely not true," says Henry G. McFayden, executive secretary of the Law Enforcement Officers' Benefit and Retirement Fund, a division of the State Auditor's department.

The reports are being circulated by some Piedmont section policemen, McFayden said. Prior to 1957, the fund investment was restricted by law to municipal bonds, but most of the money is now in high-yield corporate investments.

Au audit of the retirement program on June 30, 1975, shows a total of $102,343,500 worth of investments, at maturity. The overall rate of yield is 7.01 per cent.

Corporate bonds amount to $92.9 million; U.S. Treasury bonds to $185,000; and county and municipal bonds total $9.2 million.

Of that invested in local governments, Lenoir water bonds total $65,000. The yield is one-half of one per cent—on the coupons clipped every six months and redeemed.

The full production of the Lenoir bonds is much greater: initial cost was $30,291.55, and the bonds will more than double in value to $65,000 in 1989, for a profit of $34,708.45.

McFayden says it would be irresponsible to invest $26 million—a quarter of the fund total—in any one place, and hopes to convince lawmakers that their retirement money is all right.

INSIDE REPORT

'Grassroots' Love Ronnie

BY ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

SAN DIEGO — Failure of the Ford campaign to scare Ronald Reagan out of running for President by preempting his California base was confirmed at last weekend's convention here of the state's inflexibly conservative Republican regulars.

Nobody watching Reagan perform at the 1,100-member Republican state central committee's meeting could doubt he will challenge President Ford. Moreover, although Ford operatives have spooned off the cream of the state's Republican establishment, grassroots workers meeting here still love Ronnie. If an underdog Reagan can win early primaries he would pose a lethal threat to Mr. Ford in California's winner-take-all Republican primary in June.

In short, the Ford campaign's concentration on California may be largely wasted. If Reagan is still viable in June, he would be favored in California. Consequently, the new Ford effort must switch to the early primary terrain of snowy New Hampshire and sunny Florida, and out of the boardrooms of San Francisco and Los Angeles.

The battle of those boardrooms has been waged successfully for the President by Leon Parma, an old Ford crony from Washington, now a rich San Diego businessman, and Stu Spencer of Spencer-Roberts Associates in Los Angeles, one of the nation's leading political professionals. Over six months ago, they signed up hundreds of prominent Californians — including Reaganites who found White House incumbency irresistible.

But the purpose of discouraging Reagan's candidacy by preempting California was not achieved. Instead, Reagan's temper was activated by Ford defections — particularly by Republican state chairman Paul Haerle, Reagan's erstwhile aide and hand-tailored protegee. Nor was Reagan influenced by coolness toward his candidacy from longtime financial supporters, who had been lobbied furiously by Mr. Ford.

Reagan was particularly incensed when he was not invited to last weekend's convention by Haerle (who privately advised Republicans he wanted "new faces"). In his Los Angeles office last week, Reagan told us that decision reflected Haerle's record as chairman. In what way? "It was very stupid," Reagan replied. But the women's caucus intervened, asking Reagan to address its meeting Friday night.

That meeting, overflowing with both sexes, witnessed a vintage Reagan performance. Casting aside his standard speech, he ad-libbed about Republicans choosing whether to practice "politics as usual" in 1976 and declared a contest for the presidential nomination need not be divisive. As usual, he said nothing, good or bad, about Gerald R. Ford. Reagan's reception was tumultuous.

Just before the Saturday luncheon, someone carrying a Ford-for-President placard elicited scattered applause — quickly drowned out when a Reagan placard was hoisted. Widely popular State Atty.

Gen. Evelle Younger received a cool reception when he finished his luncheon address by praising the President.

The state central committee is to the right of most Californians and even many California Republicans but pretty accurately reflects Republican precinct workers who win California primary elections. Overwhelming pro-Reagan sentiment inside the committee (with Mr. Ford possibly outvoted 2 to 1) and even heavier Reagan superiority among volunteer groups (Young Republicans; Women's Federation; California Republican Assembly) suggests trouble for the President here.

Reagan's strength is in the party's conservative foot soldiers, not its more moderate leadership — precisely the case ten years ago when Reagan began running for governor. Once again last week Reagan was the outsider, thanking the women's caucus for inviting him with the wistful postscript: "I didn't think I was coming to San Diego." When aggrieved right-wing leaders privately complained that Reagan is "coming home" to the true believers he spurned after they elected him governor, Reagan replied with a mea culpa: sometimes it is the very ones closest to us that we take for granted.

The weekend also showed the Ford campaign has failed to neutralize the closest of (Continued on page A-5)

RELATIVE VALUES

An archeologist recently returned from an expedition to a very primitive part of Africa tells about how on one occasion he traded a gaily painted frying pan for some very valuable diamonds. The exchange was made at the insistence of the African native, who was overjoyed to trade thousands of dollars worth of diamonds for a pan worth only a few dollars.

We might laugh at the childish ignorance of the African native, but sophisticated people in our own world are doing the same thing every day. The piling up of wealth just for the satisfaction of accumulating it, the pursuit of pleasure as an end in itself, the wasting of one's powers in the glutinous satisfaction of appetite—these involve as ridiculous an exchange of valuable for worthless things as did the trading of diamonds for a painted frying pan.

While we fritter our time away it is wise to recall that our lives are at stake in this wordly enterprise.

Sunday Morning Notes

Through the rain and the mud, work goes on at the mall between Fifth and Third Streets on Evans.

One lady observed the work as a light rain fell Tuesday. "You know something," she said. "I remember when this street was first put down."

"I'm 74," she said. "I hope I see it finished."

I assured her that she could expect to see it since the job is supposed to be completed by the end of November—provided the rains stop, of course.

Thanks to Eloise, the rains came last week. The big storm rolled over Florida and then broke up over land as it moved northward. The effect on Pitt County was mostly a lot of rainfall.

The rain might have seemed miserable, but to those of us who recalled "Hazel" and the other hurricanes of the 1950s it was nothing compared to the rains and high winds of a full fledged hurricane.

The Daily Reflector received an inquiry about the famous humorist, Will Rogers, visiting Greenville in 1925. That sent us to the files and, sure enough, Will Rogers was here in April of that year for the Eastern Carolina Exposition.

"Will Rogers, the world's greatest humorist, and the screen idol of millions of people, put on a performance which it would be useless to find words adequate to do justice," The Daily Reflector reported that day. "Will's jokes are unusual. They knock without hurting and at the same time bring food for thought."

Rogers, who was later killed in a plane crash, has become immortal, and even today his comments on government and politicians are cited as timely.

Perhaps Rogers would have something to say about the North Carolina lieutenant governor's position, which at last report we saw had at least 15 persons seriously considering the race.

We hate to think it's because the job is now full time and full paid. Oh well.

The latest casualty of government regulation is the pointed spike on which newspaper editors have placed copy, presumably since newspapers began.

They were made in the old days by sinking a piece of coat hanger wire in printers metal. The metal hardened and formed a heavy base which could not be easily pulled off a desk by heavy loads of copy.

Alas, federal industrial safety regulations say the spikes are unsafe. Fortunately they can be made safe by bending over the tops of the spikes. For awhile there, though, there was a crisis in this, and other newspaper offices throughout the land.

Other Editors Say Nearing Scandal

(Henderson Dispatch)

Congress is mulling over a program designed to cut the food stamp program down to size and it cannot afford to delay the proposed reforms. The cost to the country is colossal in proportions, well up in the billions of dollars annually.

Apparently there is too much laxness on the part of administrators, and far too many people sharing who are actually not in need, but who, for one reason or another, are horning in on a program intended to help those in real need. It is further indication of the lengths to which the socialist trend has carried in this country.

It is claimed that the program has expanded sixfold in six years. One report is that a private company is marketing a booklet explaining how families with incomes up to $16,000 a year can qualify for food, according to John Sledge, president of the State Farm Bureau. The booklets tell how workers on strike can use food stamps to prolong their strike. In some instances, it is stated, food stamps can be obtained through the mail, and some people living in the same house can qualify individually.

Sledge says nearly twenty million people now benefit from this subsidized food project at a cost of $5.5 billion a year, or more than half the budget of the U.S. Department of Agriculture. It is not operating in the manner Congress intended.

Bureaucrats grab the ball and run with it, in this as in other areas of the vast labyrinth of Federal activity.

The food program has some merits. But, like some others, it has gotten out of hand. If it is not a crime for those to share who are not entitled to participate, it is certainly a manner of disloyalty to country.

Congress can remedy and eliminate the abuses. It needs to stop dragging feet and act without delay.

How Hamawaki Built Success

By EDWARD CRAIG
UPI Business Writer

NEW YORK (UPI) — It's axiomatic in the learning process that if you don't ask questions you may never find out.

Japanese businessman Yoji (George) Hamawaki did exactly this when he was sent to this country 10 years ago to start a motorcycle business for his employer, Kawasaki Motors Corp. The U.S. company he now heads is the fourth largest cycle producer in the United States, with annual sales of around $200 million.

Hamawaki, a lawyer by profession, was involved in corporate planning and market research for Kawasaki when he was assigned to organize a U.S. marketing arm of the motorcycle division.

"I didn't know anybody in this country, and I don't mind saying I was terrified," Hamawaki said in an interview. One particular fear was the possibility of latent anti-Japanese feeling toward him, but Hamawaki found it had all but evaporated over the years.

Before Hamawaki came to the United States he spent some time in Brazil, trying to determine why foreign firms had either made a go of it or failed. "I just went around asking those involved why things happened, even executives of the firms that went under," Hamawaki said.

One reason for many failures was the companies didn't "go native." "They just didn't adapt to the business customs of the country, fit their operation to the way things were done," Hamawaki said.

How much more native could a firm be than to set up a factory in the country itself? No startling business innovation, of course, but Hamawaki finally persuaded his superiors to do it. A factory began turning out the Kawasaki cycle last January at Lincoln, Neb., the first foreign producer to do so. Production target this year is 37,000 machines; eventually, 100,000.

But of much greater value to Hamawaki were the conversations he struck up with cyclists and others. He

Lost A War To Ants

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — A 17-year war between the United States government and the foreign armies which landed in Mobile, Ala., from Argentina almost 60 years ago is over.

And the foreign armies — millions of harsh-stinging fire ants — have won.

Today, fire ants are thriving throughout the southeast. From humble beginnings in Alabama as the little known Solenopsis richteri, a harder breed known as Solenopsis invicta has spread to Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas and the Carolinas.

The ants had been battled for years by the Department of Agriculture because they killed livestock and, in rare instances, humans. Their toxic bites are painful, and in massive doses, fatal.

But last June, the USDA ended its fire ant control program — after spending $164 million since 1958.

"The fire ant control program in the South is the South Vietnam of entomology," Harvard biologist Dr. Edward O. Wilson said at that time. "It's time to let the taxpayers off."

Officials said that restrictions on use of Mirex, a pesticide that proved at least partially successful against the ants, thwarted the program's effectiveness.

Taking it loss hard, the government is busy devising new strategies. Its main thrust in research is "biological control," finding natural sources that will kill off the pests.

Dr. William Buren of the University of Florida, acknowledged by entomologists as the world's foremost expert on fire ants, heads that research.

"It's a sturdy species," Buren said of the ant that in 1969 withstood pesticide attacks in the Florida Panhandle from B17s. "It has a lot of natural defenses."

An adult fire ant ranges in size from 2½ to 5½ millimeters, its color varies from a reddish to dark brown. Fire ants build mounds that sometimes reach 15 inches in height and three feet across.

Each mound serves as home to 50,000 to 200,000 ants. Many sections of fire ant-infested land supports 200 mounds to the acre.

40 Years Ago Today

September 28, 1935

Roaring through Cuba and causing 32 deaths, a tropical hurricane "brought apprehension to Florida from Key West to West Palm Beach. No loss of life has so far been reported in Florida.

At 9 a.m. today, the Belen observatory at Havana announced the hurricane was leaving the northern coast of Cuba travelling north or northeast and will be dangerous this afternoon or tomorrow morning in the eastern part of Florida and the Florida canal.

It was the second September storm threat for Florida. Not quite four weeks ago, on Labor Day, winds pounded tons of water over the Florida keys laying them to waste and killing more than 400. Today, relief workers who were in the area cleaning up after the last disaster, evacuated to places of safety.

PRINCETON, N.J.—Even before the second attempt on President Ford's life, nearly half of the American people had reached the conclusion that the risk is too great for a President to shake hands and mingle with crowds.

In the latest nationwide survey, conducted after the first assassination attempt but prior to the second, 49 per cent of persons interviewed said that, despite the risks, it is important for a President to shake hands and move among crowds. Nearly as many, 45 per cent, however, feel that the risks are too great.

"I admire the President for wanting to get out among the people," said a youthful banker, "but just think of the stakes involved!"

Another survey respondent commented: "Haven't we had enough tragedy already? The warmth and personality of a President come through just as strongly over TV — perhaps even better — so why should he go running around the countryside?"

Others, however, would agree with a New Jersey social worker: "If someone wants to knock off the President, they'll do it whether he mingles among the crowd or not."

A 32-year-old ironworker from Cumberland, Md. thinks it is important for the President to mingle with the crowds: "Without doing this, he would become withdrawn from the people he's supposed to be representing. If he was confined to the White House or to a bullet-proof car all the time, it would be too much like countries where they have dictators."

Following is the question asked in the latest survey and the nation results:

"Some people feel that despite the risk it is important for a President to shake hands and mingle among crowds. Others say that the risk is too great. What is your opinion?"

PUBLIC'S VIEWS FOLLOWING FIRST ASSASSINATION ATTEMPT

It is important for President to shake hands—move among crowd	49%
Risk is too great	45

Following the first attempt on President's life, Ford defended his frequent mingling in the crowd, saying:

"In any job you know there's a risk of some kind. I feel that you have to balance and weigh the risks as to my own personal security against what is a very important aspect of our political life in America. It's helpful to me to meet with the people, shake hands with them, get their questions, and it's just as important for them to have me say hello and to answer their questions."

GRIM RECORD

Assassination attempts have been made on eight Presidents, four of whom — McKinley, Lincoln, Garfield and Kennedy — have been killed.

The last three presidential campaigns have been marred by assassinations or assassination attempts. John F. Kennedy was gunned down in Dallas in 1963, when he was on his first major political trip in preparation for the 1964 campaign.

Sen. Robert F. Kennedy was assassinated in Los Angeles on the day of his victory in the 1968 California primary. Gov. George Wallace was crippled by a would-be assassin during the 1972 Maryland primary.

ABANDON 'BARNSTORMING'?

The public's views on contact between the President and the electorate are in line with their ideas about changing the method of political campaigning. Majority sentiment has consistently favored a plan of campaigning that is confined largely to TV and radio appearances instead of the traditional "whistle-stop" method of campaigning. Many political observers believe that the present type of campaign not only taxes the health of presidential candidates, but exposes them to unnecessary risks as well.

The results reported today are based on in-person interviews with a total of 1,529 adults, 18 and older, in more than 300 scientifically selected localities during the period Sept. 12-15.

To the editor:

There has been a slump this summer in the numbers of units of blood collected by the Tidewater Red Cross Blood Center. The Center supplies Pitt County and most of eastern North Carolina its blood needs. The Center is entirely dependent on volunteer donors for a blood supply.

Because of a current shortage of blood, a special visit will be made by the bloodmobile to draw blood in Greenville. The visit will be at the Moose Lodge next Tuesday, September 30, from 11:00 A.M. until 4:00 P.M.

Many regular donors have given several gallons during their lifetime; others have never given. If you are a first-time donor, you will be made to feel welcome, relaxed, and at ease by a well-trained group of professionals. The blood you give will be tested by several means and will be promptly supplied to our hospital for transfusion of patients.

The response of donors is gratifying when we have an emergency or a need for freshly drawn blood at Pitt County Memorial Hospital. It is hoped that the citizens of our area will go to the Moose Lodge Tuesday and replenish the blood reserve, which is now extremely low.

Those Lovely Out-Of-Town Words Ring A Bell

By JAMES J. KILPATRICK

SCRABBLE, VA.—Not long ago my brother pundit, William F. Buckley Jr., ventured a kindly comment on Nelson Rockefeller. He said Mr. Rockefeller's opsimathy should be welcomed. It was perhaps the nicest thing Mr. Buckley ever said about Mr. Rockefeller, and doubtless it is better to be praised for one's opsimathy than not to be praised at all.

But what did it mean? Or as Time magazine might once have inquired, meant it what? I tripped over the vice president's opsimathy while loafing around the editorial rooms of the Washington Star, and inquired of the first ten journalists who passed by if they had ever met opsimathy or knew anything about it. Alas, no. This was a new boy on the block. Later in the day I convened with Messrs. Martin Agronsky, Hugh Downs, Peter Lisagor, and Carl Rowan, journalists of vast erudition. Not a one of them had encountered opsimathy or even heard of opsimathy.

What it means is, the ability to learn late in life. Those of us over 50 demonstrate our opsimathy by, well, looking up opsimathy and putting it lovingly in the word collection. One never knows when an opportunity will come along to say something friendly, if not about Mr. Rockefeller, perhaps about Senator Javits. Opsimathy! It is a perfectly splendid specimen.

Only my brother Buckley could have captured this butterfly noun. He nets them by the dozens. A new anthology of his writing just came from Putnam's a week ago, bearing an irrelevant title: "Execution Eve and Other Contemporary Ballads." Prowling at random through pages of pure delight, the reader will come face to face with osmotic, ecdysiasm, afflatus, hubristic, animadversion, etiose, discretely, desuetude, repristinate, irredentist, adumbrated, synecdoche, oxymoron, lubricious, androgynous, actualizable, and vellicity.

Mr. Buckley also explains, mystically, what is meant by "to immanentize the eschaton." What it means is, "to cause to inhere in the worldly experience and subject to human dominion that which is beyond time and therefore extra-worldly." But of course most of his readers already knew that.

These are what Westbrook Pegler used to call "out-of-town words." Every writer loves them. Some years ago I happened to be looking up "limbo," to put it to work in some perfectly gorgeous phrase, and three inches down the column my eye fell upon "limicolous." It means "living in mud." It was love at first sight. I yearned for a chance to trot her out for public inspection, and by happy circumstance, the battleship Missouri promptly ran aground in Hampton Roads. My editorial was captioned "The Limicolous Mo." It was a triumph of obscurity.

Edwin M. Yoder Jr., associate editor of the Star, has compared this infirmity in writers to alcoholism. No cure is known to exist. Once the young writer succumbs to etymological spiritus frumenti, he remains syntactically stewed. His rhetorical bibulousness can no longer be restrained. He cannot get enough. He begins to invent words. The editors of the Columbia Journalism Review just invented

Ford Lays Groundwork For Govm't Corporation To Meet Energy Needs

By GEORGE BRYANT, JR.

It does happen, once in awhile: A news story which merits top billing gets pushed to the inside by a more spectacular event.

This was the case this week with President Ford's extraordinary proposal for a $100-billion government corporation to bring about energy independence over the next 10 years. The scheme calls for a sharp turn in government direction of the economy and promises to produce new political controversy. Still, its unveiling caused hardly a ripple.

The explanation, of course, is that Ford outlined the program before an AFL-CIO audience in San Francisco only hours before the second attempt on his life. The result is that implications of what amounts to a new government venture into a basic area of the national economy has been slow catching on.

The nub of the scheme is creation of a huge new agency, in the form of a corporation, with power to do just about anything calculated to speed the day when the U.S. will no longer be dependent on oil imports. The $100-billion it could spend, lend or use to guarantee private loans would be backed by the taxpayers — a public obligation, but not accounted for in the budget, where it could shoot the deficit up.

The proposal assumes that energy self-sufficiency achieved in 10 years involves too much capital and risk for private enterprise. Ford sees the program as a way to "supplement," not replace private enterprise in the energy field.

On quick reading, the proposal is not one that Ford expects to push through this session of Congress. Rather, it seems to set up a major issue for next year's general election, when the White House and control of Congress will be at stake. The outline invites both political and economic debate.

Democrats, especially those in the welfare-minded majority, can be expected to find fault. They are insistent that whatever money Washington pours out go directly to consumers — the people. They don't like the idea of money flowing into the "capital" side of the economy, even though it creates new jobs.

And Republicans are going to find fault, too. They feel that Ford's criticisms of bureaucracy and its mass of redtape is popular in today's climate. Any $100-billion federal undertaking, even in corporate form, is going to waste a lot of money and create irritations.

From the standpoint of the overall economy, the undertaking Ford contemplates would be stimulating, in a way. It would require a tremendous amount of construction for conversion of coal to gas and oil, for new nuclear power plants and development of solar and thermal energy.

This translates, in time, into steel, cement and a host of other building materials. And it also translates into jobs for those with skills. It would have the same impact as a multi-billion dollar increase in capital spending.

But there are bound to be side effects which won't be overlooked as debate develops. These will be all the more acute since the program has been put forward as a "cash" effort, which means that it will carry something of an overriding priority. This can well mean that highly vocal and well organized interests will have to give ground.

This isn't going to be easy for those who put the environment ahead of other considerations. And protecting the environment under a "cash" program will be difficult.

There are also financial implications which will become involved in controversy. Whatever funds are pumped into the program, no matter the form, will have to come out of the same old pool. As the government corporation borrows it will be picking up funds which otherwise would be available for other segments of the economy — home mortgages, say.

This can have a severe impact if superimposed on huge deficit demands of the Treasury. Right now, the Treasury is drawing off funds which would normally go to the home mortgage market.

The scheme is described by Washington stories as a "victory" for Nelson Rockefeller. He is said to have sold it to Ford over the objections of the President's top economic and energy advisers.

The whole thing started in controversy and may end in controversy. This, of course, would mean more delay on a basic problem.

"celebrification." They are plastered on language. Hic! Or hic, haec, hoc!

My younger brother in the pundit business, George F. Will, is showing unmistakable symptoms. He has been in this racket for only a year. The other day he wrote a splendid piece on Patty Hearst, whose arrest provided a coda to a decade of political infantilism, the exegesis of which could be comprehended as a manifestation of bourgeois Weltanschauung. The lad will go a long way.

An addition to such peacock prose is a vice far removed from the ailment known as gobbledegook. As a public service, the Star has been running daily examples of the latter infirmity. An interoffice memorandum of Amtrak, for example, explains that in order to maintain systematized reciprocal flexibility, the Western Region has expanded on the location code identification in conjunction with accounting via verbalization. The General Accounting Office reports that in certain circumstances, the application of the comparability principle to federal benefits in a framework of total compensation comparability would be consistent with non-federal practices.

That kind of thing is not only incurable but also intolerable. The composers of gobbledegook are to be scorned. The discoverers of opsimathy should be loved. Without their assiduous peregrinations through the labyrinthine mazes of lexicography, we might dwell forever in the simplistic pages of Dick and Jane and Spot, their ubiquitous canine. With the help of Messrs. Buckley and Will, we shall all be opsimaths, by and bye.

DON'T FORGET, ACT SURPRISED!

Every Girl Dreams Of Strolling Down Runway

There's only one thing that outranks baseball, hotdogs, apple pie, and Chevrolet in the American heart. That's the beauty pageant. Almost every American girl dreams of walking down a runway in a bathing suit and eventually getting her very own orange juice commercial.

Of course, since it's unrealistic to give all these girls a chance to display their varied attributes in a national or international contest, numerous local and regional pageants have sprung up. Georgia has its Miss Peanut, Ayden has its Miss Collard, and Louisiana has its Miss Catfish. But just because these pageants are local doesn't mean that the entry requirements and competition aren't stiff. For example, all Miss Catfish contestants are required to have bug eyes and whiskers.

Because the competition is so stiff, many of the girls get practice in pageants for the younger set. Each year, mothers all across the country preen their daughters for the coveted titles of Miss Pigtail, Miss Braces, Miss First Baby Tooth, Miss Scraped Knee, and Miss Wipe and Diaper. Even for these pageants, especially the last one, the girls must be extremely well-rounded.

Despite this proliferation of pageants, everyone knows that THE ONE to be in is the Miss America pageant. Not only does a girl get to parade in front of millions of people, but she also gets to see, in person, Bert Parks wiggling his front teeth and flashing his sideburns.

GAIL MICHAELS

One night, a couple of months ago, Phillip and I sat down to watch this bevy of young beauties on TV. First we saw them walk out in their bathing suits; then we watched the talent acts. Not only did these acts have a lot of variety, but they had real class. I mean, where else can you see a girl playing a jazz rendition of Brahms' Lullaby on the piano, a girl singing excerpts from Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, and a girl tap dancing to the accompaniment of a metronome?

"This must be the artistic event of the season," I said to Phillip. "I bet they book that girl who read excerpts from Once Is Not Enough at the Kennedy Center."

"Shhh," he answered, grabbing a handful of popcorn. "This is the part where they answer the question to determine their poise under stress." "I don't like this part," I whispered. "Nobody ever has anything to say. I think there must be a rule which prohibits any contestant from seeming smarter than Bert Parks."

"Would you shut up?" he hissed. "I want to hear what Miss Sweden has to say." "Miss Sweden isn't even in this contest, dummy," I groaned. "That's Miss Ohio." "Miss Ohio," came Bert's peppy voice, "How do you feel about the women's movement in this country?"

"Well, we've all got to move, don't we?" she asked sweetly. "But personally, I prefer the bus."

"How nice," smiled Bert. "But how do you feel about woman's changing role in society?"

"Let me just say that mere words cannot express how I feel about being a woman."

"Somebody a little more articulate needs to enter that contest," I said. "If I weren't married, I would."

"Too bad, sweetheart," Phillip answered drily. "But I hear Simpson is putting on a Turkey Festival next year. If you enter their beauty contest, you could be Mrs. Turkey. What do you think about that?"

Mere words cannot express how I feel about being Mrs. Turkey.

The Indian Was Bound To Be A Loser In American Revolution

By DENNIS MONTGOMERY

Associated Press Writer No matter which side the Indian chose he was bound to be a loser in the American revolutionary war.

Both sides coveted his land, and both needed if not his help, then at least safety from his attack.

So it was that Lord Dartmouth urged the Iroquois to take up the hatchet against the colonists and Ethan Allen beseeched the same Indians to "come and help me fight the King's regular troops."

In the east, many tribes joined the Stockbridge who like the Minuteman against the British in the siege of Boston, considered themselves only tenants of the land.

But to the west, to the Alleghenies and beyond, in a long arc from Maine to Florida, the Indian considered himself landlord. To be true, many tribes had accepted King George's protection, but they nevertheless were sovereign.

King George protected them mainly from the insatiable American lust for more land. The foremost Indian complaint was the colonial jumping of tribal claims.

The colonials both ignored and despised the line the King drew along the crest of the mountains in 1763, affirmed by Parliament in 1774, limiting western expansion.

And to add insult to injury, they refused being taxed to support the redcoats who enforced the edict.

Initially the Indians tried to stay out of the fight.

Prof. Francis Jennings in a soon-to-be published book, "The Invasion of America," explains that to the Indians the new war looked like the old one, the French and Indian War. He recites the remark of a Delaware, "The English say this is all their land. The French say this is all their land. Where is the Indian's land?"

The British had the edge, however — a familiar bureaucracy in the wilderness lands and an adequate supply of trade goods, including guns and bullets, on which the Indian had become dependent.

American traders enjoyed a deserved poor reputation among their customers. In the early 1760s one observer described them as "a shame to humanity, and the Disgrace of Christianity ... The Savages daily saw themselves cheated in Weight and measure: their Women debauched, and their young Men corrupted."

"The reason the Indians chose the Crown's side was that they didn't want all those damn settlers spilling over the line," Jennings says. No matter, the British intended to settle middle America too — on their own terms.

In fact, they had already approved plans to establish a 14th colony, Vandania, beyond the mountains.

At any rate, the fighting that ensued was the nastiest of the war. Atrocities were no stranger to either side.

Colonial Indian Fighter George Rogers Clark supposedly secured the entire Northwest Territory by capturing Vincennes, an Indiana outpost on the Wabash and an Indian supply base, in February 1779. That May Gen. John Sullivan, dispatched by Washington to retaliate for massacres in Pennsylvania and New York, broke the back of the Iroquois Confederation or the Six Nations in a scorched earth campaign through western New York. He leveled 40 Indian villages.

Early in the war the Cherokees were brought to heel in the South after attacks on the frontiers of Virginia and the Carolinas.

But the Americans lacked the strength to exploit their gains and consolidate control.

In the view of Prof. John Shy of the University of Michigan, a visiting professor at the Army War College in Carlisle, Pa. expert in the Revolution, Clark's victories were hollow.

Moreover, he said, the Americans couldn't take the arc of waterways formed by the upper Mississippi, the Ohio and the Great Lakes so strategically important to western dominion.

In that light the Anglo-Indian effort held the west for the King. But the King, or at least Parliament, didn't seem to care. When the Treaty of Paris was signed in 1783 formally ending the war no reference was made to the aborigines. Their territory was ceded to the United States.

The Iroquois were destroyed politically, the Cherokees were beaten, the other tribes like the Shawnee just tried to stay out of the way, Shy says.

White western expansion was inevitable, no matter which side won — and no one could find a punctuation mark to end the war.

In 1786, at what is now Rome, N.Y., the Six Nations signed a separate treaty, but the fighting and land grabbing went on. In 1794, Gen. Anthony Wayne won the battle of Fallen Timbers, near what is now Toledo, Ohio. It was the last big battle, at least for a while.

When the great Seneca chief, Cornstalk, visited President Washington some years after the Revolution, he could not forget the Indian caught in the white man's mill.

"When your army entered the country of the Six Nations," Cornstalk said, "we called you the Town Destroyer; and to this day, when that name is heard, our women look behind them and turn pale, and our children cling close to the necks of their mothers."

Soviet Swimming In Oil And Problems

BY BARRY JAMES
MOSCOW (UPI) — The Soviet Union is finding it increasingly difficult to exploit its vast oil reserves at a profit, even though it is the world's largest petroleum producing nation.

The word came from Soviet Oil Minister Valentin Shashin in a rare public rebuke over the inefficiency and laggard planning of his industry and others associated with it.

Writing in the newspaper Sotsialisticheskaya Industriya, Shashin said recently that the Soviet Union had to find 657 million barrels in additional oil reserves to sustain a production increase last year of 226.3 million barrels.

The program stems from the fact that production from traditional oil regions is diminishing, not only because the oil is running out but also because the industry makes inadequate use of modern methods of extracting marginal reserves. Shashin complained that "new production capacity is not used to open up new fields but to compensate for the failure of diminishing fields."

Soviet oil production now runs to 9.1 million barrels daily, compared to the United States' 8.6 million barrels.

Besides a need for more energetic development of Siberian and off-shore fields, Shashin said the Soviet Union needs far greater efficiency in the fields it has already developed.

"We need to apply new intensive methods of work and bring in highly productive equipment," Shashin wrote. "...during the next five year planning period, we will have to increase the productivity of each drilling device by 40 per cent while simultaneously cutting by 40 or 50 per cent the cost of exploring and developing new wells."

He said any substantial increase in profitability could only come from greater efficiency.

But this will require huge expenditures for pumps, heaters, chemical reagents, compressors, control devices — and a degree of technology at present only possessed by the West.

Having tried even nuclear explosions to speed the flow of marginal wells, the Soviet Union has a keen interest in using western technology to solve some of its problems.

But the country faces a cash shortage, exacerbated by some $1.8 billion spent on imported grain this year.

The Soviet Union exports about 2.3 million barrels of oil per day, much of it to Eastern Europe. Despite the fact it has increased oil prices to capitalist customers to near the prevailing world rate, the Soviets achieved only a small foreign trade surplus last year, largely because of the price they must pay for imported technology.

Increasing domestic needs make it difficult for the Soviet Union to boost exports. It has told neighboring Finland that oil shipments cannot be increased. The Soviets also have more than doubled the price of oil sold to East European allies, forcing them to seek alternative markets.

Lost And Found List Often Long

By NAOAKI USUI

TOKYO (AP) — Large amounts of cash and millions of items as varied as human ashes, fresh fish, umbrellas and precious jewels are lost in trains, stations and other public facilities in Japan every year.

But the losers reclaimed less than half of the equivalent of $23 million U.S. in cash and only 16 per cent of five million other items lost and found in 1974, the National Police Agency reported.

"Japanese were losing at least $64,000 in cash and 14,000 other items every single day last year," said Police Capt. Hideo Enomoto of the agency, "and much of the cash and goods were left in trains or at stations."

Tens of millions of Japanese ride on crowded trains to work, and when they jump off, they often leave their belongings behind.

In and around metropolitan Tokyo alone, the Japan National Railway recovered 7,661 watches, 184,809 umbrellas, 5,754 cameras, 59,077 purses and wallets, 164,756 clothes, on top of cash equivalent to $2.75 million last year.

"Unusual items" reported by the railway included:

—Seventy-two sets of artificial teeth, 7 containers of human ashes, 22 portable Buddhist shrines, an artificial arm, a head of a clay mannequin, a huge festival drum, costumes of Shinto and Buddhist clergymen, a packet of 40 rings worth $80,000.

On cash losses, police reported: a businessman left a check for $180,000, another person lost a bankbook of $60,000; loss of a $31,000 promissory note, and a cab driver picked up the equivalent of $10,000 cash left on his passenger's seat.

The lost cash and items are sent to local police headquarters within a couple of days and kept there for a maximum of six months and 14 days, awaiting claims.

The Tokyo Metropolitan Police Board's lost and found center is always crowded with an average 430,000 items that occupy three floors of the building. Each item is tagged to show where and when it was found.

The items include large, brand new refrigerators, a roomful of umbrellas, thousands of watches and jewels plus two human ash containers and 53 symbols of Buddhism dedicated to the dead, enshrined.

"Human ashes and the symbols are sacred items, so we keep here two altars. We always provide incense, flowers and symbolic foods so that we would not offend the dead," said Masao Iizuka, director of the center.

"Such things are most unlikely objects to lose, and even if one should, he would quickly reclaim it if he's normal," Iizuka said. "It seems the ashes are of extremely poor families that can't afford a grave that costs nearly $3,000 nowadays."

A Buddhist nun volunteers twice a year to recite scripture for the lost ashes at the 10-foot-wide altar, Iizuka added.

Accidents If Careless

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Freak occurrences were rarely the cause of last year's hunting accidents in California which killed nine and injured 69. A survey by the National Automobile Club showed most of these accidents were caused by the hunter's carelessness, by his unthinking or overzealous actions.

It seems even the most experienced hunter forgets to handle his weapon properly. One hunter set his loaded rifle against a log while he began to dress the deer he had just shot. His dog, excited by their success, knocked the weapon over and it went off, wounding the hunter.

Nervousness and eagerness can cause the hunter to act rashly, and he usually suffers for it, the NAC points out. Last year, one man hunting illegally at night tried to load his gun in a hurry, but only succeeded in shooting himself through the foot.

And such eagerness can have more tragic results. When one hunter jumped a rabbit, he fired at it rapidly several times before realizing another person was in his line of fire. This resulted in the other hunter being partially paralyzed by his wound.

County School Lunch Menus

Lunchroom menus for the coming week at Pitt County schools have been announced as follows:

Monday—hot dog on bun, french fries, cole slaw, applesauce, milk;

Tuesday—pizza, tossed salad, buttered corn, cinnamon bun, milk;

Wednesday—Cubed beef, mashed potatoes with gravy, seasoned collards, rolls, cake squares, milk;

Thursday—fried chicken, potato salad, peas and carrots, rolls, orange juice, milk;

Friday—cheeseburger, french fries cole slaw, sliced peaches, milk.

Nomadic tribes of Kurds migrate twice a year between Iraq and Iran, crossing at a frontier bridge to avoid the intense Iraqi heat in summer and the cold winters on the plains of Iran.

The fact that the most promising fields are in the most difficult parts of the country, thousands of miles from the nearest markets, makes the question of future investment particularly daunting.

According to Shashin's figures, the Soviet Union has so far failed to recoup the $20 billion poured into the oil industry between 1970 and 1974. He said revenue last year reached $4.5 billion. But despite vastly increased profits from exported oil, the gains represented only a 20 per cent jump over 1970.

Shashin said the industry for several years has failed to meet production targets even though it is among the nation's biggest swallows of capital investments.

"The effective use of capital investment is of great state importance," Shashin said. "...But at a number of places, cases were observed of money being squandered."

Shashin said oil field structures sometimes were built improperly and with delay. "As a result, the amount of unfinished construction is growing and the shortage of moveable equipment is also increasing."

He complained about the "inflexibility" of planning targets, with similar standards being applied to the aging wells of European Russia and the Caucasus and the gushing young wells of Siberia. He said too much effort is expended on relatively unfruitful fields and not enough on developing new resources.

He also criticized inefficiency and misuse of the oil industry's labor force. While the growth of nonproductive workers was "alarming," the number of shifts on some key jobs was two or less a day, he said.

And despite the burgeoning number of engineers and technicians, the Soviet Union still lags behind the West in modern production techniques.

In fact, so uncertain is the growth of the Soviet oil industry and so rapid the growth in demand for its products that some Western economists wonder whether the Soviet Union might not be a net importer of oil before long.

Mississippi Candidate Stresses The Work Ethic

By ANDREW REESE Jr. JACKSON, Miss. (UPI) — With a black metal lunchbox as his trademark, gubernatorial hopeful Charles C. "Cliff" Finch has introduced a new style of politicking in Mississippi — and so far it's been remarkably effective.

Finch, a tall, deeply tanned lawyer with sandy hair and blue eyes, scored a landslide victory in the Democratic gubernatorial primary, which traditionally has been tantamount to election in this Deep South state.

However, he faces a stiff challenge in the November general election from Republican Gil Carmichael, a Meridian car dealer who made a surprisingly strong showing three years ago in an unsuccessful race against veteran U.S. Sen. James O. Eastland.

A 60-year-old black independent, Henry Jay Kirksey of Jackson, also will be on the Nov. 4 ballot but is expected to offer only token opposition.

Finch, 48, a wealthy Batesville attorney who listed an income of $150,609 from his law practice last year, aligned himself with the working man during the primary campaign by carrying a lunchbox and devoting one day each week to doing manual labor.

He has driven a bulldozer, hauled logs, pumped gasoline, sacked groceries, worked on a shrimp boat, and clerked in a department store.

"The people want a man in the governor's office who wears callouses on his hands instead of wearing out the seat of his pants," he said. "I'm going to prove to them that I am that man."

Finch was viewed as a darkhorse when he entered the campaign, with incumbent Lt. Gov. William Winter ranked as the frontrunner in a six-man field. Winter, a veteran of more than 25 years in state government, defeated Finch four years ago for lieutenant governor in Finch's first statewide race.

As expected, Winter led the first primary but Finch finished a strong second and went on to capture a runoff three weeks later by more than 118,000 votes — the biggest majority won by any candidate in a Democratic gubernatorial primary in state history.

Finch built his campaign around the single theme of providing more and better-paying jobs in the state that has the lowest per capita income in the nation. He said he is concerned about other state and national issues, but feels they are secondary to "the No. 1 problem of our state — more jobs and better-paying jobs for every Mississippian."

There has been almost no mention this year — by Finch or his opponents — of the racial issue which once dominated Mississippi politics. All of the contenders openly solicited black as well as white votes and promised to hire blacks if elected.

Finch's support cuts across racial lines. One of his supporters was a founder of the old diehard segregationist group, the Americans for the Preservation of the White Race, and another is Mississippi's best-known black leader, Mayor Charles Evers of Fayette. Evers was an unsuccessful candidate himself for governor in 1971.

Although his law practice now consists mostly of damage suits and civil cases, Finch formerly served two terms as a district attorney in north Mississippi and was chief prosecutor in numerous criminal cases. He also served a four-year term in the Mississippi legislature in the early 1960s.

He grew up on a 40-acre farm in Panola County, spent a brief hitch in the Army near the end of World War II but saw no action, and says he learned to operate a bulldozer and other heavy equipment while working on Guam in 1948 on a civil service job.

He received his law degree from the University of Missisissippi in 1958 after helping put himself through college by working on the campus police force, measuring cotton, and driving a gravel truck.

Finch now owns a 260-acre farm near Batesville and has law offices in both Batesville and Jackson. Along with his residence at Batesville, he rents a home in Jackson where his wife and their four children, ranging in age from 12 to 19, have lived the past two years.

His gubernatorial campaign has featured hand-shaking visits throughout the state and appearances at rallies where Finch made speeches filled with platitudes about the "American dream" and the virtues of hard work.

He has baffled his opponents by shunning news conferences and granting infrequent interviews, displaying an elusive-ness which caused one defeated candidate to comment that running against Finch was like running against a phantom.

Team Studying Lung Diseases

UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. (UPI) — A Pennsylvania State University researcher is doing some "archaeology" that he hopes will lead to a method for diagnosing pulmonary diseases.

Dr. James S. Ultman, assistant professor of chemical engineering, is investigating the motion of gases in lungs.

"On a small scale," he said, "we're doing a bit of archaeology in trying to understand how a gas migrates from the mouth to the site of oxygen uptake through a network of approximately eight million branching tubes."

Ultman and two graduate students, Brian Doll, of Wy-behavior of air in the healthy lungs of live subjects, building glass models of the airway system and looking mathematically at theoretical airway system models.

Ultman currently is concerned with how much of a special tracer gas is recovered from the lungs during normal respiration.

A carefully selected, non-toxic tracer gas (such as helium) is introduced into the mouth during inspiration, and the expired gas is studied to determine what happened to it in the lungs. The tracer gas is used on both live subjects and in glass models.

A mass spectrometer is used to continually analyze the expired gas to find out how its concentration varies.

Greenville Municipal Election — Oct. 7, 1975

The Candidates' Questionnaire

Compiled and Sponsored by the League of Women Voters of Greenville and Pitt County

The Questions:

Candidates For Mayor

WILLIS J. STANCILL — 613 Oak Street; age 36; Stancill Investment Services; BS, MA; ECU.

1. Do you favor an appointed or elected school board for the City of Greenville? Why?

1. I favor an elected school board. This gives the citizens direct control. Since candidates would have to desire the positions enough to compete before the public, this would help prevent school board members who might not really be interested in serving.

2. How would you insure that dedicated and qualified individuals receive appointments to local boards and commissions?

2. Local board and commission positions should be made public so nominations could be made by any citizen. The City Council would screen the qualifications and select the best suitable candidates.

3. What do you feel is the most important issue facing the city government today?

3. Faith in American Government is being tested by miss-use of power from the highest to the lowest levels. Only by starting at lower levels and working upward can this faith be restored. The Greenville City Government has made many gains and stands out among the best in the state. Many problems still exist. Crime is increasing at an alarming rate. The schools are overcrowded. Use of drugs is on the rise. Some laws are not being enforced fairly and equally. I make my stand for clean government with fair and equal treatment for all.

Candidates For City Council

THOMAS M. ANTHONY — 107 St. Andrew Drive; age 37; Anthony Family Center; One semester college.

1. I favor an elected school board for the City of Greenville. I feel with 9 precincts in the City of Greenville the school board should be elected to two years and should have one member from each precinct to represent their area on the board.

2. I feel that all qualified individuals who seek office should be elected to local boards and commissions, not by appointment.

3. I feel that one of the most important issues facing the city government has got to be the public transit system.

FRANK G. FULLER — 912 East 14th Street; age 58; College teacher; BS, MA, Ed. D.; Incumbent.

1. I feel that elected school boards give the people, for whom the public schools exist, an opportunity for input in the formulation of policy which the professionals are then charged with carrying out. I am, therefore, in favor of an elected school board. Before initiating a change, however, I believe that all possibilities for improving education in Greenville should be thoroughly discussed and understood by the general public.

2. Appointments to boards and commissions are made from names submitted by interested groups and individual citizens. Names are actively sought of City Council members. In naming people, careful attention is paid to the person's expertise, ability to work effectively with others and willingness to "stand tall" under pressure. Of particular importance is to be certain that there are no conflicts of interest or that persons appointed will not promote a narrow personal interest. Efforts are made to see that adequate minority group representation is maintained.

3. The most important issue to me is the improvements to be realized through the proper use of Community Development funds. The twenty-four approved projects were developed from information gathered at hearings where many Greenville citizens and groups testified. It is important for us to move on with implementing plans already made and to develop uses for the additional money coming to the city. This plus the completion of the Transit study should be top priority.

CLARENCE GRAY — 310 Greenfield Blvd.; Associate Principal, J.H. Rose High School; AB at Shaw University; MA at North Carolina Central University; Incumbent.

1. I am still of the opinion that the School Board should adequately reflect representation of the total community. I favor an elected School Board, provided the members of the Board are elected by precincts and that the precincts be so constructed as to reflect the total community. I feel that an elected School Board in this manner would be more accountable to the people who elected them. Furthermore, each Board member should be responsive to the total community.

2. In order to insure that dedicated and qualified individuals be appointed to local boards and commissions, the members of the Council who make the appointments should check each person's background very carefully to make sure that the person can function effectively on the board for which he is being considered. I think it would be wise for the Council to seek some input from the citizens whenever it is necessary. It is quite advantageous at times to let others share their opinions of a person.

3. It is rather difficult for me to single out the most important issue facing the City Government today when I view several issues that could be numbered as the most important issue facing the City Government today. The one issue that seems to tower above the others is that of the high cost of utility services. Many people find it very difficult to pay these high rates. The City Government must do everything in its power to see that these rates are reduced. I realize this is a national problem, but our government is built from the grass root level.

WILLIAM J. HADDEN, JR. — 1600 East Sixth Street; age 54; Episcopal Chaplain, ECU; BA, Lynchburg College M. Div.; Vanderbilt (Religion) MA; Austin Peay State University, (Education Administration).

1. Although there are obviously many advantages to an appointed board of education, there are implicit dangers. There is always the danger that the board could be selected in the self interest of the appointing agency. The entire community ought to have a say in the persons selected. There is the added danger of a growing apathy in the important work of the board of education when there is less citizen input. I would like to see an elected board.

2. I believe the appointment procedure should follow these guidelines: 1. The widest possible field of qualified persons should be considered. 2. The council should have the privilege of choice from this field. 3. In key positions, the council should have the right of a personal "hearing" of the individual's qualifications and of interrogating the person involved. 4. The council should then vote on the candidate on the basis of his or her qualifications and commitment to serve.

3. The problem that underlies most of the other problems is how to handle the rapid change and growth in our city. Industrial growth requires planning to prevent industrial sprawl and pollution. We are in need of some type of mass transportation especially for our low income citizens. There has to be a continued study and implementation of improved methods of traffic flow to handle the growing automobile population in our streets. We will need increased use of the experience and expertise on the campus of E.C.U.

JAMES E. HIX, JR. — 107 Heritage Street; age 33; Chemistry Department at ECU; BA (1963), PhD (1968) Vanderbilt University.

1. I believe that an elected school board would best serve the needs of our community. An appointed board need only keep eight to ten people satisfied, while an elected board would be much more responsive to the needs of "all" the people. To insure proper balance, I would recommend that most of the board be elected by district but allow for several at-large or appointed seats.

2. The only way to insure that dedicated and qualified individuals receive appointments to your council, The Council must be receptive to recommendations from organizations and citizens throughout the community. I will seek such recommendations and carefully evaluate each potential candidate on the basis of his (her) qualifications, interest in serving and dedication.

3. There are a number of important issues facing our city today; school restructuring, the wise spending of Community Development funds, and the proper use of zoning ordinances, to name a few. On a long term basis, however, our most important issue is the maintaining of open lines of communication between the governing officials and "all" of our citizens. Only a well-informed council, aware of the feelings and needs of its community can act in the best interests of all.

JOHN L. HOWARD — 305 Laurel Street; age 46; Vice-President, Greenville Tobacco Co., Inc.; 3 1/2 years UNC - ECU; Incumbent.

1. I believe that Greenville is ready for an elected rather than an appointed school board. Some very qualified people have served on the board, but some of them, I am sure, would not seek election. For the sake of continuity during the transition period, I would advocate one-half elected and one-half appointed. The elections should be for four years and the appointees serve for two years at which time another election would be held.

2. It has been my policy to determine the qualifications for persons running for an appointed position. The council has recently passed a matter of policy that an appointee must attend 75 per cent of the meetings or resign. This insures that one must be dedicated to accept such an appointment.

3. I feel that the most pressing need in Greenville is the eradication of sub-standard housing and in particular, to alleviate the situation we have in the West Meadowbrook area. It is extremely important that we use our Community Development Funds wisely.

ADA JONES — 2414 Umstead Avenue; Retiree; Greenville City Schools, Sacred Heart Academy and College in Belmont, N.C.

1. I favor an elected school board for the City of Greenville. We can correctly presume that those persons who voluntarily elect to run for an office have a strong dedication to the needs required in such office and thus take this step to let the people know of their desire to serve them.

2. There is little insurance that dedicated and qualified appointees can be chosen. There is always the possibility of appointments being made and/or accepted for reasons other than the desire to serve the boards, commissions and the public. Realistically, there are often the hazards of favoritism, ego-build-up and nepotism behind appointments.

3. Unfortunately there are several important issues facing city governments today, and one of the most important is juvenile crime. Juvenile crime is no longer "delinquency". Statistics show that in the U.S. such crime has increased 1600 per cent in 20 years. It is recorded that children under 15 commit more crimes than adults over 25. Remedies must be found at once to curtail this crime situation, for these children of today are our adult citizens of tomorrow!

MILDRED T. (MILLIE) McGRATH — 103 Deerwood Drive; age 51; Chairman, Electronic Data Processing Department at Pitt Technical Institute; BS in Accounting, MA in Business; Incumbent.

1. I favor the election of school board members by areas or precinct. Many parents with school-age children believe that an elected school board would be more accountable to the people than an appointed board. While I believe we have a good board now, the lack of the public's faith in the present system is a very real problem.

2. I believe Greenville is fortunate to have the many dedicated persons who have serving on our boards and commissions. I would like to see us set up an "Interest Bank" containing names, resumes, and interests of persons who are willing to serve. When an appointment was to be made, reference to this file would help in selection of an appointee. Vital interest in the efficient development of this community is an absolute requirement for consideration.

3. The most important issue facing the City Government today is setting goals and formulating plans for community development. With our present rapid growth, community action should include improvement in traffic patterns, better accident and crime prevention programs, and better housing standards for many. Vitality important to any future projects is involvement by more citizens.

DONOVAN PHILLIPS — 403 Bancroft Avenue; age 34; Phillip's Brothers Mortuary; 3 years college, graduate of Embalming School.

1. I personally favor an elected school board in the City of Greenville with one school board member from each precinct. Every segment of the community and its ideas and feelings should be reflected in the educational system. Each precinct is composed of different neighborhoods with vastly differing cultural, economic and social backgrounds. Therefore, creating different viewpoints and needs. An elected school board would also be responsive and responsible to its constituents.

2. Before appointments to all local boards and commissions, each nominee for appointment should send in a written resume to the City Council and/or appear in person before the City Council for an interview before consideration and confirmation of an appointment. In a democracy, I feel this is as close as we can come to insuring dedication and efficiency without infringing upon the rights of all citizens to participate in their government.

3. The most important issue facing city government today is the uncontrolled growth of the City of Greenville. The city is becoming a boom town. There is a definite need for at least a 20 year projected controlled growth plan for our city, including housing, industry, traffic patterns and utility service. Last, but not least, within this plan must be a better code of zoning and a more efficient communication mechanism for this most important planning and zoning commission.

HENRY E. (ED) STALLINGS — 422 Pittman Drive; age 39; Salesman with Martha White Foods, Inc.; High School.

1. I definitely favor an elected school board. For the past two years I've had the privilege of serving on the school board, and I still favor the elected way. The notion that this change will cause less qualified people to serve is pure nonsense. Our County School Board members are elected. I think Greenville citizens have made it clear they want elected, not selected school board members. I will work for this change.

2. We certainly have many dedicated and qualified citizens to choose from, but there probably isn't an absolute way to insure that all of those who are asked to serve will be dedicated and qualified people. Each time an appointment is to be made, I will explore the person's qualifications and try to make sure that he or she is the right person for the job before I vote.

3. One could get some argument with this question. There are many important issues facing our City Government today. I consider the disbursement of the community development money over the next few years very important, because it involves approximately six million dollars, and all our citizens will be affected by the spending of this money.

JOSEPH M. TAFT, JR. — 104 Kenilworth Road; age 38; Taft Furniture Company; AB Degree at ECU; Incumbent.

1. An appointed school board has been serving the City of Greenville well. I would be in favor of an elected school board if the citizens of Greenville showed enough interest in an elected school board.

2. By investigating and checking qualifications of prospective appointees. If qualified, being certain they are interested enough to perform their duties in the best interest of the city.

3. The most important issue facing the city government today is planning for the orderly growth of our city so that it will meet the economic, educational and recreational needs of its citizens.

JOHN H. TAYLOR, JR. — 1035 West Rockspring Road; age 45; College graduate.

1. I favor an elected school board, specifically because under the present set-up the appointed school board is not required by law to answer to anyone for the direction of the educational program it charts for the youth of Greenville. The board is not obliged to hear the concerns of the City Council that makes the appointments, the voters who elected the Council, nor the thousands of parents whose children are directed for life by the decisions that the school board makes.

2. The Council should be aware of vacancies that will occur three to six months in advance; determine several possible appointees who have shown a deep interest in the mission of the board or commission under consideration; evaluate the credentials of the prospective appointees; and select the person or persons whom the Council feels will work effectively in achieving the goals set forth in the board's or commission's charter.

3. Determining the best possible use of Federal Funds available through the current revenue sharing program — Community Development grant funds — as well as Federal assistance. Almost everybody wants to feel that the citizen's aspirations are at least considered when such funds are available, especially when there are so very few "strings" attached. I believe community development means a lot more than "one-time" expenditures. There must be some effort at resolving many of the human problems that exist in Greenville — including public transportation.

To Deke Slayton: Was Better Late Than Never

By BRUCE E. HICKS
UPI Science Writer
HOUSTON (UPI) — The unique view of earth from space and the freedom of weightlessness were something Deke Slayton only heard and dreamed about for 16 years while his hair turned gray and his heart slightly bitter. For most of those years he was grounded by a heart irregularity but he never gave up his battle to go into space. Last July he finally flew with two other astronauts to a space meeting with two Soviet cosmonauts.

At 51, Slayton became America's oldest astronaut and a possible pilot for the space shuttle of the 1980s. But Deke and his fellow astronauts breathed deadly fumes during the last moments of the Apollo-Soyuz flight and spent five days in a hospital.

Those fumes proved lucky for Slayton because doctors discovered a tiny tumor the size of a pencil eraser in his left lung. Surgery proved it was benign although doctors gave him better than a 50 per cent chance it would be malignant because of his age and because he smoked heavily for 30 years.

"I figure I can beat 50-50 odds anytime," Slayton said in an interview. "Frankly, I didn't think I had too much of a problem to begin with. I wasn't all that concerned about it." Slayton, thin and slightly pale, said he believed even if it was cancer it had been caught so early doctors could remove all damaged areas and he wouldn't be bothered by it again.

"Some could convince themselves to be an invalid with all that folderol, but I couldn't. I really wasn't worried whether it was malignant or not. You just thank you're good stars that it didn't come out that way."

A veteran bomber and test pilot, Slayton entered the elite corps as one of the original seven Mercury astronauts in April, 1959, eager to soar into the mysterious blackness of space. For three years he trained to pilot the one-man Mercury spacecraft, only to be grounded by an irregular heartbeat a few weeks short of his scheduled flight.

The only thing he could fly solo for the next 10 years was the desk from which he named almost every space crew. He was forced to watch as 43 other astronauts went into earth orbit or walked on the moon while he had to have a co-pilot even when he flew jets. Then, doctors said his heart problem was gone and Slayton, gray-haired and nearly 50, was returned to full flight status. He celebrated by zipping through the skies above the space center all alone in one of the astronauts' white T38 jets.

In January, 1973, the old man of the space program was named to the crew for the historic U.S.-Soviet joint spaceflight last July. His time had finally come.

"When I came into the program in '59, that's what we were hired to do. That's what we were paid for," Slayton said. "I thought I should do it at least once to earn my pay." He never believed he should have been grounded for the slight heart problem, never admitting it was a problem. When asked about it, his voice often darkened with his angry replies that the doctors didn't know what they were doing.

He was pretty bitter, but he's mellowed greatly since his nine days aboard an Apollo spaceship.

"I really hated to come back," he said. "It was better than I expected it to be. I knew I was missing something all that time, but I couldn't really appreciate what until I'd been there. It makes me appreciate how much I'd been missing."

"But it's better to have done it late, than not to have done it at all."

He said he sort of did things backwards from most by managing an operation before he had an active role.

"I spent 10 to 12 years managing, waiting for a chance to go out and grab a stick. It was sort of like starting all over at that stage."

Slayton said he's "luckier than hell" to have made a flight at all because there are no more manned space missions for at least four years until the space shuttle rocket-plane is operational. He said he will probably take an offer from Johnson Space Center director Christopher C. Kraft to direct the testing of the shuttle.

After that, he plans to return to his astronaut duties despite the fact he will be more than 55 years old.

Carousel Collection Is Woman's Pride, Joy

Albuquerque Journal
ROSSELL, N.M. (AP) — Marianne Stevens of Roswell bought her first merry-go-round horse back in 1957 in a Coney Island antique shop.

"I thought the kids could play on it," she says, "but it was 60 years old and it couldn't take the New Mexico dryness — it disintegrated. I decided if I got another one, I would keep it inside."

She went back to New York in 1968, again to an antique shop, and this time bought one for $30, an ear gone, its leg burned off.

"I dragged it home in the back of the station wagon and when I'd finished restoring it, several people tried to buy it from me. It motivated me and the whole thing snowballed. I started buying in groups of 30, then whole carousels."

She now has what is said to be the largest private collection of early day hand-carved wooden carousel figures in the world.

Her collection includes five complete machines which she is restoring, four of them here, one stored in Virginia, as well as many individual figures, both the kind found on large permanent machines housed in parks and on the smaller portable kinds used by carnivals.

She sold another large one two years ago and earlier had donated a smaller one to the city of Roswell for its Peppermint Park. The Roswell machine she made "from the ground up, the machinery, everything. I just had the frame and used figures from my collection."

She does not intend to let any of the other complete machines go "unless I know some responsible person will be keeping an eye on it."

Her concern extends to individual figures she sells. "I consider them too rare and valuable to go to just anyone. One man from California wanted one for his patio and I asked if it was covered. He said no and I wouldn't sell it."

Most of the other 400-plus members of the National Carousel Roundtable (NCR) founded in 1973 feel the same about the figures.

Mrs. Stevens is secretary and one of the eight founders of the national group.

Their idea has been to preserve as many of the old machines as they can find because while in 1900 "there were 8 to 10 American factories turning the carousels out as fast as they could, they quit making the hand-carved wooden figures in quantity around 1930," says Mrs. Stevens.

"Now there is only one man (in Wichita, Kan.) even making the large machines — and those figures are of aluminum."

"He told me he isn't going to make them any more because the machines sell for $95,000. A person is better off trying to find one of the old ones — you're talking essentially about $60,000 and they're beautiful, well made. The motors too, I've found so far, rarely need overhauling."

The NCR has been conducting a census of the old carousels and has found 300 in existence, about 290 of them intact and operating. A third are of the very small carny type, the others the large kind found in park buildings, through Ohio, New York and Pennsylvania particularly.

"Unfortunately, with the folk art thing, some individual figures are so valued and popular, buyers bid and carousels are broken up," says Mrs. Stevens. "While the NCR doesn't have the money to buy any we have helped to keep them from being broken up by finding buyers."

Her appreciation of the art work is compounded by strong feelings of nostalgia.

INCA TRAILS
CUZCO, Peru (UPI) — A new attraction in this city, the capital of the pre-Colombian Inca Indian empire, is hiking along the old Inca trails. Guiding companies have sprung up to take tourists on expeditions of a week or more for up to 50 miles along the trails. They pass by centuries-old Inca ruins, over 12,000 feet high Andean peaks, and down to the edges of tropical jungle.

Obstetrician Is Unwilling Center Of Controversy

By SETH MYDANS
Associated Press Writer
BOSTON (AP) — Seven months after his manslaughter conviction for the death of an aborted fetus, Dr. Kenneth C. Edelin's medical practice is busier than ever.

But with his appeal still pending after a trial he has characterized as a witch-hunt, the 36-year-old obstetrician is questioning whether he should continue in medicine and considering a move away from Boston, where it all happened.

Dr. Edelin is angry. "I wonder what my reaction would be if I saw any of the jurors — Shea, McLaughlin, Pelletier," he mused at a recent interview. Sometimes he looks for them.

Following the jury's unanimous verdict, Dr. Edelin was placed on one year's probation, and the sentence was delayed pending appeal. He returned immediately to his medical practice as chief of ambulatory services in the obstetrical ward at Boston City Hospital.

Dr. Edelin soon was promoted to associate director of the ward. He is in such demand for private practice, including some abortions, that he limits his office hours.

His conviction last Feb. 15 has intensified the national debate on abortion, and has caused a number of hospitals to cut back on the operations. Dr. Edelin said that Boston City Hospital, where he performed the abortion that led to his indictment, now accepts almost no abortion cases. They are referred to special clinics.

The trial has caused the young doctor to reassess his goals.

In an interview just after his conviction, he had said of his work: "It's usually a very happy specialty, seeing a woman throughout her pregnancy and delivering for her a nice healthy baby and seeing a family develop."

Now he says: "I've been trying to make a decision — what am I going to do with my life? Am I going to stay in medicine or should I continue to be a public figure and travel around the country and promote the things I believe in?"

The handsome and articulate doctor has been in demand as a speaker, and although he says it interferes with his practice, he has accepted a number of engagements to help pay his legal expenses.

These include a debt of $65,000 for last winter's trial, Dr. Edelin says, and the amount could reach $120,000 for the appeal in state courts because an additional lawyer must be hired and there's a heavy load of legal research.

The appeal, originally to have been argued this fall, is now expected to be heard early next year.

Reflecting on his manslaughter conviction for performing a medical procedure in use elsewhere in the country, Dr. Edelin says, "I believe it could only have happened in Boston."

robbing for performing experiments on aborted fetuses.

The Edelin case began two years ago, on Oct. 3, 1973, when he performed a routine legal abortion on a 17-year-old girl.

Because of difficulties in aborting by salt injection, Dr. Edelin completed the abortion by hysterotomy, a procedure similar to a Caesarean birth, in which the fetus is removed through an incision in the mother's abdomen.

The 20-to-24-week-old fetus was discovered later in a jar of formaldehyde by investigators seeking evidence in the grave-robbing case.

At the trial, Assistant Dist. Atty. Newman A. Flanagan charged that at the moment Dr. Edelin cut the fetus from the wall of its mother's womb, a baby was born. He charged that Dr. Edelin then held the fetus within the womb for several minutes and killed it.

William P. Homans, the defense lawyer, countered that an abortion is a legal operation and the procedure presupposes the fetus will be killed legally. Furthermore, he said that because it "never drew a breath outside the body of its mother," the fetus never was born and never became a human being.

Judge James P. McGuire of Suffolk Superior Court instructed the jury that "a fetus is not a person and not a subject for an indictment for manslaughter."

In order to become a person, he said, it had to be born. The judge defined birth as removal from the mother's body, not only separation from the wall of the womb.

In view of the judge's charge, the jury verdict came as a surprise to some in the courtroom. Homans later asked the judge to overturn the verdict, but he refused.

So far, the larger questions of Dr. Edelin's trial remain unanswered: When does a human life begin? What responsibility does a doctor have to an aborted fetus? How far can the state go in prescribing what is good medical practice?

And Dr. Edelin has become a symbol of these questions his trial has raised. It is a role he says he doesn't like, but he seems somehow drawn to it.

"I've always been a very private person," he says. But he also says, "I've never been a person to just sit back and keep my mouth shut."

U.S. Espionage Under Scrutiny As Never Before

By SAUL PETT
AP Special Correspondent
WASHINGTON (AP) — He began by recalling that when he finally told his daughter what he did for a living, which was espionage, she said, "but isn't that kind of dirty, Daddy?"

He ended the interview with a kind of sum-up.

"In 25 years, I've had to do things I'm not particularly proud of. It's been a double life, sometimes unethical and illegal. But I think I've been useful and I'm not envious of any man's moral standards."

He put on his glasses and dug into his wallet. He hoped, he said, he was not about to be corny. Then, from a tattered scrap of paper, this big, powerful looking man read aloud, with some emotion, the words of Nathan Hale:

"I wish to be useful, and every kind of service, necessary to the public good, becomes honorable by being necessary. If the exigencies of my country demand a peculiar service, its claims to perform that service are imperious."

It was the rationale of Dave Phillips' life with the Central Intelligence Agency. (His daughter had thought he worked for the State Department.) It has been, of course, the rationale of the CIA, the FBI, the military intelligence agencies, and, in fact, of all the heroes and rogues in history who served the altar of national security.

Now, in the wake of Watergate and Vietnam, the morality and mentality of the huge American intelligence apparatus are being questioned as never before.

Do the techniques of intelligence inevitably compromise a democracy? What is the morality of men who seek, in the name of country, to turn men of another country into traitors, men who lie, steal, break and enter, blackmail and bug? Should Mr. Bond, at long last, be housebroken?

It was Pearl Harbor Harry Truman had in mind when he asked Congress to set up the CIA in 1947. Clark Clifford helped write the legislation. Before he became secretary of defense in 1968, Clifford served eight years on the president's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board, most of them as chairman.

"Basically," he said recently, "an intelligence operation is an anachronism in a democracy. It is secret. It sometimes uses questionable means. The public can't be informed about it or even told its cost. It is inconsistent with democracy but it remains a necessity if we are to preserve our form of government. We can't fly blind in the world today."

But the CIA troubles Clifford profoundly, for startling reasons, and so he urges new legislation by which a joint oversight committee of Congress would tether the agency within new, sharply defined limits.

He is particularly troubled by the growth of the "intelligence syndrome" over the years of the Cold War.

"As the agency went on growing," he said, "there developed a psychology within the CIA: those who were experienced in international intelligence were uniquely qualified not only to carry out orders but to conceive new projects."

"As time went on, they developed a concept of a higher loyalty, higher even than that which they owed to their own Director and the President, a loyalty to country which carried with it the idea that others, only temporarily in government, would not be able to understand the great rewards that awaited the country if they were left alone."

SEAGULL ON STONE—A stone wall on the bank of a river near Beaufort, S.C. becomes the perch for a seagull's moment of rest from flight. Caught by the camera in a frozen pose, the gull almost seems a part of the wall itself. (AP Wirephoto)

By law, the CIA is responsible to the president and reports directly to the National Security Council, of which he is chairman. The other members are the vice president, secretary of state, secretary of defense, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff and the CIA director.

The NSC, too, says Clifford, was at times kept in the semidark as a result of agile footwork and a relentless momentum that would develop within the CIA for a given project.

It is the insistent contention of the CIA that it may operate in the dark but not in a vacuum, that what it does secretly is simply the invisible arm of what the President, in his foreign policy, does publicly.

It is also the implicit contention of recent history that elitism in government, or what David Halberstam called "The Best and the Brightest," was not confined to the 125 serene, verdant acres the CIA occupies in the pines of Langley, Va. From Franklin Roosevelt to Richard Nixon, Congress was told less and less by increasingly powerful presidents. Father knew best, and Big Brother was not far behind.

Basic to the understanding of the intelligence mentality, say its practitioners, are several facts of international life: the world remains a dangerous place despite detente; the KGB, the Russian intelligence apparatus, is very good, ubiquitous and has the advantage of operating from a closed society; intelligence, in any case, cannot be operated within Marquis of Queensbury rules.

CIA director William E. Colby:

"My task is to search for individual facts kept in the utmost secrecy in closed societies, and with these facts try to construct whole assessments, in somewhat the way one extrapolates a reproduction of the skeleton of a brontosaurus from a thigh bone. Without ... clandestinely acquired information, our brontosaurus could in some situations be very deformed indeed."

Thus espionage.

And espionage, Dave Phillips points out, is a crime in every country of the world. So, obviously, is treason. One is fed by the other. Like other governments, the government of the United States sends men abroad to spy and encourage treason and would rather not hear of the crimes within the crimes — bribery, theft, blackmail, bugging.

Rough as espionage is there seem to be limits, practical if not moral limits.

"In that culture," said Sen. Frank Church, chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, "spies don't kill each other. In fact, they scrupulously avoid it. Now, I'm not talking about double agents. But while they watch each other carefully, the KGB leaves the CIA alone and the CIA leaves the KGB alone. They don't shoot each other. It would be as inefficient as gang warfare."

In the beginning, the CIA was primarily intended to coordinate and evaluate for the President the information received by the government's various intelligence arms. The law establishing it said nothing about what has come to be known as "covert operations," the manipulation of events in other countries.

But the law did say the CIA was to perform "such other functions" as the National Security Council might direct. With that catch-all phrase as its authority, the CIA over the years has conducted covert operations around the world with massive resources of money, men and tricks neat and dirty. In Western Europe, Iran, Guatemala, Greece, Cuba, Laos, Vietnam and other countries, it has poured money into elections and engineered or tried to engineer the overthrow of governments thought to be inimical.

The CIA's general answer to criticism of its covert operations is that they were legally authorized and that the agency, a creature of the President, was carrying out his foreign policy. Thus, the question of CIA morality becomes the morality of that policy.

None of the intelligence people approached for this article saw anything immoral in the Bay of Pigs invasion of Cuba. It was poorly planned or badly executed but it was not, in their eyes, morally wrong. After all, they said, nobody had elected Castro and he was talking about exporting Marxist revolution in Latin America and he was inviting the Russians in only 90 miles from American shores and the Russians did eventually bring missiles with them.

There is a kind of relentless momentum implicit in this logic which, gathering speed, can gallop easily toward the ultimate in covert operations — political assassination. It usually carries with it the reminder that the world might have been spared tragedy beyond measure if somebody had killed Adolf Hitler.

And if Hitler, why not Stalin? And if Stalin, why not Castro? After all, this reasoning goes, wouldn't it have been better to kill one man than to have hundreds die in the Bay of Pigs and later risk the deaths of millions in the missile crisis?

Senator Church said his committee has "hard evidence of CIA involvement" in assassination plots. Colby said there were suggestions to assassinate but they were turned down.

Former CIA men interviewed for this story denied knowledge of any such plots but they did say they could understand how some people might have considered them.

There is, or there is supposed to be, a double standard in intelligence by which the golden rule is neatly reversed. We do to others what we don't do to ourselves. We may spy, lie, bug, bribe, break and enter, steal or blackmail abroad but not at home. This is the law.

"But the problems which have arisen in the domestic field cannot be fully understood and evaluated," said Erwin Griswold of the Rockefeller Commission which investigated the CIA, "unless they are viewed against the role which the CIA has undertaken to play outside the United States. Because of the secret nature of its operations, legal and moral limitations may not always be kept in mind. In this situation, it should not be surprising that personnel, when working in the United States, should not always feel that they are subject to ordinary restraints."

Thus, the CIA has spied on Americans in the United States, maintained dossiers, intercepted and opened mail, infiltrated protest groups and engaged in wiretaps and break-ins.

The CIA insists none of this was "massive" and says that where it occurred it was necessary to national security. Its proponents also remind its critics of the unsettling riots in the sixties and seventies. They recall a statement by FBI Director Clarence Kelley:

"Let me remind those who would criticize the FBI's actions that the United States Capitol WAS bombed; that other explosions rocked public and private offices and buildings; that rioters led by revolutionary extremists laid siege to military, industrial, and educational facilities; and that killings, maimings, and other atrocities accompanied such acts of violence from New England to California."

Colby says the CIA no longer opens mail. He also says the current uproar over its methods has caused damage. He speaks of other friendly intelligence systems abroad growing wary of dealing with the CIA. Of agents quitting because of a fear of exposure. Of "people we were just about to do business with changing their minds." Of American corporations now afraid of finding themselves on the front page as "CIA fronts."

Church says neither he nor his committee intends to emasculate the CIA but they are concerned by the growth of Big Brother government.

"We've come a long way down that road. It's time to stuff the intelligence genie back in the bottle before we wake up one morning to find we have spawned a secret police and a government which has become the enemy of the people."

Church admits that laying down new specific ground rules for the American intelligence apparatus in an unpretty world will be delicate and difficult. "The range of permissible activity will always have to depend on the good sense of the men running our government. The whole solution cannot be found in the written law no matter how carefully it is written."

Chairman Of Operation Santa Named

Mrs. Hilda M. Garrenton of Bethel will serve as 1975 Operation Santa Claus Chairman for Pitt County. The announcement was made today by John L. Howard, President of Pitt County Mental Health Association.

MRS. GARRENTON

Mrs. Garrenton has chosen three words as her theme for this year: AWARE — CARE — SHARE. "Enlightened people are aware of mental illness. This creates a feeling of care, which in turn awakens the desire to share, especially at Christmas. It is my feeling that most Pitt Countians will react generously and favorably to this project as in former years," she said.

Community service work has long been one of Mrs. Garrenton's interests, especially Girl Scouts. It was as Hilda C. Mather of Philadelphia, Pa. leader of a Girl Scout troop needing a qualified individual to pass some of her troop members in Senior First Aid, that she met Connell G. Garrenton, M.D., whom she later married. Upon completion of Dr. Garrenton's medical education at the University of Pennsylvania and internship at Bryn Mawr Hospital, they moved to their present home in Bethel. They have four daughters, and three grandchildren.

Area chairmen who will assist in Operation Santa Claus will be announced at a planning luncheon scheduled for 12:30 p.m. Wednesday at the Greenville Golf and Country Club. Community collection points also will be announced at the luncheon.

City School Lunch Menu

Lunchroom menus for the coming week in Greenville elementary schools have been announced as follow:

Display Coinage Of 134 Years

HONG KONG (UPI) — Visitors are urged to stop at the Hong Kong currency exhibition, a display of coinage throughout the colony's 134-year history. The display traces chronologically the development of Hong Kong coins from 1841, featuring vintage coins such as the Spanish silver dollar, the British Empire sterling, the Mexican Silver dollar, the Indian rupee and the Chinese silver bar and copper cent. In 1863 the government started issuing its own coins bearing the mark "HongKong."

Reading Today Is Top Job Skill

WESTPORT, Conn. (AP) — The average American employee probably spends from one to four hours a day reading material necessary to the performance of his job, according to the Evelyn Wood Reading Dynamics Institute.

If this employee works 40 hours a week and earns $12,000 a year, he is being paid $2,400 to $6,000 a year just for reading, the institute estimates. On this basis, the institute, which specializes in instruction in new speed-reading techniques, calculates that if such an employee could triple his reading speed he could provide his employer with between $1,600 and $4,000 more productive time each year.

After 25 Years, NATO Reforming Defense Plans

By RICHARD C. LONGWORTH
KAISERSLAUTERN, West Germany (UPI) — A secret

four-story bunker, being outfitted in the dark German hills near the Moselle River, is the centerpiece of a campaign to reform gradually the defense of the West.

The reform's purpose is to give the defense of central Europe coordination and unity, to replace the present fragmentation of command and weapons among the seven nations—United States, West Germany, Canada, Britain, Belgium, Holland and Luxembourg—responsible for the area.

"We seek a common doctrine," Gen. Alexander M. Haig Jr., the new NATO troop commander, explains. "We are trying to improve the exchange of intelligence among our nations. We are looking at the deployment of forces, to get a faster reaction time."

The Boerfink Bunker, as it is called, will direct Europe's defense in wartime. Gen. Richard H. Ellis, the American who commands NATO air forces in the region, believes it will "get the right resources to the right place at the right time."

But Boerfink is only part of the reform. Other parts include:

— The decision by Haig to oversee personally this fall's NATO war games, instead of leaving them up to the individual nations concerned.

— The formation of a new headquarters here, under Ellis' command, to link NATO air forces operating in the northern and southern halves of Germany.

— Proposals to station a U.S. Army brigade in northern Germany, outside the traditional American occupation zone in the southern part of the nation.

— Growing attention to the need to make equipment of NATO nations compatible, especially in communications, so they can talk and fight together more efficiently.

Few Western taxpayers realize how disunited NATO remains, 26 years after its founding, in its most vital area—the central region, stretching through West Germany from Denmark to the Alps.

Ammunition used by one NATO member seldom fits weapons used by another. Planes from some NATO allies cannot refuel and refit at air bases in others. Although English is the military lingua franca in all NATO nations, communications equipment varies so widely that commanders in many nations cannot talk to each other except by public telephone.

Until recently, NATO's central air command was split in two, with the 2-ATAF, or Second Allied Tactical Air Force, in charge of northern Germany, and the 4-ATAF defending southern Germany. There was little central control.

The Allied Air Forces Central Europe (AAFCE) was formed last June to unify these two halves. Currently located at Ramstein Air Force Base here, it is scheduled to move within two years to Brunssum, Holland, to be near the headquarters for allied ground forces in Central Europe.

Gen. Richard H. Ellis, the new AAFCE commander here, does little to hide his distaste for this move—mostly because it would take him 100 miles farther from the Boerfink Bunker.

The bunker originally was built in the early 1960's by the West Germany military. It is being refitted now by NATO as its key command post in wartime, from which Ellis, an American, and the new ground forces commander, German Gen. Karl Schnell, can deploy their 2,000 airplanes and eight army corps over the 500-mile-long battlefield.

The bunker, dug into the side of a forested hill at a secret site about 15 minutes' helicopter flight northwest of here, is a super-strong redoubt covered by 12 feet of reinforced concrete and stocked with enough food to support 300 persons for a month. Ellis says it can withstand anything but a direct nuclear hit.

Four floors of offices will surround the four-story-high central operations room. Intelligence data will flow in from NATO nations, much of it over U.S. communications already installed in Europe, and will be fed into the bunker's computers and displayed on its screens and consoles.

When it goes into operation next summer, Boerfink will be permanently manned. Ellis says that he and other commanders will go there "in times of tension," but refused to say at what level of alert the bunker will become the nerve center for Europe's defense.

The beauty of Boerfink, Ellis says, is that it "can assess the situation across the entire central system"—an ability denied to NATO strategists now.

Most of the reforms were under way when Haig left the White House last December and came to NATO. But officers in the field say the hard-eyed soldier-bureaucrat is a major force behind speeding them to completion.

Haig announced recently his plan to put the annual autumn NATO war games under his direct coordination, "to demonstrate allied solidarity, improve my ability to enhance the command's readiness and measure far better the differences in doctrine and logistics and command control techniques."

Under pressure from Congress, the U.S. Army is cutting 18,000 of its support troops in Europe and replacing them with two brigades of infantry combat troops. At least one of these brigades is likely to be stationed in northern Germany—the first GIs to be based outside the American zone in southern Germany.

"This location was determined by where the Americans and other armies were when the war ended," a European general explained. "To move this American brigade north is a good thing, because it reinforces our strength in the north. There's no law, after all, that says the Russians will attack in the south, where NATO is strongest. And it gives us more flexibility."

NATO planners worry, however, that the American move to the north might give some NATO nations—especially Holland—an excuse to cut defense costs by reducing their troops there.

Pick Their Own Crops

PETALUMA, Calif. (AP) — Harvest time in Sonoma County, north of San Francisco, is a time of incentive for city dwellers to take a leisurely drive through the countryside—and harvest their own crops.

In 1972, 100 of the small farmers of the county organized a Farm Trails Plan, in hopes of encouraging more city visitors. A map of the small farms where persons could drive up, pick their own and pay less was available at every Chamber of Commerce office in the county. The 1975 map includes 150 members, offering everything from berries, apples, plants, mushrooms, persimmons and herbs to chickens and pheasants.

Bob Larson of Petaluma, president of the organization, says, "Each year we have added 20 to 30 new members. For some of our members it has meant the difference between failure and success."

The dollars and cents saving to those picking their own fruit, etc., is not great. However, many consider the freshness of the product to be worth it. "We are selling freshness and quality," says Mrs. Helaine Campbell, vice president of the organization. "What you are buying in the supermarkets is 10 to 14 days old."

Pitt Students On Dean's List

KINSTON—Seven Pitt County students were named to the dean's list at Lenoir Community College recently.

They are: Aubrey Wooten, Thomas Boswell, Grover Boykin, George Holland, Linwood Mitchell, all of Grifton; Alvin Jones and Clifford Pacenta Jr., both of Greenville.

Sees Savings In Productivity

MOORESTOWN, N.J. (AP) — Virtually any company can save $1,000 per job a year from an employee productivity improvement program, according to Science Management Corp.

The figure is based on an analysis of results achieved from more than 1,700 projects carried out by the productivity improvement organization.

The biggest sources of low productivity are overstaffing, inadequate supervision and poor work methods, noted James A. Skidmore Jr., president of Science Management. "The problem is worse in the white-collar sector of the economy than it is on the plant floor," he said.

U.S. productivity fell 2.6 per cent in 1974, the first actual decline on record. "How effective U.S. companies are in reversing declines in productivity will be a key factor in the nation's rate of economic recovery," Skidmore said.

Power Economy In After-Dark Appliance-Use

NEW YORK (AP) — Nearly half of the capacity of U. S. power plants sits idle through the night "while we worry about future power cutbacks during the day," according to William G. Kuhns, chairman of General Public Utilities Corp.

"We must learn to get more out of our existing power plants," Kuhns said, "and one way is for residential power users to delay such homely chores as automatic dishwashing, clothes washing and drying and water heating until night hours—after 8 p.m. Industrial and commercial users could be even larger gainers from switching their uses of electricity to nighttime."

The reason: switching power use to nighttime will relieve pressure to build costly new power plants to meet growing daytime demand. This will help hold down future electric rate increases and conserve the oil and natural gas that utilities use to meet daytime peak demands for electricity, Kuhns explained.

A more diverse and more

be difficult to imagine, yet they have something in common:

producer John Hammond.

Described by jazz critic

Leonard Feather as "the most broader than such categoriza-

Joe Stampley Says Can Sing Any Song

By MATT YANCEY
Associated Press Writer
NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Joe Stampley spends his nights on a bus talking to truck drivers on a citizens band radio. In the daytime, he repeats their stories and jokes to anyone who will listen.

Stampley is big among truckers after recording "Roll On, Big Mama." He had just recorded his second truck driving song, "Billy, Get Me a Woman," before going to Wheeling, W.Va., earlier this month to attend a truckers' jamboree.

"From how on every album I do will have a truck driving song," Stampley said. "That's how I feel because 'Roll On, Big Mama' was so good to me, and besides that, I dig them."

"Truck drivers are aw-w-right, they're real people," he said. "I'm living a hell of a life, put 120,000 miles on the bus last year. They do, too. They're about the only people you can talk to at night."

The "aw-w-rights," "mig-thy-fines" and more recently

"ten-fours" picked up from his CB conversations are as much a part of Stampley as his unquavering grin.

"Roll On, Big Mama" was Stampley's first song after switching labels and, though he had had a No. 1 country hit earlier with "Soul Song," he hadn't committed himself to working only as a singer.

He recalled that he thought the song sounded too much like something Hank Snow might sing and that he recorded it only because his producer made him.

"Right now I care less if I ever have a top pop song," he said. "Of course it would be nice — it means more money, but I'm happy with having just good successful country records."

At 32 and with a background in rock, Stampley shifts easily from one country style to another. He's equally at home with bluegrass ("I'd Rather Be A-Pickin'"), the traditional torch-type songs ("She's Helping Me Get Over Loving You" and "I Was Keeping Her Warm for You") and up-tempo ("Quenette McGraw").

His latest single, "Billy Get Me a Woman" moves from overdrive into a ballad at the halfway point in the same way his "If You Touch Me, You Got to Love Me" of a few years ago did.

"I can sing any song that anybody puts before me; I don't care what it is," he said. "It's because I do it with feeling. Every time I get on stage or go into a recording session, it's 110 per cent."

Even though he likes his own music, Stampley is one of the few country entertainers who don't mind when people would rather dance than just listen.

"I know that some people get bored just sitting there," he said. "They paid their money and they want to have a good time. If dancing does it, that's mighty fine with me."

Hunkins, Greensboro; Otto Henry, Greenville; Harvey Miller, Brevard; Wilma Welsh, Davidson; Margaret Sandresky, Robert Sanderburg, Ann Listokin, and Jay Williams, Winston-Salem; David Maves, Durham; and Lew Lewis, High Point.

Among special programs planned are: one featuring compositions by Hunter Johnson, Benson, and his niece, Joan Neighbors, by the Raleigh Music Club, Mrs. Elbert McPhaul, Jr., chairman; The Black Heritage in North Carolina, being prepared by J. T. Mitchell, Durham; Moravian Music with Karl Kroeger, Winston-Salem in charge; and one on the National Opera Company, Raleigh by David Witherspoon.

Conceived by the National Music Council, composed of some sixty musical organizations, and administered by the National Federation of Music Clubs, the Bicentennial Parade of American Music is supported by an Exxon grant of $200,000. The North Carolina Parade is coordinated by the N. C. Federation of Music Clubs with Mrs. A. M. Fountain, Raleigh, as coordinator, and was planned by representatives from nine other musical organizations: the Afro-American Music Opportunities Association, the Alliance for Arts Education, the American String Teachers Association, the Music Educators National Conference, the Moravian Music Foundation, the National Association of Schools of Music, the N. C. College Band Directors, and the N. C. Music Teachers Association.

Today's Films Rely On Story

By BOB THOMAS

Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) —

"When the money from 'The Sting' started pouring in," says Sid Sheinberg, president of MCA-Universal, "I thought we were ruined forever."

"It was depressing to realize that the studio would never be able to top such a big winner."

"Now the returns from 'Jaws' make 'The Sting' look like a failure. Nothing like it has ever happened before. But who says that we can never top 'Jaws'?"

Sheinberg was expressing the kind of optimism that today pervades the American film industry. After a decade of gloom, the movie business is enjoying its greatest prosperity.

"Last year was the best one the industry has ever had," reports Jack Valenti, president of the Motion Picture Association. Worldwide receipts from theaters reached slightly over $1 billion in 1974, a 28 per cent rise from 1973.

"So far this year, the business has been running slightly ahead of 1974, both in attendance and box-office receipts."

"The performance in the rest of the year depends on the staying power of the current hits and audience reaction to the new films."

Wall Street has rediscovered movie stocks, some of the companies pushing to new highs. And with good reason. Recent earnings reports:

—Walt Disney Productions nine months' profit of $37 million, up 33 per cent, with films earning more than Disneyland and Disney World.

—United Artists second-quarter film rentals up 55 per cent, due largely to "Lenny" and "Return of the Pink Panther."

—MCA six-month profits of $34.7 million, up 37 per cent, with only one week of "Jaws" returns included.

—Twentieth Century-Fox net profit for six months, $12.4 million, up 272 per cent, thanks to "The Towering Inferno" and "Young Frankenstein."

The newfound prosperity has trickled down to film workers.

Reports Bill Howard, president of the AFL Film Council: "As far as production personnel is concerned, we're as close to full employment as we've ever known. The unions have from 90 to 95 per cent employment, compared to about 60 per cent three months ago."

But, except for a few superstars who are making bigger deals than ever before, actors are not enjoying the same upturn in employment.

What has caused the film business to flower after years of drought?

"For some strange reason, our industry seems to thrive in hard times," theorized E. Cardon Walker, president of Walt Disney Productions.

"The movie ticket, although it's not as cheap as it used to be, is about the best buy a family can find for an evening's entertainment."

"Because the Disney name is recognized in the field of family

A tribute to a great gospel singer and a story about trains are subjects for the two films to be shown for the coming week for children in the city library film series.

The Little Train is an animated film depicting the passing of an era in rail transportation. The second film, Got To Tell It, is a tribute to the life of Mahalia Jackson, one of America's greats in the gospel field of singing.

Show times are 4 p.m. Tuesday, Carver Library; 3:30 p.m. Friday, Sheppard Library; and 4 p.m. Friday, East Branch Library.

entertainment, our company is doing better than ever in theaters."

When business is good, film workers seek a larger share of the pie.

This includes all categories, from production workers, who are making heavy demands in current union negotiations, to superstars like Marlon Brando and Jack Nicholson, who are getting $1.25 million apiece plus percentages of the profits for making a western, "The Missouri Breaks."

Valenti pointed out that for every 10 films produced, only three or four turn a profit. So far, he says, the hits have been big enough to offset the losers.

Hit-making goes in cycles. Five years ago 20th Century-Fox was the big winner, with such blockbusters as "Patton," "The French Connection" and "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid." Then Paramount assumed pre-eminence with "Love Story," "The Godfather" and "Serpico."

Now Universal Pictures is the wonder of the film world after an astonishing run of smashes: "The Sting," "American Graffiti," "Airport 1975," "Earthquake" and "Jaws," which has amassed an unprecedented $100 million in theater receipts in its first 47 days in the United States and Canada alone.

The view from the 15th floor of Universal's "Black Tower" is very good these days. President Sid Sheinberg can look down on a studio in full production, with 7,000 employees — a record in the industry — turning out 19 television films as well as feature movies.

He observed that the gas shortage and economic recession may have contributed to the industry's upturn.

"But business will always be good if you have pictures that people want to see and if the marketing is good," he added.

"We're more concerned with what a film is, rather than superstars and superdirectors. 'Jaws' had no big stars and no

Enjoy an armchair safari through Africa with Kathryn Hulme in LOOK A LION IN THE EYE. In the autumn of 1971, Hulme and two companions with an escort-driver, traveled for one month and some twenty-five hundred miles in a bone-shaking Land Rover through Kenya and northern Tanzania viewing game in the national parks of East Africa. Age and sex were the remarkable aspects of the safari. Despite the fact that two of the travelers were in their seventies and one a grandmother in her sixties, they climbed Mount Kenya and explored Olduvai Gorge, site of one of the world's greatest fossil lodes. Of the three travelers, Hulme was the only one seeing everything for the first time. Her friend Lou, on whom her famous best seller, THE NUNSTORY, was based, had previously lived and nursed in the Congo for seven years. Their friend Juliet, the horticulturist, was making her third safari in East Africa. Their escort was a war veteran fluent in Swahili, with an extraordinary, sensitive knowledge of the habitat and wildlife there were there to observe. Hulme has recorded all their experiences with warmth and feeling, from watching a million flamingos feed to a face to face encounter with a lion. LOOK A LION IN THE EYE gives a spectacular view of a majestic and mysterious Africa.

James Brough gives fascinating glimpses into the private life and character of one of the legendary families of America. He presents a sparkling account of the daughter of Theodore Roosevelt in PRINCESS ALICE: A BIOGRAPHY OF ALICE ROOSEVELT LONGWORTH. Filled with candid details and entertaining anecdotes, he traces her background, childhood, adolescence and adulthood. In an age when women were not so liberated, she capered unchaperoned among groups of young men, bet at the racetracks and smoked cigarettes as well as cigars. She had a notorious inclination for trying anything once. Upon the assassination of President McKinley, her father, then vice-president, took over the presidency. Alice was made the country's darling and copy extraordinaire for newspapers and magazines everywhere. When President Roosevelt was asked to control Alice he replied, "I can do one of two things, I can be President of the United States or I can control Alice, I cannot possibly do both." She married Nicholas Longworth, a representative from Ohio who was later Speaker of the House. Despite the great upheaval in Washington and her father's failure to be renominated by his own party, Alice still presided over the capital's circle of social legislators. Princess Alice, who at 18 had captured the heart of the nation, continued for many years to dominate Washington society.

Band Director Carter Profiled By Publication

Herbert L. Carter, Director of Bands in the East Carolina University School of Music, is featured in a recent issue of The School Musician, a national band directors' journal published in Joliet, Ill.

A detailed profile of Carter appears in a magazine feature, "They Are Making America Musical," which includes a biographical summary and a citation from the magazine's editorial staff as "one of the ten most outstanding musical directors in the U. S. and Canada of the school year 1974-75. Carter has been a member of the ECU music faculty since 1946, when he began his teaching career here after receiving the MA degree from Columbia University. During World War II he directed Air Force bands which performed in concerts, USO shows, drill reviews and network radio programs.

He is a past president of the Southern Division of the College Band Directors National Association and the North Carolina Bandmasters Association and has extensive experience in directing band clinics and workshops in several states.

In addition to his position as Director of Bands at ECU, Carter personally conducts the ECU Symphonic Wind Ensemble, a select group of student musicians which has performed at several national music educators' conventions.

Chamber Music To Open New Series

A program of 17th- and 18th-century chamber music will open the 1975-76 Concert and Lecture Series at the North Carolina Museum of Art at 3 p.m. this Sunday (9-28).

A Raleigh native, John Ruggiero, who won the North Carolina Composer's Contest at the age of 13, will be the harpsichordist. Following six years in New York as a music editor and teacher, he teaches now at Duke University.

The other musicians will be: Jerry Nelson, cello; Marian Turner, violin; Mary Mass, violin; John Cabbage, bass; Barbara Fecteau, flute; and Mike and Lois Schultz, oboe.

Art Senior's Work Displayed

A variety of art work in various media by Jill Satterfield Wright, senior student in the East Carolina University School of Art, will be on display Sept. 28-Oct. 4 in the Mendenhall Student Center.

The show will include cast and constructed jewelry, several ceramics planters, hand and loom woven wall hangings, a woven pillow and a woodcut print.

TREIGLE MEMORIAL SCHOLARSHIPS STARTED NEW YORK (AP) — A fund-raising campaign to establish a scholarship program in memory of the late bass-baritone, Norman Treigle, has been announced.

The trust has been established under the aegis of the New York City Opera Guild in cooperation with two institutions with which the late singer was closely associated, the New York City Opera and the College-Conservatory of Music of the University of Cincinnati in Ohio.

The fund will establish two scholarships for young American singers.

A Best-Seller Isn't Chappell's Goal

GREENSBORO—If Fred Chappell, up-and-coming young writer of the '60s, were to write his autobiography today he could crib a title from James Joyce and call it "Portrait of the Artist as a Not-So-Young-Man."

At 39, Chappell is no longer a boy. He admits as much in "River," his book-length poem published late last month: "Multiplying my age by 2 in my head, I'm a grandfather. Or dead."

Chappell's first book, a novel, was published when he was only 26 and still in graduate school at Duke. By that time, he's already been writing for half his life and more than 50 of his short stories and poems had seen print.

The book was followed by three more novels. The reviews were mixed, but the critics all agreed Chappell was a major regional writer and that he would become a major writer—period—in time.

But Chappell has never cared much what the critics say one way or the other; he claims he never even reads their reviews of his work. "Anything they can say against it, I've said the same thing myself," he explained.

And now, approaching middle age, Chappell has never come up with that book which would skyrocket to the top of the bestseller list and make him rich and famous. That might bother some authors, but not Fred Chappell.

Writing a best seller is not his idea of success. That's one reason he can still laugh—and he laughs often—like a kid enjoying a good joke.

"When I first began writing, I thought, I'd write a novel, make a lot of money, live in a penthouse apartment, and date movie stars," Chappell said recently—laughing.

That was his dream back when he was 13, sending off stories to pulp magazines from his home in the mountains near Canton. But by the time he'd matured somewhat—at age 14—he'd decided there was something else he wanted to do.

His parents were school teachers, and he figured that would be a good life: writing and teaching.

"And the weird thing about it is, professionally, I'm doing exactly what I set out to do."

Chappell leaned back in the swivel chair, the wrinkles fanning out from the corners of his eyes taunted by a broad grin. He shares his small office on the University of North Carolina at Greensboro campus with hundreds of books crammed onto shelves covering one wall and a desk overflowing with papers and mail.

"I couldn't do it now," he admitted. "I couldn't write a commercial novel without feeling guilty about it when I walk into a classroom."

And to Fred Chappell it wouldn't be worth it. Teaching, he said, is as much a part of his life as writing. A full professor of English since 1971, Chappell has been at UNC-G since he left Duke in 1964 except for the year he spent in Florence, Italy, on a Rockefeller Grant.

Although he's doing exactly what he set out to do—perhaps the best definition of success there is—Chappell admits there have been some changes in his life and work.

"I've been trying to put together a novel, but lately I've been writing more verse and short fiction," he noted.

Three years ago his first volume of verse, "The World Between the Eyes," won the Roanoke-Chowan Poetry Award as the best work by a North Carolina poet.

The collection of poems was published by the Louisiana State University Press, which also published "River."

His book-length poem is composed of 11 different pieces unified by the basic image of water and loosely tied to one day in the life of a man (guess who) who has just turned 35.

"I don't remember how it came to me to do it," he stated. "I worked on it a long time. I didn't know I was going to write a book-length poem until I had pieces of it together and discovered it could be nothing else."

There are love poems to his wife, memories of his mountain childhood and kinfolk, and ponderings of such heavy topics as birth, life and death in the suite. But Chappell doesn't hesitate to poke more than a little fun at himself along the way.

He does all this in free verse, rhymed couplets, blank verse and terza rima, proving that the poet, a big baseball fan, is something of a utility man in the field himself.

"It is a joy to discover a poet with a sense of humor, a novelist's interest in people and in his own language of praise," writes Guy Owen in a review conveniently printed on the book's back cover.

"This rare combination makes Mr. Chappell's a unique voice, and it helps make "River," with its dazzling variety of forms and tones, an ambitious and remarkable tour de force."

Despite what the critics might say about it, Chappell is not satisfied with the book. But then again he admits he's never been satisfied with anything he's ever written, but sooner or later a writer just has to let his work go.

"There is almost never any kind of writing but revision," he explained. "If you write a long time, you'll get to thinking that writing is revising."

Although he's answering a lot of requests for original material, Chappell is trying to work on two projects of his own. One is a long "historically conscious" novel he's been working on for several years.

"Not that I want to write a historical novel, but my themes are changing and becoming more politically aware. I think there is a middle period in the life of most males when they become more politically aware," he said.

Chappell has long been politically active; he was an outspoken critic of the Vietnam war and, back before that, had threatened to quit his post with the University unless the Speaker Ban Law was repealed.

"But I never let this spill over into my writing," he noted. "I don't want to preach my political beliefs, but I can tell it's beginning to seep into my work."

There's something else he wants to do. "I've been trying to start on a new novel, 'The Sex Life of the Confederate Dead.' Its theme is the pollution of history and the final domination of the South by McDonald's hamburgers."

Chappell said he believes the most common and most disastrous mistake a writer can make is to start considering himself a thinker. Writing is both mental and emotional work, "but really what comes from the mind, you don't die for. You die for what comes from the gut."

The author-teacher doesn't really consider himself an artist. "I do consider myself a craftsman, and it's true some of the stuff my work is about is delicate and intricate."

Fred Chappell laughed. "I don't think it would make any difference to the course of literature if I ever wrote another word. But I am a writer and I can't help but write."

N.C. Artists In Annual Exhibit

Officials from three out-of-state art galleries will select and judge the entries in the 38th Annual North Carolina Artists Exhibition, which begins Nov. 6 at the N. C. Museum of Art.

The jurors are Lawrence R. Alloway, director of the New York State University Art Gallery at Stony Brook; Edward B. Henning, curator of Modern Art, the Cleveland Museum of Art; and Roy Slade, director of the Corcoran Gallery of Art, Washington, D. C.

This year's exhibition will be the first to include crafts as well as more traditional art forms. The competition is open to work of all media—painting, sculpture, drawing, photography, prints and any of North Carolina's many handicrafts.

All three jurors have experience both in the United States and abroad. Alloway was born in London, where he was director of the Institute of Contemporary Art. A former curator of the Guggenheim Museum, he has received awards for art criticism.

Henning was educated at Western Reserve University in Cleveland and the Academy Julian, Paris. Among his published writings are two books, "Paths of Abstract Art," and "Fifty Years of Modern Art."

Slade, educated at the University of Wales and the Cardiff College of Art, has taught in England and Wales. He is now on the advisory council of the National Society of Arts and Letters.

Entries for the 1975 exhibition, co-sponsored by the North Carolina Museum of Art and the North Carolina Art Society, are already being received. Works accepted will be shown at the museum through Dec. 14.

Afterwards, about 40 works selected by the jurors will circulate through North Carolina art centers until December, 1976.

The jurors will award gold, silver and bronze medals and three certificates of honorable mention to selected works in the exhibition. A special cash award will go to the best crafts piece.

The contest, an annual event since 1938, is open to native North Carolinians, to persons who have lived in the state for the past six months and to non-residents who have lived in North Carolina for at least 5 years.

N.C. Symphony Season Ready

Two American celebrities, together with Conductor John Gosling, will headline the gala opening of the 1975-76 Bicentennial Year Celebration Series of the North Carolina Symphony Orchestra.

The initial concerts of the season in Raleigh on October 11th and 12th, and in Greensboro on October 14th, will feature soprano of the Metropolitan, La Scala and Vienna State Operas, Phyllis Curtin, and composer Ned Rorem.

Gosling, Artistic Director and Conductor of the North Carolina Symphony announced that compositions by American composers will be a highlight of the 1975-76 season with emphasis on American music and artists, to celebrate the bicentennial year of our country.

The North Carolina Symphony, with a grant from the North Carolina Bicentennial Committee, commissioned Rorem to write an orchestral piece in honor of the state's bicentennial year celebration.

This work was completed in early August and is titled "Assembly and Fall." The North Carolina Symphony Orchestra, will perform the World premiere of this work on October 11, 12, and 14, with Rorem present for all performances. The North Carolina Symphony will have first performance rights for one year, also with first performance rights in New York.

Ned Rorem is one of the most distinguished American composers today. Time Magazine called him: "the world's best composer of art songs", yet his musical and literary ventures extend far beyond this specialized field.

Rorem has composed three symphonies, three piano concertos, five operas, several ballets, choral works, and hundreds of songs and song cycles. He is also the author of five books. The Indiana-born Rorem studied at Northwestern University and the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia on scholarship.

He later studied at Juilliard where he won the George Gershwin Composition Prize. He has received commissions from the Ford, Koussevitsky and Lincoln Center Foundations. His opera Miss Julie was commissioned by the New York City Opera, with assistance by the Ford Foundation.

Rorem has been the recipient of a Fulbright Fellowship, Guggenheim Fellowship and an award from the National Institute of Arts and Letters. His orchestral pieces have been performed by such conductors as Bernstein, Mitropoulos, Ormandy, Paray, Reiner, Steinberg, and Stokowski.

The North Carolina Symphony begins this season in its new permanent home in Memorial Auditorium, in Raleigh.

Old Broadway Hit Is Opener

The Theatre of the University of North Carolina at Greensboro will open its 1975-76 season with "The Boys From Syracuse," an old-fashioned musical comedy.

The play, directed by Dr. Herman Middleton, a professor of drama at UNC-G, will open Monday at 8:15 p.m. in Taylor Building. The production will run nightly through Oct. 9, except for Oct. 5, when there will be a 2:15 p.m. matinee instead. "The Boys From Syracuse," one of Broadway's biggest hits during the late 1930s, is built upon a bonanza of high reputations. Based on Shakespeare's "A Comedy of Errors," it features music by Richard Rodgers, lyrics by Lorenz Hart and is based on the book by George Abbott.

Plan Accomodations Now For '76 Vacation Trip

By MURRAY J. BROWN
UPI Travel Editor
BUCK HILL FALLS, Pa. (UPI) — If you are planning to take the family on a Bicentennial vacation next year, now is the time to begin arranging for accommodations.

Millions of tourists are expected to converge on the major historic sites in the East during the celebrations marking the 200th anniversary of the founding of the United States, and hotel space will be tight.

So if your plans include Philadelphia, for instance, why not consider stopping over in the Pocono Mountains, the popular resort area only 80 miles away by superhighway.

The four-county region can offer extra dividends — 24,000-square-miles of mountains and valleys, lakes and waterfalls, primeval forest lands and an Ice Age field of giant red boulders, in addition to year-round sport and recreational activities.

Certainly one of the most spectacular sights — and one of the state's major attractions — is the 45,000-acre Delaware Water Gap National Recreation Area with its magnificent gorge carved through the mountains thousands of years ago by the Delaware River.

There are more than 200 family resorts, inns, motels and lodges in the Poconos in addition to scores of bungalows, campgrounds and trailer sites.

There also are about a score of hotels which cater primarily to honeymooners or young couples and offer huge heart-shaped beds and sunken Roman baths and mirrored walls and ceilings. The Poconos, in fact, is the U.S.'s No. 1 honeymoon haven.

But long before the honeymooners came, the Poconos was a favorite summer vacation spot for families from Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York. And it all started when Anthony Dutot built the first boarding house hotel at the Delaware Water Gap in 1857.

Most of the major resorts have special seasonal packages which include meals and use of sports and recreational facilities, such as golf, tennis, skiing and skating. There are day camps and special activities for children, too.

Bicentennial packages, which would provide for bus services between the Poconos and Philadelphia, are being considered by members of the Pocono Mountains Vacation Bureau, according to executive director Robert Uguccioni. He said they hope to make the Poconos "the bedroom for bicentennial Philadelphia."

Some of the better known family resorts include Buck Hill Inn, Skytop Club, Pocono Manor Inn, Shawnee Inn, Tannam and Mount Airy Lodge. All have a variety of accommodations and indoor and outdoor sports and recreational activities.

We stayed at Buck Hills — and checked out some of the others — during a tour of the region, with the assistance of Mrs. Diane Hannan of the tourist bureau.

The Buck Hills complex, established in the cool woodlands in 1898 as a Quaker summer retreat, is the largest all-year-round resort in the Northeast. Its 6,000-acres include Buck Hill Falls, near virgin forests, 27 holes of golf, 10 tennis courts, riding stables and indoor swimming pools, three bowling greens, ski lifts, and an ice skating rink, among other attractions.

There are about 260 — modern and traditional — rooms in the rambling five-story stone older building and the adjoining newer wing. More than $2 million has been invested to modernize the entire establishment.

There's a pleasant old-fashioned dining room with high ceilings and mirrors (Swiss-born chef Rene Mettler and his staff maintain the Inn's reputation for fine food), a coffee-shop and sundries store and an intimate cocktail lounge and bar where a three-piece combo plays at night. Meals also are served at the golf and tennis club houses.

Popular with swinging couples and singles, as well as families, is Mount Airy Lodge, which can accommodate up to 1,200 guests in about 15 buildings scattered across 1,500 acres. In addition to outdoor and indoor pools, the Lodge also boasts a man-made lake with the only sand beach (imported from the Caribbean, they claim) in the Poconos.

Open all year around also, Mount Airy has a new sports palace, with tennis, basketball, volley and badminton courts, skeet-and-rifle range, and a winter sports complex, among other facilities.

There are five nightclubs, with music, dancing and entertainment, including the 2,000-seat Crystal Room and the discotheque Club Suzanne.

And if you should change your mind about going to Philadelphia, New York is only about two hours away via Interstate U.S. 80. But then New York hopefully anticipates an influx of Bicentennial visitors from home and abroad so you better check first.

Students Thrive In School's Discipline

SHELTON, Neb. (AP) — In an era of teen-age casualness and freedom from authority, 160 students at Platte Valley Academy in this south central Nebraska community respond to rigid discipline.

They are students of a 51-year-old high school operated by Nebraska's Seventh Day Adventists.

The school prospers. Last year it graduated a class of 49, the largest in the school's history.

In recent years, two new silos have been built for the school farm. Four homes were added for staff members along with an industrial education building, a girls' dormitory, a church school and a nearly completed $325,000 auditorium-gymnasium.

Not all students are church members but all are required to attend Friday vespers and Sabbath worship.

"The religious section is just part of the overall package here," said Principal Earl Adams. "Any student who enrolls must accept it all."

A daily round of classes, work, study, religious exercises and recreation extends from 6:30 a.m. to 9:30 p.m.

Gambling, dishonesty, dancing or use of tobacco, alcohol or drugs automatically mean suspension.

Adams said six students suspended last year all asked to come back.

The school offers 18-day courses traveling off-campus, visiting historical landmarks and studying biological specimens.

Although it has an active intramural sports program, Platte Valley doesn't participate in interscholastic competition because of what the administration regards as the harmful effects of competition and stress on winning.

All students are required to work in the community or at the school's dairy farm or broom factory to defray part of the $2,700 annual cost of attending the academy.

The school is supported by 51,000 members of the Seventh Day Adventist church in Nebraska.

Pirates Roll To 41-7 Win Over SIU Salukis

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor
CARBONDALE, Ill. — East Carolina flexed its muscles Saturday afternoon, rolling to a 41-7 victory over hapless Southern Illinois University before a slim crowd of just over 8,000.

The Bucs could have made it worse than that if not for fumbles which killed several first quarter drives.

After that, the Pirates put together two scoring drives in each quarter the rest of the way. Southern, with few threats, finally scored midway through the final period after a fine 53-yard kickoff return put them in excellent position.

Alexander French scored two of the Pirate touchdowns, on runs on one and two yards. Vince Kolanko scored once from the one, while Willie Hawkins got over from the eight. Jesse Ingram scored on a seven yarder, and Jimmy Southerland capped it with a 31-yard ramble for the final TD. Pete Conaty, who guided the Bucs most of the way at quarterback, kicked five PATs. The lone miss came on a bad snap.

The only Southern score came on a 15-yard pass from Leonard Hopkins to Bob Leach. Ken Seaman kicked the PAT.

Harold Randolph, Ernest Madison, and Zack Valentine led the Pirate defense. Randolph had eight unassisted and 10 assisted tackles, including three for losses. Valentine had 11, with five for losses. In the backfield, Madison had 12 tackles, and broke up one pass.

Southern got just 113 yards rushing (65 lugs) and 73 passing.

East Carolina, which used a multiple backfield, had 300 yards rushing and 95 passing, hitting six of 11 passes. Ten players gained yardage.

French led the rushing with 62 yards, while Hawkins had 55. Hawkins, however, suffered two losses, one a long one on a fumble, costing him 20 yards.

Conaty did all the passing.

The best defense that the Salukis could muster in the first half was "fumblyitis", a disease that plagued the Pirates throughout the half.

Four times, the Bucs lost fumbles, three times inside the 30 of SIU. The other time came on a punt when a fair catch was bobbled.

East Carolina drove into Saluki territory on five of eight possessions, but could only score twice.

Southern, in the meantime, got into Pirate territory only three times, twice missing on field goals. Their first possession pushed them across the 50 to the 40 before Randolph burst through for the first of three first half tackles for losses. Bobby Myrick got another big loss to drop Southern back into their own territory.

Following the punt, the Bucs moved from their own 22 to the SIU 24 before fumbling the ball away. Hawkins had a 13-yard run to highlight the drive.

The Bucs came back to drive from their 40 to the SIU 23 before a fumble that was recovered killed the drive and forced a punt.

Myrick gave the Bucs the ball back just as the quarter ended intercepting at the SIU 43 and returning it to the 38. A face-masking penalty helped set up a first down on the 14 after three plays. Hawkins and Kolanko moved it to the seven, and Jimmy Southerland cracked down to the two. On the second play, Kolanko went over from the one, and Conaty's PAT kick made it 7-0 with 11:27 left.

Three plays after the kickoff, Cary Godette recovered a fumble at the SIU 8 to set up the second score. Conaty hit Terry Gallagher for 11 yards, then Raymond Jones got nine yards and French added eight to the five. Kolanko hit to the one and French plowed in from there. Conaty's kick raised it to 14-0 with 9:10 to go.

Southern got a break on the fumbled punt at the Buc 45, but it was stalled at the 20, and a field goal attempt was wide. The Bucs then drove from their own 20 to the Southern 29, including a 35-yard scramble by Mike Weaver before another fumble killed the drive. As the half drew to an end, Southern moved to the 29 before Ken Seaman's 49-yard field goal attempt hit the crossbar and bounced back—no good.

Southern appeared to get off a short drive into Buc territory, but it quickly stalled after passing the 50. Then, after the Bucs punted, a fumble set up the third ECU score.

Willie Bryant hit John Dismuke just as he got a pitch-out, causing a fumble, which Harold Fort recovered on the four. Two plays later, French followed Daub into the end zone for the score from the two. Conaty again kicked for a 21-0 lead with 6:36 left in the quarter.

After forcing a punt, the Bucs drove again, this time from their own 42. Conaty got it started with a perfectly timed pitch to Kolanko that moved it to the Southern 49. Then, on third down, Conaty hit Will Williamson for 15 to the 26. He went to Clay Burnett for 11 more, then Hawkins raced for seven to the eight. The Hawk went up the middle for the final eight and Conaty's boot made it 28-0 with 2:27 to go in the quarter.

Following a brief foray into Pirate territory, the Bucs held Southern deep in their own ground the next series, and got the ball on the punt on the SIU 36. A clip on the first play moved it back to the 44, but after French got back to the 39, Conaty hit Burnett for a first down at the 15. Pete kept for eight more, Ingram pushed over left tackle from the seven for the fifth Pirate touchdown. A bad snap killed the PAT, leaving it at 34-0 with 10:09 left in the game.

Lawrence Love's 53 yard kickoff return put Southern in good position at the 42, and they drove for their first (only) score. The Salukis got a first down at the 31, and after a four-yard gain, Dismuke hit for 10 to the 17. After two more yards, Hopkins hit a well-covered Leach in the corner of the end zone for a 15-yard touchdown pass. Seaman added the PAT with 6:13 left.

The Bucs came right back with a 64-yard, eight play drive to score again. Southerland clicked off nine yards on the first play to the EC 45. After a first down at midfield, Al Boudreau got a first down in three carries to the 39. Two more plays put it on the 31, and Southerland sprinted around the left side to go all the way on the next play. Conaty's kick upped it to 41-7 with 2:48 left.

Ken Strayhorn who was injured last week against William and Mary made the trip but did not play.

William and Mary made the trip but did not play. The victory evened the Pirate record at 2-2 on the year, while the Salukis fell off to 0-3.

The Pirates will return home next week to play host to the University of Richmond in a Southern Conference game.

Farmville Central Edges Rams

FARMVILLE—Jeff Wilkes ran for two touchdowns and caught a pass for a third leading the Farmville Central Jaguars to a 27-25 win over Eastern Carolina Conference rival, Greene Central, last night.

The win evened the Jaguar record 2-2 on the year and gave them a 1-0 advantage in the ECC race. Greene Central dropped its fourth straight.

The Jaguars scored first as Wilkes took a pass from Carroll Griffin in 33 yards. The Rams tied it up later in the period as Torre Albright sneaked over from the one with 2:40 left in the period.

Wilkes put the Jags back on top keying a Farmville Central rally in the second period. Wilkes scored on a one-yard run with 6:31 left in the half and Griffin passed to Mike Jenkins for the conversion. With 1:23 left in the half, Wilkes went over from the 20 and Jerry Flanagan's kick made it 21-6.

Later, Timmy Hall returned a fumble 30 yards to make it 27-6 at halftime.

But the Rams began to come back in the second half. Melvin Briggs, who was responsible for three Ram scores, took a 22-yard pass from Albright and the PAT knocked seven points off the FC lead. Briggs pulled the Rams closer later in the third quarter as he scored on a 57-yard pass play.

The Rams pulled within two in the fourth period as Briggs found Mike Canady with a 32-yard pass. The attempt to tie the game failed.

The Rams tried a field goal with three seconds left but it was wide.

Griffin, Johnson Pace Buckeye Win

By GEORGE STRODE
AP Sports Writer

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Pete Johnson scored a school record five touchdowns and Archie Griffin became the greatest yardage gainer in Ohio State history Saturday, leading the second-ranked Buckeyes to their 500th college football victory, a 32-7 rout of North Carolina.

Johnson's inside power and Griffin's fluid runs helped Ohio State post a record 20th straight home triumph. The Buckeyes are 3-0 this season.

Griffin's 157 yards, his 24th straight regular season game of over 100 yards, which is a continuing NCAA record, gave him a career total of 4,532 yards, battering Rex Kern's school mark of 4,518 set in 1968-70.

Johnson scored on runs of 1, 5, 1, 2 and 3 yards. His performance broke the Buckeyes' record of four touchdowns in one game shared by eight players. The 248-pound junior full-back rambled for 148 yards.

More than 87,000 watched Ohio State run its record to 500-207-46 in its 86th season.

North Carolina, now 1-2, played the game without its leading rusher, Mike Voight, who had 131 yards rushing going into this week, was suspended for what Coach Bill Dooley called personal reasons.

The Tar Heels, however, became the first opponent this season to score a touchdown against the Buckeyes. Quarterback Jimmy Paschall rifled a seven-yard scoring pass to flanker Brian Smith early in the second quarter.

First Quarter Splurge Beats Wolfpack, 37-15

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Tailback Levi Jackson bulled for three first-quarter touchdowns and Hans Nielsen kicked three field goals Saturday as Michigan State capitalized on numerous North Carolina State mistakes and swamped the Wolfpack 37-15 in an inter-conference college football game.

North Carolina State took itself out of the game before it hardly began by coughing up the ball the first three times it had it on fumbles. The Spartans, meanwhile, stormed to a 20-0 first quarter lead by running almost at will through the smaller Wolfpack defense and by shut down the Wolfpack offense.

North Carolina State's Richard Carter fumbled on the second play of the game, and Jackson went 23 yards in three plunges, the last eight yards to score.

On the second series, Wolfpack end Pat Hovance snared a 15-yard pass, only to fumble. MSU quarterback Charlie Baggett hit Dane Fortney for 16 yards, and Jackson charged the final 24 in two plays to score.

It was NC State's Johnny Evans' turn the next time, dropping the ball at his own 26. Five plays later, Jackson plunged over from the one.

The MSU offense ripped gaping holes through North Carolina State throughout the first half as Jackson, Baggett, fullback Jim Earley and tailback Tyrone Wilson rambled for good gains. The Spartans lost two other near scores when NC State picked off a pass in its own end zone and then—after fumbling it away for the fourth time—getting it back in the end zone with a Jackson fumble.

Michigan State is now 2-1 on the year, while the loss dropped North Carolina State to 2-2.

The Spartans moved deep into N.C. State territory twice more in the first half, with the nimble-footed Baggett sparking the offense, only to be thwarted and settled for Nielsen field goals—the second a 47-yard line drive.

North Carolina came alive briefly near the end of the half as quarterback Dave Buckley went to the air. The Wolfpack went 61 yards, Buckley hitting on six of seven passes, the last to Hovance for a nine-yard touchdown.

Richard Carter plunged a yard for a late N.C. State score in the fourth quarter.

Duke Breaks Slump With 26-11 Win Over Virginia

By NOEL YANCEY
Associated Press Writer

DURHAM, N.C. (AP)—Sparked by the running of tailback Larry Martinez who scored two touchdowns, Duke overcame the effect of numerous mistakes and took a 26-11 Atlantic Coast Conference football victory over Virginia in Wallace Wade Stadium Saturday.

Martinez, who was ably abetted in the running department by Bob Pruitt and Mike Barney, ran for 85 yards in 17 carries.

It was the Blue Devils' first victory of the season and came after losses to Southern California and South Carolina.

For Virginia, which now stands 1-2 overall and 0-1 in the ACC, it was largely an afternoon of missed opportunities. The Cavaliers were stopped, or stopped themselves, four times within the Duke 35-yard line and once on the four.

After Virginia drew first blood on Joe Jenkins' 40-yard field goal, Martinez went into action and scored from seven yards out at the end of an 85-yard drive and again from two yards away at the end of a 96-yard drive.

Bob Corbett passed 48 yards to Larry Upshaw and Vince Fusco kicked field goals of 25 and 21 yards to wrap up the Duke scoring.

Virginia's touchdown came on a four-yard pass from quarterback Scott Gardner to David Sloan and came at the end of an 80-yard drive. Gardner passed to Joe Sroba for a two-point conversion.

Pruitt gained 44 yards in 12 carries and Barney 37 in eight. Joe Copeland led the Virginia rushing with 39 yards in 10 tries while Sroba rushed for 38 in 15 attempts.

Duke's Corbett passed for 156 yards in 14 attempts while Gardner moved the ball 180 yards in 35 tries.

In the first quarter Virginia had a golden scoring opportunity when Frank Morris recovered Barney's fumble at the Duke 20. But Duke took over six plays later when Gardner was halted on the Duke five with fourth down and goal to go.

Late in the second quarter, Virginia drove to the Duke 35 in six plays but Gardner's pass to Rob Berce was intercepted at the five by Duke's Tom Knotts.

Rose Gains Fourth Win Beating Jacksonville

JACKSONVILLE — Jay Chenier intercepted a pass with 27 seconds to play and preserved a 16-14 Rose High School win over Jacksonville, last night, in a game that had been postponed from Friday.

The winning points came with 41 seconds left on a 20-yard field goal by Wright Hooks. The Rampants had taken over on the Jacksonville 28 after a partially blocked punt. Five plays later, The Rampants found themselves with a fourth and goal at the five. Hooks' boot from the 10 gave Rose a 16-14 lead and the interception saved the win, the fourth in a row for Rose.

Doug Paschall was the leading Rampant rusher picking up 101 yards in 29 carries and scored the first Rose TD. Leander Green led the Cardinal rushing with 71 yards in eight carries.

Rose broke the ice on its second possession of the game. The Rampants took over on the Cardinal 45 after a punt and in 11 plays, moved to the TD with Paschall going in from the two. Hook's kick was wide. Paschall had 19 yards in the drive.

Jacksonville was stopped after the ensuing kick-off and punted the ball back to the Rampants. Rose starting from their 30, appeared driving to another score but Mike Brown fumbled at the Jacksonville 20. Tommy Peacock recovered for the Cardinals.

Jacksonville ran off three plays before Mike Humphreys fumbled the ball back to the Rampants on his 24.

Henry Trevathan saved the Rose drive with a 15-yard run to the Jacksonville four on fourth down. After moving the team to the one, Trevathan went in for the score with 3:43 left in the half. Hooks made the PAT for a 13-0 lead.

Jacksonville opened the second half with an electrifying 65-yard pass for an apparent TD but it was called back. End Creo McIver did not go into the huddle after the Rose kickoff, but waited near the sideline. On the snap, he slipped down the sideline, unnoticed, and caught Green's pass for the score. The officials brought the ball back as the teams were lining up for the extra point and charged Jacksonville with illegal procedure.

The Cardinals had to punt the ball away but held the Rampants getting the ball back on downs. This time, they were not stopped as they got on the boards after a 62-yard drive. A 21-yard sweep by Humphrey got the Cards into Rose territory. The drive was almost stopped at the Rose 23 but Green threw to McIver on fourth and seven for 23 yards and the score. Doug Kinsman added the PAT.

The Cards held on the ensuing kickoff and forced a punt. Jacksonville took over on its 28 and, behind the running of Green, went 72 yards in 10 plays to take the lead. The big play in the drive came on a 37-yard run by Green. Humphrey took the ball in from the two and Kinsman added the conversion putting Jacksonville on top, 14-13, with 11:10 left.

Greenville put together a drive beginning at its 30 but it stalled at the Jacksonville 17. The Rampants converted two fourth and two plays in the drive but a third try failed, as Paschall was stopped giving the Cardinals the ball with 4:22 left to play. Jacksonville ran off three plays but gained nothing and were forced to punt. Collin Sumerell's punt was deflected and the Rampants recovered at the 28.

Mike Joyner promptly lost six yards on first down but Trevathan threw to Mark Conway for 26 yards to the Jacksonville eight with 1:30 left.

Paschall drove to the five but Joyner lost back to the six. Paschall picked up four to the two and on fourth down, the Rampants elected to go for the field goal. Hooks connected with

Jacksonville tried some razzle-dazzle on the first play after the Rampant kick trying a halfback pass. Chenier picked it off at the Cardinal 49 returning it to the 15. The Rampants just ran out the clock.

William and Mary made the trip but did not play. The victory evened the Pirate record at 2-2 on the year, while the Salukis fell off to 0-3.

Tech Rally Beats Clemson By 33-28

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP)—Pile-driving David Sims ignited a furious second half Georgia Tech rally, scoring two touchdowns—one on a fluke 53-yard play—triggering the Yellow Jackets to a 33-28 college football victory over winless Clemson Saturday.

Tech, 2-1, trailed 15-7 at the half before quarterback Danny Myers raced 35-yard to Clemson's 18 before fumbling on Tech's opening series of the second half.

However, Sims, Tech's 6-foot-3½, 220-lb. halfback, picked up the loose ball and sprinted the remaining 18 yards for a touchdown to get Tech within 15-13.

Then, with only 49 seconds remaining in the third period, Sims capped a 51-yard drive in six plays with a six-yard scoring burst through the middle to put the Yellow Jackets ahead to stay at 26-22.

Adrian Rucker added another Yellow Jacket touchdown on a three yard burst, 9:29, into the third period and Pat Moriarty scored Tech's last touchdown with a 13-yard run 4:24.

Clemson's freshman quarterback Willie Jordan, who scored one TD and tried for two others, got the Tigers to within 33-28 with 5:14 seconds left to play when he connected on a 15-yard scoring toss to Bennie Cunningham.

Myers had Tech's only first half score, scampering 10 yards for a touchdown late in the opening quarter.

Hunter Scores Once In Irish Victory

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP)—Sophomore quarterback Joe Montana, called in to replace shaken starter Rick Slagter, led seventh-ranked Notre Dame to a 31-7 victory over Northwestern in Coach Dan Devine's debut in Notre Dame Stadium.

Montana, called into action in the first quarter with Northwestern leading 7-0, led all of the Notre Dame scoring drives, passed for 13 yards to Mark McLane for one touchdown and ran six yards for another.

Northwestern, after a pass interception that set up their lone score in the first quarter, could manage only 165 yards for the game against a ferocious Irish defense. The Irish, meanwhile, rolled up 455 yards total offense.

Defensive end Willie Fry almost singlehandedly kept the Wildcats at bay through the second and third quarters, sacking quarterback Randy Dean three times.

Devine, generally impressive on the sideline, guided the Irish to their third straight victory under his tutelage while his predecessor, Ara Parseghian, watched from the press box.

Tailback Greg Boykin ran four yards for Northwestern's only touchdown, prancing backward into the end zone, dangling the football at the pursuing Irish defenders. The touchdown, Northwestern's first against the Irish in five years, was set up by a pass interception deep in Notre Dame territory.

Notre Dame scored on short runs by Al Hunter, Jim Zrownier and Montana, a field goal by Dave Reeve and Montana's pass to McLane.

Chisox Slip By Twins In Eighth

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP)—Jerry Hairston's eighth-inning sacrifice fly broke a scoreless tie and gave the Chicago White Sox a 1-0 victory over the Minnesota Twins Saturday.

Brian Downing's single to left and a walk to Pat Kelly started the decisive eighth against Bert Blyleven, 15-10. After Downing took third on Nyls Nyman's fly ball, Hairston sent a drive to deep right-center field.

Right fielder Dan Ford made a full-speed, over-the-shoulder catch and Downing scored on the play. Kelly, who had taken off on the hit, was thrown out before he could get back to first. But the run counted because it scored before the completion of the double play.

Pirates Take 4-2 Win Over Cards

ST. LOUIS (AP)—Jerry Reuss teamed with Bruce Kison on a six-hitter and drove in the winning run with a double Saturday, leading the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 4-2 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals.

After allowing two hits and both Cardinals runs in the first inning, the 6-foot-5 Reuss bore down and allowed two hits over the next five innings before Kison took over in the seventh.

Pittsburgh jumped on St. Louis starter Lynn McGlothen for two runs in the first. Rennie Stennett opened with a double and Al Oliver cracked his 18th home run one out later.

The Cards tied in their half when Luis Melendez led off with a single and cruised home on Hector Cruz' double. Cruz took third on the throw to the plate and scored on Ted Simmons' groundout.

The Bucs took the lead in the fifth when Frank Taveras walked and scored on Reuss' double to left. Stennett followed with a single, driving home Reuss.

BETHEL—Shelton Robinson scored twice and Ed Finch passed for a third TD as the C.B. Aycock Falcons sloshed past North Pitt, Friday night, 19-0. The loss was the third of the year for the Panthers who fell to 1-3.

Robinson scored on runs of four and one yards and Finch's pass to Gary Davis was good for a six-yard score.

The Panthers were plagued by bad breaks the whole game. Not only was the wet, muddy field a factor, it caused most of North Pitt's misfortune making footballs and hand slippery and footing treacherous.

The tone of the game was set on the first play of the game as Panther Larry Spencer fumbled the opening kickoff and the Falcons recovered. They marched in on the their two successive possessions for all their points.

Aycock splashed through the mud for 129 yards rushing and 79 passing while holding North Pitt to a bare 25 on the ground and 11 through the air.

The Panthers were not only fighting the Falcons and the mud, they were fighting themselves. The Panthers were penalized 3 times for 131 yards and quite often found themselves trying to stay above the surface instead of just treading water.

Aycock recovered North Pitt's opening fumble on the Panther 36. The converted three fourth down plays to keep the drive going. The first conversion came on a fourth and nine at the 35. Finch hit Davis with a 10-yard pass for a first down but a penalty and a good defensive play set up a fourth and 12 at the 25. Again, it was Finch's arm that saved the drive as he hit a pass for 14 yards. Three plays later Robinson drove to the one on fourth down for renewed life and from there, Robinson cracked over.

Gene Sumerlin added the PAT.

Three penalties kept the Panthers from putting together a drive in their next possession and forced a punt. The Falcons marched 45 yards for their second TD. Finch set up the score by Robinson with a 24-yard pass to Sumerlin down to the eight. A penalty moved it to the four and Robinson moved the ball across the goal line.

A bad snap on a punt gave the Falcons the ball again this time on the Panther 30. Six plays later, Davis found himself all alone in the end zone with the ball and with 7:33 left in the half, the Falcons led, 19-0.

After that, neither team could put together any type of drive that lasted. Aycock's deepest penetration of the second half was to the North Pitt 17 where a lost a fumble might have cost them another score. The Panthers never ventured into Falcon territory during the game.

Ronnie Tetterton and Milton Brown recovered fumbles for the Panthers and Spencer intercepted a pass.

Things don't get much better for the Panthers this week as they will be hosting Ayden-Grifton, this Friday night.

Long Scalps Indians As Pitt Wins, 47-0

PITTSBURGH (AP)—Carson Long set a school record with four field goals and Tony Dorsett rushed for 142 yards and three touchdowns to lead the University of Pittsburgh to a 47-0 college football victory over winless William & Mary Saturday.

Pitt, trounced 46-10 the week before by top-ranked Oklahoma, took a 19-0 halftime lead with the help of Long's four field goals.

The boots of 33, 23, 31 and 46 yards by Long erased the old Pitt single game record of three shared by Long and Andy Gustafson, who played at Pitt in 1925.

Dorsett, limited to 17 yards by Oklahoma, bolted 33 yards for his second touchdown on Pitt's first play of the second half. The score came after William & Mary failed on a fourth-and-one play at their own 33. A penalty later in the third quarter nullified a touchdown on a 54-yard punt return by Pitt freshman Gordon Jones.

But Pitt overcame the loss with a 63-yard touchdown drive

Rogers, Coles Pace Gobblers In Win

BLACKSBURG, Va. (AP)—Quarterback Phil Rogers scored two touchdowns on short runs and halfback Roscoe Coles, who averaged 10 yards a carry, went 69 yards for another Saturday as Virginia Tech's Gobblers posted a 21-9 football victory over Richmond.

The swarming Virginia defense held the Spiders in check until late in the final period when Bobby Allen went 53 yards for a touchdown. Richmond had gotten on the scoreboard only 46 seconds earlier when Dick Childress tackled Tech quarterback Michael Barnes in the end zone for a safety.

The victory was the Gobblers' first in three games. The loss dropped Richmond to 1-2.

Keydets Whallop 'Cats, 55-0

LEXINGTON, Va. (AP)—Virginia Military, sparked by Ronnie Moore's 89-yard return of the opening kickoff for a touchdown, smashed Davidson's Wildcats 55-0 Saturday.

It was the Keydets' highest point total since 1922 when they beat Catholic University 61-0. VMI, which dropped two non-conference games by a one-point margin at the start of the season, scored five of the first six times it had possession to mount an overwhelming 35-0 halftime lead.

Leading VMI's defense was tackle Danny Bradach and linebacker Glen Jones. Davidson's deepest penetration was to the VMI 40 in the second quarter. The Wildcats were unable to cross the 50-yard line during the second half.

Lloyd Carries Tigers To 28-6 Victory

WILLIAMSTON — Deno Lloyd scored twice and rushed for 168 yards leading the Williamston Tigers to a 28-6 win over Roanoke Rapids Friday night.

Lloyd carried 16 times for a 10.5 per carry average. The Tigers picked up a total of 294 yards on the ground while holding Roanoke Rapids to 64.

Roanoke Rapids scored first as George Miles raced 45 yards in the second quarter for the only RR points of the game. The conversion failed.

Joel Hagans gave the Tigers a break later in the period recovering a fumble at the Williamston 26. The Tigers drove 74 yards with Lloyd going the last 42 himself. Tommy Gardner added the PAT for a 7-6 lead.

On the Tigers' next possession they almost stopped themselves. Williamston drove to the RR 29 but two big penalties moved them back 30 yards. From their 49, Lloyd took the Tigers in on a 61 yard run. Scoring with 41 seconds left in the half.

The Tigers made it 21-6 in the third period as Sam Short capped a 77-yard drive with a 35-yard scamper. Jerry Howell passed to Eric Godard on a fake kick for the conversion.

With 10:23 left to play, Peele got the Tigers' last score on a four-yard run after Hagans had recovered another fumble.

Williamston travels to Washington this week.

Roanoke Rolls Up Fourth Win

ROBERSONVILLE — Four different players scored touchdowns for the Roanoke Redskins as Roanoke won its fourth game of the season beating West Edgemore, 29-8, Friday night.

Wyatt Daniels scored the first Roanoke TD on a punt return. The ball had changed hands and on the punt back to the Redskins, Daniels scored 71 yards for his first return TD of the year.

Later in the period, the Redskins took over on a punt and marched 65 yards in three plays. Ricky Purvis took an 18-yard pass across midfield, followed by a nine yard run by Larry Williams. Ricky Spruill capped the drive going the remaining 38 yards for the score.

West Edgemore bounced back to go 60 yards for their only score of the game with Thomas Umstead going over from the three. Alan Cay passed to Robert Cherry for the conversion.

Purvis got the points back for the Redskins hauling in a 10 yard pass from Charlie Smith. Purvis also ran in the extra point. The final Roanoke score came in the third period as Williams ran in from the four. Spruill ran in the PAT.

The Redskins rushed for 229 yards on the ground and added 38 passing. Roanoke travels to Saratoga this Friday.

PAT Attempt Fails, Vikes Lose By One

NEW YORK (AP) — The Minnesota Vikings are having nothing to do with a squabble by the two pro football leagues over the services of wide receiver John Gilliam.

Chris Hemminger, president of the World Football League, demanded in a letter to the National Football League that the NFL return Gilliam, who signed with the Vikings this season after playing with the WFL.

"This is the first we've heard of it," said Vikings General Manager Mike Lynn, informed of the letter late Friday.

Gilliam, after playing out his option with the Vikings, signed with the Hawaiians last season. In this spring's WFL reorganization, he went to the Winds, receiving a $100,000 business loan and then a $25,000 bonus, Hemminger said.

Gilliam's move to the NFL followed threats by his lawyers of legal action against the NFL if it barred his return.

WHEAT SWAMP — Clifton Clemons grabbed a 34-yard pass from Joey Baggett with :08 left to play but a conversion pass, that would have given D. H. Conley a win failed and the Vikings lost to North Lenoir, 20-19, Friday night.

The TD cut the gap to a point's difference. The Vikes elected to go for the win instead of a tie but the pass fell short.

North Lenoir put up the first TD of the game on a one-yard run by Greg Lee. The PAT failed.

Conley came back in the first period to tie the game, 6-6 as Joey Baggett ran three yards for the Conley score. Baggett's kick for the lead failed.

The lead slipped back to the Hawks in the second frame as North Lenoir got another TD from Lee, this one a one yard dive.

The Vikings battled back before the half to take the lead as Baggett passed to Donnie Cox for 36 yards and Baggett added the PAT for a 13-12 intermission lead.

The Hawks regained control in the third period as John O'Donald dove over from one yard out and Lee ran in the conversion giving the Hawks the point they needed. Conley put together an 85-yard drive late in the final period with Clemons finishing it off with Baggett's TD pass. The conversion failed.

North Lenoir rushed for 191 yards but fumbled six times. The Vikes picked up 114 rushing and 163 passing but they fumbled four times.

Ali Waging Battle On Two Different Fronts

MANILA (AP) — Muhammad Ali shrugged off the latest marital tiff with his wife, Belinda, today and pictured himself as a cosmic individual insulated from mortal abuse and pain.

"Man can't make a gun big enough to hurt me," he said, discussing what effect Belinda's walkout might have on his heavyweight title defense next Wednesday (10:45 P.M. Tuesday EDT) against tough Joe Frazier.

"I live under pressure. I thrive on controversy."

Then, with his wife having flown home to be with her four children after an argument over Ali's link to a Los Angeles beauty, he stunned a locker room press conference with this statement.

"If all my children got burned up in a fire, the fight still goes on."

Belinda stalked out of Ali's suite in a Manila hotel Friday and flew home hours after a 24-hour journey here by air, obviously upset over repeated newspaper reports of Ali's association with svelte Veronica Porsche, identified as his wife. Miss Porsche has been seen in the champion's company in fights in Zaire, Cleveland, Las Vegas and Kuala Lumpur but little was made of it until a presidential reception here last week at which the California woman was introduced as "Mrs. Ali."

Later Ali said, "I got just one wife, Belinda," and added: "What I do behind closed doors is my business."

Ali and Belinda reportedly had a heated argument before Belinda caught the next plane out but the statuesque Muslim wife from Chicago apparently mellowed in the long flight across the Pacific.

"He is my husband and I'll always love him," she said in a stopover at Honolulu. "I left Manila to take care of business. I had business elsewhere and he knows that."

An associate said Ali insisted on an unexpected workout in order to show the public that he was not affected by the Belinda incident.

He telephoned a friend, actress Jayne Kennedy of Los Angeles, and asked her to accompany him to the Folk Arts Theater where the training is held. She is here with her husband to join in the singing of the national anthem before the fight.

"Did you see that pretty girl who was with me today?" Ali asked. "I would have a pretty girl with me every day if it would add 50 million dollars in ink to the fight."

All made no mention of Veronica. She was with him in his hotel suite Friday night, watching a horror movie. She did not attend the workout.

Frazier was asked, after his workout, what effect he thought Belinda's departure might have on Ali in the fight.

"If I was going to lose my wife, I would be upset," he replied, "but sometimes a situation like this makes a man fight harder."

"It's his problem. All I can say is 'God bless him.'"

Joe's wife and five children, aged four to 14, flew in earlier this week and Joe cooked breakfast for them Friday morning.

"Man, we just celebrated our 14th anniversary," he said. "Some guys have two, three and four wives in that time. But I still got the same old, sweet woman."

Changes In The Works For NFL's Second Week

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

The Philadelphia Eagles and Chicago Bears figured they'd be going somewhere in the National Football League this year. So far they've only gone down to defeat—so a couple of different arms have been thrown in to see if they can crank up some action.

Late last season young Mike Boryla won the Eagles' quarterbacking job when Coach Mike McCormack promoted him over veteran Roman Gabriel. Boryla held it through the exhibition season—then lost it last week when the Eagles stalled and lost 23-14 to the underdog New York Giants.

Gary Huff held the Bears' signal-calling job last year but lost it on opening day when Coach Jack Pardee decided to go with Bobby Douglass. Now Huff apparently has it back, the result of the Bears' 35-7 shellacking at the hands of the underdog Baltimore Colts.

Putting aside the unlikely thoughts of a tie, somebody's going to come out a loser in his thinking on Sunday when the Eagles and Bears get together in Chicago.

In Sunday's other games it's the New York Jets at Kansas City, Detroit at Atlanta, Minnesota at Cleveland, Miami at New England, the New York Giants at Washington, Oakland at Baltimore, Los Angeles at San Francisco, St. Louis at Dallas, San Diego at Houston, Cincinnati at New Orleans and Buffalo at Pittsburgh. On Monday night, it's Green Bay at Denver.

"I am reluctant to make the change," McCormick said of his return to Gabriel. "I don't like to do that. But I have to go with what I think is best for the football team...I don't want to put Michael down. But he was confused. He was fooled by some defensive keys. That's when I decided to go with Gabe in the fourth period. I could see what was happening from the sidelines."

Pardee hasn't officially announced that Huff is starting—but he's been practicing with the first team this past week while Douglass has missed some workouts to spend time involved in the players' union activities.

The Eagles and Bears aren't the only teams going with new quarterbacks this week. So are the Chiefs—although they've got one of the oldest new ones around. Len Dawson, 40, replaces injured Mike Livingston against the Jets. Joe Namath is almost a sure starter for New York—but young J.J. Jones will be ready to take over if Namath's knees give way.

Steve Bartkowski, the NFL's No. 1 draft choice, made an impressive debut as the Falcons' quarterback, despite coming out on the short end of the score. Atlanta's fans, who stayed away en masse a few times last year, figure to pack the joint this time around to get a look at their new hero when he tries to solve Detroit's intricate defense.

The Big Red Machine hasn't slowed down a bit since winning the National League West. In fact, it's picking up speed in the home stretch.

The division championship clinched some time ago, the "Machine" went after the record books Friday night—and roared past the San Francisco Giants in the process.

"I have to be amazed," said Cincinnati Manager Sparky Anderson after watching his team bury the Atlanta Braves 12-5.

The victory was No. 106 for the West champions, and 62 of those have come at home for a new National League record. The former modern mark of 61 was held by the 1962 Giants.

In the other National League games, the Los Angeles Dodgers whipped the Houston Astros 3-2; the San Francisco Giants blanked the San Diego Padres 5-0; the St. Louis Cardinals defeated the Pittsburgh Pirates 10-0; the Montreal Expos nipped the Chicago Cubs 3-2 in 12 innings and the Philadelphia Phillies trimmed the New York Mets 4-3 in 12 innings in the first game of a two-night doubleheader before losing the nightcap 3-2 in 12.

Dodgers 3, Astros 2

Steve Garvey's two-run homer in the ninth—only the second hit of the game off J.R. Richard—pulled Los Angeles to a dramatic victory over Houston. Just minutes before, the Astros had taken a 2-1 lead in the top of the ninth on Cliff Johnson's two-run homer off Burt Hooton, 18-9. It was one of only five hits off Hooton as he won his 12th straight game, a Dodger record.

Giants 5, Padres 0

San Francisco right-hander John Montefusco pitched a five-hitter and Willie Montanez and Bruce Miller hit RBI singles in the fourth inning, carrying the Giants over San Diego. Montefusco, who entered the game with 211 strikeouts, fanned only two, but his total remained the highest for a rookie since Grover Cleveland Alexander struck out 227 in 1911. Montefusco, 159, walked one and permitted only one runner to advance as far as third base.

Cardinals 1, Pirates 0

Bob Forsch pitched a three-hitter and Lou Brock scored from first base on a single, lifting St. Louis over Pittsburgh. Forsch, 15-10, permitted only singles by Rennie Stennett in the first inning, Willie Stargell in the seventh and Manny Sanguillen in the eighth. In between, Forsch retired 18 straight Pirates in a string interrupted by a one-out walk preceding Stargell's hit.

Expos 3, Cubs 2

Mike Jorgensen slugged a game-tying home run in the eighth inning, then stroked a tie-breaking single in the 12th to give Montreal its victory over Chicago. Pepe Mangual's walk and Tim Lincecum's single preceded Jorgensen's single to right off Darold Knowles, 6-9.

Phillies 4-2, Mets 3-3

Garry Maddox singled home a run in the 12th inning, leading Philadelphia past New York in their first game. Felix Millan's double with two out in the 12th inning led to two runs as the Mets won the second game.

Oklahoma Has To Struggle To Get Past Miami, 20-17

MIAMI (AP) — Oklahoma's unbeaten football string now stands at 32 games, but the top-ranked Sooners proved themselves mere mortals in nipping a gutsy, heavy underdog University of Miami team 20-17.

"With this game, we don't deserve to be ranked No. 1," Sooners Coach Barry Switzer admitted after Friday night's game. "But no No. 1 team ever went through a season and played every game at top capabilities."

Oklahoma's wishbone attack had appeared unstoppable in averaging 461 yards rushing while routing Oregon 62-7 and Pittsburgh 46-10.

But the young Miami team, which couldn't stop Georgia

Tech's wishbone in a 38-23 loss last week, held the Sooners to 176 yards while amassing 289 itself.

"We were damn lucky to win," said Switzer, given the winner's role only through a blocked Miami punt and fumble recovery. "Miami was as good or even better than us."

"I think at moments that we were greater than Oklahoma tonight," said Miami Coach Carl Selmer. "Those two big errors really took it out of us. We're a young team...we are going to make mistakes."

Oklahoma got all its points in the second period after Miami sped 74 yards on its first series for a 7-0 lead on Larry Cain's 19-yard run.

After Oklahoma held Miami at its 27 later in the first quarter, a punt and personal foul call against Miami gave the Sooners the ball on Miami's 37 and led to a 34-yard field goal by Tony DiRienzo.

End Duane Bacus then blocked a Miami punt to give Oklahoma possession at the Hurricane 11, and Elvis Peacock ran in from six yards out.

Two plays later, Oklahoma's Mike Phillips pounced on a fumble by Miami's Otis Anderson at Miami's 27. Joe Washington, held to 54 yards in 14 carries, got the touchdown from the three-yard line.

A 26-yard punt return by Washington to Miami's 25 resulted in no more than a 21-yard field goal by DiRienzo just before halftime for the frustrated Sooners, but it proved to be the winning points.

Miami drove from its own 40-yard line to Oklahoma's eight at the start of the fourth quarter without scoring, then settled for a 53-yard field goal by Chris Dennis after forcing the Sooners to punt from their two.

Quarterback Kary Baker then combined with split end Mike Adams on a 72-yard play, 40 yards through the air, for a touchdown that put Miami within three points with 7:09 left to play.

But Miami's hopes died at their 45 with three minutes left when Baker fell on his fourth-down fumble, two yards shy of a first down.

"We'll take our semi-win and go home," said Oklahoma defender Dewey Selmon. "We came into the game with the wrong attitude. They've got a good team. They shot down our running game and made us look sloppy."

Wildlife Afield: Trout Fishing Trip Proves Its Point

By JIM DEAN

It was a clear, crisp day with more than a promise of fall in it. We finished breakfast, cleaned up the campsite, then began to gather our fishing tackle.

There were seven of us, and we planned to spread out over the length of one of North Carolina's "native" trout streams. It was going to be an interesting test from at least two standpoints.

For one thing, of the seven fishermen, only two had ever done any great amount of trout fishing. At least, that was what the rest of us were led to believe (subsequent events have raised some doubts). Furthermore, all seven fishermen had rigged up flyrods.

I was also curious to see how well the anglers adjusted to unfamiliar water and wild, streambed trout. Would we all get skunked? Would only the experienced fly fishermen catch trout? Would the flyrods be put aside after a few futile hours? It was going to be interesting.

That first day, we dropped a couple of fishermen off on the lower end of the river, while others chose to fish the popular middle reaches of the stream. Two fishermen decided to fish the tiny headwaters in the upper end of the watershed.

That evening, it was soon apparent that everyone had taken fish. Even the anglers who had never flyfished for trout before had caught at least a few trout.

The second day was even more interesting. One fisherman took 23 trout, and I don't believe anyone caught less than eight or 10. Some of the trout were big enough to prompt a modest amount of bragging. Keep in mind that these were all wild trout, and the stream is very heavily fished by some experienced anglers. Also keep in mind, that some of us had never fished for trout.

I think there are several points worth making. In the first place, I think this proves what many of us have been saying all along; that fly fishing is not as difficult as you might have been led to believe. Given a modest degree of patience and a stream with a good population of trout, any angler can learn to catch them on flies in short order.

You can, of course, spend the rest of your life polishing your techniques, but the basics of fly fishing for trout are easily learned.

I think our experiences also point out the success and value of the North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission's "native" and "trophy" trout regulations. These regulations restrict both the number and size of fish, as well as the method of fishing. On "native" streams, for example, anglers can keep four trout a day with browns and rainbows being at least 10 inches long and brook trout at least seven inches long. Artificial flies or single-hook artificial lures may be used. On "trophy" streams, only one trout may be kept a day with browns and rainbows being at least 16 inches long and brook trout at least 12 inches long. Only artificial flies may be used.

These restrictions encourage the release of fish, and also improve the chances of survival for released fish. The result is that the streams under "native" and "trophy" regulations rarely, if ever, require any stocking.

The stream we fished gets heavy fishing pressure, yet it holds an amazing volume of trout, including some very large ones. I fished this stream some years back when it was under "general" regulations. At that time it was stocked regularly, and anglers could use bait and keep seven trout of any size. The fishing was generally poor except right after the stocking truck had made its rounds.

The "native" regulations have wrought a miracle. This stream is now a very fine, productive piece of wild trout water, and I know at least seven trout fishermen who would quickly agree.

Millan Scores Winner As Mets Take 12 Inning Game

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Felix Millan doubled home the tie-breaking run and scored himself on an error with two out in the 12th inning, giving the New York Mets a 3-2 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies and a split of their twin-night double-header Friday.

Garry Maddox singled home a run with two out in the 12th inning, giving the Phillies a 4-3 victory over the Mets in the first game.

The games were delayed several times by rain and, in all, it took nine hours, 45 minutes to complete the doubleheader.

The Mets took a 1-0 lead in the nightcap on Mike Vail's RBI single in the fifth inning. But the Phillies tied the game in the eighth on a throwing error by Met shortstop Mike Phillips.

In the 12th, Millan's double down the right field line produced Bob Gallagher from first base with the winning run and Millan came in on the same play on a wild throw by right fielder Mike Anderson.

New Fishing Regulations To Be Discussed

BURLINGTON—The North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission, in a meeting here this week, approved a list of proposed changes for the 1976 inland fishing regulations. The proposals will be presented to the public at three hearings across the state in late September and early October. At the same time, fishermen will be invited to make proposals of their own for regulation changes.

The hearings will be September 29 in the Buncombe County Courthouse in Asheville; October 1 in the Rowan County Courthouse in Salisbury; and October 2 in the Craven County Courthouse in New Bern. All will begin at 7:30 p.m.

Two Commission proposals involve changes in the classification of trout streams. The Commission voted to propose that the section of Davidson River from the confluence of Avery's Creek downstream be reclassified from "native" trout to "general" trout regulations. Also, it was recommended that the North Fork of the French Broad River be reclassified from "native" to "general" regulations. Both trout streams are in Transylvania County.

Most of the other proposed changes involve fishing for nongame species in inland or joint waters using such special devices as gill nets, traps, seines, and gigs.

"Many of these changes are relatively minor, and are being proposed primarily to simplify these regulations and make them more consistent," said a Wildlife Commission spokesman. "For example, we found that in some places, particularly where a river or creek formed a boundary line between two counties, that one county might have one regulation on the use of special fishing devices, while the county on the opposite side of the river might have another. We've tried to resolve these."

Other changes were also proposed concerning the use of special fishing devices. A proposal will be made to eliminate the possession of special device nets (dip or bow nets) above the Highway 301 bridge on the Roanoke River.

The Commission will also propose that the Tar River be closed to gill netting to protect the dwindling striped bass population.

Upon hearing the results of a study of the effects of gill netting on game fish species in certain coastal creeks, the Commission voted to propose that gill netting be prohibited in Blounts Creek, Chocowinity Bay, Durhams Creek, and Mixon Creek in Beaufort County. Studies show that a heavy percentage of the gamefish populations in these areas are being caught and killed by gill nets. Also, many of the gamefish which are released from the nets do not survive. For example, over 28 percent of the largemouth bass caught in gill nets in these areas died in the nets. When this percentage was combined with the number of bass which died following release from the nets, as high as 54 percent of the largemouth bass died. Chain pickerel and panfish also showed similar high mortality rates.

The Commission will also propose that the Cape Fear River and its tributaries be closed to gill netting in Bladen County. A proposal will be made to shorten the dip, bow and gill net season in Alligator Creek, Hoods Creek, Indian Creek, Orton Creek below Orton Pond, Rices Creek, Sturgeon Creek and Town Creek by closing the season on May 1 instead of June 5.

In Wilkes County, the Commission will propose a regulation to prohibit traps in all public waters in the county except the Yadkin River below W. Kerr Scott Reservoir. A proposal will also be made to prohibit the use of special fishing devices on impounded waters lying entirely within the Sandhills Game Land.

In other action, the Commission adopted a resolution to enter into a reciprocal agreement with Tennessee on game fish species in certain coastal creeks, the Commission voted to propose that gill netting be prohibited in Blounts Creek, Chocowinity Bay, Durhams Creek, and Mixon Creek in Beaufort County. Studies show that a heavy percentage of the gamefish populations in these areas are being caught and killed by gill nets. Also, many of the gamefish which are released from the nets do not survive. For example, over 28 percent of the largemouth bass caught in gill nets in these areas died in the nets. When this percentage was combined with the number of bass which died following release from the nets, as high as 54 percent of the largemouth bass died. Chain pickerel and panfish also showed similar high mortality rates.

The Commission will also propose that the Cape Fear River and its tributaries be

Atlanta Falls To Red Machine

CINCINNATI (AP)—How gooe are the 1975 Cincinnati Reds?

Ask Manager Sparky Anderson and he shakes his head of premature snow white hair.

"I have to be amazed," said Anderson Friday night after the Reds moved within one victory of becoming the National League's winningest team since 1909.

The Big Red Machine continued its relentless drive Friday night in typical fashion, spotting Atlanta a 4-0 lead then erupting for a 12-5 victory to set a National League record for home victories.

The Machine got its nickname in 1970 after steamrolling to a club record 102 victories, but Anderson considers the 1975 model far superior.

"Our 1970 club could not compare with this team. Remember that in 1970 the league had just expanded. The caliber of the two clubs is much different. That club would not have won 90-92 games this year," said Anderson.

The victory gave the Reds record their 106th triumph of the year and with it the alltime National League mark of 62 home victories.

The last team to win 106 games was the 1942 St. Louis Cardinals. The 1909 Pittsburgh Pirates won 107.

Tony Perez ignited the comeback from behind victory with a three-run bases-loaded double that swept the luster-hitting Reds past the Braves for the 13th time in 16 games this year.

Perez took over the team leadership in RBIs, moving two ahead of Johnny Bench. Perez has 109 and Bench, who returned to the lineup after a week layoff, has 107.

The former mark for home victories was held by the 1962 San Francisco Giants and the 1898 Boston club. The Reds, who have won nine of their last 11 games, have two games remaining.

Gary Nolan, 1539, tied slumped Jack Billingham as the Reds top winner of the season. Leftyhander Don Gullett, 14-4, attempted to make it a three-some this afternoon when he faced Adrian Devine, 1-0.

Cincinnati's landslide of victories has made a believer of Atlanta's Ralph Garr, who won the NL batting title last year with a .353 average.

"I didn't think anybody could ever win that many games in our division," said Garr.

Yarborough On Pole; Petty Still Picked

MARTINSVILLE, Va. (AP) — Chevrolet driver Cale Yarborough will start on the pole for Sunday's 20th annual Old Dominion 500 Grand National stock car race, but the favorite still will be Richard Petty.

Yarborough earned the No. 1 spot for the $75,000 race, richest short-track event in NASCAR history, with a record qualifying speed Friday of 86.199 miles an hour on the half-mile track.

His performance not only erased the previous Old Dominion qualifying record of 85.980 m.p.h. set in 1972 by Bobby Allison but earned Yarborough $1,000 for winning the pole.

Allison, driving his Matador for only the second time this year in a short-track race, won the outside pole at 85.855 m.p.h., while Petty did no better than sixth in his Dodge at 84.785 m.p.h.

But Petty has started back in the pack many times at Martinsville Speedway, only to come from behind and win—14 times to be exact.

Qualifying third in a Chevrolet at 85.517 m.p.h. was Darrell Waltrip. David Pearson was fourth at 85.171 m.p.h. in only his second short-track start in his Mercury.

Richie Panch of Daytona Beach, Fla., was fifth in a Chevrolet at 84.951 m.p.h. with Petty sixth.

Rounding out the top 10 were Dodge driver Dave Marcis, Chevrolet drivers Lennie Pond and Benny Parsons, and Buddy Baker driving a Ford.

The first 20 spots in the 30-car lineup for Sunday's 1 p.m.

EDT race were filled Friday. The other 10 were to be determined today prior to a 150-lap, $10,380 NASCAR National Championship modified race.

Yarborough could make it a $20,000 payoff if he wins Sunday's race and leads the most laps. The winner earns $14,000 with the top lap leader getting $5,000.

Fort Macon, A Sightseer's Varietyland

About 115 miles from Greenville, historic Fort Macon offers a variety of sightseeing and vacationing pleasures to visitors.

Thick growing small coastal trees mark the scenic approach to Fort Macon State Park, located at the eastern end of Bogue Banks.

Historic Fort Macon, a well preserved, partially restored Civil War coastal defense structure, is today a quiet area where sightseers stroll; most of them spending unhurried periods of time speculating on what life here must have been like a little more than a century ago when it was manned by Confederate forces. It was captured by Union forces on April 26, 1862.

Outside the fort, the 400 acre plus site provides places to fish, beautiful areas of white sand and a ridge of sand dunes. To make time spent there a complete pleasure, the state has provided picnic facilities, water, toilets, outdoor fireplaces and other modern amenities.

Although the bathhouse closes in early September, the wide beaches and the mounds of sand dunes are ideal for hiking or just plain walking and day-dreaming all year round.

Fort Macon Coast Guard Station, adjacent to the historic fort, is another in the vital links of the Coast Guard's stations ringing the coastal areas of the United States.

All those who find pleasure in watching ships go out to sea, or come into harbor after an ocean voyage, will often be

THREE BEDROOM HOME ENJOYS STEP-SAVING FLOOR PLAN.

By Jerry Bishop

Favored with more personality than the common ranch style home, the Winthrop displays a traditional exterior that encases a floor plan based on single level convenience.

Its facade is fronted by an elongated porch, accented with gracefully turned spindles, and the roof slopes to shade shuttered windows. Inside, the floor plan stresses livability.

Traffic is directed by a central foyer with access to bedroom wing, family room, and airy living-dining room. Arranged to maintain formality and discourage day-to-day cross-traffic, the living and dining room spans over 26 feet for a more than adequate entertainment area.

The family room, back the closeted hallway, does for family what the living room does for guests. Generous in size and easily reached from the compact kitchen, the family room is connected to the terrace by charming double doors that invite and involve the outdoors. Basement stairs are well-placed between family room and kitchen.

Nestled behind the garage is the utility room, furnished with closet and a door to the kitchen. The utility room provides space for washer and dryer and confines laundry chores to a single level. It also functions as a mud room, separating garage and living area.

A substantial storage area links the double garage to the rear yard and minimizes trips to the basement by providing a handy place for storing lawnmowers, outdoor toys, and patio furniture. For larger items, the full basement yields another 1,852 sq. ft. of storage area.

closets, built-in vanity, and shower stall.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of two articles based on an interview with an architect who specializes in designing houses to the exact exterior dimensions of Colonial homes built from 200 to 300 years ago and still in existence.

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures
Architect Evan Pollitt got into the Bicentennial spirit as long ago as 1948.

That's when he designed and built his own house in Easton, Conn., to the exact exterior dimensions of an old Cape Anne house he and his wife had seen in Gloucester, Mass. The original, built in 1730, had a gambrel roof, was 25 feet by 24 feet and was a typical design of its era. The gambrel roof, with its two slopes, the lower steeper than the upper, had the advantage of providing more headroom on the second floor.

It was during the construction of his new house that Pollitt got the idea of devoting all his working time to the business of designing Colonial houses authentic in every exterior detail. But he was so busy starting his own private practice, something he had wanted to do since leaving the U.S. Navy three years earlier, when he had been an ensign on a minesweeper in the Pacific during World War II, that he never got around to it. Finally, 25 years later, when a successful career permitted him the luxury of pursuing his dream, he began to visit and measure old houses.

The owners of these houses — some individuals, some historical organizations — were only too willing to cooperate. In all, Pollitt has measured more than 100 Colonial houses. Although he started "cold" in nearly all cases, not one person or group refused to permit him to take whatever steps were necessary to produce duplicate plans of their houses. These steps included accurate measurements of the entire exterior, the sizes and locations of windows and dormers, the sizes and contours of cornices, the pitches of roofs, etc. This was not too difficult with some of the houses, but very involved in those where additions had been made over the years and it had to be determined which were parts of the original structures and which were not.

Constant inspections confirmed what Pollitt had discovered in 1948 when choosing a design to use for his own house: the exteriors were charming, but most interiors were not suitable for good living by modern standards. The sizes of the rooms, except for the kitchens, were often too small. More important, the traffic layouts generally were poor, with an absence of hallways in most cases, so that passage had to be made through one, two and three rooms in order to reach one's destination. Hence, in the plans Pollitt has drawn up with Colonial exteriors that follow actual structures, he has put up-to-date, easy-circulation patterns on the inside.

During the course of his investigations, Pollitt found that very few houses built during the Colonial period suffered severe deterioration. Those no longer in existence were lost by fire or wrecked to make room for other buildings. The architect said that most of the types of wood in the Colonials are still readily available, with only a minimum amount of millwork necessary to duplicate them.

(Thirty-five home handyman problems are discussed in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," available by sending $1 to this newspaper at Box 5, Teaneck, N.J. 07666.)

Old Buildings Being Recycled

By DOROTHEA BROOKS

United Press International

They live down by the railroad tracks.

In fact, they may live in the railroad station itself — Chattanooga's 1909 Terminal Station, turned into an elegant hotel and restaurant by local businessmen after it lost its trains in 1970.

This is just one example of recycling, the current trend in old buildings as well as old cans, bottles and scrap paper.

Throughout the country, seemingly monstrous old structures — railroad stations, warehouses, industrial plants, bank buildings, car barns — are being transformed into sound, attractive, often unusual and elegant quarters for offices, shops, galleries and apartments.

Robert P. Marshall, senior vice president of Turner Construction Co., New York, says such remodeling has much to recommend it, not the least of which is major savings in time and money. There are possibilities in virtually every community, some of them valuable not only for the structure but for the history.

So convinced is Turner of the trend, the company has opened a new sales office in Washington, D. C., to help expand its activity in the field.

Turner now is handling a $46-million conversion of the 60-year-old former American Machine & Foundry industrial building in Brooklyn into a 532-bed full-service hospital installation. When completed in mid-1977, it will become headquarters for the Lutheran Medical Center, and local point for a major community redevelopment project.

Finding new uses for old, nonproductive structures not only makes good sense for investors and tenants, often it helps restore life to an area, improving, modernizing while preserving much of the original character and charm that might be lost with completely new construction.

Take, for instance, the old Ghirardelli chocolate factory and The Cannery, a one-time food processing plant, on San Francisco's waterfront, both recycled into colorful, profitable shopping and tourist attractions — groupings of small shops, restaurants.

The former Salt Lake City trolley barn now contains some 90 businesses, ranging from high-fashion stores to restaurants, movie houses and a farmer's market.

In Louisville, Ky., a warehouse and bank have been combined with a new addition to make a home for the local theater company. The lobby is the former grand room built in 1837 for a bank.

The former Butler Building, Minneapolis, Minn., a warehouse built in 1906, has been made into a sumptuous commercial building with two floors of stores and seven floors of offices. A 300-room hotel eventually will occupy the other half of the structure.

Granite warehouses built in Boston in the 1830s have been transformed into the opulent duplex Custom House apartments overlooking the harbor.

In New York City, one building recycler, Henry Mandel, has transformed industrial buildings in famed Greenwich Village into three unique apartment complexes.

One, The Towers, may well be the success story of the year on the Manhattan rental scene, with 85 per cent rental before completion. The project is described as an outstanding example of what can be done, but usually isn't.

Formed by the joining of two adjacent structures, originally erected about 1900 for use as U.S. government warehouses, The Towers now contains 158 middle-income apartments, each with "fringe benefits" of the type often available only in recycled buildings. All ground floor units have 14-foot high ceilings which were utilized to provide sleeping lofts. Second floor apartments have curved windows, made possible through preservation of two-story arches in the original structures. Many of the apartments are one-of-a-kind, unusual in size and shape, unlike the pick-it-off-a-floor-plan units common to new construction.

Many old buildings offer such amenities as carved paneling, fine woodwork, stained glass. Most are spacious. Some Towers apartments, for instance, have 600-square-foot living rooms; some studios are 50 feet long. Construction is solid. Thick walls provide soundproofing. Locations often are choice.

The recyclings, according to Turner's Marshall, seldom arouse negative community reaction, as major new rehabilitation efforts often do, and there is little likelihood of environmental concern.

The recycler comes on more like "a knight on a white charger, helping to preserve the city," as one architect put it.

Answers Timely
Gardening Questions

Q. I have reseeded my fescue lawn. How tall should I let the grass get before mowing it the first time? (L. G., Greensboro)

A. Four to five inches. Then mow to a height of two to two and a half inches. Never take off more than 50 per cent of the above ground growth at any mowing, and always make sure your mower has a sharp blade. A dull blade will beat or tear off the grass, giving your lawn a grayish appearance. A dull blade can even pull up newly seeded grass. (Carl Blake, extension agronomist)

Q. I am planning to move my garden. In which direction should I run my rows? (L. L., Fayetteville)

A. More even distribution of sunlight is obtained by laying out rows in north-south direction, but you can have a successful garden regardless of row direction. (W. W. Reid, extension horticulturist)

Q. Will the ground cover Crown Vetch grow well in the Raleigh area? I believe it also goes by the name Coronilla varia. (C. B., Raleigh)

A. Crown Vetch will grow reasonably well on north and/or east facing slopes in the Raleigh area. It is cooler on those slopes. It will grow better to the west and north of Raleigh. This plant makes a good ground cover for banks, etc. where growth 18 to 24 inches tall is suitable. It has very attractive flowers, is a legume and needs very little maintenance fertilization. (Carl Blake, extension agronomist)

Q. How do I go about fertilizing spider lilies? (R. C., Cary)

A. The leaves of spider lilies come out after the plant blooms and continue to grow into the fall and winter. Therefore, to get strong bulbs and good blossoms next fall spider lilies need plenty of available nutrients during this period. Apply two to three pounds of a complete fertilizer, such as 8-8-8, per 100 square feet of bulb bed. Work thoroughly into the soil, taking care not to damage the bulb roots. (Henry J. Smith, extension landscape horticulturist)

STEEL FABRICATORS

GENERAL CONTRACTORS

Here's the Answer

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — Can you please tell me how to repair and replace slate roof shingles on a roof?

A. — If a slate shingle has a crack in it, this is a possible source of leaks. The best and easiest way to repair it is to fill and cover the crack with a generous amount of roof cement. Apply it with a putty knife, being sure that some of the cement gets well into the crack.

When a slate shingle is broken and obviously requires replacing, you will need a tool known as a slate puller, a piece of strap iron with a couple of notches in it. The puller is inserted under the damaged shingle. The iron has a bend in it which permits the tool to be driven backward after one of the notches in it grips the nail just under the head. This will draw out the nail. Each shingle usually has two nails, so this must be done twice. After the shingle and all broken pieces have been removed, coat the area and the back of the new shingle with roof cement. Insert the new shingle in place and re-nail it.

While nails can be driven through slate with sharp hammer blows by one who has the knack of it, the best way to avoid splitting the shingle is to drill two pilot holes for the nails. Cover the nail holes with roof cement.

Q. — Can I attach thin wood furring strips to a concrete wall without putting lead anchors into the concrete?

A. — Yes, with either concrete nails or a special fastener used in conjunction with adhesive. If you use concrete nails, hold a furring strip in place against the wall and hammer through it into the wall. Occasionally a nail will bend and you'll have to withdraw it, but most will go into the concrete. The special fastener is a flat piece of perforated metal with a nail coming out of it. The back of the metal is generously covered with the adhesive, a type which should be purchased where you buy the fasteners. When you press the metal against the wall on the non-nail side, some of the adhesive will ooze out through the perforations, which is what gives the device its gripping power. Set all of these fasteners in places where required. Wait until the next day. You then can hammer the furring strips onto the nails, which will go completely through the wood. The nail ends are then bent over with a hammer and driven flat against the wood.

Q. — I intend to finish a wood floor with shellac, which I have been told is fairly easy to apply but which I have never used before. I notice two kinds in the hardware store where I deal — white shellac and orange shellac. I do not want to hide the grain of the wood. Which type do you recommend?

A. — Neither white nor orange shellac will hide the grain. The orange shellac will give the wood a darker color. What is called white shellac is not white as we know it, but actually clear.

Town's Chinese Stay Isolated

By STAN FISHER
The New Haven Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Jimmy Luke is the last of New Haven's Chinese laundrymen. His hands are twisted with arthritis after 46 years washing people's shirts in a job he never liked.

Naisin Lee is a young man from Taiwan. Each day he goes to a machine-filled laboratory at Yale to work on his doctorate in engineering and applied science. He is intelligent, motivated and making the most of his opportunity.

Luke and Lee are symbols of life for about 1,000 Chinese living in New Haven today.

Even though the Chinese share the problems of other ethnic groups, they remain a quiet, unobtrusive part of the population.

Chinese here are merchants, factory workers, restaurateurs, waiters, students, teachers, scientists, doctors. They are rich, middle class and poor. They are Buddhists, Christians, Taoists and nonreligious.

As a group they are industrious, somewhat reserved

Byrd To Speak At Burlington

William Byrd of East Carolina University will be one of four panelists addressing the subject of "Consumerism and Health Education" at the annual meeting of the North Carolina Chapter of the Society for Public Health Education, meeting in Burlington October 9 and 10.

Other panelists include Lillian Woo, Director of the Consumer Center of North Carolina, Frances Setzer of the North Carolina House of Representatives, and John Young, Human Resources Analyst for the North Carolina General Assembly.

"You treat me good, I treat you good. Same way," says Luke. He came to this country in 1910 at age 14 for schooling. His father died and he was left in the city with no one to take care of him.

He, like some 40 other Chinese here at one time, got involved in the laundry business.

There were few opportunities for people, like Luke, who looked, talked and thought differently.

That's still a major obstacle for Chinese in New Haven.

The Rev. Theodore Chan, Calvary Baptist Church pastor, says that the Chinese in the city schools have a difficult time keeping up with their classmates. He notes that although Hispanic children receive bilingual instruction, Chinese children don't.

For older Chinese the language barrier makes for a restricted lifestyle. For them the universe is a restaurant where they eat, sleep and work. The owner becomes their counselor through the unfathomable city.

That same isolation occurs in other ways.

Student Lee says because of cultural differences he finds it difficult to be involved in American society.

"I have American friends but few I can talk to in depth," he said. He says there's a separation, a feeling you're not being absorbed.

"We convert our energies into studies," Lee says.

Math Professor Receives Grant

A grant of $1,875 has been awarded Dr. Lokenath Debnath, professor of mathematics at East Carolina University, by the Marine Science Council to support a study of problems related to natural hazards on the N.C. Coast.

Dr. Debnath will do applied mathematical research on such natural hazards as hurricanes, tornadoes, thunderstorms, underwater explosions and earthquakes which have frequent catastrophic effects on near and distant coastal regions, coastal structures, marine vehicles and equipment.

The proposed study is expected to provide new and useful information for the exploration of oceans and for the development of oceanic and marine resources of the U.S.

Nat'l Teacher Exams Nov. 8

The National Teacher Examinations (NTE) will be administered Nov. 8 at East Carolina University.

The NTE is offered to college seniors preparing to teach and to teachers applying for cer-tification or seeking positions in school systems which encourage or require the examinations.

Bulletins of information and test registration forms are available from the ECU Testing Department, 204 Speight Building, East Carolina University, Greenville, N.C., or from the NTE, Educational Testing Service, Box 911, Princeton, N.J. 08540.

TARHEEL TOYOTA HAS NEW OWNERS WITH NEW IDEAS

Corolla 2-Door Sedan

Corolla 4-Door Wagon

Why Do We Offer A 100,000 MILE WARRANTY?

Read For Yourself Our Reason

Every car dealer in the country is talking "dependability" these days. At Tarheel Toyota, we've decided to do something about it. A new car warranty that's longer than any other warranty in the world (exclusively for Tarheel Toyota). Bill Draper can tell you why: "Nobody else in the world has a car like this. I've seen how the Toyota is made, the quality of the workmanship, the integrity and the craftsmanship that go into this car. I know the Toyota inside and out." Until now, most new car warranties haven't been much more than discounts on the car repairs you knew you'd need. Our warranty is our guarantee of faith in Toyota. "Nobody else in the world can put this kind of warranty on their car. My faith and my knowledge and experience with Toyota tell me I can do it. Toyota builds an automobile to last." Our knowledge of the Toyota comes from research, from first hand information from our service department and from a great number of satisfied Toyota customers. For 100,000 miles or 3 years from the day you purchase your new Toyota, we guarantee to replace or repair your motor, transmission and rear end, if they fail under normal driving conditions. We'll ask you to keep the vehicle properly maintained and we'll ask that you bring it back to Tarheel Toyota for any repairs covered by this warranty. We're offering the 100,000 mile, 3 year warranty in addition to the new car warranty offered by Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A. It's a promise, a guarantee of Toyota quality, Toyota dependability.

12 MONTHS OR 12,000 MILES USED CAR WARRANTY

This guarantee applies to cars selling for $1000.00 and up. On a 50-50 basis. All work must be done in our shop. This warranty does not apply to any sport cars, high performance or air cooled engines or 4 speed transmissions (except economy cars). Most good used cars (even if they look like new) are only guaranteed for a month. Or for a thousand miles. No more. And some are not guaranteed at all. But at Tarheel when we say a used car is in excellent condition, we're willing to stand behind it. We're willing to do something a little extra for it. So we guarantee its motor, its rear end, and its transmission for twelve months or twelve thousand miles. If you're in the market for a better used car, come out to Tarheel and look at ours. We'll show you some as good as new. Guaranteed. Asterisk denotes warranted car.

'The Peoples Bicentennial' Has Friends And Foes

By DON McLEOD
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The Peoples Bicentennial Commission is raising a ruckus among celebrants of the nation's 200th birthday by arguing with them about the true significance of the American Revolution.

This energetic group of radical flag wavers has aroused the ire of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, as well as of the government's official Bicentennial promoters, Ronald Reagan and conservatives in general. It has done so mainly because of its attacks on big corporations. The PBC also has aroused the ire of the far left. That's because it still extols the virtues of democratic institutions and a free market economy despite its revolutionary fervor. But labor unions, civic groups, school systems, churches and others receptive to a populist approach to the Bicentennial have made the PBC a major influence in the celebration.

The Peoples Bicentennial Commission, a private group with no official status, has provided Bicentennial materials to 5,000 schools, 2,000 library systems and 65,000 churches. It has six books out by major publishers, with three more planned this year.

At last count, 984 commercial radio stations were playing PBC's "The Voices of '76" series and 145 television stations were showing the TV version. PBC has a film and a multimedia show touring the country and an itinerant theater company.

Largely because the federal government and various private organizations have provided little direction for the Bicentennial celebration, PBC has been able to step into the vacuum and fill the demand for program material.

Jeremy Rifkin, a young economist who started PBC four years ago on an $800 shoe-string, says a budget of up to $300,000 is expected for 1976, the big Bicentennial year.

Next year PBC will conduct a national campaign modeled on a presidential campaign. Speakers will appear in primary states, promoting a platform but no candidate. Television time will be bought for commercials just as in a real election drive.

The climax will be a rally in Washington next July 4 similar, the PBC hopes, to the 1963 civil rights march and rally led by Martin Luther King Jr.

Nearly all of the PBC's programs, Rifkin says, are financed by membership dues and the sales and royalties for PBC publications.

The only other income PBC has received, he says, was a $7,200 grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities for research on the role of working people in the Revolution, and a $10,000 grant from the National Endowment for the Arts for the theater group.

Organized as a nonprofit public foundation in the District of Columbia, PBC operates out of modest quarters in one of Washington's older office buildings with a paid staff of 18. The "directors," including Rifkin, are paid $85 a week.

Program and educational materials published by PBC bring in $8,000 to $10,000 a month. PBC has 10,000 members who pay $15 annual dues each. Rifkin says 2,000 new members sign up each month.

The PBC publications cover a broad range of subject and style, illustrating better than anything the varied nature of PBC itself.

The basic product is study and program material used by a great variety of organizations seeking guidance for programs commemorating the Revolution and independence. Clients include the Camp Fire Girls and the National Council of Churches. They receive from the PBC courses of study, a list of books to read, study and discussion topics, and some of the materials needed. As befits an organization which grew out of the antiwar movement, PBC in its ideological phase rests heavily on the radical side of the Revolution, particularly such leaders as Sam Adams and Thomas Paine.

Rifkin's central theme is that the Revolution brought democracy to government, and the Bicentennial should do the same for the economy. His arch target and enemy is the giant corporation.

Rifkin, 30, grew up on the South Side of Chicago, where his parents still live. He earned degrees from the Wharton School of Finance and the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy.

After serving as a VISTA volunteer in Harlem, Rifkin drifted into the peace movement. But as the war began to fade as an issue, he turned to new fields.

"I felt that the New Left was not reaching the kind of people I grew up with," Rifkin said in an interview. "It was not addressing the concerns of middle-income Americans. So with '76 coming up, I got the idea for PBC."

Now such early supporters as James J. Kilpatrick, the conservative columnist, have concluded that "PBC's views are mostly hogwash, and Marxist hogwash at that."

Rifkin's fundamental theory, however, is not Marxist. It calls for preservation of a competitive marketplace. He is opposed to government ownership and operation of business and industry.

His chief objection is to the large multinational corporations and what he describes as their exportation of American technology, jobs and capital.

Seeks Basis For Claims

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — A University of Akron biochemist says his research shows copper bracelets, despite the scoffing within the medical profession, actually may help ease the pain of arthritis and rheumatism.

Dr. Helmar Dollwet, 46, an assistant biology professor, said his study was "just a beginning."

"I'm not making any claim to go out and buy copper bracelets," he said, adding that he hopes someone will conduct further research.

His theory is that the copper reacts with a chemical produced by skin, methionine, to produce an anesthetic, ethylene, that can be absorbed by the body and circulated by blood.

For a test, Dollwet had each of 54 volunteers put their arms into air-tight sleeves, of which one of each pair was filled with ethylene, for five minutes. He said that when pricked with a pin, 88 per cent of the volunteers said they felt less pain on the arm exposed to the ethylene.

"People who wear copper bracelets have been laughed at and ridiculed," he said. "The whole upshot of the thing is there may be a scientific basis for those wearers of copper bracelets who say they get some relief from pain. I hope someone will pick up the research."

Musical Comedy Actress Worked With 'Slip'

SINGER-ACTRESS-DANCER . . . Jeannette Gardner, formerly of Gardnerville, in Pitt County, went to New York City after receiving "extra special encouragement."

Accent On Living

The Daily Reflector, Greenville, N.C.—Sunday, September 28, 1975—C-1

AT THE HIGHLANDS PLAYHOUSE . . . Jeannette Gardner sang and tap danced with Randy Hugill in a performance of "Dames At Sea."

While playing Ado Annie in "Oklahoma!" in Gainesville, Ga., Jeannette Gardner's crinoline slip fell down around her feet during a rendition of "I Can't Say No!"

The singer-actress-dancer of New York City, looked down at the crinoline and proceeded to wave it in the air, fitting it into the words of her song.

After working in Charlotte for two years doing copywriting, promotion and spot announcing for three radio stations and a TV station, Miss Gardner, formerly of Gardnerville, received "extra special encouragement" to go to New York as a musical comedy actress.

Miss Gardner said that she could tell some harrowing experiences of her first three months in New York City. When she arrived there, she worked in a promotions job for about four months before having her first audition. Following several auditions, she landed a part in a small children's theatre in Greenwich Village.

Her first big professional role was Joan in "Dames At Sea," which was a five-month tour on the dinner theatre circuit. Her next engagement was in Highlands in summer stock, playing the role of Joan again and also Kitty in "Where's Charley?"

She then traveled to Orlando, Fla., where she was engaged by Director Michael P. Hall to repeat her role in "Where's Charley?" and also to play the comic lead of the gunmoll in the musical "Anything Goes" in the Central Florida Civic Theatre.

The next few months were filled with club appearances and a Gilbert and Sullivan opera. Last summer was spent in Myrtle Beach, S.C., at the USC Summer Theatre where she starred in "The Boy Friend." This was followed by an off-Broadway musical revue "I'll Die If I Can't Live Forever" at the Improvisation Club. She spent the month of April in Maryland touring with the Pickwick Players. Her part was that of Miss Tillie, a dancing clown, in "Toby Tyler."

Miss Gardner recently completed another engagement with the Highlands Playhouse as Ado Annie for six weeks as the guest artist.

"Living out of a suitcase doesn't pose a big problem as long as I look on the positive side—that of learning new roles, meeting different people and seeing new places. One of the possible problems would be finding a sublet for my New York apartment," said Miss Gardner.

Making Rounds

"Making rounds" is the term used to cover all the paperwork, telephoning and walking the streets included in trying to get a theatrical agent and-or producer interested in your work," she continued.

She listed the procedure in making rounds as having publicity photographs made, having resumes of experience, training and personal statistics printed, (these are your sales tools), purchase franchised agent listing, mail a copy of the photo-resume to the long list, (probably spreading this over a long period of time due to the time available and possibly mailing costs), in about a week or two, follow up mailing with a telephone call. "Try to set up an appointment—agents and producers are very busy and a 10 per cent average is excellent.

"Many agents-producers will ask you to drop by to leave a picture-resume because the one you mailed was tossed out or forgotten. Therefore, you make rounds of all the casting offices. This requires patience, endurance and lots of shoe leather," she advised.

Securing engagements is most often done through auditions and there are three basic ways according to Miss Gardner. Open auditions, one learns of in the trade papers "Show Business" or "Backstage" and show up at the appointed place and time, prepared with photo-resume, music, dance shoes, prepared reading, etc. "Many times you do not know what will be asked of you. In most cases, you will first be interviewed by the producer (director) or choreographer. After spending three to five minutes with you, they make notes and later decide whether to call you for an audition. If you later audition and they're interested, you get a call back in which you're further auditioned. At times, there are as many as five or six call backs before hiring is done," Miss Gardner added.

"The only difference in agent submissions and the open audition is that you are submitted to the producer by an agent who feels you would be good for the role. A specific audition is set up and you don't usually have to wait as long. If you get the job with this procedure, your agent gets a percentage of your salary.

"Past contact is the actor's dream. A producer or director whom you've worked for previously calls and asks if you are available to work for him again," she pointed out.

Job Possibilities

When asked if she would say that it is easy or hard to get a job, Miss Gardner exclaimed, "Extremely hard. The competition is unbelievable. It is not unusual to wait three or four hours for a five-minute interview to sing eight bars of music. There are literally thousands of talented people in New York who are all trying for the same few jobs. If you have the talent, much of your success is determined by simple 'stick-to-it-ness.' If you've been accustomed to performing locally and think you're pretty good, it's quite a shock to hit the big city and find you are among all the other 'small town stars.' There's a big emotional, as well as cultural, adjustment to make.

"An actor, like any other artist or craftsman must continually study and learn. Whenever I'm in New York, I take voice, acting, tap and jazz classes. There is no way to learn all there is to know in any field. It is excellent training to change teachers occasionally to learn different styles and methods. Then you can compare and choose what is best for you."

A graduate of Greensboro College, she received a bachelor of music in voice. Her further training includes taking voice from Margaret Graham and Fred Silver, acting from Max Gartenbert, Michael Shurtlett and Ken Eulo, tap from Jerry Ames and jazz from Lillian Scroppo.

Rehearsal Period

"The rehearsal period is probably the most trying and difficult aspect of the job. For instance, in a musical one step in a big group dance number could take hours to perfect. Precision and coordination of acting scenes, singing and choreography takes concentrated effort and much repetition. When you know you've got it however, it's all worth it. After the technical things become second nature, then you can polish and work on interpretation. Once the show opens, you're generally only responsible for your nightly performance six nights a week.

"With this schedule, it's easy to get into the habit of staying up until 3 or 4 a.m., sleeping until noon or later and repeating the cycle again. I personally like this schedule. After a show it takes a long time to drop your energy level and relax long enough to sleep," she commented.

"My career goal is to continually improve my craft by performing varied roles—each having a different challenge. I enjoy both traveling and performing in New York. As any musical comedy actress, I'd like to someday appear in a Broadway production. I'm happy as long as I'm performing and growing professionally.

Personally, I'd like to attempt what some believe to be impossible—combine career with marriage. With a lot of work and a lot of giving, I feel it can be done. If children came along, I would happily make sacrifices to insure their proper care or not have them at all," Miss Gardner stated.

Some of Miss Gardner's funny experiences on stage include having her wig pulled on a wedding scene, costume strap breaking during her big number and a pianist becoming sick at the piano and having to run out in the middle of a number.

She enjoys living in New York, but still loves her native state of North Carolina and returns home to visit her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Alton Gardner, as often as possible between theatre engagements.

In closing, she said, "Let me pass on some advice given to me by a voice teacher—'If you can honestly be happy doing anything else, do not go into show business.'"

"When you decide that this is to be your life's work, you must be ready and willing to put up with many disappointments and also willing to 'starve' a while. Many times, I have missed a movie or bought a less expensive dress in order to take a special class or have enough money for more publicity pictures.

"What is seen on the stage is the fun and glamorous part of the business—but there is always a thousand times more hard work involved than meets the eye."

Woman Content To Live Alone Among Evergreens

By DAWN OHRLING

La Grande Observer Writer
LA GRANDE, Ore. (AP) — Gail Vincent, 79, lives alone at a ranch six miles up Ladd Canyon Road, nestled among mountain evergreens.

Her log cabin has no electricity, plumbing or telephone. The road is closed by snow about five months a year.

Mrs. Vincent remembers one winter when she saw no one, but now she has visitors all year long — more than 13 in one day recently.

"I've had everybody but the Pope out here," she said. "People get up here some way or another."

She is often asked if she is afraid of dying alone.

"And I say, well, nobody can help you die. And there's not much danger of my dying, because just as sure as I lie down, somebody's rapping at the door."

Visitors often catch her napping. Looking through a window in her front door, they see a small white-haired woman in patched blue jeans curled on a couch near a wood-burning stove.

On the walls are photographs, a kerosene lantern, cards and a calendar on which Mrs. Vincent writes the names of all her guests.

She has no children. She says she feels as if her visitors are her children. Many of them call her Mountain Grandmother.

"They're always bringing me something — canned fruit, candy and even hot turkey dinners on Thanksgiving," she said.

Many people want advice on things like raising goats and building log cabins.

Gail also corresponds by mail with about 100 people, some of whom she has never met. She got one letter addressed to the Lady on the Mountain in La Grande, Ore.

"My mail helps me live without human contact," she said.

An airplane used to drop her mail during the winter, but now she gets it by snowmobile.

She and her husband came to Ladd Canyon from Pasadena, Calif., in 1937 to locate the 75 acres they had bought sight unseen.

"It seemed like traveling to eternity," she said. "And we had an awful time trying to find the property because people thought we were game wardens."

The Vincents made their second trip to the property in May 1938 and camped near where the cabin is now.

"We woke up in the next morning and there was four inches of snow on the ground, and us in a tent, and me a city girl," Mrs. Vincent said.

She never returned to California to live. She lived in a tent nearly six months while the cabin was being built, doing much of the work on the cabin herself.

"I had a cookstove and had to learn how to make sourdough biscuits and hot-cakes," she said, adding that she also had to change from her vegetarian diet. "Here we had to eat meat and practically whatever we could get."

She and her husband were divorced in 1941, and the cabin and property became hers. She usually spent her summers the cabin and her winters in La Grande. Then, nine years ago, she moved into the cabin permanently.

"It got so the snow was blowing underneath the shakes of the house and I'd have to go up after every snowstorm and carry out the snow, so I just stayed here," she said. "And it's home here."

"I enjoy the fresh air and it doesn't seem as lonely as it is in town, where the trees are barren all winter long."

"I also get more company here than I probably would in town."

When Mrs. Vincent gets lonely in the winter, she puts on her snowshoes or her skis and goes for a walk.

Sometimes she looks into what she calls her "box of precious jewels." It contains souvenirs of friends and of experiences that she remembers in amazing detail.

"I just look into that and bring out a memory that keeps away the loneliness," she said. "The mind controls the body, and you have to control your own mind because it is what upsets you."

She sometimes listens to the radio in the evening. She also enjoys the wild animals, though their numbers are diminishing. "I wash clothes several times a week, stomp them out and hang them upstairs to dry. I feed the chickens and rabbits, rake the yard, carry in the wood, patch clothes and take care of the garden," Mrs. Vincent said. "I only miss not having a vacuum cleaner and washing machine."

One of my kids had an English assignment the other night to do a paper on "Things My Mother Taught Me."

I couldn't help but be flattered as he wrote feverishly in his notebook for the better part of 45 minutes. When he was finished, I asked, "Do you mind if I read it?"

He shrugged, "Okay. If you want to, but don't get it dirty."

Things My Mother Taught Me
Logic: "If you fall off that swing and break your neck, you are not going to the store with me."

Medicine: "If you don't stop crossing your eyes, they are going to freeze that way!" (There is no cure, no telethon, and no relief for frozen eyes.)

Optimism: "You are going to enjoy yourself at that birthday party or I am going to break every bone in your body."

Philosophy: "You show me a boy with a pet snake and I'll show you a boy who wants his mother dead!"

ESP: "Put on the sweater! Don't you think I know when you are cold?"

Science: "You put your hand out of the car window and it'll blow off." (Gravity: What goes out, must blow off.)

Insight: "Do you realize that 50 million children in southeast Asia consider broccoli a treat... like ice cream?" (How do you get a broccoli deficiency?)

Finance: "I told you the tooth fairy is writing checks because computerized billing is easier for the IRS."

Ethics: "If you are too busy to take out the garbage, you are too busy to need an allowance."
Genealogy: "Shut that door. Or were you born in a barn?" (You're asking me?)
Suspense: "Can you guess what I found under your bed today?"
Humor: "When that lawn mover cuts off your toes, don't come running to me."

I took off my glasses and put down the paper. Son of a gun. I would have been willing to bet during all those years he hadn't heard a word I said.

Couple Exchanges Vows In Saturday Ceremony

The St. Peter's Missionary Baptist Church was the scene of the candlelight wedding ceremony of Miss Willie Ray Rodgers and Charlie Grimes Saturday at 4:00 p.m.

The double ring ceremony was conducted by the Rev. Elbert Williams. A program of wedding music was presented by Roger Ingram, organist, and Mrs. Raymond William, soloist, who sang, "Because," "We've Only Just Begun" and "The Lord's Prayer."

The church was decorated with green and white decorations. The background was outlined with tall standards of greenery, candelabra with bouquets of white mums and pom poms. A three branched candelabra was used during the ceremony with the bride and bridegroom lighting the outside candles before the ceremony and lighting the center candle after they were pronounced man and wife. At the altar was a profile pte-dieu where the ceremony took place. Pews were marked with white satin bows. The church was enclosed with white satin and an aisle runner was used.

Parents of the bride are Mr. and Mrs. Robert Close of Norfolk, Va., and the bridegroom is the son of Mrs. Mallisa Spain of Greenville.

Given in marriage by her grandfather, Albert Rodgers, the bride wore a formal length white peau de sole gown designed with a high neckline encircled with ruffled pleated organza. The bodice featured a bib effect of re-embroidered alencon lace outlined in the pleated organza. Matching alencon lace with satin button closures trimmed the long fitted Victorian sleeves edged in pale pink. Panels of the re-embroidered lace extended down the gown front and bordered the attached chapel length train over pink and white illusion.

Miss Patricia Winslow of Norfolk, Va., was maid of honor. She wore a formal length turquoise dress of polyester knit with a capelet. She carried a classic mixed nosegay of carnations, daisies and baby's breath tied with azalea pink and white bows.

Bridesmaids were Miss Christine Rodgers, cousin of the bride, Miss Paulet Taylor, niece of the bridegroom, both of Greenville, Miss Cora Grimes, cousin of the bride, of New Haven, Conn., and Miss Patricia Taylor, niece of the bridegroom, of Greenville. They wore formal length gowns of polyester and nylon fashioned with an open jacket and puffed sleeves edged in white rickrack. They carried classic mixed nosegays identical to that of the maid of honor with nile green bows.

The flower girl was Miss Monique Duncan of Greenville. She wore a formal length pink polyester dress with pink and green ribbons in her hair. She carried a basket of rose petals.

Montez Boyd of Greenville was ring bearer and carried a white satin pillow.

The best man was Willie Reid of Greenville and ushers were Robert Handy of Winterville, Leon Teale of Greensboro, nephew of the bridegroom, Wayne Taylor, brother of the bridegroom, and Jimmie Sutton, both of Greenville.

The mother of the bride wore a long jacket gown of aqua polyester knit. The mother of the bridegroom selected a formal length jacket gown of aqua blue. The mothers were remembered with white carnation corsages.

Have you thought about the way you will be measuring and cooking in your kitchen once the United States goes on the metric system?

A program of "Metrics in the Kitchen" was given here Wednesday by Mrs. Ila Parker, home economics extension agent from Martin County.

"The metric system is an international way of measuring which was begun in 1790 by the French. In 1896, the U.S. Congress passed a law that said the International Metrics System was legal in this country."

"Ninety per cent of the world use the metrics system. Canada and Australia have recently started using the system and England is in the transition. At the present time, the United States in the awareness stage," Mrs. Parker said.

The seven basic units of the metric are: meter is length, kilogram is mass or weight, second is time, ampere is electric current, kelvin or Celsius is temperature, mole is amount of substance, and candela is luminous intensity. Two supplementary units are radian, which is plane angle, and steradian, which is solid angle.

"The four common units in the metrics we will be using will be meter, gram, liter and Celsius. All of these will apply in the kitchen. The liter measures volume. Some of the ways it will affect the kitchen will be utensils, measuring cups and spoons, pan sizes, temperature, recipes and appliances."

"Some of the reasons for changing to the metric system are—it's the most logical and easiest system to use. It will benefit industrial and commercial users for improving existing practices, and will simplify math and science taught in our schools," she continued.

"In 1960, the General Conference adopted an extensive revision and simplification of the metric system. The name Le Systeme Interional d'Unites (International System of Units) with the international abbreviation SI, was adopted for this modernized system. Further improvements in and additions to SI were made by the General Conference in 1964, 1968 and 1971.

"The Metric System's structure is very easy to understand. Calculations with metric units require simple conversion by adding zeros or by moving decimal points to the right or left, thereby eliminating fractions and simplifying the mathematics of measure," she said in closing.

Fashion & Sew

Designer

Revolutionizes Home Sewing

By HELEN LINDER
Fashion Editor

"I am so busy adjusting my patterns, that I can hardly find time to sew" a typical home seamstress said to Dusan Mrak.

In the closets or work baskets of every home seamstress lurk half-finished garments: a dress with no hem on it, a blouse with sleeves basted but not sewn, pants cut out but never attempted. These are fitting failures, garments that the potential wearer tried on, sighted and took off with a hopeless shrug. Perhaps she ripped out the seams and tried again. Perhaps her patience wore thin when she again tried it on and it just didn't fit.

impressed this writer most is, when he demonstrated to me the innermost secrets of the garment industry, was of how simple it is to create fashions at home by copying almost any famous designer with the aid of the basic pre-fitted sheath pattern. Look at the illustration of an elegant design in your Sunday paper, which in ready-to-wear may cost anything from $80. to $165. Mrak demonstrated how any novice or advanced seamstress can make it in less than 15 minutes, at a cost of less than $20. in her exact individual size and shape.

Mrak's lectures are loaded with fun and laughter. He would call two ladies to the podium, one an average figure, the other as difficult as possible to fit. He asks the first one, "Have you ever made a pattern - for yourself from scratch?" The answer of course is "No." Then he continues, "Now you will make one in 20 minutes for this lady here." Signs are heard from the audience - "this we must see" - But she makes it - for the first time in her life. The same lady comes back the following day wearing finished garment, smiling happily.

Dusan Mrak, head of the American Fashion Institute, a New York based firm which was founded in 1968 said - "It seems that most of the giants in the home sewing industry try d a m n h a r d, to make her sewing efforts as difficult as possible. It starts with the pattern. When she opens the envelope, she finds 12 to 18 pattern parts in it, every one of which has to be proportionately adjusted. That in itself is virtually impossible, but she tries for 4 to 6 hours, and ends up with a mess. By the time she thinks it is ready to cut on fabric, she is fed up and has no will or desire to complete the garment. She is constantly faced with buying cheap fabrics with the thought in mind "If it doesn't come out right, it won't cost too much."

We know very well, that if she were sure the pattern will fit, she would buy better quality fabrics to make longer lasting and better looking garments."

Mrak lectures to thousands and thousands of women each year on his US and international lecture tours. He speaks six languages and his demonstrations include some of the most amazing short cuts and easy sew techniques. One that

As Pattern designer Dusan Mrak began his technical career as an advisor with the manufacturers of Mercedes-Benz. Today he is director and founder of the American Fashion Institute in New York City. His jump from cars to designing patterns for women's fashions is an interesting story. In 1961 he accepted a position with a South African firm in Frankfurt, Germany and one of his assignments was to promote women's fashions. This work took him to some of Europe's most famous Fashion houses, and became intrigued with the pattern - making techniques of Europe's leading designers.

By 1972 Mrak perfected a simplified pattern-making and fashion-designing method that can be quickly mastered by anyone capable of following easy step by step directions.

Knowing that all home sewers could not come to New York City for study and training, he decided to take his pattern concepts to the women themselves. Now with a crew of trained seamstresses he goes all over the United States promoting his techniques and making his new sewing ideas available to everyone.

She states: "In 3 hours I have learned more with Dusan than in all my 20 years of home sewing. Where were you all this time?"

Mrak's pattern making techniques enable anyone to make exactly fitted pattern in 20 minutes. He has found the answer to the problem of finding patterns to fit the myriad of shapes and sizes which people come in. His method is unique and designed to be used by 12 year olds and up.

He further states, "Most women have $ 60 to $ 150 worth of standard size patterns at home. Half of them have never been even used."

With his method - you never need to buy another pattern again!

This unique sewing approach will be a stimulus to the entire home sewing industry. Most important, Mrak says, if a woman is able to make beautifully fitting, up-to-the-minute fashions, she will add immeasurably to the pleasure and satisfaction she takes in home sewing.

"Let MAGIC-FIT PATTERN do MAGIC for YOU."

She does believe in reincarnation and says of Ladd Canyon: "I think I've lived here before.

Only Say 'Hello' On Telephone

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1975 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd., Inc.

DEAR ABBY: Isn't it true that the original sin was sexual intercourse? And doesn't it say in the Bible that Jesus was conceived "immaculately," meaning that he was conceived without sexual intercourse?

H.J. IN N.C.
The original sin was eating the forbidden fruit in the Garden of Eden.

The terms, "Virgin Birth" and "Immaculate Conception" are commonly confused. The Virgin Birth refers to the miraculous conception of Jesus.

The Immaculate Conception applies to MARY, the mother of Jesus, because she was conceived without the original sin on her soul. It is NOT the same as the Virgin Birth.

DEAR ABBY: Will you please remind your readers that when they, or their children answer the telephone, to say only, "Hello"?

Some children are instructed to answer with, "Smith's residence, Mary speaking." Or if they have a housekeeper, she is told to answer with, "Smith's residence." Some even answer with their telephone number.

Without realizing it, they give too much information to a stranger who could use it for potentially dangerous purposes.

When you answer the telephone, and the party on the other end asks, "What number is this?" DO NOT disclose your number. Instead, ask, "What number did you call, please?"

It is best when answering a telephone to simply say, "Hello," and if the caller does not identify himself immediately—hang up.

By crosschecking numbers, addresses and the names of children, criminals can gain valuable access to the family's comings and goings, with possible harm to their children while they are away from home.

Never tell a stranger that a member of the family is "out of town," away from the house or when he or she will return.

MRS. H.E.I.
DEAR MRS. I.: Thank you for some excellent suggestions.

DEAR ABBY: This may sound silly to you, but my problem is my name. My mother can't seem to remember it. My name is Elaine and I am 13-years-old. I have two older sisters, Judy who is 16 and lives at home, and Shelly, who is 20 and away at college.

First my mother calls me "Shelly," then she calls me "Judy," and finally she gets around to calling me by my right name. This makes me feel like nothing.

It really bugs me.

ELAINE

DEAR ELAINE: If it's any comfort to you, you are not alone. Mothers get into the habit of calling off the names of their children (usually starting with the eldest) before they hit the right one. Don't feel slighted. It's not intentional.

CONFIDENTIAL TO THOSE WHO INQUIRED: A reader signed, "Why Not Take All Of Me?" wanted to know if there was some way he could leave all usable parts of his body after death—not only his eyes and kidneys.

Yes: Write to The Living Bank, Box 6725, Houston, Texas 77005, or the Nat'l. Kidney Foundation: 116 East 27 St. N.Y., N.Y. 10016.

They will put you in touch with the nearest organ bank in your community. Also, please be patient. When this hits print, they'll probably get thousands of requests.

Designer Says Hats Give Pants Suit Feminine Touch

By JOY STILLEY

AP Newsfeatures Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Hat designer Jack McConnell, born on Friday the 13th, has 13 letters in his name and says the number 13 has been connected with most of the good things in his life.

"I arrived in New York on the 13th of September, with not much more than $13 in my pocket," recalls the native of Tennessee, who has lost little of his southern drawl since that day in the '40s.

In fact, he specialized in southern accents as an actor in radio shows when he first came to Manhattan. Although he has always been interested in athletics and played professional basketball, his first love was the theater — until he embarked by chance on a career in millinery design.

"From radio serials I went into real life drama, three years and one day in the Navy. When I was stationed in Staten Island I was seeing a girl in the fashion industry who made hats," he relates. "I was going to visit an aunt and wanted to take her a hat. I decided if my friend could make hats, so could I."

"I went to 38th Street (New York's millinery district) and bought a frame, satin, a red rose and a navy plume," he continues. "That hat never got to Tennessee. A lady saw it and wanted to buy it. I sold it — for $3.50."

When McConnell got out of service he went into millinery designing, learning by making model hats for the late famed milliner Laddie Northridge. For a time he did custom work but since 1960 has been in the wholesale field.

"To be right a hat has to have the same personality as the woman who wears it," advises the designer, tall and distinguished looking with a mustache and small gray beard. "A feminine type would look ridiculous in a flamboyant hat and, conversely, a little hat would be wrong for the lady who is outspoken, who has a strong personality."

You can't pick a style by looking at other women or at photographs in magazines, explains McConnell, who says lifestyle, age, figure, facial features and especially the length of the neck must all be taken into consideration in choosing millinery.

"A woman with a long neck can wear brims that come down," he points out, "but a short-necked woman, if you put a cloche on her she looks like she's under a haystack."

When trying on hats, he advises, you should not only look in the mirror while sitting but "get up and walk away, turn and walk towards the mirror to see if the proportions and balance are right. And pay attention to how it looks in the back."

McConnell, who is already thinking toward spring, keeps in touch with what all the French and American dress designers are doing, since hats are a part of the whole fashion picture.

"Hemlines, waist, loose or clinging styles, capes, wide lapels, hair styles all have to be considered. I don't think fashion should dictate but you have to learn how to apply it to the individual."

An advocate of the romantic touch, the designer particularly enjoys working with feathers, which he says are extremely durable, and he sews a tiny red feather as an insignia into each of his creations.

Tastes vary in different parts of the country, says McConnell, who travels extensively making personal appearances in stores and serving as commentator for fashion shows, with Texans "the most outgoing, adventurous people I've run into, anywhere. They're not afraid to speak out — to wear rollers, big brims. New Englanders are the most conservative."

He approves of pants worn with hats, which he says gives them the feminine quality they need. "A beret or fedora just finishes off a pants suit."

He does not like "over-matching" and detests hats made out of the fabric of the garment. It can be the same color but a different texture, says McConnell, who never sketches his designs.

"You can sketch the most beautiful hat in the world and it won't always work. I start with the materials that are available and from the feel of them and looking at them you know what you want to do. Maybe you have a beautiful piece of silk that suggests a turban, or a velvet or shantung that would make an effective stitched brim."

Your Daily HOROSCOPE

from the CARROLL RIGHTER INSTITUTE

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Beneath all the emotionalism and martyr moods there is considerable opportunity today to work out from under tensions and to accomplish a great deal. Be objective and consider problems as opportunities to prove how well you can handle them. Do not indulge in self-pity.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Do those things at home that will create harmony and increase happiness of all. Plan new enterprises that will bring great success.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Get out to some place of inspiration where you can renew your mind with finer things and plan a more ideal future.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Finances are on your mind and you can think out better ways to success early and start wheels rolling in right direction.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) Don't get so bogged down with worry and problems you fail to see the opportunities to advance that surround you.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Find some way to step out of all that dull doldrum existence and find better ways to live more inspirationally. Be optimistic.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Steer clear of gossips and pessimists and concentrate on cherished aims and the best way to attain them. Postpone socials.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Do nothing that can hurt others, or there could be serious repercussions. Get into some kind of philanthropic work.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) You can plan for more interesting circumstances later and make big headway as soon as delays are overcome.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Use good judgment today since your hunches are way off base and could get you in hot water. Plan success with orthodox methods.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Don't take out your anger on a partner, but get at the root of things and clear up the matter right. Keep promises wisely.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Get at those tasks ahead of you although you feel annoyed; you will soon be on even keel again. Show appreciation.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Others are not in the mood to join with you at recreations, so either go out alone, or see what is wrong and clear it up.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY... he or she will be one of those interesting young people who will always have to complain before doing anything, although perfectly capable of doing things well, so teach early to get out of this habit by putting your foot down. This valuable lesson will save your progeny from many a pitfall in life and bring fine success. Give good spiritual training early, too.

FORECAST FOR MONDAY, SEPT. 29, 1975

Your Daily HOROSCOPE

from the CARROLL RIGHTER INSTITUTE

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Start the week right by accepting whatever obstacles that are keeping you from getting ahead. Perfect what you are working on so later you will have greater success. Be patient.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) There could be a hold-up on matters you have counted on, but it is best you keep busy with other activities.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Listen carefully to what an associate has to say because if you misunderstand this person there could be trouble.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) You may begin the new week without the data you need, but later you can obtain the necessary information. Be logical.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) You are in a self-pitying mood and this could prove destructive, so count your blessings and be thankful.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Change conditions about you so that you can have more success and happiness. Show more devotion to mate at this time.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Now is the time to hold steadfast to ideas that will help you gain your personal goals. Sidestep one who gossips.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Showing others you are a good citizen is important as the new week gets underway. Don't neglect to pay your bills.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Engaging in new interests at this time can be dangerous. A new contact who is overly dynamic should be avoided.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Keep promises you have made even though you are tempted to change your mind. Don't be suspicious of others.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Inquire of allies what is expected of you and then you can proceed and do things right. Think philosophically.

Russians Veiw U. S. Exhibit; Mixed Reaction

By BARRY JAMES

MOSCOW (UPI) — "We have seen how capitalism is rotting," a visitor wrote, "but with what a sweet smell."

The writer was a Soviet citizen summing up his reaction to an exhibit in Moscow of American furnishings and home technology.

His and other entries in the comments book provide an unusual glimpse of attitudes in this consumer-starved society toward the richer American way of life.

Many writers expressed incredulity.

"Are common people really able to live like this?" was typical.

The answer is probably not. The exhibit, which so far has been seen by more than 600,000 persons in three Soviet cities, features furniture that primarily reflects middle and upper middle class tastes. But some appliances, such as a computerized kitchen range, still are not in most American homes.

The exhibit will visit another three cities for six more months. It provides a rare chance for dialogue between Soviets and the Russian-speaking American guides.

After listening to frank talk on anything from women's lib to exiled author Alexander I. Solzhenitsyn, not all visitors were pleased.

One described the guides as "girls prattling propaganda."

But most of the comments were favorable to both the exhibit and the guides.

"It raised my spirits. How one would like to live!" wrote one visitor.

"I strongly envy you," wrote another. To this remark someone else had appended, "Envy is not only a vice, but swinishness."

Some comments were morose.

To one entry in large letters saying, "I want to go to America," another added, "Ass."

A professor complained that the exhibit was poorly advertised, and that he heard about it only from the Voice of America.

Beneath, a note signed "student" read:

"Dear Professor. One should listen to Soviet radio more often."

Several remarks hinted at sour grapes:

"But we live better."

"Furniture like this we don't even sell in the secondhand store."

"We also have it good — nothing special."

"America is fine," wrote one true Marxist, "but under communism it will be even better."

Someone added, "Nowhere is it better under communism." A few pages were ripped out, including one with this message: "We would like to see not only your exhibition, but a copy of your constitution as well."

After the page was removed, the author handed one guide a copy of his message wrapped around a chocolate bar.

A woman wrote of the children's room, "There were no tanks or guns — that's great."

And a student wrote of one guide: "Caroline is very nice."

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) You may want to run off and have fun and leave important duties behind you, but this would be foolish of you.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Some recreation you desire is fine, provided you don't empty your wallet. Be sure to take needed health treatments.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY... he or she will be able to solve almost anything of a mechanical nature, but if your progeny gets involved in emotional affairs, there could be headaches. Teach to be objective. There's a deep spiritual nature here.

"The Stars impel, they do not compel." What you make of your life is largely up to YOU!

SHOWTIME

For The Week Of September 28-October 4, 1975

A Real 'Winner'

CARSON MARKS 13TH ANNIVERSARY—Johnny Carson, who runs the gamut from skydiving to serious interviews for "The Tonight Show Starring Johnny Carson," celebrates the 13th anniversary of his late-night NBC-TV entertainment series with a special two-hour colorcast Wednesday, Oct. 1 (11:30 p.m.-1:30 a.m.). Moments from past "Tonight" shows pictures above include: Carson with Groucho Marx in 1962; Carson pitching a baseball at Yankee Stadium, also 1962; Carson with Miss Vicki and Tiny Tim after the wedding which took place on "The Tonight Show" in 1969; and Carson completing a skydiving demonstration in 1968.

A winning combination of 'slap-stix' comedy, wild, zany conversation and contemporary music has been the key to the success of "The Tonight Show" Starring Johnny Carson, which celebrates its 13th anniversary Wednesday, Oct. 1. There will be a special two-hour colorcast that night, 11:30 p.m. to 1:30 a.m., on NBC Channel 6-7.

"I remember the night I first went on," says Johnny Carson, host of the most successful and longest running late-night entertainment series in the history of network television. "A friend said to me the show might last one, two or even five years. We laughed at the thought it could last possibly that long.

"Even though I'd rather entertain than present any kind of 'message,' just look at all the authors, scientists, writers and politicians we've had on the show. I try to make people laugh and, in a way, that is social significance, too. Laughter is something we should never be without."

What has been the toughest thing about the show? Carson said: "I think one of the most difficult things is to keep one's energy level. That's not only a lot of air time but a lot of 'homework' time on subjects up for discussion."

In 13 years there have been many changes in what subjects can be discussed and what words can and cannot be used.

"I recall very well that at one point we couldn't talk about 'pot' or make any reference to it. I don't know when all that changed, but one day I did a joke about it and all of a sudden other previous taboos were gone. You couldn't use the word 'hooker' and now we can discuss any subject as long as it's done with good taste," Carson said.

Ed McMahon and Doc Severinsen, who has been with Johnny since he became "The Tonight Show" host Oct. 1, 1962, will be on hand Wednesday night for some reminiscing.

Also, there will be film clips from memorable shows of past seasons, including scenes with such personalities as Burt Reynolds, Art Carney, Com DeLuise, Cloris Leachman, Bob Hope, Dean Martin, George Gobel, Jack Webb and Mel Brooks.

Taped sequences include: a tie-cutting sequence with Carson and McMahon; a series of TV commercial blackouts; the "Dog Follies"; stunts which involve Carson and a watermelon, in ear pulling, head butting and a 16-foot fall, and "The Year 2,000" skit with Carson, McMahon and Doc Severinsen.

CBS Airs "Fear On Trial"

"Fear on Trial," based on John Henry Faulk's book of the same title, which airs Thursday, Oct. 2, on CBS-TV and Ch. 3n-9-11 (9 to 11 p.m.), is more than just another spectacular special to many of those involved in its production.

First, there's the CBS Television Network. In the mid-50s, the radio-television industry was riddled by the Communists witch-hunts of the era. WCBP Radio, flagship of CBS in New York, fired an up-and-coming young broadcasting entertainer, John Henry Faulk, who had been unjustly accused by a group of self-appointed vigilantes of having Communist sympathies.

Now, some 15 years later, CBS in essence will be parading its own skeletons - hidden away in its closets - in full view of the public in the special dramatizing Faulk's real-life story.

Second, TV producers David Susskind and Mark Goodson portray themselves in "Fear on Trial," re-creating their real-life appearances as witnesses for Faulk in the court action.

Third, there's Bruce Geller, an actor who will be reliving a portion of his father's life in the television film.

Geller's late father, New York State Supreme Court Justice Abraham N. Geller, was the presiding judge in the 1962 trial in which famed attorney Louis Nizer argued Faulk's case in the libel suit that resulted in a record-breaking judgement and effectively exposed the so-called blacklisting practice.

"I know my father, who had quite a liberal attitude, bent over backwards not to be unfair to the defendant," says Geller. "In so doing, he worried that he might be too harsh with Faulk's side."

Geller's regret is that his father did not live to see himself portrayed on the screen - by his own son.

SCOTT STARS—George C. Scott stars as attorney Louis Nizer in "Fear On Trial," a two-hour, made-for-television film, Thursday, Oct. 2 (9-11 p.m.) on Channel 3N-9-11, about the blacklisting of radio entertainer John Henry Faulk in the late 1950s and his libel suit against AWARE, Inc., in which he was represented by Nizer.

League Schedule

Following is a basic program schedule for colorcasts of Major League Baseball's League Championships on NBC-TV starting Saturday, Oct. 4. The League Championships are a 3-out-of-5 series. The winners meet in the World Series beginning Saturday, Oct. 11.

NBC-TV will be divided into two regions for the simultaneous colorcasts of the American and National League games scheduled for this date.

If the League Championship series continues on Wednesday, Oct. 8, the same schedule as Tuesday will prevail unless one playoff series is concluded, in which case the remaining game will be colorcast nationally instead of regionally. The Thursday games, if necessary, will be played in daytime hours. One at 2 p.m., the other at 3:30 p.m.

SATURDAY, OCT. 4

1 p.m. American League West (Oakland Athletics or Kansas City Royals) at American League East (Boston Red Sox or Baltimore Orioles).

The Captain's Secret

Considering children intelligent human beings is one of the reasons for the tremendous success of CBS-TV's "Captain Kangaroo," which celebrates its 21st anniversary Friday, Oct. 3. (The highly popular show is seen Monday-Friday, 8 to 9 a.m.)

That's the opinion of Bob Keeshan, the man who gave up his desire to be a lawyer in exchange for the Captain, a TV figure who has been a part of millions of children's lives.

"That philosophy is very much the same as it was twenty years ago," Keeshan said, "And with that in mind, it is our responsibility to cultivate the children's potential of good taste."

"I guess there are several factors that would be responsible for the longevity of the show," he continues. "The principal one is that it is not going into its twentieth year except for you and me. Statistically it is, but to a child who is the prime audience for the program, and for many thousands of others, it went on the air for the first time this morning! For others who are now six or seven years of age, and just about to grow out of it, it's been on for maybe three or four years, five at the most."

"So this constant turnover, this constant renewal of audience has a lot to do with it."

"Secondly, we're a show that is very low key, so I guess we're able to sustain ourselves a lot better than a primetime show because they have to come on a lot harder to be a show rather than a visit."

"When we first thought of the show," Keeshan adds, "we thought of the place where we were as a museum, although we never refer to it as that. We thought of it as a place where we could show all kinds of things and we thought of the Captain as a guide. We wanted to give him rank so he became a Captain, and because he had large pockets in his costume we thought his name should be Captain Kangaroo."

Keeshan says he had "every intent" to be an attorney, but he met Bob Smith who was about to start a radio program in 1947 called "Howdy Doody."

"At that time, no professional actor would become involved in television because it had no money. In fact, when our network went on the air in 1947, the NBC Network — the entire network — was New York, Philadelphia and Syracuse. So as far as most actors were concerned there wasn't much of a future in TV."

"So I had the opportunity to bring prizes on the show for children, handle props, and then they put a clown's costume on me and in a little while they put make-up on me, and I became the first Clarabelle on "Howdy

PUPPETS AND CREATOR — Puppeteer Cosmo Allegretti displays some of his creations — Mr. Moose, Bunny Rabbit, Word Bird and Homer the Dog — the friends of millions of young tots on "Captain Kangaroo," award-winning children's series which celebrates its 21st anniversary on Friday, Oct. 3 (8-9 a.m.) on CBS-TV. Allegretti has been with the program since its first day in 1955.

Doody." TV sort of grew up under all of us and by 1951 we spanned the country and all those other actors suddenly wanted to become a part of the industry. And there I was, established in it!" he exclaims.

One of Keeshan's most memorable experiences involves his daughter, Maeve. "She came into Manhattan to the circus. When she came into the studio, I was still in costume. She crawled up in my lap and we talked a bit. . . like any three year old. . . then I went to my dressing room."

"When I came out in my street clothes, my daughter said,

"Daddy, you should have been here. You just missed the Captain."

The diminutive (5 feet, 2 inches) blonde from Texas juggles a tight schedule between her role as daughter to "Bronk" star Jack Palace and acting as a hairdresser to such notable personalities as Robert Blake, Helen Reddy and Herb Alpert.

"I love having two careers," Miss Ousley says, "because I love to keep busy. While I'm studying acting as a full-time career, being a hairdresser helps me keep things in perspective — and pay for the acting lessons."

In "Bronk," Miss Ousley's character of Ellen Bronkov was injured in an automobile accident that also widowed the detective. "Bronk's relationship with Ellen shows a facet of the man apart from his career," she says, "and there is a great deal of caring and tenderness between them."

Miss Ousley, who has been studying acting for several years says, "This is my best role so far. No matter how much success I might have as an actress, though, I don't want my life to change. I want to feel free to be myself, whether as an actress or a hairdresser."

Comedienne Totie Fields includes a discussion of "General Hospital" in her nightclub act.

'Old Timers' Night Set

Eubie Blake is a 92-year-old pep pill. He's also one of the most famous ragtime pianist-composers of all time. And as the audience soon discovers, to see him and hear him, is to bring back many wonderful memories. It all happens Sunday, Sept. 28, at 7:30 p.m., on UNC-TV.

Eubie Blake was born in 1883 and while nobody knows if he invented ragtime piano, there's no one around to say he didn't. Hearing him play "Charleston Rag" (which he composed in 1899 at age 16) is all the proof one needs. Watch him play and one knows his fingers don't know how old they are. He's incredible!

He chatters, chuckles and chortles his way through this concert, obviously loving every minute of it. He sings "As Long as You Live, You're Gonna Be My Baby" to his wife in the audience. His voice is clear and strong.

Mr. Blake is one of the four vaudeville performers who teamed up in 1921 to create "Shuffle Along" — the musical that brought black artists back to Broadway for the first time in ten years. It's a delight to hear his "Shuffle Along" medley which includes Harry Truman's favorite song. "I'm Just Wild about Harry." The Old Timers' Night audience goes wild for Eubie Blake.

He closes with "memories of You"—getting some classy back-up from another energetic and ebullient soul, 80-year-old Arthur Fiedler. "Mr. Pops" further adds to the festivities with a wild and happy audience sing-along that includes "I Want a Girl" and "Those Were the Days."

Cher Salutes All 'Kids'

Cher offers a show to enrapture kids of all ages, with guest stars The Hudson Brothers, illusionist Mark Wilson, and Bob Keshan, who is beginning his twentieth season as the popular "Captain Kangaroo," on "Cher," Sunday, Sept. 28, 8 to 9 p.m., on CBS-TV and Channel 9-11.

Cher opens the show with the "Sesame Street Theme," and sings "When You Wish Upon a Star" to her daughter Chastity. The Hudson Brothers sing "Lonely School Year" and join Cher to perform "Nothing Nicer Than a Nonesense Song."

In comedy sequences, Cher returns as her popular Saturday-night-at-home character to introduce her new watchdog, which seems to do all its watching with its eyes closed. Cher plays a television executive interviewing Captain Kangaroo for a children's television series, and joins Bill, Brett and Mark Hudson to portray court jesters trying to amuse a princess (Chastity) who doesn't laugh.

Captain Kangaroo introduces Cher and Chastity to the dumbest animal in the barnyard, the Stupidillo, played by Bill, Mark and Brett Hudson, and Mark Wilson has Cher hanging in the air in an amazing display of "magic."

Joining Frankie and Mike are comedian George Kirby, actress Brett Somers, game show host Adam Wade, feminist Gloria Steinem, Congresswoman Bella Abzug and a "Pop-Top" fashion show.

Author Pop-Top Terp shows his line of fashions made from the snap tabs of soda cans as George, Brett and Adam do the modeling. Congresswoman Abzug is presented with a stylish hat made entirely of snap tabs.

George sings and dances to "Shanty Town" and discusses some of his pet peeves including backseat drivers. He delights with his impressions of Nat King Cole, Joe Louis, and Edgar Buchana.

Brett reveals that her daughter has been dating a man she refers to as "The Wrong Mister Right," and tells of her son's experiences at a "fat camp." Brett, who has been taking singing lessons, joins with Mike and Frankie for a rendition of "I Love To Dance."

Adams sings "Tell Me" and hosts a Mike Douglas Show version of his popular game show, "Musical Chairs." He also tells how he became the first black TV game show host and shows a clip from the program.

Frankie sings a medley of "Save It For Me," and "Don't Worry 'Bout Me (Opus 17)" and introduces the Four Seasons who play "Love's Theme."

COP AND ROBBER — Cliff Gorman stars as a policeman who, with a fellow officer pulls a $10,000,000 heist in "Cops and Robbers," a comedy to be colorcast on "NBC Monday Night at the Movies," Monday, Sept. 29 (9-11 p.m.) on Channel 6-7.

Two Policemen Become Robbers

Cliff Gorman and Joseph Bologna star as two New York City policemen who pull a multi-million - dollar Wall Street caper, hoping their jobs as cops will protect them in "Cops and Robbers," a comedy on "NBC Monday Night at the Movies" October 4, 9 to 11 p.m., on Channel 6-7.

The New York Times praised the film as "a funny, exciting, exceptionally intelligent caper movie ... uncommonly well acted."

Tom and Joe (Gorman and Bologna), hardworking and spradically corrupt cops, feel uncomfortably tied to their pregnant wives and suburban backyard swimming pools.

Yearning for a richer life, they decide to become crooked and begin making plans and connections.

On a day when lower Manhattan is distracted by a ticker tape parade honoring the first astronauts to land on the moon, the pair pull off a $10 million heist in negotiable bonds and outwit the syndicate, almost without trying.

Comfortable Situations

It is the nature of homosapiens to make every situation as comfortable as possible for itself. Actors, in spite of what some producers may say, are human and follow this age-old rule on the road, and in Hollywood, on the sound stages of the studios.

The cast of "Medical Center," the hour-long series now in its seventh year on CBS-TV and seen Mondays, 10 to 11 p.m., have had the past six years to add comfort to their working. For stars Chad Everett and James Daly, this includes lavish mobile dressing rooms, which are moved from location to location, as the needs of shooting a television series dictate.

Most of the filming is confined to the interior sets of the large hospital at which Drs. Gannon and Lochner practice their specialties of saving lives through medical skill and compassionate natures. For this purpose, the huge Stages 18 and 19 at the MGM studios have been combined to accomodate the hospital set.

Into this vast area are moved the portable dressing rooms when interior hospital scenes are scheduled. Also furnished is the usual coffee urn, with occasional "sinks" added by the production company. But this is not enough for the "Medical Center" crew.

A fully equipped kitchen has been built into one corner of Stage 18. The furnishings look as if they had been resurrected from a discarded kitchen set of a 1930s movie, but the stove cooks, the refrigerator cools, and the sink drains. What more could a bunch of hungry actors and film technicians ask for?

"A cook," Everett readily acknowledges.

The property man of the show, whose self-appointed duty is to keep the area cleaned up, agrees that a chef would be nice, but a dishwasher would be better.

Who is the best cook on the set of "Medical Center?" Audrey Totter, who plays Nurse Wilcox, gets that distinction, attesting to the value of the years she refrained from acting in favor of raising a family and sharpening her culinary skills.

Everett is not a contender for that title as his contribution to the gastronomical fare on the set is limited to making coffee in the up-to-date coffeemaker, which looks out of place in the midst of the appliances of a much earlier vintage. And, how is his coffee? "Well, we haven't had complaints yet," Everett modestly admits.

REJECTS CHANGE

In a recent appearance on "AM America," the producers of the controversial animated - live action film, "Coonskin," Al Ruddy and Ralph Bakshi, and one of its stars, Charles Gordon, a Pulitzer Prize-winning black playwright, defended the film against charges of racism by the Congress of Racial Equality.

Gordon said he worked with CORE during the 1960's and that he "would never put (his) hands into any film that (he) would consider to be derogatory."

COUNT DRACULA? — Jerry Stiller, as Gus, is only mildly intimidated by Jimmy Baio, as the young Nick Vitale, in "Joe and Sons," Tuesdays (8:30-9 p.m.) on Channel 9-11.

Different Kind Of 'Egg Head'

"The softest-boiled egghead in the business."

That's the way one newspaper described outside intellectual Dr. Jacob Bronowski, the mathematician whose passion for the human equation produced "The Ascent of Man." The 13-part TV series introduces viewers to some distant relatives who thought and invented their way through two million years of cultural evolution.

The eminent scientist-philosopher's "personal view" of the high points in that evolution are seen again on Tuesdays, at 9 p.m. on PBS.

Seen in England before Bronowski's death in August, 1974, the series climaxed the bespectacled humanist's use of mass media to "cut the cackle," as he puts it, and democratize science for the benefit of cab stars as an opera singer who is haunted by the sudden and mysterious appearance of her husband, a man she believed to have died years ago. (90 min) drivers as well as culture vultures.

(6,7) Tonight Show: With Johnny Carson and guest Dr. William Nolen. (90 min)

"To watch this richly stored mind unloading itself... is a weekly treat I wouldn't willingly forego," a receiver wrote after seeing the BBC-Time-Life Films series.

And viewers, already charmed by the grey-haired Bronowski's avuncular quality as he de-mystified things scientific, first on radio and then on British TV programs like "Brains Trust," agreed.

Characteristically, Bronowski, who 'fizzed with ideas,' had rejected the initial concept of "The Ascent of Man" as a sort of elitist science parallel to Lord Clark's "Civilization" series. He refined the subject in typically human terms: "a philosophy, rather than a history, and a philosophy of nature rather than of science... what used to be called Natural Philosophy."

Audiences called it uniquely entertaining information.

The Washington Post said it was "an enormous undertaking... a marvously ambitious, superlative film series"; another reviewer termed it "the most colossal concept I have ever seen on television."

William Espy, "Snapper" of the popular CBS-TV daytime drama "The Young and the Restless," is leaving the series to pursue a career in films.

Split-Up Is Professional

Don't waste any tears crying over the split-up of the Stiller & Meara comedy team — this split-up is strictly professional, and Jerry Stiller and Anne Meara couldn't be happier about it.

Their marriage is happier than ever, and their careers are zooming, even though they are not working together at present.

The reason for all this is that Mr. and Mrs. Stiller both are starring in new television series this season.

Stiller is starring with Richard Castellano in the new comedy series, "Joe and Sons," Tuesdays, (8:30 to 9 p.m.) and Miss Meara has her own series, "Kate McShane," Wednesdays, (10 to 11 p.m.) both on CBS-TV.

"Annie and I are right where we want to be, where we planned to be all along," Stiller says. "After all, we're not Siamese twins, we're actors with individual egos; and, as actors, we like to act."

"Our comedy act was a means to an end, really," Stiller continues. "Although we were successful and had a lot of fun, it meant doing a lot more traveling than we wanted to do, and, as I said, we're actors first, and funny second. Anne's series isn't even a comedy — and that's good. An actor doesn't want to be tied down to one type of role forever."

Stiller himself has been able to break out of the comedy shell and prove that, as an actor, he's capable of doing more than standup comedy routines. He received critical praise for his performance in two movies, "The Taking of Pelham One Two Three" and "Airport 1975."

However, Stiller, as one of the funniest comedians in show business, is still being funny. In "Joe and Sons," he plays a bachelor factory-worker whose only problems are getting a date for Saturday night and helping his Pal, Joe (Richard Castellano) give the right advice to his motherless sons.

New Career For Charlie Callas

As a comedian, Charlie Callas is a familiar face to viewers of such talk shows as "The Tonight Show," on which he has made over 50 appearances, and in major nightclubs across the country. As a 'serious actor,' however, it's a new beginning.

Callas appears in a co-starring role on "Switch," starring Robert Wagner and Eddie Albert, which is seen Tuesdays, 9 to 10 p.m., on CBS-TV and Channel 9-11. He plays Malcolm, a small-time con man who is called upon to help Wagner and Albert in their pursuit of swindlers, in the new series.

ZANY DUO — Michael Sarrazin is a cab-driver and Barbra Streisand is a reluctant messenger for the local mob as they try to raise college tuition in "For Pete's Sake," a television premiere on "The ABC Sunday Night Movie," Sunday, Sept. 28 (9-11 p.m.) on Channel 3-5-12.

Here's One For You

Remember those zany, screwball comedies that had you rolling in the aisles - the kind you thought didn't get made any more? Relax, they mae one - "For Pete's Sake," a world television premiere on the ABC Sunday Night Movie airing Sept.

28, 9 to 11 p.m., on Ch. 3-5-12.

The 'Pete' of the title, played by Michael Sarrazin, is a taxi driver, under pressure from his brother and sister-in-law to better himself. He's bright and he dreams of going back to college. Pete's married to Henry (short for Henrietta), played by Barbra Streisand, a woman with only a few loose bolts here and there. She's an eager and aggressive young housewife whose complete self-confidence is completely unjustified.

Pete decides to go back to school, but doesn't have the money. To help him, Henry borrows $3,000 from a Mafia loanshark to invest in pork belly futures on the commodities market. When Henry's money doesn't double as fast as she had hoped, and the Mafia man demands payment, she finds herself embroiled in a madcap series of events that involves her with a motherly Jewish madam, a police dog that reads traffic signs, and a gang of urban cattle rustlers.

Sound corny? It is. Sound like it doesn't make any sense? It doesn't. But it's safe to say that "For Pete's Sake" is one of the funniest, most carefree and enjoyable movies of recent years.

Even critics laughed heartily at the story of shady business in suburbia. The New York Times critic, Vincent Canby, found the film a "boisterously funny old-time farce... the laughs are self-sustaining throughout."

You Can't Rent A "Kojak" Car

For a nation that transports itself mostly on wheels, specifically the automobile, you wouldn't think that one Detroit product was much different from another, but it turns out that's not the case.

When the "Kojak" series traveled to New York City in July to film sequences seen Sundays (9 to 10 p.m.) on CBS Channel 3n-9-11, five cars were transported the 3,000 miles from Hollywood.

"Marlowe" Is 'Late Night Movie'

James Garner and Carroll O'Connor, who stars in the "All in the Family" series, head the cast of "Marlowe," action-packed mystery drama to be presented on "The CBS Late Night Movie" Tuesday, Sept. 30, 11:30 p.m., on Ch. 9-11. Gayle Hunnicutt, Rita Moreno, Sharon Farrell, William Daniels and H. M. Wynant co-star in the film, which is based on Raymond Chandler's novel, "The Little Sister."

Private Investigator Philip Marlowe (Garner) is hired by Orfamay Quest (Miss Farrell) to find her missing brother Orrin (Roger Newman). Marlowe quickly comes across evidence implying blackmail - a series of photographs incriminating Mavis Wald (Miss Hunnicutt) and gangster Sonny Steelgrave (Wynant).

Convinced that Mavis is an innocent tool, Marlowe tries to help but soon becomes involved in a dope racket and chain of murders, arousing the suspicions of police lieutenant Christy French (O'Connor).

Joan Rivers 'Doctored' Her Screenplay

Although he is unaware of it, a Los Angeles doctor is responsible for "The Girl Most Likely To..." airing on the "Wednesday Movie of the Week," Oct. 1, 11:30 p.m., on Channel 3W-5-12.

Some years ago, while a student at an Ivy League college, the doctor was the blind date of a girl named Joan Molinsky, a student at Barnard College for Women. At that time a brunette and more than overly plump, the girl came downstairs to meet her date only to hear him complain loudly to his friend, "Why didn't you tell me?"

This rebuff and many other similar instances flooded over Joan Rivers at a party last fall when she saw the one-time date, now a successful doctor, at a party in Beverly Hills. The popular entertainer-writer, blonde and 30 pounds lighter, was not recognized by the doctor. But she recognized him. (No novice with words, Joan has a degree in English Literature and a Phi Beta Kappa key and has written many comedy routines as well as the Broadway revue, "Fun City," in which she also starred. She also has had two books published and has penned many magazine articles.)

"The Girl Most Likely To..." a comedy in the genre of "Kind Hearts and Coronets," is the result of the chance encounter.

In the film, a college girl suffers one humiliation after another. "That was the story of my college days," says Joan. "I never went to a senior prom, rarely had a date at all. The night I went out with the future doctor we were home by 10 p.m. That was a romance for you," she says.

"It all crystallized in my mind last fall and I'm sure writing the story was a great catharsis for me - better than psychotherapy."

It took Joan a number of years to shed her weight and attain her present slim status along with poise and confidence (becoming a blonde was fast enough). But in "The Girl Most Likely To..." the beautifying process for the girl, Miriam, comes about because of an accident which requires plastic surgery and which results in a new slimmness when she encounters difficulty in eating.

From Fillings To Filming

IN THE BIG INNING—The men of Walnut Grove accept a challenge from the Sleepy Eye Green-Stockings to compete against them in a baseball game in "In The Big Inning" on "Little House on the Prairie" Wednesday, Oct. 1 (8-9 p.m.) on Channel 6-7. A Dancing Domino

"The lowly domino raised to an art form. A ballet of dominoes . . . Dominoes playing music."

That is how Tony Orlando describes the unique feat of an innovative teen-ager, known as the Domino Man, who appears on "Tony Orlando and Dawn," with guest stars Kate Smith and Desmond Wilson, Wednesday, Oct. 1, 8 to 9 p.m., on CBS-TV. The Domino Man is 13-year-old Bob Specia of Broomall, Pa. In his primetime television debut, he demonstrates one of his fantastic constructions involving some 6,000 dominoes lined up in elaborate patterns within a 14 - square - foot area. The dominoes spell out Tony Orlando and Dawn, in script form, on two sides of the square. They march up and down yardstick ramps, turn corners, cross paths, weave in and out of chains of figure - eights and elegant scroll - like designs.

It took young Specia five hours of back-bending toil to set it all up. On the broadcast, the whole construction goes down in less than two minutes.

The predictable behavior of dominoes — when one falls, so go the rest — led to special precautions. Specia's work area was roped off, the radio air conditioning turned down, and guards stationed to ward off anyone who might pass by and create a domino - downing draft.

Specia, from experience, has learned to leave out vital 'trigger' dominoes to protect against premature collapses. "It's fascinating to see them fall, and that's why I wanted it on the show," Orlando said. "Bob is a wizard who's created images and rhythms, like a ballet, with an ordinary object."

Specia got started about two years ago when he set up four boxes of dominoes (28 to a box) and a friend wondered what it would be like to do 'a lot.' So, Specia acquired more dominoes and soon had a steady stream of visitors eager to see their names spelled out amid increasingly complex designs.

Dominoes don't dominate Specia, however. He gets in five hours of practice a day with his swim club, was on the National Merit scholarship list, and plans to study math at the University of Pennsylvania.

An upcoming comedy on NBC-TV's "Little House on the Prairie" (seen Wednesdays, 8 to 9 p.m., on Channel 6-7) was written by a dentist whose whole life changed when he listened to an inner voice that dared him to make a move.

Bill Sandefur, who was born and raised in a small town - Henderson, Ky. - was a successful dentist but he had an urge to be a writer.

"One day I kissed my wife goodbye for the day, went to my office, sat down and listened to myself talk to myself," he says. "I told myself that I wanted very much to be a writer, not a dentist. It was one of those goofy moments when fate grabs you by the neck and changes everything around."

Healing Hands Across The Sea

Emily McLaughlin, who plays Nurse Jessie Brewer on ABC-TV's daytime drama "General Hospital," is taking a buswoman's holiday.

Miss McLaughlin is about to fly 7,000 miles from the "General Hospital" set in Hollywood to London where she will visit the set of another "General Hospital," a British series unassociated with the ABC serial.

"I think it will be fascinating," said Miss McLaughlin, "to compare their approach and production methods with ours."

Miss McLaughlin's stop-over in London is only the first leg of a trip that she has been dreaming of since childhood. "I've wanted to visit Scotland since I was a little girl growing up in White Plains, New York," said Miss McLaughlin, whose ancestors on her father's side of the family are from the tiny village of Argyllshire. "My Dad's family emigrated to America three generations ago, and he used to tell me fascinating stories about Scotland that were told to him by his father."

The talented daytime actress intends to visit Argyllshire while she is in Scotland. "I want to trace my family's origin and visit the towns my ancestors came from. Now that my two sons are grown, it's the first opportunity I've had to just ake off and go."

While there, she intends to pick-up the McLaughlin family tartan for son Robert, 18, and the McKinney tartan for her stepson, 23-year-old Jeffrey Hunter McKinney.

"The next thing I knew I had called a man and sold my practice, called California and leased a house, called the movers to arrange the move - and THEN I called my wife and told her what I had done."

Arriving in California, Sandefur paid four dollars to enroll in an adult education class on how to write for television.

After several years of scratching at the door, he started selling scripts. Following a year as associate producer of "Barnaby Jones," he has joined "Little House on the Prairie" as co-producer and writer.

Sandefur's teleplay, "In the Big Inning," to be colorcast on "Little House" Wednesday, Oct. 1, is about a crazy baseball game between the men of Walnut Grove and the Sleepy Eye Green-Stockings.

"It is based on those wild July 4th games at home," says Bill. "In those games you didn't try to win - you tried to survive!"

Mystery Series Is Authentic

"Ellery Queen," the new mystery series on NBC-TV Thursdays (9 to 10 p.m.), strives to be not only an affectionate valentine to the 1940s, but an authentic one.

The premiere episode, "Auld Lang Syne," dealt with a homicide that took place on New Year's Eve of 1946 during festivities in the Penthouse Ballroom atop a posh New York hotel.

The scene wouldn't have been authentic without Guy Lombardo and his orchestra playing "the sweetest music this side of heaven" for the revelers, so, one of the guest stars in the episode was Guy Lombardo — doing his thing.

Also, New Year's Eve at that time would not be complete without Ben Grauer's radio broadcast from Manhattan's Times Square as the magic hour approached. Therefore, the episode included the voice of Grauer describing the festivities on the radio in a cab that was rushing Ellery Queen (Jim Hutton) to the hotel.

In other segments of the series there are references to Ray Bolger starring on Broadway; to the hit novel of the day, "Forever Amber"; to Jane Wyman winning the starring role in "Johnny Belinda." When a character reaches for a cigarette, it's a Regent, or some other now-extinct brand that flourished then.

Less subtle examples of authenticity includes autos, fashions, furniture and even film tricks of the era — the flipping of calendar pages to quickly suggest the passage of time, the lowering of the level in a liquor bottle to suggest the length of time a character has been drinking.

BACK TO BACK — Mike Connors (right) stars as "Mannix," and James Franciscus is "Longstreet," in the double-feature evening of detective action-adventure to be seen Thursday Nights on the ABC-TV late-night "Wide World of Entertainment" beginning Thursday, Oct. 2. "Mannix" will be seen 11:30 p.m. - 12:30 a.m. to be immediately followed by "Longstreet," at 12:30-1:30 a.m.

What A 'Twosome'

Joe Mannix drops in for a cup of coffee and finds a crime syndicate brewing a plot, and Mike Longstreet hosts a housewarming party to put the heat on a burglary ring in "Wide World Presents Mannix & Longstreet," the first appearance of a double feature detective action series, on ABC-TV, Thursday, Oct. 2.

"Mannix," starring Mike Connors, will be followed immediately by "Longstreet," starring James Franciscus, at 11:30 p.m., to conclusion.

ASPIRATION

Norman Alden, co-star of NBC-TV's new comedy series, "Fay," once aspired to be a major league baseball player. He played short-stop in high school at Fort Worth and at Texas Christian University.

Pat Quinn, who had the title role in the film "Alice's Restaurant," guest stars as the owner of a small roadside cafe that has been taken over by three mobsters in the "Mannix" episode, "Sunburst." Mannix is suddenly thrown into the middle of a syndicate plot when he stops at the cafe for a cup of coffee and finds himself held captive along with the cafe's proprietors.

The cast includes co-star Gail Fisher as Peggy, Paul Carr as Ben, Barry Atwater as Peterson and Kenneth Tobey as Sheriff Wells.

In "A World of Perfect Complicity," Mike Longstreet takes an apartment in an exclusive housing complex, hoping to break up a robbery ring plaguing the tenants. Mike and his associate, Nikki (played by co-star Marilyn Mason) pose as well-to-do newlyweds who invite all of the tenants to a housewarming party. Mike believes the party will yield a HOLLYWOOD—The magic of Mary Tyler Moore Productions continues to flourish with the early success of "Phyllis" starring Cloris Leachman. Perhaps it's simply irony, but each MTM show with a female lead has been a hit while those series starring men have not done as well—at least not to date.

The resemblance of Liz Torres to the late Barbara Colby on "Phyllis" is something you'll have trouble seeing. Liz of course took over the Julie role after Barbara was shot and killed shortly after production began on the new show.

An early pleasant surprise of the new season is the success of Lloyd Bridges' new show, "Joe Forrester," even though Lloyd has made no secret of the fact that this will be his last series of his career.

David Soul of "Starsky & Hutch," another show well received in the early going, says his biggest enjoyment in doing the series is being able to portray a character who has so much restraint. "I tend to be very hot, impulsive," David admits.

Don Matheson of "General Hospital" has bought a lake-front cottage at Lake Arrowhead, Calif. for a weekend hideaway for himself and his family.

Did you know that Alex Rocco of "Three For The Road" was one of the two finalists last year for "Rhoda's" husband? David Groh of course won the coveted role and Alex got his own series.

A Woody Allen Comedy Airs

FLOATING WOODY — It's up, up and a-Woody as Woody Allen floats away from the bad guys in the futuristic world of "Sleeper," his recent comedy hit making its television debut on "The ABC Friday Night Movie," Friday, Oct. 3 (9-11 p.m.) on Channel 3-5-12.

"Sleeper," Woody Allen's recent comedy hit, comes to television as "The ABC Friday Night Movie," Oct. 3, 9 to 11 p.m., on Channel 3-5-12.

Allen stars with Diane Keaton (also his leading lady in "Love and Death" and "Play it Again, Sam") in the movie that Time magazine called, quite simply, "his funniest." Variety said, "both Allen and Keaton are hilarious."

In the movie, Woody enters a Greenwich Village hospital for a minor operation, is fast-frozen and wrapped in aluminum foil when the operation goes wrong, and remains that way for 200 years before he is heated and served up as the last survivors of the 20th Century.

The bland new world he finds hardly seems worth surviving for. All the worst of contemporary America has become the best the nation has to offer, the government's brain-police are determined to wash him clean of individual zaniness and the only thing that seems to work is a 200-year-old car (curiously resembling a bug) that still starts on the first try - and floats.

Woody masquerades as a robot, fights furiously with the woman he loves (an emotion considered embarrassingly old-fashioned in the scientific world of the future), slips on a banana peel bigger than he is, and generally upsets the order of everyone's dreary existence.

Westward Ho! On "Go-USA"

The true story of a family's 600-mile journey to the West on the Oregon Trail will be told in a two-part drama on NBC-TV's Bicentennial series, "Go-USA," Saturday, Oct. 4, 12:30 to 1 p.m. Part two of "The Oregon Trail" will be colorcast the following Saturday, Oct. 11.

John Sager and his wife, Elizabeth, leave their home in Missouri and head West with five children toward the 'promised land' of Oregon. On the way, John and Elizabeth die of camp fever. The children, and a baby born to Elizabeth just before her death, continue the journey on their own, with 13½-year-old John and 8-year-old Catherine taking over as 'mother and father.'

In the cast of the drama, written by Paul Ritts, are Bill Jordan and Aubri Martin as the parents; Tony and Julie Markes as John and Catherine; Laura Dixon as Elizabeth; Terri Lynn Wood as Matilda; and Moosie Drier as Frank.

Buddy Ebsen Adopts Scotland

Not one drop of Scottish blood flows in the Nordic veins of Christian Rudolf 'Buddy' Ebsen, but the soft-spoken former dancer perhaps ranks as Hollywood's foremost historical authority on the colorful folk of the land of lochs, moors and glens.

It was several summers ago, while on a European trip with his family, that the star of "Barnaby Jones," broadcast Fridays (10 to 11 p.m.) on CBS Ch 9-11, became enamored of the history of Scotland, especially the 16th Century period that embraced the brief but stormy reign of Mary Stuart, "Mary, Queen of Scots."

Already a history buff whose attention had been principally drawn to the American Civil War period, Ebsen found in the Scots, "an interesting people who were strong, active, colorful and violent."

While doing research on Mary Stuart, across Scotland, Ebsen encountered a historian, Robert Kemp, then professor of history at Aberdeen University.

It was their friendship that led to the establishment of an academic prize at the University for 'meritorious writing about Scottish history' by a student of that major.

Kemp had been kind enough to write a column for a Glasgow newspaper in which he "doubted that anyone in Hollywood owns as extensive a collection concerning Scottish peerage as Mr. Ebsen does."

"M-A-S-H" Fan Is Now In Command

It's the opportunity of a lifetime when an actor is given the chance to star regularly on an established television series he regards as the best on the air.

That rare chance has come to wry comedian - character actor Harry Morgan, who has taken to the role of the new "M-A-S-H" commanding officer, Col. Sherman Potter, as if it were second nature to him.

"M-A-S-H" recently began its fourth season on CBS-TV and is seen on Fridays, 8:30 to 9 p.m.

In press interviews, Morgan has said, unhesitatingly, that if given the selection of regular's status on any current television series, he "would choose 'M-A-S-H,' without question."

From a man who has starred on seven prior series and has played almost every conceivable role in more than 50 motion pictures, such commendation has special meaning.

"I find the writing and the entire makeup of the show exceptional," says Morgan, a veteran of two earlier comedy shows — "December Bride" and "Pete and Gladys."

After filming fewer than half-a-dozen 1975-76 episodes, it became apparent that Morgan was born to play the crusty-but-soft - underneath Colonel Potter, who frequently lays down the law to the unbridled 4077th "M-A-S-H" combat surgeons, but is not above taking a belt with the rest of the boys, off-duty.

"Frankly," Morgan concedes, "I was surprised at the ease with which the character of Colonel Potter was introduced in the first show in which I acted. At the beginning, everybody was a bit wary of the new commander, but at the end he was accepted, and already one of the boys. It is a tribute to writers who can accomplish that in one show."

As Potter, Morgan has a classic encounter in that episode with the feminine - clad Corporal Klinger (Jamie Farr), who feels he has found a new soft touch in his unending quest for a psycho discharge as a hopeless eccentric.

Good news at last! Volkswagen happily presents the Rabbit. The incredible new car that gets 38 highway miles per gallon and 24 in the city (according to the 75 model Federal EPA report).

Good news travels fast, too. The Rabbit has the power to scoot from 0 to 50 in just 8.2 seconds. How many sub-compacts can match that kind of quick-as-a-bunny acceleration?

And, since the engine's mounted sideways, the sub-compact Rabbit has all the head and leg room of some mid-sized cars. It also has a hatchback, front-wheel drive, and VW's unique rear stabilizer axle.

All backed by the Volkswagen Owner's Security Blanket with Computer Analysis. See the new Volkswagen Rabbit. And drive happily ever after.

Yugoslavian Film Premieres

A sea captain and his grandson, stranded off a German-occupied island, valiantly strive to get a boatload of Yugoslavian refugees to safety, in "Captain Mikula, the Kid," a film from Yugoslavia that will have its American television premiere on "The CBS Children's Film Festival," Saturday, Oct. 4, 1 to 2 p.m.

The captain rows ashore, hoping to get a fuel jet for their disabled engine, and then discovers he has stowaways — his grandson, Mikula, and two of his friends. Mikula's grandfather is arrested because the Germans believe he came to rescue the pilot of the British plane they shot down. But Mikula tricks the Germans into letting his grandfather go, and, in a daring maneuver, obtains the needed fuel jet and repairs the boat's engine.

The wounded pilot is found, and he and the grandfather are sheltered by townspeople. The grandfather now orders Mikula to captain the boat, while he creates a diversion. Mikula then pilots the boat and its passengers to safety.

"Captain Mikula, the Kid," a 1974 production of Jardran Film and Croatia Film Zagreb, was directed by Obrad Gluscevic and produced by Stipe Gurdelic.

Burr Tillstrom's Kukla, Fran and Ollie with Fran Allison are hosts of "The CBS Children's Film Festival."

"Ghost Busters"

"Ghost Busters," seen Saturdays from 11:30 to 11:56 a.m. on CBS-TV, stars Larry Storch and Forrest Tucker and a gorilla as Spenser, Tracy and Kong — not necessarily in that order — as Ghost Busters extraordinary. Bob Burns appears in the guise of Tracy, the gorilla.

The three get assignments via hidden tape messages (a la "Mission: Impossible") and then set out with their Ghost

Buster kit, which contains everything, including the proverbial kitchen sink.

The series, played in the broad farcical comedy style made famous by Abbott and Costello, is directed, in the main, by Howie Morris, who, in addition to his many motion picture and television credits, is well remembered for his comedy performance on "Your Show of Shows."

EXTRAORDINARY TRIO — Larry Storch (left) and Forrest Tucker, together with a gorilla, played by Bob Burns, operate as a trio of extraordinary ghost busters in the new, live-action farcical comedy series, "Ghost Busters," which airs Saturdays (11:30-11:56 a.m.) on CBS-TV.

TO MRS. WILLIS PUTNAM, DANVILLE, VA. (AND MANY OTHERS) Larry Blyden was killed in an auto crash in Morocco May 31, 1975. He was alone in the car at the time of the accident. A widower, he left two children, Eileen and Josh. He was the host of "What's My Line," a syndicated show which was filmed some time ago. He was well known as a comedy actor and, a short while before his death, he had performed in "Absurd Person Singular" on Broadway.

TO SUSAN SULLIVAN, DARLINGTON, S.C. "the Invisible Man," new series on NBC-TV, is based on the character developed by H.G. Wells for his classic 1897 novel of the same name.

TO BELINDA SHELLEY, WILMINGTON, N.C. Jacqueline Courtney, who starred as Alice Frame in "Another World," did not renew her contract at the end of August. She says the decision to leave the show was "a mutual decision between myself and the producer." There had been rumors for months that there were differences as to where the character of Alice would fit into the storyline.

TO T.P., EDGEWOOD, S.C. Jimmie Walker (J.J. in "Good Times") isn't married. Although most of the couples who appear on "Tattletales" are married, some of them are just 'good friends.'

TO SUSAN STILLMAN, VERONA, VA. Mark Wheeler (Doug McKnight in "Mobile One") became an actor by missing a bus. "During high school cross-country practice, I missed the bus taking the team home, so I killed time by watching drama class auditions. I got interested, auditioned and ended up in the production." He has been in several TV series — "Room 222," "Owen Marshall," "The Streets of San Francisco," "McCloud" and "Apple's Way." His wife, Frances was a regular in "Apple's Way." They live in Los Angeles.

TO PEGGY REYNOLDS, KENANSVILLE, N.C. "The Young and the Restless" is filmed on a set at the CBS studios in Los Angeles.

Buffalo's Other Back

For five previous seasons, fullback Jim Braxton of the

Jim Braxton

Buffalo Bills has been known as the team's other running back. He has been employed mainly as a blocking back for the record-breaking O. J. Simpson, but his excellent talents as a running back are just being discovered. The Bills meet the world champion Pittsburgh Steelers in the NFL Game of the Week on Sunday, September 28, at 4:00 p.m. on NBC-TV.

"Big Jim" rambled for 543 yards last season, mostly on inside power drives, to form a perfect duo with Simpson. He was also the third leading receiver, with eighteen grabs, and tied for fourth in scoring with 24 points. Against Green Bay, he topped 86 yards. In his brief five-year career, Braxton has already amassed 1,564 yards, ranking fourth on the Bills' list of top ground-gainers.

Jim enjoyed the best day of his pro career against the Dolphins on November 18, 1973, gaining 119 yards on 17 carries. That accomplishment was even more memorable, considering the fact that he was the first back in 45 games to rack up a 100-yard rushing day against the Miami defense.

With O. J. Simpson setting a record with over 2,000 yards in 1973, Braxton was much overlooked as a major contributor to the "Juices" cause.

In 1975, with the youthful, exuberant Bill looking toward a big season, Jim Braxton will be utilized more and more as a cog of balance in Buffalo's offensive wheel.

Bart Starr, the legendary former quarterback of the great Green Bay teams of the 1960's, is now Head Coach of the Packers. His first desire is to rebuild a club that has fallen from the top ranks of the National Football League. One area he will not have to replace is defensive cornerback, which Willie Buchanan occupies admirably. (The Packers meet the Denver Broncos Monday, Sept. 29, 9 p.m., on ABC Channel 3W-5-12.) Buchanan has to remind nostalgic Green Bay fans of past super defensive backfields, where such standouts as Willie Wood and Herb Adderly once terrified offensive ends with their 'go-for-broke' style of play. In fact, Buchanan, who is just about to begin his fourth season, has already become one of pro football's premier cornerbacks.

Willie had to rebound from a broken leg that he suffered in the sixth game of the 1973 season. In 1974, he led the Green Bay secondary with four interceptions and won selection to the Pro Bowl. The San Diego State graduate also shared the team lead in interceptions as a rookie, and garnered Associated Press Rookie of the Year honors in the process. He also spiced his rookie season by returning a blocked field goal attempt 57 yards for a touchdown and recovering three fumbles.

Buchanan was the Packers' number one draft choice in 1972. Before entering the professional ranks, he was a Consensus All-American at San Diego State. Many experts consider him the best cornerback prospect to enter pro football in a decade. He has 4.5 speed in the 40-yard-dash and has been timed at 9.4 in the 100-yard-dash, all of this to go along with outstanding tackling abilities.

With a few more players the caliber of Willie Buchanan, Coach Starr just may have a team reminiscent of the glorious Packer past.

Rose Bowl To Continue

The Rose Bowl football game - the 'grand-daddy' of post-season college gridiron classics - will continue exclusively on NBC-TV through 1982 under a new agreement between NBC, the Rose Bowl Committee and the Pacific Eight Conference.

"NBC has telecast every Rose Bowl coast-to-coast since 1952 and is delighted that long and happy association will continue," said Carl Lindemann Jr., Vice President, Sports, NBC-TV.

"The Rose Bowl, which began in 1902, has a unique tradition and appeal. Its television history is NBC, and its standing as a viewer spectacle is proven by the audience this great game has attracted on the NBC-TV Network."

NFL MONDAY NIGHT FOOTBALL—ABC Sports will provide live coverage of the Green Bay Packers-Denver Broncos game from Denver, Colo., Monday, Sept. 29 at 9 p.m. on Channel 3W-5-12. Willie Buchanan, of the Green Bay Packers, is considered the best cornerback prospect to enter pro football in a decade. At 6-0, 190, he is a definite all-pro candidate any year.

Can He Run From Injury?

The New York Giants are looking for stability this season, and a perfect place to start is with former All-Pro running back Ron Johnson. The Giants launch their season, after a very successful pre-season effort against the powerful Washington Redskins at Robert F. Kennedy Stadium in the nation's capital on Sunday, Sept. 28, at 1 p.m., on CBS-TV.

After a superb career at the University of Michigan, where he earned All-America honors, Ron was the first draft choice of the Cleveland Browns. The Michigan graduate acquired 472 yards in his first season, but was traded to the Giants in 1970 for Homer Jones. New York utilized the talented back to the fullest extent, hitting for 1,027 yards to set a club one-season record and he led them to a 9-5 season, making All-Pro and the Pro Bowl.

Ever since that memorable year, Ron has constantly been hampered by nagging injuries. In 1971, he missed all but two games, but came back strong the next season, accumulating 1,182 yards and again winning All-Pro and Pro Bowl designations. Injury problems occurred again in 1973, but despite missing three games with injuries, including a hamstring pull, knee injury, and a broken hand, Johnson picked up 218 yards.

Ron is a man of many records. With Michigan, he totaled 2,440 yards, breaking Tommy Harmon's previous mark. He set an NCAA one-game record with 347 yards rushing against Wisconsin, and was named the Most Valuable Player in 1968 in the Big Ten Conference. In a Giant uniform, he holds club marks for most touchdowns in one game (four), rushing yardage in one season (1,182), and rushing attempts in one season, 298. His 14 touchdowns in 1972, and his 41 combined attempts in one game set an alltime National Football League Mark.

The Giants are hoping that their stellar running back can return to the prominence that he has enjoyed in the past, and boost an offense already improved with the preence of quarterback Craig Morton. If the defense holds up, New York may give the Redskins a 'heap' of trouble.

"Grandstand" Preview

A wrap-up of the 1975 baseball season, a preview of the "Thrilla in Manila," a live remote from the New Orleans Superdome, "Grandstand Matchup," and a report on one of baseball's most colorful batteries headline for Sept. 28 feature line-up for "Grandstand," NBC-TV's new concept in Sunday sports programming.

Hosted by sportscaster Jack Buck, "Grandstand" (beginning a half hour before each regional football game) is wrapped around the live sports being presented by NBC with sports news and features. With 'flexibility' the keyword, "Grandstand" is, in essence, an electronic sports page where breaking stories command priority attention.

On the final day of regular-season baseball (Sept. 28), "Grandstand" will look at the batting and pitching leaders in the two major leagues and focus on the upcoming play-offs, which begin Saturday, Oct. 4, on NBC.

"Everybody says I'm throwing better," quipped Redskin quarterback Billy Kilmer, "but that's because they don't have Sonny Jurgensen to compare me with anymore."

Ask Them Yourself

Want to ask a famous person a question? Send the question on a postcard, to "Ask," Family Weekly, 641 Lexington Ave., New York, N. Y. 10022. We'll pay $5 for published questions. Sorry, we can't answer others.

FOR DR. ELISABETH KUBLER-ROSS, author of "Death: The Final Stage of Growth"

Why have you labeled America as a "death-denying society?" Don't people in other countries shun death as much as Americans do?—Beverly Fulton, Edgewater, N.J.

● I have labeled America a "death-denying society" because there is no other country in the world that spends more billions of dollars for youth-oriented programs, cosmetics, plastic surgery, and rejuvenation projects. We use euphemisms. The dead are made up to have a "natural look." They are presented to family and friends in "slumber rooms." All this denies the reality of death. We have treated our elderly very poorly. We place them in inadequate nursing homes, trying to separate the old, the sick and the dying from our society in order not to remind us that we all one day shall grow old, become ill and die.

FOR CHARLES BRONSON, star of "The Street Fighter"

Now that you're rich and famous, how do you feel about the Hollywood scene?—M.H., Utica, N.Y.

● I'm part of the Hollywood scene only when I'm on screen. My friends aren't in the movie business. I prefer to be with my neighbors in Vermont, where we have a farm. Jill, the six kids and I spend all our spare time there. We have about 300 acres in a remote part of the state, and plenty of privacy. We don't bother anyone, and no one bothers us. The Vermont air is clean and crisp, and—even more important—it's a great place to paint.

FOR EILEEN FULTON, star of "As the World Turns"

Since you've been on the show so long, do you ever tire of the role and feel the story is moving too slowly or boring viewers?—Jena Landis, Roswell, N.M.

● I quit in 1963, not because I was bored, but because "Lisa" had developed into a silly character. But, my substitute didn't work out and I had to go back to the show. The character had been rewritten the way I wanted. "Lisa" may be silly at times, but she's never boring. I try to keep her alive and interesting and real. Audience response proves we're not moving too slowly. If you think so, don't watch.

FOR MEADOWLARK LEMON

of the Harlem Globetrotters

Has there ever been a white Harlem Globetrotter?—Chris Cane, Wyckoff, N.J.

● The Harlem Globetrotters integrated in 1942 with a player named Bob Karstens. Bob actually was the third white man to play for the Globetrotters. The late founder of the team, Abe Saperstein, filled in during the early days, and Bunny Levitt, a white man who gave free-throw exhibitions at halftime, played in a few games. But Karstens was the only white man signed to a contract.

FOR JEB STUART MAGRUDER

Has your political outlook changed as a result of your prison experience?—B.R.R., Washington, D.C.

● Yes—in regard to the way in which we deal with our underprivileged, undereducated and lower socio-economic groups. There's no question we are not doing the kind of things necessary to give them an opportunity to exist more comfortably side by side with us.

FOR ABRAHAM BEAME, Mayor of New York City

Do you think those booklets calling New York "Fear City" will frighten off visitors?—M.M., Harrington Park, N.J.

● The heartbeat of New York City is in its crowded streets, overflowing with theater-goers, shoppers, children in the park, strollers on waterfront promenades, snackers at outdoor cafés and music lovers enjoying evening concerts in the park. This is the real psychological effect of our city—and no "Fear City" campaign can change it.

FOR ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Did your twin sister, Ann Landers, seek your advice before her divorce?—Mrs. Glovon R. Orrell, Hot Springs, Ark.

● No, she didn't. But she did confide her intentions to me before making the public announcement.

FOR PEGGY CASS

Don't you think exercise is an important part of any diet?—J.B., Queensboro, Ky.

● It may be for others, but not for me. All that running around and jumping just makes me hungry—hungrier than I'd be if I hadn't been so active. I do try to keep up with swimming and walking, though, because although it doesn't make the pounds vanish before your eyes, it has a "tightening" effect and it's not as exhausting as bending and stretching.

FOR CAROL BURNETT

As a child, did you like to help your mother in the kitchen?—E.F., Petersburg, Va.

● I wanted to, but she wouldn't let me. The kitchen was off limits for me. That's because we were so poor that every morsel of food was precious and they didn't want to take the chance of wasting any by letting me fool around. We lived on plain food, concentrated on staples. I can't remember even tasting luxury foods as a kid. They were too expensive for us.

FOR THE "ASK THEM YOURSELF" EDITOR

I'm a senior citizen and when I was a teenager, my father took me to vaudeville where I saw a skinny harmonica player who was good at popular and classical music. Do you know who he is?—H.D., Albany, N.Y.

● You probably mean Larry Adler, who's probably the world's greatest harmonica virtuoso (he calls it a mouth organ). He left the U.S. because of the 1950 McCarthy hearings, moved to London and performed there and all over the world. Despite his exile, he remains an American citizen. He played a five-week engagement recently for full houses at New York's Rainbow Grill. At 61, Adler is going to marry for the third time. His wife will be Lady Selena Hastings, 30. They were introduced at a London cocktail party four years ago by a mutual friend, who said, "Selena, it's high time you got married. Meet Larry Adler." He's also a composer (he's just recorded the theme for a new TV series, "Doc") and teaches harmonica.

Is Retirement Fatal?

Some Disturbing Facts About Our "Golden Years"

By John Kelly

Mention retirement to the average American and the image that usually springs to mind is that of a handsome, vigorous elderly couple like the ones who keep turning up in advertisements for airlines and "sunshine" communities. And that certainly is enticing—imagining yourself finally able to enjoy the fruits of a lifetime's work by, say, flying around the world or lolling about in the sun. Unfortunately, this picture of the golden years is decidedly distorted.

Make no mistake: there are some Americans who are healthy, creative and rich enough to benefit from the leisure

"We found that disorganized behavior was a major risk factor among the elderly. And we found more of this type of behavior among those forced to retire."

provided by retirement. But the majority of retirees find it a nightmare—composed of boredom, poverty and insecurity.

Take a look at these harrowing statistics:

- The average white male dies 30 to 40 months after retirement.
- Men over 65 account for one-fourth of U.S. suicides.
- One-third of all marriages decline after retirement according to a National Institute of Mental Health study.
- Alcoholism and mental illness plague a disproportionately large number of retirees.

Not all of these woes can be blamed solely on retirement, of course. The debilities that come with increasing old age, for instance, obviously play a major role in both the high death and suicide rates. Yet, many authorities, among them Dr. Frederick C. Swartz, chairman of the American Medical Association's Committee on Aging, think that retirement hastens the normal physical and emotional decline which accompanies advanced age.

"After retirement," says Dr. Swartz, "many men collapse into a state of lethargy and boredom. And once this happens, they start down the road to bad

The youthful dream of retirement as a time of fulfillment without the burdens of work does indeed come to fruition for some, but all too often it turns into the nightmare of defeat and even death: "The same subtle 'giving-up' mechanism that affects the relatives of the recently deceased may work on retirees as well."

health." Psychiatrist Robert Butler agrees. In his new book, "Why Survive? Being Old in America," Dr. Butler defines what he calls the "retirement syndrome." Men and women who are otherwise perfectly healthy will suddenly develop headaches, gastrointestinal disorders; they will oversleep, become irritable and lethargic; they'll suffer from mental confusion and nervousness.

"More often than not, these symptoms appear after the person retires," adds Dr. Butler, "but sometimes they manifest themselves before retirement, heightening the confusion that accompanies the retirement process."

Just how this sense of lethargy and purposelessness is able to cause physical harm is still not known precisely. But Dr. William Reichel, vice president of the American Geriatrics Society, suspects that the same subtle "giving-up" mechanism that affects the relatives of the recently deceased may work on retirees as well. Studies have shown that the newly bereaved have a far higher mortality rate in the first year of their bereavement than the general population. "Perhaps," says Dr. Reichel, "the loss of a job, which gives their lives purpose, proves equally traumatic for retirees."

Whatever the cause, the American Medical Association (A.M.A.) is so convinced of retirement's baleful effects that it has labeled retirement a health hazard. In a new booklet called "Retirement: A Medical Philosophy and Approach," the A.M.A. declares flatly that "arbitrary retirement and the denial of work opportunity—whether the work is for pay or for the pleasure of giving—seriously threatens the individual concerned."

But there's a big distinction between voluntary and enforced retirement. "Usually those who are able to make their own decision to retire fare better than those forced out by a mandatory policy," says Dr. Butler, citing a National Institute of Mental Health study on retirees. "We found that disorganized behavior—that is, the lack of structure or goals—was a major risk factor among the elderly. And we found more of this type of behavior among those forced to retire." Dr. Butler thinks that those who retired voluntarily were looking forward to the leisure which retirement provided, so they were equipped financially and emotionally to put it to creative use; while those who were forced out had no idea what to do.

Unfortunately, more and more Americans are going to find themselves in this second category because a growing number of firms have an enforced retirement policy. At the turn of the century, only a handful of workers were affected by this regulation, but today 50 percent are forced to retire. The result has been a steady decline in the number of over-65s in the work force. In 1900, two-thirds of them worked, but now only one-third remain employed.

Of course, not everybody who's affected by mandatory retirement is necessarily unhappy. But in a recent study of the attitudes of retirees—done for the National Council on Aging by pollster Louis Harris—74 percent of the respondents said they missed the money their job brought in, 73 percent missed the people at work, 62 percent missed the work itself, and 59 percent just missed the feeling of being useful.

That money ranked first on the list is hardly surprising. About 55 percent of retirees enter retirement in debt. The average Social Security benefit for an elderly couple is now $341 per month, or $4,092 annually. This amounts to a little more than half the money needed to live on what the Bureau of Labor Statistics calls an Intermediate Budget—a budget which allots only $30 a week for groceries, $170 per month for housing costs and $27 a month for clothing costs. Is Retirement Fatal?

sions don't help much either. According to the Social Security Administration; the median monthly pension benefit is $200 for those people who work till 65 and $224 for those who retire early because of a disability. And many people don't have pensions. What all this means is that an estimated 4.8 million people aged 65 or over are living in poverty. That makes the elderly the fastest growing poverty group in America.

The consequences of this penury on the health of the aged can be gauged by the results of a study by Duke University gerontologist Eric Pfeiffer. He found that financial well-being was one of the major factors in predicting the longevity of a retiree. In other words, the better off a person is financially, the greater his chances of living longer.

Supporters of compulsory retirement contend that without it, men and women would remain in jobs long after they passed their physical and mental prime, blocking the advancement of younger, more aggressive employees. But, in Dr. Butler's opinion, this argument overlooks one very important fact. "Chronological age," he says, "is an inaccurate measure of how old someone is. Aging occurs unevenly—one may be at very different ages at the same time in terms of mental capacity, physical health, endurance, creativity and emotions. Thus, while one man may be 'old' at 60 or 65, another may remain vigorous well into his late 70's."

An alternative to the present system of compulsory retirement might be a system of flexible retirement. There are a number of ways such a system could work. One method might require workers to take certain standardized physical and mental tests on an annual basis, beginning at age 65. As long as they could pass the tests, they would be "safe" from retirement for another year.

A system of flexible retirement would have a number of marked advantages. It would allow the nation to tap the skills and experience of the elderly, reduce Social Security costs and, even more important, increase retired people's happiness and, perhaps, their longevity. But adoption of a system of flexible retirement is only part of the answer. "More must be done to prepare people for retirement," says Dr. Adrian Ostfeld, Lauder Professor of Epidemiology and Public Health at Yale University Medical School. As an example of what can be done, he cites the Bell System, which runs courses on retirement for its employees. "More firms should be doing this," says Dr. Ostfeld.

Dr. Butler agrees that more should be done. But he thinks preparation should begin as early as grade school. "Children should be taught that old age is not something to dread but a very special time of life. And as part of this training, we should show them how to use their time more creatively, how to enjoy art and music, for example. These are not only marks of a cultivated man or woman but ways to fill leisure time with real meaning."

Liv Ullmann:

A Different Kind of Mother

Alan Pappé/Lee Gross

"Often, when I feel upset, Linn has said, 'I know what you should do because I know what I do when I'm unhappy. I put on some strange clothes and put a silly thing on my head and take down my umbrella or a balloon. Then I go outside and look up at the trees.'... I think that's a pretty healthy outlook, don't you?"

By Helen Dorsey

Liv Ullmann is often compared with Greta Garbo and Ingrid Bergman. She is unpretentious, a trifle shy, highly intelligent and totally devoid of vanity. As we talked in her Hotel Pierre suite in New York, Liv (pronounced "leave") seemed to have an ethereal quality. Honey blonde hair, framing her face, was cut shoulder-length, worn casually and unset. Her habit of looking directly at people with her slate-blue eyes was disarming. She was surprisingly candid. A divorcee, Liv's greatest joy is her eight-year-old daughter, Linn (pronounced, "lean"), with whom she lives in Oslo.

FAMILY WEEKLY: Let's talk about marriage. You once said, "At 18 I thought about marriage idealistically." What did you mean?

LIV: I thought that's what life would be, but it didn't turn out that way. I have changed my views according to what has happened to me. But that happens to most people. Some people are very happy and can really make a good marriage at 18. Then they can still say at 60, "That's really what I believe in."

FW: Was your mother strict with you?

LIV: She was quite strict, very loving, yet very authoritative. She always knew all the answers because she was my mother. But it was like that for everyone at that time, not only for me.

FW: Do you have the answers for your own daughter?

LIV: No! I think that is the greatest gift I can give her. In fact, that is the great thing that boys and girls get today: they know that their parents have been around and have made mistakes. It's good for children to know this because it gives

People Quiz
By John E. Gibson

Is Your Personality Shaped by Your Name?

True or False: People who have been saddled with uncommon names are usually adversely affected by them. (See number 2)

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. People who have never met you tend to judge your character by your name.
2. People who have been saddled with uncommon names are usually adversely affected by them.
3. A person's surname often describes the profession or avocation he chooses.
4. You can usually tell whether a child's name has been chosen by the mother or the father.
5. A name can have strange and bizarre effects on a person's character.
6. Women's names often enjoy a brief vogue and then go out of style, while men's names tend to remain popular.

ANSWERS

1. True. Names evoke emotions that make a strong impact on the unconscious. In one study, subjects were given a speaker's name, qualifications and background. For half of them, the name was given as Adam Williams, for the other half of the test group it was Myron Williams. Results: "Mr. Adam Williams tended to be seen as consistently more active, masculine, dominating, competitive, cold and responsible than the same person who was identified as Mr. Myron Williams." And in an Ohio University study, students were instructed to rate and match 25 names to 25 photographs of men on the basis of masculinity. The photograph rated least masculine was usually identified with the name Courtney, Inness, Shelley or Carrol. The one voted most masculine was most frequently identified as Gus, Bart, Adam or Mac.
2. False—as indicated by a psychological study conducted at Muskingum College, in which the names of over 1,200 men and women students were collected and the common names separated from the unique. Each person was subjected to a personality test. Results: There were no significant personality differences between the two female groups. "But surprisingly," the investigators reported, "it was the men with common names who indicated more guilt, inferiority and timidity." Perhaps this was so because those in the latter group had a feeling of uniqueness and importance apart from the general population. But other studies have shown that when a person has an unpleasant-sounding name, or one which he actively dislikes, it can have an undesirable effect on his personality.
3. True—according to a fascinating study by State University of New York psychologist Dr. Lawrence Casler, which shows that "a person's surname is frequently related to his occupation or interests." He lists the surnames of over 150 illustrious men and women who have distinguished themselves in fields corresponding with their name. Examples: Court (tennis player); Strange (abnormal psychology); Organick (physician).
4. True. In studies conducted at the University of Toronto, it was found that "soft" names such as Hugh, Louis and Allan for boys have usually been conferred by the mother.
5. True. As one specialist observes: Names are closely bound to the development of personality. Numerous individual reactions to family names are cited: A subject whose name was McCold, for example, was affected by a coldness of his extremities, and also had difficulty in establishing "warm" personal relationships. Another subject, named Paine, suffered from neuralgic pains over a number of years.
6. True. Men's names are far less likely to go out of style than women's. For example, the names John, James and William, which were rated high in surveys made a generation ago, are still rated near the top. While such names as Helen, Ruth, Dorothy and Lois (all of which ranked high in previous surveys) are much less preferred today.

You & Your Car

Bob Bondurant's "High Performance" Driving School Has an Answer: Yes

By Robert C. Smith
With Min S. Yee and Donald K. Wright

You're just an ordinary man or woman who wants to be a better driver. So you've decided to spend three days of your vacation taking a course at what is perhaps the best driving school in the country: Bob Bondurant's School of High-Performance Driving, 35 miles north of San Francisco.

The first order of business, as described in "The Driver's Handbook," by Robert Smith with Min Yee and Donald Wright (Bantam Books), is ground school, an hour and a half of classroom instruction. You and other students listen as an instructor outlines the ideas behind high-performance driving. Using slides and a model car on a tabletop track outlined in white tape, the instructor introduces you to some things about driving that you never heard in driver's training.

How to steer. It turns out you've been steering inefficiently ever since you learned to drive. The standard hand-over-hand wheel slapping to turn, followed by the let-the-wheel-go-and-watch-it-spin-back method of straightening out again, is not the way to do it. Nor should you hold the wheel at 10 and two o'clock as your driver's training book told you. The instructor, holding a steering wheel that looks somehow eerie without a car attached to it, shows your class how to do it: hands are placed at nine and three o'clock, with the thumbs hooked over the spokes of the steering wheel for stability. You can turn the wheel a full 180 degrees without moving your hands from this position. And if you're turning sharply to the right, say, there's an easy way to turn the wheel a full 360 degrees: First reach over with your right hand and hook your thumb under the left spoke of the steering wheel. Then turn the wheel to the right with the right hand until it reaches its customary three o'clock position. Now replace your left hand at nine o'clock—and you're ready to make the second 180-degree turn to the right.

"How many accidents could be avoided, and lives saved, if drivers learned—and practiced—the accident-avoidance techniques taught at the Bondurant school?"

You straighten out the car doing just the reverse: Return the wheel 180 degrees to the Sudden stops: Don't just lock brakes. Push brake pedal all the way in, then let up slightly. You will stop sooner, avoid skidding.

Steering: Place your hands at nine and three o'clock with your thumbs hooked over the spokes. This way, you can turn the wheel 180 degrees without having to move your hands.

Downshifting: Brake, push in clutch, shift to neutral. Let out clutch while pressing accelerator. Clutch again and shift smoothly to lower gear.

left. Then let go of the wheel with your left hand while the right continues to return the wheel to the nine o'clock position. The left hand grabs its "home spoke" at nine o'clock, and the right returns to three o'clock. In the entire turn, you never let go of the wheel with both hands, and you're never in a position where you can't steer quickly because your arms are twisted around each other.

How to turn corners. This is really race-driver stuff, of limited use on the highway. But the principles of smoothness and consistency in making turns are important to everyday driving. It turns out that most drivers, even many race drivers, don't choose the most productive "line" through a turn. The instinct is to hug the inside of the corner consistently all the way around to make a "constant-radius" turn. But the Bondurant school teaches drivers that the best line through a corner is to swing wide and slow down a little more at the beginning of the corner, take a late apex, and then accelerate smoothly out of the turn. (Unfortunately, city driving and traffic laws do not allow for these "ideal" turns—so don't try them.) The late apex enables the car to gain more speed on the straightaway, resulting in a faster lap time—even though the correct line through the turn might be a fraction of a second slower than the constant-radius turn.

After the classroom instruction, you get your first chance to drive. The instructor takes you out to the handling oval, which is marked on one end of the Sears Point track with rubber

The Bondurant technique for grasping the wheel.

You're paying for a tune-up whether you get one or not.

Untuned cars waste 1 to 2 gallons per tankful

Before you think, "They're not talking to me," read the next sentence.
3 out of 5 cars on the road today need a tune-up.

That means there's a good chance we are talking to you. Especially if it's been 10,000 miles since your last tune-up.

A tune-up with Champion Spark Plugs can help save you that one to two gallons per tankful (depending on the size of your tank). To say nothing of giving you surer starts and better engine performance all winter.

Gasoline is just too expensive to waste. So get your car back in tune. Take it to your mechanic and say "Fill 'er up with Champions." Then you won't have to say "Fill 'er up with gas" nearly as often.

cones. It's here you first try to put into practice the smoothness, consistency and concentration the instructor emphasized in class.

Heel-and-toe downshifting. First you drive around the track just in second gear, without shifting at all, to practice steering, braking and accelerating smoothly. Then you add shifting. Not just any kind, but the smoothest kind. On the downshift, you learn the double-clutching method, which is a little tricky until you get the hang of it. It goes this way: You brake for the corner, push in the clutch and shift from third to neutral. Then you let out the clutch, and as the ball of your foot is braking, your heel—or the edge of your foot, depending on the car and on what works best for you—is pressing the accelerator, bringing the "revs" (the engine revolutions per minute) up to meet the lower gear. (In a lower gear the engine runs faster to go the same speed.) When the revs are up, the clutch goes in again and you shift smoothly into second and let out the clutch. If you do this properly, your car will pick up the lower gear without any lurching or sudden changes of speed. The importance of this technique is that it can double the life of your gearbox.

On the second day, you're ready for two of the Bondurant school's most useful training devices: the skid pad and the accident simulator. Both offer invaluable training for handling emergency situations.

The skid pad. The skid pad is simply a patch of asphalt coated with oil to make it slick. On it you can learn about skids and spins—what can cause them and how to control them. The instructor has a brake pedal on the passenger side of the car that he can set to lock the front or the rear wheels—or both at once.

You go through the skid pad a few times as a passenger while the instructor shows you how skids feel and demonstrates some of their causes. He shows you that when you lock your front wheels, you lose all steering, and—even more interesting—that your car has an amazing ability to straighten itself out after a 180-degree spin if you keep your front wheels pointed straight ahead. He also shows you how to execute a 360-degree spin, in which you steer straight ahead for 180 degrees of the spin, then quickly lock your wheels against the direction of the spin. If you're spinning to the left, you lock sharply to the right after 180 degrees, and voilà!—the car spins on around to straight-ahead and a little beyond, and then momentarily stops spinning by itself—just long enough for you to straighten the wheel and regain control.

You practice all this, and you also practice making quick corrections in steering that can pull you out of skids just as they are starting. You learn that once the front of the car has turned 90 degrees, it's a spin and you have to act accordingly. Also the consequences of sudden braking—especially locking your brakes—and sudden acceleration are vividly demonstrated for you. The pad teaches one other lesson that is crucial to skid-control, but is perhaps the hardest point to put into practice: when a skid begins, don't lift your foot off the accelerator! That merely causes your tires to lose even more adhesion and makes the skid worse. Instead, keep your speed steady and correct the steering; then after the car straightens out, let up on the gas gradually if you wish.

Accident simulator. After you've gone through your work-

The accident simulator, three lanes governed by three overhead lights, teaches you how to maneuver in emergency situations.

← In tests at the driving school, cars show an uncanny ability to stop skidding after a 180-degree turn.

I love tobacco. I don't smoke.

If I'm a guy who loves tobacco, how come I never take a puff?

Well, because I use "smokeless tobacco."

All it takes is a pinch of "smokeless" in between my cheek and gum. Feels real relaxin' in there. And I get full, rich tobacco pleasure.

Another thing is, "smokeless tobacco" can't tie up my hands. So I can use it no matter what I'm doing.

If you'd like to go "smokeless," here's what you do. Just look for three great brands.

There's Skoal, my favorite, which has a wintergreen taste. Copenhagen, a straight tobacco.

And Happy Days Mint. All three dated for freshness.

They'll each give you the tobacco pleasure you're looking for.

out on the skid pad, you move down the track to the accident simulator. This is a setup that teaches you how to make evasive maneuvers in emergency situations. It makes you realize that you have alternatives other than the panic stop when you see trouble ahead.

The simulator is three lanes governed by three overhead traffic lights. You approach the lights by driving down the center lane until your car passes an electric eye just in front of the lights. As the circuit breaks, the lights change in a way determined by the instructor: two go red and one goes green, all go red, or two go green and one goes red. Your job is to drive for the green lane or, if all three lights turn red, to stop before you get to them. Beginning at low speeds, you work up to somewhere between 35 and 40 m.p.h., which is the fastest you can go, given the distances involved. You quickly learn a lot about your own reflexes and reaction times, the capacity of a car for fast turning, and how much distance you need to keep between you and other cars.

The accident simulator also helps you learn the value of maximum effective braking. Most people, unfortunately, will lock their brakes in an emergency situation, thinking—or feeling instinctively—that if some pressure is good, stomping the pedal down and keeping it down is best. But you learn behind the wheel at the accident simulator that choosing maximum brake pressure (perhaps at first locking the brakes, but then letting up slightly) stops you much sooner than locking—and you avoid a skid as well.

In looking back, you can't help wondering why all driver's training courses don't have accident simulators and skid pads. How many accidents could be avoided, and lives saved, if drivers learned and practiced the accident-avoidance techniques taught at the Bondurant school? (The school often gets letters from graduates describing highway emergencies they successfully coped with, thanks to their training.) You hope you'll never have to use that part of your training, but you would regard the $500 to be well-spent if the training at the Bondurant school enabled you to avoid even one accident.

11 Ways to Make Your Old Car Last and Last

By Daniel Barclay

Until they can afford the luxury of a new car, a good many owners this year are buying used cars, or keeping cars that are approaching—or have passed—usual trade-in mileage.

Some of these owners have remarkable success with older cars. (The author recently found it quite possible to run a middle-priced car 130,000 miles with no difficulty.)

Others will face endless problems and repairs.

If you have an old car:

1. Run it! Failure to put mileage on the engine ruins more cars than almost anything else. (It should have at least one 30-mile hot-engine run a week.)
2. Unless you make regular engine-heating runs at speeds over 45, you should change the oil once a month. It's the best preventive maintenance you can buy.
3. Wash frequently behind the side moldings and name plates! Touch a car-wash jet nozzle directly against each molding. You'll be amazed at the endless stream of mud, sand and salt that gushes out.
4. Keep your car outdoors all night after you've washed it or driven in rain. Those rusty sores you see on old car doors and fenders often are a sign that the owner puts his wet car in a closed garage. After a rainy day, leave a car out in the wind to dry.
5. Open up doors, windows, trunk, and even the hood, for a few hours on warm, sunny days. Park your car in a breezy place to dry out.

6. Look under each door and rocker panel to be sure the drain holes are open. (Usually they're plugged.) Listen for water in the doors. If you hear it gurgling, the drain is plugged. To make their own cars last longer, some veteran mechanics actually tear off the rubber valves that are supposed to let the drains work—but don't.
7. To make an old car ride like new: (1) give it good, new, thick-treaded tires; (2) install new shock absorbers; (3) have a mechanic adjust and tighten the worn steering linkage. Detroit mechanics say nothing improves the handling of an old car more than (2) and (3).
8. Have a look at the brakes before the linings wear thin and the drums (or discs) start to score.
9. Change or clean spark plugs and condenser, and have a tune-up regularly—all priceless insurance for long engine life.
10. Lift carpet, air out floor and replace with fresh (dry) carpet if necessary.
11. Have small paint nicks—even the smallest—fixed within hours. A small stone bruise, if left unpainted in the dew of a single night, can start a rust "cancer" that will quickly eat through metal. Learn how to fix a nick yourself. (It takes five minutes. Keep on hand a $1 touch-up tube of your car's enamel.)

Venita has known a lot of suffering.

Venita is a shy little girl with big, dark eyes. You can see by her wistful expression that she has known much suffering in her short life in India.

She hardly remembers her parents. Her mother was in ill health when Venita was born. She died when Venita was only two years old.

Her father earned very little and lived in one room in a tenement in Delhi. He was unable to support and care for the frail little girl. He asked a children's Home, affiliated with the Christian Children's Fund, to take care of his daughter.

There is still a sad, haunting look that lingers in Venita's dark eyes. But she's improving. Gradually she's losing her shyness, and she smiles and plays with other children who share the same room at the Home.

Venita now has the care she needs. Her CCF sponsor here in this country is helping give her a better chance for a useful, happy life.

But there are many other needy children still waiting for sponsors.

You can sponsor such a child for only $15 a month. Just fill out the coupon and send it with your first monthly check.

You will be sent the child's photograph, name and mailing address, plus a description of the project where the child receives assistance.

You may write to your sponsored child and your letter will be answered. You will get the child's original letter and an English translation. (Children unable to write are assisted by family members or staff workers.)

Your love can make a big difference in the life of a needy little child. Please fill out the coupon now...

Sponsors urgently needed in Brazil, India, Guatemala, Indonesia, Kenya and Thailand.

$1250⁰⁰ DIAMOND RINGS

(SET IN 14 KARAT GOLD ELECTROPLATE)

FINAL OFFER

NOTICE: Due to rising costs of gold, base metals and labor, this offer may never be repeated again.

given to readers for only $5 when you send coupon

NOTICE—CONDITIONS OF THIS FINAL OFFER

Now any reader of Family Weekly has the right to buy any of the magnificent rings illustrated for only $5—provided these instructions are faithfully followed:

(1) Rush order in 10 days or less if possible. (2) No C.O.D. orders. If in Florida, do visit our showrooms. Otherwise order by mail. Send coupon with check, cash, or charge to BankAmericard or Master Charge. This FINAL OFFER will not be repeated to readers this season. Please order at once. Orders received too late returned promptly.

The FREE HOME TRIAL COUPON below entitles you to wear and enjoy any or all of the golden beauties shown—without risking 1¢. Take your pick, then clip the pictures of your favorites and rush them with coupon below. Each ring has a grand total of 100 points or better of famous KRYSTAGEMS—amazing man-made stones that rival nature-made diamonds costing up to $1250 or more!

AMAZE YOUR FRIENDS

We'll gladly rush all the rings you choose right to your door, so you can compare them with costly diamond rings. But please do us a favor. When they arrive, let your friends look. See how surprised they'll be and maybe a little envious too! Practically anyone seeing Krystagems wishes he could afford one too. Little does he know it isn't a genuine diamond! That's because Krystagems aren't phoney looking plastic stones. Now you can prove the difference with the following test:

(A) Drop Krystagem and any plastic "diamond" in a cupful of acetone. (B) Next day remove both stones. The fake plastic "diamond" has become mushy and worthless. But Krystagem comes out gleaming—without a scratch. (C) Study the facets on Krystagem. How precisely they're cut! Virtually like costliest diamonds! That's why Krystagems sparkle even in dim moonlight. You're sure to love this creation of the crafty jewel simulator. It's so hard, so dense, so free from specks and flaws!

NOW LESS THAN 1¢ ON DOLLAR!

Just because Krystagem now costs only $5—don't mistake it for dull, plastic fakes. Of course, Krystagem is different from a nature-made diamond. But the nicest difference is that you can get it for $5—not $1250 or more!

WHY DO MILLIONAIRES WEAR SIMULATED DIAMONDS?

Many millionaires and movie stars wear simulated diamonds—but keep the secret from the public. Think of this: those "genuine" diamonds your neighbors show off at parties may not be so genuine after all! Krystagems look so realistic, only an expert can tell them from diamonds. Many wealthy persons keep expensive diamonds in a bank safe and wear simulations to avoid burglary or loss.

A GREAT GIFT FOR A SPECIAL PERSON

Can you think of a greater gift for that Someone Special—a gift that costs less than a fine box of chocolates or bottle of perfume? Krystagems really make lovely presents. Ideal for Christmas, anniversary or graduation... or just an expression of your love. He or she will probably never know that Krystagem is not a natural diamond—unless you tell!

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED OR YOUR MONEY BACK

You don't risk a single penny! Test it. Wear it 30 days. If not 100% satisfied, return and get your $5 back by return mail! Stocks definitely limited. To avoid disappointment, please tear out coupon and rush today—by AIR MAIL if possible.

Liv Ullmann:

them a chance to find out for themselves what life should be and what they would like to do.

FW: Does your daughter ever make you feel like you're the daughter?

LIV: Very often. In a way, I love it. Sometimes I go to her for comfort because her reactions are much healthier, more grown-up and less sentimental than mine!

FW: Do you mean Linn is more honest?

LIV: She's more matter-of-fact. Sometimes, I really feel I can go to her and get some answers to some problems. Of course, I can't really. Actually, you must solve those yourself.

FW: Can you recall a specific incident when you went to Linn?

LIV: Often, when I feel upset, Linn has said, "I know what you should do because I know what I do when I'm unhappy. I put on some strange clothes and put a silly thing on my head and take down my umbrella or a balloon. Then I go outside and look up at the trees. Or I look at people. I stop and talk to them. After awhile, I have forgotten my troubles!" This little eight-year-old said that. And it's true! I see her go out in these masquerades or costumes all the time. And when she's upset with me, she really goes out and looks at the trees! I think that's a pretty healthy outlook, don't you?

FW: Perhaps that's the main difference between your childhood and Linn's?

LIV: Oh yes, she's much freer. Also, she knows much more about psychological things than I ever knew. By now, everybody has read more about psychology. Now you can say, "Please cry, my child. It's good to cry because then you won't keep it inside. It won't make knots in your stomach later!" Now when she cries and I say, "Please shut up," she says, "Well, I must cry. I don't want knots in my stomach."

FW: How does Linn react to your change of moods?

LIV: She's very sweet. If I'm sad, she comes and pats me and gives me a little teddy bear to hold. She feels concern for me, but she doesn't get sad or depressed about it.

FW: Can you recall other incidents when Linn has helped you through low or bad moments?

LIV: Nothing other than saying things like that. I want to tell her how children are born. That's my big complex in life now, but she never comes and asks me. I have such a lovely story I want to read to her about where children come from. Sometimes I ask her, "Don't you wonder about how you came into this world?" But she never wonders! Or I ask, "Wouldn't you like to know? I'd be happy to tell you." And Linn says, "No, I don't want to know!" Finally, one Sunday morning, I didn't want to get out of bed. Linn was in despair. She came to my bedroom door and said, "Mommy, if you get up, I'll let you tell me where children come from." It was her last effort to get me up. That's the only time she has ever asked me about it!

FW: If you don't like something Linn does, how do you approach her?

LIV: Sometimes diplomatically, and very often just like my mother did with me. I mean I can hear my mother's words come out of my mouth. I try to explain and talk about things and not give her certain rules. However, I think she still needs some guidelines in order to be a happy being. I don't believe in complete freedom.

FW: What kinds of things are you strict about?

LIV: I believe in being polite, but not a creepy kind of politeness reserved only for grownups. It's important to be polite to children, too. It's important to have a code of behavior in dealing with all people. You should be consistent in your manner. Linn is very aware of this. For example, she sometimes tells me, "You are not always nice to me. Why should I be nice to you?" Of course, she has a good argument. Too often parents neglect a child at times and don't listen to them, or they say, "I don't have time right now." And they do wrong to the child. And yet, we expect the child not to do this to us. This child is right in saying that they have a right to expect the same behavior from us as we expect from them.

FW: What was your greatest punishment as a child?

LIV: When my mother's mouth quivered and she just said, "Okay," and left the room with a kind of sadness. I felt I had done something wrong. I had a guilty conscience but I didn't really know what I had done. I just knew I had caused some catastrophe for her, but I didn't know what it was about.

FW: Wasn't that more frightening than if she had said, "I think you are wrong"?

LIV: Of course. Anything you don't understand is more frightening than a confrontation. It's the same way with adults when people don't confront each other. They keep a facade and avoid discussing things. To me, that's very sad.

Leaf of Life

Amazing! Mystical!

The Leaf of Life is so amazing the Yogis of India believe that these mystical leaves possess the Secret of Life.

Wherever a leaf falls, a new plant starts to grow . . . on air, water, or soil.

Yes, the Leaf of Life can start to grow on air alone. New plants grow from the edges of each leaf.

After it starts, put the leaf in a pot. The bigger the pot, the bigger the plant will grow — from one to six feet tall. You can have the size you want and it grows in sun or shade.

It blossoms with fragrant pink & lime bell-like flowers that look like jeweled, oriental lanterns.

The Leaf of Life makes a thoughtful gift, symbolic of wishing your friends a long life and happiness.

It comes with complete instructions and is easy to grow.

This week, Food Editor Marilyn Hansen fixes roast turkey. Says Marilyn: "What makes this roast turkey different is the fact that we're roasting only half a turkey! I asked the butcher to saw a frozen 10-lb. turkey in half. Then I stuffed and roasted one half and stored the other."

A Turkey Feast—Without All Those Leftovers

ROAST HALF TURKEY—HERB STUFFING

4 tablespoons butter or margarine
 ½ cup chopped onion
 ½ cup chopped celery
 ½ cup chopped green pepper
 ¼ teaspoon thyme leaves
 ¼ teaspoon savory leaves
 ½ teaspoon salt
 ¼ teaspoon ground black pepper
 1 egg, lightly beaten
 4 cups day-old bread cubes
 4-5 lb. thawed frozen half turkey

1. Preheat oven to 350° F. Make up stuffing. Heat 2 tablespoons butter in large skillet and sauté onion, celery and green pepper about 8 minutes, stirring frequently until vegetables are tender.
2. Stir in thyme, savory, salt, pepper, egg and bread cubes. Toss until well-combined.
3. Rinse turkey with cold water and pat dry with paper towels. Turn turkey cavity side up and fill with stuffing.
4. Cover bottom of turkey and stuffing with large sheet of foil. Turn turkey and foil cavity side down, crushing foil around turkey to make a border. Place turkey on rack in foil-lined roasting pan.
5. Heat remaining 2 tablespoons butter until melted and brush it over entire turkey half. Cover turkey loosely with a tent sheet of foil and roast 2½-3 hours or until juices run clear and turkey leg is soft when squeezed.

Makes 6 servings

GOLDEN GRAVY

2 tablespoons butter or margarine
 2 tablespoons flour
 ½ cup turkey drippings
 1 cup water

Make gravy: Heat 2 tablespoons butter in medium saucepan. Stir in flour smoothly. Gradually add drippings and water, heat to boiling, stirring constantly.

Makes 1½ cups gravy

HERB DINNER BISCUITS*

2 cups unsifted all-purpose flour
 2 tablespoons wheat germ
 3 teaspoons baking powder

Elizabeth Gee

Golden brown roast turkey is popular at special family dinners.

1 teaspoon salt
 1½ teaspoons caraway seed
 1½ teaspoons dried minced onion
 ¼ cup shortening
 ¾ cup milk

1. Heat oven to 450° F. Measure flour, wheat germ, baking powder, salt, caraway seed and minced onion into bowl.
2. Cut in shortening thoroughly with a pastry blender or two knives, until mixture looks like coarse meal.
3. Stir in almost all the milk. If dough is not pliable, add just enough milk to make a soft, puffy, easy-to-roll dough. (Adding too much milk makes dough sticky, not enough milk makes biscuits dry.)
4. Turn out dough on a lightly floured board. Knead lightly about 10-15 times, about ½ minute. Roll ½-inch thick. Cut with a floured biscuit cutter. Place on ungreased baking sheet. Bake 10-12 minutes, or until golden brown.

Makes 16 biscuits

*Drop Biscuits: Increase milk to 1 cup. Drop dough by spoonfuls onto greased baking sheet.

WHAT'S SMART?

Turkey is a good food-dollar value this fall. By sawing a 10-lb. bird in half at the meat counter, you get two convenient and practical-sized segments for family serving. Prices were 65 to 69 cents a pound the last time we checked.

Now, a blunt promise by an eminent dermatologist:

You can make your face look as though time was running backwards!

Revealed by an eminent dermatologist (see his word-by-word statement below): How, with the proper scientific instruction, you can literally look ten to twenty years younger than your real age . . . erase wrinkles, blemishes and coarseness . . . and do it all using nothing more than such simple ingredients as water, soap, and (especially) salt!

This is, quite frankly, a vital message about what is perhaps the most revolutionary home-medical-guide ever published on facial care . . . facial beauty . . . renewed facial youth. Its results are so spectacular, its documentation is so overwhelming, and its methods are so vital to your future life that we must repeat, in full, two more quotes from its opening pages:

"As a matter of fact, we have only recently acquired the ability to really do something about the more serious changes in appearance that accompany aging . . .

"In the past, the average person stood very little chance of being able to look younger. Without wealth or the right genes, there was very little hope. The advent of modern skin care has changed all this. Now it is no longer necessary to pamper yourself or be born with good skin. The idle rich no longer have any advantage . . . the genes you inherit are no longer a limiting factor, because we can now compensate for even delicate, age-prone skin. . . Thanks to modern research, we now know what causes many of the unattractive problems that appear with age. With this kind of knowledge, we have been able to develop methods that are effective in combatting or solving these problems.

"The practical application of these methods can produce spectacular results. A person can easily look ten to twenty years younger than his or her actual age, and this can be achieved with a minimum of effort. My own interest in this subject was first stimulated by an eminent dermatologist who was one of my first teachers. He was not only an early advocate of these new methods, but he practiced them himself. The results were truly impressive. At almost eighty years of age, he appeared to be in his early fifties."

This, Then, Is The Startling New Promise That Lies Right At Your Fingertips! And Here Are The Discoveries That Are Going To Give It To You!

For example—

Age is no longer a barrier to a flawless complexion, because the outer layer of your skin never stops growing! And, if you learn the right way to utilize that growth, you may actually reverse the dreaded aging process, and grow younger-looking, not older.

The ultimate moisturizer! How it can eliminate moisture loss instantly, and actually repair the ravages caused by years of facial dryness.

The three insidious structural changes that create "old" skin, and how to stop each at its source.

For example, master this simple technique of protecting the all-important "inner layer" of skin from damage, and you will never need the services of a plastic surgeon.

How your kitchen stove can make you look old, old, old—unless you learn how to use it—like this.

How certain household aids (that you use every day) actually poison your skin. Get rid of them—now.

How to keep the sun from turning your face into a wrinkled prune.

How to protect your skin against air pollution. (Otherwise, if you live in a big city, be prepared to have people guess you're ten years older than you really are.)

How to banish blocked pores and blackheads—for good.

The Number One Rule for protecting your face against all the hazards of the environment. Follow it faithfully (see page 36), and when your friends look as old as Methuselah, you'll hardly have changed at all.

Indisputable Proof That It Would Take A Century For Your Face To Look Old, If You Didn't Abuse It Like This . . .

How to "quick-clean" your face, so thoroughly, and so fast, that you take years off it, rather than put them on.

Invisible sources of skin inflammations and allergies, that may be ruining your complexion right now. In other words, how to practice modern acne therapy, right in your own home.

Why you may never have to spend a cent on commercial face-care products again. For two reasons: Because most of them are actually harmful to your skin (see list on page 67). And because none of them could ever do as much for that skin as the almost-costless preparations given to you on page 71.

For example, the best daytime base in the world (and you should wear it every minute of every day, to keep the youth-force sealed in your skin) costs only 84¢ for a six-month supply. And the best night cream you can buy costs slightly more—about 91¢ for a six-month supply.

And the best skin freshener probably costs a penny a day.

And not one of them contains a single ingredient that will unknowingly age your face, or dry out your face, or irritate your face. All they do is pull the filth out of that face, at the same time they seal in the youth.

But What About The Old Skin That's Marring Your Face Right Now? What Do You Do About It? THIS—

Here, on page 72, is (in our opinion at least) the really startling breakthrough in facial care in this generation. It is called, "Skin Thinning". It takes about two minutes of your time a week, and it costs about 3¢ a treatment. It's basic ingredient is salt. Plain ordinary table salt. But used in such a way that it almost instantly cuts down wrinkles. Opens clogged pores. Helps prevent age spots and whiteheads. May actually have your husband cooing with delight the very first day you use it.

And there's still more—much more—like this:

How the wrong vitamins can poison your skin. And the right vitamin therapy cause spectacular changes overnight. (See page 108.)

How dry, scaly skin can often be eliminated by a simple change in your diet. (See page 107.)

How to Cut Down on That Restless Nibbling

If we practice eating more slowly, putting down our knife and fork every few mouthfuls for a couple of minutes, we learn to stop gobbling; our blood sugar has more time to rise, we're satisfied sooner, and we eat less. Okay, we can try to control our own speed; but what can we do about having to sit at a dinner table with people who eat so slowly that, while waiting for them, we end up restlessly nibbling on bread, picking at the roast or having an extra helping of salad? Faced with this dilemma, diet experts advise forgetting protocol; if possible, get up after the entrée and leave the table,

Bobby Vinton: My Ten Favorite Records

According to "Billboard" Magazine, Bobby Vinton has had more hit singles than any other male artist. Starting with "Roses Are Red" in 1962, his records have sold over 30 million copies all over the world, earning him over 12 Gold Records. In 1974 Bobby recorded a different type of song. Of Polish descent, he decided to do something for the Polish-Americans. He wrote "Melody of Love," and it soared to No. 1 on the charts. As a result, he was nicknamed "The Polish Prince." This fall, Bobby will host his own TV program, "The Bobby Vinton Show."

butter out of arm's reach. At home, see that all the second-helping dessert temptations, like pie, are also removed while you're having your coffee. Just an extra "sliver" of apple pie can contain 150 calories.

RIDING HIGH IN THE SADDLE A tall story

If you're 7 feet, 5½ inches tall and weigh 294 pounds, like Christopher Greener, getting anything to fit is a problem. But just as clothing can be made to order, so can bicycles—as Greener found out when he went to work for a cycle manufacturer. In conjunction with a local frame builder, a bicycle was built out of aircraft tubing to fit Greener's gargantuan proportions. You can't miss it—it's 7 feet long, 4½ feet wide, and has a frame size of 3 feet. While some people claim they are "sitting on top of the world," Greener really does. He's the tallest man in England.

When the old photo of Bob Hope and his six brothers appeared in the Father's Day FAMILY WEEKLY, readers deluged us with inquiries about what had become of his six brothers. Bob gave us this report: As the fifth son of William Henry and Avis Townes Hope, he had four older brothers (Ivor, Fred, Jim and Jack) and two younger ones (Sidney and George). Only George was born in this country. Bob explained why he immigrated to Cleveland from Eltham, England, with his family: "I realized I wasn't getting anywhere, and I knew even then I could never be King." Of the seven brothers, only Bob and two of his older brothers—Fred and Jim—survive. Fred has a Cleveland meat-distributing business, and Jim sells real estate in North Hollywood, Calif. Bob's closest brother was Jack, who died in 1962 at age 62. He had been Bob's liaison and goodwill ambassador back when Bob and Bing were box-office Kings doing the "Road" pictures for Paramount. Ivor, the oldest, died in 1969 at age 78, and was president of Hope Metal Products in Cleveland. George, the youngest, died at age 58, a week later. He was a comedy writer and a coordinator of Bob's TV shows. Sidney, an auto mechanic and inventor, died in the mid-50's.

REV. BRUCE HANKS Or is it Rev. Lincoln?

The Gettysburg Address may not seem the usual way to end a church sermon, but the Rev. Bruce Hanks of Minneapolis does just that. "Over the years people kept remarking on my resemblance to Abraham Lincoln [Hanks actually is a descendant of the 16th President], so I started studying up on his life with the same intensity I had always devoted to religion. Knowing that Lincoln will always be a great source of fascination to all Americans, I began to integrate much of his philosophy into my sermons," Hanks said. Attired in Lincoln-esque dress, Hanks is indeed a dead ringer for Lincoln—which may be one reason his sermons have become so popular. Hanks feels another reason is that "we all know Lincoln was a very religious man who attributed his political successes to his devotion." Whatever the reason, Rev. Hanks has made religion more interesting in Minneapolis.

ARMOUR'S ARMOURY By Richard Armour

HUH?

My wife considers it absurd
When I say "Huh?" when I have heard.
How does she know I've heard?

The reason
Is one that she finds hardly pleasin'.
Just after I say "Huh?"—here's why—
To what she said, I then reply.

Perhaps her words don't sink in quickly

Because my skull's constructed thickly.
Or I need time, a slight delay,
To think about what I should say.
But honestly, it's just a ritual,
That "Huh?" of mine's become habitual.

Patient to analyst: "My wife and I are slowly drifting apart. Can you suggest anything to speed it up?"

—Gene Yassenak

"Oh, what a lovely cow!" exclaimed the young city girl. "But why hasn't it any of those big horns?"

"There are many reasons," the farmer replied quietly. "Some cows do not have them until later in life. Others have them removed, while other breeds are born without them. This cow doesn't have horns because it is a horse."

—Thomas LaMance

A lot of folks nowadays are looking for other means to live beyond.
