

Wilmington 10 Lawyers Talk Federal Court Move

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The Wilmington 10 have lost their final appeal in North Carolina courts, and their attorney says he will move the fight into federal court unless Gov. Jim Hunt pardons the group. Hunt has said repeatedly he would take no action in the case until court appeals have been exhausted. He would not comment Thursday on whether he would act now. The state Court of Appeals Wednesday refused to review a Superior Court judge's decision in May not to give the Wilmington 10 a new trial. The Wilmington 10 are nine black men convicted in 1972 of conspiracy and unlawful burning during racial violence in Wilmington and a white woman found guilty of being an accessory in the same case. The woman has been paroled, but the men are serving long prison terms. All 10 have argued since their conviction that the state tampered with witnesses in the original trial. The appeals court decision ended the legal battle in state courts because of a special statute governing such postconviction proceedings as the Wilmington 10's request for a new trial. The law says appeals court decisions in these matters are final and may not be taken to the North Carolina Supreme Court. The request for a new trial was considered last May during a week-long hearing in Burgaw. Charlotte attorney James E. Ferguson, chief defense lawyer for the 10, said Thursday he would continue legal efforts to overturn the convictions in U.S. District Court here unless Hunt pardons the 10 or commutes their sentences. An appeal challenging aspects of the original trial in 1972 already is pending in the federal court, and Ferguson said it would be expanded to include the denial of a new trial. A federal court challenge could take years to resolve, Ferguson said as he renewed his appeal to Hunt to intervene in the case.

The governor recently instructed his legal counsel, Jack L. Cozart, to gather information on each of the defendants, including personal histories and records of their conduct while in prison. Cozart said Thursday he hoped to have the information ready for the governor in a few weeks. "I can't say that I'm surprised at the ruling because of the pattern of how North Carolina courts have dealt with this case from the outset," Ferguson said in a Charlotte interview. "But in reality it may be good that the court has taken the action that it did because it means that we have now completed the ruling in state courts..."

He pointed out that Hunt earlier had indicated he would not act in the Wilmington 10 case until it had run its course in the courts. "We do intend to take it further unless we get some action from the governor which would eliminate the necessity of taking it further," said Ferguson.

PANAMA CITY (AP) — While waiting to see whether Panamanian officials can agree to changes that could save the Panama Canal treaty, Senate Minority Leader Howard Baker says he plans to find out what other Latin American leaders think about the pact. Baker will visit Brazil, Colombia and Mexico after leaving here Saturday, and said he intends to quiz senior officials in each country on the subject. Some treaty opponents in the United States contend that leaders of those governments, while publicly endorsing the idea of a treaty turning the waterway over to Panama, secretly prefer that it remain under U.S. control. Baker said this was a question he would pursue in his travels to Brasilia, Bogota and Mexico City. The added stops, he said, were arranged after he was invited here by Panamanian leader Gen. Omar Torrijos.

Coal Operators Said Not Willing To Resume Talks

By ROBERT A. DOBKIN

WASHINGTON (AP) — United Mine Workers President Arnold Miller sent the union's bargaining team home today because of what he charged is the coal operators' refusal to resume negotiations on a new contract that could end the month-long nationwide coal strike.

boycotted negotiations "despite the suffering inflicted on 800,000 miners and their families."

The union leader's statement was seen as an effort to pressure the industry into resuming negotiations. Officials of the Bituminous Coal Operators Association, the industry's bargaining arm, had no immediate comment.

Pres. Carter In Belgium On His Last Stop

By FRANK CORMIER
Associated Press Writer

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — President Carter came to Belgium today, the last stop on his foreign tour, to assure the Atlantic allies that any new nuclear arms agreement with the Soviet Union will take account of Western Europe's security concerns. Soon after Carter arrived about 20 demonstrators staged a protest against the neutron bomb, a nuclear weapon that kills without causing extensive damage to structures outside the immediate blast area. The demonstrators gathered a few blocks from the U.S. Embassy carrying banners reading: "No to the Neutron Bomb." Belgian police said 14 protesters were taken away for identity checks.

Some military experts feel the weapon would be helpful in countering a Soviet attack in the close confines of a European battlefield since it could knock out forces with radiation while inflicting only limited property damage. While Carter prepared for his talks with NATO leaders the New York Times reported Friday that a five-month U.S.

government study of the world military balance contends that neither the United States nor the Soviet Union can win a strategic nuclear war.

The Times said it had obtained a copy of the interagency report and said it concludes that the United States and its allies face problems in defending against conventional attack in Western Europe and the Far East.

According to the newspaper account there would only be a remote chance NATO forces could stop a Soviet attack in Europe without losing territory. It said the findings have contributed to the drafting of a new policy putting greater emphasis on conventional forces.

The president flew to Brussels after a final conference in Paris with French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and a meeting with Francois Mitterrand, the leader of the French Socialist Party, who is campaigning for a leftist victory in the National Assembly elections in March.

Unpaid Loans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government is trying to collect $416 million in unpaid student loans and it says a breakdown shows students in California and Texas are the worst offenders.

The U.S. Office of Education said that the $416 million figure reflects student loans that have not been paid back during the 10 years prior to Oct. 1, 1977.

The latest state by state breakdown, dated June 30, 1977, showed $318 million in defaulted loans with the average amount being $922. That breakdown showed that better than two out of every five defaulted loans were recorded in either Texas or California.

The Department of Health Education and Welfare has announced a campaign to get the money back.

The government said according to the June figures 86,606 persons defaulted loans in California for a total of more than $100 million, while 40,571 persons, defaulted in Texas for a total of more than $31.3 million.

The state-by-state breakdown used the students' last known address, the department said.

WHAT'S LAW?

When a store has merchandise put up in plastic binders, say a six-pack of beer or soft drinks or a package of margarine or popsicles, and the customer needs a smaller number of the items, can the store legally refuse to sell the number needed by the customer? J. G.

This seems to be a matter of store policy, rather than law. Local stores surveyed about the situation all said that they bend over backwards to accommodate the customer. "We don't really mind the breaking of packages of anything except beer," said Don Merritt, manager of the local Kroger Sav-On Food and Drugs store. "We don't have the facilities to stock individual cans or bottles of beer and do try to sell these only in cartons or binders." Rose Guterrez of the Happy Store convenience store chain said that her stores' policy is to keep a good supply of individual items, in other words, to break the packages themselves for the convenience of customers who wish to buy one or just a few of any item.

Organizational Meet In Kinston

KINSTON — Over 100 stockholders met here Wednesday evening for an organizational meeting of the newly formed Farm and Home Savings and Loan Association Inc.

Newly elected chairman of the board Felix Harvey told the gathering that 200 stockholders had subscribed $1,200,000 to begin the operation which is scheduled to open around Feb. 1.

It was noted that a site at the corner of Carey Road and Vernon Avenue is being purchased and a colonial type structure containing 1,500 square feet will be constructed in the near future. A temporary mobile office will be used until the new building is completed.

The stockholders elected nine directors at the meeting, including Harvey, Sol Schechter, Oscar Greene Jr., Harvey Beech, Sen. Harold Hardison, Merle Edwards, Ely Perry Jr., T. J. Turner and John Cutter.

In addition to Harvey, who was elected by the directors as chairman of the board, new officers named included: Edwards, vice chairman; Cutter, chief executive officer and president; Turner, vice president; Beech, secretary; and Schechter, treasurer.

The association will accept savings deposits, make farm and home loans, handle IRA pension plans, and participate in other savings and loan financial transactions, it was announced.

Hungarians Regain An Ancient Crown

By STEPHEN H. MILLER
Associated Press Writer

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — The Hungarian government, after a wait of more than three decades, accepted the Holy Crown of St. Stephen from the United States today as a sign of improved relations between the two countries. Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance flew here from Paris for the official ceremonies turning over the golden, jeweled crown, Hungary's most revered symbol of nationhood.

Parliament Speaker Antal Aproz, delivering the main address, said the return of the 1,000-year-old crown and other coronation relics "illustrates well the favorable development in the world situation and, within this, in Hungarian-American relations in recent years."

"We welcome this," he said, "but we are also conscious of the fact that there are still a number of hostilities" to be dealt with. Foreign Minister Frigyes

Puza is to meet with Vance to discuss one unresolved issue, Hungary's request for most-favored-nation trading status with the United States. Hundreds of officials and guests were invited to the parliament building beside the Danube River to welcome home the crown and its associated regalia, which were taken from Hungary and ended up in U.S. hands in 1945 to keep the Russians from getting them.

The event, like the airport arrival ceremony for the crown Thursday night, was an invitation-only affair. Ordinary Hungarians were promised a 45-minute television special this evening.

The official media still were not saying today when Hungarians would get a chance to see the crown or where it was to be displayed. But the Budapest newspaper Magyar Nemzet carried a small classified ad today urgently seeking room custodians for the national museum.

The communist government planned to celebrate the return with special lighting of the Buda Heights overlooking the Danube, including the castle where the crown was kept until 1944.

Explosion At Munition Plant

RADFORD, Va. (AP) — Four employees were injured and two may be missing in an early-morning explosion at the Hercules Inc. ammunition plant here.

W.H. Coughlin, public affairs officer at the plant, said today the 6:10 a.m. explosion involved the nitroglycerine nitrator and storehouse and a spent acid storehouse.

Names of those injured or missing are not yet available, Coughlin said.

A board of inquiry will be formed to investigate the cause of the explosion, he said.

No other details were available immediately.

Pentagon Confirms New Test Of Russian Satellite-Killer

By FRED S. HOFFMAN
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviets are continuing tests of their satellite-killing weapon system, the Pentagon confirms, with the eighth trial conducted shortly before Christmas.

But Defense Department officials are refusing to say whether that test was successful. Intelligence sources said most U.S. experts believe the test was a failure but that some are not certain.

Official confirmation of the Dec. 21 Soviet test came from the Pentagon Thursday night, about six hours after spokesman Tom Lambert told newsmen, "My instructions are just to say nothing about it."

The Pentagon has been turning aside questions about the reported test since shortly before Christmas.

Lambert did not identify who had issued the instructions, but other administration sources said President Carter's National Security Council last month ordered the Pentagon to say nothing about the latest Soviet test.

Last October, the Pentagon readily responded to inquiries about the Russian anti-satellite test at that time, and said it was "presumably a successful intercept."

The reasons for the recent clampdown — and for Thursday's switch — were not made clear.

The pre-Christmas Soviet anti-satellite test was the eighth in nearly two years. Half of them have been rated successful, and Defense Secretary Harold Brown said in early October that the Russians now have the ability to attack some U.S. satellites in space.

Brown said this "is something of concern to me because we rely a good deal on our space systems."

Brown stressed that a U.S. ability to use satellites to watch Soviet military developments and to provide warning of possible attack helps prevent war.

The United States is engaged in preliminary research and design work on a possible anti-satellite system.

Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The Air Force says it's not fair to boil down the controversy over North Carolina peat bogs to a simple conflict between military preparedness and energy development.

Col. Robert Beale, commander of Seymour Johnson Air Force Base near Goldsboro, says peat is not the only energy issue at stake in a 45,000-acre tract rich in peat currently used as bombing range. "We could always go somewhere else, but we would expend so much more in fuel and money to get there than we do now," Beale said of the four-hour drive from the base to the range in Dare County.

The Air Force has leased the land since 1964 and last week filed condemnation papers in court to acquire the property from First Colony Farms, Inc., a multi-county operation which says the 37,000 acres of peat on the range are too valuable as fuel.

A federal court judge granted a temporary restraining order against the government takeover. A hearing is scheduled Monday.

The Air Force says it's not trying to stop the peat operation, and argues there is room for both uses, since First Colony owns an additional 109,000 acres of peat. The corporation says it probably would have enough fuel to serve one or more peat-fired power plants without the range, but doesn't like the idea.

"They're not planning on harvesting that particular area of peat for some time," Beale said in a telephone interview Thursday. "By the time they get ready to remove it, our technology may be such that we may not have to practice bombing anymore."

The government leases the land for $500,000 a year. The original lease was with West Virginia Pulp and Paper Co., who sold the land to First Colony three years ago for approximately $150 an acre, says Hobart Truesdell, president of First Colony Farms.

"We agreed to a three-year lease with a possible two-year extension. We really didn't like the idea of a bombing range right on top of us," Truesdell said. The lease expired June 30, 1977, but was extended six months.

Without the bombing range area, Sandy Schenck of First Colony Development Co. says the corporation could not harvest either the 108 million tons of peat on the range or an additional 36 million tons on the perimeter of the range.

Beale and two North Carolina congressmen disagree.

"I proposed that the Air Force acquire the bombing range, because it's vital to our defense. And then give First Colony the timber and mineral rights and let them get in there and harvest when the range isn't used," said Rep. Walter B. Jones, D-N.C., Thursday in a telephone interview from his Farmville office.

"My contention is that if condemnation proceedings are approved, I'm confident if the peat is found economically feasible, the Air Force will review the matter," he said.

If the peat harvesting methods eventually developed by First Colony prove economically and environmentally feasible, the farm would have enough peat for many years before it would need the bombing range peat, said Rep. Charles Whitley, D-N.C.

"The numbers of places you could have a bombing range for low altitude flights are very limited," he said in a telephone interview from his Goldsboro office.

The corporation plans to build four 400-megawatt power plants for the low sulfur fuel in an agreement with the North Carolina Electric Membership Corporation. The agreement is only verbal, hinging on research into whether proposed harvesting methods will work.

Although part of the project could go on without the bombing range land, it would hurt.

"We certainly are exploring possibilities that are in both of our best interest," Schenck said. "It just does not look possible (to allow use of the bombing range and harvesting.) We would be happy to allow the Air Force to use it up to 1979."

First Colony has criticized the Air Force for beginning condemnation proceedings without first looking for alternate bombing range sites.

"We can sympathize with the military. Military preparedness is in the national interest, but so is energy development," Schenck said.

Simon Rich, president of First Colony Development, said the Air Force should wait until the bogs' full value can be determined.

"The Air Force is afraid the peat is going to become of value. Then if it does and by 1979 we have proved the value of peat, then they will have to go somewhere else," he said.

The government lists $6.8 million as the fair market value it would pay to take over the land.

Although Whitley and Jones support the Air Force in the matter, Gov. Jim Hunt and Sen. Robert Morgan, D-N.C., have lined up on the other side.

"I think it is extremely important that North Carolina be encouraged to make its contributions to the national energy supplies and to develop its own energy self-sufficiency," Hunt has written in a letter to U.S. Defense Secretary Harold Brown.

Cardiovascular Disease Death Rate Said Down

The news coming out of the annual scientific sessions of the American Heart Association the end of 1977 was good: death rates from heart attack, stroke, and other forms of cardiovascular disease are down.

Dr. Robert Thurber, president of the Pitt County Heart Association, pointed out that heart specialists at the meeting credited the drop in deaths to changes in American lifestyles. "They think that more people are aware of the risk factors connected with heart and blood vessel diseases and are doing something about them," he said. "Also, more people know the warning signs of heart attack and are getting to the hospital as soon as possible when symptoms occur. If we all did these things, we could push the death rates down even lower during 1978," he said.

Dr. Thurber suggested that everyone in Pitt County make a New Year's resolution to reduce heart attack and stroke risk by taking these steps: 1. Control high blood pressure; 2. Cut down on fat content of the diet; 3. Exercise moderately and regularly; and 4. Keep weight normal.

Signs of a possible heart attack, he said, include: prolonged heavy pressure or squeezing pain in the chest; pain which may spread to the shoulder, arm, neck or jaw; shortness of breath and nausea or vomiting, the last two of which may or may not be present with the other two symptoms.

According to Thurber, anyone with these symptoms should be taken to a hospital emergency room by ambulance without delay. The decision to summon help should not be left to the victim, who often will deny that he or she may be having a heart attack. Since most heart attack deaths occur outside the hospital, acting promptly may save a life, he said.

Speaks To Safety Body

The Pitt County Safety Council met at noon Thursday at the Greenville Golf and Country Club.

James Buffalo of the Division of Civil Preparedness in the N.C. Department for Crime Control and Public Safety addressed the group regarding civil preparedness for emergencies and disasters.

Buffalo stressed the importance of pre-planning when dealing with possible emergencies and civil defense.

"There is no time to plan after an emergency strikes, and you can never really assimilate the real effects of an actual emergency; therefore, pre-planning is the only protection people have when dealing with disasters."

The role of North Carolina's Division of Civil Preparedness during the recent flooding disaster in Western North Carolina after more than 20 inches of rain fell during an eight hour period was depicted by Buffalo.

Back To California On Mineo Murder Charge

By MALCOLM JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer
MARSHALL, Mich. (AP) — A swaggering, talkative inmate who waived extradition in the Sal Mineo murder case rather than pay a $100 legal fee is going back to California the same way he left — under guard.

Lionel Williams, 21, who was to have been released at the end of the week after serving time in Calhoun County Jail for forgery, agreed Thursday to return to California voluntarily to stand trial for first-degree murder in the actor's death.

Mineo was found stabbed to death outside his apartment in February 1976. Los Angeles County Sheriff Peter Pitchess said investigators believed Williams, acting alone, killed the actor in a robbery try.

But, he conceded, no robbery occurred. Money was found on the 37-year-old Mineo's body in the carport near his apartment.

Williams first told Calhoun Circuit Judge Creighton Coleman he wanted a court-appointed attorney to represent him during the extradition proceedings. That would have delayed his return to California.

But when Coleman told him he'd have to pay $100 — of $180 he had — for the attorney, Williams changed his mind. "Forget it — I'll just sign these papers," he said. He was returned to jail to await the trip to California.

California authorities plan to escort the convict back to his home state during the weekend.

Calhoun County Sheriff Roger Dean said prosecutors probably will call Williams' fellow inmates from the Calhoun jail to testify against him in the trial. His cell was bugged to gather information in the investigation, and police said his conversations regarding Mineo can be used against him.

Asked if he expected to be found innocent, Williams nodded and remarked, "Oh yeah, I'm cool." Faced with a swarm of reporters and cameras, he joked to deputies accompanying him: "This is a big deal, ain't it?"

Williams was due to be released Sunday morning after being jailed since April 17 on a conviction for obtaining money under false pretenses. He was found guilty of cashing a forged $176 payroll check in Battle Creek, where he lived for two months in 1975. He had been extradited from California to face the charges.

Los Angeles County authorities linked Williams to Mineo's death through witnesses and reports that he had purchased a knife in the city, Dean said. A Calhoun County Circuit Court judge authorized a warrant to bug Williams' cell at the request of California officials.

Accepting Nominations

Nominations are now being accepted for the Greenville Jaycees 1978 Outstanding Young Layman (OYL) Award.

The OYL Award is presented annually to recognize extraordinary service to the church (80 percent) and to the community (20 percent). The recipient will receive an engraved plaque and a steak supper for two, from the Greenville Jaycees.

To be eligible to receive the award, a nominee must be a Greenville resident and be between 18 and 35 years of age.

Nominations must include the nominees' name, address and telephone number and a short statement explaining the nominees' qualification for the award.

Nominations should be mailed to the Outstanding Young Layman Award, 2407 E. Fourth St., Greenville, 27834, and must be postmarked no later than 5 p.m. on Jan. 15.

Conversations in two different cells which Williams occupied were recorded throughout June and for five days in December. Dean said "a minimum of six" inmates later talked to police about Williams' statements regarding Mineo.

Ed Kearns will follow the pot luck dinner with a talk on "Making The Most of Your Charitable Gifts."

Women's Group Helps With Job-Counseling

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Help for displaced homemakers — women who find themselves without a spouse and without a job — isn't easy to find in most areas.

Congress is considering legislation to set up a national network of training and counseling centers, but for now women may find help through continuing education programs at local universities, job-counseling courses at YWCAs or local women's advocacy programs.

One such organization is the pioneering Wider Opportunities for Women, known by the acronym WOW, which was founded in 1964 by a group of housewives re-entering the job market who wanted to pool information and job leads.

So far, the organization has served 10,000 women, more than 50 percent between 26 and 45.

Roberta Kaplan, director of WOW, said she sees more and more of the "newly single" women, who must find a job to support themselves.

"These women need extra help," she said. "They have almost no confidence in their ability to find and get a job and they have no idea what their skills are. They've been isolated by housework. They think anybody can do what they do; that they aren't unique."

Some may be high-school dropouts, some may have advanced degrees, but they all share an almost total lack of confidence and ignorance about the job market.

The $40 fee entitles a member to attend seminars on self-assessment, resume and cover-letter writing, finding the hidden job market, interviewing for information and other time-tested job-hunt techniques.

There is also one-to-one counseling, group brainstorming sessions and a library and card file of employment-related materials and directories. WOW works with employers on separate programs to retrain women for non-traditional jobs such as meat cutting, equipment repair and auto mechanics.

"A typical newly single woman will have a history of sporadic work and volunteer experience," Ms. Kaplan said. "First we question her and help her identify what her special skills are."

That is often easier said than done. A case in point: a widow who had lost her federally funded job and needed another to help support her daughter was assigned to write a list of 50 accomplishments in her life. Counselors would then go over the list with her and identify a pattern of skills.

"I couldn't think of 50 things," she told a staff member. "I could only think of four."

The four achievements involved renovating and decorating a rowhouse almost single-handedly, writing and narrating a church music program staged in the Kennedy Center, organizing a bookshop that was in total disarray, and eliciting information as a census enumerator.

"This woman was very talented and had all the abilities that look great on a resume. She had organizational skills, ingenuity, creativity and the ability to work with people. Yet when we pointed this out to her, her reaction was negative.

"Yes, but I can't do this... Yes, but nobody will pay me for that."

"She was very intimidated by women with college degrees because she had none, and it took a lot of work to finally get her to raise her sights."

Ms. Kaplan said women often must overcome attitudes that volunteer work is frivolous and only paid work is meaningful, a narrow vision of what jobs are available, and the idea that one is too old to start over.

Blind Teen-Ager Holds Own Among Sighted Classmates

By BILL DALTON
The Ann Arbor News

BELLEVILLE, Mich. (AP) — Packs of cigarettes are making the rounds while several students sneak a smoke, relaxing outside during a break from classroom clouds of chalk dust.

Pat Bailey carefully makes her way down the Belleville High School stairs and taps her way past the students without taking notice of them. She is too busy learning to find her way around school, for she is blind.

But she hasn't always been. A few months ago, she was just like any of the mostly carefree teen-agers here, an honor roll student and active in church functions.

Becoming blind was a painful choice between being sightless and death.

Miss Bailey experienced sudden, severe, unexplained headaches in March 1977. Tests disclosed what physicians and family both feared — a brain tumor. And it was lodged in the area responsible for vision.

When Miss Bailey came out of the delicate surgery after removal of the tumor in May, she entered a world of darkness forever.

The headaches were gone, and the chemotherapy treatments she had undergone apparently were working.

Several side effects cropped up from medication and disruption of the thyroid gland, including losing her sense of smell. Small things really, considering some thought she might never return to school at all.

"It's nice to be back," she said, something she fought for from the beginning. To do so, she had to overcome an initial suggestion by school officials that she remain in the familiar setting of her old junior high school this year to adjust.

But because of her determination, officials went to bat for her. Now, Miss Bailey is the only blind person at Belleville High among some 1,700 seeing students crowding halls between classes.

She's in the middle of the crowd, swinging her cane back and forth, moving almost as fast as they do, making her way to a half schedule of classes, including home economics, typing and college preparatory English.

Still, the first few weeks were shaky, she acknowledges. Clinging to someone's arm, Miss Bailey apprehensively would make her way to classes, dodging locker and room doors opening out into the hall.

There were moments of not being sure coming back was such a good idea.

Miss Bailey wasn't the only one with some adjustments to make.

Students with normal sight reacted uneasily at first to a blind person in their midst. A hush would follow Miss Bailey's tapping cane as she made her way down the halls. But no more.

Some small classroom adjustments have been made so Miss Bailey can take her tests orally or type the answers. Her schoolbooks have been translated to Braille and tapes. But other than that, she's treated just like any other student in her studies, according to school officials.

Readers Reminded About Keeping Up Old Christmas Trees

By Abigail Van Buren
© 1978 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: I read in your column, "There's nothing wrong with keeping a Christmas tree up all year."

There's nothing wrong with it except that you may lose your life in a fire. A new pine tree can burn from bottom to top in about eight seconds! A tree that is months old will ignite the ceiling before you can reach for a fire extinguisher.

We wouldn't keep a tiger in our house, and a tiger can't go through closed doors. Fire can! The dry resinous pine needles are highly inflammable, yet people store them in their basements and attics year after year.

In Providence, R.I., fire fighters found 600 trees stored in local basements last year!

Abby, please warn your readers that pine Christmas trees should be put out of the house by Jan. 6.

ANNE W. PHILLIPS, M.D.

DEAR DR. PHILLIPS: Thank you for a timely warning. Readers should know that you are also the executive director of the National Smoke, Fire and Burn Institute, and as such you are well informed on the subject.

DEAR ABBY: Your answer to TOO THIN really got to me. She said she'd tried everything, and you advised her to see a doctor. If she tried everything, I'm sure she's already seen a doctor.

I was a size 3 for years and I know exactly how this woman feels. Fat people are jealous of thin people. That's why they always comment on how thin they are.

Following surgery, my doctor told me to drink beer to relieve the pain. It worked, but I went from 105 to 176 in two years!

I am down to a size 8 now. I eat what I want, but I never eat on Mondays. That works for me.

My advice to people who are tired of hearing how thin they are is to reply, "Yes, I know I'm thin. Don't you wish YOU were?"

THIN, THANK HEAVENS

DEAR THIN: Granted there are more people who would rather lose weight than gain it, but if I had a physician who prescribed beer to relieve pain, I would lose HIM.

DEAR ABBY: Is there anything wrong with a girl making out just a little to keep a fellow interested in dating her? I don't mean a great big love scene or anything like that, just a little light necking and a couple of kisses during the evening, and maybe one extra special good-night kiss? I'm keeping my virtue as a matter of principle.

DATING NOW

DEAR DATING: That's a dangerous game. The kind of "interest" you could arouse might cost you your principle.

Only Two Exceptions Allowed

Tuesday the Pitt County Board of Education went into executive session to discuss a personnel matter.

Under North Carolina law this is allowed, but following the executive session Supt. Ott Alford indicated that the board also discussed the disputed city-county school district lines and their effect on upcoming elections.

The county board, nor any other public boards or commissions, shouldn't do that.

North Carolina laws require that public meetings be open to the public. The only exceptions are personnel matters and property purchase negotiations.

It is too easy for boards to go into executive session at the end of a regular meeting and then discuss other matters.

But it is wrong and every public body has an obligation to see that it doesn't happen.

Loggone it, birds. I'm serious... I'm really serious...

A Very Rare And Special Relationship

The United States-France friendship is one of long standing, so the visit by President Carter this week was an important one.

The president recognized the "special and rare" relations between our two countries.

France has taken an independent approach to defense and foreign policy in recent years. It is a country in ferment insofar as its approach to its own economic problems.

Nevertheless it is a key part of the western world and continued good relations between our nation and France are absolutely essential.

Looking For Compromise

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — A method of easing manufacturers' inventory taxes in specific desirable cases without doing major harm to the present collection system appears to be developing.

It is likely that the rough outlines of a new plan will be talked about in detail next week in Charlotte as governmental officials and industrial development experts gather for the Governor's Conference on Balanced Growth.

An agreeable compromise is seen as essential to break the continuing logjam which impedes all attempts to tinker with the inventory tax.

The subject brings opposing sides into conflict at all levels of government in North Carolina—and draws other community leaders interested in economic growth into the battle as well.

At present, the inventory tax is a local property tax levied by city and county governments against materials in hand at plants within their respective jurisdictions.

Major Loss

While no definite statistics are available, it is reliably estimated that local governments share some $50 million income from the tax each year.

Thus, local governments have long and loudly opposed any repeal. Yet, state industry hunters and local chambers of commerce and others hot in pursuit of development contend that the tax often hinders wooing of prospects; occasionally actually blocking a development.

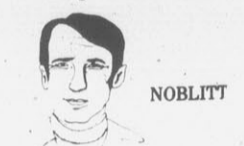

The argument runs right on the top levels in state government: Commerce officials seeking growth claim the tax is a genuine hindrance, while Revenue officials contend there is no evidence of that, and furthermore, there is no readily apparent way of replacing the money which would be lost from repeal.

Debate is strong within the administration of Gov. James B. Hunt, Jr. The governor opposes repeal; but is willing to consider alternatives.

Last year the General Assembly under pressure from one quarter to repeal, and from another to keep the tax mullied a system whereby payment of the local inventory tax could be used as a credit against state income taxes. In effect, the local governments would keep the money, and the manufacturers would escape the levy.

That measure sailed through the senate readily, but ran into a solid wall in the house of representatives. A legislative committee is still wrestling with the dilemma.

NOBLITT

Other Relief

Another stumbling block to outright repeal is the belief in official circles that such action relative to manufacturers would lead inevitably to intensified pressures for relief from wholesalers, distributors, and retailers. If all inventory taxes were eliminated, the total loss could easily reach $500 million per year for local governments.

Through all the arguing, however, there is general agreement on one major point: that most makers of consumer goods (furniture, apparel, cigarettes, etc.) can easily manage their inventory at tax time so as to minimize the amount payable. If the state took up the burden, there would be no management incentive, so inventories would probably run much higher than at present.

Further agreement is seen on the fact that major heavy industries which require highly skilled workers and pay correspondingly higher wages can't manage their inventories to reduce the impact... and those are the very types of industry which the state wants to attract for recruitment.

A turbine plant, chemical manufacturers, machinery producer, for example, must often hold expensive material for several years.

Thus, the compromise in development now would devise a system for relieving those most desirable firms.

Thus, the compromise now being debated: relief for specific categories of manufacturers' inventories.

The Story Has 2 Sides

I believe I should have an opportunity to defend myself against the insidious charges that I behaved in a gluttonous manner, and engaged in a disgusting display of excess eating and drinking during the recent holiday season. There are two sides to every Christmas and New Year's story.

First, I would like to deal with the fruit cake. It's true I ate the whole damn thing in three days, but there was a perfectly valid reason for it. Contrary to reports, I did not order the fruit cake, nor did I pay for it. It was sent to me by an old college friend named Jerry Altshuler, whom I haven't seen in years. Why Altshuler sent me the fruit cake is something you'll have to ask him.

He lives in Oklahoma City, so I have to assume he struck it rich in either oil or gas—or fruit cakes. In any case I happened to be at home when it arrived and I signed for it. My lawyer, Ed Bennett Williams, advised me that the person who signs for a fruit cake at Christmas has to eat it. So I did, and therefore everyone is going around saying that I made a pig of myself.

Now about the seven cups of eggnog I drank at the neighbor's house across the street on Christmas Eve. I won't deny I did drink them, as witnesses have testified, but the fact is that was all they were serving, and after chomping on fruit cake a guy can get pretty thirsty.

ART BUCHWALD

I'll skip the Christmas dinner because I didn't eat any more or less turkey and stuffing than my son-in-law. The big hullabaloo came at dessert time when my daughter surprised us all with a bouche Noel, which happens to be a log of cake filled with whipped cream and topped with coffee or chocolate cream. My wife had made a pumpkin pie. There I was, caught between the bouche Noel and the pumpkin pie. I did what any decent person would do, and had a piece of each. And for this I am charged with gluttony?

All right. We've now come to the poppycock on the evening after Christmas. If you recall that was the day of the playoff games. My wife had bought the poppycock (popcorn covered with molasses and stuck against walnuts) for my guests to eat while we watched the Los Angeles-Minnesota game.

The only trouble was no guests showed up. Geyelin had to go to Philadelphia to visit his relatives, Califano canceled out at the last moment so he could revise his welfare reform bill once again, and Valenti's wife made him go caroling with the children.

So the poppycock was just sitting there in the can. I didn't touch it until the first half ended. Well by then one poppycock led to another, and before I knew it the game was over and the can was empty. But it was my wife's fault. She had no business putting the poppycock on the table

Death Impact Tested

By DAVID TOMLIN

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — State prison officials are taking advantage of an unusual opportunity to probe the emotional impact on condemned men of a death sentence and time on Death Row.

Prison psychologists have just finished administering a battery of personality tests to occupants of Death Row whose sentences were commuted to life last year after the U.S. Supreme Court struck down North Carolina's death penalty law.

Those results will be compared with similar tests taken by the same inmates at the time they were admitted to prison under death sentence.

The psychological tests may reveal little of practical value, but state Corrections Department researcher James H. Panton says they may shed new light on the emotional needs of Death Row inmates and lead to changes in the way

The Coolidge Words Lost

PLYMOUTH, VT. (AP) — NBC's problems in finding suitable employment on a talk show for former President Ford brings to mind the almost farcical retirement project undertaken by Calvin Coolidge, who was born and reared in this cheese-making village.

Ford, it will be recalled, agreed to a $1.3 million deal with NBC for five news specials, none of which has come to pass so far because his contract with Harper & Row to publish his memoirs prevents him from discussing the presidency. Now the deal has been rejiggered and Ford will make his TV debut as an ex-president discussing foreign policy, perhaps having second thoughts about the Polish connection with the Soviets, which some think cost him the election in the debates with Jimmy Carter.

Long before David Frost coaxed Richard Nixon out of monastic seclusion in San Clemente, former occupants of the Oval Office and the big house on Pennsylvania Avenue have been sought after assiduously by the media for their words of wisdom or regret. Teddy Roosevelt laid down his elephant gun long enough to contribute occasional pieces to the Kansas City Star.

Benjamin Harrison and William Howard Taft, upon leaving the White House, became magazine writers, mostly on legal and constitutional questions. Gen. Ulysses Simpson Grant, after a disastrous fling in the banking business that left him almost penniless, began churning out magazine articles about his war experiences, which led to the highly successful publication of his memoirs by Mark Twain, a $500,000 best seller.

Coolidge, a president of spectacularly few words, was besieged with publishing offers from the moment he issued the words "I do not choose to run for president in 1928."

He actually never uttered those famous words. He handed them out on a slip of paper to reporters summoned to his summer White House office at a high school in Rapid City, S.D. during his 1927 vacation in the Black Hills.

It was here that the idea was germinated for Coolidge's bizarre use of the fewest possible words for a gargantuan effect. A sculptor named Gutzon Borglum was hanging from a bo'sun's chair on Mount Rushmore, and Silent Cal drove over one day to have a look.

He said nothing, as befitted a president who at a White House dinner was told by the lady at his side she had made a bet that she could get more than two words out of him. "You lose," Coolidge said. But that afternoon drive in the Black Hills came back one day to haunt him.

Out of office, Vermont's Great Stone Face, as the tabloids called him, curly turned down all interviews and speeches. He said he "wished to avoid being an officious intermeddler: I should like to be known as a former president who minds his own business."

Quietly, in his own hand, he set about writing his memoirs. Terse and to the point, he finished them in under four months and under 25,000 words, which Cosmopolitan magazine paid $110,000 to serialize.

"He'd rather write than be president" commented one of the wags, but the man who said "the business of America is business" was embarrassed by the record fee.

His next public use of words was even more sparing, incredibly so, and America's highest paid writer by the word offered them for free. In January 1930, the Mount Rushmore Memorial Association announced that Calvin Coolidge had undertaken to write a history of the United States from the Declaration of Independence down to his day "in 500 words or fewer" that would last for "5,000 centuries."

Coolidge's rare words would be engraved on the granite face of the Black Hills in letters "five or more inches deep" on tablets 80 feet high by 120 wide next to sculptor Borglum's gigantic faces of Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln and Teddy Roosevelt. Taller than a seven story building, the Coolidge concise history would be read like a giant's eye chart from a mile away.

The taciturn Tacitus immediately set pen to paper so his elephantine prose could be carved in place by the next July 4 (1931), when the heads of Washington and Jefferson were due to be unveiled. The first installment, released to the press by Borglum, evoked laughter and disbelief. It was riddled, but not yet chiseled, with historical errors. Silent Cal was more than speechless with anger.

Sculptor Borglum, it turned out, had taken it upon himself

Other Editors Say Many Can Rejoice

(Goldboro News-Argus)

Let's hear it for Lou Holtz — and for his Arkansas Razorbacks. And for the University of Arkansas.

They made it clear that some things can be more important than winning a football bowl game. And then they went on to win the Orange Bowl anyway.

Lou suspended three star members of his Razorback squad after an incident in a girls' dormitory.

We don't know what the infraction was. No charges have been filed. But we do know that Lou Holtz is a man of high moral character.

When he suspended the three ball players, eyes of sports fans around the country widened.

The man was virtually ruling out his chances of winning the Bowl. Already his team was considered an underdog to Oklahoma.

The situation worsened. Around 12 other members of the team threatened not to play unless the three suspended players were reinstated.

Holtz calmly announced that the decision to play or not to play was up to those players. But that the decision to suspend the three was his — and it was going to stick.

The university administration, despite what must have been strong pressures, stood behind Holtz.

Because of the circumstances, it was one of the most looked-forward-to bowl games of the weekend.

The Razorbacks smothered Oklahoma. Not only did Lou Holtz play without his three stars, he was quick to put in his second string when his team was ahead by one touchdown but with its back to its own goal early in the game.

That's another measure of the man. He believes that the people who spend months training and working hard to play should be given the opportunity to do so.

Every person who wears a Razorback uniform knows he is a playing member of the team.

While many might criticize Holtz for taking such a chance — again, perhaps, putting principle above victory — followers of the Arkansas team insist the team's spirit is second to none. This could more than compensate for putting less-than-the-best players in the game at times.

Had the Razorbacks lost the Orange Bowl, Lou Holtz would have been crucified in many circles.

But somehow, we believe the man and his team would have left the game just as proud, though far from as joyous, as they did Monday night.

Many of us who have never set foot in Arkansas stood proudly with Holtz and his Razorbacks in their decision. And we rejoiced with them in their triumph.

Can Almost Anyone Be Rich?

By JOHN CUNIFF

AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — The eighth wonder of the world, Baron de Rothschild is reputed to have said. Magic, say the savings banks. Through it, says a financial adviser, almost anyone can become rich.

Compound interest continues to intrigue and frustrate dreamers and realists. Though relatively few people do become rich because of it, the cold hard figures make it seem almost easy.

That's the tug. On paper, if a person saved $1,000 a year for 20 years at an 8 percent annual return he or she would have close to $49,500, only $20,000 of which was deposited.

If they continued it for 40 years their total would reach nearly $280,000. And if by some stroke of financial and medical luck they maintained the pace for 50 years their fortune would reach $620,000.

Suppose they earned just 2 percent more, a total of 10 percent. After 50 years their fortune would be more than double the amount achieved with an 8 percent return. Millionaires. Hypothetically.

One paper. Before taxes. In reality, not only would deductions have to be made for taxes, but emergencies, necessities and even the desire for luxuries almost inevitably would further cut the return.

Still, the fascination is there. Savings banks sometimes hold out the prospect of wealth through small regular deposits.

John Winthrop Wright, a conservative, highly regarded investment adviser to individuals and large bank-administered trusts, believes that a competent stock investor can earn as much as 15 percent a year.

"With an investment of as little as $100 a month and immediate reinvestment of all dividends and capital gains, a 25-year-old person can be worth just about $1 million by retirement at age 65.

"His total investment from personal savings will be only $48,000; the $1 million will be net, after payment of all income taxes!"

Even if such an investor chooses not to wait that long, a sizable portfolio can be built up — if everything works as it does on paper.

An investment of $100 a month averaging 15 percent would have a pretax value of $144,000 after 20 years, on an original investment of $24,000. After 30 years it would reach a pre-tax value of $655,000.

Many advisers doubt that a 15 percent return can be achieved in stocks, and Wright concedes that a "competent" investor might average a total return — capital and dividends — of only 8-10 percent.

He adds, however, that the higher return is within reach by following "sound, proven, professional investment methods." Such success, he maintains, "requires no magic or daring risks." Quite the opposite.

"It is based on common sense; a willingness to pay attention to principles already proven profitable, and to readily available facts; and the avoidance of speculation."

The principles: Buy only stocks of successful companies. Buy only at undervalued market pricing. Buy only when shares no longer are declining in price. Sell before they stop rising.

Strength For Today

USES OF ADVERSITY

Sometimes we encounter persons who can endure sorrow but not success.

These are people in whom a strong moral character never seems to manifest itself until they encounter some appalling situation in their lives. Then they stand up like heroes. Before this time, when they were successful, they were weak and compromising.

Very often the human character grows strong under budding and weak under coddling. A Hungarian religious leader now in this country tells how a great religious revival started in his country after World War II. He said that it was not in spite of the bombing and suffering through which the country had passed but because of these disasters that the revival was so strong.

Sometimes sound morality seems to flourish better in lives that are afflicted than in those which are comfortable. Sorrow can be surmounted, but it takes a real hero to escape the ravages of success.

Say Reunited Christianity Hopes Rise

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

An ecumenical team says that the changing ways of Roman Catholicism have led other Christians to consider the "positive values" of a modified Roman papacy for a reunited Christianity.

The pope's office, a main target of past Protestant opposition and charges of repressive authoritarianism, was portrayed now as tending to become a unifying center, fostering home rule of the churches.

This was the assessment made of the newly developing pattern of the papacy by the U.S. joint Roman Catholic-Episcopal consultation this week in its second report in the last eight days on 12 years of unity talks.

People need to gain "appreciation for the evolution that has occurred in both our churches since our division," said the new report, dealing with the thorniest, old issue of all — the exercise of authority.

Citing "a general trend to decentralize the governance of the Roman Catholic Church today," the report said:

"The entry of Rome into the ecumenical movement has encouraged Anglicans (Episcopalians) and other Christians in the West to consider the positive values of a universal primacy (papal office) in a reunited church."

A similar evaluation of a reformed-style papacy also has come from the joint Lutheran-Roman Catholic dialogue team in this country, as well as from some individual leaders and scholars of various churches.

As they generally see it, the pope of a reunited Christianity would carry on a primacy as the chief presiding officer, a rallying center but with authority working through the whole church, including its lay people.

"A diversity in unity and unity in diversity," Holland's Cardinal Jan Willebrands, head of the Vatican Secretariat on Christian Unity, has said of a reunited church.

Steps toward such an image were cited in the new Episcopal-Roman Catholic report.

It said there is an "increasing obvious desire and intent in the Roman Catholic Church to resolve matters within a nation or a local church through the bishops' conference or by the particular bishop of a diocese."

The report also points out that all baptized Christians share in church authority and says participation of lay and clergy members both in Anglican bodies and in Roman Catholic local, regional and national advisory groups makes "possible shared decision-making and orderly dissent."

Voicing "prayerful hope" that a 1976 Venice statement on church authority issued by an international Anglican-Catholic dialogue team will help resolve difficulties on that issue, the U.S. group said:

"It is true that abuses are still possible within existing canon law, yet the model for the Petrine office which prevails throughout the Venice statement looks toward a papacy that strengthens and upholds other bishops in their ministry, not one that overrides or bypasses them."

Indications cited of Roman Catholicism's moves toward collectively shared church government, more akin to that in Protestantism, include:

Regular synods of Catholic bishops, a greater role by national and regional bishops' conferences, steps to make the Roman Curia more representative of the worldwide church, broadened norms of selecting bishops and new lay-clergy consultative processes.

Concerning "papal infallibility," the report said it is derived from the concept that "Christ will not desert his church and that the Holy Spirit will lead it into all truth" — a Biblical promise upheld by Christians generally. Within that concept, the report says the pope in teaching does "no more but no less than express the mind of the church on issues concerning divine revelation."

Co-chairmen of the 19-member U.S. consultation are Episcopal Bishop Arthur A. Vogel of Kansas City, Mo., and Catholic Bishop Raymond W. Lessard of Savannah, Ga.

Workshop Here For Methodists

Over 300 United Methodists from Beaufort, Greene, Hyde, Lenoir, Martin and Pitt Counties are expected to attend a training workshop Thursday, Jan. 19.

Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church, Greenville, will host the Greenville District Training Workshop from 7:30-9:30 p.m.

The workshop, which is sponsored by the Division of Lay Life and Work of the N. C. United Methodist Conference, includes 13 classes for church leaders. It is an annual event designed to help newly elected officials, as well as leaders continuing in office, understand their responsibilities.

Classes include "Visiting for Christ and the Church," "The Role of the Adult Worker With Youth," "Music and Worship in the Small Membership Church" and "Decision Point: Church School."

A similar workshop is being held in each of the 12 districts in the conference, which encompasses the eastern 56 counties in the state.

New Year Begins For Church Women

A workshop-fellowship day Tuesday began the new year for United Methodist Women of Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church.

At the opening session in the chapel, Mrs. John Casey gave the devotional, Mrs. Hope Anderson was organist and the Rev. James Bailey offered greetings.

A special membership pin and certificate were presented to Mrs. L. E. Osswald on behalf of the group by Mrs. J. C. Whitehurst Jr., outgoing president. Following the introductory meeting, a social hour in the parlor was chaired by Mrs. Robert S. Griffin.

Workshops related to various facets of the organization's work areas met. Leaders of the groups included Mrs. David J. Wichard, Mrs. Robert H. Daniel, Mrs. Casey, Mrs. John L. Hassell, Mrs. Richard Turner, Mrs. Charles Schwidde, Mrs. Thomas Parrish, Mrs. James H. Bailey, Mrs. Jack Koontz and Mrs. David J. Middleton, president.

Following lunch, the executive board of the United Methodist Women met for the regular monthly meeting.

The association, a fellowship and service organization open to all Greenville and Pitt County clergymen and clergymen, now numbers 30 members.

The cross-denominational professional fraternity serves the purposes of a forum for presentation and discussion of topics affecting the Greenville area; of opportunities to increase professional competence; as a point of fellowship and mutual support; and planning programs of community service.

All ministers in the area are invited to attend the meeting and to consider joining. For more information on the association, interested clergy are invited to contact any of the new officers listed above.

the prison system handles them.

"We try to confine our research to applied research that will be of value to us in the overall treatment and management of the inmates," Pantan said.

"We're hoping that these tests will give us a better understanding of what Death Row is like," he added. "If they indicate that we should be placing more emphasis on this or that, we would make that recommendation."

In the earlier tests, administered to a group of 34 Death Row inmates in 1976, the results were compared with results of similar tests given to a much larger group of prisoners.

The comparison revealed that:

—In age and intelligence, Death Row inmates were not substantially different from their fellow prisoners convicted of lesser crimes. They tended to have slightly more education.

—Death Row inmates showed more "apprehension, frustration, resentment and distrust" than the rest of the prison population.

—Death Row prisoners also "expressed more marked feelings of hopelessness, failure, isolation, pessimism and poor morale" than their non-condemned counterparts.

—The Death Row inmates appeared to be as mentally healthy as other prisoners.

Pantan and other researchers concluded that the anger and depression of Death Row inmates indicated by the tests was nothing more than an ordinary human reaction to the circumstance of being isolated and sentenced to die.

That hypothesis will be tested by the latest round of results. Presumably, if there is nothing inherently different about capital criminals, the anger and depression will have disappeared with the lifting of the death sentences.

If those emotions are still present, Pantan added, that may say something about what being on death row as long as three years does to a person. But he emphasized he wouldn't know until he had evaluated the tests, a process which will take several months.

when she knew I'd be sitting in the living room all alone.

I know what you're going to bring up next—the Kron Chocolate covered strawberries from Neiman Marcus. I swear I didn't know they were loaded. Someone placed them out on the piano right on the path to the kitchen where we keep the beer. It was a case of pure entrapment. The person who put them there is just as guilty as I am, but the media hasn't written a word about him/her/it. I won't dignify the charges concerning the disappearance of the pistachio ice cream from the refrigerator. It's true I was in the kitchen that evening at midnight when it was last seen in the freezer. But someone else followed me in there after I went upstairs. I know this because the next morning all I had left one slice in the pie plate.

As for drinking, I'll admit I lost my moral compass. First there was the Gil Hahn party when he broke out four bottles of Chateau Latour 1965. Then the Quinn party to celebrate Christmas past, and the Bellows open house party to celebrate Christmas future, followed by the Elfin annual New Year's Eve party where someone tried to take my gusto away from me.

It's all rather hazy, but the point is not one action I took in terms of eating or drinking during the holidays was premeditated. They were all crimes of passion. And I don't see why I should take the rap from my doctor just because I didn't want to spoil, what many people consider, the happiest time of the year.

Plan Two Days Of Singing

The program will begin at 7:30 p.m. each night. The public is invited.

to revise and edit the presidential copy, or what the networks now call "running it through the writers." In a wordless fury, Coolidge withdrew from the enterprise, which Borgum subsequently abandoned altogether.

Alas, the world and 5,000 centuries of readers were denied both the biggest and the smallest history of the United States ever dreamed up, which shows what happens when editors and producers get to messing around with a retired president.

Ministerial Ass'n Meeting Monday

The first meeting of the new 1978 leadership of the Greenville Ministerial Association will take place on Monday, January 9 at Jarvis Memorial Methodist Church, beginning at 10:30 a.m. Coffee will be served to early comers beginning at 10 a.m.

PLANNING HIS FUTURE...

That is the crux of parenthood. We not only rear our children, providing for their needs and development, but we make important decisions that can have lasting impact on their lives.

One vital decision concerns their opportunity for spiritual growth. It is a blessing to grow up in a land where faith and freedom are revered. But it is a fact of family life that parents decide whether or not to cultivate their children's moral and religious development.

The churches of our community are eager to help you mold the convictions and character of your children. Welcome their help.

WEATHER FORECAST — Saturday's forecast calls for showers on the West Coast, the Gulf Coast and parts of the Plains, with rain along the upper east coast. Flurries are due in parts of the West and the Rockies. Snow is forecast for a band stretching from North Dakota to New England. (AP Laserphoto Map)

By The Associated Press
A few light rain showers occurred over central and eastern North Carolina this morning in advance of a moist southerly wind flow coming up from the Gulf of Mexico.

Generally unsettled weather is predicted for the weekend.

along with mild temperatures. Readings Thursday were mostly in the 50s and the lows this morning generally were in the 40s. A range in the 50s was expected again today.

Precipitation during the night and this morning was light with mostly no more than a trace at most reporting points from the mountains to the coast.

Mild, wet weather will linger through the weekend. Showers will occur in the mountains Saturday night and they will spread eastward Sunday. Temperatures will climb to the 60s during the day and drop to the 40s at night.

High Violence Risk In Schools

By CHRIS CONNELL
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Teenagers run a greater risk of personal violence in schools than on the street, particularly in junior highs, according to a new government survey.

Noting that classrooms are the safest places in schools, the three-year, $2.4 million study says students have the greatest chance of being attacked "during the between-class rush in the hallways and stairs."

"Other places that pose substantial risks are the restrooms, cafeterias, locker rooms and gyms," said the study, released Thursday by the National Institute of Education.

It noted that although teenagers spend at most 25 percent of their waking hours in school, "40 percent of the robberies and 36 percent of the assaults on urban teen-agers occurred in school."

The risks are highest for youths aged 12 to 15, for whom 68 percent of the robberies and 50 percent of the assaults occurred at school, compared with less than 20 percent on the streets.

The report noted that more than 5,000 secondary school teachers are attacked in an average month, almost 1,000 of whom require a doctor's attention for their injuries.

And school authorities, it said, report only a small fraction of the incidents in which someone is hurt.

Although it said the problems of violence and vandalism in schools are still serious, the report found the incidence of those crimes leveled off in the early 1970s after climbing during the previous decade.

The institute's statistics are based on the responses by more than 4,000 elementary and secondary school principals to a mail survey.

It also inspected 642 schools and studied in detail how 10 troubled schools coped with violence. Although admitting its estimates are probably "somewhat high," the study said they nevertheless "give some degree of the dimensions of the problem."

Hornaday's statement came as a delegation of Philip Morris officials flew to Concord to inspect the 2,200-acre tract it is considering as the site of the new plant which is expected to provide 2,000 jobs.

In another favorable development for the proposed plant, the Council of State in Raleigh approved an easement that would permit Philip Morris to build a railroad track across property of the Stonewall Jackson Training School near Concord.

The railroad easement was one requirement by the company if they locate here.

James C. Johnson, who is managing a "Call for Philip Morris" rally scheduled for Friday night, said that Rep. Bill Hefner, D-N.C., and Gov. Jim Hunt had been invited to the event.

Johnson, chairman of the Cabarrus Citizens for Philip Morris, arranged the rally to convince Philip Morris executives that the plant would be welcome here. Johnson went into action after some Concord businessmen reportedly were not eager for Cabarrus County to land the huge plant because of the high wages it would pay and because it might be unionized.

Joe Gould, director of facilities development for Philip Morris, who headed the delegation visiting the county Wednesday, said Cabarrus County is being given prime consideration as the site of the new plant "because of the fine land that is available here, but mainly because this community has the necessary potential for treating the wastewater from a plant of this size."

Hill, HEW Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr. said Thursday the nation cannot tolerate this "senseless violence."

He said his department is financing research on prevention of school crime plus training teams of educators and students to deal with the problems.

At the same time, Califano announced that HEW is awarding two grants totaling $45,000 to the Rev. Jesse Jackson's program to motivate students. He said he expects more federal money for such efforts in the future.

The report said rural schools are not immune from the problems of vandalism and violence, although the risks increase with both the size of the community and the size of the school.

Congress ordered the study in 1974. In sending it to Capitol

Speaking On Sun Effects

Following the regular Tuesday night meeting of the Brightleaf Amateur Radio Club, another meeting is scheduled for Wednesday, January 11, when Edward P. Tilton from the American Radio Relay League will give a lecture and slide presentation on the effects of the sun on radio propagation.

Tilton has been licensed as a radio amateur since 1933 and radio propagation has been his major interest. He has participated in several propagation events of technical and historical significance. Perhaps the best-known in amateur radio circles was his being the USA end of the first transatlantic VHF contact with England in 1946. Knowledge of the propagation picture was a factor in his becoming a member of the Commission on Ionospheric Propagation of the International Union for Radio Science, a role he still fills in retirement.

Time for the lecture is 7:30 p.m. at the Eastern Elementary School, Golden Road and Cedar Lane, off By-Pass 264. The demonstration is expected to be of interest to all hams. An invitation has been extended to all interested to attend.

Scott Talks Bid In 1980

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Former Gov. Robert W. Scott is thinking about returning to North Carolina for a 1980 bid for lieutenant governor.

"I am thinking about it," Scott said in a telephone interview with the News and Observer of Raleigh from his Washington office. "It's a serious possibility."

Scott, 48, served four years as lieutenant governor before being elected governor in 1968. The late W. Kerr Scott, governor from 1949-1953 and later a U.S. senator, was his father.

Scott acknowledged that he was making his thoughts on a race for lieutenant governor public to find out how friends, former supporters and voters would respond to the idea.

He said he was afraid that some people might not take kindly to his running for office again after having already served as governor and lieutenant governor.

Scott is currently co-chairman of the Appalachian Regional Commission, an appointment he won for his support of Jimmy Carter's presidential bid. The job pays $52,500 per year.

Scott says he enjoys his work with the commission, which administers economic development grants in the 13-state Appalachian region, but he finds the federal bureaucracy difficult to deal with and he's homesick for North Carolina.

Charge Driver In Collision

Willie Lee Williams of Route 1, Bethel was charged with failing to see his intended movement could be made in safety following investigation of an 11:05 a.m. mishap on Greenville Boulevard, 30 feet West of the Trade Street intersection yesterday.

Officers reported the Williams truck collided with an auto driven by Shelba Wynn Umphlett of Route 8, Greenville, resulting in an estimated $700 damage to the Umphlett car and $350 damage to the Williams truck.

Soul City Has Water Supply Beyond Needs

SOUL CITY, N.C. (AP) — Soul City's meager handful of residents will have a million gallons of water a day on its hands starting early next month unless they can find somebody else who wants it.

Soul City, which was expected to grow much faster than it has to date, signed a contract with Henderson and Oxford to take part in a $12.6 million regional water system that should begin operating soon.

Oxford and Soul City agreed to take at least one million gallons of water a day, treated and pumped by Henderson from Kerr Lake. The cost of the water was estimated at $230 per day to each of the towns.

"Right now we don't need that capacity," said Floyd McKissick, developer of Soul City, the new community in Warren County which has developed much slower than expected and now has only a handful of residents.

McKissick said Soul City had agreed "to let that amount be pumped in our behalf, but we thought at the time we could give it to Oxford if we weren't ready for it."

But Oxford officials said they need only the one million gallons they originally agreed to buy, since Burlington Industries sharply curtailed operations there.

"We have a contract, yes. But you know that every contract can be negotiated," said McKissick. "Nobody in Henderson expects us to pay for water we aren't going to use."

Report Spread Of Russian Flu

ATLANTA (AP) — The Russian flu, a new strain of influenza which has struck 10 percent of the population in the Soviet Union, has spread to Finland and Taiwan, the national Center for Disease Control says.

The Russian flu, called Influenza A-USSR, is expected to reach the United States, although CDC epidemiologist Phil Graitcer could not predict when.

He said Thursday it could be as early as this spring or as late as three years from now.

CDC spokeswoman Betty Hooper said cases of the Russian flu had been confirmed at a military base in Finland but the cases in Taiwan were unconfirmed.

Health officials are in the process of developing a vaccine to combat the disease. Swine flu vaccine, once believed to be a remedy, has not been effective, Graitcer said.

Gag Books Are Just A Sideline

By MIKE SILVERMAN
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Who says you can't tell a book by its cover? At New Studio Publishers, the cover's all there is. The firm specializes in gag books that carry the title, "All I Know About —" followed by any word you choose, as long as it's not more than 10 letters. The author can be anybody, too, up to 16 letters. For instance, if you want to give one to your Uncle Jack the golf nut, you might pick: "All I Know About Putting, by Uncle Jack." He places it casually on his coffee table where his friends pick it up and gasp: "Jack, I didn't know you'd written a book!" Then they open it and find — a booklet of blank pages. Manny Ayan and Ollie Hartwell say they've sold more than 3,000 of the trick tomes in less than three years. But they say the gag books will remain strictly a sideline to their commercial art business. "It's a pastime more than anything. We haven't gone ape," says Ayan. "I think it would lose its appeal." Among the customers who have shelled out $7.85 each for the one-joke novelties are composer-conductor Andre Previn, husband of movie star Mia Farrow. He chose, quixotically, "All I Know About Mia, by

Andre Previn." Actor Burt Reynolds has ordered dozens. He sent "All I Know About Comedy" to comedians Carol Burnett, Mel Brooks and Dom DeLuise. Talk-show whizzes Merv Griffin and Mike Douglas got "All I Know About TV Hosting." "We've gotten orders from as far away as England and Australia," Ayan says. "One guy is an addict — he orders one a week. And people from Texas mostly seem to want 'All I Know About Horses.'" "Anything goes as long as it's 10 letters or less," says Hartwell, "and you can imagine some of the things you can say in 10 letters." Space restrictions inspire some customers to heights of ingenuity. Hartwell says: "One woman wanted to order one for a friend who just had her sixth baby, but 'All I Know About Birth Control' wouldn't fit. "She thought awhile and settled on 'All I Know About the Pill.'"

George Burns: A Harvard Prof

By JAY SHARBUTT
AP Television Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — This Sunday, George Burns, 80, continues his show biz career doing gags and a soft-shoe number with a young comic — Bob Hope, 74 — as a guest on Hope's vaudeville show on NBC. But next April, Burns may go back to school, which he left in the fourth grade to start his career singing with the Peewee Quartet in his native New York. He says he's considering an offer to lecture at Harvard. "Can you imagine that?" he inquired. "I can't even spell Harvard." (An aide said it's part of a course of chats by heavyweights in film, dance, theater, music and visual arts.) What might you lecture on,

Mr. Burns? "Call me George," the teacher said. "Well, it'd be the only thing I know: Show business. I don't get mixed up in politics. I don't talk to anybody who can't sing harmony." Will the visiting professor, if he visits, do a routine or two? "I might," he said. "Might also tell 'em how you build up a routine, how you start with one joke, you top it and top it again, and first thing you know, you've got a routine." To student jokesmiths, he offered this: "I've been mixed up with writers all my life and the most important thing for a writer is to find the first thought, the first idea. You get a good thought, the thing writes itself." He paused briefly. "That's the kind of great stuff I'm going to tell 'em," he warned, kidding the act he may put on at one of the nation's top hatcheries of thought and study. Burns, who turns 81 on Jan. 20, has been busy with other acts of late, including the touting of his new hit movie, "Oh, God."

He did two CBS specials and an "Alice" episode this season, plus the Hope show, and has two more specials afoot. And he'll film his third movie since getting an Oscar in 1976 for "The Sunshine Boys."

"It's 'The Queen of Hollywood,'" he said. "The queen is a girl, not me. Better get that right. I don't want to get it wrong with whatshername in Florida." He had reference to Anita Bryant. The veteran trouper was asked why, at his age, he works so much. "Because it gets me out of bed," he replied. "At my age, it's a great thing to get out of bed. I can't make any money in bed. In fact, I can't do anything in bed."

THAT OLD SOFT-SHOE — George Burns, at 80, joins Bob Hope, a young comic at 74, as the two recently rehearsed for a spot on Hope's NBC vaudeville show to be seen this Sunday. (AP Laser-photo)

The rewards of charity are sometimes found here on earth. South did not divine the nature of East's donation, and as a result East was repaid twofold. This hand is from the American Contract Bridge League's Continentwide Charity Game, played Nov. 21. The analysis sheet given out after the game says that South will have a rebid problem after North raises hearts, and that the choice will be split between four hearts and three no trump. That was indeed the case. The analysis goes on to say that, after West leads king, ace and another spade, the routine overruff by East will hold declarer to ten tricks. That is true as far as it goes. But watch what happens when the defense is not routine, as was the case when the East cards were held by Mrs. Pauline Zirin of Jackson Heights, N.Y.

Instead of "routinely" overruffing the third spade, Mrs. Zirin made the fine discard of her singleton club. This exposed her queen of trumps to a finesse, and the declarer could have made the rest of the tricks had he decided on the finesse. But declarer had an entirely wrong picture of the trump situation. He could not believe that East would refuse to overruff if she held the queen, so he placed the lady with West. Rather than take a finesse which was bound to fail, declarer tried to drop the queen by cashing the ace and king. When West discarded on the second trump, declarer began to have an inkling of what might be in store. Declarer continued with a low trump to the jack and queen, and East put him back in dummy with a diamond. The defenders had completed their book, and declarer had to get back to his hand to draw the last trump. Clubs offered the only opportunity, but when declarer led a club from dummy, East ruffed with her remaining trump for a one-trick set!

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market was broadly lower again today, with the continued slide attributed to pessimism over the U.S. dollar's foreign exchange problems and a new boost in the prime lending rate.

The noon Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks, which had fallen 26.25 points already this week, was off another 7.10 to 797.82 today.

It was the first time it had fallen below the psychological 800-point barrier since last Oct. 25.

Christmas Tree Awaits Missing Five-Year-Old

By NORM CLARKE
Associated Press Writer
ALEXANDRIA, Ky. (AP) — The Christmas tree that 5-year-old Keith Holliday decorated is still up — and will stay up until his parents find out what happened to him.

"I'll leave it until next Christmas if I have to," said a grimaced Judy Holliday, Keith's mother. "Keith was so excited about that tree. He decorated all of it and it looked like it. It's a mess. But we don't have the heart to take it down."

Wearing a ski mask and boots on the wrong feet, the strawberry blond boy walked out of the house four days before Christmas — and never returned.

State police and hundreds of volunteers spent days scouring this wooded northern Kentucky subdivision, from the air, by horseback and on foot, but turned up nothing. "I'm trying not to give up faith," said Mrs. Holliday, "but it isn't easy. There are times when I think he is dead."

His father has offered a $10,000 reward for the boy's safe return. "Hustler" magazine owner Larry Flynt added $20,000 to the reward total Thursday and announced that a full page advertisement on the boy will be run in the April issue of the magazine. Flynt says such an ad would normally cost $50,000.

Spending Christmas without Keith was Mrs. Holliday's latest ordeal in a tragic year. In May, she escaped the fire that killed 164 persons at the Beverly Hills Supper Club, where she was a waitress. A short time later, her brother was killed in a car crash. Her father died at Thanksgiving.

"I fall apart a lot," she said, her face creased with fatigue and worry.

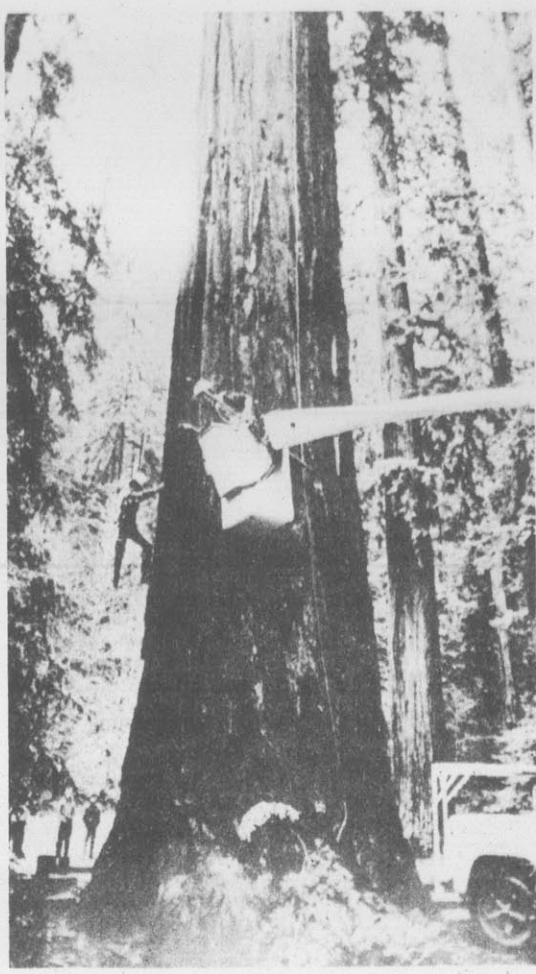

When the holidays passed, she stored Keith's Christmas presents at a neighbor's home. Then she suggested to her husband and 11-year-old son, Kevin, that the still-alive tree be taken down.

"We had a family discussion. My husband Michael thought it might be best if we got rid of it. He knew so many little things Keith hung on the tree were upsetting me. But Kevin wanted to leave it up since his little brother hadn't had Christmas yet."

"And it's going to stay up. We still got all of Keith's Christmas toys."

"The only thing I'm hoping is that if somebody has got him, they are taking good care of him. He's got a bad tooth and I had to give him penicillin. It's bound to be hurting him. I just hope it is somebody who loves him."

"But, naturally, I'm scared to death."

REDWOODS — Workmen prepare to fall a 1000-year-old Redwood. The tree was one of three vandalized by chainsaws January 2. The trees are located on Smithe State Redwood Reserve just north of Leggett, Calif. The largest of the trees was 12 feet in diameter and 250 feet tall. All three trees will have to be removed, and are valued at $45,000. (AP Laserphoto)

Reservations On Chile Vote

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department, departing from its usual policy of not commenting on foreign elections, says restrictions on free debate raise questions about the validity of Chile's recent national plebiscite.

"We felt that we had to say something in this particular case," said one official, alluding to Wednesday's controversial election in which Chilean President Augusto Pinochet received a lopsided show of support from Chile's voters.

State Department press officer Thomas Reston read the department's statement Thursday when asked for comment on the U.S. position. "We believe as a matter of principle that any election should offer all parties sufficient guarantees to present their case and give the voters a full and fair opportunity to present their views," Reston said. "This situation did not obtain in the plebiscite in Chile."

Officials acknowledged that the administration's reasons for criticizing the plebiscite go beyond the question of whether democratic standards were observed.

From the outset, the Carter administration has felt that the evolution of its policy toward Chile will be viewed elsewhere as a symbol of U.S. sincerity in promoting human rights overseas.

Human rights militants in the administration feel the repressive measures adopted by Pinochet in his four years in power have been far out of proportion to the security threat against his regime.

Board Held Secret Meet

RALEIGH, N. C. (AP) — The public and press were excluded from a state Board of Education meeting Thursday in which the N.C. State Textbook Commission recommended what textbooks should be bought for public schools this year.

The closed meeting means the public will have no way of knowing why the 14-member Textbook Commission preferred some books to others, until after the books are bought. The state board will seek bids from publishers and award book contracts in February.

This school year, the state is expected to spend about $13 million on two million new books.

Local school districts select all basic classroom texts used by North Carolina's 1.2 million public school students from the list of books approved by the state Board of Education.

Dr. David Bruton, chairman of the Board of Education, said the annual joint meeting of the board and the Textbook Commission always has been closed to the public "purely as a matter of business," to avoid costly, higher bids.

"If a publisher knows he was top in the evaluations, he would adjust his bid accordingly," said board member John A. Pritchett of Windsor.

Education officials, including state Supt. A. Craig Phillips, said they felt state law provides for closed meetings when the board and the Textbook Commission meet.

Wants Pledge Be Meaningful

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — A state senator wants Americans to recite the Pledge of Allegiance with more understanding and fewer stops, but he can't seem to decide where the stops go.

In a five-paragraph memo to legislative leaders and Lt. Gov. Richard F. Celeste, Sen. Harry Meshel said, "Historically, and almost unanimously, the Pledge of Allegiance has been recited in a monotone without proper inflection, and all too frequently with inappropriate cadence and improper grouping or phrasing of thought." He said the pledge is "a one-sentence proposition with only two commas," which he said belonged after the words "stands" and "indivisible."

However, a copy of the pledge provided by Meshel's office included a period after "stands," a misplaced comma after "God" and three dots after "indivisible."

SAW IT COMING — Cindy Mastgough, a member of the Radio City Music Hall ballet troupe, reads newspaper with headline that the famous New York showplace will shut in April. "We saw it coming. You could see it from the houses. When you don't see the people out there, you know the money is not coming in." Miss Mastgough said. (AP Laserphoto)

Pirates End Road Trip vs. Indians

Reactions Of New Coaches

New Celtic Coach's Debut Is Not Winning One As Celts Fall

By The Associated Press
Bill Fitch was happy to see a losing streak end, but will be happier to see a winning streak start.

"The rebounding was better and we got a little bit out of us, but we need two or three days (off) to work and get ourself back on track again." Admitting he was relieved by the victory, Fitch noted, "I think this was the worst losing string we've ever been through ... even worse than the 15 in a row the first year (1969-70). Of course, in those days, any time we won it was an upset.

"But this was the roughest because the players got down on themselves. We'd have one or two guys play bad in one game, then they'd get themselves turned around and somebody else would go down the tubes."

Fitch added with a weak laugh: "It was just like when we're going good ... Everybody contributed to the five-game streak."

In other NBA games, the New Orleans Jazz defeated the Milwaukee Bucks 116-109 and the Phoenix Suns stopped the Boston Celtics 121-111.

Jazz 116, Bucks 109
Pete Maravich scored 38 points and Truck Robinson 32 to lead New Orleans over Milwaukee. The Jazz neutralized the Bucks with a zone defense that shut off Milwaukee's Marques Johnson inside.

"There just wasn't much room underneath for Marques to drive," Bucks Coach Don Nelson said. "They were giving him the 15-foot jumper, but evidently he didn't feel comfortable taking it because he was hesitating."

New Orleans Coach Elgin Baylor confirmed the "game plan."

"We didn't want to let them go to Johnson inside," said Baylor. "He's a hell of a good, young player, and they like to post him up inside and he gets a lot of offensive rebounds. If they beat us, we were going to make them beat us from outside."

Suns 121, Celtics 111
Phoenix displayed a potent outside-inside combination in guard Paul Westphal and forward Walter Davis against Boston. Westphal finished with 43 points, and Davis, a rookie, scored 40 points as he consistently found the range within a 15-foot radius of the basket.

The Suns' victory spoiled the coaching debut of the Celtics' Tom "Satch" Sanders, and ruined the first appearance of K.C. Jones as Boston's assistant coach. Jones was named to the post Thursday.

Miller NFL's Coach Of Year

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Red Miller, who guided the defense-minded Denver Broncos into the playoffs for the first time in their history — and into the Super Bowl as well — was named National Football League Coach of the Year today by The Associated Press.

Miller's team had the best American Conference record (12-2) in the regular season, then knocked off the Pittsburgh Steelers 34-21 and defending NFL champion Oakland 20-17 in the AFC title game. He received 58 of the 84 votes cast by a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters, three from each league city.

Don Shula of the Miami Dolphins received 25 votes. The remaining vote went to Leeman Bennett of the Atlanta Falcons.

By the close of the 1976 season, some of Denver's players were sufficiently unhappy to openly demand a coaching change. So Robert Miller, who had spent 17 years as an assistant coach in the pros, the last four developing New England's explosive offense, was hired.

He succeeded John Ralston as head coach of the discontented Broncos, also-rans from the day they were born in the American Football League in 1960 until last year, a team which didn't even post a winning season until 1973. It was also Miller's second term with the Broncos. He was their offensive line coach from 1963-65. "He's one in a million," said Lyle Alzado, Denver's All-Pro defensive end. "I'd go out and meet the tough Indians of William & Mary.

Perhaps the most astounding thing about the William & Mary team is that they have not gathered any interest from the pollsters. The Tribe currently posts a 9-1 record, and among its victims lists No. Two North Carolina.

The lone defeat came in the second game of the season to St. Joseph's in the finals of the Spider Classic in Richmond by a two-point margin.

Since then, the Indians have beaten Christopher Newport, West Virginia, Radford and Carolina, along with winning the Brigham Young classic (Montana, BYU and Cal. State-Fullerton) and the Tangerine Bowl Tournament (Rollins, Stetson, Bowling Green).

Their other win came in the opener of the Spider Classic, when they beat Virginia Commonwealth.

The game will be played at 2 p.m. in William & Mary Hall. The game time is a switch from previously published times, which listed the game at 8 p.m.

The hot-shooting Indians are led by 6-5 forward John Lowenhaupt, who is hitting 20.1 points a game, with a 69.9 per cent field goal accuracy, fifth best in the country. He also is hitting 90 per cent of his free throws, 16th best in the country. In addition, he is the leader for the Indians in rebounds, with seven a game, and tops the team in assists with 43.

Skip Parnell, a 6-4 forward, is next in hitting with a 10.9 average, scoring 55.6 per cent of his shots. He is grabbing 6.6 rebounds a game.

Guard Mike Enoch, 6-6, is hitting 10.2 points a game, while guard Jack Arbgast, 6-1, has an 8.2 average. The center will probably be Ted O'Gorman, 5.1 ppg., or Rocky Copley, 3.6 ppg. Both centers are 6-9.

Bruce Parkhill, in his first year as a head coach, has hit team hitting 52.4 per cent of their shots from the floor and averaging 70.4 points a game. They've allowed 63.1 on defense.

The Indians are a finely disciplined team that is difficult to ruffle. They will be playing their first game, however, since December 29.

The Pirates are coming off a 90-72 defeat at the hands of the University of South Carolina. They will look to the shooting of Oliver Mack, hitting over 25 per game, and Herb Krusen hitting over 15, and hope that the two of them get some needed help in the scoring.

"They've had a lot of time to prepare for us," Pirate Coach Larry Gillman said. "They're a very disciplined team that will do what it wants to do. It's going to be up to us to try and get them out of their flow and make them play like we want them to."

Gillman wants to see continued improvements in the defense of the Pirates. "We had some good things on defense against South Carolina, but we've got to keep on improving on our man-to-man defense."

As far as a game plan is concerned, Gillman said that the Pirates have to respect Lowenhaupt, and try to deny him the ball. "We're also going to try and put more pressure on their guards in getting the ball up court. We wanted to do more of this against South Carolina, but we just weren't able to."

"They are a very good team. They have to be to have a 9-1 record so far. It's a great challenge to us," the coach added.

Boch Ball Scheduled

The Greenville Recreation & Parks Department will again have "boch ball" — an indoor tennis adaptation.

It is played indoors in the Elm Street Gym and is played with a special ball that the recreation department furnishes. During the winter months, this game will be an excellent exercise and conditioning game, and will also help keep the tennis game in shape, department officials say. Your own tennis racket is the only equipment needed.

A court reservation system, using two courts, will be used Monday through Friday mornings, starting at 9:45 a.m. Reservations may be made by calling 752-4137, ext. 220, between 8:30 a.m. and 5 p.m. Courts may be reserved up to four days in advance.

A special exhibition match will be played Monday at 9:45 a.m. in the gym. Further information can be obtained from the Recreation Department.

Farmville, Takes Two

In the boys' game, Farmville took a 47-37 win. Reggie Fields led Farmville with 12, while Ricky Dixon and Stuart Gordon each had 10.

While the Super Bowl has still to be played, it would appear that this year's winner in the pick panel is the same as last year: Joe Jenkins.

With everything in now except for the Super Bowl, Jenkins has already picked up 102 correct choices for the season. Tom Baines is right behind with 101, while Vickie Spivey has 100.

Our guests finished next with 98 and the chance to go to 99, while Jim Kyle has 98 and no chance to advance, nor does this writer, who has 97 correct. Both I and Kyle picked Oakland in the Super Bowl. All the rest picked Dallas, so their positions will not change, unless to give the guests clear possession of fourth place rather than a tie.

"Are you going to do this again next year," Jenkins asked, as he gloated over the second year victory.

"Sure," we told him.

"Well, count me in. I can't quit while I'm ahead," Joe grinned. "Better luck to all you others next year."

We see ya, Joe, and we're all taking aim at your title.

Dooley to VPI?

Speculations earlier in the week brought up the prospect of Bill Dooley, the head football coach at the University of North Carolina, moving to Virginia Tech.

Tech, of course, recently fired its head coach, the staff, and its athletic director has resigned.

Dooley, if he accepts the job would wear both the hats of the athletic director and the head football coach.

Whether he would take the job or not is the real question. He is coming off a successful season, and has prospects of another good year ahead. Virginia Tech has been down for several years in football, so he might be willing to take that challenge.

Two years ago, Dooley reportedly was on the way to the airport to fly to Miami, Fla., to take the head coaching job at the University of Miami, but changed his mind.

Whether he will decide to leave Chapel Hill now probably will be answered soon. Virginia Tech cannot afford to wait much longer if the school is to have any success.

Other people reportedly interviewed for the job include John West, AD at Furman; Clyde Walker, former UNC assistant, now AD at Kansas, and attempts were reportedly made to interview Charlie Pell of Clemson.

Game Time Changed

It came as a surprise to everyone at East Carolina University yesterday morning, but the game time for Saturday's contest with William & Mary, in Williamsburg, will not be 8 p.m. as stated on schedules published by East Carolina.

William & Mary, hoping to get the game on television, switched the contest to 2 p.m., then failed to make the TV connection. With the student

Watson Fires Six-Under-Par Round; Takes Three-Shot Lead

By BOB GREEN

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Tom Watson was faced with the problem encountered only by those who achieve unmatched superiority in their chosen field of endeavor.

What do you do for an encore?

"Every golfer who's had a good season wonders and worries about it," said Watson, twice a winner in major head-to-head duels with Jack Nicklaus and the 1977 PGA Tour Player of the Year.

"Over the time you took off at the end of the year, has your game gone completely?"

"I was really very nervous starting off."

He answered those questions and calmed his nerves with a spectacular 9-under-par 63 that staked him to a 3-shot lead Thursday in the first round of the first tournament of the 1978 tour, the $200,000 Joe Garagiola-Tucson Open. It matched the best subpar effort of his pro career and, with stunning immediacy, re-established him as the game's premier performer.

Watson, now 28, scaled golf's heights with his 1977 successes. The triumphs over Nicklaus in the Masters and British Open were the most publicized. But he also won three other American titles, was fifth or better in another dozen tournaments, led the money-winners with $310,000 and won the Vardon Trophy for the best stroke average.

But he tailed off just a little at the end of the year.

New Attitude For Blue Devils

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — Duke's 88-78 victory over 12th-ranked Maryland Wednesday night put the Blue Devils into a state of euphoria that Duke fans are hoping will last all season.

"Things have changed," exulted center Mike Gminski. "We are through being the doormat."

"I know we have a long season still ahead of us," said in Jim Spanarkel, "but I can't help but think that we proved a lot to each other tonight. We proved we could go on the road against a strong conference team, fall behind, catch up and eventually win."

Maryland's Terps, who built up a 10-2 lead in the opening moments of the game and then watched it disappear in the dogfight that followed, didn't quite know what had hit them.

"They were just a fair team by ACC standards last year, but tonight, I thought they were great," said Bill Bryant.

"Everyone was talking about Eugene Banks turning them around, but I don't think it's that simple," Bryant added. "Banks is a heck of a player, but he didn't kill us tonight (10 points, 7 rebounds)."

"I thought we did a decent job on banks, but Gminski and Spanarkel were too much for us. Plus a lot of their other players hurt us more than they did last year. For our part, I just hope we were playing bad defense, because we can correct something like that."

"We just did the things to them that other teams have been doing to us," Gminski said. "It was a great feeling to see us get that key rebound, hit the big free throw, force the

Payton Named Most Valuable

By HOWARD ULMAN
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Now that the Chicago Bears' season is over, star runner and offensive-line booster Walter Payton can take a break from patting others on the back.

But that just isn't the unselfish, never-say-die character of the strong, compactly built man who lunges for extra yards and helps up tacklers when they finally bring him down.

So after a panel of 84 sports writers and broadcasters had picked him on Thursday as the Associated Press' Most Valuable Player in the National Football League, his reaction was predictable.

"I can't believe it. There's so many other guys in the league that I admire and I think are super players, and for me to get it is something that seems to be unreal. I can't believe it," he said by telephone from Hattiesburg, Miss., where he was quail-hunting.

Well, then, who would the NFL's rushing king and NFC's top scorer vote for? He slithered past the question as deftly as he leaves potential tacklers hugging air.

"It's just like a list of who's who. There's guys that play defense that play well and on offense. To name one personally would be an injustice," he said.

Payton got 57 MVP votes. Two quarterbacks, Miami's Bob Griese and Denver's Craig Morton, were tied for second with 10 apiece.

Payton's value to the Bears is beyond question. For the first time in 14 years, they reached post-season play. Their 9-5 record was their best since 1965.

Payton, only 23 years old and in his third season out of Jackson State, led the league in rushing with 1,852 yards, third best in NFL history. The rest of the team ran for just 962 yards. His 27 pass receptions were second most on the Bears. And his combined rushing-receiving yardage of 2,121 was a whopping 46 percent of the Bears' total net offense.

He also set two NFL records. His 275 yards rushing on Nov. 20 against Minnesota beat O.J. Simpson's one-game record of 273. His 339 carries for the season were seven more than Simpson's mark.

And in 1976, he led the NFC in rushing with 1,390 yards.

Late Present For Guillermo

By CHRISTY BARBEE
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The man who was saying just last week that he didn't like Christmas was reaping his goodies late.

"I'm happy because it's a Christmas gift," a tired Guillermo Vilas said Thursday night after downing Jimmy Connors 6-4, 3-6, 7-5 in the second round of the $400,000 Grand Prix Masters Tennis tournament.

It was their first meeting since the U.S. Open at Forest Hills last summer, when Vilas beat the Belleville, Ill., left-hander in four sets on a disputed line call. For the record crowd of 18,500 at Madison Square Garden Thursday night, it was a tumultuous event.

Vilas had not prepared for the Masters as he had for Forest Hills, emotionally or physically. He has made it clear since before the tournament started that he was playing chiefly so he could collect the $300,000 bonus he earned by winning the most points on the 1977 Grand Prix circuit.

Connors behaved as though he hadn't played tennis in days and was chippy about his chances in the round-robin tournament.

"I'm still in there. Don't count me out," he told reporters.

It wasn't the same Connors that had, a short while before, raged at a linesman that called his shot out, allowing Vilas to go up 40-30 in the ninth game. He pounded his racket on the net and screamed at the official, and the second round of the Masters looked as though it might end the same way the finals had at the Open — on a sour note.

But Connors went on to win that game, breaking Vilas' service to pull to 4-5. It was his big step back into the set.

Asked later about his behavior over line calls in the match, Connors twinkled and said sweetly. "What calls?"

Connors does indeed still have a chance in the eight-player Masters, which offers a $100,000 prize to the winner. After today's concluding regular round-robin matches, each man will have played the other three in his group.

Dooley 'Thinks' About Tech Job

ROANOKE, Va. (AP) — University of North Carolina Football Coach Bill Dooley reportedly was to be offered the dual job of head football coach and athletic director of Virginia Tech today.

The Roanoke Times & World-News said in its editions this morning that the only reason Dooley hadn't been offered the job yet at the Blacksburg university was that Tech officials had a commitment to interview Sugar Bowl Executive Director Carl James this morning.

After the James interview, the newspaper said, Dooley would be offered the post.

Dooley was expected to be offered a long-term contract at a high salary, the Times & World-News said.

But Virginia Tech President William E. Lavery said in Blacksburg that Tech "won't be making any offer for some time yet."

"No job has been offered and no final arrangements made," Lavery said.

As for Dooley, Lavery said, "we don't know of his interest in us and we don't know of our interest in him."

Dooley, 43, is paid $41,000 a

'Impossible' To Dam The Flow Of Cocaine To U.S.

By OWEN ULLMANN
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — A House committee, saying it's "impossible" for the government to dam the international flow of cocaine into this country, is calling for an education campaign to curb the estimated $8 billion-a-year business.

But a White House official and a Drug Enforcement Administration spokesman disagree with the panel's finding, arguing instead that recent efforts to reduce cocaine trafficking have been successful.

In the last few months, said DEA spokesman Robert Feldkamp, authorities have made some of the largest cocaine seizures ever. A record 130 pounds of pure cocaine, worth approximately $33 million, was seized in Colombia in October, he said.

But Feldkamp and Peter G. Bourne, President Carter's special assistant for health issues, acknowledged that recent seizures represent only a tiny fraction of the estimated 15 to 20 tons of cocaine — all of it from Latin America — distributed annually in this country.

Bourne, who estimated that one million Americans may have tried cocaine, said it is difficult to convince people that cocaine poses a health hazard. "As a result, it is very hard to have (education) programs that are very effective."

Earlier Thursday, the House

Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse, in issuing a report on its six-nation South American tour last August, said, "It is impossible to control the distribution of cocaine after it enters international trafficking networks."

The report described cocaine-selling networks as highly sophisticated organizations with structures and discipline resembling multinational oil or grain companies. It said widespread bribery and other corruption undermine investigative efforts.

Noting that Americans are the principal users of the illegal drug, the report said, "We must ... develop new methods of public education which will discourage potential new users and provide current users with the type of information that will encourage them to discontinue their use."

The DEA estimates the current street price for a gram, or one-28th of an ounce, of cocaine at between $60 and $100 for a blend that is about 10 percent pure.

Cocaine is not physically addictive and produces no tolerance level or withdrawal problems but, because it is a powerful stimulant, regular users develop "strong cravings" and a psychological habit, the committee report said.

About 70 percent of the drug enters the United States from Colombia, where the estimated annual income of the traffickers is pegged at $8 billion, equaling its street value in the United States and exceeding Colombia's income from coffee.

Will Accept Jail Over Private School Rights

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Hundreds of people are willing to go to jail if necessary to support the right of church-affiliated private schools to operate without state approval of their facilities and curricula, the state Board of Education was told Thursday.

Some said they would go even further than that.

"I will bleed and I will die if necessary to guarantee this right to educate our children biblically," said Berean Baptist School administrator Douglas K. Davis of Fayetteville.

The vow drew a chorus of amens from several other administrators who appeared before the board Thursday to give formal notice that about 60 church schools will not longer file the annual reports they have sent for the past three decades to the state Department of Public Instruction.

"As a matter of conscience based on religious convictions, we can no longer file annual reports authored by the state and we renounce the principle of state approval of our educational facilities," said the Rev. Kent Kelly, pastor of Calvary Memorial Church and administrator of Calvary Christian

School in Southern Pines. "This is official notification that such approval will no longer be sought."

The 60 schools are about a month late filing the annual reports on numbers of teachers and pupils, curricula, and details about health and fire inspections.

Kelly said his school filed the annual reports "in a spirit of cooperation, with no awareness of possible consequences involved."

"We have been advised by several attorneys that such compliance has been construed in other states to be tacit agreement with any regulatory principles involved... Never at any time have we accepted or agreed to the right of the state to dictate policy to our church."

The board decided to do nothing about the church schools' position until its February meeting when it will have recommendations from the attorney general's office.

Kelly said the church-affiliated schools are willing to take their fight to the U.S. Supreme Court if necessary. He added that if the state takes legal action, hundreds of people connected with the church-affiliated schools are prepared to go to jail rather than comply.

Alaska Wants Washington To Clean Up Mountains Of Junk

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (AP) — The state wants Washington to clean up its act in Alaska, by disposing of mountains of federal junk that have piled up over the years.

"Alaska's great size and wilderness character seems to lead to a 'use-it-and-leave-it' attitude on the part of those who work in its many remote locations," the state said.

In an 86-page report sent to President Carter and Congress, the state's Department of Environmental Conservation said it had identified 90 federal waste sites in Alaska.

"The total waste on all sites... consists of 40 structures, 890 uprights, 11,302 square feet of surface construction, 49 abandoned vehicles, 90,000 barrels or storage tanks, and 21,843 cubic yards of associated debris," the report said.

But it said that was only the tip of the iceberg. It estimated that its junk list represents less than 20 percent of all the federal debris scattered over the state.

The state agency said cleanup costs would run into the millions of dollars.

Included in the study were 31 dumps in the Arctic National Wildlife Range, a beached tank at Demarcation Bay on the Arctic Ocean and a pile of 7,500 fuel drums on Barter Island.

It said there were more than 80,000 abandoned fuel drums on National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska alone. At Skull Cliff on the reserve, a huge pile of debris includes a collapsed airplane hangar.

The state said cleanup operations which started on the reserve in 1976 will be completed in late 1979 at a total cost of some $5 million.

The department said the "enormous accumulation of solid waste over the past 54 years" on the reserve had resulted from oil exploration activity, and from military construction.

The state agency recommended that high-value scrap such as copper, brass and aluminum from all waste sites be shipped south, and that as much as possible from the remaining debris be salvaged for reuse or recycling.

As for the rest, the state suggested: burn or bury it.

National Exams Set Feb. 18

WILSON — The National Teacher Examinations will be given at Atlantic Christian College on Feb. 18.

Scores from the examinations are used by states for certification of teachers, by school systems for selection and identification of leadership qualities, and by colleges as part of their graduation requirements.

Bulletins describing registration procedures and containing registration forms may be obtained from Zeb M. Whitehurst III, dean of students or directly from the National Teacher Examinations, Educational Testing Service, Box 911, Princeton, N.J. 08540.

The deadline for regular registration is Jan. 26. On-the-spot registration is not permitted.

Traced Fire To The Fire Alarm

ATLANTA (AP) — Nine days after a fire destroyed an Emory University fraternity house, investigators traced its origin — to a fire alarm.

Fire Capt. Rich Brumbelow said Wednesday that the fire alarm system — located in an unused dumbwaiter in the basement of the two-story, antebellum house — short-circuited and started the fire.

No one was injured in the Dec. 26 fire because the 30 students who lived in the house had gone home for Christmas holidays.

Porn Shops Win Round

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Adult bookstore owners have won a first important round in their efforts to overturn new anti-pornography legislation enacted last year by the General Assembly.

City and state officials say a federal judge's ruling on one of the new laws will make it impossible to enforce.

U.S. District Judge F.T. Dupree filed the ruling this week in a suit by four adult bookstore and three massage parlor owners in Fayetteville challenging the constitutionality of a state law that allows district attorneys to file civil suits to shut down adult businesses as public nuisances.

Dupree ruled that it was unconstitutional to bar the sale of material that had not been specifically ruled obscene by a court.

Assistant Attorney General Edwin M. Speas Jr. said Dupree's ruling leaves the law "a shell of a statute. The difficulty with the ruling as far as the state is concerned is that the one section (ruled unconstitutional) is the enforcement section."

Dupree said the law was constitutional through the point at which authorities get restraining orders requiring adult businesses to keep records of all sales pending a hearing on the civil suits.

But he said that if a judge found that nuisance existed, the law required him to close the business completely, barring any future sales of material that the court had not seen.

"It is the opinion of this court that ... the blanket ban on the future dissemination of unnamed books and movies transgresses well-established first amendment standards and thus is constitutionally infirm."

Speas said he didn't know if the state would appeal the ruling, but Cumberland County District Attorney Edward W. Grannis Jr. said he would formally ask that an appeal be filed.

Frost Filigree

The trees of Goat Island, N.Y., strike their strange, frozen arabesques in response to their unique environment: the island's small wedge of land in the middle of the Niagara Falls. The American Falls are to one side, the Canadian (Horseshoe) Falls to the other, while immediately below a tumult of water endlessly churns, tossing up floating veils of spray and mist. And all around is the very special climate that develops in the Niagara gorge from the interaction of wind, water and temperature.

Goat Island's trees grow up buffeted, bent and warped by these forces of nature, acquiring silhouettes whose grotesque grace is choreographed by the relentless pressures on them. But in winter comes an unwonted kindness as the harsh elements lavish a breathtaking beauty on their victims. Frigid mist, icy rain and heavy swathes of snow turn the trees into magical groves of frost filigree. There are vehicle tracks, and a few briskly made footprints, but the snow pillows on the benches remain pristine, unused, for visitors are rare at this time of year—except for the hardy photographer whose images are all many of us ever see or know of the winter world of Niagara.

Nuclear Fusion Spurs Moscow Visits

By DENNIS ESKOW
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — Nuclear fusion, which has taunted a generation of researchers with the promise of abundant energy supplies, is drawing Dr. Richard L. Morse toward a series of missions to Moscow.

The University of Arizona scientist is head of an American research team now being formed for meetings in Russia and the United States with a Soviet scientific group. Their mission: to explore a promising method of setting off controlled nuclear fusion. It's called laser fusion.

"The search for a way to control fusion has been frustrating," the 42-year-old Morse acknowledged in a telephone interview from his office at the University of Arizona in Tucson. "But in the past few years, we have made major strides."

Atomic energy currently is produced by the process called fission in which atoms are smashed and energy produced when they break up.

Fusion is the sun's source of energy. So much energy is released in nuclear fusion, more than that produced by fission, that the process is difficult to control.

The nucleus of an atom is held together by forces that are extremely weak at a distance, but extremely strong at the nucleus. When two or more nuclei of an atom are brought close together, there is a violent disruption as the nuclei are fused together by the binding forces.

Hydrogen atoms are joined to form helium atoms creating large amounts of energy in the same way a hydrogen bomb produces energy. The H-bomb is set off by a weaker atomic bomb that produces enough heat at a quick enough pace to bring the hydrogen atoms close together.

"We hope to use very large lasers to control fusion," Morse explains.

Several lasers, each perhaps the size of a barn, would be directed at a tiny piece of fuel, smaller than a cigarette filter.

and would heat the atoms up, sending them into wide and rapid motion that drives them close together.

The laser, Morse and other scientists hope, would give energy producers a way to provide quick and concentrated heat while giving them the option of turning off the heat source very quickly to prevent an out-and-out explosion.

Morse, former group leader of a fusion research program at Los Alamos, N.M., began groundwork for the Soviet-American research effort in 1975. He has exchanged visits with Soviet scientists and has dined and dined his Russian counterpart, Sergei Anisimov.

Morse speaks no Russian. "The international language of science is broken English," he says. Besides, Morse's wife, Marjorie, speaks Russian and sometimes does his talking for him.

The group Morse will lead to Moscow at the end of this summer will include 15 to 20 scientists, each an expert in a very narrow field relating to controlled fusion and laser technology. An equal number of Soviet scientists will be on hand. There will be an agenda, but it will be flexible.

"It's like a mixer dance. You run in a bunch of people and hope they will pair up," Morse says.

Besides the language barrier, the Americans will be facing problems with the way Soviet scientists publish their papers. The Soviet journals limit scholarly works to no more than three or four pages, Morse says. Compare that with an American paper that can easily have a bibliography of three pages. "But once we begin talking, we expect to be able to exchange information with relative freedom," Morse says.

Could the Russians pick up any military secrets by listening to the American scientists?

"No. Each side knows that the subject is fusion," Morse says. "Each side knows when it's giving something away and when it isn't."

Freed Pair Of Wolves

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — John and Judy got the green light Thursday to lead a wild life, but authorities won't have much trouble keeping tabs of their whereabouts.

John and Judy are red wolves, released Thursday on Bull Island near Charleston to see how they can adapt to the wilds of South Carolina.

Scientists from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the South Carolina Wildlife and Marine Resources Department will be able to keep track of the greyish-red animals through radio transmitters on their collars.

Their release marked the beginning of a second attempt to study how to prevent the extinction of the endangered species.

"They were very glad to be free again. They didn't hesitate a minute," said George Garris of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. Garris is manager of the Cape Romain Wildlife Preserve, the federal refuge in which Bull Island is located.

The wolves, both about four years old and weighing 50 to 55 pounds, will be staying on Bull Island until next year.

Scientists will monitor their survival and breeding activities in the new setting and hope to gather information that will help replenish the red wolf population.

Garris said only about 50 full-blooded red wolves live in the wild — mainly in southwest Louisiana, where the Bull Island wolves were captured, and in southeast Texas. They once freely roamed coastal lands from South Carolina to Texas, he said.

The first pair of red wolves, released on the island last July, didn't mate. The female escaped and was recaptured, but later died of an infection. The male was sent to Washington state where he was paired with an "extra" female there.
